not so much to help those who are in smooth waters, but those who have been shipwrecked. Come, let us run out the life-boats! And who will man them? We do not preach enough to such men; we have not enough faith in their release. Alas, if when they come to hear us, we are laboriously trying to show the difference between Sublapsarianism and Supralapsarianism, while they have a thousand vipers of remorse and despair coiling around and biting their immortal spirits. The church is not chiefly for goodish sort of men, whose proclivities are all right, and who could get to heaven praying and singing in their own homes. It is on the beach to help the drowning. Those bad cases are the cases that God likes to take hold of. He can save a big sinner as well as a small sinner, and when a man calls earnestly to God for help He will go out to deliver such a one. If it were necessary God would come down from the sky, followed by all the artillery of heaven, and a million angels with drawn swords. Get one hundred such redeemed men in your churches, and nothing could stand before them, for such men are generally warm-hearted and enthusiastic. No formal prayers then. No heartless singing then. No cold conventionalisms then.

Destitute Children

of the street offer a field of work comparatively unoccupied. The uncared-for children are in the majority in Brooklyn and most of our cities. When they grow up, if unreformed, they will outvote your children, and they will govern your children. The whisky ring will hatch out other whisky rings, and grog-shops will kill with their horrid stench public sobriety, unless the church of God rises up with outstretched arms and enfolds this dying population in her bosom. Public schools cannot do it. Art galleries cannot do it. Blackwell's Island cannot do it. Almshouses cannot do it. New York Tombs and Raymond Street Jail cannot do it. Sing Sing cannot do it. Church of God, wake up to your magnificent mission! You can do it! Get somewhere, somehow to work!

The Prussian cavalry mount by putting their right foot into the stirrup, while the American cavalry mount by putting their left foot into the stirrup. I don't care how you mount your war charger, if you only get into this battle for God and get there soon, right stirrup, or left stirrup, or no stirrup at all. The unoccupied fields are all around us, and why should we build on another man's foundation? That God has called this church to especial work no one can doubt. Its history has been miraculous. God has helped us at every step, and though the wheels of its history have made many revolutions, they have all been forward, and never backward, and now with our borders enlarged, and with important reinforcements, we start on a new campaign.

A Revelation.

At Sharon Springs, nineteen years ago, walking in the park, I asked God, if He had any particular work for me to do, to make it plain and I would do it. He revealed to me the style of church we were to have, and He revealed to me the architecture, and He revealed to me the modes of worship, and He revealed to me my work, and, as far as in my ignorance and weakness I have seen the right way, I have tried to walk in it. We decided that we wanted it a soul-saving church, and it has been almost a constant outpouring of the Holy Ghost. Ye powers of darkness, ye devils in hell, we mean to snatch from your dominion other multitudes, if God will help us. I have heard of what was called the "thundering legion." It was in 179, a part of the Roman army to which some Christians belonged, and their prayers, it was said, were answered by thunder and lightning and hail and tempest, which overthrew an invading army and saved the empire. And I would to God that this church may be so mighty in prayer and work that it would become a thundering legion, before which the forces of sin might be routed, and the gates of hell might tremble. Now that the autumn has come, and the Gospel Ship has been repaired and enlarged, it is time to launch her for another voyage. Heave away now, lads! Shake out the reefs in the foretopsail! Come, O heavenly wind, and fill the canvas! Jesus aboard will assure our safety. Jesus on the sea will beckon us forward, Jesus on the shore will welcome us into harbor.

STRABISMUS CURED THROUGH FAITH.

SCEPTICAL persons frequently contend, when spoken to about Divine healing, that the cures cited as evidence of its reality are only imaginary cures of imaginary diseases. The following instance reported in the current number of Thy Healer,* may be commended to the notice of such persons as a case in which the deformity was visible to every one and the cure well authenticated:

Mrs. Emma Hudson, an English lady, writing to Mrs. Baxter says: Miss Lees, a young woman, who sews for me, is bringing up a little nephew whose mother died at his birth. She had often spoken to me of this little nephew, saying what a dear, bright little boy he was, but regretting that there was one great detriment to his appearance, namely, that he was cross-eyed, i. e., squinted with one eye. He had been taken to one of our first Birmingham oculists, who said nothing could possibly help him but an operation when he was a few months older. He is now about two years, I think. The last time I saw Miss Lees. I felt led to ask her if she could unite with me in asking healing for the little boy's eye. She is a Christian girl, and I had already spoken to her of my own case, and of the subject of the Lord's healing. Without hesitation, she assented, and we then and there laid the case before the Lord, and accepted healing. I did feel that He had given me "the prayer of faith," and a fortnight since, Miss Lees brought the joyful news that the little boy's eyes were perfectly straight, and that without any medical or surgical aid whatever. She said that the very next day to that on which we prayed, she noticed a change in the eye, and from that time the progress continued until, in a few weeks, it was restored to perfect straightness. We do praise and bless the Lord for His faithfulness in hearing and answering prayer, and we have consecrated this dear little boy to Him. I felt I should not be faithful if I did not bear witness to the Lord's goodness.

THE FAMINE IN ASIA MINOR.

HARROWING details of the suffering of the famine-stricken people of Asia Minor continue to arrive. The American Board is helping its missionaries in that land to relieve the people, but its funds are totally inadequate to deal effectually with the stupendous task. Mr. Montgomery, writing from Adana, on July 23, says:

"We returned here last Wednesday, and find that the famine sufferers have increased quite beyond our ability to aid them. It is pitiful to see the crowds of hungry people, mostly women, who press round our doors for aid. Some of them say that they had nothing to eat for two and three days; and their pinched faces show it. Some of the babies in their arms, vainly trying to get nourishment out of starved breasts, have become reduced to little limp, pale skeletons, scarcely able to move. The municipal council of Adana, not able or willing to help the poor, and wishing to show as small a number as possible, ordered an enrolment of only the poorest—those who had sold everything out of their houses, even to the beds under them—and the enrolment reached 8,000 souls. The bitter cry comes to us also from Tarsus, Koozoolook, Missis and many other towns and villages. The number to be aided will reach sixty or seventy thousand. As yet, the government has done nothing but make promises."

A similar report comes from Dr. Shepard who wrote, on the 22d of July:

"We reached this place yesterday, after having spent three days travelling about the northern part of the great Adana plain. It was a sad sight, this great, fertile plain as deserted and desolate as Sahara. Village after village was completely deserted, or had a single family left in it to guard it. Very little had been sown or planted, and what little had been, was dried up from the root. Cotton sown upon black soil twenty feet deep was only two or three inches high and withered as though scorched by fire. Arrived at Adana, we found the mission house besieged by crowds of hungry women with their starving infants at their breasts. I hope the good people at home will give from their plenty to feed these starving bodies. In the providence of God it will be instrumental in feeding many hungry souls too."

Subscriptions may be sent to the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 1 Somerset Street, Boston, Mass.

* Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a Monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to Mrs. M. Baxter, 10 Drayton Park, Highbury, London, England, or to the manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, N. Y.

BEER RENOUNCED IN AFRICA.

A NEW church has been organized in West Central Africa, through God's blessing on the work of the missionaries of the American Board. Mrs. Stover, writing to the Missionary Herald respecting it, mentions the solution of a problem which is not always so satisfactorily solved in more civilized lands. She says:

"This question of beer-drinking and its influence, was one which was early discussed by the members of our mission. It seemed hard to settle, since the common beer is both food and drink to them (being thick with the corn meal of which it is made), and is of a much milder quality than that which is used in the south and east. However, that question settled itself, or, rather, the first converts settled it. This is their testimony: 'When we first accepted Christ's words we thought to drink only the sweet beer. But when we drank the sweet, we found we wanted the bitter; and when we drank just a little, we found we were not satisfied, but wanted more; so we concluded the only way was to let it alone entirely." This was their own decision. They were not urged to it, neither had they listened to any eloquent temperance addresses. They have been taught of the Spirit. All praise and glory to the Name above every name!"

A LETTER IN A SOCK.

AT a special meeting in Pastor C. H. Spurgeon's Tabernacle in London, a young man was present who afterwards went into the vestry. Mr. W. Y. Fullerton, one of Mr. Spurgeon's Evangelists, who received him, says: "He sat down and said he would like to tell me his story. Years before, after leading a desperate life, he had run away from home, had gone to America, Australia—all round the world. He left his godly father and mother in Dundee, Scotland, and never wrote to them. They sorrowed for their lost boy, and when several years afterwards he returned to his native place, he found his father was dead. This sobered him for a while, and his widowed mother took him back to her home in the hope of reformation. But in a very little while his conduct was worse than ever. At last his Christian mother told him she could not have him at home to disgrace the family, and as he said himself, he 'was driven off to London on prodigal's allowance.' His mother yearned for his salvation, but he would not allow her to speak to him about Christ; so very sorrowfully she packed his box for him, and saw him off. The third or fourth day in the great city, he was attracted to the Tabernacle, and hearing the Gospel, was aroused to see his sad condition. 'This morning,' he continued, 'having occasion to put on a clean pair of socks, I got a pair out of the box my mother had packed for me. I put one on, and then the other; but in the toe of the second I felt something hard, and thinking to myself that I couldn't go about like that all day, I took it off again to see what was the matter, and that's what I found,' he said. Handing me a piece of paper he burst into tears, and shaking convulsively, he cried, 'Oh, I'm lost! lost!!' It was a letter from his mother—a tear-stained letter; he would not let her speak to him about Christ, but he could not prevent her writing t him. And with quick wit—for a mother's lov is very ingenious—she had put the letter wher he would be sure to find it. A most touchin letter it was. One sentence I remember wel She said, 'My boy, you have wandered far, bu you have not got beyond the reach of God grace, for He says, 'Look unto Me and be y saved, all the ends of the earth,' and you hav not got beyond that yet.'"

A MAN LEFT IN A HOLE.

AMONG the testimonies given at the Cremorn mission on a recent evening, as reported by Jerr McAuley's Newspaper, was the following, whic was given by a man who had been rescued fro a life of crime which had more than once ir volved him in imprisonment in a cell, the dimer sions of which he seems to have known accu rately: "I want to say a word about what Jesu has done for me. I don't know that there i anybody in this room who has more reason t do so than I have. The devil and I have bee side by side for twenty long years, and he ha left me in a hole every time, and very often i was one six by four. I became sick and tire and disgusted. Eleven weeks ago last Wednes day I came to this place. It was the first plac of worship I'd been in of my own free will fo twenty years. I thank the Lord I did come here for I went down on my knees at those chairs and with a humble heart asked God to tak away my sins. I couldn't turn over a new leaf I had to throw the whole book away and star new. The last eleven weeks have been happ and joyful."

A BAILUNDU BOY S MARTYR SPIRIT.

A YOUNG African convert's refusal to partic pate in a heathen ceremony, in spite of blow and threats, is reported to the American Boar from West Central Africa. A missionary sta tioned at Bailundu says that a slave-boy, twelv years old, on a recent Sunday surprised him b praying in the boys' meeting. He had not bee counted among the converts. A few days later a feast in honor of a departed spirit was held a his village. The chief, Chikulu, noticed tha this boy did not drink the beer, and commande him to do so. He refused, and remained firm though the chief tried force, and finally tied hir up, beat him, and threatened to sell him to very cruel master. The old men interfered, an the lad was released and came directly to th mission. "Did they make you afraid?" aske a missionary. "No," he replied, "there was n fear in my heart. Jesus gave me strength They may tie and beat or sell my body, but the cannot tie or kill or sell my soul." And th missionary adds: "I never felt so low and hum ble in my life, as since I have watched thes children, struggling with all the powers of dark ness and temptation, and accepting the life o hardships, and in many cases of peril, of thos who follow the Lord. All my sins and short comings and lost opportunities come up befor me sometimes, and I wonder if in their positio I should have their courage."

A HORTICULTURAL COMBAT

A curious duel between plants is described i a scientific journal. It states that a professo and his pupils have been watching with inte est for some time the various developments o a struggle for life between a sumach and climbing bitter-sweet. The sumach was abou two inches in diameter when the bitter-swee first wound its coils about it. As the growth o each proceeded, these coils became tighter an tighter, cutting into and through the bark an growing layer of the sumach until it seemed t be threatened with strangulation. It was no however, to be so easily vanquished. It reso lutely kept up its manufacture of new materia which, owing to the tight embrace of the vin had to be distributed along a spiral line betwee the coils. Although rendered unsightly, th tree presented the curious features of havin two spirals, one of living, growing, the other o ead and decaying material, so that the whole esembled a huge augur. Gradually, however, ne sumach pushed its new growth out above nd over the coils of the vine until at one lace it had completely encompassed it. The ine, in turn, was now so tightly squeezed as to e cut off from communication with the ground, nd but little life remained. Victory now eemed within the grasp of the sumach. The ine, however, united itself with the growing ayer of the sumach, and thus literally drew from ne sumach the supplies needed to keep itself live. At this stage the conflict was cut short y the axe of the collector, and the combatants, ocked in each other's arms, have been laid away mong the curiosities of a museum. There are ome lives like those two growths. It is often o when the apostle's injunction against the arriage of a Christian with an unbeliever has een disregarded. Both lives have been marred ntil in union together through Christ both ave drawn their life from the same source (1 Cor. 7 : 14-16.)

LEPERS IN INDIA AND AFRICA.

THE extent to which the hideous scourge of eprosy prevails throughout the East may be inerred from the fact that in India alone there re at least 95,000 lepers. Until recent times hey have been cast out to die neglected and lone, every one fearing contagion, but now, ospel work among them is carried on, and is eing blessed by God. The following touching escription of the work is sent by Dr. Newton, f the Asylum at Sabathu:

"When the lepers are gathered together for family worship' in the building which is both rayer-room and dispensary, they present a sight f deep interest, which gives rise to very mingled motions of pain and pleasure. It is painful to ee such a mass of diseased, mutilated, suffering uman beings. To strangers the sight is always ery horrible; but to my wife and myself, who ee them daily, and who are able to contrast the niserable, half-starved appearance of most of hem when first admitted with the manifest imrovement wrought by a few weeks of medical reatment and improved diet, there is more leasure in the sight than of pain. Nor ould any stranger present on such an occasion elp sharing the pleasure. He would see the whole throng join with intense enjoyment in inging hymn after hymn in praise of Jesus; he would see many who until lately were sunk in he lowest degradation of idolatry, ignorance, nd superstition, listening intently, not unfrequently with an eager, hungry look, while the Bible is being read and explained. And then ne would see the heads of nearly all reverently owed during the prayer that follows. After the rayer a very simple version of the Lord's prayer s uttered by the leader, in which the Christian epers are invited to join. Twelve of the inates of the Asylum are professing Christians. Seven of these have been baptized within the ast twelve months. Though the little Christian and receives recruits from year to year, death hins its ranks so fast that it remains but small n proportion to the number of heathen lepers."

An African Asylum.

When the British government removed the Leper Asylum to Robben Island, a low sandy islet, surrounded by dangerous rocks, near the entrance of Table Bay, seven miles from Cape Town, Africa, the missionary Lehman and his wife went there to reside, having before labored among these lepers. As they approached, the whole company broke forth in songs of praise to the Lord, who had restored to them their beloved father and mother. A school was opened there for the children of lepers, and such adults as chose to attend. The first teacher was Mr. Wedeman, a leprous young Englishman, who undertook the service gratuitously. He wrote: "It is most touching to see the scholars turn over the leaves of their Bibles with their mutilated hands, some not only without fingers, but with hands corrupted to the wrist. On Sunday morning you would see the blind, lame and deaf lepers, just such miserable beings as pressed round the Lord Jesus to be healed of Him, exerting all their ingenuity to reach the little church. Here you see a young lazar sitting on the ground, and thrusting himself forward with difficulty; there another, who had lost hands and part of his feet, creeping on his knees and the stumps of his arms. Further on you see a patient wholly deprived of hands and feet, seated in a wheelbarrow, and thus conveyed to the house of prayer by a stronger brother in affliction, whose head and face are swollen till they look like a lion's. Go into the wards of the hospital. On one couch lies a leper whose hands are gone, and before him an open Bible. He has reached the bottom of the page, but cannot turn it over. He looks round, and one who can walk, but is also without hands, takes another, who has lost his feet, on his back, and carries him to the first to turn over the leaf."

There can be no stronger proof of the power of the constraining love of Christ than the fact that men and women can be found ready to surrender all that they hold dear and isolate themselves in these asylums, that they may preach Christ to these loathsome sufferers.

THE MIRACLES OF THE SECOND ADVENT.

By Henry Varley.

Characteristics of Human Government—What it Has Brought the World to—The Reign of Christ to be Inaugurated by Miracles—The Miracles of His First Mission—The Lord's Silence Broken—The Dead Raised—The Living Changed—The Physical Earth Renovated—A New River Given to Jerusalem—Millennial Glory.

WHAT has been the character and quality of human rule and authority throughout the world during the past 6,000 years? Is it not a fact that instability, confusions, revolutions and wars have been, and continue to be, the marked characteristics which have and do pertain to personal and corporate government in all the earth? Does the close of the nineteenth century see any improvement in these respects? With preparedness to place 10,000,000 soldiers on the battle-field within six months, does the continent of Europe tell of rest and peace? In no former period of the world's history were the engines for the destruction of human life so fearful and terrible. Science has lent her aid, until the horrible weapons of war seem more like a fearful dream from another Dante's "Inferno" than an awful reality.

There can be no question that the second coming of Christ will be identified with wonderful breaches in natural sequence. It should be carefully noted that a series of miracles, on a scale of magnificent grandeur, will inaugurate the commencement of

The Reign of the Great King.

Let it be intelligently and firmly borne in mind that, at our Lord's first advent, miracle was identified with and attended the whole of His ministry. The Lord Jesus cited the facts of the lepers being cleansed, the deaf being made to hear, the lame to walk, the blind to see, and the dead being raised to life, as amongst the foremost and incontestible proofs of His Messiahship (Matt. 11 : 4, 5). Indeed, from the Virgin's conception until the ascension of our Lord from Mount Olivet, natural sequence may be said to have been in constantly recurring breach, and miracle Christ's attendant Minister of State.

Now, as the supernatural endorsed and accompanied our Lord's advent before, so the Word of God snows that miracle, upon a scale of surpassing grandeur and magnificence, will attend His advent again to be a great King over all the earth; "for the Lord shall be King over all the earth; in that day there shall be one Lord, and His name one (Zech. 14 : 9)."

Concerning the marvellous breaches in natural sequence which will take place when He comes whose right it is to reign, there will be no room for the materialistic scoffer's jest then. Hearken to the words of the inspired Apostle: "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord . . . . that the Lord Himself shall descend from Heaven with the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God." What a breach in natural sequence now takes place! It is the Lord by the resurrection and instant change of untold millions of the Church of Christ: "And the dead in Christ shall rise first." The Lord Jesus, in majesty and great glory, calls from the tomb myriads of the sons of light. Forth they come, in instant obedience to His almighty voice, robed in the incorruptible glory which neither thought, imagination, nor human language can adequately portray or describe (1. Thess. 4 : 15–17).

Breaking His Present Silence

Then instantly follows another tremendous breach in life's present order. True believers in Christ living on the face of the earth will be instantly changed. "Behold," said the apostle, "I shew you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump . . . . for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality" (1. Cor. 15 : 51–52). Then, when the dead are raised incorruptible, and the living instantly changed into the likeness of the body of His glory, they will together be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. Here, beyond all question, is

The Very Majesty of Miracle.

Then follow the marvellous changes which are identified at that time with the physical renovation of the earth (Hab. 3, Psa. 46). In the same wonderful series of events the Lord Himself stands upon the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14 : 4, 5), which, cleaving in twain at His presence "half toward the north and half toward the south," a wide and noble river will be formed, which, opening from the Mediterranean Sea on the west, will run through Jerusalem and flow eastward to the Dead Sea, whose waters henceforth will be healed (Zech. 14 : 4–11 : Ezek. 47 : 1–12).

Thus, by miracle, Jerusalem will become possessed of a magnificent river, which in the past she was destitute of. This great water-way will fit her to become the great maritime centre for which God in the future has designed her (Isa. 33 : 20–21). The groaning creation also will be no longer burdened, for with the manifestation of the sons of God the mournful dirge of 6,000 years of "sorrow, lamentation and woe" give place to the glorious liberty of the earth's great year of jubilee—now begins the rest and peace, and the gladness of "the day the Lord hath made" (Ps. 118 : 24), the antitype of the Sabbath, the 1,000 years of Millennial Glory.

Then "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea, and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord; for all shall know Him, from the least unto the greatest" (Hab. 2 : 14; Heb. 8 : 11).

Without question, the Lord shall reign over this earth in righteousness. Sin will scarcely be known. The nations of the earth shall learn war no more. Peace will be universal and enduring. Good-will to men will everywhere prevail, and Europe will no longer be the vast "armed camp" it has been since the days when the imperial world-power put to a shameful death Jesus Christ the Lord of glory.

Price, Five Cents, Post Free—160th Thousand Enlarged Edition—64 Pages—

COMING WARS AND GREAT EVENTS,

and Ten Signs of the Approaching Final Crisis, by Rev. M. Baxter—Dissolution of the Turkish Empire into the Five Ancient Kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, Thracian Turkey and Bulgaria, which with Britain (separated from Ireland), France, Spain, Italy and Austria, will be formed into an Allied Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms—Subsequent Rise of Napoleon as King of Syria—His Seven Years' Covenant with the Jews—Resurrection and Translation of Saints—3½ Years' Great Tribulation and world-wide Persecution of Christians—Descent of Christ at Armageddon—Ensuing Millennium of 1000 Years after the Year 1900. Address Manager "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to The Christian Herald. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Relief Needed by the Money Market appears to have been fully met by the offer of the Secretary of the Treasury to anticipate the payment of interest and the redemption of bonds. According to a report issued last week, the total amount of money set at liberty by the proposal of August 3, and that of September 22, is $24,106,179, of which $2,683,929 was for premium on the bonds and $21,422,250 was for the face value of the bonds. Of the total purchase money $12,560,278 was under the offer of August 3, and $11,545,901 was under that of September 22. This appears to indicate that the moral effect produced by the Secretary's act had more to do with restoring confidence than the actual supply of money.

New Changes and Revisions of Rules Are occupying the attention of the Civil Service Commissioners who are in consultation with the President. Among the questions which are understood to be under consideration is one which has been a prominent subject of complaint by the opponents of civil service reform, and that is the limitation placed upon the age of applicants by the requirement that they shall not be more than 45 years old. It is proposed to remove this limitation which applies only to copyists, and to the lowest grade of clerks, who enter the service at $1,000 or $1,200 a year. These are the only examinations in the departmental, customs, or Postal Service which are controlled by the 45-year limitation of age, and few men over forty-five years of age desire them, so it is deemed advisable to dispense with a limitation which causes opposition while it is of little practical value. Among other questions of revision which are under consideration s the extention of the classified service to branches of Government employ which are not now included, such as the subordinates of Collectors of Internal Revenue and also in the Postal Service. It is understood that there is no present intention of extending the operations of the rules to the chiefs of divisions.

The Reasons for Discharging a Member of the Civil Service should, it is contended by many members of the League, be made public, while others think it unnecessary and sometimes impolitic. The question, it will be remembered, occasioned some difficulty early in the year in the Senate and it has now been revived by a dispute in the Custom house and Post Office in Chicago. Civil Service Commissioner Oberly, who must be accepted as an authority on the question, has taken a decided stand on the subject, giving his opinion in an interview published by the New York Times. He said that inasmuch as the civil service law required that only men who were fitted should be appointed to office, the principle which imposed that limitation also seemed to justify the requirement that a public officer shall, in exercising the power of dismissal, exercise it only for the public good, and not because of any personal reasons of his own. In other words, he believed that the public, whose servant the appointing officer was, had the right to know the reasons both for his appointments and his dismissals, so that it could applaud him for his good and condemn him for his bad acts. Probably the new rules, now being arranged, will deal with this subject on Mr. Oberly's principle.

The Report of the Utah Commission, Issued on October 4, confirms the suspicion generally entertained, that the movement to secure the admission of Utah as a State was designed to perpetuate polygamy. Although the men who framed the Constitution inserted an anti-polygamy article, the Commission reports that polyamy is still practiced, and has the sanction of the Mormon authorities. The Commission reports that sixty-seven men entered into polygamous relations last year. Convictions are difficult to secure, because no evidence can be obtained of the marriage ceremony, but the subsequent relations of the parties afford positive proof of the fact. The Commission, therefore, regards the movement "as an effort to free the Mormon Church from the toils which the firm attitude of the Government and the energetic course of the Federal officers have thrown around it," and "opposes its consummation."

A New Indian Trouble has Developed. This time it is the Crows who are in insurrection. A band of young braves under the leadership of their new orator and medicine-man "Thunder and Lightning," recently made a raid on the Piegan reservation, three hundred miles from the Crow Agency, in Montana, and carried off sixty ponies. They were celebrating the success of the raid when the Agent attempted to arrest the whole band for horse-stealing. He was resisted, the agency was attacked and riddled with bullets from Indian rifles, but no one was hurt. The Agent sent to Fort Custer for assistance, and a troop of cavalry has been stationed there to protect the agency. No arrests were made last week, but the Indians appear to expect that punishment will be inflicted, and are preparing to resist it. Scouts have been sent out to call in straggling members of the tribe, which looks as though they meant fighting. The older chiefs repudiate the action of the young braves, and it is hoped that their influence may prevent the rising spreading.

The Naturalization Movement Among British residents is becoming more extensive than was expected. Large numbers of Englishmen, Scotchmen and Canadians in all the States are taking out papers, and their influence is likely to be felt in ensuing elections. The number of British residents was, it appears underestimated. In Massachusetts alone, the number, exclusive of Irishmen, is stated to be over 25,000. In Chicago there are, according to the Tribune 20,000 Canadians and 15,000 Englishmen of whom only 2,500 are naturalized. In New York, there are 46,000 with a similar proportion naturalized, and in Philadelphia 35 000. At the census of 1880 the number of persons in the United States born in Great Britain and Canada, exclusive of Irishmen was 1,634,755, and since that time the number of such immigrants exceeded the number of Irish immigrants by 9,500. In view of the large influx of socialists and anarchists, who naturalize themselves whenever they are allowed to do so, the naturalization of British subjects is welcomed as they are as a rule law-abiding, and not amenable to Boss rule or corruption.

An Encouraging Result of a Labor Dispute is reported from Boston, Mass. The horse-shoers for the horse-car railroads in that city recently had a dispute with their employers, and went on strike. As is usual in such cases, the men demanded a double concession in shorter hours and more pay. It seemed likely to become an obstinate struggle, involving much suffering, when the State Board of Arbitration interposed, and persuaded both parties to submit the questions in dispute to the decision of the Board, and to abide by it for a year. What was still more important, the arbitrators induced the strikers to return to work pending the decision. Thus, the men were saved loss of wages, and the companies inconvenience. The Board has now rendered its decision, and has achieved the almost unprecedented feat of pleasing both parties.

A Triple Alliance between Germany, Italy and Austria is reported. It is stated that Signor Crispi, the Italian statesman who visited Prince Bismarck last week, definitely agreed to the terms of an alliance by which Italy has full power to take independent action on the Mediterranean, and should Italian interests conflict with those of France or Russia, Italy will rely upon the support of Germany and Austria. This alliance is to continue for five years, and separate military conventions, the terms of which have not been disclosed, were arranged for a shorter period.

The Difficulty Between France and Germany relative to the shooting affray on the frontier appears to have been amicably settled. The French Minister of Foreign Affairs, in a communication to the Council of State on the subject, said that Count Münster, the German Ambassador had promised that an indemnity would be paid by the German government to the widow of Brignon, the murdered Frenchman, and added that the soldier Kaufmann, who fired the fatal shot, would be tried before the usual civil court, and that his punishment was certain. Further, the German Ambassador gave M. Flourens to understand that the regrets which he had expressed at first on the subject of the incident would be officially repeated by the government of Emperor William. Finally, he expressed the hope that, thanks to a good understanding between the two governments, it would become possible to have a better modus vivendi on the Franco-German frontier, and prevent the occurrence of similar painful affairs.

The Latest News Received From Mr. Henry M. Stanley is dated July 25. At that time the expedition had ascended the Aruwimi River to the elevated country belonging to the Mabodi district. The river becoming too narrow they left the rafts, and the men for several days had to carry a double burden of provisions. The steel whaleboat was carried past the narrows and again launched. Stanley calculated that upon arriving at the summit of the table-lands the expedition would halt two days for a rest, and would establish a camp there, to be garrisoned by twenty men, with a European officer. The districts traversed were tranquil, and little difficulty was experienced in obtaining provisions from the natives.

A Remarkable Disclosure Was Made at the trial of the Irish nationalists who murdered the policeman Wheelehan recently. One of the men arrested turned State's evidence and testified against his fellow prisoners. He confessed in cross examination that he had planned a number of "moonlight" raids in Kerry and Clare. He said that he had been in the pay of the police for the last five years, and that he had received from Constable Wheelehan, just before the attack in which Wheelehan was killed, a small sum of money in payment of his share for arranging the raid. This statement caused a great sensation in the court. The indignation expressed against the Irishman who could take pay from the police while acting with the law-breakers is extreme both in Ireland and in this country.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of The Christian Herald, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Death of Mr. John B. Finch, the Chairman of the national committee of the Prohibition party and head of the order of Good Templars, occurred at Boston, Mass., on October 3. Mr. Finch had been speaking at Lynn, Mass., and travelled to Boston immediately after the meeting. He stepped from the car to the platform and a minute afterwards fell down dead. He had suffered from heart disease for several years, and on two previous occasions his life had been despaired of. He was only thirty-five years of age, and was a most vigorous worker. Since the death of Mr. John B. Gough his services as a speaker have been in constant request, as by common consent he was regarded as the only fit successor of the great orator. He was exceedingly generous, and many poor families will have substantial reason to mourn his early death; but the Temperance cause is the chief sufferer.

A Call for a Conference of Evangelical Christians has been issued. It is signed by Dr. McCosh, Dr. Howard Crosby, Dr. Wm. Taylor, Dr. R. S. Storrs, Mr. Wm. E. Dodge, and many other well-known men. The conference is to be held December 7–9, in Washington, D. C. The subjects for discussion are: 1. What are the present perils and opportunities of the Christian Church and of the country? 2. Can any of them be met best by a hearty co-operation of all Evangelical Christians, which, without detriment to any denominational interests, will serve the welfare of the whole Church? 3. What are the best means to secure such co-operation, and to waken the whole Church to its responsibility? Papers will be read on The Public Schools, The Saloon, Divorce, Mormonism, etc.

The Sudden Death of Ex. Gov. William B. Washburn, of Massachusetts, on October 5, has removed a prominent and much respected citizen. He was attending the meeting of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, of which he was a member, when he suddenly fell down on the platform, and when his friends went to his assistance he was found to be dead. He was sixty-seven years of age, having been born at Winchendon, Massachusetts in 1820. His father died when the boy was only three years old, but he managed to push his way forward and secured a college education. He was elected to Congress in 1862, and was three times re-elected. He resigned in 1871, before the completion of his fourth term, to become Governor of Massachusetts. He was twice re-elected, and resigned in 1874 to succeed Charles Sumner in the United States Senate. He was an earnest Congregationalist, and held several offices of trust in that denomination.

A Bride, Bridegroom and Wedding Party were all disappointed last week in Boston, Mass. The Traveller, of that city, says, that two years ago a young man, who left Boston when a boy to reside in western New York, wrote to a young lady in Boston whom he had known as a schoolfellow, and who had shown a partiality for him then. A correspondence sprang up, and became somewhat voluminous. The old affection on both sides was revived, and eventually the young man proposed marriage, and was accepted. His business arrangements precluded his visiting his betrothed, so the courtship was carried on by letter, until the young man's pecuniary position warranted him in marrying. He furnished a home in readiness for his bride, and then snatched a brief holiday to go to Boston and be married. Tuesday, October 4, was the day fixed for the wedding, and the young man arrived on Monday evening, and went to see his prospective bride. He was surprised at receiving anything but a warm welcome. The young lady manifested none of the affection he expected, and was, in fact, in a very unpleasant state of mind. The next morning all was explained. He was notified that the marriage could not take place. The young lady had changed her mind. She said that "he did not look the same as she thought he would." The school-boy, whom she had liked, had developed into a man whom she could not bring herself to marry. Argument was useless, and he was constrained to return home alone. His chagrin may be imagined, but he will doubtless recover from it. His position is much better than if he had been married to a lady whose affection depended on his personal appearance. Such love is not that which a wife ought to have for her husband—not the love which the apostle had in mind when he made it the type of the love of the Church for Christ. It is said, "Whom having not seen, ye love" (1 Peter 1:8).

A Man Whose Life Was Saved by Love is living in Nashville, Tenn. The American of that city says that a romance has recently come to light in connection with a prominent citizen. He is the son of a prosperous British banker, but when a young man he committed a flagrant act of disobedience, and his father turned him out of doors and forbade him ever again entering his home. The youth, full of remorse and despair, resolved to commit suicide. He procured a pistol and went to a retired place to execute the determination. Sitting for a few moments in reflection, he thought of the young lady to whom he had given his affections, and took her photograph from his pocket to bid it good by. The eyes seemed to look at him reproachfully and to ask him to live for her sake. The thought that she still loved him gave him new hope. He put the pistol away, and determined that he would make an effort to retrieve the past on her account if not for his own. He came to America and drifted to Nashville, where he settled and prospered, and is now a respected citizen. He never married the lady whose portrait was the means of saving his life. She became the wife of another before he could tell her of his reformation, but he has never ceased to think with gratitude of what he owes to her influence over him at that critical moment. The fact may serve as a suggestion to the Christian in dealing with despairing sinners. To all such the message that will have most power to save them is that Christ loves them (1 John 4:10).

An Amusing Retribution has Fallen upon some prisoners in the Chicago jail. Among the men now incarcerated there, are two who formerly held high official position in the city, having control of the very prison in which they are now confined. At that time they were too much engrossed in misappropriating the public money to give proper attention to the sanitary condition of the jail, and now they profess to have made the discovery that it is in a bad state. The kind-hearted physician of the prison has listened to their complaints, and has certified that their state of health requires their removal to more salubrious quarters. The warders, however, are less impressionable. They assert that they have done their duty thoroughly, and have taken care that the "boodle" prisoners are well supplied with cleaning utensils and an abundance of good water, which, if they would use as other prisoners do, would ensure the cells being clean and wholesome. They say that the filthy condition of the cells is due to the two prisoners neglecting to cleanse them; and besides that, if there is sewer gas in the cells, it is owing to defective plumbing, which these very men would have remedied when they were in office if they had done their duty. When an inquiry is made by the proper authorities, the physician's humane advice will probably be followed rather than the cynical suggestions of the jailers; but, in the meantime, the prisoners will have an opportunity of reflecting on the consequences which, sooner or later, fall upon wrong-doers (Prov. 26:27).

The Use of Face Powder has Brought Two young ladies of Ohio into a critical state of health. A press despatch from Springfield, published on Thursday last describes the distress of a prominent family in that city occasioned by the dangerous illness of two of its members—young ladies who have been considered the belles of the city. One of them, it is stated, cannot recover, and the other is in a condition which excites serious alarm. It appears that five years ago they purchased some face powder, which when used gave a remarkable brilliance to their complexion. They received many compliments on their enhanced beauty, and the use of the face powder was continued. But though they became more beautiful, they gradually lost their health. The decay was so slight and so slow in progress that it was scarcely noticeable, but it continued, and a year ago became serious. Since then its progress has become rapid. They lost the use of their fingers, and now their arms are paralyzed; stomach derangements were developed, and frequent spasms occurred. The physician was puzzled, and tried various remedies without success, until the concidence of both sisters being similarly afflicted led him to make searching inquiries. The use of the face powder was disclosed, and he analyzed it. Then the secret was discovered. The powder was found to be largely composed of white-lead which had poisoned the system of both girls. It may be hoped that the discovery has not been made too late to save their lives. Their danger and sufferings should be a warning to other ladies whose desire to make themselves attractive is leading them to use similar applications. None are so beautiful as they who have followed the apostolic directions for ladies (1 Peter 3:3, 4.)

BRIEF NOTES.

In a recently published work on Presbyterianism the Rev. Mr. Kerr states that the number of Presbyterians in the world is now forty millions.

Mrs. Amanda Smith has been seriously ill with African fever. She hopes to return to the United States for recuperation as soon she is able to travel.

The new Diocesan House, the gift of the late Miss Catherine Wolfe to the Protestant Episcopal Bishopric of New York, was opened on September 28.

The Prohibition vote in Tennessee is said to be fully 125,000. The majority against Prohibition will be about 15,000. The colored vote was largely with the majority.

Mr. James B. Jermain, of Albany, N. Y., has presented the Y. M. C. A., of that city, with a new building, on which he has spent $80,000. The site, which cost $40,000, was given by a few citizens.

The Princeton undergraduates have subscribed among themselves to pay the expenses of sending one of their number, Mr. John Newton Freeman, as a missionary to India. The fund reached $1,600.

Revival services of a very successful character have been conducted at Woodbridge, N. J., by the Rev. B. Fay Mills. The Congregational, Presbyterian and Methodist churches united in the work.

Mrs. Ada C. Bittenbender, a successful lawyer in Nebraska, has been nominated for Justice of the Supreme Court. This is the first case in the history of the country in which a lady has received such a nomination.

A meteoric stone, described as of the size of a rail road car, fell near New Brunswick, Me., two weeks ago. Its heat was so intense the following day that the crowds who attempted to make an examination were unable to approach within several feet of the fiery mass.

The Rev. F. E. Clark will accept the office of President of the Societies of Christian Endeavor, to which he was elected at the recent convention in Saratoga. He has resigned the pastorate of his church in South Boston, Mass., to devote himself exclusively to the work. There are now 2,500 societies, with a membership of over 150,000.

One of the gang who murdered the Rev. George A. Haddock at Sioux City, Ia., has been convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to four years' imprisonment. That anyone concerned in the cold-blooded murder should escape with so slight a punishment is ridiculous, but even that sentence is to be appealed. The man convicted is named Fred. Munchrath.

The church of Belleville, N. J., has presented a memorial to its pastor, the Rev. Ralph W. Brokaw, begging him to withdraw his acceptance of the co-pastorate of the Brooklyn Tabernacle. Several prominent citizens, not connected with the church, joined in the memorial. Mr. Brokaw has yielded to their request. Dr. Talmage has found a co-pastor in Dr. Ostrander.

The receipts of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, as stated in the annual report presented last week, were $679,572.54. Of this total the contributions, exclusive of legacies, amounted to $366,958.40. The expenditure of the Board on missions was $642,657.71. This, with the expenses of agencies and administration, leaves a balance in the treasurer's hands of $1,577.13.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

HOW HEARTS ARE SOFTENED.

A New Sermon By Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for Him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for Him, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn." Zechariah 12: 10, 11.

Hardness of Heart a Grevious Evil—How Tenderness May be Obtained—I. Arises Out of a Divine Operation—The Trinity Engaged—A Secret Work—Productive—II. Wrought by a Faith-Look at Christ—The Remarkable Use of Pronouns—Who Pierced Him—III. The Character of the Mourning Produced—Immediate—Touching Tenderness—Personal.

HARDNESS of heart is a great and grievous evil. It exists not only in the outside world, but in many who frequent the courts of the Lord's house. Beneath the robes of religion many carry a heart of stone. It is more than possible to come to baptism and the sacred supper, to come constantly to the hearing of the Word, and even, as a matter of form, to attend to private religious duties, and yet still to have an unrenewed heart, a heart within which no spiritual life palpitates, and no spiritual feeling exists. Nothing good can come out of a stony heart; it is barren as a rock. To be unfeeling is to be unfruitful. Prayer without desire, praise without emotion, preaching without earnestness—what are all these? Like the marble images of life, they are cold and dead. Insensibility is A Deadly Sign.

Frequently it is the next stage to destruction. Pharaoh's hard heart was a prophecy that his pride would meet a terrible overthrow. The hammer of vengeance is not far off when the heart becomes harder than an adamant stone. You are in this matter agreed with me: at least, I know that some of you are thoroughly thus minded; for you are longing to be made tender and contrite. Certain of you who are truly softened by divine grace are very prone to accuse yourselves of being stony-hearted. We are poor judges of our own condition, and in this matter many make mistakes. But, whether this be so or not, I address myself to all of you whose prayer is for godly sorrow for sin. The object of this sermon is to show how this tenderness is to be obtained, and how sorrow for sin can be produced in the heart, and maintained there. I would set forth the simple method by which the inward nature can be made living, feeling, and tender, full of warm emotions, fervent breathings, and intense affections towards the Lord Jesus Christ.

It will be instructive to keep to the words of the text. This passage is peculiarly suited to our purpose, and it will add authority to that which we teach. Observe that holy tenderness arises out of 'a divine operation. "I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications." Secondly, it is actually wrought by the look of faith: "And they shall look upon Me whom they have pierced," and they shall mourn for Him." And, thirdly, the tenderness which comes in this way leads to mourning for sin of an intense kind: "They shall mourn for Him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for Him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born.

I. First, note that the holy tenderness which makes men mourn for sin arises out of

A Divine Operation

It is not in fallen man to renew his own heart. Can the adamant turn itself to wax, or the granite soften itself to clay? Only He that stretcheth out the heavens and layeth the foundation of the earth can form and reform the spirit of man within him. The power to make the rock of our nature flow with rivers of repentance is not in the rock itself.

The power lies in the omnipotent Spirit of God, and is an omen for good that He delights to exercise this power. The Spirit of God is prompt to give life and feeling. Remember, you that are hard of heart, that your hope lies this way; God Himself, who melts the icebergs of the northern sea, must make your soul to yield up its hardness in the presence of His love. Nothing short of the work of God within you can effect this. "Ye must be born again," and that new birth must be from above. The Spirit of God must work regeneration in you. He is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham; but until He works you are dead and insensible. Even now I perceive the goings forth of His power: He is moving you to desire His divine working, and in that gracious desire the work has already begun.

Note next, that as this tenderness comes of the Spirit of God, so it also comes by His working in full co-operation with the Father and with the Son. In our text we have all the three persons of the divine Trinity. We hear the Father say, "I will pour upon the house of David the spirit of grace," and that the Spirit when poured out leads men to look to Him whom they pierced, even to the incarnate Son of God. Thus the Holy Ghost proceeding from the Father and the Son, fulfils the purpose of the Father by revealing the Son, and thus the heart of man is reached. Do not think, therefore, when thou feelest the Holy Ghost melting thee, that the Father will refuse thee: it is He that sent the Holy Spirit to deal with thee. This operation is An Unseen Secret Work.

Thou canst not perceive the work of the Spirit by the senses of the flesh; it is spiritually discerned. He that feels the movement of the Holy Spirit, knows that a singular work is going on within him, but what it is, or who it is that worketh it, he knoweth not. Do not, therefore, expect to be informed when the Spirit is upon thee. Marvel not if it should so happen that He is dealing with thee now, though thou knowest it not, "For God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not."

The operations of the Holy Ghost are consciously perceived by the human heart, but they are not always attributed to their right cause. Many a man, does not know how his new tenderness has been produced. He finds himself anxious to hear and understand the gospel, and he feels that the gospel affects him as it never did before, but he does not perceive those "invisible" cords of love which are drawing him toward his Saviour. Before long he will cry, "This is the finger of God;" but as yet he perceives not the divine cause. It is well set forth by John Bunyan in his parable of the fire, which burned though a man tried to quench it. There was one behind the wall who secretly poured oil upon the fire. He but the fire burned because of what he poured on it. You can see the flame, but you cannot see the hidden One who ministers the fuel. The Spirit of God may work in you, my dear hearer, this morning, but it will not be with special token of marvel or voice or vision. Not with earthquake nor wind nor fire will He come, but with "a still small voice."

Himself was Unperceived,

But the secret operation of the Spirit is known by its effects, for it is productive. We read in the text of "the spirit of grace and of supplications," which must mean that the Spirit produces graciousness and prayerfulness in the soul upon which He works. The man is now willing to receive the grace or free favor of God: he ceases to be proud, and becomes gracious. He is put into a condition in which God's grace can deal with him. As long as you are self-righteous; you are upon wrong ground, for you are making claims which He cannot possibly allow. You must be willing to receive as a free favor what God will never give you if you claim it by right. When thou art made conscious of sin, then forgiveness can be granted. When thou art malleable under the hammer of God's Word, then will He work His work of love upon thee. When thou dost lay thine own righteousness aside, and take up the cry, "God be merciful to me a sinner," then shalt thou go to thy house justified.

All this leads on towards the tenderness which begets mourning for sin. Again I say, this is the point from which help must come for the sinner. You that have been striving to feel, and yet cannot feel, and do not feel—you should look to the strong for strength, and to the living for life. He who in the day of His creation breathed into the nostrils of man the breath of life, so that he became a living soul, can infuse the new life into you, and give you with it all the feeling which is natural thereto. Think much of the Holy Spirit, for He can make thee live in the truest sense. It is God's to give thee a tender heart, not thine to create it within thyself. Do not attempt first to renew thy heart, and then to come to Christ for salvation; for this renewal of heart is salvation. Come thou as thou art, confessing all thy hardness, thy wicked, wilful obduracy and obstinacy, confess it all; and then put thyself into the hands of the Spirit, who can remove thy hardness at the same time that grace removes thy guilt.

II. But now I come to the core and centre of our subject: this tenderness of heart and mourning for sin is actually at the pierced Son of God. True sorrow for sin comes not without the Spirit of God; but even the Spirit of God Himself does not work it except by leading us to look to Jesus the crucified. There is no true mourning for sin until the eye has seen Christ. It is a beautiful remark of an old divine, that eyes are made for two things at least: first, to look with, and next, to weep with. The eye which looks to the pierced One is the eye which weeps for Him. O soul, when thou comest to look where all eyes should look, even to Him who was pierced, then thine eye begins to weep for that for which all eyes should weep, even the sin which slew thy Saviour! There is no saving repentance except within sight of the Cross. That repentance of sin which omits Christ, is a repentance which will have to be repented of. It is a tempest of the soul with thunder and lightning, but no rain. God save us from remorse! it worketh death.

Wrought by a Faith-Look.

Note well that this look to the pierced One is peculiarly dear to God. Observe the change of the pronoun in the middle of the verse: "They shall look upon Me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for Him." The Me and the Him refer to the same person. I lay no special stress upon this, and I do not attempt to prove any doctrine from it; but certainly it is remarkable that when we read this verse with defined views as to the oneness of Christ with God, and the Union of God and man in one person in the Lord Jesus, we find the pronouns perfectly correct, and understand why there should be "Me" in one case, and "Him" in another. If you adopt any other theory, then the passage would seem to be a jumble of words. O, dear hearts, if this morning, in those pews, you look to Christ believingly, accepting Him as God's salvation, then is the promise fulfilled before the eyes of Him who spake it, and said, "They shall look on Me whom they have pierced." He was lifted on a cross to be looked at, He was nailed there that He might be and His heart was pierced that we might see the blood and water, which are our double cure. The look which blesses us so as to produce tenderness of heart, is a look to Jesus as the pierced One. On this I want to dwell for a season. It is not looking to Jesus as God only which affects the heart, but looking to this same Lord and God as crucified for us. We see the Lord pierced, and then the piercing of our own heart begins. When the Lord reveals Jesus to us, we begin to have our sins revealed. We see who it was that was pierced, and this deeply stirs our sorrow. Come, dear souls, let us go together to the Cross for a little while, and note who it was that there received the spear-thrust of the Roman soldier. Look at His side, and mark that fearful gash which has broached His heart, and set the double flood in motion. The centurion said, "Truly this was the Son of God." He who only hath immortality condescended to die! He was all glory and power; and yet He died! He was all tenderness and grace; and yet He died! Infinite goodness was hanged upon a tree! Boundless bounty was pierced with a spear! This tragedy exceeds all others! However dark man's ingratitude may seem in other cases, it is blackest here!

A Perpetual Spectacle,

Look steadily at the pierced One, and which is here covered by the word "pierced." Our Lord suffered greatly and grievously. I cannot in one discourse rehearse the story of His sorrows; the griefs of His life of poverty and persecution; the griefs of Gethsemane, and the bloody sweat; the griefs of His desertion, denial and betrayal; the griefs of Pilate's hall, and the scourging and the spitting and the mockery; the griefs of the cross, with its dishonor and agony. The sufferings of our Lord's body were only the body of His sufferings.

Note the Suffering

"'Twas not the insulting voice of scorn
So deeply wrung His heart;
The piercing nail, the pointed thorn,
That caused the saddest smart:

"But every struggling sigh betray'd
A heavier grief within,
How on His burden'd soul was laid
The weight of human sin."

Our Lord was made a curse for us. The penalty for sin, or that which was equivalent thereto, He endured. "He, His own self, bare our sins in His own body on the tree." "The chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed." Brethren, the sufferings of Jesus ought to melt our hearts. I mourn this morning that I do not mourn as I should. I accuse myself of that hardness of heart which I condemn, since I can tell you this story without breaking down. My Lord's griefs are untellable. Behold and see if there was ever sorrow like unto His sorrow! Here we lean over a dread abyss and look down into fathomless gulfs. Now we are upon great waters, where deep calleth unto deep. If you will steadfastly consider Jesus pierced for our sins, and all that is meant thereby, your hearts must relent.

Who it Was That Pierced Him.

"They shall look on Me whom they have pierced;" the "they," in each case, relates to the same persons. We slew the Saviour, even we, who look to Him and live. If a man were condemned and put to death, you might inquire who it was that slew him; and you might be told that it was the judge who condemned him; but that would not be all the truth. Another might blame the jury who brought in the verdict of guilty, or the executioner who actually hanged him; but when you go to the root of the matter, you would find that it was the man's crime which was the real blameworthy cause of his death. In the Saviour's case sin was the cause of His death. Transgression pierced Him. But whose transgression? Whose? It was not His own, for He knew no sin, neither was guile found in His lips. Pilate said, "I find no fault in this man." Brethren, the Messiah was cut off, but not for Himself. Our sins slew the Saviour. He suffered because there was no other way of vindicating the justice of God and allowing us to escape.

Let me also say to you, beloved, that the more you look at Jesus crucified, the more you will mourn for sin. Growing thought will bring growing tenderness. I would have you look much at the pierced One, that you may hate sin much. I would say, look to the pierced One till your own heart is pierced. An old divine saith, "Look at the Cross until all that is on the Cross is in your heart." He further says: Look at Jesus until He looks at you. Steadily view His suffering person until He seems to turn His head and look at you, as He did at Peter when he went out and wept bitterly. See Jesus till you see yourself: mourn for Him till you mourn for your sin.

III. My time is nearly over, and therefore I must only for a minute touch upon the surface of my third subject: the sight of Christ crucified will produce a mourning for sin of a very thorough character.

It Will be Immediate.

If the Spirit of God grants us an inward sight of Christ, we shall bleed inwardly at once. The sentences are fast joined together: "They shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn." How rapidly the Spirit of God often works! "His word runneth very swiftly." With a single blow of grace the bars of iron are broken. Saul of Tarsus was foaming at the mouth with rage against Jesus of Nazareth and His disciples, but a flash and a word changed him. "Why persecutest thou Me?" showed him the pierced Lord, and, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" was his speedy answer. One glimpse at Christ will make yonder stubborn sinner bow the knee.

Look on him, Lord!

This mourning, according to our text, is refined and pure. They shall mourn for Him, they shall be in bitterness for Him. For Jesus they sorrow rather than for themselves. Sin is not mentioned in these verses, and yet the sorrow is all concerning sin. The grief for sin itself is overborne and compassed about by the greater grief occasioned by the sad results of sin upon the person of the pierced One. Sin is grieved over as it is against the Lord: even as David cries, "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned." The mourning of a penitent is not because of hell: if there were no hell he would mourn just as much. His grief is not for what sin might cost himself, but for what it has cost the Substitute.

In this mourning there is a touching tenderness: "They shall be in bitterness for Him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born." It is not a son lamenting for a father, for there the grief might be as much for the loss of the father's care and help as for the father's self; but in the case of a father mourning his young son, the father is not supposed to lose anything but his boy; his grief is for the child himself. It is a bitter mourning which we have when we see Jesus slain by our sins. Were it not for the consequences which grace has caused to flow therefrom, our sorrow would be hopeless and helpless; for we feel that in killing Jesus we have destroyed our best, our only hope, our one and only joy. His death was the hiding of the sun, and the shaking of the earth, and we feel it to be so within our own souls.

This mourning is

Personal Grief;

every man repents apart, and every woman apart. It is a private, personal grief; it is not produced by the contagion of example, but by the conviction of the individual conscience. Such sorrow is only to be assuaged by Jesus Christ Himself when He is revealed as the salvation of God.

Brethren, I am conscious that I have not preached as I ought to have preached this morning. I have been mastered by my subject. I could sit down alone and picture my Divine Master on the cross. I delight to do so. It is my comfort to meditate on Him. I see Him hanging on the tree, and carefully survey Him, from His head encircled with the thorns, down to His blessed feet, made by the nails to be fountains of crimson blood. I have wept behind the cross at the marks of the dread scourging which He bore; and then coming to the front I have gazed upon His pierced hands, and lingered long before that opened side. Then I feel as if I could die of a pleasing grief and mournful joy. Oh, how I then love and adore! But here before this crowd I am a mere lisper of words—words which fall far below the height of this great argument.

Ah me! Ah me! Who among the sons of men could fitly tell you of His unknown agonies, His piercing anguish, His distraction and heart-break? Who can fully interpret that awful cry of "Eloi, Eloi, lama, sabachthani? My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" Alone I can hide my face and bow my head; but here what can I—O Lord, what can Thy servant do?

"Words are but air, and tongues but clay,
And Thy compassions are divine."

I cannot tell of love's bleeding, love's agony, love's death! If the Holy Ghost will graciously come at this time and put me and my words altogether aside, and set my Lord before you, evidently crucified among you, then shall I be content, and you will go home thoughtful, tender, hating sin, and therefore more deeply happy, more serenely glad, than ever before. The Lord grant it for His name's sake! Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THACKERAY'S VIEW OF DEATH.*

I DON'T pity anybody who leaves the world, not even a fair young girl in her prime; I pity those remaining. On her journey, if it pleases God to send her, depend on it there's no cause for grief; that's an earthly condition. Out of our stormy life, and brought nearer the Divine light and warmth, there must be a serene climate. Can't you fancy sailing into the calm? Would you care about going on the voyage, but for the dear souls left on the other shore? but we sha'n't be parted from them, no doubt, though they are from us. Add a little more intelligence to that which we possess, even as we are, and why shouldn't we be with our friends, though ever so far off? . . . Why presently, the body removed, shouldn't we personally be anywhere at will—properties of Creation, like the electric something (spark, is it?) that thrills all round the globe simultaneously? and if round the globe why not Ueberall? and the body being removed or elsewhere disposed of and developed, sorrow and its opposite, crime and the reverse, ease and disease, desire and dislike, etc. go along with the body—a lucid Intelligence remains, a Perception ubiquitous.

Thackeray in America.

Broadway is miles upon miles long, a rush of life such as I never have seen; not so full as the Strand, but so rapid. The houses are always being torn down and built up again, the railroad cars drive slap into the midst of the city. There are barricades and scaffoldings banging everywhere. I have not been into a house except the fat country one, but something new is being done to it, and the hammerings are clattering in the passage, or a wall, or steps are down, or the family is going to move. Nobody is quiet here; no more am I. The rush and restlessness pleases me, and I like, for a little, the dash of the stream. I am not received as a god, which I like too. There is one paper which goes on every morning saying I am a snob, and I don't say no. Six people were reading it at breakfast this morning, and the man opposite me popped it under the table-cloth. But the other papers roar with approbation. At present, I incline to come to England in June or July and get ready a new set of lectures, and bring them back with me. That second course will enable me to provide for the children and their mother finally and satisfactorily, and my mind will be easier after that, and I can sing Nunc dimittis without faltering. There is money-making to try at, to be sure, and ambition—I mean in public life; perhaps that might interest a man, but not novels, nor lectures, nor fun, any more. I don't seem to care about these any more, or for praise, or for abuse, or for reputation of that kind. That literary play is played ous, and the puppets going to be locked up for good and all.

*From the Unpublished Letters of Thackeray in Scribner's Magazine for October which contains, besides, articles on Caverns and Cavern-life, Municipal Government etc, etc. Price 25 cents. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

A Country Scene in Chili.

O! I am tired of shaking hands with people, and acting the lion business night after night. Everybody is introduced and shakes hands. I know thousands of colonels, professors, editors, and what not, and walk the streets guiltily, knowing that I don't know 'em, and trembling lest the man opposite to me is one of my friends of the day before. I believe I am popular, except at Boston among the newspaper men who fired into me, but a great favorite with the monde there and elsewhere. Here in Philadelphia it is all praise and kindness. Do you know there are 500,000 people in Philadelphia? I daresay you had no idea thereof, and smile at the idea of there being a monde here and at Boston and New York. Early next month I begin at Washington and Baltimore, then, D. V., to New Orleans, back to New York by Mississippi and Ohio, if the steamers don't blow up, and if they do, you know I am easy.

A COUNTRY SCENE IN CHILI.

(See Illustration.)

AMONG the South American republics Chili, though inconsiderable in size, occupies a prominent place. Shut in between the Andes and the Pacific it is a mere strip of coast line, 2,485 miles long, with an average breadth of little over one hundred miles. With its recent accessions of territory it contains only 256,850 square miles, and has a population of about two millions and a half. Two facts have contributed to give the little nation its present influence. One is the superabundant energy of its people, and the other their intense love for and pride of their native land. It was under the dominion of the Spaniards, who invaded it after the conquest of Peru, until 1818, when the Chilians threw off the Spanish yoke and established a republic. A President, elected every five years, and two houses of Congress, constitute the government.

As in the other South American and Central American countries, a political struggle is now raging between the Liberals and the reactionaries. The domination of the clerical party was practically destroyed by the revolution of 1818, but the priests and bishops have never ceased to intrigue for the recovery of their lost power. Hitherto they have not been successful, Don Jose Balmaceda, the present President, who was elected last year, being a strong liberal. It was found necessary early in the struggle, to banish the Jesuits, the most dangerous of the malcontents, but the other Roman Catholic orders remain, and exert considerable influence over the people. A heavy blow at the clerical combination against the government was struck not long ago when Congress enacted that the appointment of bishops should be transferred from the Pope to the President of the Republic. This, with the law legalizing civil marriage, has crippled the power of the Church to a decree not yet fully realized.

In spite of the ascendancy that the Roman Catholic Church has so long enjoyed in Chili, it is a fact that nowhere in South America has Protestantism made so much progress in recent times. The Presbyterian Mission in the country, which Dr. Trumbull, of the American Board directs, has worked with indefatigable energy, and God has blessed its labors to the conversion of a large number of the people. Many of its churches are self-supporting, and it has now erected a college in which male and female students are being trained for mission work.

ALFRED ARMADALE'S RETURN.

(See Illustration on page 653.)

A MISERABLE discontented man was Alfred Armadale. There were few cities from Maine to Florida, or from New York to San Francisco, in which he was not known. In many of them he dare not show his face after his first visit, for numerous creditors would have pounced upon him, and men whom he had wronged would have taken vengeance upon him, either legally or summarily. A gambler, a libertine, and, occasionally, a drunkard, he was a pest wherever he went. Yet he had his good qualities. He could never see a case of real distress without relieving it if he had any money in his pocket, and, more than once, in a fire he had been foremost among the rescuers, and had saved lives at the risk of his own. There were traces of nobility in him which showed themselves on rare occasions, indicating that the material for making a good man was there if only the evil could be eradicated. Neverthless he did many cruel things with a reckless disregard of consequence. He was sorry for his victims afterward, but, as he had no money and could no compensate them for the wrong, he was powerless, and slipped away to another city where he would not be harassed by the sight of the misery he had caused.

Armadale could not have lived this idle vagabond life if he had not received an income from somebody. The fact was that his father, a well-to-do English farmer, kept him supplied with money. Again and again the old man had paid his debts, until, at last, losing patience, he had guaranteed him a hundred dollars a month which would be mailed to him in America, and not a cent more under any circumstances. The month's allowance was always spent long before the next was due, and Armadale resorted to any ingenious device that occurred to him to get over the intervening time. He was often reduced to sore straits, but he managed to live, though gradually getting more and more hardened and reckless. One evidence of this growing callousness was that latterly he found himself looking foward to his father's death. He expected that then he would share with his elder brother, and his two sisters, the whole estate. Formerly love for his father had kept him from wishing for this event, but sin always degrades the nature, and tends to destroy natural affection and it was so in his case. He grew to long for the news that he was fatherless for the sake of the inheritance it would bring him. Judge then of his disappointment, when, on receiving a black-bordered letter, which he opened eagerly, he learned that his father was dead, but had left him nothing but the regular monthly allowance which he had been receiving. It would be continued to him, he was told, but the father had expressly stated in his will that Alfred, having already had his share of the estate, was not entitled to anything more than his allowance.

For about two or three years he lived on in America, brooding over his lot, making vain appeals to his brother for money, and execrating him when he received letters from him full of Christian counsel, but containing no funds.

At last dissipation and resentment made him desperate, and he determined to go to England, and by fair means or foul—he had got to that—compel his brother to divide equally with him. He lost no time in executing the project, and one winter night he was once more in his native parish. He meant to reconnoitre before presenting himself, and had bought a suit of country clothes such as farmers wore, to avoid attracting attention. It was many years since he and his brother had met, and so disguised and with the changes which his wild life had made in his features, he did not think his brother would recognize him. Making his way by well remembered paths to the old farm-house, he looked around at the evidences of comfort and prosperity, and they made his heart almost burst with envy. He felt toward his brother as Cain felt.

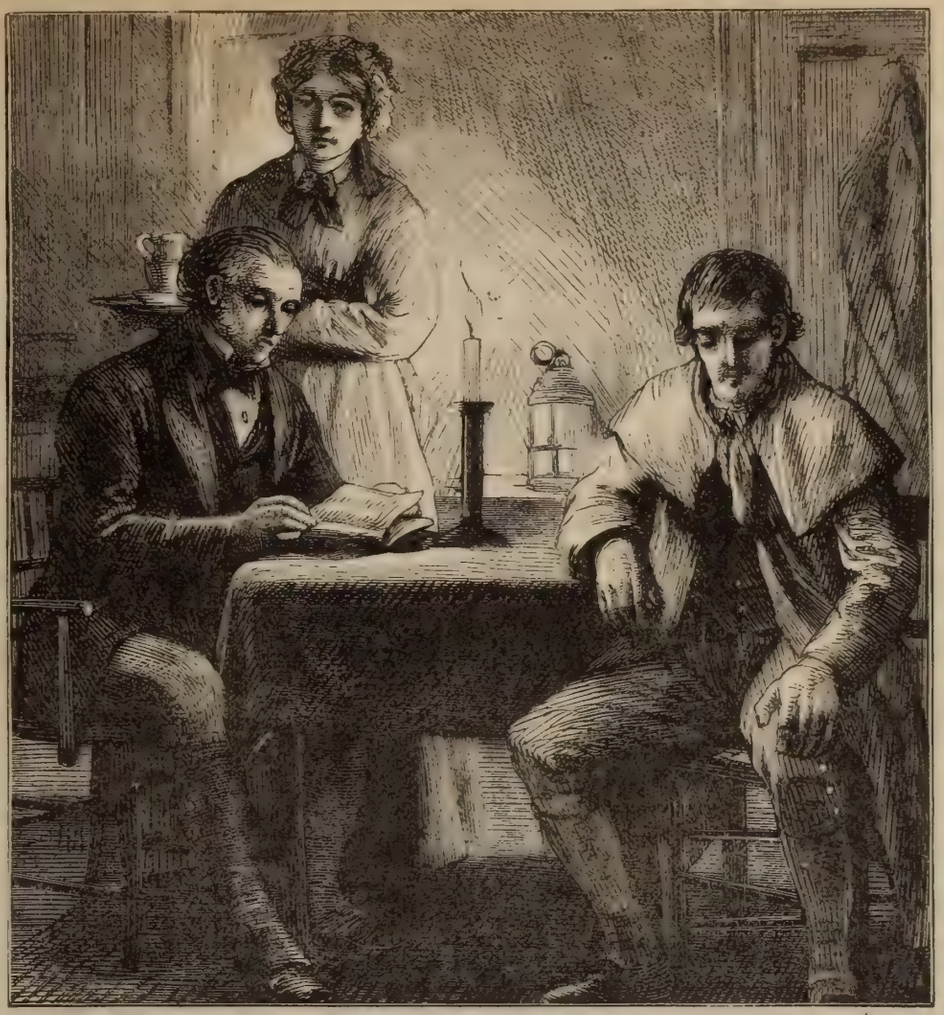
It was a cold, rainy night, and the light and warmth within made his own desolate position more unenviable by contrast. He heard footsteps, and sheltered himself under an outhouse where he thought the farm-hand, who was passing, did not see him, but the man must have observed, for presently a man whom he easily recognized as his brother, came out with a lantern and walked directly to his place of concealment.



Alfred Armadale's Return.

"Will you come into the house a bit?" said a voice which reminded the wanderer of his father's. "It is a bitter night."

Armadale accepted the hospitality in few words and followed his brother into the old sitting-room. He refused to remove his wraps, saying that he should go as soon as the rain ceased. Some food and milk which was offered him, however, he did accept, and then the farmer, bringing out the family Bible, said they were about to have family prayers; perhaps the traveller would join them. Alfred Armadale made no objection, but sat sullenly during the reading and did not kneel when the others did. But the prayer startled him. To his amazement he heard himself prayed for by name, and his brother was very earnest about it, too, praying that the prodigal might repent and return. This touched him; he had imagined himself forgotten, almost hated. Here was the brother whom he had cursed, calling down blessings on his head!

"I should like to have a few words with you on family business," he said, when the prayer was over.

"Certainly," said the surprised farmer, and took the stranger into another room. What passed there, neither of them ever told; but when they came out the elder brother had his hand on the traveller's shoulder, and, leading him to his wife, told her that this was the long lost brother for whom they had so often prayed. There was no limit to the welcome either of them gave the prodigal, and his heart melted. He had come to meet his brother as an enemy, and he had found a friend.

The wanderer might have lived there a welcome guest until old age; but such men do not reach old age. Dissipation and hard living had undermined his constitution. He fell ill a few days after his arrival, and, in spite of skilful medical treatment and the tenderest nursing a man could have, he gradually sank. It was a comfort to his brother to see that as he neared the threshold of eternity, he anxiously sought forgiveness from God and listened to gospel truth. The light dawned upon him at length. "It is a comfort," he said, "to be dying in the old home. I am glad I came. You have taught me the way to a better land. I am not fit to enter it, but through Christ I shall go in. God bless you all." And all his wanderings were ended. The prodigal was at rest.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 638.)

The Last Shilling—A Gift of Clothing—A Drunken Couple Reformed—A Gospel Dinner-Party—Removal to a New House—Gifts to Aid in Furnishing—Naming a Child—Suffering from Irritable Temper—Seven Months' Work—Silver Spoons Sold for Food—A Legacy—House to House Visitation.

March 7, 1834. To-day we have only one shilling left. Many times also in Bristol our purse has been either empty or nearly so, though we have not been brought quite so low as it regards provisions, as was sometimes the case at Teignmouth. This evening, when we came home from our work, we found a brother, our tailor, waiting for us, who brought a new suit of clothes both for Brother Craik and me, which a brother, whose name was not to be mentioned, had ordered for us.

March 10. Some time since, a brother who had been brought to the knowledge of the Lord through our instrumentality, having been previously guilty of habitual drunkenness and many other open sins, requested with tears our prayers on behalf of his wife, who, like himself formerly, was still given to drinking, and who grew worse and worse. About ten days after he had spoken to us it pleased God to begin a work of grace in her heart in answer to many prayers of her husband, and this evening she was added to us in fellowship

March 31. To-day the brethren and sisters in comunion at Bethesda dined together, having been invited by a sister; and in the evening the churches of Gideon and Bethesda took tea together. Both times were refreshing seasons. At dinner we were together from one till half past three, at tea from five to nine. Both times we prayed repeatedly, sang hymns, read a little of the Word, and several brethren spoke of the Lord's dealings with them.

April 14. Brother and sister Craik and ourselves have been living together hitherto; but now, as the Lord has given to them one child, and to us two, and there are but six rooms in our house, so that of late dear brother Craik and I have had repeatedly to go to another house to be uninterrupted, we came at last to the conclusion that it would be better for our souls and the Lord's work that we should separate.

April 15. To-day I received from several sisters £25 towards furnishing a house.

April 26. We have repeatedly conversed about the name which we should give to our babe; but, being unsettled about it, and considering that in all our ways we ought to acknowledge the Lord, I gave myself to-day to prayer concerning this matter; and the name Elijah, about which I had never thought, was particularly, whilst praying, impressed on my mind, and therefore we intend to name the child Elijah, i. e., my God is Jah, Jehovah. May the Lord in mercy grant Elijah's spirit and Elijah's blessing to our little one!

May 4. To-day £15 more was given to me towards furnishing a house. Thus the Lord has now graciously supplied our need in this particular also. May 13. To-day £2 more was given to us towards furnishing the house, and also some carpet. May 15. To-day we moved into our new house, having lived nearly two years with brother and sister Craik.

June 8. Lord's Day. I obtained no text yesterday, notwithstanding repeated prayer and reading of the Word. This morning I awoke with these words: "My grace is sufficient for thee." As soon as I had dressed myself I turned to II Cor. 12, to consider this passage; but in doing so, after prayer, I was led to think that I had not been directed to this portion for the sake of speaking on it, as I at first thought, and I therefore followed my usual practice in such cases, i. e., to read in the Scriptures where I left off last evening. In doing so, when I came to Heb. 11: 13-16, I felt this was the text. Having prayed, I was confirmed in it, and in a few minutes the Lord was pleased to open this passage to me. I preached on it with great enjoyment, both at Gideon and Bethesda, particularly in the evening at Bethesda. This help was evidently from God. May He fill my heart with gratitude, and encourage me by this, to trust in Him for the future! I now understand why those words, "My grace is sufficient for thee," were brought to my mind when I awoke this morning. [It pleased God, as I have heard since, greatly to bless what I said on that passage, and at least one soul was brought to the Lord.]

June 25. These last three days I have had very little real communion with God, and have therefore been very weak spiritually, and have several times felt irritability of temper. May God in mercy help me to have more secret prayer! Let none expect to have the mastery over his inward corruption in any degree, without going in his weakness again and again to the Lord for strength. Nor will prayer with others, or conversing with the brethren, make up for secret prayer; for I had been engaged in both repeatedly, during the three previous days, as my journal shows.

June 26. I was enabled, by the grace of God, to rise early, and I had nearly two hours in prayer before breakfast. I feel now this morning more comfortable, May God in mercy help me to walk before Him this day, and to do His work; and may He keep me from all evil!

July 5. The Lord very mercifully kept us today from a great calamity, the apron of our Christian servant having caught fire; but the fire was extinguished, and she was kept from being burned!

July 11. I have prayed much about a master for a boy's school, to be established in connection with our Institution. Eight have applied for the situation, but none seemed to be suitable. Now at last the Lord has given us a brother, who will commence the work. The Lord allowed us to call upon Him many times before He answered, but at last He granted our request.

July 13. To-day we finished reading through the Scriptures, at family prayer, the second time since we came to Bristol, which is a little more than two years. I mention this circumstance to show how often we may read through the whole of the Scriptures, though we should read but a very little every day, if we go regularly and steadily onward.

August 18. To-day brother Craik and I engaged a sister to be governess of another girls' school, which we intend to establish in dependence upon the Lord for supplies.

August 24. I had prayed repeatedly, and had read ten chapters of the Word to get a text, but obtained none, and had to go this evening to the chapel without knowing on what portion of His Holy Word the Lord would have me to speak. At the commencement of the meeting I was directed to Lament. 3: 22-26, on which I spoke with much assistance and enjoyment.

September 18. A brother, a tailor, was sent to measure me for new clothes. My clothes are again getting old, and it is therefore very kind of the Lord to provide thus.

October 9. Our little Institution, established in dependence upon the Lord, and supplied by Him with means, has now been seven months in operation, and through it have been benefited with instruction:—1. In the Sunday-school, about 129 children. 2. In the adult school, about 40 adults. 3. In the two day schools for boys and the two day schools for girls, 209 children, of whom 51 have been entirely free; the others pay about one-third of the expense. There have been also circulated 482 Bibles, and 520 New Testaments. Lastly, £57 has been spent to aid missionary exertions. The means which the Lord has sent us, as the fruit of many prayers, during these months, amount to £167.

October 28. This afternoon brother Craik and I took tea with seven brothers and sisters, whom the Lord has brought to a knowledge of Himself through our instrumentality, within the last two years, all but one belonging to the same family. We heard there a most affecting account of a poor little orphan boy, who for some time attended one of our schools, and who seems there, as far as we can judge, to have been brought to a real concern about his soul, and who some time ago was taken to the poorhouse some miles out of Bristol. He has expressed great sorrow that he can no longer attend our school and ministry. May this, if it be the Lord's will, lead me to do something also for the supply of the temporal wants of poor children, the pressure of which has occasioned this poor boy to be taken away from our school!

November 1. To-day, our means being completely gone, we had them supplied in the following manner: Some time since some silver spoons were given to us, which we never used, from the consideration that for servants of Christ it was better, for the sake of example, to use cheaper ones, and for that reason we had sold our plate at Teignmouth. Yet up to this day these spoons remained unsold. But now, as we wanted money, we disposed of them, considering that the kind giver would not be displeased at our doing so to supply our need.

November 4. I spent the greater part of the morning in reading the Word and in prayer, and asked also for our daily bread, for we had scarcely any money left. We obtained to-day two large school-rooms which we much needed. Thus the Lord graciously helps us concerning the Institution, and gives us faith to go forward in the work, enlarging the field more and more (though we have but little money), yet so that we do not contract debts.

November 5. I spent almost the whole of the day in prayer and reading the Word. I prayed also again for the supply of our own temporal wants, but the Lord has not as yet appeared. Still my eyes are up to Him.

November 8. Saturday. The Lord had graciously again supplied our temporal wants during this week, though at the commencement of it we had but little left. I have prayed much this week for money, more than any other week, as far as I can remember, since we have been in Bristol. The Lord has not answered our prayers by causing means to be sent in the way of a gift, but has supplied us through our selling what we did not need, or by our being paid what had for some time been owing to us.

December 10. To-day we found that a departed brother had left both to brother Craik and me £12. December 31, 1834.—I. Since brother Craik and I have been laboring in Bristol, 227 brethren and sisters have been added to us in fellowship. We found 68 believers in the church at Gideon, so that now the whole number would be 295, had there been no changes, but it is only 257; for twelve have fallen asleep; six have left Bristol; twelve have left the churches during the two years and six months, but are still in Bristol; eight are under church discipline, respecting some of whom, however, we hope that they may be soon restored to communion. Of those 257, there belong 125 to Bethesda Church, and 132 to Gideon Church. Out of the 227 who have been added to us, 103 have been converted through our instrumentality, and many have been brought into the liberty of the Gospel, or reclaimed from backsliding. Forty-seven young converts are at Gideon, and fifty-six at Bethesda. Considering that some have fallen asleep who never were in communion with us, and yet converted through our instrumentality; and that some are united to other churches in and out Bristol; and that many are now standing as candidates for fellowship, of those who have been given to us in this city, as seals of our ministry, the number added may be only one half or two-thirds of the real number. May the Lord fill our hearts with gratitude for having thus condescended to use us. II. The income which the Lord has given to me during this year is £228 money, and about £60 in furniture, provisions and clothing.

January 1, 1835. We had last evening an especial prayer-meeting of the two churches, and any other persons that chose to attend, for the sake of praising the Lord for all His many mercies which we have received during the past year, and to ask Him to continue to us His favor during this year also. It was open to any of the brethren to pray, as they felt disposed, and eighteen did so, as I afterwards reckoned. We continued in prayer and praise, mixed with singing, reading the Word, and exhortation for six hours.

January 13. From ten till one in the first part of the day, and from six to half past eight this evening, I visited from house to house, the people living in Orange Street, and saw in this way the families living in nine houses, to ascertain whether any individual wanted Bibles, whether they could read, whether they wished their children to be put to our day-schools or Sunday-schools, with the view of helping them accordingly. This afforded opportunities to converse with them about their souls. In this way I sold eight Bibles and two Testaments at reduced prices, and gave away one Testament; engaged one woman as an adult scholar, one boy as a day scholar; and spoke to thirty people about their souls.

January 15. This morning, from ten to one, I went again from house to house in Orange Street. I visited nine houses, sold a Bible and Testament at reduced prices, and engaged a few children for the schools, and conversed with fifteen persons about their souls. I should greatly delight in being frequently engaged in such work, for it is a most important one; but our hands are so full of other work that we can do but little in this way.

(To be Continued.)

THREE MIRACLES.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for October 23, Matt. 9: 18–31. Memory Text, Matt. 9: 29.

Ver. 18. The Ruler's Pathetic Appeal—His Daughter Dying, not Dead, see Mark 5: 23, and Luke 8: 42—Ver. 19. The Way Jesus Responds to an Appeal—Ver. 20 and 21. The Woman's Faith, Timid but Strong—The Only Unconscious Miracle Recorded in Christ's Life—Contact Necessary to Spiritual Healing—Ver. 22. Faith that Saves——Ver. 23. The Professional Mourners Hired as Usual—Ver. 24. Transient Death not Natural Sleep or Swoon—The Laughter a Proof that it was Really Death—Ver. 25 and 26. Christ's Characteristic Shrinking from Notoriety—Witnesses not Necessary to Prove the Miracle—Those who had Seen her Dead would See her Living—Ver. 27. The Blind Men Hailing the Expected Messiah—Warrant for the Appeal, Ps. 72: 12, 13—Ver. 28. Faith the Indispensable and Only Condition—Ver. 29 and 39. The Gauge of all Blessing—Ver. 31. An Example for Converts.

WHILE the Pharisees were not honest nor frank enough to ask their questions of Jesus Himself, the disciples of John, who were honest inquirers, came direct to Him with a question about fasting, "Why do we and the Pharisees fast oft, but Thy disciples fast not?" The answer of Jesus gives a clue to the whole subject of fasting: "Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the days will come when the bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast." The Jews fasted for strife and debate (Isa. 58: 50), the disciples of John fasted in the spirit of repentance; but when the heart is satisfied with Jesus the thought of fasting does not occur. It is when a soul or a congregation is sensible of the want of God, of His power, of His presence, that it becomes almost an instinct to get down low before God, and fast and pray, that He may reveal to us the things which hinder His working, and may work with power unhindered by the unfaithfulness of His people. But neither fasting nor prayer can be joined on to an old, unrenewed life of sin as a kind of make-weight against the past; Jesus says it is like putting a new piece on an old garment, or new wine into old "wine-skins." (R. V.)

It was while Jesus was thus occupied in showing the extreme difference between the old life and the new, between nature and grace, between the thoughts of man and the thoughts of God, that a certain ruler came and worshipped Him, saying, "My daughter is even now dead, or at the point of death (Mark 5: 23), but come and lay Thy hand upon her, and she shall live." It was not often that people of position sought out Jesus; it is not often so now. "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which He hath promised to them that love Him" (James 2: 5)? "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called" (1 Cor. 1 : 26). But sometimes dire necessity drives a rich man, or one in high position, to seek God—he can find help nowhere else. Jairus was a father, with a father's heart; he saw life slowly ebbing out in his precious and beloved child; doctors and nurses had done their best, but the eye was becoming glassy, the mouth black, the chill of death had set in; what was to be done? Jesus of Nazareth healed "all manner of sickness and all manner of disease;" would death itself be subject to Him? The father, in desperation, rushes into His presence, urges his plea and puts forth faith. "Come and lay Thy hand upon her, and she shall live."

But the child was not yet dead, and the ruler's faith must stand a stronger test, "Jesus arose and followed him, and so did His disciples."

An Unexpected Hindrance

arose. A woman, with a wasting, incurable disease, which, according to the law, made her unclean, and forbade her appearance in public, came behind Jesus, and "touched the hem of His garment:" for she said within herself, "If I may but touch His garment, I shall be whole." Hers, too, was a desperate case. Possessed of a little fortune, she had spent it all upon physicians. Had it been in our day, and in our country, she would doubtless have undergone several painful operations. But it was the same story we have heard from so many—she was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse (Mark 5 : 26). Could not God have healed her through earthly physicians? Of course He could; but that was not the way of Healing which His Word had taught. "I am the Lord, thy Physician," or "I am the Lord that healeth thee," He said (Ex. 15 : 26). His object was, as it was with Naaman, to bring the sick one in contact with Himself, and to teach her to know Him, whom to know is life eternal (John 17 : 3). Like the ruler, necessity had driven her to Jesus: she looked no more on her symptoms, but gave all her thoughts to take in what Jesus was. She had heard of Him as the Healer, and not one case of failure had been reported. He had healed men of whatever disease they had. She measured Him by this report, and perhaps, also, she had seen some of those who were healed. Now she heard His words, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick," and she had perhaps applied to her bodily condition the words He had spoken about the new piece on an old garment; and the sum of her consideration amounted to this: "If I may but touch His garment I shall be whole." She and the ruler, quite independently one of the other, had come to the same conclusion about Jesus: He can, He will heal.

All blessing for soul and body hinges on this:

The Opinion We Form of Jesus.

"What think ye of Christ?" is His own question, which we may all take home to our hearts. Lost souls, what think ye of Him who bore your sins? Is He worth trusting with your soul's salvation? Struggling believers, what think ye of Him who was tempted in all points like as you are, and, therefore, is able "to succor them that are tempted"? Can you trust Him to fight your battles? Will you yield yourselves, your wills, your all, including all your temptations, to Him? Ye sick ones, whose very life is a burden, and who have failed so long to obtain earthly help, what think ye of Him? Can He who raised the dead heal you? Will He who healed all that were sick, refuse to heal you, if you trust Him as they did? The woman thought herself to be unseen; but He, to whom "the darkness and light are both alike" (Ps. 139 : 12), who searcheth the hearts of the children of men (1 Chron. 28 : 9), felt that virtue had gone out of Him. He turned Him round in the crowd and said, "Who touched my garments" (Mark 5 : 30, R.V.)? The disciples thought it utterly unreasonable of Jesus to ask such a question. All round the people thronged Him; how discern one touch from another? Jesus knew how. There was in an attraction for Him which filled Him with wondrous joy; it gave Him the opportunity to bless. This He is always longing for. The woman had not only touched Jesus, but He, without moving hand or foot, had touched her, too, by His divine power, and she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague." And all went on in silence, none knowing of the transaction till the question of Jesus called forth the woman's testimony. She, "fearing and trembling (not for fear of Jesus, but of the multitude), knowing what was done to her, came and fell down before Him, and told Him all the truth" He said to her, "Daughter, be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole" (or "saved thee"). These words Jesus used as much for the healing of the body as the salvation of the soul (comp. Luke 7 : 50; 17 : 19; 18 : 42).

The Touch of Faith

But how about the ruler and his dying daughter? No doubt this long delay must have been a sore trial of faith to him, the very trial which Jesus saw he needed. In the economy of Christ it was not the poor woman who was to wait for the ruler's daughter, but the ruler and his daughter who must wait for the poor woman. No doubt the poor woman's twelve years of suffering, with her continual disappointment from the use of means, and the deep trial of seeing all her little money go, and no prospect of being able to maintain herself—all this must have been an exercise of patience such as the ruler knew nothing about. Besides, the ruler had influence in the synagogue, and it was necessary that his faith should be called out in a higher degree than hers. The delay was almost at an end when messengers arrived from his house to tell him that all was over. But before there was time for the bitter cry, which might have been his first utterance, "Lord, if thou hadst let that woman wait, there might yet have been hope for my child," Jesus had a word for him, "Fear not, believe only." The messengers had said, "Why troublest thou the Master any further?" But the ruler had made a venture, and now the words of Jesus reassured him, and the presence of Jesus yet more, so that death itself did not make him despair.

Already the hired mourners were weeping and wailing; but there entered in among them the Prince of Life, He who is "the Resurrection and the Life," and these accompaniments of death must go. He said, the maid is not dead; but sleepeth." It was true; but Jesus was speaking a language which they knew not, the language of faith. To Him in whom was life, death is but a sleep, for He has power to wake the dead. "But they laughed Him to scorn." But He put them all forth, and entered into the chamber of death, accompanied only by the chosen three, and the father and mother of the maiden. Eternal life and human death met together in that chamber—which should prove the stronger? Jesus took the youthful corpse by the hand. Life touched death, and conquered. He said, "Damsel, I say unto thee, arise." It was the Voice which brought the world into being; it was the Hand "which upholdeth all things." Life prevailed. "Straightway the damsel arose and walked." The door of the chamber opened, and they who had laughed Jesus to scorn, saw the living child walk, "and they were astonished with a great astonishment" (Mark 5 : 41–42). If the parents had not given place to Jesus, would she have been raised? We think not. Many who seek for healing at the hand of Jesus, do not give place to Him; the accompaniments of sickness are still maintained, the healing is looked on as an uncertainty, and a provision is made in case the sickness should continue. O, let us give place to Jesus for His work in soul and body.

"Give Place,

"Jesus departed thence," but work was waiting for Him; two blind men followed Him, crying "Thou Son of David, have mercy on us!" In all the teachings of Jesus, we see a Wonderful Diversity.

To the leper He proved His willingness, He drew out the faith of the centurion. He healed Peter's mother-in-law without a word. The paralytic was dealt with about his soul, and his sins were forgiven before he was healed. Jairus's faith and patience were tested to the utmost, and the woman who touched His garment was made to confess the blessing she had received Each case was different, but what wisdom, what love, what power in each! The case of the blind men was different again. They had never seen His miracles; blind as they were, they could not; they must take all they heard on trust. His question to them was, "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" It was again, "What think ye of Christ?" It was not, "Believe ye that such a case as yours can be healed?" or, "Believe ye that your faith is strong enough?" It was nothing about themselves; they were to believe. He took their thoughts off and away from themselves to Him, "Believe ye this concerning Me, that I am able to do this thing?"

There was not a moment's hesitation. From the depths of hearts which had already weighed the matter and come to a conclusion they said, "Yea, Lord, "Then touched He their eyes, saying, be it unto you." But, practically, what does this amount to? Just to this: "According to your value for Jesus, according to the confidence you place in Him, be it unto you." We really measure all things by the way in which we measure God. If, when we are tempted, we see Him instantly as Satan's Conqueror, and trust Him as such, He keeps us from falling; if, when we are sick, instead of dwelling upon our sickness, we dwell upon our Healer, because we know His faithfulness in that relation, He does deliver us. Always, and in all circumstances, according to our faith, is it so unto us. Jesus would have had the blind men silent; the very fact of their walking in and out amongst those who had known them as blind men before, would have been a witness for Jesus more than any words could be. But human nature does like to do something, and so, thinking they knew better than Jesus, they "spread abroad His fame in all that country."

According to Your Faith,

"Then they brought to Him a dumb man, possessed with a devil." A dumb spirit is no uncommon thing; you meet with it in the prayer-meetings, in the testimony meetings, in the Bible classes, but never in the public house, in the theatre, the music hall, the dram shop, the street corner, the social tea-table. Why is this? "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh (Matt. 12: 3–4). The world can have its own in all these resorts, but the heart unfilled with Jesus has nothing to say when He stands in the midst. When Jesus cast out the dumb spirit, the tongue was loosed.

Thus Jesus Lived,

thus He worked, dispensing blessings all around and at all times; He went about all the cities and villages, "teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people."

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller. This reduction in price is made to encourage the study of this important subject.

WEARY, YET WAITING.

ROM. viii: 19, 23, 25.

I am weary, yet I would not
Flee away and be at rest,
Jesus loves me, and He could not Fail to give me what is best.

I am weary night and morning
Of the world's incessant strife,
But I know the day is dawning
Of a bright immortal life.

I can wait a little longer,
For His will is very dear;
And in waiting I grow stronger,
For I feel the day is near.

Not a moment will He keep me
When the harvest-time is come,
Angel messengers will reap me,
And shall take the harvest home.

Where He is—so hath He taught me—
I shall be when I can bear
All the weight of glory brought me,
By His intercession there.

Welcome then be every dealing,
That is helping to the end;
Though the discipline I'm feeling,
I can hail it as a friend.

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST AT HAND —The Holy Scriptures speak of two different glories: there are celestial bodies and bodies terrestrial; there is a natural body and there is a spiritual body (I. Corinthians, xv., 40-44). Jesus said, He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live [with a spiritual body]. And whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believest thou this? (These will keep their natural bodies, made immortal). (St. John, xi., 25, 26. and I. Corinthians, xv., 51, 52, 53.) And it is that Israel that have subscribed unto the Lord (Isaiah, xliv., 5), and have kept both law and Gospel, which natural bodies will be made immortal, and will receive the Lord at His second coming. Books [two different copies] containing the above doctrine will be sent by mail for twelve cents each.
Address,
J. WIELE, No. 143 North Sixth Street,
Brooklyn, New York.

The BOW in the CLOUD
Or WORDS of COMFORT

For those in Sickness, Sorrow and the varied Afflictions of Life. By 200 best Authors, Prose and Poetry, Edited by J. Sanderson, D.D. A Home Treasury and Gift Book of rare excellence. 450 Pages, $1.75.
E. B. TREAT, Pub., N. Y.

The Two Best Sunday School Singing Books in the Field.

JOYFUL LAYS. $30 per 100 Copies. 35 cts. each by Mail.

GLAD REFRAIN. $25 per 100 Copies; 30 cts. each by Mail.

Sent for examination on receipt of price. Specimen Pages free.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful Invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa. FOR OIL.

FLORIDA. Escape sickness and cold. Three tourist hotels, college, refined northern society. High, healthful pine land. No swamps. Orange groves, houses and lands for sale. De Land, Box 1887, N. Y.

CRYING BABIES are made GOOD NATURED, HEALTHY, HEARTY, by the use of
Lactated Food

Babies do not cry if they are satisfied, and they cannot be satisfied if they are not properly nourished by their food, or if it produces irritation of stomach or bowels.

Very many mothers cannot properly nourish their children, and the milk of many mothers produces bad effects in the child because of constitutional disease or weakness.

For all such cases there is a remedy in

LACTATED FOOD.

Hundreds of physicians testify to its great value. It will be retained when even lime water and milk is rejected by the stomach, hence it is of great value to all invalids, in either chronic or acute cases.

150 MEALS for an infant for $1.00.

Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.
A valuable pamphlet sent on application.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED TO SELL

THE ONLY "LIFE OF BEECHER"

Which the great preacher ASSISTED TO PREPARE, AND WHICH BEARS HIS APPROVAL.

REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER,
Dr. Lyman Abbott, and Rev. S.B. Halliday.

Assistant pastor of Plymouth Church, began our book and largely prepared it previous to the death of Mr. Beecher. It contains personal reminiscences from 39 prominent writers, among whom is DR. JOSEPH PARKER, of London, now delivering eulogies upon Mr. Beecher. This is the right book; don't take any other. Contains entire life of the great preacher. Agents Wanted in every town. $75 a week made. Send for full particulars and Special Terms to Agents, or secure agency at once by sending $1 for outfit. Address American Publishing Company, Hartford, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis or Cincinnati.

THE BEST INVESTMENT

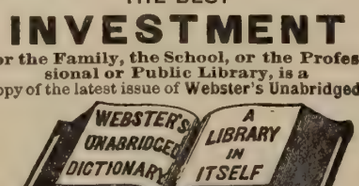
for the Family, the School, or the Professional or Public Library, is a copy of the latest issue of Webster's Unabridged.



Besides many other valuable features, it contains

A Dictionary of 118,000 Words, 3000 Engravings,
A Gazetteer of the World
locating and describing 25,000 Places,
A Biographical Dictionary of nearly 10,000 Noted Persons,
All in One Book.

3000 more Words and nearly 2000 more Illustrations than any other American Dictionary.
Sold by all Booksellers. Pamphlet free.
G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS to LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner 8 4, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

CATALOGUE of USEFUL, POPULAR and HUMOROUS Books sold at Low Prices. Mailed to any address free by
J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
57 Rose St., New York.

HOUSE BUILT FREE FOR EVERY canvasser who takes a given number of subscriptions for our grand, new book "Beautiful Homes." For full particulars and picture of house address Agents Dept., of the Co-Operative Building Plan Ass'n, 63 B'dway, New York

Ten Cents.

The Sunday School Times will be sent to any person (who has not t it within two years) from the time the order is received until De ber 31 for ten cents. It is a sixteen-page weekly paper. The is $2.00 a year, with special club rates when the teachers of a school in subscribing. Ten cents will barely meet the simple expense of m the paper, including the cost of putting a name in type on our mail list. It i a price, but a slight guarantee of the good faith of those who respond to this advertisement. The offer is exceptional, and is made for the purpose of having teachers become acquainted with the patons of paper are used every week for its printing. President Dwight, of College; Dr. Alexander McLaren, the noted Baptist preacher of Manche England; Bishop Warren, of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Dr. A. F. Schau of New York; Dr. H. Clay Trumbull, the editor; Faith Latimer; Professor I H. Hall, and others,—give their help upon the lesson in each week's paper. choicest writers of Europe and America are among its regular contribu Address John D. Wattles, Publisher, 1031 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

To Every Sunday-school Teacher per before the openi the year. The pape not be sent beyond time for which it is The Sunday Sc Times goes every to 112,000 yearly sub bers. More than

TRIUMPHANT SONGS

For Sunday Schools
By E. O. EXCELL
AND
Rev. SAM. P. JONES.

Used by them in all their Meetings. Contains the famous solos sung by E. O. EXCELL. This book was used at the International S. S. Convention held at Chicago. Price, 35c. per copy; $3.60 per dozen; $30.00 per hundred. Sample by mail on receipt of price. Address E. O. EXCELL, Pub., 148 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

This Magazine portrays American thought and life from ocean to ocean, is filled with pure high-class literature, and can be safely welcomed in any family circle.

PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MAIL.

Sample Copy of current number mailed upon receipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 cts.

Premium List with either.

Address:
The American Magazine Co., Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N. Y.

GET UP CLUBS

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed. Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

NATURE'S REMEDY
FOR TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT
Disordered Stomach,
Impaired Digestion, Constipated Habit.

A Remedy which quickly charms
The infant in the mother's arms,
While drooping age will strive to drain
Each drop the goblet does contain.
This EFFERVESCING SELTZER fine
A blessing proves to me and mine.

FOUR HUNDRED

Choice Recitations and Readings bound in handsome lithograph cover, mailed to any address for 30 cts. Satisfaction guaranteed. J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers, P. O. Box, 2767. 57 Rose St., New York.

Fall Dress Good

JAMES McCREERY & C

Offer among their large assort of Fall Dress Goods, the follo Special Lines:

Two lines Stripe and Check C ots, 44 inches wide, at 60 c worth $1.

Also, Three lines Check and S Suitings, 54 inches wide, at 75 c well worth $1.25.

ORDERS BY MAIL From any part o country will rec careful and prom tention.

JAMES McCREERY & Broadway and Eleventh
New York.

Furs,
Fur Trimmin

Quite a number of new sh and styles in Fur W Decided Novelties in M and Boas. Everything is new in Fur Trimmings

Lord & Tayl

Broadway and Twentieth Stree

"Furley & Buttru

Merino Underwear for M

Women and Children.

Superior to any Brand Manufac

For Sale Every-whe

UNIVERSITY ORGA They Lead the World.—$85 t Sold Direct to Families. No Mi Solid Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Guaranteed for Six Years and sen with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YO OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. Est 1859. MARCHAL & SMI 285 East 21st Street, New

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. X., No. 42. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, OCT. 20, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF MR. T. H. TIBBLES and MRS. TIBBLES (Bright Eyes).

FORBIDDEN HONEY. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

OUR LORD'S PROPHECY.

A Decorated Eagle—An Erring Daughter's Return—The Mission Shoe Shop—The Jews in Jerusalem—An Interesting Document Found—Murder and Suicide Prevented—A Wife's Retaliation, etc.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Shocking Railroad Disaster in Indiana, etc.

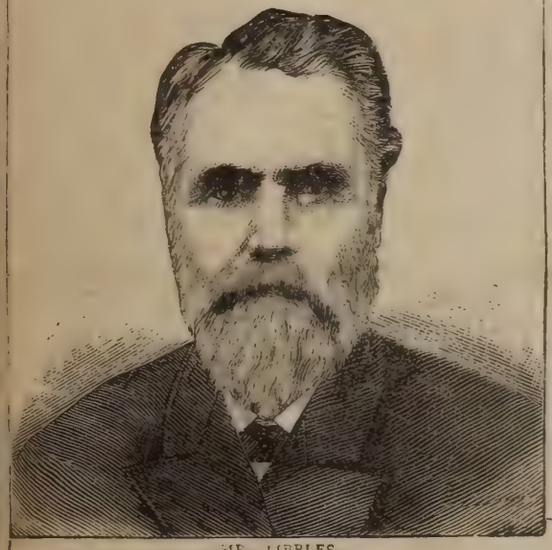
MODERN IDOLATRY. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

PICTURE OF COMAYAGUA, IN HONDURAS.—Gems From New Books.

A LONG EXPECTED MEETING. (Illus'd)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. By George Muller. (Continued).

THE HARVEST AND THE LABORERS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



MR. TIBBLES.

"BRIGHT EYES."

MR. T. H. TIBBLES, the Champion of the Poncas—MRS. TIBBLES (Bright Eyes)—A Group of the Ponca Tribe.

MR. T. H. TIBBLES AND THE PONCAS.

As public attention has again been drawn strongly to the Indian question by the recent Lake Mohonk Conference, the portraits and picture on the first page of this issue will be welcome to the readers of this journal. The story of the Poncas is an old story now, but it is one that must never be forgotten. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD did not conceal its indignation at the time the outrage was perpetrated, and though the frank confession and apology of Mr. Hayes and Mr. Schurz disarmed further attack upon them, the facts live in history, telling their own story, and teaching a lesson that should ever be kept in mind. If the Christian people of the United States wish to keep their hands free from the stain of Indian blood, they must watch every government closely. Public opinion brought the Hayes administration to the bar, and made it plead guilty. Similar vigilance may present future administrations from committing similar crimes, which will be much better than administering punishment after the crimes have been committed.

Mr. W. H. Tibbles, the brave Omaha lawyer and editor, whose portrait appears on the first page, was the man who had the intrepidity to beard Secretary Schurz in his office, and to denounce Whitney and Kemble, even though he was arrested and threatened with death. Taking up the cause of the wronged people, he appealed to public opinion and raised a storm, before which the Hayes administration quailed, and finally forced them to a limited restitution. "Bright Eyes," whose portrait accompanies his is the Omaha woman who went with him in his campaign on behalf of her relatives, the Poncas, and who is now Mr. Tibbles' wife. Beneath the portraits is a picture of whose names were very familiar to us in those days of 1879. They are portraits taken from photographs. Beginning with the upper left-hand side, they stand in the following order: "Big Snake," Esau, a Pawnee interpreter; "White Eagle," formerly the Head Chief; Le Clair, a Sioux interpreter; and on the extreme right hand, "Little Chief." Commencing again with the left-hand side of the engraving, the lower portion represents two sub-chiefs sitting side by side, and a third sub-chief in a recumbent attitude; then "Standing Bear," "Standing Buffalo," "White Swan," the present Head Chief of the tribe, and "Smoke Maker."

A Group of Poncas,

A Life of Danger.

Mr. Tibbles is now forty-seven years of age. He has spent all his life in the far West, taking a prominent part in the questions which have agitated the country during the last eventful thirty years. He was active as a youth in the terrible scenes in Kansas, and was more than once within a step of death. He still bears on his hand a scar which was made by a bayonet, which he grasped to turn aside the muzzle of a rifle, out of which came a bullet that grazed his head. He fought all through the war on the Union side, and after it was past settled down in western Missouri, as reporter on a local journal. Soon afterward, to the surprise of all who knew his wild desperate character,

He Was Converted

by the blessing of God, on a sermon from a pioneer preacher, and at once began to preach himself. True to his natural disposition, he accepted service of danger. Casually attending a conference of ministers as a newspaper reporter, he heard the presiding Bishop announce that, in a strip of country lying on the banks of the Missouri, 300 miles long and 50 miles wide, there were no religious services and not a minister, and that the last one sent there had been first tarred and feathered, and then thrown into the river, and that no man could be induced to go there. He at once volunteered to go and hold Gospel services over the whole region, and was accepted. Purchasing a large tent, a camping-out "outfit," and buckling on his revolvers, he started on his perilous expedition. For three years he wandered over that country, preaching to the people, and defending himself against the desperadoes, who often attacked him, and organized a great many churches, which still exist and flourish. He went among the Indian tribes in the course of his expedition, and there heard stories of their wrongs, which prepared him for the effort that has occupied the last ten years of his life. On his return he again applied himself to journalism in Omaha City, and to the reading of law. He was so occupied when pursued by the United States troops, arrived in Omaha. He visited them and heard their story. They convinced him that the lands they held in Dakota were secured to them by treaty; yet, in spite of that, the government had given the lands to the Sioux, and had ordered the Poncas to move out, to make room for them. At that time (1877) the Poncas had five hundred acres under cultivation, had built one hundred and fifty houses, and were living quietly on their farms, when they were visited by the Inspector, and told that they must remove to the Indian Territory, where the President would give them other lands and pay them for those they were to leave, and that if they did not like the new lands they should be allowed to communicate directly with him. After great persuasion, ten chiefs of the tribe were induced to make to the Indian Territory. They found the lands sterile and the water bad, and they declined to remain. Every effort, short of imprisonment, was made to prevent their escape. They were refused money, and the services of the interpreter, whom they had themselves paid. It was midwinter when Standing Bear and a few others started to return to their homes; they travelled on foot, subsisted on dried corn which they found in the fields, and slept under hay-stacks, or such cover as they could find. After a journey of fifty days they reached the Otoe Reservation, and when they entered the agent's room they left the prints of their feet in blood upon the floor. Meanwhile the Inspector had telegraphed that the chiefs had run away, and requested that no aid should be afforded them. The friendly Otoes, notwithstanding, received them kindly, and furnished each one with a pony, and after a journey of four days more, they reached their homes, where the Inspector—who did not walk—had already arrived.

The Ponca Fugitives,

The Journey of One Thousand Miles

The troops were called in, whatever could be moved was packed in wagons, and although they preferred to die rather than to go, they and the rest of their tribe were hurried off.

One Hundred and Fifty-seven Died on the way, and after all the horses and cattle were dead, Standing Bear and thirty of his people—men, women and children—escaped. After a journey of three months, they reached the Omaha Reservation, weak, sick and starved. The Omahas gave them land, and they were hastening to plant and plough it, when they were again arrested, to be driven back to the Indian Territory by military force. They had reached Omaha City, on their way, when Mr. Tibbles, by a happy inspiration, applied to Judge Dundy for a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted, and they were set free.

Mr. Tibbles was arrested for his share in the work, but no sooner was he released, than, taking Standing Bear and Bright Eyes with him, he went to Boston, New York and other great cities, and told the story to the people. Kemble, Whitney and the other parties to the wrong were held up to public scorn, and eventually Mr. Tibbles had the satisfaction of seeing a congressional committee appointed to investigate the outrage, and some measure of redress granted. Since then, having married Bright Eyes, he has devoted himself to the task of elevating and civilizing the Indians, and has now gone to Europe with his wife to enlist public sympathy and obtain some pecuniary help for the work.

Volume IX. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1886, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1884, and 1885 are also for sale.

BRIGHT EYES.

IN-SHTA-THE-AM-BA, or Bright Eyes, is the daughter of a chief of the Omahas, who are related to the Poncas. She is a young woman of medium height, slight figure, with pleasing manner and graceful bearing. She speaks perfect English, and her voice is gentle and well modulated. When speaking of the expulsion of the Poncas from their reservation, she said that it seemed to her like a repetition of Longfellow's story of Acadia and Evangeline. The Indians visited Mr. Longfellow while they were in Boston. When the poet saw Bright Eyes he grasped her by the hand, exclaiming,

"This is Minnehaha!"

She speaks perfect English, though her education was obtained in two years in a New Jersey school. When she rose to speak before a Boston audience, which filled the Music Hall to suffocation, her simplicity and pathos won all hearts. She said: "I have come to you to appeal for your sympathy and help for my people. They are immortal beings, for whom Christ died. They asked me to appeal to the churches, because they have heard that God's people are there, and to the judges, because they can right all wrong. The people who were once owners of this soil ask you for their liberty, 'and law is liberty.' For the past one hundred years the Indians have had no one to tell the story of their wrongs. If a white man does an injury to an Indian the injured party has to suffer in silence, or, if too much exasperated, to seek revenge. Then the act of vengeance has been spread abroad through the newspapers as a senseless act. It is because I know that a majority of the people of the United States do not know of the cruelties and injustice of the Indian Ring that I have the courage to appeal to them in behalf of a conquered and helpless people. I do not know that I have the right to say a conquered people. We are helpless, it is true, but we do not feel that we are conquered."

A Glimpse of Indian Life.

"Perhaps you will understand me better if I give you a little glimpse of my own life, as I lived with my people before we came in contact with the whites. When I was a little girl I had a nurse, whose sole business was to take charge of me. I was very fond of her, and she used to carry me on her back a great deal. My father was chief, and as such he always had a great many people around him. He often had strangers from other tribes visiting him, and thus he had a great many young Indian men entrusted to his care by their parents to bring up to manhood, and my mother had young girls 'given' to her, as the Indians say, to be brought up too. There were scarcely ever less than forty to fifty at a meal in our house. My mother was a very busy woman, and everybody loved her. I used to be very proud of her, particularly when she was all dressed up, of course in her own costume. She can neither read nor speak the English language; but she is loving and gentle to all human beings, and at the same time, she is strong. But I never know when to stop when I commence to talk of my mother. My first remembrances in life are of the pleasures I used to have in

Our Buffalo Hunts.

In the spring, after the crop was put up in, the tribe started for the summer hunt, leaving in the village only the old men and families, who, for some reason, could not go. I cannot describe the delight of it all—the great boundless horizon, without a house or a human being in sight but ourselves; the riding on, day after day, as if the world were infinite. When I grew older the Presbyterians started a mission school on our reserve, and father decided to place me and my elder brother at school there, that we might learn to speak English. The next thing I can remember is my forlorn self sitting on a high chair, with my feet dangling in the air, crying as though my heart would break, because father and mother had left me all alone in a room with two strange white men, who were talking together in a strange language I could not understand. Now and then we were allowed to go home for a holiday, and that was a pleasure, while going back would be terrible, for I would be so home-sick that it seemed to me that I should die. But that feeling wore off gradually as I came to understand the English language, and felt more at home with the missionaries. My dear old grandmother, who is still living, used to come often to see us, and bring us dried buffalo meat and pounded cherries, and such things as we could not get at the mission. During the first four years I was we went home in the summer and joined the rest of the tribe on the hunt. At that time we had a missionary who identified himself so thoroughly with the tribe that he gained the confidence of a good many of the Indians, and they were willing to listen to what he said. He spoke to them through an interpreter. I remember the first religious meetings that were held in my father's house, and how some of the Indian men prayed for the first time in public, and the burden of their prayer was, 'God have pity upon us. You did not give us your Book, and we are ignorant. God have pity on us.' I looked on it all with interest and wonder, but I did not think of it in any way particularly concerning me.

At the Mission

"I remember one particular Saturday, about that time, when I was at home. My mother was busy sewing on some Indian fancy work, and commenced to talk to me of his strong wish and desire that I should always try to do what was right, and that he wanted me to grow up to be good. Then he turned to mother, and spoke to her of something the missionary had told them out of the Bible. I had by this time learned to understand English, and I suddenly remembered the story of how Christ had been put to death on the cross that sinful men might be saved. It had been told us at the mission but a short time before, and I remembered it vividly as if it had all been new to me, and I told it to them as well as I knew how. My father is strict in his ideas of right and wrong, and stern in his sense of justice, and he had been in many battles with the Sioux, but I saw the tears come into his eyes while I was telling the story, and my mother cried also.

My Father

"Later on, my father and mother joined the church. I think what you call sudden conversions are rare among Indians. They think a good deal over any change they think of making. Some years after that my grandmother became a member of the church too. The Indians have secret societies and religious societies, and my grandmother belonged to some of these societies, and I remember that my grandmother broke all her connections with these societies when she became a church member. Some of these she had been a member of all her life. My sisters and I did not join the church until some years after father and mother had done so. There is more need of help for my people now than ever before. All the conditions around them are changing. The time has come when they must give way to a civilization that is Pushing Them to the Wall.

The knowledge of the sympathy you feel for them for Christ's sake would be a stimulus to them, and it would bring Christ Himself a little nearer to them; and what if, as is sometimes affirmed, they should not appreciate what you do for them, has not God had infinite patience? Do you know that every time you attend a missionary meeting and do what you can to help, you are bringing the kingdom of heaven a little nearer? What a small event it must have seemed when a little Child was born in Bethlehem some eighteen hundred years ago, and yet to-day, in a land far away from His birth, centuries after His death, are each of you working for Him and living for Him. The force and power of the life lived by the little Child born in a manger is changing the whole world. The most powerful and enlightened nations on earth to-day are those which love and serve Him most."

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Gold for a Dying Pillow.—Richard Weaver, in one of his addresses, said: "I have heard of a wealthy man who spent his whole life simply gathering gold. But his last moments came, and when one tried to speak to him of Christ he cried for his money to be brought in and put under his pillow. His wish was at once obeyed, but as his head tossed wearily on the bags of gold, it was evident that he was getting no satisfaction from them. Money is a hard pillow to die on. Jesus can make your death-bed easy."

The African Chief's Eulogium.—"A Missionary was traveling over a tract of land in Africa where Dr. Livingstone had been widely known and respected. He was well received by the various tribes, and once while speaking to an old chief he made some reference to Dr. Livingstone. 'What! did you know him?' exclaimed the surprised chief. 'Yes,' the missionary replied, 'I knew him.' Then the old native, turning round, waved his hand to a number of young men who where standing near, and exclaimed: 'Come, boys, see the friend of the good white man.' That was the name by which Dr. Livingstone was known among them. Do we all live that we are known as true servants of Christ?"

A Plate-layer on the Railway Said: "I did not know even the Lord's Prayer. I heard some one testify in the tent, and it seemed as if he were drawing my own character. When I first told my mates of my conversion they said I was mad. I said, 'Bless God! heaven will be my asylum. God made me instrumental in my wife's conversion. Any one stepping in at the time might have thought I was thrashing her, but hers was repentance and mine rejoicing. I have helped to remove men cut to pieces on the railway. If that should be my fate I have no fear of my hereafter. I thank God for the sake of my children, for opening my eyes while they are young."

The Eldest of a Family of Infidels.—A man at the Evangelistic mission conducted by Mr. Hurditch, said: "When I entered this place I had a face as long as a kite, but I can smile at you all now, for Christ has saved me. When I first entered here, the eldest of a family of infidels, I could scarcely spell out my A B C, and I know comparatively little now, but that my place is at His feet. I came to hear the three gipsy brothers. Mr. Hucklesby read Exodus 12: 22, 23, and it was blessed to my soul. Is it not worth living for my Master, to know He died for me and is now risen again and sits at the right hand of His and my Father! Who would not speak for Jesus? If He calls me to-night, I am willing to go."

A Young Scotchman's Surrender.—A young man who had come from Scotland only three months before, and was very anxious about his soul's welfare, came to several of the meetings, but for some time would not decide for Christ. The last Sunday of the mission he was there, and one of the workers spent a long time with him. On a sudden, he asked, "Is there any one in the vestry?" On receiving a negative reply, he said, "Then let me go in." Three of us went in, and directly the door was closed he threw himself down on his knees, crying out, "O God, I yield, I yield!" After remaining there for some time, he rose, with eyes full of tears, thanking God for saving him. He turned up at every succeeding meeting until the close of the services, and there is great promise of usefulness in his case.

Mother's Bible in the Bunk.—Mr. Morrison, a retired sea-captain, observes: "On one occasion, after having been almost lost overboard, I lay in my bunk on the sick list. As a man who had been just snatched from the jaws of death, I was naturally an object of some interest to the passengers. Among many others who came to see me was a minister. My soul was hungering after Christ, but he never mentioned Him. He came to see me simply from curiosity. There were five Roman Catholic priests on board; they also came to see me, and talked with me about my soul, but as soon as they heard that I was a Protestant they stopped their visits. But I had my mother's Bible, and to it I went for comfort. I remember reading it one night by the light of the steamer's lamp, when one of our crew came along, and, seeing what I was doing, he cried out, 'Just look at Jack, he is reading the Bible; he has gone wrong in the mind since he fell overboard.' But, thank God, I have been wrong in the mind ever since, and I intend to remain so. I knew that I ought to pray to God, but I was afraid to do so before all the sailors. When I first knelt down there was not a single word spoken, all was hushed; but they meant to be revenged afterwards by jeering at me and calling me 'Holy Joe,' 'The Parson,' and 'The Methodist.' But it did not matter. I was so very happy that every one noticed it, and came to look at the young sailor who was wrong in his mind."

Sought and Found—A Young Man was Strolling along the road one Sunday evening, with no particular object in view, but seeing the announcement of the meetings, thought he would turn in and see what was going on. The Lord had already dealt with him in convicting power, but he had striven to banish such thoughts from his mind. That night the Word of God laid hold on him in a mighty manner. He bent his head in the seat and sobbed bitterly—an unseen but felt power broke him down, and made him feel as he had never done before. One of the workers dealt with him for a considerable time, and at last light dawned upon him, and he yielded to God, with the result that his hitherto darkened soul was filled with light, and joy took the place of misery. As he pressed our hands on leaving, he said with a voice choking from emotion, "Thank God for sending me in here to-night."

In Charge of "a Bundle of Rags."—Mr. Scroggie related: "As I was going home from a Gospel meeting in Greenock one night, I saw a little girl standing in the dark, apparently doing nothing. It was somewhat late, and I wondered what a little child could want standing there. When I got nearer I noticed that her face was stained with weeping, and going up to her I asked what kept her there. She was looking down, at what seemed to me a bundle of rags, and I said, 'You are not in charge of that?' 'Yes,' said the sorrowful little maiden, 'that is father, and I cannot go home without him.' Her faithfulness to her drunken parent touched my heart. I procured the services of a friendly policeman, and we two, led by his child, took him home. Are there not too many drunken fathers and mothers who are ruining themselves, body and soul, for the sake of their debasing indulgence in strong drink? And not only themselves, but are exposing their families to temptations from which the father should shield them!"

What Ned the Miner Heard.—Mr. Miller remarked: "Some years ago I knew a man called Ned. Going home one night he went to bed, and, as usual, put his watch under his pillow. This night he could not sleep for the ticking of his watch, which seemed to keep repeating these words, 'Condemned already.' He took it out and looked at it, but could see nothing unusual about it, and putting it back again, tried to obtain sleep, but that night sleep fled from his pillow. Next morning he went to his work, down into the pit, but every stroke of the pick and every scratch of the spade seemed to say, 'Condemned already.' Every sound seemed to repeat the same thing. He had been to a meeting of Mr. Scroggie's, and his text had been these words, and since then they had been ever in his ears. He determined to find the meaning of that passage. He got it explained, and then saw that he had broken God's laws, had been found guilty before Him, and was condemned already. Then he sought mercy and found Jesus. God broke the fetters of sin and set the captive free. Ned has been living for years, basking in the smile of the Lord Jesus."

FORBIDDEN HONEY.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached last Sunday Morning, October 16, 1887.

"I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in my hand, and, lo, I must die." I. Sam. 14: 43.

The Wonders of the Bee—An Architect—Honey Plentiful in Palestine—Jonathan's Awful Mistake—Forbidden Honey a Fruitful Cause of Ruin—I. The Honey of Corrupt Literature—Its Awful Results—All Honey not Forbidden—One Book may Decide Everything—II. The Honey of Stimulating Liquids—An All Consuming Passion—The Beginning and the End—The Only Cure—Ominous Names—"Old Crow"—III. The Honey of Gambling—The Inventor of the Sandwich—Is it Right to Play Cards—A Game of Rattlesnakes—The Wall Street Variety—A Boy's Death on the Swiss Mountains.

THE honey bee is a most ingenious architect, a Christopher Wren among insects, a geometer, drawing hexagons and pentagons, a freebooter, robbing the fields of pollen and aroma, a wondrous creature of God, whose biography, written by Huber and Swammerdam, is an enchantment for any lover of nature. Virgil celebrated the bee in his fable of Aristaeus, and Moses, and Samuel, and David, and Solomon, and Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, and St. John, used the delicacies of the bee-manufacture as

A Bible Symbol,

A miracle of formation is the bee: five eyes, two tongues, the outer having a sheath of protecting hairs on all sides of its tiny body to brush up the particles of flowers, its flight so straight that all the world knows of the bee line. The honey-comb is a palace such as no one but God could plan, and the honey bee construct; its cells sometimes a dormitory, and sometimes a storehouse, and sometimes a cemetery. These winged toilers first make eight strips of wax, and by their antennae, which are to them hammer, and chisel, and square, and plumb-line, fashion them for use. Two and two, these workers shape the wall. If an accident happen they put up buttresses or extra beams to remedy the damage. When about the year 1776 an insect, before unknown, in the night time attacked the bee-hives all over Europe, and the men who owned them were in vain trying to plan something to keep out the invader, that was the terror of the bee-hives of the continent, it was found that everywhere the bees had arranged for their own protection, and built before their honeycombs an especial wall of wax with porthole through which the bees might go to and fro, but not large enough to admit the winged combatant, called the Sphinx Atropos.

Do you know that the swarming of the bees is Divinely Directed?

The mother bee starts for a new home, and because of this the other bees of the hive get into an excitement which raises the heat of the hive some four degrees; and they must die unless they leave their heated apartments, and they follow the mother bee and alight on the branch of a tree, and cling to each other and hold on until a committee of two or three have explored the region and found the hollow of a tree or rock not far off from a stream of water, and they here set up a new colony, aud ply their aromatic industries, and give themselves to the manufacture of the saccharine edible. But who can tell the chemistry of that mixture of sweetness, part of it the very life of the bee and part of it the life of the fields?

Plenty of this luscious product was hanging in the woods of Beth-aven during the time of Saul and Jonathan. Their army was in pursuit of an enemy that by God's command must be exterminated. The soldiery were positively forbidden to stop to eat anything until the work was done. If they disobeyed they were accursed. Coming through the woods they found a place where the bees had been busy.

A Great Honey Manufactory:

Honey gathered in the hollow of the trees until it had overflowed upon the ground in great profusion of sweetness. All the army obeyed orders and touched it not, save Jonathan, and, he not knowing the military order about abstinence, dipped the end of a stick he had in his hand into the candied liquid and as, yellow, and brown, and tempting, it glowed on the end of the stick, he put it to his mouth and ate the honey. Judgment fell upon him, and but for special intervention, he would have been slain. In my text Jonathan announces his awful mistake: "I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in my hand, and lo, I must die." Alas, what multitudes of people in all ages have been damaged by forbidden honey, by which I mean temptation, delicious and attractive, but damaging and destructive!

Corrupt Literature.

Literature, fascinating, but deathful, comes in this category. Where one good, honest, healthful book is read now, there are one hundred made up of rhetorical trash consumed with avidity. When the boy on the cars comes through with a pile of publications, look over the titles and notice that nine out of ten of the books are depleting and injurious. All the way from New York to Chicago or New Orleans notice that objectionable books dominate. Taste for pure literature is poisoned by this scum of the publishing house. Every book in which sin triumphs over virtue, or in which a glamour is thrown over dissipation, or which leaves you at its last line with less respect for the marriage institution and less abhorrence for the paramour, is a depression of your own moral character. The bookbinding may be attractive, and the plot dramatic and startling, and the style of writing sweet as the honey that Jonathan dipped up with his rod, but your best interests forbid it, your moral safety forbids it, your God forbids it, and one taste of it may lead to such bad results that you may have to say at the close of the experiment, or at the close of a misimproved life-time: "I did but taste a little honey with the rod that was in my hand, and lo, I must die."

Corrupt literature is doing more to-day for the disruption of domestic life than any other cause. Elopements, marital intrigues, sly correspondence, fictitious names given at post-office windows, clandestine meetings in parks and at ferry gates and in hotel parlors, and conjugal perjuries are among

The Damnable Results.

When a woman, young or old, gets her head thoroughly stuffed with the modern novel, she is in appalling peril. But some one will say: "The heroes are so adroitly knavish, and the persons so bewitchingly untrue, and the turn of the story so exquisite, and all the characters so enrapturing, I cannot quit them." My brother, my sister, you can find styles of literature just as charming that will elevate and purify, and ennoble, and Christianize while they please. The devil does not own all the honey. There is a wealth of good books coming forth from our publishing houses that leaves no excuse for the choice of that which is debauching to body, mind and soul. Go to some intelligent men or women, and ask for a list of books that will be strengthening to your mental and moral condition. Life is so short, and your time for improvement so abbreviated, that you cannot afford to fill up with husks, and cinders, and debris.

In the intervals of business that young man is reading that which will prepare him to be a merchant prince, and that young woman is filling her mind with an intelligence that will yet either make her the chief attraction of a good man's home or give her an independence of character that will qualify her to build her own home, and maintain it in a happiness that requires no augmentation from any of our rougher sex. That young man or young woman can by the right literary and moral improvement of the spare ten minutes, here or there in every day, rise head and shoulders in prosperity and character and influence above the loungers who read nothing, or read that which bedwarfs. See all the forests of good American literature dripping with honey. Why pick up the honeycombs that have in them the fiery bees, which will sting you with an eternal poison while you taste it?

One Book May Decide Everything for you or me, for this world or the next. I was a turning point with me when in Wynkoop's bookstore, Syracuse, one day I picked up a book called "The Beauties of Ruskin." It was only a book of extracts, but it was all pure honey, and I was not satisfied until I had purchased all his works, at that time expensive beyond an easy capacity to own them, and what a heaven I went through in reading his "Seven Lamps of Architecture," and his "Stones of Venice," it is impossible for me to describe, except by saying that it gave me a rapture for good books and an everlasting disgust for decrepit or immoral books that will last me while my immortal soul lasts. All around the church and the world to-day there are busy hives of intelligence occupied by authors and authoresses, from whose pens drips a distillation which is the very nectar of heaven and why will you thrust your rod of inquisitiveness into the deathful saccharine of perdition?

Stimulating Liquids

also come into the category of temptations, delicious but deathful. You say: "I cannot bear the taste of intoxicating liquor, and how any man can like it is to me an amazement." Well, then, it is no credit to you that you do not take it. Do not brag about your total abstinence because it is not from any principle that you reject alcoholism, but for the same reason that you reject certain styles of food—you simply don't like the taste of them. But multitudes of people have a natural fondness for all kinds of intoxicants. They like it so much that it makes them smack their lips to look at it. They are dyspeptic, and they take it to aid digestion, or they are annoyed by insomnia, and they take it to produce sleep, or they are troubled, and they take it to make them oblivious, or they feel good, and they must celebrate their hilarity. They begin with mint julep, sucked through two straws on the Long Branch piazza, and end in the ditch, taking from a jug a liquid half kerosene and half whisky. They not only like it, but it is of body, mind and soul, and after a while have it they will, though one wine glass of it should cost the temporal and eternal destruction of themselves and all their families and the whole human race. They would say: "I am sorry it is going to cost me, and my family, and all the world's population so very much, but here it goes to my lips, and now let it roll over my parched tongue and down my heated throat the sweetest, the most inspiring, the most rapturous thing that ever thrilled mortal or immortal."

An All-Consuming Passion

To Cure the Habit

before it comes to its last stages, various plans were tried in olden times. This plan was recommended in the books: When a man wanted to reform he put shot or bullets into the cup of glass of strong drink—one additional shot or bullet each day, that displaced so much liquor. Bullet after bullet added day by day, of course the liquor became less and less, until the bullets would entirely fill up the glass, and there was no room for the liquid, and by that time it was said the inebriate would be cured. Whether any one ever was cured in that way I know not; but by long experiment it is found that the only way is to stop short off, and when a man does that he needs God to help him. And there have been more cases than you can count when God has so helped the man, that he quit forever, and I could count a score of them here to-day, some of them pillars in the house of God.

One would suppose that men would take warning from some of the

Ominous Names

given to the intoxicants, and stand off from the devastating influence. You have noticed for instance that some of the restaurants are called "The Shades," typical of the fact that it puts a man's reputation in the shade, and his morals in the shade, and his prosperity in the shade, and his wife and children in the shade, and his immortal destiny in the shade. Now, I find on some of the liquor signs in all our cities the words "Old Crow," mightily suggestive of a carcass, and the filthy raven that swoops upon it. "Old Crow!" Men and women without numbers slain of rum, but unburied, and this evil is pecking at their glazed eyes and pecking at their bloated cheek, and pecking at their destroyed manhood and womanhood, thrusting beak and claw into the mortal remains of what was once gloriously alive, but now morally dead. "Old Crow!"

But alas, how many take no warning. They make me think of Cæsar on his way to assassination, fearing nothing; though his statue in the hall crashed into fragments at his feet, and a scroll containing the names of the conspirators was thrust into his hands, yet walking right on to meet the dagger that was to take his life. This infatuation of strong drink is so mighty in many a man that though his fortunes are crashing, and his health is crashing, and his domestic interests are crashing, and we hand him a long scroll containing the names of perils that await him, he goes straight on to physical and mental and moral assassination. In proportion as any style of alcoholism is pleasant to your taste, and stimulating to your nerves, and for a time delightful to all your physical and mental constitution, is the peril awful. Remember Jonathan and the forbidden honey in the woods of Beth-aven.

Furthermore, the gamester's indulgence must be put in the list of temptations, delicious but destructive. I have crossed the ocean eight times, and always one of the best rooms, has from morning till late at night, been given up to Gambling Practices.

I heard of many men who went on board with enough money for European excursion, who landed without enough money to get their baggage up to the hotel or railroad station. To many there is a complete fascination in games of hazard or the risking of money on possibilities. It seems as natural for them to bet as to eat. Indeed the hunger for food is often over powered with the hunger for wagers, as in the case of Lord Sandwich, a persistent gambler, who not being willing to leave the dice table long enough for the taking of food, invented a preparation of food that he could take without stopping the game; namely, a slice of beef between two slices of bread, which was named after Lord Sandwich.

It is absurd for those of us who have never felt the fascination of the wager to speak slightingly of the temptation. It has slain a multitude of intellectual and moral giants, men and women stronger than you or I. Down under its power went glorious Oliver Goldsmith, and Gibbon the historian, and Charles Fox the statesman; and in olden times famous senators of the United states, who used to be as regularly at the gambling-house all night, as they were in the halls of legislation by day. Oh, the tragedies of the faro table! I know persons who began with a slight stake in a lady's parlor, and ended with the suicide's pistol at Monte Carlo. They played with the square pieces of bone with black marks on them, not knowing that Satan was playing for their bones at the same time, and was sure to sweep all the stakes off on his side of the table. The last New York legislature sanctioned the mighty evil last spring, by passing a law for its defense at the race tracks, and many young men in these cities lost all their wages at Coney Island this summer, and this fall are borrowing from the money tills of their employers, or arranging by means of false entry, to adjust their demoralized finances. Every man who voted for the Ives' Pool Bill, has on his hands and forehead the blood of these souls.

But in this connection some young converts say to me:

"Is it Right to Play Cards?

Is there any harm in a game of whist or euchre?" Well, I know good men who play whist and euchre, and other styles of game without any wagers. I had a friend who played cards with his wife and children, and then at the close said: "Come, now, let us have prayers." I will not judge other men's consciences, but I tell you that cards are in my mind so associated with the temporal and eternal damnation of splendid young men, that I should no sooner say to my family, "Come let us have a game of cards," than I would go into a menagerie and say: "Come, let us have a game of rattlesnakes," or into a cemetery, and sitting down by a marble slab, say to the grave diggers: "Come, let us have a game of skulls." Conscientious young ladies are silently saying to me while I speak: "Do you think card playing will do us any harm?" Perhaps not, but how will you feel if in the great day of eternity, when we are asked to give an account of our influence, some man shall say to you: "I was introduced to games of chance in the year 1887, in Brooklyn, at your house, and I went on from that sport to something more exciting, and went on down until I lost my business, and lost my morals and lost my soul, and these chains that you see on my wrists and feet are the chains of a gamester's doom, and I am on my way to a gambler's hell." Honey at the start, eternal catastrophe at the last.

Stock Gambling

comes into the same catalogue. It must be very exhilirating to go into Wall Street, New York, or State Street, Boston, or Third Street, Philadelphia, and depositing a small sum of money, run the risk of taking out a fortune. Many men are doing an honest and safe business in the stock market, and you are an ignoramus if you do not know that it is just as legitimate to deal in stocks as to deal in coffee or sugar or flour. But nearly all the outsiders who go there on a little financial excursion lose all. The old spiders eat up the unsuspecting flies. I had a friend who put his hand on his hip pocket and said to me in substance: "I have there the value of a hundred and fifty thousand dollars." His home is to-day penniless. What was the matter? Wall Street. Of the vast majority who are victimized, you hear not one word. One great stock firm goes down, and whole columns of newspapers discuss their frand or their disaster, and we are presented with their features and their biography. But where one such famous firm sinks, five hundred unknown men sink with them. The great steamer goes down, and all the little boats are swallowed in the same engulfment. Gambling is gambling, whether in stocks or bread-stuffs, or dice or race-track betting. Exhiliration at the start, and a raving brain and a shattered nervous system and a sacrificed property, and a destroyed soul at the last.

Young man, buy no lottery tickets; purchase no prize packages; bet on no baseball games or yacht racing, answer no mysterious circulars proposing great income for small investment; shoo away the buzzards that hover around our hotels trying to entrap strangers. Go out and make an honest living. Have God on your side and be a candidate for heaven. Remember all the paths of sin are banked with flowers at the start, and there are plenty of helpful hands to fetch the gay charger to your door and hold the stirrup while you mount. But further on the horse plunges to the bit in a slough inextricable. The best honey is not like that which Jonathan took on the end of the rod and brought to his lip, but that which God puts on the banqueting table of Mercy, at which we are all invited to sit.

Have no Faith in Luck;

I was reading of a boy among the mountains of Switzerland ascending with his father and the guides. The boy stopped on the edge of the cliff and said: "There is a flower I mean to get." "Come away from there," said the father, "you will fall off." "No," said he, "I must get that beautiful flower," and the guides rushed toward him to pull him back, when they heard him say, "I almost have it," as he fell two thousand feet. Birds of prey were seen a few days after circling through the air and lowering gradually to the place where the corpse lay. Why seek flowers off the edge of a precipice when you may walk knee deep amid the full blooms of the very Paradise of God? When a man may sit at a king's banquet, why will he go down the steps and contend for the gristle and bones of a hound's kennel?

A Dangerous Place

The poet Hesiod tells of an ambrosia and a nectar, the drinking of which, would make men live forever, and one sip of this honey from the Eternal Rock will give you immortal life with God. Come off the

Malarial Levels

of a sinful life. Come and live on the uplands of grace where the vineyards sun themselves. Oh, taste and see that the Lord is gracious. Be happy now and happy forever. For those who take a different course the honey will turn to gall. For many things I have admired Percy Shelley, the great English poet, but I deplore the fact that it was a great sweetness to him to dishonor God. The poem "Queen Mab," has in it the maligning of the Deity. The infidel poet was impious enough to ask for Rowland Hill's Surrey Chapel that he might denounce the Christian religion. He was in great glee against God and the truth. But he visited Italy, and one day on the Mediterranean with two friends in a boat, he was coming toward shore when a squall struck the water. A gentleman standing on shore, through a glass saw many boats tossed in this squall, but all outrode the terror except one, that in which Shelley, the infidel poet, and his two friends were sailing. That never came ashore, but the bodies of two of the occupants were washed upon the beach, one of them the poet. A funeral pyre was built on the sea shore by some classic friends, and the two bodies were consumed. Poor Shelley! He would have no God while he lived, and he probably had no God when he died. "The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the ungodly shall perish."

COMAYAGUA.

(See Illustration on page 668).

One of the chief towns of the Republic of Honduras is Comayagua. It was formerly the capital; but the seat of government has now been removed to Teyucigalpa. It still gives its name, however, to one of the seven districts or provinces into which Honduras is divided. Its population is about 10,000, of which the majority are Indians and half-breeds. Many inducements have been held out for emigrants to settle there, but hitherto with but small success. In addition to the unhealthiness of the climate, there have been so many revolutions since Honduras became an independent state, that men of capital and enterprise have avoided it as a place lacking the security essential to successful business undertakings. As late as July of last year there was a rising, accompanied by an invasion in the interest of Ex-President Soto, in opposition to President Bogran. Soto did not give it his endorsement, and Bogran succeeded in suppressing it, but it gave confirmation to the impression that political convulsions were chronic in that country. With a strong and stable government, Honduras might become a prosperous State. The soil is rich in minerals and wonderfully fertile.

The religious condition of the people is deplorable. The Moravians have labored there with the patience and perseverance for which they are remarkable, but beyond their limited sphere the people are either pagans or converts to Roman Catholicism, and these latter are more immoral than the former, and are quite ignorant of the truths of the gospel. We can but hope that the hope cherished by Bishop Riley, of Mexico, may yet be fulfilled, and converts from Mexico go throughout Central America proclaiming the pure gospel.

Subscriptions in aid of the Church of Jesus, in Mexico, its pastors, evangelists, churches and orphanages, will be thankfully received by the Rt. Rev. H. C. Riley, 43 Bible House, New York.

A DECORATED EAGLE.

A TOURIST in the mountains of Nebraska states that he saw, during his recent visit, an eagle bearing aloft a small American flag which has a curious history. It was, he says, a most suggestive sight, that of the king bird soaring upward with the Stars and Stripes, the symbol of freedom, waving above his head. It would have so impressed any patriotic mind, yet the Christian, dearly as he loves the flag, might have been reminded by it, as it was borne across the sky, of that still truer emblem of freedom which the apostle John saw carried by angel's wings from the midst of heaven to those that dwell on earth (Rev. 14:6).

The tourist received the following explanation of the decorated bird: "A year or two ago a rancher saw a huge eagle flutter over his barnyard, interested in a fat turkey, and immediately secured his rifle. The first shot broke the eagle's wing, and in its crippled condition it circled around uttering screams of pain. The man was watching the result before firing again, when he discovered another eagle coming from a distance. It was evidently a mate of the first one. Like an arrow it flew to the rescue, and examining its wound and seeing its mate could not escape, it took hold of it by its claws, and though the weight evidently severely tried its strength, succeeded in flying with it to the mountain side, where it laid down the victim of the rancher's gun. During the next few weeks the men on the ranch noticed each day that the mate carried food to the wounded bird regularly, feeding it upon squirrels, rabbits, birds and mice. The rancher could have killed the two birds any day, but refrained on account of the affection displayed between them. He even went so far as to visit the wounded bird, and found that it was recovering. Thinking to render it safe from further molestation he procured a small silk flag, which he attached to a rod and secured by a leather collar around the eagle's neck. The bird regained its strength, and has worn the decoration to this day."

AN ERRING DAUGHTER'S RETURN.

As an illustration of the welcome awaiting sinners who repent and return to their Heavenly Father, the following incident is related by Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., in his Watchword. "A gentleman who labors in the Gospel was once walking through the streets of one of our Northern cities, when he was arrested by the sight of a young woman evidently in great distress. 'What is it, my poor lass, that is the matter?' he said, in his kind, fatherly way, as he approached her, and for some time received no reply save sobs and tears. But seeing that it was real interest, and not mere curiosity, that led the kind stranger to speak as he did, the girl told him her mournful history; and as she did so, the vision of her home, of her childhood, of her mother's training, even to the well-known voice and loving eye, passed before her despairing mind. Having heard the wanderer's story, the stranger said, 'Well lassie, will you go home? I will pay your railway fare—see, here it is.'

"With intense earnestness, the girl replied, 'I long to be at home, but I dare not go back; what would my mother say to me?'

"'But would you go if I were to take you home?' asked her benefactor; and immediately every difficulty was overcome, and the girl at once consented. On reaching the village, the stranger bade his charge wait, while he went to the mother to discover whether she would receive her child. Oh, how anxiously did the daughter long to hear the welcome!

"The woman who opened the cottage door supposed the stranger to be a city missionary, or one come upon an errand of mercy, for she said to him, 'Have you come to pray with Mrs.———, sir?' 'I have,' was his reply; and accordingly he was shown up-stairs, where the mother whom he sought lay on a sick-bed.

"'You are very ill, good woman, very ill; can you look forward to death happily? Are you a believer in the Lord Jesus?' he inquired.

"'Yes, sir,' replied the woman. 'I do believe in Jesus, and know I am saved; I am going to glory, but I cannot, no I cannot, die happy.'

"'How is this?' questioned the stranger.

"'Sir,' wept the dying woman, 'I have a child, a daughter, and I know not where she is; how, then, can I die happy?'

"Well, thought the Christian man, surely the Lord's hand is in all this; and, turning to the woman, he said: 'Tell me, would you receive your daughter into your house just as she is—could you forgive her?'

"He received a true mother's answer, for the poor woman wept, 'She is my child, my child, sir.' Upon which he hastily left, and, bringing in the daughter, said: 'Now, Christian mother, receive your child;' and she, without one word of reproach, clasped her child to her bosom, weeping for joy over her."

THE MISSION SHOE SHOP.

THE Saviour's injunction to be wise as serperts and harmless as doves, is being obeyed by the missionaries in Persia, who are taking shrewd practical measures to improve the social condition of the people, and, at the same time, remove a source of temptation from them. Mr. Coan, who is at Teheran, says: "It has long been perceived that much mischief is caused by the annual excursions to Russia. A very large number go to Russia yearly—part to honestly earn a living, many to beg and gather means dishonestly, all to be led into many temptations and return, discontented and a sore to the nation. Many new diseases are being brought in, before unknown here. This evil is sapping the nation and acting directly against our work. The need was shown of grappling with it, just as with the temperance question at home, and bringing all the influences possible from all sources to bear against it. This brought up the question of employment for the natives at home, and we have now as the result a company who are doing all they can to revive the trades and introduce new industries. I know of no way in which we can help the spiritual work more than by teaching the people the bane of idleness and the dignity of labor. Our shoe shop, started one year ago, has done well, and we now have ten boys who, instead of drifting aimlessly about, will soon have the means of earning an honest living in their villages. The shop is paying its own way now. This year seventy-five dollars were subscribed to send a man to some place to learn the trade of curing leather. Now men are to be put at the trades of blacksmithing and making hats.

THE JEWS IN JERUSALEM.

PERSONS acquainted with Jewish families in America have frequently expressed the opinion that they have now no desire for nationality nor for restoration to the Holy Land. Whether that is so or not, the sure word of prophecy proves that in a very few years there will be a reorganization of Jewish nationality in Palestine, and recent events prove that a large number of the race in other lands are ardently longing to return, while many have already gone to settle there individually. A writer in the Independent says: "The Talmudic and Rabbinic Jews of Eastern Europe have a longing for the land of their fathers, of which the Israelites of Western Europe and of America know almost nothing. Trained in the traditions of centuries, they believe that God is especially present in the Holy Land; that the Jew who dies within the sacred borders goes directly into Heaven, while those of other lands must first pass through the purgatory of Gehinnom. The Messiah will first appear in Palestine, and the dead of that country shall rise first, and only they will receive again the spiritual body which was lost in Adam's fall. Such faith and hope, augmented also by the persecution of their people in Russia, Roumelia and elsewhere, have driven thousands of Abraham's children to Jerusalem, there to end their days and be interred in the sacred soil.

The result of these causes is, that at no time since the expulsion of the Jews from Palestine by the Emperor Hadrian, 130-140 A.D., has the number of these people in Jerusalem been as large as it is now. For many decades no Jew was allowed to set his foot on the sacred soil. Benjamin of Tudela, in 1170 reports only 200 Jewish families in Jerusalem, 50 in Tiberias, 30 in Ramle. In 1525 there were 300 families in Jerusalem, 10 in Hebron, 300 in Saphed. Only in the present century has the immigration increased to a notable extent. In 1858 there were 6,000 Jews in Jerusalem, and at present 14,000, about one-half of all the inhabitants of the city.

AN INTERESTING DOCUMENT FOUND.

AMONG some ancient papers sold by auction recently in London by Messrs. Sotheby was an odd lot of various kinds, chiefly manuscripts of the poet Pope. The purchaser, however, found among them one that must have been unnoticed by the venders. It was a warrant for the arrest of John Bunyan, "a Tynker," and is the original warrant under which Bunyan was apprehended for that third and final imprisonment of some six months' duration, during which he wrote the first part of The Pilgrim's Progress. It fills a half-sheet of foolscap, and is dated March 4, 1674–75, under the hands and seals of twelve justices, six of them, either then or in the Parliament of 1678, members for county or borough, and three of whom had originally committed him for the previous twelve years' imprisonment. The sufferer is described as "Tynker," which may indicate that he worked at his trade, while ministering, a fact hitherto doubted. "I have been able," says the purchaser, "to trace its pedigree to some extent. I am informed by the family solicitor, Mr. Teesdale, that when the Chauncy collections, to which the document belonged, were disposed of by the original Sotheby in 1790, the autographs were retained by the family, who have now sent them to the hammer. Dr. Chauncy probably acquired it with some other article, also included in the sale, from his grandfather, Ichabod Chauncy, who died 1691. Ichabod was the general legal adviser of the persecuted folk, and, as such, exiled with forfeit of land and goods in 1686. From the perfect condition of the document, it may possibly have been sent to him by Bunyan's friends in the faint hope that a habeas corpus might lie, and, as no loophole existed, remitted it to one of his pigeon-holes."

MURDER AND SUICIDE PREVENTED

ONE of those fearful tragedies which occasionally shock civilized communities by showing what desperate men are capable of doing, was impending recently in London, but was averted through the kindness and sympathy of a city missionary. He relates it as an encouragement to others who may come in contact with cases which are apparently hopeless, but which may yield, as in this case, to Christian care and love. He says: "In the poor and degraded district in which I labor, lives a family in which the father has been a soldier, rising to the rank of sergeant. He took to drink, and was degraded to a private soldier. On completing his term of twenty-one years, he was discharged with a pension of eightpence per day ($137 a year). He obtained employment in the Post Office, but drink was still his curse, which led him to rob the Post Office. He was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, with the loss of his pension, his wife and four children being left to the mercies of the world. He was liberated from prison in January last, when he again took to drink, and became a wanderer in the streets. I met him, and spoke to him about the sinful life he was leading, pointing out God's great love to him in offering him pardon. I invited him to a temperance meeting at which I was going to speak. He came, and after the meeting I again spoke to him, and induced both his wife and him to sign the pledge. I then invited him to my Gospel meeting in the room below, on the next Thursday night, when he came and decided for the Lord. His home at this time was the picture of a drunkard's. He had one room, and one bed, for himself, wife, and four children; one table and two old chairs. I got him work also; and both he and his wife worship at the parish church. His children also attend the Sunday-school. He has, moreover, become the occupant of three rooms. He is a good open-air worker. So degraded was this man previous to his conversion that he had made up his mind to murder his wife and four children, and then commit suicide.

AN ILL-USED WIFE'S RETALIATION.

THE influence of Christianity cannot fail to make itself felt in China if the converts live as fully up to the Saviour's command (Matt. 5: 39–44) as did a much-abused wife whose story is related by Mr. Meadows, of Shao-hing, Chehkiang Province. He writes: "Our people have had of late many answers to their united prayers. God has delivered men and women from persecution, has kept brethren and sisters 'steadfast and unmovable' under severe domestic affliction and distress. I wrote you of a poor woman at one of our out-stations, 'Dao-hong-san,' whose husband has beaten her times without number for attending the services. No disciple, male or female, was permitted to enter the house while her husband was at home. A short time ago he beat her so severely that he began to regret his violence. Whilst in this state of mind he was seized with a serious illness, and was unable to rise from his bed or help himself. 'Now,' thought he, 'my wife will pay me back for my ill-treatment. She will not attend to me, so I must do the best I can for myself.' This is the way a heathen wife of any spirit would have treated him; or, if she had waited on him, it would probably have been with loud murmuring and unkind words, so perpetually uttered in his presence as to make his illness more unbearable. But, instead of this, our sister, who was slowly recovering from his cruel treatment, did all she could to make him comfortable; and even used up her little savings to buy him some delicacies. This was all done with such Christian grace and patience, without one unkind word, that the husband was astonished, and began to think, 'There cannot be anything very bad in the religion of Jesus, or my wife would not have acted in this manner towards me.' From that time he has given her full liberty to attend the services, and is himself interested in them."

A TRAVELLING MOUNTAIN.

A SINGULAR phenomenon has been observed in Nevada. It is that of a mountain or gigantic sand-dune, which is slowly shifting its position. The Reno (Nev.) Gazette gives a lengthy description, from which it appears that the mountain, which is situated in Churchill County, is four hundred feet high, and contains millions of tons of sand. In the whole mass it is impossible to find a particle much larger than a pin's head, and it is as clean as any sea-beach sand. The mountain is so solid as to give it a musical sound when trodden upon, and oftentimes a bird lighting upon it, or a large lizard running across the bottom, will start a large quantity of the sand to sliding, which makes a noise resembling the vibration of telegraph wires with a hard wind blowing. But the peculiar feature of the dune is, that it is not stationary, but rolls slowly eastward, the wind gathering it up on the west end and carrying it along the ridge until it is again deposited at the eastern end. Mr. Monroe, the well-known surveyor, having heard of the movement of this mammoth sand-heap, a number of years ago took careful bearings on it while sectionizing government lands in that vicinity. He recently visited the place, and found that the dune had moved several hundred yards. This phenomenon is, of course, regarded as extraordinary, for we have been accustomed to use the mountain as a symbol of eternal stability, but it may remind us of a time which will certainly come, when every mountain will be removed out of its place (Rev. 6:14). It is also a remarkable illustration of a spiritual promise (Isa. 41: 15, 16).

OUR LORD'S PROPHECY.

By G. H. Pember.

The Indulgence of the Body—Absorption in Business, etc.—The Coming of Christ—Expectant and Unworldly Christians—The Suddenness of the Summons—The Source of our Preparations.

"As the days of Noe were, so shall the Coming of the Son of Man be, For as in the days that were before the Flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot, they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed. In that day, he which shall be upon the house-top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away; and he that is in the field, let him likewise not return back. Remember Lot's wife. Whosoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it: and whosoever shall lose his life shall preserve it. I tell you, In that night there shall be two men in one bed; the one shall be taken, the other shall be left. Two women shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. And they answered and said unto Him, Where, Lord? And He said unto them, Wheresoever the body is thither will the eagles be gathered together" (Matt. 24: 37, 38; Luke 17: 28–37).

We may here regard, "eating and drinking," "marrying and giving in marriage," as standing generally for the indulgence of the body. This, if it be the great pleasure of our lives, may prove fatal to us though we never step over the line of worldly morality and propriety. Absorption in business and commerce, that most prominent characteristic of modern times, is indicated by "buying and selling." And in "building and planting," we discern the use to which wealth is usually applied, that is, for comfortable settlement in the doomed world.

Now the exclusive, or too eager pursuit of these things deprives men of all spiritual perception; so that they laugh at the threats of God, until the very Moment of Judgment has Arrived.

And yet even believers cannot avoid more or less entanglement in the actions mentioned, which are not, of course, necessarily sinful. The latter must, therefore, watch and pray, lest, becoming absorbed in that which is earthly, they should be surprised by the coming of the Son of Man, and so should be left by Him to endure the hour of temptation with the world.

For Christ will, at His Advent, pass as lightning round the whole globe, summoning all those who profess His name to leave home and kindred and ascend to Him. And whosoever loves Him better than aught besides, and really wishes to obey, will prove able to do so, even as the impotent man, when he made an effort to respond to the Lord's command, "Arise," found that the power to rise and walk was present with him. But he who hesitates, remembering something which he must first do, or turning in his heart to any object of love other than Christ, will have lost his opportunity.

"In that day," continues the Lord, "he which shall be on the housetop, and his goods in the house, let him not go down to take them away; and let him that is in the fields likewise not return back." At that instant, he that is on the housetop must have no thought of precious things within the house, but must stand where he is, ready to be caught into the Presence of Christ. Not that there will be any time for actual motion before the King has gone by with His train, and the awful moment has passed; it is but the inclination of the heart one way or the other that will decide the matter. The attractive power which will proceed from the Lord during His progress, will be sufficient to draw to Him only those who are Not Weighted with Earthward Desires.

So, again, he that is in the field must not seek to return back. He may have father and mother, brothers and sisters, wife and little ones, at home; but not a thought must he bestow upon them when the sudden summons comes. Up to that time it is his duty to think and care for them; the law written for him is: "If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel" (1 Tim. 5: 8). But the instant he becomes conscious that the Lord is come, the duties of this life are ended. His love for his Creator, Saviour, and King must overpower all other love; and his trust must so abound that he can at once resign even his dearest ones to the Almighty and tender care of Him into whose presence he has been called.

Such must be the condition of every believer who would be able to respond to the Master's voice. But there are some who, remembering that and that literally no more than an instant will be given for its acceptance, may be disposed to fall into despondency, "How," they say, "can we prepare ourselves for such a time; how can we always be watching?" God by His own love and power has justified us, and by that same love and power He must sanctify us. On our side it is required that with purpose of heart, and not merely in sentiment, we put ourselves into His hands, being willing that He should do with us whatsoever He sees to be necessary.

The Summons Will Come Suddenly,

To us the command is given: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you, both to will and to do, of His good pleasure" (Phil. 2: 12, 13). Of Him, then, is our preparation, just as from Him the very desire for it comes into our hearts. And as soon as we recognize this fact, all our perplexities vanish, and there is no longer any ground for despair. For it is His touch that transmutes all things to gold; it is He who chooses the base things of the earth to make them honorable, who "raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory" (1 Sam. 2: 8).

Let us, then, if doubts oppress us, cast the burden of them upon Him, and remember the prayer of Paul for the Thessalonians in regard to the very point which is now before us. For after the Apostle has urged them to walk worthily of their vocation, he closes his address with the pregnant words: "And the God of peace Himself sanctify you wholly, and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved entire, without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is He that calleth you, who will also do it" (1. Thess. 5: 24).

As the Lightning of Christ's Advent speeds through the night, husband and wife may be reposing on the same bed; the one is borne away, and the other is left to weep alone on the dark earth. Two women may be employed together in some ordinary work, such as the Eastern duty of grinding corn, for the day's food, in the early morning; in an instant the one is removed in a flood of glory, while her companion must labor on in bitterest grief. Two men may be tilling the ground in the heat of the day; a sudden flash far exceeds the brightness of the sun; and when it has passed, there remains but a solitary figure in the field.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled. "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller. This reduction in price is made to encourage the study of this important subject.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to The Christian Herald. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Memorial to Congress Urging Government control of the telegraph system of the United States is being prepared by the Knights of Labor, who decided upon it at their Convention at Minneapolis, Minn., last week. The decision was doubtless prompted by the announcement that Mr. Jay Gould, who controls the Western Union, had bought up the Baltimore and Ohio lines. The consequences of that amalgamation are easily foreseen. Any person sending a telegram by Western Union now, is puzzled by the apparently capricious difference of rates, until he discovers the clue to the arrangement, He finds that wherever the Western Union is in competiton with another line, its rates are low; but where there is no competing line its price is high. What the rate will be when Western Union has swallowed its competitor altogether, may be imagined. The memorial of the Knights of Labor is therefore likely to be followed by others from the business community. In England the government acquired control of the telegraph wires nearly twenty years ago, and made the system a department of the Post Office. Since that time the public has been well served at uniform rates, and with a profit to the government. The efficiency of the Postal service in this country, encourages the belief that the government could manage the telegraph business equally well.

The Suggestions Made at the Bankers' Conference in New York, on October 12, by Mr. John Jay Knox, ex-Controller of the Currency, are finding favor among men who are concerned about the financial situation. To be every few months on the verge of a panic which is only averted by the interposition of the Secretary of the Treasury. is not a healthy state of affairs for the nation or individuals, and it was this condition which the bankers had under discussion. Mr. Knox had not much hope of immediate relief from Congress. He said: It is admitted by the members of both political parties that the revenues of the Government ought to be so reduced that this excessive accumulation of surplus shall be curtailed, but the methods of reducing the surplus are diverse, and there is no reasonable hope that even those Congressmen who are friends of the present Administration, and who compose the majority of the House of Representativs, can agree early in the session upon any measures which would secure such reduction. The most that can be expected is that some bill may be matured after protracted discussion in the House and the Senate, which will go into effect and produce this result some time in the year 1890. In the meantime he suggested that the government might afford relief with mutual benefit by taking four per cent. bonds due in 1907, and giving in exchange bonds at two and a half per cent. interest, with cash down in compensation for the difference of interest at the rate of twenty-three dollars on every hundred. By this plan he calculated the government would save nearly six dollars on every bond, and the holders would have possession of money which they could invest with a better return than four per cent. The plan is ingenious, and will probably be embodied in a bill when Congress meets.

Misconceptions as to the Fishery Commission, which is soon to meet in Washington, are prevalent. It is alleged that the commission is an act of defiance to Congress on the part of the Administration. Mr. Bayard has made an effort to correct the mistake. He states that the commissioners have been appointed merely to facilitate and simplify the negotiations. At present his despatches go to London, thence to Canada, thence back to London, and finally the answer, after months of delay reaches Washington. The object of the commission is to negotiate a treaty and for this no authority from Congress is required; the President possesses that power. The primary negotiators are the Secretary of State and the English Minister. The British Government will send two gentlemen, one from London and one from Canada, to assist the latter, and the President has appointed Messrs. Putnam and Angell to assist Mr. Bayard. The Commissioners will bind nobody beyond the administrations they represent. But it sincerely hoped by the President and the Secretary of State that the commission will be able to agree on a plan that will be satisfactory to both countries and that will remain so.

The Answer of the Mormon Church to the suits commenced by the Attorney-General under direction of Congress has been filed. The defendants in the suit, who are the "Apostles" of the church and the managers of the Immigration Society, deny all the charges of the Government. They assert that the church corporation, by law, ceased to exist on July 1, 1862, and that the church has since been a voluntary religious and charitable association. The property which the church holds in excess of the $50,000 allowed by law, was held for the church as a church, and not as a corporation, by the late President Taylor, as sole trustee, until his death. The real estate is held by three trustees, last appointed by the Probate Court. The officers of the Immigration Society admit that the society existed as a corporation when the law was enacted, but say that it has never held any real estate and now has no personal property except a few worthless promissory notes. On these grounds they contend that their charter cannot be annulled by Congress. It ought not to be difficult to prove the falsity of every allegation.

Another Frightful Railroad Catastrophe, with the usual accompaniments of fire, occurred on October 11, in Indiana, on the Chicago and Atlantic Railroad. A passenger train which left Chicago at 7: 45 P. M., on Oct. 10, was delayed by a slight accident to the engine. The engineer stopped at a water-tank near Kouts Station, Indiana, to see if he could repair the damage. He states that he turned the Semaphore signal a thousand feet in his rear, by means of the cord at the tank. The night, however, was foggy, and probably the light could not be seen far away. While the passenger train was standing by the tank a freight train came dashing down the incline at a speed of twenty-five miles an hour, and dashed into the rear of the passenger train, telescoping the cars and crushing the sleeping-car. Almost instantly flames burst simultaneously from the smoker, sleeping-car and the ladies' car, and cries of terror rang on the midnight air. The uninjured passengers and the train men worked energetically to release the inmates, but after the first few minutes the fierce heat drove the rescuers from their task. How many persons perished in the flames it is impossible to tell. Of one family of six persons on board, all but one died, and no trace was found of them; the fact of their being burned being only known through the escape of the one little boy. It is thought that thirty deaths is not too large an estimate of the number. Not until there is enacted a stringent law prescribing heavy penalties against any railroad company having stoves in the cars, will railroad travel be free from the recurrence of these horrible calamities.

Destitution in London is Arriving at an alarming stage. In the parks and in open places, notably in Trafalgar Square, large numbers of homeless and destitute persons congregate and sleep at night on the bare stones. A correspondent of the New York Herald cables to that journal that in the back streets of London is a large mass of suffering humanity—thousands of women and children on the verge of starvation. Private charity is active. Thousands of pounds are spent that are never heard of in the papers; but still the horrible cry of hunger and want rings through the vast city. Very few people are rich. Even a general division of property would go no way now. The rich are getting poor, the poor are sinking toward destitution. On Friday a deputation of starving men appealed to the Lord Mayor to find them work or give them temporary relief. He professed his inability to do either, and the men departed in angry mood. On their way back to their nightly camping ground in Trafalgar Square they had a fight with the police, but were vanquished.

The Inquest on the Bodies of the Men Killed at Mitchelstown, in Ireland, by the police on September 9, has resulted in a verdict of wilful murder against the head Constable and five policemen who fired on the rioters by his orders. The conduct of Mr. Harrington at the inquest, his coarse and violent language, and the evident bias of both coroner and jury has, however, robbed the verdict of much of its weight. The coroner has issued his warrant for the arrest of the policemen, but it is not expected that they will be brought to trial. Any indictment of them would have to be passed upon by the Grand Jury who, it is believed, would dismiss the complaint. The opinion gains ground in England, even among Liberals, that the police did not fire until they believed their lives were in danger. That they acted hastily and in panic, is probable, but there is a prejudice in society against the attacking party when there is a conflict between the police and a mob, which is producing a reaction in favor of the police.

A Disgraceful Scandal Exposed in France last week is one that has caused general surprise. General Caffarel, the chief of the War Department staff, was arrested and imprisoned by a council of war for selling civil decorations. The discovery was made through an application by a detective who represented himself as a retired manufacturer, to a woman who boasted that for a specified sum of money she could procure the Cross of the Legion of Honor. She was arrested and her house searched. The papers found, implicated General Caffarel and many others in high position. Among them is General Andlau, an officer of distinction who fought in the Crimean war. He absconded as soon as he heard of the woman's arrest and the police found incriminating documents in his office. Mr. Wilson, the son-in-law of President Grevy, has also been charged with complicity. The most important arrest, however, is that of General Boulanger, who was arrested on Thursday last. He contends, however, that the charges against him are false and that the whole affair is a conspiracy to ruin him. It is alleged that the accused persons have not only traded in decorations, but have sold military secrets to Germany.

The Gospel Union (or Gospel Army, as it has been styled in some places), of which the Rev. M. Baxter is President, has now about fifteen mission stations in the United States and Canada, besides more than seventy mission stations in Britain. Evangelistic Gospel meetings are held at these stations generally every week evening, and Sundays, in halls rented permanently by evangelists, and many sinners are being converted by this Gospel work. Contributions, which are urgently needed for carrying on and extending the movement, should be sent to Rev. M. Baxter, care of Manager of The Christian Herald, 63 Bible House, New York.

Further News of Mr. H. M. Stanley has been received in a private letter addressed to Lieut. E. H. Taunt, U. S. N., by Mr. Swinburne, Stanley's agent and right hand man at Stanley Pool. The letter bears date early in September. It says that Stanley has progressed 150 miles farther up the Aruwiwi River since the sending of the last despatches, and has thus already penetrated further than any explorer has gone before. Two entrenched camps were built at the new halting place. These camps, however, appear to be unnecessary, as the natives do not seem to be disposed to attack the party. Mr. Stanley and his men, the letter says, are in good health and spirits. Stanley sent the steamer Florida, back to Stanley Pool, which is one of the stations of the Sanford exploring expedition, for more stores and men. Lieutenant Taunt says that so far everything promises a favorable outcome of Stanley's present enterprise. The Lieutenant himself returned from the Congo, about three months ago, being obliged to leave at that time on account of the failure of his health.

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Telford the English Methodist Evangelists arrived in New York on Oct. 12, by the steamer Italy. Several invitations to hold meetings have been received by them. Other invitations are doubtless on their way. Replies will be sent in due course as soon as a programme can be arranged which will diminish to the lowest point the time to be spent in travelling. Mr. Telford has come for work, and he is anxious to arrange his tour so that by taking the cities in their geographical order, he may not waste time by retracing his steps. In addition to the testimonials quoted in the sketch of his life, published in this journal two weeks ago, Mr. Telford has received one from Dr. Paton the Principal of the Congregational Institute in Nottingham, eulogizing his work in that town, and heartily commending him to the American churches

A Glowing But Perfectly Just Tribute to Mr. C. H. Spurgeon is paid by the New York Herald in a cable despatch published on Friday last. It says that the health of "a man who has done more good in the world than all the politicians put together, excites real uneasiness. The Rev. Mr. Spurgeon is a martyr to rheumatic gout. He manages to recover from his attacks, but they increase in intensity and weaken his constitution, causing the approach of each winter to be regarded with apprehension. He has taken more poor children off the streets and started them comfortably in life than any other man who can be named. His orphan asylum is a marvellous proof of what one man can do to mitigate suffering. His state of health, while thought not to be unusually bad, is a source of greater anxiety to many thousands than Mr. Gladstone's or Lord Salisbury's." Other reports of Mr. Spurgeon's health are not so discouraging. Every autumn of late years he has been laid aside for a time when the London fogs appear, but after a brief sojourn at Mentone, in the south of France, he has returned with renewed health. His attack this year is not considered more dangerous than usual.

A Wedding Party Armed With Rifles Conducted the bride and bridegroom to the altar at Carrolton, Ga., on October 1, and stood on guard while the ceremony was performed. It appears that a farmer, living near Franklin, has a daughter whose charms have won her many admirers. Among them was one whom the father selected for her husband, he being the most wealthy of the lot, though not the one whose suit was the most welcome to the daughter. She preferred a younger and more handsome suitor, and in spite of her father's injunctions, frequently met him clandestinely. The father surprised one of these meetings, and at once shot at the lover, who ran for the woods, followed by the angry farmer, who continued firing at him until he disappeared among the trees. The young man had many friends among the neighbors, and they espoused his cause. A number of them, armed with rifles, stormed the farmer's house before daylight, on the morning of October 1, and captured the girl. Placing her with her lover in a wagon, they drove to Carrolton, the whole party riding on horseback, as a guard alongside the wagon. There the marriage took place while the escort distributed themselves at the different doors of the church, with rifles loaded, to prevent interruption on the part of the farmer and his friends. They were incongruous surroundings for a wedding, and though they sufficed to protect the young couple while they were made one, they would be a poor protection against the foes that will assail their future happiness. Trials and troubles which come into the lives of all married couples, especially to those who have married in opposition to parental counsels, can be encountered successfully, only when both hearts are armed with faith and fortified with grace (Eph. 6 : 13).

How a Pastor Lost his Church was Related by Dr. Strong in his recent address to the Boston Evangelical Ministers' Association. He said that a certain pastor had made many efforts to attract the poorer class of citizens to the church rather than the wealthy, but he had been defeated through the want of hospitality on the part of the pew-holders. He therefore called a meeting of the church and pleaded with his people for a larger manifestation of sympathy to the poor and destitute around them, when an influential church member arose and said he wanted none or that class in his pew. The pastor, remembering that he had been commissioned to preach the Gospel to the poor, promptly rejoinded : "I will not cease my plea till the door of this church swings in to the slightest touch of the needy." Dr. Strong said that this avowal of the pastor's determination so incensed that member and other wealthy holders of pews against him that they did not cease their efforts to drive him from his pulpit until he voluntarily resigned. Whether that church is now without a pastor or has secured one after its own heart, Dr. Strong did not say; but it ought not to call itself a Christian church any longer, for He whom they profess to worship had not where to lay His head, and therefore belonged to the class excluded from its walls, and it violates apostolic precepts (James 2 : 1-5)

A Lawsuit About a Dead Man's Grave is to be tried in Connecticut, at the next term of the Court of Common Pleas. Some years ago an English naval officer, the younger brother of a baronet, resigned from the navy and went to reside at New Haven, Conn. After living there for several years he died and was buried in Whitneyville cemetery. The cost of the grave and a monument erected in the lot to his memory was defrayed by a citizen of New Haven, who charged it against the deceased man's estate. The purchase of the burial lot was not formally completed and the authorities sold the lot to other parties who had the naval officer's remains exhumed and reinterred in a remote corner of the cemetery. They then used the lot for burials of their own family. Now, the baronet, who has become aware of the transaction, brings suit to compel the restoration of his brother's body to its original resting-place. It is said that the suit will be hotly contested, the present holders of the lot being determined to resist the disturbance of the bodies of their relatives. In ordinary ejectment cases the tenants would be deeply concerned as to the result, but in this case it signifies nothing to them. If in life they trusted in Christ they have secured a habitation from which they can never be disturbed, and in which they are happy wherever their bodies may repose (Ps. 16 : 8).

A Crafty Convict Succumbed to a Ruse in Detroit, Mich., a few days ago. He was sent up in July of last year for larceny, with a sentence of three years. Seven months ago he began to show symptoms of paralysis. Finally he took to his bed and refused food, the muscles of his face became rigid and he ceased to speak or eat, except when fed with a spoon. Physicians from different parts of the State, when visiting the prison, examined him and all pronounced his malady paralysis. The prison physician, however suspected that the malady was feigned, and resolved to put his suspicions to the test. Calling the attendants into the hospital, where the convict lay, he remarked in his hearing, that the case was a very remarkable one, and he wished he could understand it. "The man cannot live many days, anyway," he said, "and I will experiment on him. To-morrow morning we will chloroform him and I will remove the top of his skull, and have a look at his brain, and find out what the disease is." No sooner had the doctor moved away than the convict opened his eyes and called the attendant. To him he confessed that he had been shamming from the first, in the hope of eliciting sympathy and getting a pardon. He rose from his bed, and the next day he was at work in the paint-shop. Much as he disliked imprisonment, he preferred it to the prospect of undergoing such an operation. Even a less severe examination would have been unwelcome to him. There are many hypocritical professors in our churches, similarly hoping for pardon through their profession, who dread nothing so much as the searching examination for which the Psalmist yrayed (Ps. 139 : 23, 24).

BRIEF NOTES.

Dr. George F. Pentecost has accepted engagements which will occupy the whole of the next twelve months.

The Rev. E. P. Hammond expects to commence an evangelistic tour in California next month. His services at Mansfield Centre were very successful.

Messrs. Whittle and Billhorn are holding services in Iowa. They commenced at Ottumwa, and will work in various cities in that State for some months.

Tracts on "Christian Living" will be supplied free of charge to any minister on application to Mr. W. P. Alward, 487 Washington Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Major J. H. Cole is at Sedalia, Mo. The meetings are held in a tabernacle which seats two thousand persons, and it will soon be too small for the crowds.

The Women's National Christian Temperance Union will hold its Convention at Nashville, Tenn., November 16–23. Forty States and Territories have appointed Delegates and a large number of southern ladies have promised to take part in the proceedings.

President Cleveland, on Thursday last, laid the corner stone of a new building for the Young Men's Christian Association, in Kansas City, Mo. The President spoke in high appreciation of the value of the work being done through the Associations in the cities of the United States.

Mr. Charles Herald, who is about to hold services in Cooper Union, New York, is laboring at Hartford, Conn. At the conclusion of his services there he proposes to hold a house to house visitation in the densely populated district around Cooper Union and invite non-churchgoers to the meetings.

Mrs. Warnes Huntly has commenced services at Pittsburgh, Pa. She is an English evangelist, who has been very useful in her own land. On the voyage over, the steamship Wyoming, by which she travelled, was the scene of continuous evangelistic services, and many emigrants made a profession of faith.

Captain Moreton, whose work at Mildmay Park, England, is so well known, and whose labors in Canada and this country have been much blessed, will re-enter the evangelistic field next year. He has been doing pastoral duty for some months at Norfolk, Va. Invitations to hold services may be sent to him at 48 Brown St., Norfolk, Va., during this and next month.

The classes of the Y. W. C. A., of New York, were reopened October 1. Applications for admission were received all through the month of September. In addition to the classes of previous years two new ones have been added : a class in physical culture with "Health Talks," and two evening classes in type-writing, all of which are filled. New classes will be added as the need for them arises.

A Conference of Young Women's Christian Associations will be held in the Y. W. C. A. building, 7 East Fifteenth Street, New York, October 25–28. Mrs. Davis, of Boston, Mass., will preside. Delegates will attend from all the associations in the United States and Canada. A public reception to the delegates will be given in the rooms of the Y. W. C. A. on October 25, when ladies interested in Christian work among women will be invited to meet them.

Canvassars Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD 63 Bible House, New York.

MODERN IDOLATRY.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of?"—Isaiah 2 : 22.

Man a Born Materialist—Always Seeking for a Visible God—The Idols of Modern Days—The Trust in Man a Mockery—I. What is Man—His Weak Point—A Feeble Creature—Frail—Fickle—II. Relations to Man—Not to be Idolized in Love—Or Trust—Cease from Fear of Him—From Worry About Him—III. The Reason for It—Nothing Accounted of—The Value of a Cipher.

MAN, especially since the fall, is a very unspiritual creature. His animus is animal. He is made up, as the old writers used to say, of soul and soil. Alas, the soil terribly soils his soul! "My soul cleaveth to the dust" might be the confession of every man in one sense or another. We bear the image of the first Adam, who was of the earth earthy: earthy enough are we. One consequence of

The Prevailing Materialism

of our corrupt nature is our craving for something tangible, audible, visible, as the object of our confidence. We want something which can be touched, heard, seen, or felt: we cannot be content with that which appeals only to the soul or the spirit. It seems as if man is so unspiritual that he cannot believe in a spiritual God; and yet any other than a spiritual God is an absurdity. Man cannot see God; therefore he will not trust in Him, He cannot hear His voice; therefore he will not attend to the movement of the Holy Spirit upon his soul. Humanity is carnal, sold under sin, infected with idolatry; and this fact remains true in a measure even of the regenerate. Their old nature is not other than it was, save that it is held in check by the new nature. So long as sin remaineth in us—and this will be so long as we are in this body—our tendency will be to be weary of God, who is a Spirit, and must be worshiped in spirit and in truth. We seek after something to worship, something to love, something to rely upon, which is near akin to the coarser part of our nature that we may commune with it through the senses.

Man is by nature an idolater. Under the most favorable circumstances he flies to his idols, even as the dog seeks after carrion, or the vulture hastens to its prey. The Lord's people, Israel, were delivered out of Egypt with a high hand and with an outstretched arm, and by many signs and tokens God's presence among them was abundantly certified. This was

A Noble Beginning.

The circumstances which afterwards surrounded them were specially helpful. They were placed in the wilderness, where, if they lived at all, they must live through the special protection and provision of God; for they reaped no harvests, and they gathered into no barns: the bread they ate fell from heaven, the water they drank came from a rock which had been smitten by command of God through the rod of Moses. All day long they were sheltered from the burning sun by a canopy of cloud, and at night the canvas city was made bright with that same canopy turned into a flame of fire. They were in the wilderness alone, and apart; shut out from the rest of the world, surrounded as it were by the Lord Himself, who was a wall of fire round about them, and the glory in their midst. Nothing could have been more favorable for faith in God. Yet they must needs have a god that they can see. "Make us gods to go before us," cried they with such furious clamor that Aaron yielded to their evil desires, and made them the image of an ox.

For century after century this was always the tendency of Israel, the most spiritual race of men upon the face of the earth. This race, educated by miracle and instructed by revelation, continually went aside after the gods of the heathen. Abraham among his own descendants after the flesh had few who were like him in his high spiritual faith. The world of spiritual realities seems to be too bright, too holy for such gross and carnal beings as we are.

The people of Isaiah's day were like the rest of their race: they showed their unspiritualness and their inability to walk in the light of the Lord by making their own wealth their chief confidence. We read at verse 7, "Their land also is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures;" and then is added, "their land also is full of idols." Alas! this is common among God's people even at this day. "Give us this day our daily bread" is a prayer which falls far short of the general desires even of Christian people. Our demands are for luxuries, and plenty of them. Many would be coming down in the world very terribly if they had to receive after that from-hand-to-mouth fashion day by day their daily bread. Yet the Lord Jesus has put these words into our mouth. The providence of God is to some professing Christians a mere dream: they cannot rest till they have something more substantial to rely upon than the care of heaven. You think I am sarcastic; is it not true? See how your professed believers hunger to make sure of the main chance: as eagerly as the merest worldlings they scrape and they hoard. I have not a word to say against that Scriptural prudence which bids us, like the ant, lay by in store for wintry times; but I speak of the hunger to be rich, and of the selfish expenditure which forgets entirely that our substance is to be used for the glory of God, and that we are only stewards.

Idolatry of Wealth

You tell me that this idolatry is confined to heathen countries. Alas! it is not so; idolatry is common even here "Little children, keep yourselves from idols," is a text that needs still to be preached from—ay, to be preached in Christian congregations; for idols will intrude themselves into the sanctuary of the Lord. The forms and shapes of modern idols are many. May we not easily make Idols of Ourselves?

Almost before we are aware of it, we may be thus debased. What more degrading than for a man to worship himself! Yet we all too much trust in ourselves at times—what is this but idolatry? Do we not seek ourselves in a measure? Is not this idolatry? Do we not reverence our own achievements and atonements—in what does this differ from idolatry? Gods many and lords many have men made unto themselves. Like a child that must have a toy, man must have a visible trust and confidence. For this purpose, "he hath sought out many inventions."

I need not enlarge upon this. You all know how true it is that, one way or another, man gets away from the spiritual life which would make God everything to him, and he wanders into the sensual region, where he either finds another god, or else allows some symbol or priest to stand between him and God. So sadly through sin is our nature twisted and biassed, that we seem to be under the witchery of idolatry. Concerning that sin so common and so accursed I have to speak at this time. May the Lord bless the word, that we may be kept from the transgression! Here is the text: "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?"

I. Our first inquiry is What is Man?

This question is asked many times in Scripture, and it has been frequently answered with a copiousness of instruction. What is man? He is assuredly a very feeble creature. He must be weak, for "his breath is in his nostrils." We measure the strength of a chain by its weakest link. If other links are strong, yet if one is ready to snap, we judge that the whole chain is far from strong, and is not to be depended upon. See, then, how weak man is, for he is weakness itself in a vital point. He has bones that may be hard and durable, and he has many a strong sinew, tough and wiry, as we sometimes say; but there is a weak point about him which is found in a matter on which his life depends, namely, his breath. And what is our breath? A vapor which we scarcely see ourselves—a thing so unsubstantial that when we have it we scarce see it, and yet when we lose it, life is gone from us. It is a marvel that so frail a life is not sooner ended. That we live, is miraculous; that we die, is but natural. Go rest on a reed, or ride upon a moth, or build on a bubble; but rely not upon a man. Moreover, man is for his strength must be measured by his fleeting breath, and that breath is in his nostrils. It seems as though his life in his breath stood at the gates, ready to be gone, since it is in his nostrils. Tho text says, not that his breath is in his lungs, deep, hidden below, but in his nostrils—at the door, in the most exposed part of the face, at two open portals which can never be shut; as if it meant to secure an easy exit at any moment. Brethren, there are ten thousand gates to death. One man is choked by a grape-stone, another dies through sleeping in a newly whitewashed room; one receives death as he passes by a reeking sewer, another finds it in the best kept house, or by a chill taken in a walk. Those who study neither to eat nor to drink anything unwholesome, nor go into quarters where the arrows of death are flying, yet pass away on a sudden, falling from their couch into a coffin, from their seat into the sepulchre.

A Frail Creature;

Man is a weak and frail creature; he is also a dying creature. Need I further enlarge upon this? To our sorrow, many of us know that it is so. Some of you had fathers of your flesh, but they passed away and you were fatherless before you could earn your bread. Had not God preserved the orphan, you had been miserable indeed. Some of you once leaned upon a manly arm and looked up into the smiling face of a husband; but the dear one has been laid in a grave wet with floods of tears; it is well for you that your Maker dies not. There are those here who once enjoyed dear friendships; these seemed essential to your lives, but ruthless death has torn Jonathan away from David. It has come closer, and stolen the child from its mother, and the wife from the husband. Man is ever dying while he lives. Oh, set not all thy love, or much of thy confidence, or any of thy worship upon him.

But I think that the text also reminds us that man is a Very Fickle Creature.

His breath is in his "nostrils." That is where he wears his life, and this hints to us that he is sadly changeable. As his breath is affected by his health, so is he changed. To-day he loves, and to-morrow he hates; he promises fair but he forgets his words. He swears that he will be faithful unto death, and anon he betrays the confidence reposed in him. No dependence can be wisely placed in him. O man! O woman! Change is written on thy brow. The lapse of years alters thee, yea, the flight of days and hours suffices to transform thee! We may better trust the winds and waves than thee!

Think of the days of divine wrath, and especially of the last dread Day of Judgment, and of the dismay which will then seize upon many of the proud and the great. Are you going to make these your confidants? Are you going to give up Christ for the sake of the smile of these who will wail in terror when He comes? Is it so, that for the sake of some young man or woman who loves not God, and one day must quail before the coming Judge, you will let your Lord and Saviour go? It is concerning such a temptation as this that the text thunders at you: "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils," who will fear and fly and lose his breath in very dread at the appearing of the Lord.

II. Secondly, what is to be

Our Relation to Man,

or what does the text mean when it says, "Cease ye from man"? It means, first, cease to idolize him in your love. Do any of you idolize any living person? Answer honestly. It is very common to idolize children. A mother who had lost her babe, fretted and rebelled about it. She happened to be in a meeting of the Society of Friends, and there was nothing spoken that morning except this word by one female Friend who was moved, I doubt not, by the Spirit of God to say, "Verily, I perceive that children are idols." She did not know the condition of that mourner's mind, but it was the right word, and she to whom God applied it, knew how true it was. She submitted her rebellious will, and at once was comforted. Cease ye from these little men and women; for, though you prize them so, they are of the race from which you are to cease.

I will not go into the many instances in which men have been idolized politically, or idolized by a blind following of their teaching. You can idolize a minister, you can idolize a poet, you can idolize a patron; but in so doing you break the first and greatest of the commandments, and you anger the Most High. He declares Himself to be a jealous God, and He will not yield His throne to another. Upon any who are thus erring, let me press the text home: "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of?"

Next, "Cease ye from man": cease to idolize him in your trust. There is a measure of confidence that we may place in good and gracious men, for they are worthy of it; but a in any mere man is altogether evil. I care not who he may be, you cannot read his heart; and some of the greatest deceptions that have ever been wrought in this world have been accomplished by persons who seemed to be self-evidently honest and sincere. I remember conversing with a person, who was concerned in one of the great speculations which brought loss and ruin to many, and as I looked into his honest face and heard his open-hearted talk, I said to myself, "This is not a man who is capable of robbery. He is a plain, blunt, farmer-like sort of a man, who might even be the victim of the confidence trick." I afterwards learned that this is the usual style of the man who puffs a company, or betrays a trust. Of course if a man looks like a thief, you button up your pockets, and smile if he invites you to take shares; but you are off your guard when a man appears to be the embodiment of simple honesty. Hear you this, and learn what God would teach you, "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of?" Do not idolize man by laying yourself at his feet, or following him in the dark; for it will not only be in itself a folly, but it will bring you under the curse of my text.

Blind Confidence

Equally does the text bid us

Cease From the Fear of Man.

Oh, how many are kept from doing right through some man or some woman, wealthy relative, or influential friend! Are there not men in workshops who join with others in their ribaldry because they are afraid to speak out, lest they should be laughed at and marked as hypocrites? Are there not persons in well-to-do circles who must attend a certain place of worship, because all the respectable people go there? No matter which way conscience would take them, they are bound to follow the fashion: the fear of men is upon them. They do not want to be despised and remarked upon. But, my dear friends if any of you are doing wrong under fear of men, do not excuse yourselves, but at once obey the word which says, "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils."

Once more, cease from being worried about men. We ought to do all we can for our fellow men to set them right and keep them right, both by teaching and by example; but certain folks think that everything must go according to their wishes, and if we cannot see eye to eye with them, they worry themselves and us. This is not right, and that is not right, and indeed nothing is right but what is hammered on their anvil. Let us please our neighbor for his good, for edification, but let us not become men-pleasers, nor grieve inordinately because unreasonable persons are not satisfied with us. To our own Master we stand or fall, and interfering brethren must be so good as to remember that we are not their servants, but we serve Christ.

"But they say." What do they say? Let them say.

It Will Not Hurt You

if you can only gird up the loins of your mind, and cease from man. "Oh, but they have accused me of this and that." Is it true? "No, sir, it is not true, and that is why it grieves me." That is why it should not grieve you. If it were true it ought to trouble you; but if it is not true let it alone. If an enemy has said anything against your character it will not always be worth while to answer him. Silence has both dignity and argument in it. Nine times out of ten, if a boy makes a blot in his copy-book and borrows a knife to take it out, he makes the mess ten times worse; and as in your case there is no blot after all, you need not make one by attempting to remove what is not there. All the dirt that falls upon a good man will brush off when it is dry: but let him wait till it is dry, and not dirty his hands with wet mud. "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils." Brethren in Christ, let us think more of God and less of man.

That was a wise and tender word of our Saviour to the woman who had washed his feet. He said to her, "Thy sins be forgiven thee;" and then, as they began to cavil at her, and talk about the expense and the waste of the ointment, he added to her, "Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace:" as much as to say, "They are going to have a discussion about you but do you go out of earshot of it. They are going to criticize what you have done; do not tarry to hear them, but go home. I have accepted you, let that be enough for you; never mind them. Do not want to know their opinions." Oftentimes to a child of God, it is the best advice that can be given—"Go in peace." Certain doubters are about to argue; let them argue to themselves, but do you go in peace. Why do you want to know the last new doubt? Would you like to taste the last new poison? "Prove all things," but when it has been proved to be evil, have done with it. Do not want to hear that which can only tend to stagger your faith and defile your conscience. You have heard enough of that stuff already; go in peace.

III. We finish with the question: why are we to cease from man? The answer is, he is Nothing to be accounted for.

Begin, dear brethren, by ceasing from yourselves. Every man must cease from himself first, and then he must cease from all men, as his hope and his trust, because neither ourselves nor others are worthy of such confidence. What figure shall I put down for man? Some men would wish to have themselves written down at a very high figure, but a cipher is quite sufficient. Write man at nothing, and you are somewhat above the mark. Wherein is he to be accounted of? Compared with God, man is less than nothing and vanity. Reckon him so, and act upon the reckoning. If there were no men on the face of the earth, how would you live? If God alone filled all your thoughts and all your heart, how would you live? Live just so. Then if there be a thousand million men upon the face of the globe—and there are more—they will not sway you. If the city teems with them, and if the forum is disturbed with their noise, and if they ride up to the capitol in triumph, what of that? We have ceased from them, and we shall never have cause to regret it, for they will be no loss to us. If we try to reckon up what the loss might be if we lost their aid, it comes to nothing; for wherein are they to be accounted of. Cease from them and go straight on in the path of faith and duty, resting in God and believing in him. Care nothing for the vanity of vanities, but trust in the Verity of verities, even God Himself.

This is a special subject, and someone will say, "Can't such a text as this be useful for the ungodly?" Yes, it hits the nail on the head. "Cease ye from man." You have been looking to your feelings; you have been looking to your works; you have been looking to this and that of your own; cease ye altogether from that evil man—yourself. Wherein are ye to be accounted of? Some of you have kept back from Christ because you have made much of this poor nobody that is crushed before the moth, this worm of the earth, this mere vapor. Now, rise above your dead selves and think more of God. Believe that He is, and that He is the rewarder of them that diligently seek Him, and may His Holy Spirit help you now to come and commit your souls into the hands of the risen Redeemer, even unto Him who is able to save you and keep you to the end. God so help you, for Jesus Christ's sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Modern Zebedee.*

We have reason enough to inquire whether we are giving to men such report of our Master and Lord as must command their consent. I knew a man who was, I believe, a devout man, and who throughout his life had been a cheerful supporter of the church, and what report of Jesus Christ did the church, with which through his wife he was connected, bring to that man in order that he also might come to Jesus in its communion? It gave him a confession of faith which had been cast in the heat of the Unitarian controversy, all the parts of which had been soundly riveted together, and which then had been left for all future generations as the faith once delivered to the saints. The apostle James would hardly have comprehended all its technical phrases; the apostle Peter might have found in it more things hard to be understood than he read in the epistles of Paul his beloved brother; and Paul himself, with his trained rabbinical intellect, might possibly have so interpreted it as to be able to accept its reasoned dogmas, while John might have asked why in so complete a compendium of Christianity his one word, "God is love," and, "little children, love one another," had been left out. But that was the witness of that church to that man of the doctrines of the divine One who spake not as the scribes, and who went about doing good. Not one article or word of it did the Zebedee of whom I speak openly deny; only while Salome went to the Lord's table, he kept quietly on mending his nets.

A Strange Wedding.

One afternoon in the year 1210, as Pope Innocent III., surrounded by a sumptuous retinue of prelates, was walking on the terrace of the Lateran, a company of mendicants laid at his feet the article of a new association. At their head was a young man who but a few years before had been foremost in every scene of merriment; he had been a successful merchant, a gallant soldier, and one of the most popular of the sons of Assisi. But while seeking military service and adventure, he had endured a protracted sickness; and when upon his recovery and return, his friends gathered at one of the gates of Assisi to welcome him, and merrily placed in his hand the sceptre of frolic, to their astonishment he remained grave in the midst of their festivities, as one not of them, and suddenly breaking loose from his companions (so the story runs) he proceeded to the church, and before its high altar there was witnessed a wedding which has been celebrated by Italy's great poet, and is still represented in the same cathedral by Giotto's art; and at the wedding of St. Francis the name of the bride was poverty. The solemn espousal of poverty by this youth of Assisi was no meaningless ceremony. To him the vow of his soul before that high altar meant emptied coffers, surrender of

* From "Facts and Forces," By Rev. Newman Smyth, a volume of twenty sermons the chief object of which is to show that the principles of Christianity are applicable to the social and political problems which perplex this generation; and that the Christian citizen of to-day can find in the teachings of Christ guidance for his life among men which will lead him so to act as to attract others to the same source of wisdom, where they will find the solution of the difficulties which political economists and politicians have given up. A deeply thoughtful, and practical volume of timely value. Pp. 267; Price $1.50. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons. 745 Broadway, New York.

Comayagua, a Town in Honduras, Central America. (See page 661.)

the comforts of life, patient endurance of evil, and even self-torture, and withal a love of all created things so joyous and overflowing that as he wandered among the mountains, or over the plains of Italy, he would speak of the beasts of the field as his brethren, and the twittering swallows as his little sisters. The vow of self-sacrifice, and his espousal of poverty meant the unflinching prosecution of a work of moral purification for which Europe for at least two generations was better.

We read the story of St. Francis and smile, and put it from us as a pleasing bit of mediævalism. Such singular sacrifice might have place and fitness in that odd mosaic of mediæval manners and life. It would not be in accordance with the sensible and soberer coloring of real life in this most prosaic of the centuries. Should the life of St. Francis be held up in the pulpit as an example for us, a comfortable and well-dressed modern congregation would regard it as a romantic picture, and we should not think of imitating the visionary sainthood and unnatural asceticism of those spiritual heroes and heroines of the Middle Ages.

Nevertheless what do these words of our master, (Mark 10:21) concerning losing our life, and taking up the Cross, mean to us? Why did Jesus ask of that young Israelite a sacrifice seemingly so unnecessary? And who then can be saved? We may put the story of St. Francis from us as an idle tale; but here for us all to look upon in the Gospels is this picture of the one great requirement; and is that only as a mediæval painting to us? How shall we catch the spirit of it, in our lives, amid present surroundings, reproduce what the Lord would have us imitate in that commandment?

A VOLUNTEER GUARDIAN.

(See Illustration on page 669.)

THERE are few scenes more melancholy than that of a home after an auction sale, when the old rooms, dear from tender associations, are despoiled of their furniture. In such a scene a little boy of some four years old was standing, trying to understand what the desolation meant. He was an orphan. Only five years before that day his father and mother had begun married life in that house. The father now lay in a drunkard's grave, and the beautiful young mother had died broken-hearted. The child was disturbed by the voice of a servant, who called Henry, Henry, and took him into a room where three gentlemen stood talking. One was the physician who had been his mother's medical attendant, another was a lawyer, though the boy did not know that at the time; and the third was a stranger, whom he had never seen before.

"This is the child, Mr. Gordon," said the physician, taking Henry by the hand and leading him up to the stranger.

"Ah, a boy, is it?" said the burly man, looking down at him as if he would not be surprised if the "it" had been a kitten or a monkey. "What is your name, boy?" he asked with a suddenness that startled the child.

The boy told him.

"Umph! glad of that. She did well to give you your grandfather's name instead of your father's. Come here; let me look at you."

Mr. Gordon took the boy to the uncurtained window, and gazed earnestly at every feature. "Her eyes and hair," he said as if to himself; "his mouth and chin, composite character, I expect." He released the boy, and, turning to the lawyer, said bluntly, "Well, what did you think of doing with him?"

"Oh, I am not responsible," was the reply; "I can do nothing with him. He has not a single relative in the world so far as I know, and the sale did not realize enough to pay the debts."

"If he were a dog or a pony," said Gordon, musing, "I suppose somebody would take care of him and feed him and bring him up, but a boy! What can be done with a boy? Who should you say, as a lawyer now, might be said to be his owner?"

"That is the difficulty: their is no one to acknowledge ownership."

"Suppose I were to take possession of him, as I might of a stray dog, you think there would be no one to dispute my title?"

"No: and that would be a good solution of the difficulty."

"I don't know that. Why should an old bachelor like I am undertake to rear another man's child? Lots of worry and anxiety and no profit in prospect. Well, I have a fancy to do it. I have done many foolish things in my time but I guess this is about the silliest. But you must make out some sort of a title for me. Pity he was not put in the auction sale, then I could have had a regular bill of him. Just write out the circumstances, and say that he is made over to me in default of any other claimants, and make the doctor here a witness."

The laywer being too glad to get rid of an embarrassing charge, humored the eccentric man's wish and wrote a brief sketch of the transaction. The servant was called in again and bidden to get the child's clothes together, and dress him to go out. He was soon ready and in a state of wonder and desolation, trotted off with his protector.

They went to some queer bachelor rooms, and as they entered them Henry was conscious of a surprising change in Mr. Gordon's demeanor. No sooner was the door closed than he was taken up in the strong man's arms and kissed and hugged and addressed in words of ardent affection. The child would have been less surprised if Mr. Gordon had been metamorphosed into an ogre. He could not but wonder at its cause. His friend, however, made no explanation, but leaving him in the care of his landlady went out. He returned before night, and taking the child with him, went to a house at a short distance, which Henry afterward found was the parsonage, where Mr. Gordon confided him to the care of a kindly matronly lady, whom Henry in after years loved with all his heart.

The parsonage was his home for five years after that introduction. He grew up there in quiet happiness, learning the rudiments o education under the tuition of the good clergyman and his wife, and feeling toward them the affection of a son. Of Mr. Gordon he saw nothing, and questions about him were the only ones that the clergyman would not answer. One day, however, the clergyman did speak of him.

"Henry," he said, "your guardian has decided to send you to boarding-school."

"Do you mean Mr. Gordon, Sir?" Henry asked.

"Yes he is your guardian. He has sent a sum of money to fit you out, and you are to go to-morrow. I have done all I can to train you up in the fear and love of God; now you will be thrown among temptations, and I beg of you to remember what I have taught you, pray continually to God for help, and I hope you may be kept unspotted from the world."

The change from the pleasant parsonage was somewhat painful for a time, but the boy grew cheerful among his boyish associates, and was happy. His boarding-school life covered nearly five years, and still he heard nothing from Mr. Gordon. Henry often wondered about him, and tried to solve the mystery of his blunt, almost brutal, behaviour at their first interview, and the subsequent outburst of affection. Of the two dispositions he inferred that the latter had been the genuine one for he had been lavishly supplied with money, and that with his expenses must have entailed a considerable outlay which his eccentric benefactor had defrayed. Still, he wondered that he never came to see him or wrote to him. The last week of the term came, and Henry knew nothing of what his future was to be, but he had learned to trust in God, who had given him so generous a friend hitherto, and he was not dismayed.

The solution of the mystery came at last. One morning he received a brief note from his friend, the clergyman, saying that Mr. Gordon proposed to visit him that day, and wished Henry to be prepared to go away with him. The news threw the lad into a flutter of excitement, and he watched eagerly for this long expected arrival. He happened to be looking from a window when he saw a hack drive up with the well remembered face visible within. He was at the door in a moment, almost before the servant could open it, and met Mr. Gordon as he alighted. That gentleman dropped his bag on the sidewalk, and, taking hold of the boy, directed the same keen, inquiring gaze on his features that Henry remembered him doing ten years before. He was satisfied apparently, for he shook him heartly by the hand and smiled upon him.

A Long Expected Meeting.

"Glad to see me, eh, Henry?" he said. "Well, that is a change for me. I've heard of you often though I have not shown myself. Now go and get ready to come away while I see the principal. We will go to the hotel to-night and decide what we will do next."

That night Mr. Gordon told the boy his story. Henry's mother had been the love of his boyhood, and it was his dearest wish as he grew to manhood to make her his wife. But she had become infatuated with the man whom she afterwards married. "He was your father, my boy" said Mr. Gordon, "so I will not say what my opinion about him is; besides he is dead and gone now, and you belong to me. Well, trouble came, and when I heard that her child was homeless I made up my mind to befriend you for her sake. I am an odd man, and am always doing some silly thing, but I think I was right in that. It depends on you whether I ever regret it."

Mr. Gordon never did regret that act of kindness. Finding that the boy had set his heart on the work of preaching the gospel, he sent him to college, and had the pleasure of seeing him become a useful and honored minister of Christ. Mr. Gordon himself, with all his respect for religion and for clergymen, knew nothing of practical religion, but under Henry's preaching his eyes were opened, and he earnestly sought and found salvation.

"You have been the greatest blessing of my life," he said to Henry, as the latter stood beside his bed in his last moments. "But for you I should have been going into utter darkness instead of into the light of life. You have often spoken of what you owe me, I owe you my own self, my very soul. God bless you."

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 654.)

Invitation to Special Work in Germany—Longing to be a Missionary in India—Announces his Intended Visit to Germany—His Congregation Quite Willing—Another Day School for Poor Children—Difficulty about a Passport—Sees Paris but does not Care for It—Snowed up on the Journey—Instructs Ministers—A Story of a Meek Wife and a Midnight Supper.

JANUARY 17, 1835. To-day brother Groves arrived from the East Indies. One reason of his coming to England is, to go to Germany to obtain missionary brethren for the East Indies, having reason to believe that he will find them there: and he asked me, on account of my acquaintance with the language, to accompany him, that thus, through me, he may be enabled to judge about the state of the brethren, and to communicate to them what he thinks needful for them to know. This is a most important work. May the Lord direct me in this matter, and make me to act according to His will! I received again to-day, after prayer, respecting the funds, £10 for the Scriptural Knowledge Institution.

January 21. Received, in answer to prayer, from an unexpected quarter, £5 for the Scriptural Knowledge Institution. The Lord pours in, whilst we seek to pour out. For during the past week, merely among the poor, in going from house to house, fifty-eight copies of the Scriptures were sold at reduced prices, the going on with which is most important, but will require much more means than we have had.

January 28. I have, for these several days, again prayed much to ascertain whether the Lord will have me to go as a missionary to the East Indies, and I am most willing to go if He will use me in this way.

January 29. I have been greatly stirred up to pray about going to Calcutta as a missionary. May the Lord guide me in this matter! [After all my repeated and earnest prayer in the commencement of 1835, and willingness on my part to go, if it were the Lord's will, still He did not send me.]

February 4. I have been praying repeatedly and earnestly of late respecting my journey to the Continent. I desire to go, or not to go, just as the Lord will have it to be. May He graciously direct me! I feel the same about going to India. As a means to ascertain the Lord's will, I have been reading about the Hindoos, that I may know more clearly the state in which they are. May the Lord in mercy stir me up to care more about their state, whether it be His will that I should labor personally among them or not.

February 7. I was again tempted to disbelieve the faithfulness of the Lord, and though I was not miserable, still I was not so fully resting upon the Lord that I could triumph with joy. It was but one hour after when the Lord gave me another proof of His faithful love. A Christian lady at Ilfracombe had been from home for some time, and on her return she brought from the sisters of the Lord with whom she had been staying, five sovereigns ($25) for us, with these words written in the paper: "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink."

February 10. The Lord enabled me to rise early in the morning and to go to our usual prayer-meeting, where I read, spoke and prayed. Afterwards I wrote four letters, expounding the Scriptures at home, and attended the meeting again in the evening.

February 11. I attended the two meetings as usual, preached in the evening, and did my other work besides.

February 16. I mentioned this evening, before the church at Bethesda, as also on the 13th, before the church at Gideon, that I see it the Lord's will to go to the Continent, for the sake of assisting brother Groves by my knowledge of the German language, in conferring with those who may desire to go out as missionaries. There is not one believer amongst us who sees any objection to it, and several have remarked that it seems to be of the Lord, and that thus we could help, as churches, in the going forth as missionaries. This is very comforting to me, as the Lord confirms me still more, through this unanimity, in its being His will that I should go.

February 25. In the name of the Lord, and in dependence upon Him alone for support, we have established a fifth day-school for poor children, which to-day has been opened. We have now two boys' and three girls' schools.

February 26. I left Bristol for the Continent.

February 27. London. This morning I went to the Alien Office for my passport. On entering the office I saw a printed paper, in which it is stated that every alien neglecting to renew, every six months, his certificate of residence, which he receives on depositing his passport, subjects himself to a penalty of £50, or imprisonment. This law I have ignorantly broken ever since I left London in 1829. It appeared to me much better to confess at once that I had ignorantly done so, than now wilfully break it; trusting in the Lord as it regarded the consequences of the step. I did so, and the Lord inclined the heart of the officer with whom I had to do, to pass over my non-compliance with the law, on account of my having broken it ignorantly. Having obtained my passport, I found an unexpected difficulty in the Prussian ambassador refusing to sign it, as it did not contain a description of my person, and therefore I needed to prove that I was the individual spoken of in the passport. This difficulty was not removed for three days, when, after earnest prayer, through a paper signed by some citizens of London, to whom I am known, the ambassador was satisfied. This very difficulty, when once the Lord had removed it, afforded me cause for thanksgiving; for I now obtained a new passport, worded in such a way that, should I ever need it, will prevent similar difficulties.

March 3. This evening I preached comfortably in John Street Chapel, Bedford Row, for brother Evans. I never preached in any place where I so much felt that he who statedly ministers was more worthy than myself. This feeling led me to earnest prayer, and the Lord heard and assisted me.

March 7. Dover. Last evening I left London and arrived here this morning. The Lord enabled me to confess Him before my fellow passengers. I have had a good deal of prayer and reading the Word in quietness, though staying in an hotel.

March 8. I preached this morning and evening comfortably in one of the chapels at Dover.

March 9. All this day, too, we have been obliged to remain at Dover, the sea being so rough that no packet sailed. I spent the day in writing letters, in reading the Word, and in prayer. We depend entirely upon the Lord as it regards our movements. This evening we asked the Lord twice, unitedly, that He would be pleased to calm the wind and the waves, and I feel safe in leaving the matter with Him.

March 10. The Lord heard our prayer. We awoke early in the morning, and found the wind comparatively calm. We left the hotel before break of day, to go to the packet. All being in great hurry, on our way toward the sea I was separated from brothers G. and Y. I now lifted up my heart to the Lord, as He generally helps me to do on such occasions, to direct my steps toward the boat which went out to meet the packet, and I found it almost immediately. We had, in answer to prayer, a good passage. At Calais we obtained our passports, luggage out of the custom house, and places in the diligence without difficulty, and left a little after ten in the morning for Paris. What a blessed thing it is, in all such matters to have a Father to go to for help! What a different thing also, to travel in the service of the Lord Jesus, from what it is to travel in the service of the flesh!

March 11. Paris. We arrived here about ten this evening. March 12. To-day we went about our passports, and I saw thus a good deal of the best part of Paris. Blessed be God, my heart is above these things! If ten years ago, when my poor foolish heart was full of Paris, I had come here, how should I have been taken up with these palaces, etc.; but now I look at these things, and my heart does not care at all about them. What a difference grace makes! There were few people, perhaps, more passionately fond of travelling, and seeing fresh places, and new scenes, than myself; but now since I have seen beauty in the Lord Jesus, I have lost my taste for these things.

March 13. We again found difficulty in obtaining our passport, arising probably from a mistake of the police officers. May the Lord order this matter so that it shall be for our real welfare! March 14. By the help of the Lord we obtained our passports, and brother Groves and I took our places in the Malle Poste for Strasburg, to leave to-morrow evening. Brother Y. intends to remain here a few days on account of his health.

March 15. This morning I preached in a little chapel in Palais Royal. We left Paris this evening at six—March 17. From six o'clock in the evening of the 15th, till this afternoon at half-past one, when we arrived at Strasburg, we were continually shut up in the Malle Poste, with the exception of yesterday morning about seven, and last night about eleven, when we were allowed half an hour for our meals. I had refreshing communion with my beloved brother. This quickest of all conveyances in France carries only two passengers, and we were thus able freely to converse and to pray together, which was refreshing indeed. Though we had travelled forty-four hours, yet as we had soon finished our business at Strasburg, we left this evening for Basle, trusting in the Lord for strength for the third night's travelling. A little after we had started, we stuck fast in a new road. I lifted up my heart to the Lord, and we were soon delivered, otherwise the circumstance, in a cold night, and during a fall of snow, would have been trying, as we had to get out of the mail. I now found myself again, after six years, amidst fellow-passengers who spoke my native language; alas! they spoke not for Christ.

March 18. This afternoon we arrived at Basle, where we were very kindly received by the brethren. March 23.—Basle. These six days we have received great kindness from the brethren. The Lord has given me an opportunity of bringing before several who are already engaged in the ministry of the Word, and before many who intend to give themselves to this work, many important truths, so that in these opportunities I have been richly repaid for the journey. This morning I conversed also with three brethren, journeymen, who have a desire to give themselves to missionary work, but nothing could be decided now. I awoke very faint, but have been mercifully helped through the work. Brother Groves intends to go to Geneva, and I to Tubingen, in order to become acquainted with a brother, a student, who is likely to go out with Brother Groves as a tutor to his sons, and to combine with this missionary service.

During my stay at Basle I attended one day a meeting at which a venerable pious clergyman expounded the Greek New Testament to several brethren, who proposed to give themselves to missionary service. The passage to which this dear aged brother had then come, in the original of the New Testament was 1 Peter 3: 1, 2, which, in our English translation, reads thus: "Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the Word, they also may without the Word be won by the conversation of the wives; while they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear." After this aged brother had expounded the passage, he related a circumstance which occurred in his own days, and under his own eyes, at Basle, which has appeared to me most encouraging for those children of God who have unbelieving relatives, and especially for sisters of the Lord who have unbelieving husbands: and which, at the same time, is such a beautiful illustration of 1 Peter 3: 1, 2, that I judge it desirable to insert the narrative of the fact exactly as I remember it.

There lived at Balse an opulent citizen, whose wife was a believer, but he himself feared not the Lord. His practice was to spend his evenings in a wine house, where he would often tarry till eleven, twelve or even one o'clock. On such occasions his wife always used to send the servants to bed, and sat up herself, to await the return of her husband. When at last he came, she used to receive him most kindly, never reproach him in the least, either at the time or afterwards, nor complain at all on account of his late hours, by which she was kept from seasonable rest. Moreover, if it should be needful to assist him in undressing himself, when he had drunk to excess, she would do this also in a very kind and meek way. Thus it went on for a long time. One evening, this gentleman was again, as usual, in a wine-house, and having tarried there with his merry companions till midnight, he said to them: "I bet, that if we go to my house, we shall find my wife sitting up and waiting for me, and she herself will come to the door and receive us very kindly; and if I ask her to prepare us a supper, she will do it at once without the least murmur, or unkind expression or look." His companions in sin did not believe his statement. At last, however, after some more conversation about this strange statement (as it appeared to them), it was agreed that they should all go to see this kind wife. Accordingly they went, and, after they had knocked, found the door immediately opened by the lady herself, and they were all courteously and kindly received by her.

The master of the house asked his wife to prepare supper for them, which she, in the meekest way, at once agreed to do; and, after awhile, supper was served by herself, without the least sign of dissatisfaction or murmur or complaint. Having now prepared all for the company, she retired from the party to her room. When she had left the party, one of the gentlemen said: "What a wicked and cruel man you are, thus to torment so kind a wife." He then took his hat and stick, and without touching a morsel of the supper, went away. Another made a similar remark, and left, without touching the supper. Thus one after another left, till they were all gone without tasting the supper. The master of the house was now left alone, and the Spirit of God brought before him all his dreadful wickedness, and especially his great sin towards his wife; and the party had not left the house half an hour, before he went to his wife's room, requesting her to pray for him, told her that he felt himself a great sinner, and asked her forgiveness for all his behavior towards her. From that time he became a disciple of the Lord Jesus.

Observe here, dear reader, the following points in particular, which I affectionately commend to your consideration: 1. The wife acted in accordance with 1 Peter 3: 1. She kept her place in being in subjection, and the Lord owned it. 2. She reproached not her husband, but meekly and kindly served him when he used to come home. 3. She did not allow the servants to sit up for their master, but sat up herself, thus honoring him as her head and superior, and concealed also, as far as she was able, her husband's shame from the servants. 4. In all probability, a part of those hours, during which she had to sit up, was spent in prayer for her husband, or in reading the Word of God, to gather fresh strength for all the trials connected with her position. 5. Be not discouraged if you have to suffer from unconverted relatives. Perhaps very shortly the Lord may give you the desire of your heart, but in the mean time commend the truth, by manifesting towards them the meekness and kindness of the Lord Jesus Christ.

(To be Continued.)

Light for the Last Days; a New Work on Prophecy. By Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, with two Colored Diagrams, 673 pages. Price $3.50. May be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Rev. G. H. Pember's New Prophetic Work, entitled "Earth's Earliest Ages and Their Connection With Modern Spiritualism and Theosophy," is for sale at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Office. Price $1.50. This volume of 500 pages draws a parallel between our time and the age before the Deluge, showing how closely in spirit and moral tone they resemble each other, and how many of the distinguished features of the earlier age have reappeared among us in modern dress. Thus proving that it fulfils the conditions which were to indicate the time of Christ's Second Advent (Matt. 24: 37-39).

THE HARVEST AND THE LABORERS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for October 30, Matt. 9: 35-38; 10: 1-8. Memory Text, Matt. 10: 8.

Ver. 35. An Evangelistic Tour—The Message Christ Delivered—The Good News of the Kingdom—Long Looked for—The Subjugated Nation Remembering the Glories of David and Solomon—Desiring a Revival of those Times—Christ's Ideal the Theocracy earlier than David—His Beneficent Journeys—Ver. 36. His Pity for the People Lacking Spiritual Food—Perceived their Dissatisfaction with the Ritualistic Teachers—Ver. 37. The Proportion Always Existing—Ver. 38. How to Get it Rectified—Ver. 1. Christ's Great Gift—His Own Power Imparted—Ver. 2. The Disciples or Learners Become Apostles or Messengers—Ver. 5, 6 The First Duty—The Opportunity Afforded to the Chosen Race—Ver. 7. Their Message that of Christ and John—The Most Momentous Ever Proclaimed—Ver. 8. The Mission of all Christians.

Jesus did not know self-interest, therefore, it was no distraction from personal cares and worries for Him to think of others. It was His life to love. He breathed out love just as Saul of Tarsus breathed out threatenings and slaughter. Thus, as He went about the cities and villages on His blessed mission to teach and preach the Gospel of the Kingdom, His teaching and preaching illustrated by the constant healing of the sick and the insane, He could not be untouched by the sight of the multitudes around Him. The sight of a multitude of people affects men in various ways. Some political economists begin to calculate what it would cost to feed them; alarmists compute what amount of power so many would have if banded together in a time of revolution; some study the physiognomy of a crowd. In all these calculations there is no heart, no fellow-feeling. But Jesus "was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad as sheep having

No Shepherd."

They had no real caretaker, and, therefore, their burdens lay heavy on them. David had found the Lord as his Shepherd, therefore he did not want (Ps. 23: 1); he did not faint. Men are to pray always and not to faint (Luke 18: 1); but to pray so that the burden passes from them on to One who wills to bear it for them. The Jews, in our Lord's day, had shepherds, but God said of them, "Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! Should not the shepherds feed the flocks? Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, ye kill them that are fed; but ye feed not the flock. The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty, have ye ruled them. And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd" (Ezek. 34: 2-5). The Levites fulfilled their ordinary round of duties, but the souls of men were not saved, there was no work of God upon the people, and these formal shepherds counted for nothing with God! O, how awful is an unspiritual, and, therefore, an unfruitful ministry! "Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I am against the shepherds; and I will require My flock at their hands" (Ezek. 34: 10).

"Then saith He unto His disciples, the harvest truly is plenteous, but the Laborers are few;

pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth laborers into His harvest." "The harvest truly is plenteous"—souls which need salvation are everywhere. Not only do Asia and Africa teem with them, not only does Roman Catholic, infidel, and Mahomedan Europe present a vast field of labor, but even in the countries supposed to be evangelical, even in England, America, and Protestant Germany, how few there are who ever profess to be saved, and of those, Oh! how few are living as new creatures in Christ Jesus! The field is vast enough, indeed, the little handful of believers is so small, such a "little flock," but thank God, we have the promise that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against" us, that it is our "Father's good pleasure that gives (us) the kingdom" (Matt. 16: 18; Luke 12: 32).

God Wants Laborers, not Amateurs.

And He does not tell us to seek laborers, but to pray for them; He will choose them. We are to deal with Him, and He will deal with them. He prepared Moses, Daniel, Paul and others for their work, and He will find means to prepare those whom He will signally use. How few of those who are turned out from our theological colleges and universities are men really sent of God, while He has his Moodys and others, prepared by Himself, doing mighty work. What would be the issue if every true servant of God recognized the call to pray in real faith that God would send forth laborers into His harvest? The China Inland Mission have been praying for one hundred more this year for China, and God is sending them fast; the mission is in apostolic lines, and God owns this walking in His ways. There are numbers of people who offer themselves for the work of God, who are not God's laborers at all. Some have an idea that they will gain in worldly position if they give up their occupation and work for God; some think it is a much pleasanter life, and that they will escape many crosses and trials by giving themselves exclusively to the work of winning souls; some like to and to tell us how much they have given up for the work of the Master. All these are self-seekers and mere amateurs; they feed themselves, and they feed not the flock. If any man comes into the work of the Lord without feeling himself utterly unworthy, he is not fit for his post. If any one thinks, like Peter, that he has done a great thing in giving up all (Matt. 19: 27), let him know that God has done a much greater thing in accepting such an unworthy offering. The privilege of giving up all for God is its own reward. There is no work in the universe of God so great as the work of winning souls.

Make Themselves Martyrs,

When Jesus "had called unto Him His twelve disciples, He gave them power (authority) against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease." This authority was confirmed by Christ before He ascended into heaven (Mark 16: 17-18), and it has never been withdrawn. In the days of primitive Christianity,

The Credentials of God's Laborers were, not the honors they had gained at the university, but the power they had with God. Stephen's credentials were his unanswerable words, "the wisdom and the spirit by which he spoke," his angelic countenance, and "the great wonders and miracles" which he did among the people. It was much the same with Paul, as well as with Peter, and the rest of the twelve. Why have we departed from the order of these early days, and put book learning in the place of the power and presence of God? Jesus was wholly the living example of all which He taught. Having exhorted His disciples to pray for laborers, "He went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, He called unto Him His disciples, and of them He chose twelve," "that they should be with Him, and that He might send them forth to preach" (Mark 3: 14). His first command to them was: "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." A good rule for all evangelists. God's plan is, (Ezek. 9: 6). The Lord Jesus ordained "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke 24: 47). If God's people, or those who profess to be so, are brought into vital union with God, then there is a nucleus for His work, a little fold into which the lost sheep may be gathered. If we bring recently unsaved ones into a dead church, they catch the infection, and then spiritual life wanes, unless they wake the church into life.

"Begin at My Sanctuary"

Christ's next direction was in relation to the message, "And as ye go, preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand." They were to make men see that they could no longer say, "The vision that he seeth is for many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off" (Ezek. 12:27). They were to show the imminence of all they said. They brought a message from God to-day. "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." God presses men to an and unless His laborers do so too, they are not delivering God's message. Whenever a man or woman is sent of God with a message from Him, "the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven" is with the preaching (1. Pet. 1: 12), and men will feel that God is waiting for an answer. With this preaching of the kingdom, this bold assertion of the claims of Christ the King, His laborers are commanded, "heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, (but the latter clause was not repeated after the resurrection Mark 16: 17, 18), cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give." In no single passage of Scripture have these commandments been reversed, and as surely as God's laborers are called to preach, so surely are they called to heal in the name of the Lord; it is our shameful unbelief that hinders the Lord in His working, "He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief," were the sad words about Nazareth. Well might He say the same of England now!

Immediate Decision,

Jesus called His first laborers to a life of faith, "Get you no gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses; no wallet for your journey, neither two coats, nor shoes, nor staff; for the laborer is worthy of his food" (R.V.). If they were to teach a life of faith, they must exemplify it; and in so doing, they would learn the wondrous tenderness of their heavenly Father's care. Those who really live a life of faith are the people on earth most full of praise; the of God's provision for them are so frequent and so striking! But nothing is more painful than an imitation of faith, which results in begging under the guise of faith. If a man beg, let him beg honestly, only let no one call begging faith. When a man comes and tells you of the work he is doing, and how poor he is, and that he lives by faith, and hints that he has nowhere to stay, it is only a covert way of begging; it would be far better for him to say honestly, "I am in need, can you lodge me, or can you give me something?" When a man is sent as God's messenger to a place, God will not leave him uncared for, but he will have to inquire, not who will take him in, but which of the many who desire to lodge him is "worthy." God wills that His children should lodge with those who are of good report. If a man has got wrong in his life, and the thing is not cleared up, he is the man of all others who is most forward to lodge and make friends with any messenger of God who comes to the place where he lives. He wants to assert his position in this way, and make use of the man of God for his own ends, and God's Children have to Beware.

Sweet Surprises

"Once having found a lodging place, God's laborer is to remain there, whether his host is poor or rich, whether the bed he sleeps on is soft or hard, whether the fare is to his taste or not. "Go not from house to house." And the messenger of God comes in the name of the Lord, and His peace must come on the house where he enters; he is meant to bring a blessing to it, and he must say in God's name, believing that what he says is coming to pass, "Peace be to this house." "If the house be worthy," if there be receptivity there, "if the Son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it; if not, it shall turn to you again." Such is the outfit such is the charge, for the laborers for whom we are taught to pray. O, God, send speedily such laborers into Thine harvests!

OH, FOR A PERFECT TRUST!

ISAIAH xxi 3. PHILIP. iv. 6, 7

Oh! for the peace of a perfect trust,
My loving God, in Thee;
Unwavering faith, that never doubts
Thou choosest best for me.

Best, though my plans be all upset;
Best, though the way be rough;
Best, though my earthly store be scant;
In Thee I have enough.

Best, though my health and strength be gone.
Though weary days be mine,
Shut out from much that others have;
Not my will, Lord, but Thine!

And even though disappointments come,
They too are best for me.
To wean me from this changing world,
And lead me nearer Thee.

Oh! for the peace of a perfect trust
That looks away from all;
That sees Thy hand in everything,
In great events or small;

That hears Thy voice—a Father's voice—.
Directing for the best:—
Oh! for the peace of a perfect trust,
A heart with Thee at rest!

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

FOUR POPULAR

Scripture Wall Scrolls

☞The following Text Scrolls are having a wide circulation and a blessed influence. Every household should have one of these daily reminders in each bedroom. In Hospitals, Railroad Stations, and places of public concourse these comforters are especially useful and influential. Copies mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price.

WORDS OF COMFORT AND CONSOLATION. 31 leaves. Recently published. 75 cents.

HEAVENLY SUNSHINE. Texts and Hymns for a month and special occasions. 39 leaves. Has a very large sale. $1.00.

THE MESSAGE BEARER. By the compiler of "Heavenly Sunshine." 38 leaves. Widely known. $1.00.

PRAYER AND PRECEPT. FOR EVERY DAY OF THE MONTH. Twenty thousand have been sold. 75 cents.

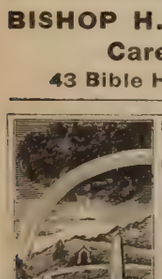
☞AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY COUNTY. TERMS LIBERAL. APPLY AT ONCE.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 and 3 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.



The BOW in the CLOUD
Or WORDS of COMFORT
For those in Sickness, Sorrow and the varied Afflictions of Life. By 200 best Authors, Prose and Poetry, Edited by J. Sanderson, D.D. A Home Treasury and Gift Book of rare excellence. 450 Pages, $1.75.
E. B. TREAT, Pub., N. Y.

FOUR HUNDRED
Choice Recitations and Readings bound in handsome lithograph cover, mailed to any address for 30 cts. Satisfaction guaranteed. J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers, P.O. Box, 2767, 57 Rose St., New York.

HOUSE BUILT FREE FOR EVERY canvasser who takes a given number of subscriptions for our grand, new book "Beautiful Homes." For full particulars and picture of house address Agents Dept., of the Co-Operative Building Plan Ass'n, 62 Broadway, New York

Lactated Food

The Mother's Favorite

Send for our Circular entitled
"LETTERS from MOTHERS," which contains a large number of letters, many of which say the life of their baby was saved by the use of LACTATED FOOD.

Read these letters and, if you wish, write to the mothers and get their opinion—every one will gladly answer.

If your baby is not hearty and robust try it.

LACTATED FOOD

Is also a Perfect Nutrient for INVALIDS, in either chronic or acute cases. Weak stomachs always retain and relish it. Thousands of Physicians recommend it as the best of all prepared foods. Unequalled in DYSPEPSIA.

150 MEALS for an INFANT for $1.00.
Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

LIVE COALS,
By T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

Published in one volume of 678 Large Octavo Pages burning with eloquence, divided into 76 Telling Chapters on as many different subjects of absorbing interest. Also 16 Full Page Illustrations designed by eminent artists and a Life-Like Frontispiece of the author, and 40 Pages devoted to his life and work brought down to date. Price $2.00 postpaid.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE. Send for descriptive circulars, liberal terms, testimonials, etc.
WILBUR B. KETCHAM, Publisher, 71 Bible House, N.Y.

SEDGWICK STEEL WIRE FENCE.

The best Farm, Garden, Poultry Yard, Lawn, School Lot, Park and Cemetery Fences and Gates. Perfect Automatic Gate. Cheapest and Neatest Iron Fences. Iron and wire Summer Houses, Lawn Furniture, and other wire work. Best Wire Stretcher and Plier. Ask dealers in hardware, or address, SEDGWICK BROS., RICHMOND, IND.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES—(avoid Agents and Dealers whose profits and expenses double the cost on every Piano they sell) and send this First-Class UPRIGHT Cabinet GEM 7⅓ Octave Rosewood Piano, Warranted 6 years, for $193! We send it—with Beautiful Cover and Stool—for Trial in your own Home before you buy. Send for circulars to Marchal & Smith, 235 East 21st St., N. Y.

CATALOGUE of USEFUL, POPULAR and HUMOROUS Books sold at Low Prices. Mailed to any address free by
J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
57 Rose St., New York.

AGENTS WANTED to Sell Our HOLIDAY BOOKS & GAMES
$75 per week to workers. Send for Circulars and liberal terms. Address, American Publishing Co., HARTFORD, BOSTON, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS or CINCINNATI.

TRIUMPHANT SONGS

For Sunday Schools
By E. O. EXCELL
AND
Rev. SAM. P. JONES.

Used by them in all their Meetings. Contains the famous solos sung by E. O. EXCELL. This book was used at the International S. S. Convention held at Chicago. Price, 35c. per copy; $3.60 per dozen; $30.00 per hundred. Sample by mail on receipt of price. Address E. O. EXCELL, Pub., 148 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

This Magazine portrays American thought and life from ocean to ocean, is filled with pure high-class literature, and can be safely welcomed in any family circle.

PRICE 25c. OR $3 A YEAR BY MAIL.

Sample Copy of current number mailed upon receipt of 25 cts.; back numbers, 15 cts.

Premium List with either.

Address:
The American Magazine Co., Publishers,
130 & 132 Pearl St., N. Y.

GET UP CLUBS.

The Two Best Sunday School Singing Books in the Field.

JOYFUL LAYS. $30 per 100 Copies. 35 cts. each by Mail.
GLAD REFRAIN. $25 per 100 Copies; 30 cts. each by Mail.

☞ Sent for examination on receipt of price. Specimen Pages free.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

A NEW WALL ROLL.

DAILY COMFORT IN FOUR-FOLD LINKS, PRAYER, PROMISE, PRECEPT, PRAISE.

This beautiful New Wall Roll of Scripture Texts is commended for use in Homes, Hospitals, Halls, Sunday School Rooms and other places where striking Scripture Texts arranged with much careful thought, are apt to give comfort, or awaken interest in sacred truth. Particular attention is called to the arrangement of the texts and to the very clear type in which they are printed.

31 Sheets, for a full month, Mounted on Roller, 75c.

Sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of price. Address,
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

NIAGARA FALLS SEMINARY
For Young Ladies.

Combines a collegiate education with the advantages of a refined and elegant Christian home, entirely unsectarian. Morals and religion carefully guarded. Languages and classical music, specialties. Peculiar attractions of this first-class institution indicated in circular. Re-opens Sept. 13. Apply to Mrs. Irvine, Principal, Niagara Falls, Ontario. Railroad fare refunded to students coming over 100 miles.

WORK FOR ALL. $30 a week and expenses paid. Valuable outfit and particulars free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

FLORIDA. Escape sickness and cold. Three tourist hotels, college, refined northern society. High, healthful pine land. No swamps. Orange groves, houses and lands for sale. De Land, Box 1887, N. Y.

COMFORT OF THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM.
A GIFT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

What can you find more beautiful and appropriate as a remembrance for your friend or your Sunday School Class, than our new picture illustrating the Twenty-Third Psalm? It is an exquisitely colored card with the central figure a Shepherd leading his flock by the still waters; the halo around his head reminding all of the Great Shepherd of whom David wrote. The illuminated text is in dark blue and gold upon adelicately tinted background, and in choice lettering, which can be distinctly read. This picture (10x10) has the advantage of needing no frame, having a heavy gold border; it is a gem of art, has just been published, and is obtainable only through our house. Safely packed, we send it on receipt of Twenty-five Cents.

LARGE PROFIT TO AGENTS.

SPECIAL OFFER—Send back this advertisement and fifty cents, within thirty days, and we will forward three sample copies, or seven for One Dollar. Now is the time to work. Lower prices for larger orders.
WM. P. BRECK & CO., 59 John Street, New York.

FALL DRESS GO AND VELVET

James M'Creery &

will make this week a very impor fering of BLACK and SEAL
FANCY VELVETS and PLUSH
WRAPS or Rich Dress Carnit
Which they cordially invite an earl nation.

Attention is called also to the assortment of FALL DRESS COC

The following are specially note

Two lines Stripe and Check C
44 inches wide, at 60 cents; wort

Also, Three lines, Check and Suitings, 56 inches wide, at 75 worth $1.25.

ORDERS BY MAIL } from any part of the try will receive and prompt attent

James M'Creery &
Broadway and 11th St., New

The Lord & Ta
Black S

A pure silk that will as black silk used to we to 50 years ago. Sen the little book "Why."

Lord & Tay

Broadway & Twentieth St.

BEAUTIF WOME!
In the United States, and England we "GOOD SEN
CORSET WA
THOUSANDS NOW
BEST FOR HE Economy and Be Buttons at front of Clasps
☞Be sure your stamped "Good S SOLD BY LEADING RET
everywhere. Send for FERRIS BROS., Man
341 Broadway, NEW

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIEC CENTS.
duce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Or Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces N full size, finely printed. Gems from the late Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. P stag taken.
Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., N

NATURE'S RI FOR Disordered Stom
Impaired Dige
Constipated

WARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

A Remedy which quickly charms
The infant in the mother's arms,
While drooping age will strive to drain
Each drop the goblet does contain.
This EFFERVESCING SELTZE
A blessing proves to me and mine.

AGENTS WANTED (Samples F DR. SCOTT'S beautiful Corsets, Brushes, Belts, Etc. No risk, qu Territory given. Satisfaction guaranteed.
DR. SCOTT, 843 Broadway, New

WARREN'S FEATHERBONE Dress S
Made in thr thread, cloth, and satin covered. For sale eve

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. X., No. 43. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, OCT. 27, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PICTURES OF AN EXPEDITION IN MOROCCO AND OF A GROUP OF MOORISH LEPERS.

FORGIVENESS BEFORE SUNSET. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

Alone in Uganda—A Living Concordance—Patriotism in a Police Court—An Unexpected Calamity—Thirty-three Years of Misery, etc.

PORTRAIT OF MR. CHARLES HERALD, the Chicago Evangelist.

THE VISION OF THE SEVEN SEALS. By Rev. M. Baxter.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Democratic Feuds in New York—Starvation Riots in London, etc.

WALKING IN DARKNESS. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: South Americans Saved in Paris.—Mr. Balfour's Principles. (Illust'd.)

PICTURE OF COOPER UNION IN NEW YORK.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. By George Muller. (Continued.)

CONFESSING CHRIST. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

The Crisis in Morocco—The British Expedition—A Group of Moorish Lepers.

THE CRISIS IN MOROCCO.

Dimensions, History and Populations of the Country—Its Present Condition—The Berber Tribes—Their Early Christian Influence—How the Light was Extinguished—The Pirates of Tunis—The "Drying up of the Euphrates"—Inauguration of the Gospel Mission to the Moors—Rev. N. Hall's Visit to Moorish Prisons—What Rev. Mr. Macintosh Says about the Serpent-Charmers, Sorcerers, and Story-Tellers at the Fairs--The PresentPolicy and Attitude of the Sultan of Morocco towards Christians—Instances of Enlightenment—A Group of Lepers Begging on the Road.

THE little known country of Morocco has suddenly sprung into prominence as a question of European importance. The Sultan of that country is either dead or at the point of death. During the past few weeks his death has been several times announced by cable, but has each time been contradicted. His illness, however, is so serious as to render his death at any time probable. He has insisted on making his favorite son his heir and as he is a child, France, Spain and Italy are struggling to secure control of the Regency which must govern the country until he attains maturity, and complications are likely to arise out of this rivalry.

National History.

Morocco is the largest of the Barbary States, and is situated in the northwest of Africa, its most northern point being immediately opposite the famous rock of Gibraltar. The Empire, which is an absolute monarchy, consists of the Kingdom of Fez and Morocco, to the north of the Atlas Mountains, and several territories to the south, ruled for the most part by their own chiefs, with only the scantiest possible reference to the authority of the Sultan of Morocco. It consists of about 314,000 square miles, or about two and a half times more than the area of Great Britain and Ireland. Its population is variously estimated at from 5,000,000 to 8,000,000. In their features and complexion the Moors, as the native population are called, have a strong eastern cast, and are evidently not of pure Negro descent, but a mixture of Arab and African races. They travel much as merchants, are rigid Mohammedans, and use the Arabic language in their ordinary intercourse with each other, as well as in their religious exercises. To the influence of the Moors must be attributed the extensive spread of Mohammedanism in various parts of Western Africa, for they are in the habit of forcing their religious dogmas on all over whom they have authority.

Besides the Moors the country is inhabited by several widely differing races, European, Berbers, Arabs, negroes, and every degree of intermixture between these races. The Moors are, of course, the dominant race, and number about 3,000,000; the Berbers, or real Aborigines, are next in order, and about equally numerous: then come the Arabs and Jews; whilst the number of Christians residing in the empire is small, and composed chiefly of Spaniards.

The City of Morocco was founded in 1072, and reached the height of its prosperity in the thirteenth century. Since that time it has been rapidly decaying, like most of the other great cities in the Empire, and is now half in ruins. Leo Africanus, who visited and described the Empire of Morocco three and a half centuries ago, presents a picture of its condition which, contrasted with the existing state of things, shows how steadily the prosperity of the Empire has decreased, and how melancholy is the decay which has overtaken it.

The Most Interesting Section of the population is that composed of the Berber tribes. Prior to the Arab invasions of the seventh century, prior to the Vandal invasions of the fifth, prior to the still earlier Roman conquest, these races occupied the land as their own, and they occupy it still. They are of Semitic origin, spread all across North Africa, from the Atlantic coast to the shores of Tunis and Tripoli, dwelling in the vales, and on the sides of the greater and lesser Atlas ranges especially, but extending also to the plains and even to the Mediteranean shores. They are decidedly superior to the other inhabitants of the country in intelligence, industry and general activity. They are extremely independent in character, and have always proved hard to conquer.

In the early centuries of our era

The Berber Tribes

were Christianized, and from the days of Tertullian to those of Augustine, the Church of Northern Africa occupied an important and influential position; underwent many persecutions, and furnished some recruits to the noble army of martyrs. But the Vandal invasion in the fifth century, and the Saracenic conquest of the seventh, extinguished the light of Christianity over Northern Africa, and the great Arab immigration of the eleventh century drove the Berber race up into their mountain strongholds. For long centuries, thenceforth the history of the Berbers is one unbroken series of wars and fightings rebellions and massacres.

In the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, the Moors, driven out of Spain, settled in Morocco and Algiers, and began to revenge themselves on their persecutors by piracy. Gradually they and the still more audacious pirates of Tunis became the scourges of European commerce, preying upon the shipping of all nations, and they captured. The slaves, of whom there were sometimes 20,000 at a time, were treated with the utmost cruelty, and never released except for high ransoms. In seven years, from A. D. 1674 to 1681, no fewer than 350 European vessels were captured, and 5,000 or 6,000 English slaves taken into Algiers. So much were these pirates dreaded that one nation after another actually compounded with them for an annual tribute, till at last they grew so rich and so audacious that Europe could stand it no longer. In 1816, Lord Exmouth bombarded Algiers, liberated over 3,000 Christian slaves, and extorted from the Sultan a treaty abolishing the slavery of Christians forever. In 1830 the French conquered and annexed Algiers. In 1860, Morocco was invaded by Spain, in consequence of fresh aggressions and insults, and the Sultan was forced to make a treaty and pay an indemnity. Still more recently Tunis has passed under French influence, and is virtually annexed to Algeria; so that all the once powerful Mohammedan states of North Africa have shared the fate of other Moslem countries—sunk in the scale of nations, in consequence of their own utter corruption and intolerable evil deeds, until they are on the verge of political extinction. The Vial of Divine judgment has been poured out on the once great and overflowing "Euphrates" of Mohammedan power, and its waters, as predicted in the Bible, have been dried up in North Africa, as well as in Southern Europe and in Asia.

Enslaving the Christians

Now, it is remarkable that while in Turkey in Europe and Turkey in Asia this process of

The Predicted "Drying-up"

has been accompanied by a revival of pure Christian teaching, it has not been so in what may be called Turkey in Africa. European power and European civilization have been spreading, but, alas! until the year 1881 not a single Protestant Gospel missionary was laboring either among the Berbers or the Moors, from Mogador to Alexandria. Through the whole country roads and railways had been made, and along the coast steamers plied; and though Moslem and Romish barriers to the Gospel were removed, the latter in great measure through the fall of the Napoleonic Empire in France, yet it was supposed that the Mohammedans were so opposed to Christianity that it would be dangerous to attempt to evangelize them. They were therefore neglected until six years ago, when Mr. George Pearse and his wife, acting on the advice of Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, travelled of Northern Africa and Morocco, and found that they were far less opposed to the Gospel than had been imagined. A mission was organized forthwith, and there are now about twenty-five missionaries on the spot; but what are these among so many?

Among the Kabyles

The Rev. Newman Hall, LL. B., visited Tangier, one of the cities of Morocco, in the autumn of 1883. He had heard much of the miserable condition of the prisoners in the gaol, but he resolved to see for himself, and the following are some of his subsequent remarks on what he saw: "I went up with my Moor and a man bearing as many loaves as he could carry. There was no difficulty in getting access to the entrance-lobby, where the gaoler abides. In the wall is a round hole, about a foot in diameter, through which I looked into a sort of den, with two grated openings in the roof. I saw about Thirty Men in a Dungeon.

Through a similar opening I looked into what may have been the ground floor of a house, with small open court in the centre, with recesses. Here were about sixty men herding together. Some were lying or sitting on the stone floor, some lounging about, the ankles of several being chained together. When it is considered they have no change of dress, or washing of clothes or persons, and that there is the absence of sanitary conveniences, it cannot be a wonder that the odor through the opening rendered it difficult to look long enough for the eye to get accustomed to the darkness so as to see distinctly. But enough, and more than enough, was witnessed! I shall not soon forget the haggard, hungry looks of those near the opening, nor the eager, clutching hands that grasped the bread. My guide told me that sometimes there are twice as many prisoners, and that in the summer the stench is intolerable. If they have small-pox or cholera, however infectious or loathsome the disease, no doctors visit them, and they remain among their fellow-prisoners."

The Rev. Mr. Macintosh who was for twenty-five years a missionary in Damascus, and who recently visited Morocco, writes: "If any one wishes to see he does not need to go to Central Africa. Let any of us enter a Moorish town, and especially one of the fairs peculiar to the country that are held in succession at different places during every day of the week, and see if the masses gathered there do not exhibit, spiritually and physically, a spectacle of human degradation and misery pitiable in the extreme and sorrowful to behold, that may well attract the sympathy and awaken the efforts of the followers of Him who came to 'seek and to save the lost.'"

Degraded Heathen Darkness,

At these fairs "serpent charmers" are very popular, and always attract crowds of poor Moors covered with filth and rags, to witness the base and disgusting performances; "sorcerers" also attract an assembly nearly as numerous, lost in wonder and admiration at their deceptions, and the "story-tellers" are applauded to the echo at the rehearsal of the most corrupt and lying stories. All these deceivers of the people, the religion of the country countenances, and in no way would attempt to counteract their evil teaching. But there are also "processions," conducted in the memory of the birth, death, or deeds of some famous so-called "saints," whose only title to saintship in many cases has been their depravity and cruelty. Mr. Macintosh says:

A Hideous Saturnalia.

"At these processions, crowds assemble from different parts of the country, many of whom feign madness for the day, while others have been really wild and degraded maniacs for years. In the course of their march they frequently stop, form a circle of thirty or forty men in the middle of the road, including the half-naked madmen; and with long dishevelled hair, and foaming mouths, go through the most repulsive and unmeaning ceremonies, throwing their heads first forward and then backward in quick succession, and all together, with a loud and hideous grunt, and with the greatest violence, so that the bystanders wonder that their necks are not broken and their heads thrown off their bodies. This ceremony is continued with horrid and debasing monotony, until the crowd is tired of looking at them. Then the miserable actors pass on a hundred yards, and do exactly the same over again. This ceremony is repeated at intervals many times along the road, and is continued the greater part of the day."

The Sultan of Morocco,

Mulai Hassan, and his Government, do their best, not so much, perhaps, from friendliness as from fear, to protect Europeans who go into their dominions, so as to avoid a quarrel or dispute that might lead war ships to pay their coast another unwelcome visit. The events which have of late years occurred at Alexandria and in the Egyptian Soudan have also helped to overawe them. This salutary fear instilled into the mind of the once proud and cruel oppressor, is the safeguard of Europeans residing in or visiting Morocco. The Moors too, show a desire to be friendly with strangers, and in a good many instances have been seeking the partnership in trade of the once hated Christians, so as to obtain through them the protection of their Consuls against the crying wrongs and grinding oppression of their own Moorish rulers. A "British Commission," among others has been sent to meet this want (a picture of its journey into the interior is on the top panel, first page), in response to pressing overtures and repeated appeals. In this and other ways the providence of God seems to have opened a door into dark and long-sealed Morocco for European influence, and for Christian Teaching and Light.

We quote once more from Mr. Macintosh, who says: "I found the people friendly, both in the sea-coast towns and in the interior, with almost no exception, and not unwilling to be spoken to on religious subjects by a Christian, They seemed in many instances to be surprised and pleased to find a Christian who would speak to them on such matters. One Moor from the great inland city of Fez, who had seen a copy of the Proverbs and Gospel of John which I had given to another man, was so interested in them that he got his friend to come and introduce him to me, and begged me to give him copies of the same two books. He said he would thoroughly study them, and if he found in them the truth he would gather his relations and friends together, after returning home, to study them with him. After I spoke a few words to him, he told me he had never met any one before who spoke to him of such things. I gave him the books, and we can only pray 'that the Word may not return void.'

Moorish Lepers.

The under portion of our front-page picture illustrates a scene which was witnessed by the mission party one afternoon near a large village, called Sok-el-Tlata, concerning which Mr. Walter B. Harris says:

"On the road we passed half-a-dozen lepers. Nothing more miserable than the appearance of these wretched people could be imagined. There, in the full glare of the sun, they sat on the scorching sand, wrapped up in their ragged jelabas, begging alms. They wore, as all lepers are obliged to do in this country, square straw hats, and had their faces bound up in linen, so that only the eyes were visible. What a life of horror—to be barred from entering any village, or from holding intercourse, almost, with the outer world! So great is the dread of lepers in this country that they have a village set aside for them outside the walls of Morocco city, to which they are strictly confined. These poor beggars that we saw held wooden bowls for one to drop the coin into, for fear of contamination." Unhappily, there are many lepers in the Empire of Morocco, and throughout the East, doomed to a "living death," but it is a subject of gratitude to God that even these are not left to perish without some effort being made to tell them of Him whose blood can cleanse away the yet deadlier leprosy of sin. The Gospel Mission to the Kabyles, and other Berber races of Morocco, has already borne very valuable fruit; but the field for evangelization is vast, and the demand for laborers is pressing and great.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Man Who Wore Bracelets.—Mr. Colville, a Christian worker, remarked at a temperance meeting: "I know a man who affirmed that after his conversion to Christ he had given up intoxicating drink. One day, passing by a saloon, where he had been in the habit of spending his money, he looked in and said to the landlord, 'Look here, you used to get my hard-earned money to help to put bracelets on your daughter's arms, while you, with your accursed stuff called strong drink, put iron bracelets on my wrists. But that is all past now, thank God; I take my money to my once neglected wife.'"

Sudden Death of a Sea-Gull.—Mr. Finlayson remarks: 'When walking home from an evangelistic meeting the other night, I was much startled by a large sea-gull dropping dead at my feet. I picked it up, and, on examination, found that the poor creature's death had been caused by its flying against the telegraph wires, and having thus broken its neck, it had died instantaneously and fallen at my feet. It set me thinking. 'In the midst of life we are in death.' Our end may be sudden; we know not, when we walk forth in health and strength, that we shall ever return alive to our homes. But it matters little, if we have made peace with God through faith in Jesus Christ."

Not too Bad to be Saved.—Mr. Dewar remarks: "I remember being in an infirmary some time ago, and speaking with a poor girl, and trying to point her to Christ; but her reply was a sad one. She asked: 'What is the use of talking to me? I cannot pray, and although I could, I am too bad to pray.' I said to her, 'That is the true spirit of prayer; just tell Jesus what you have told me, and ask Him to help you to pray.' She did so, and the Lord, who is ever ready to hear and answer prayer, heard and answered her, and when a few days afterwards she died, it was only a ransomed and cleansed spirit that had left its frail tenement of clay to dwell in heaven with Jesus. It is sinners Jesus came to save, and, until we acknowledge ourselves to be such, we cannot be saved. 'Not the righteous, sinners Jesus came to call.'"

Who will Testify for the Devil?—The Rev. Mr. Daley says: "The other day a number of young men were holding a Gospel meeting in a country town not far from Glasgow. After they had sung and prayed, the young men, one after the other, gave testimony as to what the Lord had done for them. Presently a gentleman stepped out from their midst, and said, 'Now you have heard from us of our Master, the Lord Jesus, is there anyone among you who will testify for their master, the devil?' There was silence for a few minutes, then a man came forward and remarked, 'Well, I will not testify for the devil, but I can tell you that I have served him long and faithfully, and have found him to be a very hard master, and now from this day forward I have determined to change masters. Satan takes, Christ gives. Satan's wages is death, but Christ's gift is eternal life. Happily, the rebel sinner, when he sighs out, 'Father, I have sinned,' is forthwith welcomed to the loving embrace of Jesus Christ.'"

A Fatal Postponement.—A Scotch Missionary says: "Some time ago, when I was at Lanark, a godly mother came to me and said, 'I have an only son, whose father died some years ago, and I am very anxious about his soul. I should like you to try and get him to some of your meetings, for this is a very critical time of his life. He is twenty years of age, and has just finished his apprenticeship as a plasterer. If he is not led to give his heart to Christ now, I am afraid he will go astray.' I went and saw him, told him what his mother had said, and asked him to come to our meeting that night. He expressed his willingness to comply with my request, but hoped that I would excuse him for that evening, as he had promised to see some of his fellow plasterers, but the following night he would come. I told him I could not say anything of the morrow, that now was the accepted time. The following day I was at the Falls of Clyde, and there I saw this young man, John Neil, with some other young fellows. By-and-by, as I looked about me, I saw John and some others amusing themselves by jumping from rock to rock, seemingly with ease, but their success made them careless, and to my horror I saw John's foot slip, and he was precipitated over the rocks. He was dashed to pieces. His body was recovered afterwards, but for John Neil to-morrow had never come."

A Resolve to be Converted.—The Rev. Mr. M'Laughlan observed: "I was preaching in Maybole on one occasion, and there came to the meeting, among others, a lady deeply anxious about her soul. As she herself afterwards said, 'I came to the meeting that night, having made up my mind that I would be converted.' When she went home she prayed that God would open her eyes, and, taking down the old family Bible, in the presence of her father and mother, she opened it with a prayer that the Holy Spirit would guide her hand and her eyes. The first passage on which her eyes fell, was John 3: 16, 'God so loved the world,' etc. The next was, 'The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life.' She accepted God's gift then and there. And then from her full heart she cried, 'Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift.' She felt indeed as if that was the most appropriate thanks she could give, thanks for his unspeakably heavenly gift. That lady is now one of the foremost Christian workers in Maybole, and she always says, 'I just took Christ at His word. When He offered me Himself, the heavenly Gift, I at once accepted Him.'"

The Meeting of Two Old Mates.—At the same meeting Mr. Clyde, an evangelist, related: "There were two shopmates, who, for many years, had wrought beside each other, but had lately been for some time separated. When they met again, the one asked the other, 'Well, Tom, how are you getting along?' 'Oh,' was the answer, 'I am a brand plucked from the burning.' 'What do you mean? Are you not going to have a drink' 'No,' was the reply, 'I tell you I am a brand plucked from the fire.' 'Explain, please,' said his companion, 'I don't understand you.' 'Well,' began the other, 'there is a great difference between a brand plucked from the burning and a green stick. The brand which has been plucked from the fire, if it be put near the fire, will soon be burning again. I, who have been snatched from the fire of strong drink, am not going to put myself near its terrible flames again, for I have seen myself exceedingly sinful, and have placed my hand within the pierced hand of Christ, who died to save me, and I now feel that I am a forgiven sinner.' Those who pray the Lord to deliver them from temptation should be careful not to rush into it again."

A Devoted Lady Missionary.—Miss Leitch, of Javna, Ceylon, remarks: "There was a young lady who had been out in India for many years, who, when asked if she did not want to go home, and have a little rest, and see her old friends, replied, 'Go home! No, I have no time to go home; I am too busy in my Master's work.' She was most devoted, spending her whole life for the salvation of others, praying that the girls under her care might be both Christians and earnest workers. As she lay dying one of the missionaries went to her and asked: 'Would you like me to pray with you?' 'Yes,' she answered. 'Anything special?' was the gentle inquiry. 'Yes; pray for the women of Javna, that they may come to Christ,' she earnestly answered. That was the one thought of her life and of her death. A number of women, all of whom had graduated under her, met to pray that God would restore her to health, or take her to Himself without pain. Eventually she slipped away peacefully, while they were thus engaged. What a wonderful life she had led! What a blessing she had been to thousands! For a life like that, and a future like hers, it is surely worth while to give up home and friends, and go forth on the Lord's errand!"

FORGIVENESS BEFORE SUNDOWN.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning, October 23, 1887.

"Let not the sun go down upon your wrath." Eph. 4:25.

Sunset Among Mountains—A Sublime Duty—Anger may be Justifiable—Why It should Cease at Sundown—I. Twelve Hours Long Enough to Indulge It—Injurious to the Angry Person—A Glass of Wine Flung at a Speaker—A Rheumatic Woman Cured at Bethshan—Injuries Accepted as Blessings—II. Because Sleep is Sweeter After Forgiving—An Unfailing Prescription for Wakefulness—Hatred an Obstacle to Peace with God—The Spartan Boy Bitten by a Fox—Frederic the Great Postponing Forgiveness—III. Because Life is Uncertain—The Faithful Soldier at Pompeii—A Burdened Child's Confidence—IV. A Fit Association of Sublimities—The One Least to Blame to Move First—V. Because the God of the Sunset Vindicates.

WHAT a pillow, embroidered of all colors, hath the dying day! The cradle of clouds from which the sun rises is beautiful enough, but it is surpassed by the many-colored mausoleum in which, at evening, it is buried.

Sunset Among The Mountains!

It almost takes one's breath away to recall the scene. The long shadows stretching over the plain make the glory of the departing light, on the tiptop crags, and struck aslant though the foliage, the more transpicuous. Saffron and gold, purple and crimson commingled. All the castles of cloud in conflagration. Burning Moscows on the sky. Hanging gardens of roses at their deepest blush. Banners of vapor, red as if from carnage, in the battle of the elements. The hunter among the Adirondacks, and the Swiss villager among the Alps, know what is a sunset among the mountains. After a storm at sea the rolling grandeur into which the sun goes down to bathe at nightfall is something to make weird and splendid dreams out of for a lifetime. Alexander Smith, in his poem, compares the sunset to "the barren beach of hell," but this wonderful spectacle of nature makes me think of the burnished wall of heaven. Paul, in prison, writing my text, remembers some of the gorgeous sunsets among the mountains of Asia Minor, and how he had often seen the towers of Damascus blaze in the close of the Oriental days, and he flashes out that memory in the text when he says, "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

Sublime and All-suggestive Duty for people then and people now! Forgiveness before sundown! He who never feels the throb of indignation is imbecile. He who can walk among the injustices of the world inflicted upon himself and others, without flush of cheek, or flash of eye, or agitation of nature, is either in sympathy with wrong or semi-idiotic. When Ananias, the high priest, ordered the constables of the court room to smite Paul on the mouth, Paul fired up and said: "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall." In the sentence immediately before my text Paul commands the Ephesians: "Be ye angry and sin not." It all depends on what you are mad at and how long the feeling lasts, whether anger is right or wrong. Life is full of exasperations. Saul after David, Succoth after Gideon, Korah after Moses, the Pasquins after Augustus, the Pharisees after Christ, and every one has had his pursuers, and we are swindled, or belied, or misrepresented, or persecuted, or in some way wronged, and the danger is that healthful indignation shall become baleful spite, and that our feelings settle down into a prolonged outpouring of temper displeasing to God and ruinous to ourselves, and hence the important injunction of the text: "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath."

Why That Limitation

to one's anger? Why that period of flaming vapor set to punctuate a flaming disposition? What has the sunset got to do with one's resentful emotions? Was it a haphazard sentiment written by Paul without special significance? No, no; I think of five reasons why we should not let the sun set before our temper sets. First: Because to be cross about any wrong inflicted upon us. Nothing is so exhausting to physical health or mental faculty as a protracted indulgence of ill-humor. It racks the nervous system, It hurts the digestion. It heats the blood in brain and heart until the whole body is first overheated and then depressed. Beside that, it sours the disposition, turns one aside from his legitimate work, expends energies that ought to be better employed, and does us more harm than it does our antagonist. Paul gives us a good, wide allowance of time for legimate denunciation, from six o'clock to six o'clock, but says: "Stop there!" Watch the ascending orb of day, and when it reaches the horizon, take a reef in your disposition. Unloose your collar and cool off. Change the subject to something delightfully pleasant. Unroll your tight fist and shake hands with some one. Bank up the fires at the curfew bell. Drive the growling dog of enmity back to its kennel. The hours of this morning will pass by, and the afternoon will arrive, and the sun will begin to set, and, I beg you, on its blazing hearth throw all your feuds, invectives and satires.

Twelve Hours is Long Enough

A Vinous Digression.

Other things being equal, the man who preserves good temper will come out ahead. An old essayist says that the celebrated John Henderson, of Bristol, England, was at a dining party where political excitement ran high and the debate got angry, and while Henderson was speaking, his opponent, unable to answer his argument, dashed a glass of wine in his face, when the speaker deliberately wiped the liquid from his face and said: "This, sir, is a digression; now, if you please, for the main argument." While worldly philosophy could help but very few to such equipoise of spirit, the grace of God could help any man to such a triumph. "Impossible," you say, "I would have either left the table in anger or have knocked the man down." But I have come to believe that nothing is impossible if God help, since faith cure in London, England, two summers ago. While the religious service was going on, Rev. Dr. Boardman, glorious man! since gone to his heavenly rest, was telling the scores of sick people present that Christ was there as of old to heal all diseases, and that, if they would only believe, their sickness would depart. I saw a woman near me, with hand and arm twisted of rheumatism, and her wrist was fiery with inflammation, and it looked like those cases of chronic rheumatism which we have all seen and sympathized with, cases beyond all human healing. At the preacher's reiteration of the words: "Will you believe? Do you believe? Do you believe now?" I heard this poor sick woman say, with an emphasis which sounded through the building: "I do believe." And then she laid her twisted arm and hand out as straight as your arm and hand, or mine. If I had seen her rise from the dead, I would not have been much more thrilled. Since then I believe that God will do anything in answer to our prayer and in answer to our faith, and He can heal our bodies, and if our soul is all twisted and misshapen of revenge and hate and inflamed with sinful proclivity, He can straighten that also and make it well and clean.

What I Saw at Bethshan

Aye, you will not postpone till sundown forgiveness of enemies if you can realize that their behavior towards you may be of the "all things" that "work together for good to those that love God." I have had multitudes of friends, but I have found in my own experience that God so arranged it that the greatest opportunities of usefulness that have been opened before me were opened by enemies. And when, years ago, they conspired against me, that opened all Christendom to me as a field in which to preach the Gospel. So you may harness your antagonists to your best interests and compel them to draw you on to better work and higher character. Suppose, instead of waiting until six minutes past five o'clock this evening, when the sun will set, you transact this glorious work of forgiveness before meridian.

Put Into the Catalogue

Again: We ought not to let the sun go down on our wrath,

Because We Will Sleep Better

if we are at peace with everybody. Insomnia is getting to be one of the most prevalent of disorders. How few people retire at ten o'clock at night and sleep clear through to six in the morning! To relieve this disorder all narcotics, and sedatives, and chloral, and bromide of potassium, and cocaine and intoxicants are used, but nothing is more important than a quiet spirit if we would win somnolence. How is a man going to sleep when he is in mind pursuing an enemy? with what nervous twitch he will start out of a dream! That new plan for cornering his foe will keep him wide awake while the clock strikes eleven, twelve, one, two. I give you for wakefulness: spend the evening hours rehearsing your wrongs and the best way of avenging them. Hold a convention of friends on this subject in your parlor or office at eight and nine o'clock. Close the evening by writing a bitter letter expressing your sentiments. Take from the desk or pigeon hole the papers in the case to refresh your mind with your evening's meanness. Then lie down and wait for the coming of the day, and it will come before sleep comes, or your sleep will be a worried quiescence, and, if you take the precaution to lie flat on your back, a frightful nightmare.

An Unfailing Prescription

Why not put a bound to your animosity? Why let your foes come into the sanctities of your dormitory? Why let those slanderers who have already torn your reputation to pieces or injured your business, bend over your midnight pillow and drive from you one of the greatest blessings that God can offer—sweet, refreshing, all invigorating sleep. Why not fence out your enemies by the golden bars of the sunset? Why not stand behind the barricade of evening cloud, and say to them: "Thus far and no farther." Many a man and many a woman is having the health of body as well as the health of soul eaten away by a malevolent spirit. I have in time of religious awakening had persons night after night, come into the inquiry room and get no peace of soul. After a while I have bluntly asked them: "Is there not some one against whom you have a hatred that you are not willing to give up?" After a little confusion they have slightly wispered, "Yes." Then I have said: "You will never find peace with God as long as you retain that virulence."

A boy in Sparta having stolen a fox, kept him under his coat and, though the fox was gnawing his vitals, he submitted to it rather than expose his misdeed. Many a man with a smiling face has under his jacket an animosity that is gnawing away the strength of his body and the integrity of his soul. Better get rid of

That Hidden Fox

as soon as possible. There are hundreds of domestic circles where that which most is needed is the spirit of forgiveness. Brothers apart, and sisters apart, and parents and children apart. Solomon says a brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city. Are there not enough sacred memories of your childhood to bring you together? The rabbins recount how that Nebuchadnezzar's son had such a spite against his father that after he was dead, he had his father burned to ashes and then put the ashes into four sacks and tied them to four eagles' necks which flew away in opposite directions. And there are now domestic antipathies that seem forever to have scattered all parental memories to the four winds of heaven. How far the eagles fly with that sacred ashes! The hour of sundown makes to that family no practical suggestion. Thomas Carlyle, in his biography of Frederick the Great, says the old King was told by the confessor he must be at peace with his enemies if he wanted to enter heaven. Then he said to his wife the Queen: "Write to your brother after I am dead that I forgive him." Roloff, the confessor, said: "Her Majesty had better write him immediately." "No," said the King, "after I am dead; that will be safer." So he let the sun of his earthly existence go down upon his wrath.

Again: We ought not to allow the sun to set before forgiveness takes place.

Because We Might Not Live to see another day. And what if we should be ushered into the presence of our Maker with a grudge upon our soul? The majority of people depart this life in the night. Between eleven o'clock P. M. and three o'clock A. M. there is something in the atmosphere which relaxes the grip which the body has on the soul, and most of people enter the next world through the shadows of this world. Perhaps God may have arranged it in that way so as to make the contrast the more glorious. I have seen sunshiny days in this world that must have been almost like the radiance of heaven. But as most people leave the earth between sundown and sunrise they quit this world at its darkest, and heaven always bright, will be the brighter for that contrast. Out of darkness into irradiation.

Shall we then leap over the roseate bank of sunset into the favorite hunting ground of disease and death, carrying our animosities with us? Who would want to confront his God, against whom we have all done meaner things than anybody has ever done against us, carrying old grudges? How can we expect His forgiveness for the greater when we are not willing to forgive others for less? Napoleon was encouraged to undertake the crossing of the Alps because Charlemagne had previously crossed them. And all this rugged path of forgiveness bears the bleeding footsteps of Him who conquered through suffering, and we ought to be willing to follow. On the night of our departure from this life into the next, our one plea will have to be for mercy, and it will have to be offered in the presence of Him who has said: "If you forgive not men their trespasses neither will your heavenly father forgive your trespasses." What a sorry plight if we stand there hating this one, and hating that one, and wishing that one a damage, and wishing some one else a calamity, and we ourselves needing forgiveness for ten thousand times ten thousand obliquities of heart and life. When our last hour comes, we want it to find us all right. Hardly anything affects me so much in as the account of the soldier who, after the city had for many centuries been covered with the ashes, and scoriae of Vesuvius, was found standing in his placé on guard, hand on spear and helmet on head. Others fled at the awful submergement, but the explorer, seventeen hundred years after, found the body of that brave fellow in right position. And it will be a grand thing if, when our last moment comes, we are found in right position toward the world, as well as in right position toward God, on guard and unaffrighted by the ashes from the mountain of death. I do not suppose that I am any more of a coward than most people, but I declare to you that I would not dare to sleep tonight if there were any being in all the earth with whom I would not gladly shake hands, lest during the night hours my spirit dismissed to other realms, I should, because of my unforgiving spirit, be denied divine forgiveness.

The Uncovering of Pompeii

"But," says some woman, "there is a horrid creature that has so injured me that rather than make up with her I would die first. Well, sister

You May Take Your Choice,

—for one or the other it will be—your complete pardon of her or God's eternal banishment of you. "But," says some man, "that fellow who cheated me out of those goods, or damaged my business credit, or started that lie about me in the newspapers, or by his perfidy broke up my domestic happiness, forgive him I cannot, forgive him I will not." Well, brother, take your choice. You will never be at peace with God till you are at peace with man. Feeling as you now do, you would not get so near the harbor of heaven as to see the lightship. Better leave that man with the God who said: "Vengeance is mine, I will repay." You may say: "I will make him sweat for that yet; I will make him squirm; I mean to pursue him to the death," but you are damaging yourself more than you damage him, and you are making heaven for your own soul an impossibility. If he will not be reconciled to you, be reconciled to him. In five or six hours it will be sundown. The dahlias will bloom against the western sky. Somewhere between this and that take a shovel and bury the old quarrel at least six feet deep. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath,"

"But," you say, "I have more than I can bear; too much is put upon me, and I am not to blame if I am somewhat revengeful and unrelenting." Then I think or the little child at the moving of some goods from a store. The father was putting some rolls of goods on the child's arm, package after package and some one said: "That child is being overloaded and so much ought not to be put upon her," when the child responded:

"Father Knows How Much

I can carry;" and God our Father, will not allow too much imposition on his children. In the day of eternity it will be found you had not one annoyance too many; not one exasperation too many; not one outrage too many. Your Heavenly Father knows how much you can carry.

Again: We ought not to allow the passage of the sunset hour before the dismissal or all our affronts, because we may associate with the sublimest spectacle in nature. It is a most delightsome thing to have our personal experiences allied with certain subjects. There is a tree or river bank where God first answered your prayer. You will never pass that place or think of that place without thinking of the glorious communion. There was some gate or some room or some garden wall where you were affianced with the companion who has been your chief joy in life. You never speak of that place but with a smile. Some of you have pleasant memories connected with the evening star, or the moon in its first quarter, or with the sunrise. Because you saw it just as you were arriving at harbor after a tempestuous voyage. Forever and forever, Oh hearer, associate the sunset with your magnanimous, out and out, unlimited renunciation of all hatreds and forgiveness of all foes.

The Sublimest Action of the Soul,

I admit it is the most difficult of all graces to practice, and at the start you may make a complete failure, but keep on in the attempt to practice it. Shakespeare wrote ten plays before he reached "Hamlet," and seventeen plays before he reached "Merchant of Venice," and twenty-eight plays before he reached "Macbeth." And gradually you will come from the easier graces to the most difficult. Beside that, it is not a matter of personal determination so much as the laying hold of the almighty arm of God, who will help us to do anything we ought to do. Remember that in all personal controversies will have to take the first step at pacification, if it is ever effective. The contest between Aeschines and Aristippus resounds through history, but Aristippus, who was least to blame, went to Aeschines and said: "Shall we not agree to be friends before we make ourselves the laughing stock of the whole country?" And Aeschines said: "Thou art a far better man than I, for I began the quarrel, but thou hast been the first in healing the breach," and they were always friends afterwards. So let the one of you that is least to blame take the first step toward conciliation. The one most in the wrong will never take it.

The One Least to Blame

Oh, it makes one feel splendidly to be able by God's help to practice unlimited forgiveness. It improves one's body and soul. It will make you measure three or four more inches around the chest and improve your respiration, so that you can take a deeper and longer breath. It improves the countenance by scattering the gloom and makes you somewhat Like God Himself.

He is omnipotence, and we cannot copy that. He is independent of all the universe, and we cannot copy that. He is creative, and we cannot copy that. He is omnipresent, and we cannot copy that. But He forgives with a broad sweep all faults, and all neglects, and all insults, and all wrong-doings, and in that we may copy Him with mighty success. Go harness that sublime action of your soul to an autumnal sunset—the hour when the gate of heaven opens to let the day pass into the eternities, and some of the glories escape this way through the brief opening. We talk about the Italian sunsets, and sunset amid the Appenines, and sunset amid the Corderillas, but I will tell you how you may see a grander sunset than any mere lover of Nature ever beheld; that is, by flinging into it all your hatreds and animosities, and let the horses of fire trample them, and the chariots of fire roll over them, and the spearmen of fire stab them, and the beach of fire consume them, and the billows of fire overwhelm them.

Again: We should not let the sun go down on our wrath, because it is of little importance what the world says of you or does to you when you have the affluent God of the sunset as Your Provider and Defender.

People talk as though it were a fixed spectacle of Nature and always the same. But no one ever saw two sunsets alike, and if the world has existed six thousand years, there have been about two million one hundred and ninety thousand sunsets, each of them as distinct from all the other pictures in the gallery of the sky as Titian's "Last Supper," Rubens's "Descent from the Cross," Raphael's "Transfiguration," and Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment" are distinct from each other. If that God of such infinite resources that he can put on the wall of the sky each night more than the Louvre and the Luxembourg galleries all in one, is my God and your God, our Provider and Protector, what is the use of our worrying about any human antagonism? If we are misinterpreted, the God of the many-colored sunset can put the right color on our action. If all the garniture of the western heavens at eventide is but the upholstery of one of the windows of our future home, what small business for us to be chasing enemies? Let not this Sabbath sun go down upon your wrath.

Mahomet said: "The sword is the key of heaven and hell." But, my hearers, in the Last Day we will find just the opposite of that to be true, and that the sword never unlocks heaven, and that he who heals wounds is greater than he who makes them, and that on the same ring are two keys—God's forgiveness of us and our forgiveness of enemies—and these two keys unlock Paradise.

And now, I wish for all of you a beautiful

Sunset in your Earthly Existence.

With some of you it has been a long day of trouble, and with others of you it will be far from calm. When the sun rose at six o'clock it was the morning of youth, and a fair day was prophecied, but by the time the noonday of middle-life had come, and the clock of your earthly existence had struck twelve, cloud-racks gathered and tempest bellowed in the track of tempest. But as the evening of old age approaches, I pray God the skies may brighten and the clouds be piled up into pillars as of celestial temples to which you go, or move as with mounted cohorts come to take you home. And as you sink out of sight below the horizon, may there be a radiance of Christian example lingering long after you are gone, and on the heavens be written in letters of sapphire, and on the waters in letters of opal, and on the hills in letters of emerald. "Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself, for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." So shall the sunset of earth become the sunrise of heaven.

AN UNEXPECTED CALAMITY.

Among a party of sailors and firemen, from the steamship Topaz, who visited the Berachah mission in 32d Street, New York, one evening, was a man who miscalculated his opportunities. The Topaz party enjoyed the services as many other parties of sailors have done since Mr. and Mrs. Naylor, the founders of the mission, made special efforts to reach, with their invitations, the ships as they came in. They joined in the singing and showed no disaffection until they were approached by the mission workers, and individually urged to give themselves to God. The usual excuses were made, and the King's messengers were repelled at every point. As an argument for present decision they were told of an incident which had occurred not long before at the same mission. It was that of a sailor who, only the next morning after giving his heart to God, fell from the masthead and was killed. The incident impressed several, who yielded to the plea, but one man said, in reply: "Oh, I don't expect anything of that sort. God will give me time to repent before I die." He left the mission that night, in spite of all the workers could say or do, and was determinedly set against God. Instead of going to the mission the next evening he borrowed a dollar from the captain and took it to the drink shop. Returning late at night, with unsteady gait, he mounted the gang-plank, and was getting on board the ship when he missed his footing, fell between the vessel and the pier, and was drowned before the watchman could reach him. Ten days afterwards, as the mission workers went to another ship service, his dead body floated up from the mud of the river and was taken to the morgue. He left a wife and five children in England to lament his awful end.

A CLERGYMAN'S NEURALGIA CURED.

That most obstinate and distressing complaint which is sometimes lightly spoken of—neuralgia—makes life a burden for those whom it makes its prey. One sufferer, the Rev. John F. Palmer, of Coffeyville, Kans., in a letter to a contemporary, describes his remarkable recovery from an attack. He had been a victim to the malady from childhood, the acute attacks lasting from ten days to three weeks at a time. One day, after being exposed to a cold wind, he felt the usual premonitory symptoms—shooting pains in the chest and about the heart. The attack came on very rapidly, and soon the pastor was in excruciating agony. He and his wife had already trusted Christ for sickness, "and now," says Mr. Palmer, "we continued in prayer and trustful faith, apparently without any change from most intense pain, refusing to relax our hold of faith. About midnight the pain began to leave. I then requested my wife to lie down and sleep, which she did. As the suffering subsided, I dropped into sleep, and awoke the next morning but little later than my usual time of waking, got up, the pain gone, the disease broken, and about in the same condition where I had been in the former attacks at the end of ten days or two weeks, after the disease had run its course. This was one of those attacks which would have disabled me for three weeks."

PATRIOTISM IN A POLICE COURT.

An incident which illustrates the principle that an offense may be aggravated by reflection is reported from Memphis, Tenn. It may be commended to the notice of men who have taken upon them the name of Christ, yet live inconsistent lives, forgetting that their profession requires them to depart from iniquity (II Tim. 2:19).

On the morning after a masked ball had been held in the city, a Memphis magistrate saw among the prisoners a young man who had attended the ball in the character of George Washington. The charge against him was drunkenness, disorderly conduct and profane language. It certainly did seem incongruous that a man who proposed to personate "the Father of his Country," should indulge in vices for which that revered man had an especial abhorrence. The magistrate took that view of the case and emphasized it in a very practical way. He said: "Now, if you had got drunk as a private citizen, and had ripped around as such, I should have fined you $5; but inasmuch as you appeared at the masked ball and committed the offense while personating the character of George Washington, the revered father of his country, I will have to inflict a fine on you of $20. I won't have this patriotism business brought into disrepute."

A LIVING CONCORDANCE.

Among the converts in Persia is a young man who was formerly employed as a herdsman, but is now working as a colporteur. In the course of a recent letter to the Church, Mr. Larabee, of Oroomiah, relates an interesting fact in connection with him. He says:

Some years ago, in my circuit among the villages of Oroomiah, I became deeply interested in a class of young men uniting with the church in Ada about the same time. Out of this class there have gone forth three colporteurs, who have made an interesting record for themselves and greatly advanced the cause of Christ in Persia. One of these was a very poor boy, who gained his livelihood by tending the village herd. The missionary riding over the grazing lands of that village was pretty sure to have a visit from Shimoon. He had learned to read in the mission village school, and his New Testament was his constant companion as he tended his cattle. He usually had a question to ask upon some verse or passage. His memory was a remarkable one. It was almost impossible to mention a verse or sentence of which he could not tell the chapter and verse. He was a living concordance. He has graduated from herding cattle, taken a short course of study, and entered the colporteur service. In this capacity he has travelled much in Persia and in Russia, and has been the means of circulating very many copies of God's word among all classes.

THIRTY-THREE YEARS OF MISERY.

A grateful wife, writing to Mrs. Naylor in acknowledgment of the blessings which had come on her home through God's blessing on the work at the Berachah Mission says:

"My husband was once a prosperous business man in this city, and a large employer of labor, but he fell a victim to the hurtful drinking customs of social life, until at last he was completely enslaved. Then his business relations became entangled, and the course was downward, and still downward until we were homeless and friendless. The fatal drink habit still clung to him and for thirty-three years I was the companion of a drunkard. The future was hopeless, and as wretched and miserable as it could be. I heard of the Berachah Mission, and last November I said to my husband: 'George, we have neglected God these many years, and now we are without His blessing. Let us go up to the little mission and spend an evening with God's people.' He hesitated for a while, but at last consented to go, and now, we look back to that night as to the brightest spot in our lives. My dear husband responded to the invitation that was given, and went with two or three friends and knelt before God in prayer. It was the hour of his conversion, and since then, we have a bright but humble home. We go to the house of God together, and in Him all our wants are supplied. The terrible drink appetite that ruined my husband, and blighted our earthly prospects, is gone, and gone, I trust, forever. We have much cause for rejoicing, and our every-day prayer is that God will bless Berachah Mission."

[Gifts of left-off clothing for men, women, or children or of material for clothes, will be welcome at the mission. Also, if any employer who can employ an extra man or boy for a day or two would notify the managers they would be glad. Half naked hungry men with wives and children in similar condition are continually met with about the mission. Mr. and Mrs. Naylor would be glad to co-operate with philanthropists who would aid in the erection of a soup kitchen, bath-house, etc., in their neighborhood. Mr. and Mrs. Naylor have already expended $37,079 in erecting the Berachah Mission and they also defray the expenses of it, which amount to six thousand dollars a year.]

ALONE IN UGANDA.

A recently published telegram stated that the savage king of Uganda, who had Bishop Hannington murdered, had at length granted permission for Mr. A. M. Mackay to depart. Prior to the granting of that permission Mr. Mackay wrote a deeply interesting letter, which arrived about the same date as the telegram. As the whole church throughout the world has been praying for this noble man left solitary in the power of a ferocious despot, the following extracts from his letter will be welcome to Christian readers:

"I have not the slightest desire to 'escape,' if I can do a particle of good by staying. My desire, and, I believe, the desire of all our friends is that the Lord will open the way for the mission to be kept on, not abandoned. The Eleanor is in port, some twelve miles off, and possibly I might make a dash for it, but what then? I do not at present see that I am warranted in seeking to do so. Anything may happen at any moment, and it may be that I shall be led to adopt such a course, but hitherto I believe I am doing right in quietly going on with the work. My earnest heart-wish is simply to cast myself on the Master and say 'Thy will be done!' My own choice is to stay, that is, if choice were given me at all. Not that we are in any favorable state at present. On the contrary, I am in no small odium at present with his Majesty. Nor do I labor under any conceited notion that my presence is essential to the work. Well I know that the Lord will carry on His work, whether the workmen be alive or buried. I only wait for more light before I take any rash step. I know, too, that I have a prominent place in the prayers of all of you, that our people and myself may be not only preserved, but guided also.

"I have been making an effort to complete St. Matthew. My best version of the remaining chapters was unsatisfactory. However, I got Duta back from Budu, and with Bartolomayo, Luka, Andrea, and others, we have gone steadily to work, and now we have, by God's grace, rewritten the whole to the end. I thought this more immediately important than joggin on as I had been doing, setting up sheet by sheet: as in the case of sudden expulsion the MSS. may be saved, and the mere printing can be done elsewhere.

"Kanta, a strong enemy to Christianity, was sent to rob and nyaga the island of Busi, on the pretext that two years ago the natives had speared one of the king's servants (who had been stealing the people's goats) on the expedition to Nkanaga. This fellow returned with much booty, having slain almost every man he found, and captured the women, children and cattle.

"One of the imprisoned lads was liberated, and the king gave out that those in hiding might come back. One lad, named Jamari, reported himself. He was asked to go and find his chums, and bring them to the Katikiro, who would find them wives and place them among the basalosalo. The lad went about for a day or two looking for the others, but none would venture; so he returned to the Katikiros and was taken in, but has never more been seen. Kisule has made diligent inquiries, and hears from some of the boys at that worthy's place that Jamari was recently murdered and thrown into a hole in the muga, at the foot of Katikiro's enclosure. It is needless to say that the others are not inclined to show face now. Apparently it was a trap to catch and murder them all.

"The edict for catching people on the road at night gradually became more and more of dead letter, as most things do in this country, and at present seems to have been withdrawn. Hence I have almost all along had a fair number of pupils every evening. At present we are going through St. Luke, for the—I-cannot-say how-many—th time. We had a good stock of that Gospel, while the idiom of it has ever been almost unintelligible to most. Hence few ever took to it, the rage being on St. Matthew. But necessity compelled me to take up St. Luke, and now they seem all keen for it. I have read also several Epistles this last month with the more advanced ones. The Apocalypse, too, is always a favorite, as also the Acts. When, oh when, can they have more than the veriest fraction of the Word in their own tongue—I mean in real idiomatic, intelligible language? When can we be together again at this work? The Lord hasten the day! This one-man job is little better than a makeshift, let me be ever so careful.

"On Sundays I generally have a houseful; in fact, far more than I think safe or prudent meantime. But we must risk something. I trust that some of our people are growing in knowledge, and I hope in grace also. One good sign is that beginners are numerous, being taught by those of older standing. Books and papers continue to be purchased."

THE VISION OF THE SEVEN SEALS.

By Rev. M. Baxter.*

A Pictorial History of the Church for 1862 Years—Difference Between the Seals and the Trumpets—Their Parallel Signification—Respective Significance of the Four Horses—The First Seal of Purity and Poverty Combined with Persecution—The Second Seal of Wealth and Dissension.

THE first of the prophetic visions in the Book of Revelation is the symbolic series of Seven Seals, which, in its historical fulfilment throughout this Gentile dispensation, furnishes a from the First to the Second Advent of Christ. The seven-sealed Book of Life, in which are written the names of all who shall be redeemed by the blood of Christ, is first of all delivered by God the Father to the Lord Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God who forthwith proceeds to break open, one by one, the seven seals, with which it is securely fastened. Certain events are described as transpiring at the successive opening of each seal, until at last, when the seventh seal is opened and the Second Advent of Christ takes place, the Lamb's Book of Life becomes unfastened, so that the full list of the names of "such as shall be saved" becomes open to inspection, and it is found to contain, written within it before the foundation of the world, a complete register and muster-roll of all the true soldiers of Jesus Christ.

Dramatic History of the Church

While the prophetic series of the Seven Seals describes the history and future of the Christian Church during 1862 years from the First to the Second Advent of Christ, the prophetic series of the Seven Trumpets (which is entirely a new prophetic vision, and quite distinct from the Seven Seals) describes the history of the world, and of the Divine judgments inflicted on it during the same period. Thus the series of the Seven Seals and the Seven Trumpets run in parallel streams of fulfilment, side by side; and the former relate more to spiritual and ecclesiastical affairs—the latter are more descriptive of temporal and political events.

The First Four Seals

are symbolic prefigurations of the successive stages of the visible professing Christian Church from Primitive Purity as a white horse—A. D. 39 to 324, to a state of internal discord and sanguinary strife as a red horse—324 to 566; then to a condition of spiritual famine and dark superstition, as a black horse—566 to 1095; then as a death-dealing crusading Church—the ghastly horse, from the first crusade in 1095 to the Massacre of St. Bartholomew in 1572, when the Cry of the Martyrs is raised at the beginning of the Fifth Seal.

The First Seal.

Historical fulfilment—A. D. 39 to 324—The victorious progress and primitive purity of the visible Christian Church. "And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals; and I heard as it were the noise of thunder, one of the living creatures, saying Come and see. And I saw and behold a white horse: and He that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto Him, and He went forth conquering and to conquer" (Rev. 6: 1, 2).

The explanation given by the Fathers of the Church and, as a general rule, by all expositors for fifteen centuries, from the earliest writer, Irenæus, to the time of Luther, was that the first Seal represents the early conquests of Christianity and Christ's victory through the first preachers of the Gospel. The rapid success of the Christian religion, its vast conquests and its spreading dominion, fully justified their application of the triumphant symbol.

History of the Period.

The Acts of the Apostles declare how victorious was the Gospel of Christ, as preached by the primitive disciples, in pulling down the strongholds of Satan. So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed. Lactantius asserted that within twenty-five years from the day of Pentecost, Christian churches were established in all the provinces and states of the Roman Empire. Eusebius said that, by the Divine power and helping hand of God, the wholesome doctrine, like sunbeams, suddenly shone throughout the world, and the sound of the holy evangelists and apostles passed throughout the whole earth. So that forthwith, in all cities and villages, many, and the same very populous, churches were established.

A modern author, describing the apostolic era, has unconsciously written the following commentary on this First Seal period. "From the time that the Great Head of the Church gave the vast commission, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature,' to the present hour, Christ has, by the instrumentality of His Word, gone forth 'conquering and to conquer.' Many and mighty indeed were the enemies to be overcome—Jew and Gentile, prince and peasant, rich and poor, the intellectual Greek and the ignorant barbarian, were alike opposed to the holy, humbling doctrine of the crucified Nazarene; and united in one strong phalanx, although composed of such discordant materials, they seemed to present an impenetrable barrier to the progress of the twelve poor 'unlearned and ignorant men' to whom the diffusion of the word of truth was committed. Nevertheless, armed simply with that word, and 'strong with that word, and 'strong in the Lord and the power of His might,' they went forth. The arrows which they shot as they were supplied to them from the heavenly quiver (Matt. 10: 20) pierced the hearts of the King's enemies, and the mighty host of foes either turned their backs and fled, or were melted into friends." For the Christian converts, although greatly multiplied, consisted mostly of the lower classes. The ecclesiastical historian, Milner, says of the period ending A. D. 300: "It does not appear that the number of converts among the learned or great was considerable. The lower ranks of men were best disposed to receive Christianity, and the bulk of its professors consisted of these." Indeed, one of their opponents objected to them that they were mostly "mean, illiterate, ignorant people, such as weavers, tailors, fullers, and day laborers. They can gain only the foolish, the vulgar, slaves, women and children." But when in 323 the Christian church ceased to be a despised denomination, and was established by the Emperor Constantine, as the popular and fashionable State Church, multitudes of the noble and wealthy became professedly members of it, and helped to cause its degeneracy from pristine purity.

The First Three Centuries

Although Paganism was the national religion of the Roman Empire until A. D. 323, yet during that time Christians enjoyed considerable toleration and religious freedom for long intervals.

Severe Persecutions,

however, occasionally broke out against them according to the capricious disposition of the populace or the political rulers. Historians enumerate ten such Pagan persecutions against Christianity in the following order: 1st, by Nero, A. D. 65, for 3 years. 2d by Domitian, A. D. 94, for 3 years. 3d, by Trajan, A. D. 103, very short. 4th, by Antoninus, A. D. 161, for 18 years. 5th, by Severus, A. D. 202, for 9 years. 6th, by Maximus, A. D. 235, for 3 years. 7th, by Decius, A. D. 249, for 3 years. 8th, by Valerian, A. D. 256, for 3½ years. 9th, by Aurelian, A. D. 273, very short. 10th, by Diocletian, A. D. 303, ten years.

The Second Seal.

A. D. 324–566. "And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see. And there went out another horse that was red; and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another; and there was given unto him a great sword." The Christian Church Militant underwent a change from Primitive Purity as a White Horse to Fratricidal Strife and Fiery Discord prefigured as a Red or Fire-Colored Horse about the era of its nationalization by Constantine in 324.

Even as early as toward the close of the third century, shortly before Diocletian's persecution in 303, many of the bishops began, according to Eusebius' history to manifest considerable ambition, pride, contentiousness and abuse of their authority. Milner says that the declension of piety and decayed state of the church began about A. D. 270. Mosheim represents that when freed from persecution by the Pagan power, they speedily engaged in dispute and contentions with one another. Alexander and Chrysostom describe the office of a Bishop as giving rise to constant intrigue, envy, and strife in the rivalry between candidates to secure their election.

The ambitious and usurping spirit thus early evinced in connection with the Bishoprics, was powerful stimulated by Constantine's nationalization of the Christian Church in 324; thenceforth election to a Bishopric, or See, as it is termed, conferred upon the successful candidate in many cases extensive authority and wealth.

Hallam, the historian, says: "It was among the first effects of the conversion of Constantine to give not only a security but a legal sanction to the territorial acquisitions of the church. Passing rapidly from a condition of distress and persecution to the summit of prosperity, the church degenerated as rapidly from her ancient purity. Covetousness became almost a characteristic vice."

The 242 years of this second seal period were also remarkable for the development of that plunged the visible church into discord. Of these, the most notable were the Donatists, who, under Donatus resorted to arms against the Cecilian, the Bishop of Carthage, elected in A. D. 311; the Arians, who denied the equality of Christ with God much as Unitarians and Socinians do now; the Pelagians, who denied the doctrine of original sin; the Nestorians, who contended that the union of Godhead and manhood in Christ was a union of will and not of nature; and the Monophysites, who denied the manhood of Christ, holding that His nature was purely divine.

Schisms, Heresies, and Dissensions

About 514 a bitter dissension also arose between the Latin and the Greek section of the Church, regarding the addition of a few words to a hymn called Trisagion (thrice holy, Isa. 6: 3.) The two rival factions met in the Cathedral at Constantinople, and each chanted the hymn according to their respective versions. They then fought against each other. The streets were crowded with swarms of men and women: the legions of monks in regular array marched and shouted and fought at their head, and large numbers of persons were killed,

* Extracts from articles published in The Prophetic News for September and October. Price, six cents each. For sale at the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week. Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to The Christian Herald. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Large Increase in Post Office Business which has followed the two latest concessions to the public, will, it is expected, still further reduce the deficit in that department this year. When the rate was reduced from three to two cents, and when subsequently the weight of letters which might be sent for two cents was increased from half an ounce to an ounce, it was expected that the deficiency between income and expenditure would reach nine million dollars. It proved to be less than seven millions. This year according to facts ascertained by the Washington correspondent of the New York Times, the Postmaster-General will report a deficiency of less than four millions, and will, in his report, express the opinion that the Postal service will very soon be entirely self-supporting.

The Memorial to the President and Congress from England, in favor of the settlement of all international differences by arbitration, has arrived here, and is to be presented to the President as soon after his return to Washington as convenient. It is signed by two hundred and thirty-one members of the English Parliament. The memorialists say that they "learn with the utmost satisfaction that various proposals have been introduced into Congress urging the Government of the United States to take the necessary steps for concluding with the Government of Great Britain a treaty which shall stipulate that any differences or disputes arising between the two Governments, which cannot be adjusted by diplomatic agency, shall be referred to arbitration. Should such a proposal happily emanate from the Congress of the United States, our best influence shall be used to insure its acceptance by the Government of Great Britain." They also express the hope that if America and England agreed upon such a plan, other nations, now exhausted by their preparations for war, would join the peaceful compact. The effort is commendable, but students of prophecy know that war, rather than peaceful arbitration, will continue the rule in Europe, during the next few years.

Several Attempts to Harmonize the Democratic factions of New York were made last week. The County Democracy and Tammany Hall succeeded at last by appointing a conference committee to agree on a basis of union. Irving Hall appears to be working independently and in opposition to both the County Democracy and Tammany Hall. It is significant that the questions in dispute were not as to principles, but spoils. The fair distribution of the offices was the difficulty that was troubling the rival organizations, and the office of District Attorney was the coveted prize. The influence which this official wields is perfectly well appreciated, for the politicians are aware that in the pigeon-holes of his official desk there are indictments lying which it would be exceedingly inconvenient to have pressed, and many other indictments may be added to the list in a short time. Besides this office there are two Supreme Court judges and several other judges, the Controller, Surrogate, etc., to be elected.

The Opposition of the Mormon Church to the appointment of a receiver has been met with a direct contradiction. On October 19, the Assistant District Attorney made the opening argument in reply to the demurrer. He contended that Congress had power to disincorporate, and that the church, being declared disincorporated by law, the only party entitled to hold the property was a Receiver, and not Trustees appointed by a disestablished church. He dwelt at length on the fraudulent nature of the bills of sale, and showed how impossible it was for the church to convey so much personal property, situated in all quarters of the Territory, in three days. A suggestion is made, and finds favor, that in the event of Utah pressing a claim for admission as a State, a sixteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution should be adopted as speedily as possible, prohibiting polygamy in all States and Territories.

The Interesting Experiment in Criminal treatment which has been inaugurated in Massachusetts is attracting the attention of the public in other States. By a law passed by the last Legislature, any criminal convicted of a State prison offense, who has previously served two terms of more than three years each, must be sentenced to twenty-five years' imprisonment, whatever may be the punishment assigned for that particular crime. The first prisoner of whom this law has laid hold is a horse-thief. He has received the twenty-five year sentence and has disappeared behind the bars. This effort to rid the State of habitual and incorrigible criminals, will probably have the effect of driving beyond its borders any criminal who has served two terms. In that case other States may find it advisable to pass a similar law.

The Strenuous Opposition of the Mayor of New York to the companies engaged in burying the wires of the telegraph and electric lights has excited no little curiosity as to his motive. The wires have repeatedly obstructed firemen in their efforts to extinguish fires, and have in some instances led to a loss of life. Beside this, the cumbrous and unsightly poles which have for many years disfigured the streets are a nuisance that cannot too soon be got rid of. It was expected that the project of abolishing the poles and getting the wires underground would, when it had once been endorsed by the Legislature, be cordially welcomed and earnestly forwarded by the Mayor of the city, whoever might happen at that time to hold the office. Mayor Hewitt, however, has done all in his power to hinder it. He explained last week to the Electrical Commission that his action was prompted by a desire for clean streets, and the work of burying the wires involved digging up the pavements to lay the conduits. It is well for the city that the Mayor can only obstruct, and cannot stop the work altogether.

The Breach Between Prohibitionists and Republicans will be widened rather than closed by the result of the recent convention in Nebraska. Of late years the Republican conventions in that State have made a bid for Prohibition votes by pledging the party to the submission of an amendment to the popular vote. The pledge did not appear to bind the party except during the campaign, for although the Republicans controlled the Legislature, the amendment was not submitted. This year the Republican convention went a step farther. The committee on Resolution incorporated the Prohibition plank as usual but it was vigorously opposed in the convention. It escaped being laid on the table by a very narrow majority, and it was finally shelved by an amendment remitting the question to the primaries in 1888, This will carry the party over the Presidential year, and if the Prohibitionists think the reference to the primaries has been made in good faith some Prohibitionist votes may be secured for the Republican ticket. Outside the State however, the impression is produced that it is a mere trick, rather smart but not honorable.

General Caffarel, the French General who was proved to have sold decorations and accepted bribes, has been removed from his post of chief of staff of the War office, and his name has been struck from the army list. He will receive a yearly pension of $1,600. The Council of the Legion of Honor has recommended that his name be struck from the list of members of the Legion, and that he be deprived of the right of wearing any decoration of the order. The War office having disposed of the matter, the case of General Caffarel and the others implicated in the sale of decorations will now be handed over to the correctional police. General Caffarel has been arrested and lodged in the public prison. No charge of complicity has been proved against General Boulanger. His sentence of thirty days' arrest was inflicted for a breach of discipline in having spoken disrespectfully of his superior officer to a reporter.

Riotous Conflicts with the Police were Reported from London each day last week. On Monday a deputation of unemployed working men went to the Mansion House, the official residence of the Lord Mayor, and demanded that they be supplied with work. The Board of Aldermen referred them to the workhouse. When the deputation reported the result of their mission to those who had sent them from Trafalgar Square, the mob became infuriated and marched toward the city. On their way they attacked a detachment of police with stones. The police charged upon the crowd and scattered them, capturing a number of banners. Several policemen and about fifty of the crowd were injured. On Tuesday there was another conflict in which the police suffered seriously, but were finally victorious. On subsequent days there was more fighting, and an uneasy feeling of alarm is spreading throughout the city. Socialists are believed to have disguised themselves and mixed with the starving men, and urged them to deeds of violence. There is unquestionable serious distress in London, but the leaders in the disturbances are not starving workingmen but desperadoes from the slums.

Mr. Gladstone Delivered two Important speeches at the Congress of the Liberal Federation on October 18 and 19 at Nottingham. They will serve to bind more closely together both his friends and his enemies. He openly avowed his intention to agitate for the disestablishment of the Church in Wales, for the abolition of the law of entail, which compels the owners of large estates to leave them in bulk to their eldest sons, for the abrogation of the law allowing the owners of property in different counties to have a vote in each county and other radical changes of great importance. These, however, he said, must wait until the Irish question was satisfactorily settled. He hinted that he was prepared now to make concessions in his orignal plan for giving home rule to Ireland. He said he wanted a statutory Parliament in Dublin, subject to Imperial control. There was nothing to prevent any reasonable man from agreeing with the Liberals' Irish proposals, without reference to this or that particular or detail such as "the retention of Irish members at Westminister, the use of Imperial credit in the purchase of Irish land, the delegation instead of the surrender of power to an Irish Parliament and in regard to the mode of action by which and the particular time when, a system that is English and anti-national in spirit is to be changed for a system that is Irish and national in spirit. He contended that Ireland might be satisfied by a scheme of Home Rule which would not impair but strengthen and consolidate the unity of the empire.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the Christian Herald to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

A Meeting of Representative Clergymen of all denominations was held in New York on October 17, to organize in defense of the observance of the Lord's Day against the attacks of liquor dealers, and the encroachments of managers of popular amusements. The fact that Mayor Hewitt has openly advocated the opening of certain liquor saloons and beer-gardens on Sundays, doubtless had much to do with the action of the clergymen. They did not content themselves with a simple protest, but passed a resolution urging Christian citizens to ascertain definitely from every candidate for election to the Senate or Assembly whether he will defend the Lord's Day against any relaxation of the present laws for its maintenance, and also advised such citizens to take effective means for the defeat of any candidate, of whatever political party, who declines to commit himself to this defense. A committee was appointed, comprising a prominent clergyman of every denomination, to devise the best means of counteracting the present tendency to desecrate the Sabbath.

An Illustration of the Growing Lawlessness and want of respect for the sanctity of human life is afforded by an incident chronicled by the Chicago journals. A youth of eighteen, who was on bad terms with his step-father waited on Sunday morning, October 16, among the throng outside a church door for his step-father to come out of the sacred edifice. As soon as he emerged the youth produced a pistol and shot him. A significant fact about the affair is that the mother of the lad, who is also the wife of the victim, approved the crime, and said she had intended to shoot him herself. The family does not belong to the criminal classes, but moves in good society. Crimes of this character are becoming alarmingly frequent, and are not confined to Western cities. While they are committed, it is absurd to boast of our national progress. In civilized countries wrongdoers are not murdered in open daylight by their relatives. They are handed over to the proper authorities for punishment. It is time that one or more of these wealthy and influential persons, who take the law into their own hands, were made an example of for the sake of society.

A Lake Has Been Poisoned through a Hail storm in South Carolina. Some weeks ago a statement was published that from some mysterious cause the waters of Daroko Lake had become poisonous, and the fish in it had died. It was not credited at the time, but is now confirmed by a citizen who investigated the matter at the request of Gen. Greely, Chief of the Signal Service. The lake is surrounded by a dense mass of black gum trees, the leaves of which are strongly impregnated with tannic acid. The bottom of the lake contains a slight deposit of iron. The poisoning of the water is due to the falling in of bruised leaves and branches, the tannic acid emanating from which, mingled with the iron, formed tannate of iron, causing the water to turn black and bitter as quinine, and poisoning the fishes by thousands. This singular disaster is a type of that terrible visitation which will occur in the last days of this dispensation when the wormwood falling into the waters at the sound of the seventh trumpet will poison one third of them (Rev. 8:11).

A Man was Rescued from a Living Grave in New York on October 19. Last May a large cotton warehouse in King Street caught fire and was completely gutted. Since that time men have been at work digging out and raking over the bales of cotton which fell into the basement and separating the uninjured cotton from that which was injured by fire or water. While they were at work on Wednesday of last week they came upon a half-dead man lying under some bales which formed an arch over him. He was almost lifeless through want of air and food. On being removed to Bellevue Hospital, he said that five days previously he arrived in New York without a cent. Being tired and footsore he looked around for a place to sleep. He noticed a hole in the wall of the half-burned warehouse and crept through. He crawled among the cotton bales until he found a sheltered nook, in which he lay down and slept. When he awoke he tried to get out, but found that the hole by which he had entered was boarded up. He went back to his hiding place, intending to make another effort to get out of the building at night; but before night the workmen in moving the bales completely blocked him in and he had to remain there under the cotton for what seemed to him many days and nights. When he was taken out he was almost dead, and the hospital surgeons are doubtful about his recovery. He is not the first man who in seeking rest has ventured into danger, counting on an easy return, and has found the way of escape closed against him. Liquor and opium both hold many such prisoners in their power (Isa. 5 : 11–13).

A Time of Terror Never to be Forgotten by the man who passed through it is described by a Connecticut journal. It states that a citizen of that State was belated a few nights ago in a journey. In order to save time he took a short cut which brought him on the railroad track. He knew that it was a dangerous route to travel in the darkness, so he hurried on as rapidly as he could walk over the ties. As he stumbled along he caught his foot between a plank and a rail at a crossing. While trying to get free he heard an approaching train. As he struggled it came nearer and nearer, until, just as he made up his mind for death, the headlight showed him that he was on a switch and not on the main line. After the train thundered by a watchman released him. The transition from horror and despair to joy and thankfulness was such as the awakened sinner experiences when, having fully realized the terrors of his situation as a sinner before God, he becomes conscious of his safety in Christ. Sometimes the backsliding Christian is restored by a similar transition through some providential escape (Ps. 91 : 7–9).

Fifty Dollars For The Site of a Great City was all that was paid to the original owner, less than half a century ago. The Oregonian of Portland, Oregon, has been publishing some historical facts in connection with that city. Among them is the statement that in 1843, when there was not a single house built where now the stately city sits in wealth and power, the land on which it is built belonged to a settler, who was anxious to dispose of it. After seeking a purchaser for some time without success, he offered it to Mr. Frank W. Pettygrove, a merchant at Oregon City, for fifty dollars. Mr. Pettygrove went and looked at the land, and believing it would prove valuable, invested fifty dollars in it. He built a store there, made a road from it to Tualaten Plains, and soon it became a thriving village, then an important town, and now it is a great commercial centre, the pride of the North West. What the land, which in 1843 was sold for fifty dollers would now bring, if it were put up for sale in one lot, it would be difficult to estimate. Looking back now, the original cost seems ridiculously small. The enormous appreciation in this case is due to business foresight and sagacity, but the time is coming when the world will wonder at an apparent disproportion of another kind due to other qualities. Men will be placed in "authority over ten cities," simply because they have been faithful to their Lord (Luke 19 : 17).

A Dollar Commission to Find a Wife Was offered by a citizen of New Jersey to an official at Castle Garden on October 17. The man is a farmer who, being tired of living alone, but having no leisure to look around for a wife thought he might save time and trouble by intrusting the commission to the immigration man. He described the kind of woman he wanted, and said, that if the man could find her it would "be a dollar in his pocket." He stipulated that she must be pretty and have some money, but if very pretty he would waive the money consideration. She must be good and loving and Irish. Moreover, she must have black hair, and know how to play the piano. She must not be over twenty-five. She must have no male cousins or relations, who might want to live on his farm in the summer. He placidly added that he had $100 in cash, a decent house, two goats and a pig, and from his manner and appearance when stating the conditions it appeared that he considered his offer a very attractive one. Last Thursday the farmer received notice that the official had found a suitable person. He came over and interviewed her. She filled all the stipulations but one. She had red hair instead of black, but in consideration of her other good qualities the farmer waived that point, and paid out the dollar in evident satisfaction. If she proves a good wife of the Biblical model (Prov. 31 : 10–27) the farmer may congratulate himself on having secured a treasure at a very insignificant outlay. It may be hoped, for his sake, that his wife will not be satisfied with proving that she is worth only what she cost, or her service will be but small. That principle, however, if applied to the Church, the bride of Christ, would demand complete complete consecration, for she was purchased by His precious blood (Eph. 5 : 25, 26).

BRIEF NOTES.

Dr. George F. Pentecost has commenced revival services at Amesbury, Mass. He will remain there six weeks and then open at Augusta, Me.

The Association for the Advancement of Women is holding its fifteenth annual congress in the Masonic Temple, Sixth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, New York. It commenced yesterday, October 26.

Dr. T. J. Barnardo, the philanthropist, of London, has secured 5,000 acres of land in the northwestern part of the Dominion of Canada, and proposes to make of the entire block an industrial farm where homeless lads of London may be sent.

Ying Lee, the proprietor of a Chinese laundry, at Hartford, Conn., has given up his business and entered Mr. Moody's school, at Northfield, Mass., to study for missionary work in China. He is described as remarkably intelligent, and of untiring industry in study.

Mr. E. P. Telford commenced services last Sunday in Dr. J. W. Hamilton's church, Somerville, Boston, Mass. He has received invitations to labor at Mr. Moody's church in Chicago, and at Fall River, Mass., Grand Rapids, Mich., Philadelphia, Pa., Wilmington, Del., and Raleigh, N. C.

Rev. George C. Needham commenced a series of services in the Wylie Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, on October 16. All through the week the church was densely crowded, and large numbers remained after the services for prayer and personal conversation. The Philadelphia Inquirer refers in glowing terms to the good that resulted from Mr. Needham's former visit.

The Board of Managers of the American Bible Society, at its recent meeting at the Bible House, New York, made grants and consignments of books for distribution in the home and foreign field amounting to $11,090. This includes a grant of 5,000 Bibles in Esthonian to the Russian agency, and an appropriation of books to the value of $3,000, for colportage in the States and Territories in our own land.

Dr. Munhall's services in the Granite Rink, Toronto, have been much blessed. At the afternoon meetings, for women only, the hall had to be opened long before the hour announced, the crowd which had collected at the doors having become so dense that an accident was feared. The night meetings, for men only, attracted a still larger attendance, large numbers being unable to obtain admission. At one of the meetings more than two hundred rose to ask for prayers and remained to the inquiry meeting.

Mr. Parker, one of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's evangelists, whose services in America last year, in connection with Mr. Mateer, were much blessed, arrived by the Aurania from England on October 17. He is accompanied by his sister, who has rendered him efficient aid in his evangelistic services in England. Since leaving America, Mr. Parker has visited Australia, New Zealand and India. In South India his services were much blessed—more than one thousand natives made a profession of faith during his two months' stay. Mr. and Miss Parker propose remaining a few months in America, and will be glad to preach and sing the Gospel. Their address is the Young Men's Christian Association, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Canvassars Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD 63 Bible House, New York.

WALKING IN DARKNESS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God." Isaiah 1 : 10.

Two Marks of the True Man of God—Fear and Obedience—His Walk in Darkness—I. What that Condition is—Light his Normal Element—The Darkness of Trouble and Perplexity—A Test of Grace—Very Sorrowful—Bewildering—II. What to Trust to in the Darkness—The Name of God—His Character—Testimony of Experience—III. Reasons For Trust—The Promises Made For Darkness—What Anchors are for—IV. What will Come of Trusting—Faith—Humility—Strength—Greater Light.

See how the Lord inquires for His people. In every congregation He asks this question: "Who is among you that feareth the Lord?" These are the wheat upon the threshing-floor. As to the thoughtless, "What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." The Lord's heart is towards the hearts that fear Him, and He makes inquiry concerning them, because He loves them, and cares for them, and helps them in their day of trouble.

Observe how clearly the Lord describes His own people. The description is brief, but remarkably full: "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of His servant?" Holy reverence within the heart, and careful obedience in the life, these are the of the true man of God. He fears his God, and therefore he obeys that heavenly messenger whom God has sent. No servant of God has such authority over us that we are bound to obey him in all things, except One, that Servus servorum, that Servant of servants, who was also Rex regum, the King of kings.

Two Infallible Marks

Note that the Lord not only makes an inquiry for these people, but He takes note of their condition. He is not indifferent to their state. When they walk in darkness He is with them, and when they have no light He still beholds them. The Lord is very sensitive to the sorrows of His chosen, and very quick to help them. When He finds them walking in darkness He graciously counsels and advises them. Thus saith the gracious Lord to the benighted one: "Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God."

I. First, then, what is the condition into which a child of God may come? The person described is one who fears the Lord, and obeys the voice of His servant, yet "walketh in darkness, and hath no light." To many who know nothing of Christian experience, this condition might seem to be a surprising one. Shall the child of light walk in darkness?

The Normal Condition of a child of God is to walk in the light, as God is in the light, and to have fellowship with Him; how comes he, then, to have no light? He that believes in the Lord Jesus Christ has passed from darkness to light, and he shall never come into condemnation; how, then, does he come into darkness? In the darkness of sin and ignorance we no longer walk; but with the darkness of trouble and perplexity we are sometimes surrounded. The Lord is our light and our salvation, and therefore we do not walk in that darkness wherein the prince of darkness rules supreme; but yet at times we are in the gloom of sadness, and we see no light of consolation.

It is not always so. Many Christian people go on year after year in uninterrupted sunshine; and I do not see why we should not all look upon continued joy in the Lord as possible to ourselves. Why should not our peace flow on like an ever-widening river? Those of you who are always bright need not be afraid of your gladness. O Lord! we are now and then in the dark, but we do not wish others to be so. Spiritual darkness of any sort is to be avoided, and not desired; and yet, surprising as it may seem to be, it is a fact that some of the best of God's people frequently walk in darkness.

We should have thought, judging after the manner of men, that the good were always happy, as one of our children's songs so positively declares. When first brought home to the great Father, we thought that it would be and fatted calf, world without end. But it is not so; we have heard the elder brother's ungenerous voice since then, and we have found out many things which we wish we could forget We dreamed that the year would be summer throughout all its months: the time of the singing of birds was come, and we reckoned that it was to continue through the year. Alas! the birds have ceased their songs, and the swallows are pluming their wings to depart, and in a few days we shall be walking among the falling leaves, and preparing our winter garments wherewith to meet the biting frosts. We have not found perfect bliss beneath the moon. If, instead of judging by the sight of our eyes, we had turned to the records of the family of God, we should long ago have been disabused of our ideal heaven below. It is written, "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth." Be not, therefore, surprised as though some strange thing had happened unto you, if you find yourself in darkness; for this text warns you of what you may expect. We may fear God and carefully obey His servant, and yet we may be out after dark and find the streets of daily life as foggy and obscure for us as for others.

All Music and Dancing

This condition is a severe test of grace. When darkness lowers down upon the believer's mind it is a great trial to his heart. He cries, "Where am I? and how came I here? If I be a child of God, why am I thus? Did I really repent and obtain light so as to escape the darkness of sin? If so, why am I conscious of this Thick Gloom?

Did I really joy in Christ and think I had received the atonement? Why, then, has the sun of my joy gone down so hopelessly? Where are now the loving kindnesses of the Lord?" The good man begins to question himself as to every point of his profession: for in the dark he cannot even judge his own self. What is worse, he sometimes questions the truth which he has aforetime received, and doubts the very ground on which his foot is resting. Satan will come in with vile insinuations questioning everything, even as he questioned God's Word when he ruined our race in the garden. It is possible at such times even to question the existence of the God we love, though we still cling to Him with desperate resolve. This darkness is very trying to faith, trying to love, trying to hope, trying to patience, trying to every grace of the spiritual man. Blessed is the man who can endure it.

While it is thus trying, it is also very sorrowful. It is a pleasant thing for the eyes to behold the sun, and a painful thing to be without it. We are in heaviness at such times. The darkness which is spoken of in the text includes providential trial of many sorts. At the present moment many are in the dark in reference to Temporal Circumstances.

Business used to prosper, and things went well with them, but everything runs the other way at this season. They were not ambitious to accumulate great riches, they were perfectly satisfied if they had bread to eat, and raiment to put on: but now even this seems to be denied them. They are out of situation, or business is gradually dying out, and their means of support will soon disappear. This is a new trial for those who have hitherto had abundance, and naturally it makes them walk in darkness. Oh, you that have a superfluity of this world's goods, you little know the darkness which comes over the hearts of God's servants when they are not able to provide things honest in the sight of all men, and are afraid that the Lord's name will be evil spoken of because they cannot meet their engagements. When parents look at their dear children, and wonder where the next meal of bread will come from, times are dark indeed. Still, mark you, this is not the darkness—the darkness which might be felt. Many of God's people, by reason of a strong faith, are happier in their adversity than they were in their prosperity.

The Real Darkness

has come when our evidences of grace are no longer visible, and conscience pronounces an adverse verdict. As the Psalmist says, "We see not our signs." The marks of grace are hidden. Self-examination fails to reveal to the conscience the infallible marks of the Holy Spirit's work within the soul, and then the child of God feels that he is in an evil case. While I know I am the son of God I am undismayed; but when my sonship is in doubt I am distressed indeed. If a clear sense of God's love is also withdrawn from the soul darkness follows. He that used to rejoice in that love which passeth knowledge now feels his heart to be as hard as a stone, without tender emotion, and almost without living desire. The Holy Spirit is leaving us for a while, that we may know what poor things we are apart from Him, and how useless are ordinances without His divine presence in them.

Perhaps the worst feature of this darkness is, that it is so bewildering. You have to walk, and yet your way is hidden from your eyes. This is hard work. God will help His children, will He not? Ay, that He will, but we cannot see how! If you have ever steamed up the Rhine, you have looked before you, and it has looked as if you could go no further; the river seemed to be a lake; great mountains and vast rocks blocked up all further advance. Suddenly there has been a turn in the stream, and at once a broad highway has been before you, inviting you to enter the heart of the country. Perhaps in Providence you are in one of those parts of the river of life where no progress appears possible. You are quite blocked up, and this causes you darkness of mind. Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him, and He shall give thee thy heart's desire.

Worse still is that bewilderment which comes upon us in the darkness as to what we ourselves ought to do. Men of God know, as a broad principle, that they are to do right; but the question is, what is right? Which of many courses should I take? We beg the Lord to make our path straight, but we Cannot Discover the Road.

We look for a sign-post which we had seen long ago, and it is gone: we hasten to a friend, but he is as much perplexed as we are. This suspense is the hardest part of the ordeal. Not to see our way, nay, not to see foothold for the next step, is a specially trying position. If we knew what to do, or what to prepare for, we we would gird our loins for the occasion; but knowing nothing, we are shut up, and cannot come forth. Yet you notice in the text that this does not absolve us from daily duty. The text saith, "If he walk in darkness, and see no light." The walk has to be continued, though the light has departed. When it is quite dark, it is safe to sit down till the day dawns. What if you may not remain where you are? Something has to be done, and done at once; and thus you are compelled to walk on, though you cannot see an inch before you. What but a divine faith can do this? Here lies the stress of the difficulty: inaction might be simple, but activity in the dark, this must be the Lord's doing, and we must cry to Him to work in us.

II. But now, secondly, I am going to turn to a practical part of this matter.

What is There to Trust to when you are in such a condition as that? What is there to trust to? Well, says the text, "Let him trust in the name of the Lord," or, as it should be read, "in the name of Jehovah." What is there to trust in the name of Jehovah? It is "I Am," and signifies His self-existence. This is a fine foundation for trust. Your friend is dead, but Jehovah is still living as the "I AM." Those who could have succored you have forsaken you, but He says, "I am with thee." Trust thou in Him, for He is, and ever will be. He says, "Be still, and know that I am God."

It is also good, dear friends, when you are thinking of the name of the Lord, to remember that to you it signifies what you have seen of God in your own experience. This is His memorial or name to you. A grand thing it is, when at present you have no consolation, to recollect the consolation you enjoyed in years gone by. Oh the days when He did help us! when His arm was made bare on our behalf! I recollect that morning, you recollect it too, when the Lord brought you up out of the horrible pit. You said, "Blessed be His glorious name! What a deliverance I have had! I shall never doubt Him again!" O poor stupid, you are Doubting Him Now!

But, furthermore, the text says, "Let him stay upon his God." Let him lean upon his God; make God his stay, his prop, his rest. This is a variation from the former sentence. He was to trust in the name of Jehovah, but now he is to lean upon "his God." You have taken God to be your God, have you not? If so, He has also taken you to be His own. There is a covenant between you; lean on that covenant. Treat it as a valid covenant in full force. Brethren, I am often brought to this pass, that I say to myself—Lord, if these Scriptures be not indeed a revelation of God, and inspired, then it is all over with me, for I have no other hope. But if this Book be a faithful record of what God has said to me—and I am sure it is—then I cannot too confidently rest in what He has here recorded. I will prove the truth of the Gospel. I will lean upon His promise with all my might. I have never yet hung a weight upon God's promise too heavy for it to bear. Wherefore I say to you, in the language of the text, if you walk in darkness, and have no light, trust in the name of the Lord, and stay yourself upon God.

III. Thirdly, and with great brevity,

Why Should We Trust

God at such times? If the Lord has taken away the light, and is trying us so severely, why should we trust him now? I answer thou art bound to trust in the Lord now in the time of darkness because His promises were made for dark times. When a shipwright builds a vessel, does he build it to keep it upon the stocks? Nay, he builds it for the sea and the storm. When he was making it he thought of tempests and hurricanes; if he did not he was a poor shipbuilder. When God made thee a believer He meant to try thee; and when He gave thee the promises, and bade thee trust them, He gave such promises as are suitable for tempest and tossing. O man, I beseech you, do not treat God's promises as if they were curiosities for a museum, but use them as every-day sources of comfort. Trust the Lord whenever your time of need comes on. Besides; notice that here is issued for you, to allow you to trust in God in darkness. Thus saith the Lord, "Let him trust." Satan says he shall not trust, but the Lord says, "Let him trust;" and if the Lord gives us permission to trust we will not suffer the world, the flesh, or the devil to keep us back from our privilege. "Let him trust" is our divine warrant for reposing on the Lord; and we mean to use it. This is the pass-word which lets us through the gates of the promise into the royal chamber of rest. O brothers and sisters, we often act very foolishly, for we try to get a stay within ourselves. Did you ever hear of a captain of a vessel driven about by rough winds who wanted anchorage and tried to find it on board his vessel? He desires to place his anchor somewhere on board the ship where it will prove a hold-fast. He hangs it at the prow, but still the ship drives; he exhibits the anchor upon deck, but that does not hold the vessel; at last he puts it down into the hold, but with no better success. Why, man alive, anchors do not hold as long as they are on board a ship. They must be thrown into the deep, and then they will get a grip of the sea-bottom, and hold the vessel against wind and tide. As long as ever you have confidence in yourselves, you are like a man who keeps his anchor on board his boat, and you will never come to a resting-place. Over with your faith into the great deeps of eternal love and power, and trust in the infinitely faithful One. Then shall you be glad because your heart is quiet. Stay yourself upon your God, because He commands you so to do. Do not dare to hesitate.

A Special Permit

Look, sirs! if you do not stay upon God in the dark, it would seem as if, after all, you did not trust God, but were trusting in the light, or were relying on your own eyesight. Too often we think we believe, and all the while we are miles off believing. Unless we trust in God alone, and in God wholly, we do not trust Him at all. Faith is the opposite of sight. When a man seeth, he hath no need of faith. Blessed is he to whom God is all the light he needs.

IV. So I finish with this last point: What will come of it if we do trust in God in the dark? Now, whether you are saint or sinner, I want you to lend me your ears for a minute or two while I try to show in God when you have nothing else to trust to. Very likely through this darkness of yours you will be humbled. Walking in darkness and seeing no light, you will form a very low idea of yourself, and this will be a choice blessing. Peradventure our darkness is sent to us to make our pride stoop towards the ground, while it gropes its way. Deliverance from pride will be a lasting gain to us. O my friend, thou art getting good by the painful process which reveals to thee thy littleness. Do not fret because thou now seest thy folly, thy helplessness, thine emptiness; this will be a mine of wealth to thee.

What Will Come of Trusting

Next to that, if thou canst trust God in thy trial, thou wilt prove and enjoy the power of prayer. The man that has never needed to pray cannot tell whether there is anything in prayer or not. You that have always had your bread every morning scarcely know the value of that request, "Give us this day our daily bread": but there are poor people here at this hour to whom the petition is peculiarly sweet. He that has prayed for his breakfast values the providence which sent it. If in your darkness you will go to God and trust Him, you will become an established Christian. Yours will not be that timid bulrush faith which bows before every wind: you will be rooted and grounded in assurance of faith. These trials of yours will help to root you fast in the good soil of confidence in God. In days to come you will bless God for the clouds and the darkness, since through them your tried faith grew into strong faith, and your strong faith ripened into full assurance. Doubtless faith will make our nights the fruitful mothers of brighter days.

And let me close by saying, that by-and-by—and perhaps much sooner than we think—we shall come out than we have as yet hoped for. Perhaps half a mile ahead you will find light springing up, even light which has long ago been sown for the righteous. Your weeping is nearly over: joy cometh in the morning. You shall sit down and say, "I did not think the day would break so soon; but now the sun is up, I perceive that even in the night I have been preserved from a thousand dangers, and I have passed safely where none but the Lord himself could have held me up."

Into Greater Light

How loudly some of us will sing when once we get to heaven! When we leap ashore upon the golden strand, how we will magnify that omnipotent love which kept us from ten thousand devouring waves! Surely in the heavenly choirs certain voices reach to higher notes than all others, for they have known the heights and depths of love divine. There will be a fullness, roundness and sweetness of tone about certain voices which shall make them notable among the celestials, even as Heman, and Asaph, and Ethan were notable amongst the sweet singers of Israel in the temple below. Who are these, and whence came they? Surely the one answer will be, "These are they that came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

And you poor troubled ones, who have as yet no hope, and are afraid that God has cast you away forever, come and rest in Jesus Christ this morning. Trust in Jesus, and defy the darkness and the devil who rules over it. So soon as you dare to trust in Christ Jesus our Lord, your salvation is secured. Do but trust, and your Saviour is bound to answer to your trust, and make it good by saving you. The Lord bless you for Jesus' sake! Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

SOUTH AMERICANS CONVERTED IN PARIS.*

A MAN and his wife had come from Montevideo, South America, to form in Paris a financial enterprise for that town, hoping to return before the winter. One evening they were walking about in the square St. Jacques, when they made the acquaintance of two German maids, who pressed them to come to the meeting. The husband yielded, saying, "it will pass an hour, let us go." They found it pleasant from its novelty, but, the following evening the story of Christ's dying on the cross was told; the hymns were all about the cross. "I had never," says the wife, "heard Jesus spoken about in this wise; my heart was touched and I cried. So I got a Bible and began to read and pray from my heart. Then on Wednesday I was thinking, ought I to leave my religion? When I went to the meeting the text was 'How long halt ye between two opinions?' As the speaker proceeded, I could hesitate no longer. I resolved to serve God and trust alone in the sacrifice of Jesus and His mediation and then I was filled with joy." She added, "we are now on the eve of returning to America." We knelt down in their lodgings to praise God that he had revealed to her His Son Jesus, and to pray that her husband also might be made partaker of the same faith. Her progress was rapid, and a few weeks afterward she expressed a wish to go to the Lord's table. I was surprised to find her views so clear, so spiritual—surely she was taught of the spirit—and her German friend had helped her in the study of the Bible. On the first Sabbath of October she was received as a member of the Lutheran Church Rue des Billetes.

The wife soon became anxious for the salvation of her husband; she wanted him to share her faith, to be a partaker of her joy; and God has given to her the desire of her heart. On Sunday, December 16, she spoke at our fraternal meeting, giving public testimony to the great change wrought within her, and praising God for what He had done. At the close of the meeting she requested that prayer should be offered for herself and husband at our special service at the oratoire that night.

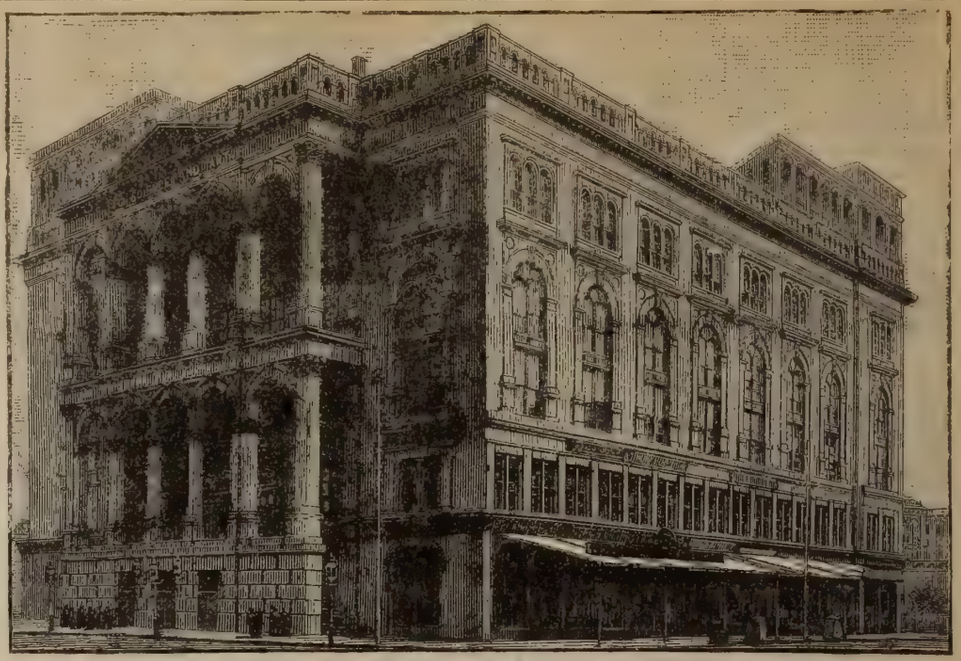
At the close of the service she came to me with a face radiant, as I have seldom seen, with inward joy. Her husband was with her. "My husband is decided; he is convinced," she said, "he has given himself. Is it not so?" To this appeal he answered, with quivering lips and moistened eyes, "Oh, yes, thank God!" "Our financial loss has been great," said the wife, "but no material loss can be compared with our spiritual gain; no sacrifice too great in view of what we have found in Paris."

Up to the time of their leaving Paris they both gave clear evidence of genuine attachment to the Saviour. On August 24 we bade

---

* From "A Cry from the Land of Calvin and Voltaire." A series of records of the McAll Mission, with eight illustrations; pp. 181. Price 75 cents. Published by Anson D. F. Randolph, 38 West 23d St., New York.

Mr. Charles Herald, the Evangelist, of Chicago.



The Cooper Union, New York, Engaged for Mr. Herald's Services.

them farewell in the reunion Rue St. Honore, commending them to God, with prayer that they might be made a blessing in their distant home. They were greatly moved: we too felt much in taking their hands, probably for the last time on earth. The wife said, "My husband was later in setting out; but he has gone before me now." So they left Paris, to use their own expression, "poorer in pocket, but rich in heart."

MR. CHARLES HERALD,

The Evangelist for Cooper Union, New York.

(See Portrait on this Page.)

THE sight of the Bowery, New York, and of the streets that branch out of it, is one that cannot fail to deeply impress the Christian spectator. The teeming thousands who dwell within a few blocks of that great thoroughfare, who hurry along it in the daytime and stroll through it at night, find in it scores of rum shops, many theatres and places of amusement, and traps and pitfalls of various kinds. It is well that right there a thoroughly organized effort for its evangelization should be centred. This is now to be done. Cooper Union (a picture of which appears on this page) has in times past been the birthplace of many souls. Turning in there out of the glare and glitter of the street many a sin-tossed, despairing heart has found rest in Jesus. An interval in the services unhappily occurred, then came a feeble attempt to revive them, but now to the joy of all Christian hearts in the city it is announced that a vigorous, well-arranged campaign has been planned, and that Mr. Charles Herald, of Chicago, an evangelist well known for his energy and self-devotedness, is to have charge of the work. He will have the best wishes of the churches, and, it may be hoped, all their prayers.

Mr. Charles Herald is a native of Manchester, England, where he was born just forty years ago. His parents were godly people, and his father was for twenty-five years an elder in the Presbyterian Church. Charles was intended for a commercial career, and at the age of fourteen was taken into the employment of a dry goods firm in Manchester, doing a large foreign trade. He remained there eight years, but when his father's death occurred, he drifted into dissipated ways, became addicted to liquor, and finally left the city and country.

He went to Buenos Ayres, South America, got into a good position there, and was sent by the firm who employed him to their branch house in Monte Video. There he lived a very careless, wild life until his marriage with a Scotch young lady, who came out from Glasgow to link her life with his. Reformation was attempted and for a time carried out. He became careless again, however, and this time he lost his situation. He earned a precarious living, first at teaching and then in the printing business. A beautiful girl baby had been born, but God took her to Himself when she was six months old, thus knocking at the father's heart to bring him to Christ. But he was deaf to the call, though he grieved over his loss.

He returned with his wife to England and again God blessed him in business until he was sent to London from Manchester to represent the firm who employed him. There he again mixed with bad companions, and he became utterly indifferent to the interests of his business and the admonitions of friends. He was fast traveling the downward road, and utter ruin for body and soul did not appear far distant. But God had better things in store for him.

On Sunday, Jan. 23, 1881, he rose from his bed feeling very wretched and miserable both in body and mind, and the earnest desire came into his heart that he might be delivered from the thraldom of sin and become a Christian. He tried to pray, but got no relief. He tried to sing hymns, but could get no joy. He read God's Word, but found no comfort. The trouble was that all the time he would not fully trust God. He was saying secretly to himself, "I will try and drink less," instead of "I will give it up and trust God for the power to keep from it." At last, at 11 o'clock at night, after his weeping, praying wife had retired to rest, he opened his Bible once more and read 1 John 1:9 and 7. "If we confess our sins He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. And the blood of Jesus Christ His Son, cleanses us from all sin." The light came into his soul. He threw himself on his face before God, confessed his sins, and then and there believed that God had forgiven him and accepted him as His child.

He came to this country shortly after as agent of the firm who had employed him in London, and for a time resided in New York. He afterward removed to Chicago, where he held several responsible positions. He joined the church at Mr. Moody's Tabernacle, and took an active part in its various modes of usefulness. He was a deacon there, a member of the choir, and frequently went on evangelistic expeditions connected with the church. The success with which God blessed his efforts in this last sphere was so remarkable as to cause a serious consideration of duty. It needs some faith, as well as moral courage, to resign a lucrative employment to go out to work for God. But Mr. Herald had the best evidence in the souls that had been given to him, that God was calling him to the work, and he therefore quitted his employment and entered the evangelistic field, assured that God would supply his temporal needs. Last year he labored in the west with much success, and this year he has been engaged at various places in Pennsylvania and New York State. Everywhere God has blessed his labors. He now enters on his extensive and arduous field of labor at Cooper Union, New York City, full of hope and faith, depending on God for success. He asks the prayers of Christian friends on his behalf.

MR. BALFOUR'S PRINCIPLES.

(See Illustration.

IT was a bright, pleasant morning in the early fall, and the sun was gilding all nature with its glorious light as if to give it courage to endure the frost and snow and bitter winds which must soon visit it. But the gladsomeness without gave no cheer to the withered heart of the old man sitting within, busy correcting proofs of his article on political economy for the next number of the Bondholders' Review. It was beyond the power of the sun to do that. Mr. Balfour would have brightened up under the influence of a rise in the value of an investment, but nothing else could raise his spirits. His nephew Harold sat at the window enjoying the prospect, but that was a sign of weakness in him which Mr. Balfour deplored and made him doubt whether, after all, he would do wisely to leave his large fortune to him, smart and brilliant as he was. The silence in the room, disturbed only by the monotonous scratching of Mr. Balfour's pen, was at length broken by the entrance of a clergyman.

"Good morning, Mr. Balfour," said the new comer. "I am raising a little subscription for a poor widow and her three children—Mrs. Latimer you know; poor Latimer fell down dead last week, and he has left nothing to support his family. We want to start the widow in a little business if we can get a small sum together. "You will help, I hope."

"No, Mr. Sefton, I will not, said Mr. Balfour, decisively." It is against my principles to do anything of the kind. There ought to be a law to prevent the possibility of such cases. Men ought not to be allowed to marry, and have families unless they can keep them from becoming a public burden after they die. Why should I be called upon to bear a burden which has resulted from another man's imprudence? No, sir; I have no sympathy with your project, and I will not give."

"I am sorry to hear that, sir, the widow and the fatherless have a claim on Christian sympathy too strong to be ignored."

"I don't see it. If this man had been prudent and thrifty he would have left funds to support them; if he could not do that he ought not to have married. At least he might have insured his life.

"We cannot go behind the facts, sir," said the clergyman. "It is of no use to blame the dead man now. Here we have a woman and three children with no means of support. What are we to do with them? We cannot let them starve."

"Send them to the poor-house then. I help to support that, though that is a wrong principle. Society will never be as it ought to be until every man bears the consqeuence of his own want of prudence. It is a gross injustice that the industrious and the careful should be taxed to provide food and shelter for the families of the idle and improvident, It is doubly unjust to expect them voluntarily to take up an additional burden. I wonder that you as a clergyman should be engaged in such work."

"It is my duty as a clergyman, sir, to succor the widow and the fatherless. The poor are Christ's representatives on earth. In helping and relieving them we are obeying his injunctions. I cannot find the money myself, but I am doing what I can. If all who can afford it will help, the burden will not be heavy for any one."

"That may be so in this case; but it is the principle that I object to. There are thousands of similar cases, and always will be while illogial people provide the funds to relieve them. No, sir; argument is useless with me. I will not contribute."

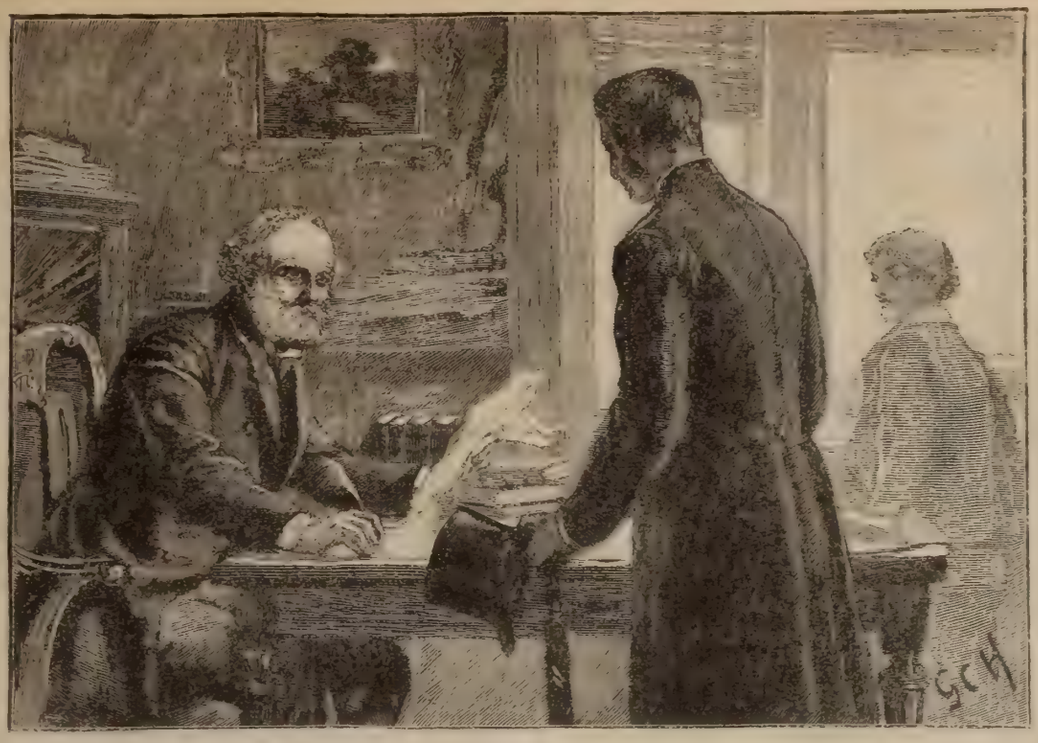
Mr. Sefton went his way sorrowfully, grieved most of all that the old man had so little of the spirit of Christ. All that day he spent in going from place to place on his errand of mercy, and at night he had the happiness of finding that he had received more than enough for his purpose.

As he walked toward the widow's home to tell her of his success, a loud shout behind him startled him from the reverie into which he had fallen. Turning, he saw a runaway horse galloping wildly along the road. One shaft of the vehicle broke at the moment, and a man fell out, but his coat caught in the wheel, and he was dragged along the stony road. Not many feet, however, for Mr. Sefton, at the risk of his life, leaped forward and seized the bridle of the horse, hanging to it with all his might. The horse stopped, and stood panting and trembling. Mr. Sefton looked down at the man lying bleeding and unconscious in the roadway, and recognized Mr. Balfour. The nearest house was the widow's, and Mr. Sefton had the old man carried there. He lay for many days hovering between life and death, and the physician who attended him said his recovery was almost miraculous. Nothing saved him, he said, but his happening to be near a house that was open to him, and the careful nursing the widow had given him.

"I am indebted to you for my life," Mr. Balfour said to the clergyman when he went to see him in his convalescence. "When I saw you in the road ahead of me that day, I never thought you would risk your life on my account. You and this good woman together have given me my life. How shall I ever repay you?"

"Do not speak of repayment, sir," said the clergyman. "Both she and I believe it is our duty as Christians to help any one who is in need of help; we have done that, and no more, and we do not look for payment. Perhaps some day you may have an opportunity of helping some one who has fallen in life's pathway; if so, use it."

"I understand you, sir," said Mr. Balfour, "you have given me a practical lesson. God helping me, I will never let such an opportunity pass me again."



Mr. Balfour Rejects an Appeal on Principle.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 670.)

Meeting with University Students—Incidents of the Journey to Halle—A Visit to Dr. Tholuck—A. H. Franke's Orphan House—A Faithful Moravian Man-Servant—A Good Man in a Wrong Place—A Town with only Two Christians—Mr. Muller in His Father's House—A Bankrupt's Difficulty.

MARCH 25, 1835. I am now at Tubingen in Wirtemberg. The day before yesterday I left Basle. The Lord enabled me to confess Him before a young man and his wife, who were going to Vienna to increase their riches. They listened very attentively, and were not at all opposed. They also esteem the people of God, and have been in the habit of meeting with them. Our parting was very affectionate and solemn, after I had charged them to care about the one thing needful.

I arrived yesterday morning at six, at Schafthausen. I found a brother waiting for me at the post-office, a gentleman of title, who, having been informed by brethren at Basle of my arrival, kindly took me to his house for the two hours I had to stay in that town, to refresh my body with breakfast and my soul with the communion with the brethren whom he had invited to meet me. I was in this town about ten years ago. I was now again within a few minutes walk of The Fall of the Rhine, which was then most attractive to me Now I considered that my time could be spent much more profitably than by going there. The little time that I was at Schafthausen, I received much information concerning the state of the church in many parts of the Continent, from a believing physician and a clergyman; and I also communicated things which with God's blessing, may be profitable. After this I continued my journey to Tubingen. It was with peculiar feelings; for all this way I had traversed ten years ago, to gratify my natural desire for travelling, and now I went over the same ground in the service of Jesus.

I arrived here this morning at nine, having been strengthened to travel two nights and a day and a half, though I left Basle very weak. This morning I saw brother Gundert, the student of divinity, on whose account I have come here, and spent about three hours in conversation with him. Afterwards I called on a Christian professor in the university, who received me kindly. This evening I had a very profitable meeting with the beliving students, for whom the Lord gave me a word.

March 26. This morning I rode with brother Gundert to Stuttgart, both for the sake of seeing more of him, and also that we might unitedly talk over the matter with his father, who lives there. I am now staying at the house of brother Gundert, senior, where I am kindly lodged. I think brother Gundert, junior, will go to the East Indies. His father is not only willing to give him up for the Lord's sake, but seems to consider it an honor to have a son to give to the Lord in this way. This evening I again met several brethren, to whom I spoke about the things of God.

March 30. Halle. From the evening of the 27th till this afternoon, when I arrived here, I have travelled day and night, and have been strengthened by the Lord for it. The whole of this way, several hundred miles, I had gone step by step before. My thoughts were peculiarly affecting as I retraced the mercies which I had experienced at the hands of God. The Lord enabled me repeatedly to confess His name before my changing fellow-travellers. A student spoke to me about the peculiarly good and cheap wine of Weinheim, near Heidelberg. I told him that when, years ago, as a student, like himself, I came through that place, I cared about such things, but that now I knew what was much better than wine. Yesterday a Frenchman, having heard my testimony for Jesus, once or twice, when the last merry companion had left the coach, quitted my society, it being too dull for him, and joined himself to an officer in the army, sitting in the forepart of the coach.

This afternoon I reached Halle, where it pleased the Lord to bring me to the knowledge of Himself, having been graciously preserved hitherto, though a spring was found broken when I got out of the mail. I greatly needed rest, but my heart was too full. I could not sleep. I went first to the house of the brother, where I was first awakened, and afterwards I called on my esteemed tutor, Professor Dr. Tholuck, Counsellor of the Consistory, who received me, after seven years separation, with his former kindness and brotherly love. (He made me lodge with him, and gave thereby a testimony that differences of views, concerning certain parts of God's truth, ought not to separate the children of God; for I had written to him my mind from Bristol two years before).

March 31. To-day I rode with Dr. Tholuck and two young brethren to a believing clergyman, living in the neighborhood of Halle, where we spent the day. Dr. Tholuck told me many encouraging things, particularly this, that several of my former fellow-students, who at the time I was at Halle, knew not the Lord, had been brought to know Him since, and are now laboring in His vineyard. And further, that certain brethren, formerly very weak in the faith, had been established, and are now going on well. May this encourage the heart of the believing reader still to pray for his unconverted friends, and may it strengthen him to hope for better days concerning those of his brethren in the Lord who are now weak in the faith!

April 1. To-day I saw a clergyman, in whom I recognized an individual who studied at Halle whilst I was there, living then in open sin, and who is now, by divine mercy, pointing sinners to the Lamb of God. In the evening I went to the large Orphan-house, built in dependence on the Lord, by A. H. Franke, to see one of the classical teachers, who is the son of my father's neighbor, and whom I had not seen for about fifteen years. I found him, to the joy of my heart, to be a brother in the Lord. This evening I spent in the same room where it pleased the Lord to begin a work of grace in my heart, with several of the same brethren and sisters with whom I used to meet seven years ago, and told them of the Lord's faithfulness, gentleness, kindness and forbearance towards me since I had seen them last. Truly, how good has the Lord been to me since!

April 2. This morning I again spent in calling on the brethren and sisters, being enabled everywhere, before learned and unlearned, to testify about the blessedness of adhering to the Scriptures as our only guide in spiritual things. I left Halle this afternoon, having received much love from the brethren, and rode fifteen miles further, to a beloved brother and old friend, brother Stahlschmidt at Sandersleben, who has shown me much kindness even since I have been in England. I was received with much love by this brother and his dear wife, and his man-servant, also a beloved brother.

[This brother (the man-servant) I met thirty-two years ago at Gnadau, a Moravian settlement, where I several times spent a few days for the refreshment of my soul, to which place he also came, a distance of about forty-five miles, for the same purpose. He was then living with a farmer, ploughing his fields, etc. At that time our hearts were knit together; for I wish it to be understood by any unconverted reader, that, whilst I should at one time have looked with scorn upon such a person, if he had attempted to be familiar with me, now the love of Jesus, in whom we were one, filled my heart with love to him, and these outward distinctions were broken down. In consequence of this acquaintance, he wrote me several letters to Halle, and I wrote to him. These letters were particularly refreshing and spiritual, and therefore I read them to other brethren, and also to brother Stahlschmidt, a wine merchant. On account of this he had a great desire to have brother Kroll living in his house. The Lord, after a time, brought it about, and this brother has now (while this seventh edition is being printed) been living with him about forty years, and is a friend, a brother, and a most faithful servant to this merchant, so that his considerable business is in a great measure intrusted to him; and yet he treats his master with all due respect, and keeps his place as a servant. This latter point is very important, and brings glory to God. For whilst a believing master should treat a believing servant with all kindness and brotherly love, yet the believing servant should with all faithfulness, and particularly with due respect, treat his believing master or mistress].

April 3. Sandersleben. To-day I saw several brethren and sisters, and among others a brother who is about in the state in which he was eight years ago. He has very little enjoyment, and makes no progress in the things of God. The reason is, that, against his conscience, he remains in a calling which is opposed to the profession of a believer. We are exhorted in Scripture to abide in our calling; but only if we can abide in it "with God." 1 Cor. 7: 24. This evening a believing clergyman, and the brethren and sisters of this small town and some neighboring villages, were collected together in brother Stahlschmidt's house, and I spoke to them for two hours about the things of God, particularly about the way in which God has led me, since I saw them, and sought to strengthen their hands in God, and exhorted them to give themselves fully to the Lord. It was a time of refreshing. Indeed the Lord has greatly refreshed my own soul at Basle, Tubingen, Stuttgart, Halle, and elsewhere, whenever I have spoken well of His name. The child of God should make it his particular business to encourage sinners to seek after the Lord, and to increase the faith and love of the brethren, through speaking well of the name of the Lord.

April 4. I left Sandersleben this morning. My brother and host acted according to John 5 and 6; for he sent me on ten miles in his carriage. When I arrived at Aschersleben, to which place brother Stahlschmidt had conveyed me, I had but one station more to my father's house. On the way I asked the driver about a certain individual with whom I studied at Halle, once a companion with me in open sin. I found that he is still in the same state. What a difference has grace made between him and me! Nothing, nothing but grace has made this difference! I, guilty sinner, might still be on the same road, and he, in my room, might have been plucked as a brand out of the fire. But it is not so. May the Lord help me to love Him much, very much, for His distinguishing grace.—Such feelings I had in particular this afternoon, when I saw the town before me in which my father lives, as there are but two in the whole place, as far as I can find out, who love the Lord.

How different is everything with me now from what it was when, as a wicked youth, I used to go to this town, at the time of my vacation. How truly happy am I now! How is my heart now raised above all those things in which I sought, and also fancied I found happiness! Truly all these things are like bubbles to me now! My heart is not here, yea, my heart is not even in England. My heart is, at least in a measure, in heaven, though I am still nothing but a poor, weak worm. I felt the solemnity and importance of having once more the privilege of seeing my aged father. I also felt the importance of being at the place where I had spent much of my time in my youth, and where I had been known as living in sin. My desire was that I might be enabled to walk, the three days I intended to stay here, as it becomes a servant of Christ. For this I had been led to prayer before I left Bristol, and since I have been on the Continent. At last I arrived at my father's house. How affecting to meet him once more!

April 5. Heimersleben. This afternoon a friend of my father called—one who knows not the Lord. After a few minutes, the Lord gave me an opportunity of setting before him the fundamental truths of the Gospel, and the joy and comfort they afford, and have afforded to me. Thus a way was opened to me of stating the truth more fully than ever I had been able to do before, by word of mouth, in the presence of my father and brother, without saying to them, "Thou art the man." I was assisted by the Lord. May He water the seed sown! This evening I went to the only two brethren in this little town, thus to own them as such. It has appeared well to me to call on none whom I know, else I should be expected to call on all; and as I see it right to spend but three days here, I consider that that time should be wholly given to my father, as it may be the last time that I shall see him; yet, at the same time, I judged that it was well pleasing in the sight of the Lord, that I should call on these brethren to strengthen their hands.

When I saw these brethren last in February, 1829, two or three more used to meet with them; but since then the reproach of the Cross has driven the others back into the world. From that time, these brethren have scarcely seen a believer, and never hear the Gospel preached; it was, therefore, a great joy to them to see me. They told me that the Lord had blessed my last visit to them; and having been informed of my coming, they were prepared to ask me many questions. One of them, Knabe, about thirty years ago being possessed of property, was persuaded to lay it out in coal mines. He joined with two men, who spent his property, and after some time they became bankrupts, so that there was not money enough to pay the workmen and some other creditors, even after all their goods had been sold. This evening brother Knabe asked me what he ought to do about the money, which had been left unpaid three and twenty years; whether he was still under any obligation to pay it if he could. My answer was at once that he was, being in the sight of the Lord, still a debtor, though cleared by the laws of men.

He then told me that some years since some property was left to him, and that he also, in the years 1816, 1817 and 1818, when corn prices were very high, had laid by some money, and that therefore he was fully able to pay the debt. He saw immediately that this was the right way, and said that he would act accordingly. He added that now he saw why he had made so little progress in Divine things. I have learned that this brother has lately taken two destitute orphans into his house, whom he entirely supports by the labor of his hands (he earns his bread by thrashing corn), and that the people, though they consider him, on account of his love to the Lord, as weak and foolish, yet look upon him with respect.

(To be Continued.)

CONFESSING CHRIST.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for November 6, Matt. 10: 32–42
Memory Text Matt. 10: 32.

Ver. 32. A Duty and a Reward—What Confession Implies—Discipleship—Obedience—Fealty—Self Denial—Christlikeness—The Confession by Deeds of Love—Verbal Confession Insufficient—The Glory of being Acknowledged by Christ—Ver. 33. Denial May be by Inconsistent Life—Its Fearful Consequences—Ver. 34–36. A Prediction not a Purpose—Its Fulfilment in Families—Obligations Higher than Filial—Family Foes have Traitorous Allies in the Affections—Ver. 37. Christ's Claims Paramount—Ver. 38. Every One has his Cross—Those Who Take it Up, and Those who Shrink from It—Ver. 39. What Life Consists In—The Life that is Lost and Found—Ver. 40-42. Every True Christian a Representative—His Claims More than Personal.

"WHOSOEVER . . . shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before My Father which is in Heaven. But whosoever shall deny Me before men, him will I also deny before My Father which is in heaven." And yet men are more ashamed to name the name of Christ than to get intoxicated! Men of the world shrink from being thought converted more than they shrink from being thought dishonest, untruthful or immoral! And, strange to say, even converted men shrink, very often, from being spoken of as Christians; they shrink from speaking of Christ when they fear they will be misunderstood! The Buddhist is not ashamed of his religion, the Mahommedan professes his worship openly, whosover may be near him, and is not ashamed; the Roman Catholic is not ashamed to count his beads and read his breviary in a railway carriage. Why, then, should Evangelical Christians be so backward in confessing Christ before men? Romanists marvel that Protestants seem to have so little conscience about their religion, and so little zeal for God, and they naturally argue that the religion which produces so much zeal must be the best, and they condemn the religion of the Bible because its votaries are Ashamed of Christ!

But what lies at the bottom of this sense of shame? It is this: all other religions consist in the works of man, while the religion of the true Christian consists in his faith in the work of God for him. The religion of the Buddhist, the Parsee, the Mahommedan and the Roman Catholic alike consists in the performance of a round of duties, whereby they hope to gain for themselves merit, and whereby they believe that they are accumulating a capital of righteousness upon which they can draw in time to come. Every man has a pride and satisfaction in doing good as far as his light goes, and in all these false religions there is great room for self-satisfaction. But the true child of God has learned that by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in [God's] sight (Rom. 3: 20). His religion does not bring to him any self-satisfaction, nor yet any glory in the sight of men. He cannot compare his religion with the others we have mentioned, and, taking their ground of personal merit, prove that his is the best. The ground on which he stands is that his sins are put away by the blood of Christ, but the only proof of this he can give to the unbeliever is his own new and changed life. Other religions do not profess to provide atonement for sin, communion with God, or a real change of heart, but these are His delight and glory. Other religionists can speak their own praises, tell of their fasts and vigils, their charities and good works; he can only "shew forth the praises of Him who hath called (him) out of darkness into His marvellous light" (1 Pet. 2:9). He cannot vaunt his prayers, for it is a wonder of wonders to him that the God of heaven deigns to hear, and answers him for Christ's sake. He cannot boast of his good deeds, for he knows that it is only the grace of God which makes them acceptable to Him. He knows, if he is honest, that the only guarantee to an unbelieving world of the truth of his religion is the change which it has wrought in him, and too often he is conscious that this is not all it should be. Paul could say, "I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that He counted me faithful, putting me in to the ministy; who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief. And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." Any one who knew Paul could testify to the change in him; he testified to the Lord who wrought it. The greatest hindrance to the confession of Christ by believers is that they know what they say. But when a man is wholly given to God, when he is true and honest, self-denying and full of love to good men, then his tongue is not tied; it is a joy to him to speak of Jesus, and no fear of man hinders him. He is not kept back by the fear of being counted one of the many hypocrites which are abroad, for he knows that he walks before God, and that Satan is overcome by the word of our testimony (Rev. 12:11).

Their Lives Will Not Bear Out

But witnessing for Christ entails persecution. We cannot allure away the supporters of the saloon and the variety theatre without provoking the enmity of those who keep these traps for precious souls. We cannot rob the aristocratic libertine of his prey without provoking enmity in high quarters. The magistrates of Philippi quarrelled with Paul for robbing them of one evil spirit; the Gadarenes besought Jesus to depart from them because He had driven out two thousand devils; and men in the present day can bear with wicked spirits, but they are at enmity with God. Persecution will be of three kinds: 1. Political, i. e., the councils; 2. Religious, i. e., from the synagogues; 3. Social, i. e., from the family. We are not to expect to be understood either by unsaved rulers, unsaved ecclesiastics, or unsaved relations. It is part of the plan of God that His witnessing servants shall be "brought before kings and rulers" for His name's sake. It is almost the only chance some of the great ones of the earth have of hearing the Gospel, when some persecuted missionary or evangelist is brought before them. Then they see and hear and feel that these men and women possess something which they themselves have not, and many of them, like Felix and Agrippa, wish that they were Christians. "But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak; for it is not ye that speak, but the spirit of your Father which speaketh in you." Thank God we are not called on to meet and to overcome those who will be our enemies. "I will give you a mouth and wisdom which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist" (Luke 21:15). Thus was it with Stephen. Thus it was in the early part of the persecution among the Waldenses; such a power was with one old pastor who spoke to the attacking forces that they turned round their horses' heads, and gave up their proposed persecution.

The Lord expressly states that persecution will come. All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution," and He teaches us to "rejoice and be exceeding glad" when we are persecuted; yet He would not have us provoke persecution, or prolong it by any determined opposition on our part. "I say unto you that ye resist not evil." "When they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another." What! and leave the converts behind? This is the thought which most troubles the heart of the missionary. With whom are they left?

Is Not God Enough?

And does He not know what He is about? Yet the missionary is not to flee because of personal fear, but because the Lord wills that he should flee. When the spirit of persecution is rife in a place, that is not the best time for preaching the Gospel, but it is the time when God harrows in the seed sown. There are three grounds why we should not fear: first, "It is enough for the disciple that he be as his Master. Fear them not, therefore, for "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; and hid that shall not be known. Ungodly men fear lest they should be found out in their evil deeds; they flee when no man pursueth" (Prov. 28:1); but the righteous is "bold as a lion;" he walks in the light, and rejoices that the time is coming when every secret thing shall be brought into judgment. He can wait for God to justify him, he has a quiet confidence that God is working out all things for the very best. Wherefore is not to fear but to proclaim his message on the house tops. Second, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul. The witness for Christ counts the cost; if he is a real missionary he may have to follow Jesus "to prison and to death." But oh, how few of us are enough unlike the world to provoke its persecution. Third: "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not, therefore; ye are of more value than many sparrows." Of value to God! it is a wondrous thought. His witnesses, though they may be persecuted even to the death, are precious in His sight. Would Stephen have chosen life when his ravished eyes beheld "the heavens opened," and his beloved Lord, for whom he died "standing at the right hand of God?" Did Stephen fear when he left his mangled corpse among the stones, and with the utmost assurance commended his spirit to his Lord, and with his dying breath, plead like another hero, standing between his murderers and their deserts. No, he feared not them that killed the body.

Family Persecution

is specially mentioned here. "The brothers shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child; and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death." In the early persecutions, and in all times of the church's history, this has been literally fulfilled. In the reign of Queen Mary, when the Jesuits attempted to stamp out of England the light which the reading of the Bible and the preaching of the truth in its simplicity had shed abroad during the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., this bitter spirit of persecution separated families, and so in India and China, in Africa, in Madagascar, and wherever the Gospel has been faithfully preached, persecution has arisen, and these words of Christ have been fulfilled. But there is a family persecution even in our own favored land in the present day, a persecution which is perhaps more in word and in spirit than in the way of bodily injury, but which is none the less bitter. It is Satan's delight to make the way of a young Christian hard by setting against him those who are dear to him. In a worldly family, became converted. She owned her faith in Christ. The friend who had been the means of her conversion was forbidden the house, and she herself was practically deserted by her husband, treated with the utmost contempt by her mother-in-law, and kept in a kind of partial imprisonment, for no other reason than that she had given her heart to God, and could live no longer in the world!

A Newly Married Wife

Confession of Christ must however be not only with the mouth but in the life also. He that saith he abideth in Him, ought himself so to walk even as He walked" (1. John 2:6). A really Christ-like man, or a Christ-like woman, is a greater power than hundreds of sermons. We can never forget a person who brings us into the presence of God, who lives in God's presence, and shines out God upon us; it is one of the breaths of heaven which we now and again get on earth. Wherever such an one—one who lives in "the secret place of the Most High—" goes, he, unconsciously to himself, leaves a blessing behind him. The are given here. "He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me, and he that loveth son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me." The true witness for Christ puts Christ first in his home; he does not consider what his children like so much as what God would like. He does not consider what he would like himself, so much as what will please God. But such a life involves Cross-bearing. It is much easier to do what pleases other people than to oppose them for God's sake. But "he that taketh not his Cross, and followeth after Me, is not worthy of Me." "Mine is a very easy life," said a dear child of God. "How so?" she was asked. "I have but one thing to do," she said, "and that is to please God; and then I am so happy that He is pleased." "He that findeth his life (or seeks his own) shall lose it." If the Lord is our shepherd, why then should we be anxious or careful about our own interests; the Almighty, All-loving God is caring for them, and a part of confessing Christ is to be careful for nothing, and so to bear witness to everybody that He careth for us. The Lord raise up amongst us true witnesses to Him, who shall "not be ashamed before Him at His coming" (1. John 2:28).

True Principles of Christian Life

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles among others are contained in the number for October:

The Seven Seals Fully Explained in Their Double Fulfilment. Year-Day and Literal-Day. By Rev. M. Baxter.

Sin During the Millennium. By the Rev. E. J. Hytche. (Part I.)

The Parable of the Ten Virgins, and the Coming Translation of Living Saints. By late Thos. Evill, Esq.

The Predicted Restoration of Israel. By the Rev. Capel Molyneux, B. A.

The Harvest in the Parable of the Tares. By Rev. J. Sabine Knight.

"Among the Prophets.—The Millennium at Hand."

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes containing the monthly numbers for 1884 or 1883 may be had; price $1.]

ALONE.

Earthly lights are fading fast,
Daylight dies once more;
Brightness lingers round the past,
But that past is o'er.
Oh! my heart is aching, Lord,
In the dark to-night
Wilt Thou say one tender word,
Just to set me right?

Answer.

"Doubting child, so weak and weary,
Things just now I know are dreary:
Look beyond, then, in thy sorrow,
There is yet a bright to-morrow!"

Lord I do, yet only see
Empty shades draw nigh:
Friends are gone who cared for me
In the days gone by.
All alone I feel to-night;
Everything seems wrong:
Quicken, Lord, my feeble sight,
Make my faith more strong!

Answer.

"Lonely one, thy lot I'm sharing:
All the sorrow I am bearing.
Look again: there still remaineth
Glory that to Heaven pertaineth!"

Dearest Lord, these tear-dimmed eyes
Just can see one ray—
One faint glow in eastern skies:
Does that tell of day?
Will my friends be mine e again
When the night is o'er?
Need my heart recall in vain
All the joys of yore?

Answer.

"Child, for thee a day is dawning
Brighter than life's brightest morning:
Farewells then no hearts need sever:
Friends of Mine will meet forever!"

—Charlotte Murray.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

What every one wants. A Christmas gift. Read marked advertisement in last week's paper.

FIVE LAST THINGS.

Death, Intermediate State Resurrection, Judgement and Eternity.

STUDIES IN HOLY SCRIPTURES,

By REV. JESSE A. SPENCER, S. T. D.

12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

These topics are treated in their immediate connection and due order, and the entire "Doctrine of the Last Things" is brought within the compass of a moderate-sized volume. The teaching of Holy Scripture is presented in full and with great clearness and orce; numerous questions of deepest interest on the subject of the other world are carefully considered, and the volume is calculated to suit the needs of Christian people everywhere, and to minister to their edification and comfort. It should be carefully read and studied by every thoughtful Christian having a desire to know the Scriptural doctrine of the "Five Last Things."

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 and 3 Bible House, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

The BOW in the CLOUD
Or WORDS of COMFORT
For those in Sickness, Sorrow and the varied Afflictions of Life. By 200 best Authors, Prose and Poetry, Edited by J. Sanderson, D.D. A Home Treasury and Gift Book of rare excellence. 450 Pages, $1.75.
E. B. TREAT, Pub., N. Y.

WANTED—Agents for 5 New Christmas Books from 50 cents to $3.00. A new agent writes that she sold 35 in 2 hours and 35 minutes: one 62 the first week; another 15 that day. The best-selling books offered agents. Experience not necessary. CASSELL & CO., L't'd, 822 Broadway, New York, 49 Dearborn St., Chicago.

CHOLERA INFANTUM

This most fatal disease of infancy, PREVENTED, CONTROLLED and CURED by

Lactated Food

It has been successful in hundreds of cases where other prepared foods failed.

FOR INFANTS, of any age, it may be used with confidence, as a safe and complete substitute for mother's milk.

FOR INVALIDS,
it is a Perfect Nutrient in either chronic or acute cases. Weak stomachs always retain and relish it. Physicians and mothers concede its superiority. The most palatable, nourishing and economical of Foods.

150 MEALS for an INFANT for $1.00.
Easily Prepared. At Druggists—25c., 50c., $1.
Valuable circulars and pamphlets, sent free.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.
Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

TRIUMPHANT SONGS

For Sunday Schools
By E. O. EXCELL
AND
Rev. SAM. P. JONES.

Used by them in all their Meetings. Contains the famous solos sung by E. O. EXCELL. This book was used at the International S. S. Convention held at Chicago. Price, 35c. per copy; $3.60 per dozen; $30.00 per hundred. Sample by mail on receipt of price. Address E. O. EXCELL, Pub., 148 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

The Two Best Sunday School Singing Books in the Field.

JOYFUL LAYS.	GLAD REFRAIN.
$30 per 100 Copies.	$25 per 100 Copies;
35 cts. each by Mail.	30 cts. each by Mail.

☞ Sent for examination on receipt of price. Specimen Pages free.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed, Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

We Want Active Agents!
TO SELL THE
RENNER COMBINED ALARM AND DOOR BELL
in every county in the United States and Canada. George C. Owens, Modesta, Cal., says: "I have canvassed one day and took 22 orders." In same letter he ordered two gross. Wm. McKim, of Grand Haven, Mich., says: "he took 13 orders in 10 hours." Profit on Bell, $2.50. In our extraordinary offer to agents we agree to take back all bells unsold, if the agent fails to clear $125.00 in 30 days. Illustrated circulars sent free.
Address Renner Manufacturing Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

FOUR HUNDRED
Choice Recitations and Readings bound in handsome lithograph cover, mailed to any address for 30 cts. Satisfaction guaranteed. J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers, P.O. Box, 2767, 57 Rose St., New York.

AGENTS WANTED to Sell Our HOLIDAY BOOKS & GAMES
$75 per week to workers. Send for Circulars and Hi-est terms. Address, American Publishing Co., HARTFORD, BOSTON, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS or CINCINNATI

BLACK SILKS.

JAMES McCREERY & CO'S
SPECIAL SALE
OF
Black Faille Francaise Silks will be continued during this week.

They will also exhibit on Monday a large importation of Rich Novelties in Velvet, Plush and Matellasse for Cloaks and Wraps.

BROADWAY AND ELEVENTH ST.,
New York.

Carpets.

A choice selection of the fall styles in Carpetings and Rugs.
We are showing a large line of Best Patterns Smith's Moquette at $1.25, reduced from $1.50 and $1.65.
Also Lowell Body Brussels at $1.00, reduced from $1.50.

Lord & Taylor
Broadway & Twentieth St.

Christ Before Pilate!
Grandest Painting of Greatest Living Artist. Viewed by millions. Discussed by press more than any modern picture. For original Jno. Wanamaker paid $120,000. Agents Wanted for our magnificent Photo-Etching of this painting. Size 21x28. All religious people will buy. Etchings are the fashion, Retail price $1.00. Send 25c. for sample picture and agent's terms. MANHATTAN ART CO., 51 Lafayette Place, New York.

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free. FOR OIL.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

CATALOGUE of USEFUL, POPULAR and HUMOROUS Books sold at Low Prices. Mailed to any address free by
J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
57 Rose St., New York.

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World. $35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35
MARCHAL & SMITH,
255 East 21st Street, New York.

WORK FOR ALL. $30 a week and expenses paid. Valuable outfit and particulars free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

FLORIDA. Escape sickness and cold. Three tourist hotels, college, refined northern society. High, healthful pine land. No swamps. Orange groves, houses and lands for sale. De Land, Box 1887, N. Y.

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,
it makes no difference where you see them advertised, or by whom or where they are published or sold, send your orders to me and I will attend to them promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamps received for fractional parts of a dollar.
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

Rev. Dr. Talmage's
TABERNACLE SERMONS.

The following are among the best ser preached in the Tabernacle, Brooklyn, by Wm. Talmage, D.D.

Vol. I. SUNDOWN. 33 Sermons. cloth, $2.00.

Vol. II. FISHING TOO NEAR SHO 36 Sermons. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

Vol. III. OLD WELLS DUG OUT Sermons. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

Vol. IV. EVERY-DAY RELICION Sermons. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

THE MARRIAGE RING. A Volun 15 Sermons on Marriage, Family Ties and Du 12mo, cloth, beautifully bound, $1.00.

AROUND THE TEA TABLE. A ies of Familiar Talks about Home and Every Matters. 12mo, 504 pp., cloth, $1.50.

THE BROOKLYN TABERNAC By T. DeWitt Talmage D.D. Containing Sermons. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON'S WORKS.

THE TREASURY OF DAVID (great life work). 7 vols. Price, $2 each, $1 set. Volumes sold separately, if desired.

MY SERMON NOTES. A sele from outlines of discourses delived at the M politan Tabernacle, London. With pages and illustrations complete in four uniform umes. Vol. I. Genesis to Proverbs. Vo Ecclesiastes to Malachi. Vol. III. Matthe Acts. Vol. IV. Romans to Revelation.

TALKS TO FARMERS. Containi Sermons to Farmers. A useful work for clergyman who has farmers in his congrega Price, cloth, $1.00.

THE CLUE OF THE MAZE, 75 JOHN PLOUGHMAN'S TALK, " " PICTURES TALK AND PICTURES. In one Vol

The above books are handsomely bound in tra cloth, and will be sent, postpaid, on re of price, by addressing,
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New

Price Reduced from $1.00 to 50 cen

"A GREAT WORK."—BISHOP DOA

Natural Law
IN THE Spiritual Wor

By PROF. HENRY DRUMMOND.

"This is one of the most impressive and sugge books on religion that we have read for a long tim London Spectator.

"Too much cannot be said in praise of it, and who fail to read it will suffer a serious loss." Churchman.

"Grand reading for the clergy."—BISHOP COXE

"Its originality will make it almost a revelatio Christian Union.

"Everyone who is interested in religious ques should read and study it."—London Church Qua Review.

"Fresh, clear, and suggestive. Just the boo every minister and intelligent Christian."—DR. H.

"This is a remarkable and important book. difficult to say whether the scientific or the reli reader will be the most surprised and delighted rends."—Aberdeen Free Press.

12mo, cloth, complete in one volume; sent pos on receipt of 50 cents, by J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookselle 77 Bible House, New

BOOKS HELPFUL
IN CHRISTIAN WORK

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS AND H TO CONDUCT THEM. by Lucy J. Rider Nellie M. Carman, with contributions of p methods and outline talks to children by n forty others, including the best known and m successful workers among children in this cou 208 pages, fine cloth, $1.00.

THE PRAYER MEETING AND I IMPROVEMENT. by Rev. L. O. Thomp 12mo, 256 pages, cloth, $1.25.
"This is so good a book that we wish we could a copy to every young minister."—C. H. Spurgeo
"A very suggestive book."—Sunday-School Ti

THUS SAITH THE LORD, by Majo W. Whittle. A handbook for Christian work 134 pages, flexible cloth, 50 cts.
"A manual of Scripture texts arranged to pre the leading subjects met with in dealing with quirers.

SECRET POWER; or, the Secret of Suc in Christian Life and Work, by D. L. Moody, pages, 12mo, cloth, 60 cts.; paper, 30 cts.
"Every page is full of stimulating thought."—tian Commonwealth.

 Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of pri

J. E. JEWETT,
77 Bible House, - - New Yo

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at 7 House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 44. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, NOV. 3, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF PRESIDENT DIAZ, of Mexico, and Pictures of Campeche and Chapultepec.

DEFENSES OF YOUNG MEN. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE SPIRIT IN THE LAST DAYS.

CURRENT EVENTS. The Civil Service Examiners.—The Indian Schools.—A Notable Arrest in Ireland.—The Approaching Crisis in France, etc.

A Chinaman's Changed Life—An Infidel Saved from Suicide—A Moral Man's Discovery—A Frenchman's Two Saviours—How Christians Fare in Persia—A False Self-Accuser—A Koordish Shepherd's Difficulty—Years of Work for a Bible.

WALKING IN THE LIGHT. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

PORTRAIT OF COUNT LYOF TOLSTOI.

Gems from New Books: Lights Under the Sea.

PICTURE OF RUSSIAN EXILES TO SIBERIA.

A CONSECRATED LIFE. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. (Continued.)

CHRIST'S WITNESS TO JOHN. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

GEN. DIAZ, PRESIDENT OF MEXICO.

CAMPECHE, IN MEXICO.

CHAPULTEPEC, THE OFFICIAL RESIDENCE OF THE PRESIDENT OF MEXICO.

GENERAL PORFIRIO DIAZ.

President of the Republic of Mexico.

The Third Term Movement--Its Justification--Early Life of Diaz—His Brave Fight Against Maximilian—Growing Popularity—Magnanimity at the Capture of Mexico—Appeal to Him in 1871—Another Rising in 1876—Made President—Character of His Government—Re-elected in 1884—Surrenders Half his Salary—Private Life—Gift of his Watch to a Blind Child—His Remark on Receiving a Bible—The Hope for Mexico.

THE amendment to the Mexican Constitution promulgated last week brings into still greater prominence in that land the statesman and soldier whose portrait appears on the preceding page. The friends of President Diaz make no secret of their motive in pressing forward this amendment. They want him to have a third term of the Presidency and though Diaz has done nothing to help them in their effort he has not interfered to prevent them. He has from the initiation of the movement maintained a dignified silence and now has simply obeyed the behests of the Legislature. The Constitution of Mexico which President Diaz has uniformly upheld, prohibits any man filling the executive chair for two consecutive terms, and this particular article has found until recently its strongest champion in Diaz; and in passively submitting to its abrogation he must have been actuated by some very cogent reasoning. Hostile critics doubtless say that his motive was wholly selfish and personal, as he is perfectly aware that he will be the beneficiary of the change. Those who know Diaz best, however, will acquit him of any such charge. Indeed, he has probably found in that fact his greatest difficulty. If another man had been the one to be benefited. Diaz would have taken an active instead of a passive part in promoting the amendment; for whatever faults Diaz has, selfishness is not one.

His Only Rival.

He probably knows, as everyone else in Mexico sees, that there is no fit man to take his place. When in 1880 Diaz quitted office at the close of his first term, it was supposed that in Gonzalez such a man had been found. It was not long, however, before the mistake was discovered. He was a man of genius and courage intensely desirous of the prosperity and advancement of his country, but he was avaricious, and there was only too valid reason to believe that he schemed to promote his own fortunes at the expense of his country. A project for the consolidation of the Mexican debt, which he directed; and the acceptance of which he urged with all his power and influence, was so transparently unjust to Mexico, and added so heavy a burden to those that were already crushing her, that no financier, unless he expected a share of the plunder, would have advocated it. It aroused an opposition in the legislature such as Mexico had never seen before, and was ultimately rejected. Never before had a legislature dared to resist a scheme so urged and supported, but Gonzalez's motives were suspected, and when he gave way to Diaz at the end of his term he was generally despised, and subsequent investigations have confirmed the suspicions entertained of his integrity. Besides Gonzalez, there is no one of prominence commanding the confidence of the people to succeed Diaz at the expiration of his term next year, and it is on that account that the obstacle to Diaz having another term has been removed.

Porfirio Diaz was born in Oaxaca in 1835; he is therefore now fifty-two years of age. His boyhood and early manhood were passed in troublous times. Mexico was torn by internal convulsions, and the struggle of rival candidates for the supreme power kept the country in continual commotion. The intelligence and robust mental power of young Diaz, combined with rare moral and physical courage, soon brought him into prominence. In 1854, and again in 1856, he did some desperate fighting, and in the latter year he was severely wounded. It was, however, in 1863, when Napoleon III. attempted to force a foreign despot upon Mexico, that the qualities of Diaz first received national recognition. His valor and excellent generalship during the bitter struggle against Maximilian and his French forces, made him the idol of his little army, and Juarez, the rightful President had no better and stouter defender than Diaz. Finally the United States interfered, and plainly intimated to the French emperor that he must withdraw his forces from Mexico or fight. He chose the feebler alternative, and in 1867 the French troops were withdrawn. Had Maximilian gone with them, he would have saved his life, and it is marvellous that any man in his situation should have done otherwise. He could never hope, unaided by foreign troops, to maintain his position in the face of an opposition which had united Mexican patriots of all sections against him. Juarez, who had clung to his rights, though driven to Paso del Norte, on the very verge of Mexican territory, immediately moved toward the capital, defeating Maximilian's forces at San Jacinto. In the meantime Diaz besiged and captured Puebla, and meeting Maximilian's general, Marquiez at San Lorenzo, he defeated him, and pressing forward laid siege to the capital, which surrendered on June 21.

Humanity and Patriotism.

Never was the humanity of a conquering general more conspicuously displayed than in the entry of Diaz into the City of Mexico. He was preceded, not by cannon or armed soldiers bent on plunder and outrage, but by a train of provisions for the relief of the starving populace. Perfect order was preserved, and Juarez was triumphantly restored to the seat of government. That year he was re-elected President for another term of four years. The conspicuous part which Diaz had taken in bringing about this restoration of popular government and delivering his native country from a foreign despotism, was not overlooked, though the fruits of the victory fell to Juarez. The people looked to him with admiration and confidence, and when in 1871 a new danger threatened the Republic, it was to Diaz that they turned for deliverance. Juarez was re-elected in that year to the Presidency, though he had already held the office for ten years. The Mexicans had not shaken off one permanent ruler in the person of Maximilian in order to put another, though a more enlightened one, in his place. An armed rebellion was organized, and Diaz yielded to the entreaties of the insurgents to lead them. The sudden death of Juarez on July 18, 1872, rendered this movement useless and Lerdo de Tejada was peacefully inaugurated President. Diaz again retired to his hacienda. Once more, in 1876, the call for Diaz resounded through the country. Lerdo was making an attempt to secure personal and absolute power. Republican government was menaced, and again Diaz was at the head of the Liberal rising. Lerdo fled, and on November 24, 1876, Diaz entered the city of Mexico in triumph. He was proclaimed Provisional President, and on May 6, 1877,

Constitutional President, his term to expire on Nov. 30, 1880. During the four years of his rule Mexico had the advantage, for the first time since the close of the war of Independence in 1821, of a strong, stable, vigorous government, and in 1880 she saw, with gratified amazement, the spectacle, almost unique in her history, of a ruler voluntarily laying down the insignia of his office and peaceably inaugurating his successor. In 1884 Diaz was again called to the Presidential chair, and this time it was not with rebellion or with foreign foes that his genius was required to deal. Danger of another kind threatened the Republic. Financial ruin was menacing the country. He found the army unpaid, civil liabilities in arrear and an empty treasury. The heroism of the man, his unselfishness and self-sacrifice were as conspicuous in this emergency as in his military career. He met the difficulty in characteristic fashion by reducing his own salary as President from $30,000 a year (not a large stipend for the ruler of a country as large as France, Germany, Great Britain and Spain combined) to $15,000, and requiring a smaller proportionate sacrifice on the part of other officials. That accomplished, he proceeded to set the finances in order on an economical basis, conducting the government with severe simplicity, and unsparingly cutting down unnecessary expenses. It is not surprising that a man of qualities so dear to the lovers of republican institutions should be beloved by the people and a renewal of his term be desired.

In private life President Diaz is noted for his simplicity and generosity.

A Characteristic Incident

related of him illustrates this trait of his character. Not long since, he was visiting an asylum for blind children, the distribution of prizes or some such ceremony having brought him there. Passing quietly through the wards he overheard one little sightless boy say to his companion: "They say the President is a great man; I wonder if he is a good man." The President stopped and taking the little fellow up in his arms allowed him to study his physiognomy in the only way possible to him, by passing his small hands over the presidential face and head. "Yes," said the child after his examination; "I think you are a good man." Diaz put the child down and explored his own pockets to find a present for the little fellow. But there was no money at all in the pockets (not an uncommon occurrence with the generous Diaz.) He had given it all away. Taking out his gold watch he put it in the child's hand and said: "Take this, my boy and use it to educate yourself."

The Acceptance of a Bible is another incident related of Diaz which has a still more gratifying tone. Dr. Gillman, of the American Bible Society, was in Mexico some time back, and desiring to see the President looked around for a means of introduction. Bishop Riley was able to secure him the honor, and a day was appointed for his reception. Diaz received his visitor frankly and cordially, and Dr. Gillman presented him with a handsomely bound copy of the Word of God. The President accepted it graciously, and said as he took the sacred volume from Dr. Gillman's hands: "I thank you for the book, and I thank you for the benefit I hope to derive from it." The remark encourages the hope that the President realizes the benefit which the Bible is capable of imparting, and we pray that its perusal may be blessed to his soul.

His Romish Foes.

It has not been an encouraging experience, or one calculated to attract the President to religion that he has passed through in his administration. In endeavoring to give to his country civil and religious liberty his most inveterate and stubborn opponents have been the Roman Catholic bishops and priests. We may trust, however, that a man of so much penetration as Diaz possesses, has by this time perceived in how small a degree the Church of Rome represents the spirit of Christianity. As the movement of which Bishop Riley is the head makes advance in Mexico, he will see that true Christianity is never inimical to good government, and that the only hope for the elevation of the people and their progress in civilization and that righteousness which exalts a nation is in the pure Gospel which is being preached by the devoted band of men which Dr. Riley has been the means of sending forth. The Roman Catholic party realize this fact, and are even more rabid against Dr. Riley and his mission than against the President. They have violently opposed him in Mexico and are exerting themselves in this country to deprive him of the means of continuing his work. We regret to notice that the ritualistic party in the Protestant Episcopal Church have gone to their assistance, forgetful of the title of "Protestant" which their church bears. Those who know most about Mexico, who have the best interests of the nation at heart, know, however, the good Dr. Riley's mission is doing, and are helping him in his noble labor. He is deeply grateful for their help; for, having given the whole of his large patrimony to the cause of Christ in Mexico, and continuing to devote the bulk of the annuity which is at his command, to the same work, he necessarily depends on the voluntary gifts of those who are laboring and praying for the extension of Christ's kingdom, and are above all desirous that the spiritual darkness should be lifted from those who are our neighbors on this great continent.

Subscriptions in aid of the Church of Jesus, in Mexico, its pastors, evangelists, church and orphanages, will be thankfully received by the Rt. Rev. H. C. Riley, 43 Bible House, New York.

CHAPULTEPEC.

THE official residence of the President of the Mexican Republic, a picture of which appears on the first page, is one of the most beautiful spectacles in the country. It is built on the top of a high rock, and at its foot grow magnificent trees of great age. The palace is a most beautiful building, in which are large halls and galleries handsomely decorated, and it is surrounded by marble paved terraces commanding one of the grandest views in the world. The rock on which it is built has some remarkable associations with the ancient civilization. M. Déseré Charnay, in his valuable work on "The Ancient Cities of the New World" (published by Messrs. Harper Brothers, New York), a volume of deeply fascinating interest, and containing a wonderful amount of information, thus speaks of Chapultepec:

"Chapultepec is one of the most delightful spots in the Mexican Valley. Two roads—the Pasco Nuevo and the tramway—lead to it from Mexico City; we will take the latter as shorter and cheaper. Starting from the Place d'Armes, it goes through Belen Gate and sets us down at the very entrance to the castle. Chapultepec—Grasshopper Hill—is a volcanic hill some 1,625 feet long and 100 feet high, covered with luxurious vegetation, crowned with groves of cypresses, some of which are seventy-five feet in diameter, and seem to defy the decay of ages. The view from the windows of the palace, which stands on the top of the hill, embracing the Valley of Mexico, is one of the finest in the world. In the highly rarefied atmosphere of those upper regions even distant objects have a brilliancy of coloring and a distinctness of outline which enables one to take in the details of this marvellous panorama, studded with towns and hamlets, the white walls of which, together with the tops of porphyry rocks, glimmer in the rays of the sun. Stretching far away at their feet are seen noble forests of oak, sycamore and cedar, whilst beyond, cultivated fields, beautiful gardens, lakes and lagoons girdle the valley around. Looking toward Mexico, the spectator has behind him the low chain De Las Cruces; on his right, to the south, Pedregal and the Ajuscean Hills; before him, to the east, the grand, snowy tops of Popocatepetl, the Hill of Smoke, and Iztaccihuatl, "White Woman," from its bright robe of snow; on his left, to the north, Cerro Gordo, and nearer the Sierra Guadaloupe, where stands the most celebrated church of Mexico, dedicated to the Virgin.

Xolotl, king of the Chichemecs, first gave the Aztecs permission to settle on Chapultepec, which, in the course of time, became a royal residence and a royal burial-place, where its rocks were made to transmit to posterity the features of the Mexican monarchs. Azayacoatl and the two Montezumas, together with the sons of the last Aztec emperor; the statues of this monarch were to be seen as late as the last century, when they were destroyed by order of the Government.

Campeche,

a picture of which also appears on the first page, is the chief town of the State of that name, on the west, or Yucatan coast, of Mexico. It is a thriving town of sixteen thousand inhabitants.

Light for the Last Days; a New Work on Prophecy. By Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, with two Colored Diagrams, 673 pages. Price $3 50. May be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The End of a Young Man's Dissipation.—Mr. Paterson observes: "A young man was drawn to Christ through a six weeks' debauchery. You think that strange; but previous to that he had lived a quiet, respectable life, until he was enticed by worldly companions into sin. He drank to excess, until, at the end of six weeks, he was roused to a sense of his awful danger. He was disgusted with his own conduct, and revolted from himself with intense dislike. The Lord was giving him a sight of himself. For some time he suffered from the dreadful gnawing of an awakened conscience, until the sympathizing Jesus drew nigh to him. He turned and beheld his Saviour, and was brought nigh by the blood of His Cross."

Why the Laundry Women Laughed.—Mr. Goodfellow, a Christian worker, says: "Three women were standing in a laundry, talking of a mutual acquaintance, and laughing and joking at her expense, because she had been converted. They seemed to have a supreme contempt for anything pertaining to religion. But just as they were about to part, one of them said to her companions, 'Well, I don't care what you say about it, but if there is anything in conversion I hope the Lord will not pass me by.' She spoke from her heart: amidst all her levity of speech there was a deep-seated yearning after something that she had not yet attained. She was troubled with herself, and did not find rest till she came to Jesus, which she did that very night. How many there are like this woman who, while they scoff at some child of God, experience a longing in their hearts to be like them, but are afraid to accept Christ lest they encounter the ridicule of companions, yet just waiting some friendly hand to help them over the line that divides them from Jesus?"

A Deluded Man Put Right.—Mr. J. Campbell White related: "On Tuesday night I was asked to visit a man who was ill. The man himself said he was a Christian, but my friend who asked me to call had very grave doubts upon the subject. I went to see him, and asked him if he were a Christian, 'Yes,' was the reply. 'Have you been long converted?' 'Since Mr. Moody was here the first time,' he replied. 'And what does your life testify concerning your Christianity?' I inquired. 'Oh, just what other folks' lives say about it, I suppose.' 'Now, look here,' I said, 'when were you intoxicated last?' 'About three weeks ago,' he answered. 'And I suppose that was the first time since your conversion?' I queried. 'No, I am sorry to say,' he replied. 'And when had you family worship last?' I next asked. 'I never have it,' was the sad answer. 'Ah, these are the fruits that you produce. Be quite assured you are not a Christian, and the sooner you become a truly converted man the better,' I said. I put the Gospel plainly before him, and I am glad that that man has been born again from above, and entered upon the real Christian life."

The Boy who Broke the Bottles.—An Evangelist observed: "A lad in a grocery store, was sent with a dozen bottles of potash water to the house of a lady customer. As the lady was in a hurry, the boy went as quickly as possible, but in his haste he slipped and broke seven of the bottles. He thought of going back to replace them, but remembering that the lady was desirous to obtain the goods at once, he decided to go on with the remaining five bottles. When he had delivered them, he did not at once return, but stayed in the kitchen, crying. The lady, having meanwhile heard of the accident, went to him and kindly said, 'Don't cry, my boy, I will pay for them all when the bill comes in, and you need not tell your master about it.' The boy thanked her heartily, and was about to go, when she called him and asked him to write his name in a book; while he was doing so, she said, 'When I began life I too had some things to keep, but I fell and broke them all, and I cried, for I knew I must be punished if I could not make substitution. But One came to me who had kept the whole ten commandments, and he said to me, 'Take my ten kept commandments and offer them to God, and He will accept you, and give me your broken ones, and I will take care of them." That was the Lord Jesus Christ, and will you not let Him save you? The boy could not understand her at first, but afterward he came to see clearly his lost state, and before many weeks had passed he had accepted Christ, and through all his manhood he has thanked God for the day he slipped and broke the bottles.

Last Words with the Doctor.—A Worker in Scotland remarks: "A boy of fifteen years of age, with a happy home and bright prospects, met with an accident one day, and soon it became evident that his young life was ebbing fast away. One night, as the doctor was leaving, the boy turned to him and inquired: 'Doctor, am I dying?' The doctor looked into his pale face and sadly answered, 'Yes, you are; are you afraid to die?' 'Oh, no,' the boy replied, with marvellous sweetness, 'I am glad; will you meet me in heaven?' 'I hope so, my boy; was the doctor's response. 'Oh, don't only hope so, doctor; make sure, make sure, and that at once.' Then the sufferer relapsed into unconsciousness. The minister came to visit him, and after whispering some words of comfort said, 'Is Jesus with you?' Then the lips and eyes moved and he murmured faintly, 'He is with me, and it is not at all dark.' Even when the Christian is passing through the valley of the shadow of death, Christ the Light and the Life is with him, and He lights His redeemed and blood-washed child through the murky, chilly gloom into the everlasting brightness beyond."

A Reclaimed Atheist's Story.—A Member of a Mizpah Band gives this testimony: "I was for many years an atheist. My wife, who is an earnest Christian, ceased not to pray for me, and as a consequence of being urged by her to do so, I took a seat in a church, and attended it, not for any spiritual good I hoped to get, but only to criticise the service and what the minister said. But a change came. My father was dying, and as I sat by his bed watching him, he asked me to read the third chapter of John to him. He did not know of my infidelity, and not wishing to disturb his last hours with anxiety and discomfort, I read to him as desired. The words troubled me greatly as I read them, for I felt that there must be some reality in religion after all. About this time a gentleman spoke to me about my soul. While he put the way of salvation through Christ before me, I thought I heard the ring of sincerity in his voice, and it was evident that he was not trying to deceive me. The Gospel appeared totally different, and became indeed good news to me. I realized that there was a God to judge, but also, there was a Saviour to save. I came to Him and trusted Him; He saved me, and now He keeps me."

How Satan's Attack was Foiled.—The Rev. Mr. McLauchlan observed: "A godly minister whom I knew, labored in the little town of Dunlop, in Ayrshire. He, his wife, and three daughters were known to be true Christians, and respected as such by the whole neighborhood. One of the daughters fell seriously ill, and after a long illness it was evident she was fast approaching her mortal end. She had been rejoicing in Christ for many years, but now, in the hour of her trouble, Satan tried to fill her heart with doubts and fears as to her salvation. Her mother endeavored to comfort her, but did not succeed. One evening, the invalid had been slumbering, but suddenly waking up, she exclaimed, 'Oh, mother! mother! I have been thinking of that text which says, 'God commended His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us, and I have found rest in it.' She saw now, more clearly than ever, that she did not require to stand on her own righteousness, and that Christ had come into the world to seek and save sinners, and she, being a saved sinner, need not fear. The darkness which had fallen upon her spirit was dispersed, and she gently passed away with the assurance that 'to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord.'"

DEFENSES OF YOUNG MEN.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached last Sunday Morning, Oct. 30, 1887.

"And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man." II Kings, 6: 17.

A Scared Student—Confidence of an Aged Minister—His Supernatural Guard—Unseen by the Young Man—His Eyes Opened—Young Men Recognizing Their Defenses—I. The Defense of a Good Home—Early and Adopted Homes—A Potent Charm—II. Of Industrious Habit—The Young Man Living by his Wits—The King and Prince at Crecy—A Royal Duel—Weapons that Satan Fears—A Child Behind Runaway Horses—III. Of Respect for the Sabbath—A Sabbath Breaking Inventor's Loss—IV. Of a Noble Ideal—Two Pictures—Impostors in Ohio—V. Of Religious Principle—How to Make a Fortune—A Parting at a Theatre Door.

ONE morning in Dothan, a young theological student was scared by finding himself and Elisha, the prophet, upon whom he waited, surrounded by a whole army of enemies. But venerable Elisha was not scared at all, because he saw the mountains full of defense for him, in chariots made out of fire, wheels of fire, dashboard of fire, and cushion of fire, drawn by horses with nostrils of fire, and mane of fire, and haunches of fire, and hoofs of fire—that could not be seen with the natural eye. So the old minister prayed that the young minister might see them also, and the prayer was answered, and the Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he also saw the fiery procession, looking somewhat, I suppose, like the Adirondacks or the Alleghanies in this autumnal resplendence.

A Supernatural Appearance

Many young men, standing among the most tremenduous realities, have their eyes half shut or entirely closed. May God grant that my sermon may open wide your eyes to your safety, your opportunity and your destiny.

A Mighty Defense

for a young man is a good home. Some of my hearers look back with tender satisfaction to their early home. It may have been rude and rustic, hidden among the hills, and architect or upholsterer never planned or adorned it. But all the fresco on princely walls never looked so enticing to you as those rough-hewn rafters. You can think of no park or arbor of trees planted on fashionable country-seat so attractive as the plain brook that ran in front of the old farm-house and sang under the weeping willows. No barred gateway, adorned with statue of bronze, and swung open by obsequious porter in full dress, has half the glory of the swing gate. Many of you have a second dwelling-place, your adopted home, that also is sacred forever. There you built the first family altar. There your children were born. All those trees you planted. That room is solemn, because once in it, over the hot pillow, flapped the wing of death. Under that roof you expect when your work is done, to lie down and die. You try with many words to tell the excellency of the place, but you fail. There is only one word in the language that can describe your meaning.

It Is Home.

Now, I declare it, that young man is comparatively safe who goes out into the world with a charm like this upon him. The memory of parental solicitude, watching, planning and praying, will be to him a shield and a shelter. I never knew a man faithful both to his early and adopted home, who at the same time was given over to any gross form of dissipation or wickedness. He who seeks his enjoyment chiefly from outside association, rather than from the more quiet and unpresuming pleasures of which I have spoken, may be suspected to be on the broad road to ruin. Absalom despised his father's house, and you know his history of sin and his death of shame. If you seem unnecessarily isolated from your kindred and former associates, is there not some room that you can call your own? Into it gather books and pictures, and a harp. Have a portrait over the mantel. Make ungodly mirth stand back from the threshold. Consecrate some spot with the knee of prayer. By the memory of other days, a father's counsel, and a mother's love, and a sister's confidence, call it home.

Another defense for a young man is Industrious Habits.

Many young men, in starting upon life in this age, expect to make their way through the world by the use of their wits rather than the toil of their hands. A child now goes to the city and fails twice before he is as old as his father was when he first saw the spires of the great town. Sitting in some office, rented at a thousand dollars a year, he is waiting for the bank to declare its dividend, or goes into the market expecting before night to be made rich by the rushing up of the stocks. But luck seemed so dull he resolved on some other tack. Perhaps he borrowed from his employer's money-drawer, and forgets to put it back, or for merely the purpose of improving his penmanship makes a copy-plate of a merchant's signature. Never mind, all is right in trade. In some dark night there may come in his dreams or of Sing Sing, but it soon vanishes. In a short time he will be ready to retire from the busy world, and amid his flocks and herds culture the domestic virtues. Then those young men who once were his schoolmates, and knew no better than to engage in honest work, will come with their ox-teams to draw him logs, and with their hard hands help heave up his castle. This is no fancy picture. It is every-day life. I should not wonder if there were some rotten beams in that beautiful palace. I should not wonder if dire sicknesses should smite through the young man, or if God should pour into his cup of life a draught that would thrill him with unbearable agony. I should not wonder if his children should become to him a living curse, making his home a pest and a disgrace. I should not wonder if he goes to a miserable grave, and beyond it into the gnashing of teeth. The way of the ungodly shall perish.

A Vision of Blackwell's Island,

The Battle and the Stakes.

My young friends, there is no way to genuine success, except through toil either of the head or hand. At the battle of Crecy, in 1346, the Prince of Wales, finding himself heavily pressed by the enemy, sent word to his father for help. The father, watching the battle from a windmill, and seeing that his son was not wounded and could gain the day if he would, sent word: "No, I will not come. Let the boy win his spurs, for, if God will, I desire that this day be his with all its honors." Young man, fight your own battle, all through, and you shall have the victory. Oh, it is a battle worth fighting. Two monarchs of old fought a duel, Charles V. and Francis, and the stakes were kingdoms, Milan and Burgundy. You fight with sin, and the stake is heaven or hell.

Do not get the fatal idea that you are a genius, and that, therefore, there is no need of close application. It is here where multitudes fail.

The Curse of this Age is the geniuses: men with enormous self-conceit and egotism, and nothing else. I had rather be an ox than an eagle; plain, and plodding and useful, rather than high-flying and good for nothing but to pick out the eyes of carcases. Extraordinary capacity without use is extraordinary failure. There is no hope for that person who begins life resolved to live by his wits, for the probability is that he has not any. It was not safe for Adam, even in his unfallen state, to have nothing to do, and, therefore, God commanded him to be a farmer and horticulturist. He was to dress the garden and keep it, and had he and his wife obeyed the divine injunction and been at work, they would not have been sauntering under the trees and hungering after that fruit which destroyed them and their posterity; proof positive for all ages to come that those who do not attend to their business are sure to get into mischief.

I do not know that the prodigal in Scripture would ever have been reclaimed had he not given up his idle habits and gone to feeding swine for a living. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard, consider her ways and be wise, which, having no overseer or guide, provideth her food in the summer and gathereth her meat in the harvest." The devil does not so often attack the man who is busy with the pen, and the book, and the trowel, and the saw, and the hammer. He is afraid of those weapons. But woe to the man whom this roaring lion meets with his hands in his pockets.

Drudgery Necessary.

Do not demand that your toil always be elegant, and cleanly and refined. There is a certain amount of drudgery through which we must all pass, whatever be our occupation. You know how men are sentenced a certain number of years to prison, and after they have suffered and worked out the time, then they are allowed to go free. And so it is with all of us. God passed on us the sentence: "By the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat bread." We must endure our time of drudgery, and then, after a while, we will be allowed to go into comparative liberty. We must be willing to endure the sentence. We all know what drudgery is connected with the beginning of any trade or profession, but this does not continue all our lives, if it be the student's, or the merchant's, or the mechanic's life. I know you have, at the beginning, many a hard time, but after a while these things will become easy. You will be your own master. God's sentence will be satisfied. You will be discharged from prison.

Bless God that you have a brain to think, and hands to work, and feet to walk with, for in your constant activity, O young man, is one of your strongest defenses. Put your trust in God and do your level best. That child had it right when the horses ran away with the load of wood and he sat on it. When asked if he was frightened? he said: "No, I prayed to God and hung on like a beaver." will be to the young man another preservative against evil. God has thrust into the toil and fatigue of life a recreative day, when the soul is especially to be fed. It is no new-fangled notion of a wild-brained reformer, but an institution established at the beginning. God has made natural and moral laws so harmonious that the body as well as the soul demands this institution. Our bodies are seven-day clocks, that must be wound up as often as that, or they will run down. Failure must come sooner or later to the man who breaks the Sabbath. Inspiration has called it the Lord's Day, and he who devotes it to the world is guilty of robbery. God will not let the sin go unpunished either in this world or the world to come.

Respect for the Sabbath

A Sabbath Breaker's Loss.

This is the statement of a man who had broken this divine enactment: "I was engaged in manufacturing on the Lehigh River. On the Sabbath I used to rest, but never regarded God in it. One beautiful Sabbath when the noise was all hushed, and the day was all that loveliness could make it, I sat down on my piazza and went to work inventing a new shuttle. I neither stopped to eat nor drink till the sun went down. By that time I had the invention completed. The next morning I exhibited it and boasted of my day's work, and was applauded. The shuttle was tried and worked well, but that Sabbath Day's work cost me thirty thousand dollars. We branched out and enlarged, and the curse of heaven was upon me from that day onward."

While the Divine frown must rest upon him who tramples upon this statute, God's special favor will be upon that young man who scrupulously observes it. This day properly observed will throw a hallowed influence over all the week. The song and sermon and sanctuary will hold back from presumptuous scenes. That young man who begins the duties of life with either secret or open disrespect of the holy day, I venture to prophesy, will meet with no prominent successes. God's curse will fall upon his ship, his store, his office, his studio, his body and his soul. The way of the wicked He turneth upside down. In one of the old fables it was said that a wonderful child was born in Bagdad, and a magician could hear his footsteps six thousand miles away. But I can hear in the footstep of that young man on his way to the house of worship this morning; step not only of a lifetime of usefulness, but the coming step of eternal joys of heavens yet millions of miles away.

A Noble Ideal

and confident expectation of approximating to it, is an infallible defence. The artist completes in his mind the great thought that he wishes to transfer to the canvas or the marble before he takes up the crayon or the chisel. The architect plans out the entire structure before he orders the workmen to begin, and though there may for a long while seem to be nothing but blundering and rudeness, he has in his mind every Corinthian wreath and Gothic arch and Byzantine capital. The poet arranges the entire plot before he begins to chime the first canto of tingling rhythms. And yet, stranger to us, there are men who attempt to build their character without knowing whether in the end it shall be a rude trapper's den or a St. Mark's of Venice. Men who begin to write the intricate poem of their lives without knowing whether it shall be a Homer's Odyssey or a rhymester's botch. Nine hundred and ninety-nine men out of a thousand are living without any great life-plot. Booted and spurred and plumed, and urging their swift courser in the hottest haste. I ask:

"Halloo, Man, Whither Away?"

His response is, "Nowhere." Rush into the busy shop or store of many a one, and taking the plane out of the man's hand and laying down the yard-stick say: "What, man, is all this about, so much stir and sweat?" The reply will stumble and break down between teeth and lips. Every day's duty ought only to be the following up of the main plan of existence. Let men be consistent. If they prefer misdeeds to correct courses of action, then let them draw out the design of knavery and cruelty and plunder. Let every day's falsehood and wrong-doing be added as coloring to the picture. Let bloody deeds red stripe the canvas, and the clouds of a wrathful God hang down heavily over the canvas, ready to break out in clamorous tempest. Let the waters be chafed, a froth-tangle and green with immeasurable depths. Then take a torch of burning pitch and scorch into the frame the right name for it, namely,

The Soul's Suicide.

If one entering upon sinful directions would only in his mind or on paper, draw out in awful reality this dreadful future, he would recoil from it and say: "Am I a Dante, that by my own life I should write another Inferno?" But if you are resolved to live a life such as God and good men will approve, do not let it be a vague dream, an indefinite determination, but in your mind or upon paper, sketch it in all its minutiæ. You cannot know the changes to which you my be subject, but you may know what always will be right and always will be wrong. Let gentleness and charity and veracity and faith stand in the heart of the sketch. On some still brook's bank make a lamb and lion lie down together. Draw two or three of the trees of life, not frost-stricken, nor ice-glazed, nor wind-stripped, but with thick verdure waving like the palms of heaven. On the darkest cloud place the rainbow, that billow of the dying storm. You need not burn the title on the frame. The dullest will catch the design at a glance, and say: "That is

The Road to Heaven."

Ah, me! On this sea of life, what innumerable ships, heavily laden and well-rigged, yet some bound for another port. Swept every whither of wind and wave, they go up by the mountains, they go down by the billows, and are at their wits' end. They sail by no chart, they watch no star, they long for no harbor. I beg every young man to-day to draw out a sketch of what, by the grace of God, he means to be, though in excellence so high that you cannot reach it. He who starts out in life with a high ideal of character, and faith in its attainment, will find himself encased from a thousand temptations. There are before each of you young men of the stout heart, and the buoyant step, and the bounding spirit. I would marshal you for grand achievement. God now provides for you the fleet and the armor, and the fortifications; who is on the Lord's side? The captain of the zouaves in ancient times, to encourage them against the immense odds on the side of their enemies, said: "Come, my men, look these fellows in the face. They are six thousand, you are three hundred. Surely the match is even." That speech gave them the victory. Be not, my hearers, dismayed at any time by what seems an immense odds against you. Is fortune, is want of education, are men, are devils against you, though the multitudes of earth and hell confront you, stand up to the charge. With a million against you, the match is just even. Nay, you have a decided advantage. If God be for us, who can be against us? Thus protected, you need not spend much time in answering your assailants.

Magnificent Possibilities

Many years ago word came to me that

Two Impostors,

as temperance lecturers, had been speaking in Ohio, in various places, and giving their experience, and they told their audience that they had long been intimate with me, and had become drunkards by dining at my table, where I always had liquors of all sorts. Indignant to the last degree, I went down to Patrick Campbell, Chief of Brooklyn Police, saying that I was going to start that night for Ohio to have these villains arrested, and I wanted him to tell me how to make the arrest. He smiled and said: "Do not waste your time by chasing these men. Go home and do your work, and they can do you no harm." I took his counsel, and all was well. Long ago I made up my mind that if one will put his trust in God and be faithful to duty, he need not fear any evil. Have God on your side, young man, and all the combined forces of earth and hell can do you no damage.

And this leads me to say that the mightiest defense for a young man is the possession of Religious Principle.

Nothing can take the place of it. He may have manners that would put to shame the gracefulness and courtesy of a Lord Chesterfield. Foreign languages may drop from his tongue. He may be able to discuss literature and laws and foreign customs. He may wield a pen of unequaled polish and power. His quickness and tact may qualify him for the highest salary of the counting-house. He may be as sharp as Herod and as strong as Samson, with as fine locks as those which hung Absalom, still he is not safe from contamination. The more elegant his manner, and the more fascinating his dress, the more peril. Satan does not care for the allegiance of a coward and illiterate being. He can bring him into efficient service. But he loves to storm that castle of character which has in it the most spoils and treasures. It was not some crazy craft creeping along the coast with a valueless cargo that the pirate attacked, but the ship, full-winged and flagged, plying between great ports, carrying its millions of specie. The more your natural and acquired accomplishments, the more need of the religion of Jesus. That does not cut in upon or hack up any smoothness of disposition or behavior.

It Gives Symmetry.

It arrests that in the soul which ought to be arrested, and propels that which ought to be propelled. It fills up the gulleys. It elevates and transforms. To beauty it gives more beauty. to tact more tact, to enthusiasm of nature more enthusiasm. When the Holy Spirit impresses the image of God on the heart he does not spoil the canvas. If in all the multitudes of young men upon whom religion has acted you could find one nature that had been the least damaged, I would yield this proposition.

You may now have enough strength of character to repel the various temptations to gross wickedness which assail you, but I do not know in what strait you may be thrust at some future time. Nothing short of the grace of the Cross may then be able to deliver you from the lions. You are not meeker than Moses, nor holier than David, nor more patient than Job, and you ought not to consider yourself invulnerable. You may have some weak point of character that you have never discovered, and in some hour when you are assaulted the Philistines will be upon thee, Samson. Trust not in your good habits, or your early training, or your pride of character; nothing short of the arm of Almighty God will be sufficient to uphold you. You look forward to the world sometimes with a chilling despondency. Cheer up, I will tell you

How You May Make a Fortune.

"Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all other things will be added unto you." I know you do not want to be mean in this matter. Give God the freshness of your life. You will not have the heart to drink down the brimming cup of life and then pour the dregs on God's altar. To a Saviour so infinitely generous you have not the heart to act like that. That is not brave, that is not honorable, that is not manly. Your greatest want in all the world is a new heart. In God's name I tell you that. And the Blessed Spirit presses through the solemnities and privileges of this holy hour. Put the cup of life eternal to your thirsty lips. Thrust it not back. Mercy offers it; bleeding mercy, long-suffering mercy. Reject all other friendships, be ungrateful for all other kindness, prove recreant to all other bargains, but despise God's love for your immortal soul—don't you do that.

I would like to see some of you this hour press out of the ranks of the world and lay your conquered spirit at the feet of Jesus. This hour is no wandering vagabond staggering over the earth, it is of the skies whispering mercy to thy soul. Life is smooth now, but after a while it may be rough, wild and precipitate. There comes a crisis in the history of every man. We seldom understand that turning point until it is far past. The road of life is forked, and I read on two sign-boards: "This is the way to happiness." "This is the way to ruin." How apt we are to pass the forks of the road without thinking whether it comes out at the door of bliss or the gates of darkness.

A Winged Messenger

A Parting at a Theatre.

Many years ago I stood on the anniversary platform with a minister of Christ who made this remarkable statement: "Thirty years ago two young men started out in the evening to attend the Park Theatre, New York, where a play was to be acted in which the cause of religion was to be placed in a ridiculous and hypocritical light. They came to the steps. The consciences of both smote them. One started to go home, but returned again to the door, and yet had not courage to enter, and finally departed. But the other young man entered the pit of the theatre. It was the turning-point in the history of those two young men. The man who entered was caught in the whirl of temptation. He sank deeper and deeper in infamy; he was lost. That other young man was saved, and he now stands before you to bless God that for twenty years he has been permitted to preach the Gospel."

"Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth; but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment."

Rev. G. H. Pember's New Prophetic Work, entitled "Earth's Earliest Ages and Their Connection With Modern Spiritualism and Theosophy," is for sale at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Office. Price $1.50. This volume of 500 pages draws a parallel between our time and the age before the Deluge, showing how closely in spirit and moral tone they resemble each other, and how many of the distinguished features of the earlier age have reappeared among us in modern dress. Thus proving that it fulfils the conditions which were to indicate the time of Christ's Second Advent (Matt. 24: 37-39).

THE SPIRIT IN THE LAST DAYS.

By Rev. F. L. Chapell.*

Two Pre-eminent Promises—Christ's Dependence on the Spirit—In His Life and Work—The Spirit to be Active Before Christ's Return—Notable Signs of It—Extended Missionary Operations—Divine Healing—Satan's Opposing Activity—Burlesquing the Spirit's Work—Theosophy and Spiritualism—The Grand Goal.

WHEN our Lord ascended He left with His disciples two pre-eminent promises. One was the promise of the Spirit; the other was the promise of His Own return. Both of these promises were very vivid in the minds of the apostles, and for both of the things promised they earnestly looked and prayed. And in their minds both of these things were harmonious, tending to the same end—namely, the establishment of the kingdom of Heaven upon earth. In the Old Testament Scriptures and in the sermons of the apostles these two things blend and coalesce. The outpourings of the spirit run into and join with the notable events of the day of the Lord. There is no break or change of agency. The work of the Spirit continues, intensifies, and outreaches, till all things, external as well as internal, material as well as spiritual, are reached and restored or perfected.

If we wish for light on the career of Christ's cause in the earth, we have but to look at His personal career; and as we look upon Him the that meets our gaze is, that He is what He was, and is what He is, and will be what He will be by reason of the Holy Spirit. He was "conceived by the Holy Ghost" (Mat. 1:20) in order to become flesh. He was "anointed with the Holy Ghost" (Acts 10:38) in order to follow His earthly ministry. He "cast out devils by the Spirit of God" (Mat. 12:28), in order to show His method of victory. He "through the eternal spirit offered Himself without spot unto God" (Heb. 9:14), in order to make His great atonement. He was raised from the dead or "quickened by the Spirit" (1. Pet. 3:18), in order to be fully manifested as the Son of God. His intercession is also by the Spirit, for "the Spirit Himself maketh intercession for us" (Rom. 8:26). And His future coming is to be no exception to the method of His past career. For prophets and apostles discern the grandest outpourings of the Spirit as in the same category with the coming of the Lord. But if Christ's person and sacrifice and intercession is by the Spirit, surely His reappearing is by the same Spirit. He went to Heaven to secure the Spirit for earth. And as soon as He arrived there He sent some measure or installment, as Pentecost witnessed, which the apostles recognized as earnests or pledges of what should more fully come at His return.

Potent and Significant Fact

Having established this general relation of the Holy Spirit to the Lord's return, we proceed to notice what general action of the Holy Spirit may be expected as the day of the Lord draws near. And here the career of the personal Christ will be our guide. There were in the career of Jesus Christ, each produced by a special action of the Holy Spirit. 1. He was begotten or constituted a son of God by the Holy Ghost. But in this capacity He was hidden. His nation knew nothing of Him. He lived in obscurity in Egypt and Nazareth for thirty years. 2. He was anointed with power by the Holy Ghost for His witnessing ministry. And, in this capacity, He filled the land with His mighty works and wonderful wisdom, thus witnessing to His divine Sonship for three years. 3. He was raised from the dead and glorified as to His physical being by the spirit of holiness, and was thus declared or manifested as the Son of God. In this capacity He lived on earth for forty days, and then, ascending, continued this, His perfect being, in the heavens.

Three Distinct Epochs

These three epochs were distinct, although there was before each of them some anticipation or foreshadowing of the next succeeding. Thus we find that His Old Testament theophanies foretokened His Incarnation. His visit to the temple, at the age of twelve, foretokened His ministry. And His transfiguration on the mount foretokened His risen or glorified state. We notice, moreover, that the enemy made special at each transition, or, as He entered upon each successive epoch: First, to kill Him as an infant; second, to seduce Him in the wilderness; and third, to overwhelm Him in Gethsemane and the tomb. If, now, we observe the career of the general, visible body of the sons of God in the historic world, we shall find these same three stages: First, Israel was begotten, or constituted by the Holy Ghost as God's son. But in this capacity she was hidden. The great world knew nothing of her. She lived in obscurity in Egypt and Palestine. Second, the church was anointed with power by the Holy Ghost to go into all the world and to be a witness to all the nations. And, though she has been far too recreant to this her specific duty in past centuries, she is now awakening to it, and the testimony is being rapidly given to all the world. The third stage is to be the resurrection and rapture, or the glorification or manifestation of the sons of God, together with the liberation of the groaning creation in the day of the Lord. If now we are of the second epoch and the beginning of the third, what special action of the Spirit may we expect in the present time? Manifestly the intensification of the work of the second epoch; and some slight anticipation of the work of the third, together with some earnest and cunning efforts of the enemy to prevent the transition.

Attempts To Thwart Him

Approaching The Close

And surely these are the very things that we now behold. That the nineteenth century has witnessed a marvellous intensification of missionary zeal is among the tritest of remarks. This is such a generally recognized sign of the times, and will be so fully and ably presented by others that I will not stop to enlarge upon it, but pass to inquire: How about anticipations of the third special work of the Spirit, namely, the glorification or perfection of our physical natures? Perhaps some are ready to say that surely nothing of this kind is occurring. But not too fast! These things are not trumpeted abroad. The Transfiguration was witnessed only by three, and even they were charged to tell no one until the event, which it foretokened, had taken place. But certain it is, that the power of the Spirit over material things, and particularly over our own bodies, is one of the thoughts that the Holy Ghost is forcing upon the attention of those who really know the Lord. The quickening of mortal bodies, or as it is more popularly called, is one of the most significant signs of the times to every one who is sufficiently instructed in the mysteries of the kingdom to recognize it as an earnest of the resurrection life. But this aside: certainly any one may notice that the doctrine, at least, of the resurrection of the dead and of the rapture of the living, holds a much larger place in the thought of the church than it did fifty years ago. Many minds have been revolutionized on this matter, so that the apostolic sayings, "We shall not all sleep;" "for this cause many are weak and sickly among you and many sleep;" "we look for the Saviour who shall change the body of our humiliation," etc., are coming to hold something of their proper place in the Christian dialect of the day.

"Divine Healing,"

But perhaps the true situation is better discerned by observing

The Tactics of The Enemy.

Satan is wiser than men, and more on the alert to foresee what is coming. And he is now seeking most earnestly and adroitly to forestall with his lying wonders, and so to hinder the work of the Spirit in this regard. Why is it that we hear so much in our day about theosophy and spiritualism and esoteric Buddhism and Christian science, falsely so called? Why is it that spiritualistic cures are wrought, that alleged spirits are materialized, that corporeal bodies are levitated, and that astral bodies are separated, except to forestall and hinder the genuine work of the Holy Spirit in this department? It is but a little while since the reign of law—the impossibility of anything supernatural in physics—was the stronghold of unbelief. Why is the enemy now changing his tactics? It is, I believe, because the Holy Spirit is soon to work His third work for the sons of God.

But, thanks be to God, the Scriptures stand uncontaminated. They not only point out but they give us fair and plain and repeated warnings of the false doctrines and lying wonders that Satan will interpose before the goal is reached. To disentangle the sure word of prophecy from all beguiling admixtures of error is the duty of the hour. The watching prayer of God's people is not to their souls or minds to go from this dying scene of decaying nature; but it is, rather, to the spirit of the living God to come into it, and to restore and perfect it. This third office of the Spirit is fully indicated in the Scriptures, and the events of the day of the Lord will fully verify what is there indicated. And while we wait we cry, "Come, Holy Spirit," "Come, Lord Jesus," fully assured that these cries are wholly in harmony, and that when both are answered the kingdom will have come, and the will of God will be done on earth as it is in heaven. "He which testifieth these things saith: Surely, I come quickly—Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

The Grand Goal,

* From his address at the Chicago Conference. A full report of this address and many others is contained in a volume entitled "Prophetic Studies," 216 pages. Price 50 cents paper covers, or 75 cents in cloth. May be had from this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

A CHINAMAN'S CHANGED LIFE.

A MEMBER of the party which went from Cambridge University to China through the instrumentality of Mr. D. L. Moody, sends a cheering account of the success that is attending their labors. Among other incidents he mentions that of a man named Fan Lih-yu, who lives near Shan-si. This man had from childhood always been careful and correct in his conduct; and as he grew older the desire to attain to a high standard of virtue deepened into a fixed longing. He resorted to the usual devices of the human heart for attaining to this, and his name for benevolence and well-doing spread through his immediate neighborhood. Though others praised him, the Holy Spirit was deepening conviction of sin in his soul. He decided "to leave the world and cultivate the practice of virtue." At this time he was a young man, and his female relatives wouldn't hear of his taking this step of becoming a recluse. A compromise was effected; he consented to live with his wife and family till he reached the age of thirty, when it was agreed he should be free to leave all and become a hermit: thus having leisure to attend to the salvation of his soul.

Meanwhile he attached himself to one of the many religious sects in this region, and continued to live a life of great strictness. He had heard of the gospel from some of our brethren, who live in his village and the surrounding neighborhood, but appears to have been uninterested in what he heard. Last year the news that there was in this city a place where a doctrine, said to be very good in its teachings, was being promulgated, reached his ears. Accordingly one Sunday last December he came in and sat through the service. Stanley Smith conducted it, and spoke on the words of the Lord, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of God." The Holy Spirit sent the word home into the man's heart, and next morning he came full of eagerness to hear more. After some hours of conversation with him, Stanley asked him if he was willing then and there to receive the Lord Jesus Christ as his Lord and Saviour. He said, Yes. They knelt down and the matter was settled. Since then he has been growing in the knowledge of the Lord, and was baptized at the Conference.

Naturally a very quiet, rather silent man, he now in his village is preaching and publishing the news of the Gospel. As he walked home a carter offered him a lift, which he accepted, and then preached the Gospel to the kind carter, who then and there believed in the Lord. The other Christians were alarmed at his manner, for he did not eat or drink as before, and prayed and preached much. They feared that he was under some oppression of the devil; on our getting the news yesterday morning, we set out to the village, and I feel quite sure that it is God's work.

His manner is perfectly clear and collected, but there is an intensity and earnestness, especially in his prayers, that would convince much more sceptical people than oneself. What is the most cheering feature of this is the simple, clear faith in a crucified Redeemer. Oh, it is glory indeed to see this dear man's joy and love, and wonderful enlightenment in the things of God! It is another call to preach the Gospel of Christ; to have faith in it as the power of God unto salvation. Expect to hear of mighty outbreaks in these parts. I feel convinced that God's time has arrived.

AN INFIDEL SAVED FROM SUICIDE.

A REMARKABLE testimony was given recently at Cremorne Mission in New York. A man said that he was an infidel, the son of infidel parents. He received a good education and was employed in the Indian Department of the British civil service. He could speak Persian, Sanscrit and Hindustanee. Though he had been a temperate man all his life, he fell into the snare of rum a short time ago when he came to America in charge of some products to be exhibited at the New Orleans Exhibition. Fast companions led him into other sins, and in a short time he was without money and on the high road to ruin. Determining to get back to England if possible, he made his way to New York from New Orleans. He arrived here tired, hungry, ill-clad and penniless. His pride would not allow him to beg, and he was unable to procure work. Utterly broken down and reckless he determined to drown himself, and set out for the river. On his way he passed the Gospel Tent, in which the Rev. A. B. Simpson has been holding services during the summer. Something attracted him and he went inside, and for the first time in his life he listened to the gospel. The Spirit applied the word to his heart, and he rose to ask for prayers. His infidelity seemed to vanish completely and eventually he was led to Christ. A situation in a large liquor store was offered him, and though he would have accepted it eagerly a few days before, he refused it. He is now employed where the work is more laborious, but where he has opportunity for Christian service. His joy in Christ is most ecstatic.

A MORAL MAN'S DISCOVERY.

AT the close of one of the services in the Berachah Mission, New York, some two months ago when an invitation was given to all who desired prayer for their conversion to hold up their hands, a little girl was noticed urging her father to hold up his. He seemed disinclined to do so, being a sober, moral man, who thought he was good enough. Eventually, however, he did so, and one of the workers entered into conversation with him. United prayer was offered on his behalf, and that night he was converted. He said at a subsequent meeting: "For forty years I have been going by churches and missions, looking up at them and passing on, but never thinking of entering, as I was utterly devoid of interest as to what was said or done in them. A few weeks ago my little girl began to come here, then her mother came, and after a while they got me to come. Well, I confess I liked the services and the people, and made up my mind to come again, and so I've been coming now for six weeks or more. I never thought but what I was a good man until after my little girl would have me raise my hand to ask for prayer, and one of these workers came to me and asked me 'If I had given my heart to God.' I felt condemned at once and realized my guilt, but still I kept at a distance from my Saviour. Then things came to such a pass with me that I felt that the matter had to be settled. I was in perfect agony; my state of heart and mind was indescribably wretched, but I cried to the Lord: He forgave my sins, and the peace which passes all understanding now fills my soul.

A FRENCHMAN'S TWO SAVIOURS.

AT one of Mr. McAll's meetings in Paris, a rough looking workingman, who had been converted at the mission and is now a devoted and active Christian, told a most pointed story of his own life. "I have had two Saviours," he said. "The first was after the Commune. I was taken and accused as a Communist, and, without any form of trial, was marched to instant death. In my own eyes I was a dead man. Marching across the Champ de Mars, we met an officer, who touched me, and said to the soldiers, 'What are you doing with that man there? I answer for him; he is an honest man; let him go.' They let me go. This man was my savior. I did not know then that I was in danger of another death, that my sin had condemned me before God. Years after, I found it out, and I was in despair. I could see no way to be saved. Then Jesus Christ passed by, and said, 'This man—I answer for him.' And a second time I was saved."

HOW CHRISTIANS FARE IN PERSIA.

IN describing a recent tour in Karadagh in Persia in a letter to a contemporary, the Rev. S. G. Wilson says: We passed the night in a village across the basin of the Aji Chai, and going out into the street, a group of twenty or more gathered around. The Armenian evangelist and I sat down on the ground by the blacksmith shop, and presented Jesus as the divine Saviour. Their spokesman tried with ill-success to maintain the superiority of Mohammed. Some of the younger men sided with us, and took part in praising Jesus. At last the blacksmith arose and said, "I'll shoe their horses quickly, and get these men out of here." The spokesman, too, muttered some words about raising a row, so we thought it discreet to withdraw. The population of Karadagh is wild and bigoted, and they have rarely had their traditional faith called in question. In many parts of Persia the idea that the touch of a Christian is contaminating, has passed away, but there it remains. The next day we inquired about stopping for lunch, and as we passed on we heard some women say, "Let them sit down, and we will raise the men against them." We stopped at the next village on a grassy spot under some trees. I went into a field to rest and a Turk asked me crossly what business I had there, and helped me out with a gentle stroke of his stick. At another place they reviled our muleteer for serving Christians, hoping that "the birds of the air might eat his carcass."

A FALSE SELF-ACCUSER.

A Chicago young lady's effort to save her lover from prison, has caused some difficulty in a trial in that city. The father of the girl is captain of a steam tug, and a man of good character. Recently his house was robbed of a considerable sum of money, and he with some reason suspected that the thief was a young man who much to his disgust is the accepted lover of his daughter. He had the young man arrested, and the evidence against him appeared conclusive. But before the trial the captain's daughter made a written confession that she was the thief. It was she and she alone, she said, who had stolen her father's money, and she addressed two letters to her lover who was in prison awaiting his trial, repeating the statement. When the trial came on she was present with the intention of going on the witness-stand and testifying to her guilt. It was therefore decided to abandon the prosecution, as no jury would convict in the face of such evidence. Both the captain and the police are convinced that the girl had nothing to do with the theft, and that the young man is guilty, especially as there is another charge of burglary against him. The girl, however, has succeeded in saving him from punishment, whether her self-accusation is true or false. She doubtless considers herself a heroine, but as she knew that she was safe from prosecution her heroism is of a cheap order, and is probably a very wicked heroism. This wretched travesty of substitution reminds us by contrast of the grandeur of Christ's vicarious sacrifice. Though Himself sinless, He so loved the sinner, that He bore the punishment that the sinner might be saved (1 Peter 2: 24)

A KOORDISH SHEPHERD'S DIFFICULTY

THE mission work in Persia has received a great impetus from the hospital ministrations. Patients who go for healing of the body receive spiritual blessing in addition, and go away home carrying the glad tidings. One case reported is that of a young Koordish shepherd who was deeply interested in Christian truth, but was not inclined to believe anything without the strongest evidence. One of the hardest things for him to accept was Christ's free foregiveness of sin. With his hot Koordish blood he could not see how God could forgive until He had first taken revenge. He one day heard the passage read where Christ likens himself to the Good Shepherd. The young man eagerly asked, Does Jesus truly love me as I love my sheep?" and then added, "Now I can understand how he can forgive my sins. Toward spring he returned to his dark mountain home, where pillage and bloodshed were scenes of almost daily occurrence. Good report came constantly of his Christian-like deportment, although exposed to great peril from his Mohammedan friends for his confession of the Lord Jesus. He has lately returned to the hospital, and desires to be baptized. In other parts of the mountains of Koordistan, difficult of access, missionaries and native helpers on recent tours have found old hospital patients giving them a hearty welcome, and ready to promote their mission of gospel light.

YEARS OF WORK FOR A BIBLE.

SEVERAL interesting and encouraging incidents are briefly reported to the Church by Miss Chamberlain, who is laboring at Sivas in Turkey. She says: "A few days since a girl burst into my room, saying: "Oh, teacher, I am afraid I have not money enough for a Bible; but please give me one, for father has promised to read with me." The six cents that were wanting were not to be thought of in the presence of such an eager girl.

In one of our villages, some fifteen years since, a Bible-seller was thrown down-stairs, dragged out of the village and beaten. One of the perpetrators of this cruel act sent for a coarse-print Testament, and he and his wife are reported to be quite changed in their daily life.

A little girl of the Gregorians came to our Sabbath-school, and for learning the Golden Texts she received a Testament. This she carefully kept, as she had an old one. The following year she gained another Testament, and the third year something else. Then she brought her long-kept treasures and a few cents, and entreated that she might exchange them for a Bible; and the tears streamed down her face as she said: "I have waited these years for it." I often see her on the Sabbath, and look to see where her mark is, for she reads day by day the Word for which she labored so long. It is her one treasure, the only thing she has on earth that is her very own, save the threadbare clothes she wears.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, women or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The President's Thanksgiving Proclamation appointing the observance of Thursday, November 24, was issued on October 25. The President says: "The goodness and the mercy of God which have followed the American people during all the days of the past year, claim their grateful recognition and humble acknowledgment. By His omnipotent power He has protected us from war and pestilence, and from every national calamity; by His gracious favor the earth has yielded a generous return to the labor of the husbandman, and every path of honest toil has led to comfort and contentment; by His loving kindness the hearts of our people have been replenished with fraternal sentiment and patriotic endeavor, and by His unerring guidance we have been directed in the way of national prosperity." And he adds to his appointment of the day the suggestion that, "Families and kindred be reunited on that day, and let their hearts, filled with kindly cheer and affectionate reminiscence, be turned in thankfulness to the Source of all their pleasures and the Giver of all that makes the day glad and joyous. And in the midst of our worship and our happiness let us remember the poor, the needy, and the unfortunate, and by our gifts of charity and ready benevolence let us increase the number of those who with grateful hearts, shall join in our thanksgiving.

The Arrival of Another Cholera Infected ship has suggested to the quarantine Commissioners the necessity for greater powers to be exercised by them or the government. The danger is becoming so serious that unless stringent measures are promptly taken the plague may find an entrance into this country. The Commissioners have now applied to the Secretary of the Treasury, believing that he has power to prevent infected vessels entering our ports. They directed their President to ask the Secretary whether ships with immigrants on board and from ports where cholera is prevailing cannot be sent back to the ports from which the emigrants were shipped, it being the opinion of the board that, if the power to return such immigrants to the ports of embarkation is with the Secretary of the Treasury, he should now exercise it. According to the quarantine laws the Commissioners cannot now order an infected ship to put back to sea.

The Question as to the Civil Service Examiners, which was recently raised and produced a difference of opinion between Commissioners Oberly and Edgerton, is now settled, subject to the President's approval, so far as the Commission is concerned. Mr. Lyman last week stated that he was opposed to members of political committees being examiners. As he is, therefore, in agreement with his colleague, Mr. Oberly, his view will prevail, unless the President overrules it. At the same time Mr. Lyman expressed his conception of an ideal civil service. "It would be a service," he said, "which would be made up of men of all parties; men who might in truth, and on suitable occasions give expression to strong political views, but who would hold the expression and advocacy of those views in subordination to the public interest, and in so doing would yield no whit of their rights or privileges as citizens. It is clearly the right of a citizen—of every citizen"—said Mr. Lyman, "to hold and express, in word and act, political views; but it is not the right of any citizen who is also a public servant, so to give expression to his political views, either in word or act, as to bring discord and confusion into the public service." This view is so utterly opposed to the system so long in vogue, that Mr. Lyman will incur, by expressing it, the animosity of all lovers of the old system.

An Interesting Report Filed by the Superintendent of Indian schools, on October 27, shows the progress at length being made in this important matter. Mr. Riley states that the aggregate expenditure by the government for the education of Indian children during the year was $1,095,379. The whole number of Indian children between the ages of six and sixteen years is 39,821; of this number, 14,932 attended school, Mr. Riley says that too much stress cannot be laid upon the importance of preparing native teachers, and to this end suggests that a normal school department be established at some of the larger schools. He also recommends that an industrial boarding-school be established near the Missouri River, adjacent to the Sioux Reservation; that schools be provided for the tribes in Nevada; that Congress be requested to provide for the education of 100 Indian children, to be selected from the tribes living in the State of New York; and that a commission be appointed and empowered to make a thorough examination of the whole subject of Indian education.

An Effort to Arouse the Citizens of New York to a recognition of their duties was made last week by the City Reform Club. It issued a pamphlet giving the record of the legislators who represented the city at Albany in the last Legislature. The information it supplies ought to convince every citizen that the present method of selecting candidates by both parties is hopelessly bad, and cannot be too soon abandoned. Summarizing the conclusions to which the club has arrived, it appears that of the seven Senators, two only are worthy of commendation and a third is honest. The others are described as "disgracefully bad." Of the twenty-four Assemblymen, only four are spoken of in favorable terms; while of the other twenty, some are characterized as "ignorant, corrupt, or otherwise unfit." This will continue so long as citizens can be relied upon to vote the straight party ticket without discrimination. It may be hoped that the club will succeed in arousing the conscience of Christian voters, and incidentally, that other cities will take warning by the evils into which the Empire City has fallen.

The Utterances of Dr. McGlynn, the Excommunicated Roman Catholic priest are stirring up the Bishops of that church to further proceedings in his case. The large audiences that assemble wherever Dr. McGlynn is to speak, and the enthusiasm with which he is greeted, are becoming dangerous to the church. The amusing stories the ex-priest tells of the gross blunders which the present Pope has made, especially in reference to America, must have convinced his Romanist hearers that there are many spheres in which Leo is not infallible. Recently, Dr. McGlynn, who has had opportunities of knowing whereof he speaks, said that "most nuns were fitted for their calling by their professional garb only," and hints are given that he has other exposures to make. It is not surprising, therefore that threats are being uttered. The Roman Catholic Bishop of Rochester, N. Y., said in the course of his sermon on Sunday, Oct. 22, in reference to McGlynn: "When a Catholic priest or an instructed Catholic goes to hear this man, it is a sin, and he is liable to excommunication. If this thing goes on, you will find that I and other Catholic Bishops will pronounce sentence of excommunication against those who, not being ignorant, hover about this man." Present indications, however, are that his friends who are still members of the church, if forced to choose between Dr. McGlynn and the church, will quit the church.

The Knights of Labor, at the Recent General Assembly at Minneapolis, decided two burning questions which have long agitated the Order. One was an attempt to rescind the rule prohibiting any person dealing in, or deriving profit from the sale of intoxicating liquors, from admission to the Order, and with it, the companion rule prohibiting assemblies from selling liquors at their picnics and social gatherings. The attempt was overwhelmingly defeated, and the temperance principles of the Order were maintained. The second question referred to the anarchist element. The General Assembly decided that no flag should be carried in the parades of the Knights of Labor but the State or National colors. Those who want to march under the Red flag will therefore, have to march apart from the Knights. There is considerable disaffection in the Order, and disruption is threatened, but on these two questions public opinion is with the Assembly.

The Arrest of Sir Wilfrid Blunt at Woodford, County Galway, Ireland on October 23, has caused much excitement. Sir Wilfrid is the well-known philanthropist and benefactor of Arabi Pacha, who was formerly a conservative but is now a home ruler. He was announced to preside at a public meeting, supported by Mr. Rowlands and other English members of Parliament. The police stormed the platform, and Sir Wilfrid Blunt apparently lost his temper. He dared the police to arrest him, and they took him at his word. He resisted violently, but was soon overpowered and lodged in jail. He was brought up for trial on October 26 and sentenced to two months imprisonment. An appeal has been taken, but it is difficult to see how it can benefit Sir Wilfrid. He was clearly breaking the law and defying the government, which has declared its intention of treating English and Irish agitators who speak at proclaimed meetings, on the same footing.

The Difficulty Between France and England on the Egyptian question appears to have been removed. Lord Salisbury having failed to arrange a treaty with Turkey, commenced negotiations with France directly, and it is reported that an agreement has been reached. Though the terms have not been authoritatively disclosed, the main provisions are stated to be that: The Suez Canal shall be kept open in time of war; that no act of hostility shall be permitted at either of its approaches or on its banks within a zone to be determined by an international commission on supervision; that belligerent Powers shall neither embark nor disembark troops or war material on the canal or in the ports of access, and that if Egypt proves unable to compel respect for the treaty, she will appeal to Turkey, who, in concert with the Signatory Powers, will take the necessary measures to enforce obedience. It is reported that Germany, Austria and Russia already approve the convention. The English government has, on its side, given assurances satisfactory to France as to the date of evacuation of the country.

Further News of Mr. H. M. Stanley's Progress was received in Brussels on October 25. It came by the steamer Florida direct from Stanley to the nearest telegraph station, whence it was sent to the King of the Belgians. It reports that Stanley has advanced about seven hundred and eighty miles since he was last heard of, on August 25. He was in excellent health. He had met with a friendly reception from the natives in hitherto unexplored country through which he had to pass. As a precaution the explorer has had entrenched camps constructed at all his halting places, but he does not apprehend molestation.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $9.50. They are from Blue Earth City, Minn., $2 50; Warren, N., H., $5; Minneapolis, Minn., $2. We are extremely glad to receive these amounts, for many colored ministers who received the paper last year missed its visits sadly, as the fund was exhausted. The help they received from the sermons and articles published in the paper was priceless to men whose means do not allow of their collecting a library. Their congregations are also profited by it, through them, so that even one dollar added to this fund confers a benefit on a large number of persons. To those who know the condition of the colored people in the South, and the need their pastors have of such help as this journal gives, it is unnecessary to say more.

The Withdrawal of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon from the Baptist Union, which has been so freely commented upon in the daily press during the past week, is not so important a matter as has been represented. Mr. Spurgeon has not wavered in his adherence to the principles and doctrines of the Baptist denomination, and his withdrawal from the Union does not imply any change in his beliefs or teachings. The Union is simply an association of ministers and churches for united work in missions, etc., and in all such work Mr. Spurgeon's church, whether in the Union or alone, will always do its part while he presides over it. In withdrawing from the Union, Mr. Spurgeon is entering his conscientious protest against a latitudinarian spirit which has been growing rapidly of late years. His own words will best express his motive. He says: "To pursue union at the expense of the truth, is treason to Jesus. To tamper with His doctrine, is to become traitors to Him. We have before us the wretched spectacle of professedly orthodox Christians publicly avowing union with those who deny the faith, call the fall of man a fable, and deny the personality of the Holy Ghost."

The Special Conference on the Inspiration of the Bible, preliminary notices of which have already appeared in these columns, will be held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, Philadelphia, Nov. 15-18. Among the eminent clergymen who will read papers on the various branches of the subject are: Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D. D., Philadelphia; Prof. J. M. Stifler, Crozier Seminary; Rev. George S. Bishop, D. D., Orange, N. J.; Prof. L. F. Townsend, D. D., Boston, Mass.; Rev. W. Dinwiddie, D. D., Greenwood, Va.; Rev. W. Gardner, D. D., Michigan; Prof. W. R. Harper, Yale College; Rev. J. H. Brookes, D. D., St. Louis; Rev. T. C. Child, D. D., Washington, D. C.; Rev. T. C. Johnson, D. D., Virginia; Rev. J. E. Gilbert, D. D., Indianapolis, Ind.; Rt. Rev. W. R. Nicholson, D. D., Philadelphia; Prof. Howard Osgood, D. D., Rochester Seminary; Prof. W. G. Moorhead, D. D., Xenia College, Ohio; Rev. T. W. Chambers, D. D., New York; Rev. Howard Crosby, D. D., New York; Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D., Philadelphia. For full particulars address Rev. George C. Needham, 1528 Market St., Philadelphia.

A Living Man Officially Declared Dead is causing some trouble among his friends in Baltimore, Md. The sergeant on duty at the Southern police station in that city was startled on October 21, by the entrance of a wild, excited man, who walking up to his desk exclaimed, "I vos der man dot vos trowned." As soon as he became suffici ntly composed to explain, he said that he had left Baltimore suddenly and secretly last July, owing to a disagreement with his wife, and had gone to Hartford County, where he found work in a tomato canning establishment. He remained there until two weeks ago, when he had an uncontrollable desire to return and make it up with his wife. He had just got back and found himself an outcast. About a week after his departure in July, a dead body had been found floating in the Patapsco, very much decomposed, which had been identified as his. His wife had professed to recognize it, an inquest had been held, and the body, buried in his lot in the cemetery. What was still more trying, his goods had been sold, and his place in other ways filled up. The sergeant showed him the official record of his death, and told him he could do nothing for him; he must take legal measures to get alive again. Those who have profited by the man's supposed death will probably take the same attitude, but if he happens to have any unsatisfied creditors they will take a different view. The complication is singular, but in spiritual matters the Christian knows what it is to be officially yet and yet alive. He is dead to the world, but alive to God (Rom. 6 : 11).

A Fortune has been Unexpectedly Inherited by an old soldier, at Lock Haven, Pa. On Oct. 26, he received a letter from a lawyer at Marblehead, Mass., requesting him to come and take possession of a property valued at $18,000, which had been bequeathed to him by a citizen recently deceased. On complying with the request he found that the legacy was an act of gratitude for a service he had rendered to a comrade during the war, and had almost been forgotten. During the battle at Hatcher's Run, Va., on October 27, 1864, he had seen a comrade fall, badly wounded. He ran to him, and, though the bullets were flying around him, he had dragged him out of danger, and got him carried to the hospital. There, after a long struggle for life, the man had recovered. But for the timely help he would have bled to death where he fell. The rescued man prospered after the war, and has now left all his property to the man who saved his life, at the risk of his own, twenty-three years ago. The legacy is a genuine surprise to the recipient, who never expected any reward for an act of simple humanity. A day is coming in which far greater rewards will fall to many who, without expectation of recompense, have shown kindness to those whom Christ has made His representatives (Matt. 25 : 37-40).

A Child's Interview with the President, and its results, are described in the Philadelphia Call. It appears that when the Presidential party was in the city, a little girl only six years old, learning the cause of the general excitement, resolved to make the President a present on her own account. She gathered and arranged a bouquet of wild-flowers, and without telling any one of her purpose, took it to his hotel and asked the clerk to "give that to the President." Amused at the little child's gift, the clerk called a bell boy and placed her in his care that she might make the gift in person. On entering the rooms occupied by the Chief Magistrate, the child walked straight up to him, and presenting the flowers said, "I picked these on purpose for you, Mr. President." The President, showing in his face the pleasure which the childish gift and simplicity called forth, asked her name. This she readily gave, and after being kissed by the President she returned to her home. Her parents could scarcely credit the story when she told them, but a few days ago it received confirmation when a package addressed to the little girl was received from President Cleveland, containing his portrait and an autograph letter of thanks. She was delighted at receiving so much notice from a man in so exalted a station. It may be hoped as she grows older, the simplicity and boldness which prompted her visit to the President, may still characterize her, and that she may offer to the King of kings the gift He will not despise (Ps. 51 : 17).

A Curious Hiding Place for Money was Discovered in Connecticut on October 21. About six weeks ago an eccentric old farmer, who resided near Waterbury, died, and a diligent search was made for his savings by his heirs. The old man was known to have accumulated a considerable sum of ready money beside his real estate, yet no trace of it could be found. He had no confidence in banks, and used to hide his money until he could invest it safely. He was often cautioned against doing so, as it was a temptation to thieves, but he would smile knowingly, and say he guessed no thief was smart enough to find his bank. He died suddenly without revealing his secret, and the heirs could not find it. After the search was abandoned two boys noticed a large grey squirrel running around the old mans place and chased it. The squirrel took refuge in a hollow tree near the house and the boys followed. It crawled through a hole in an old box which was fixed in the tree, and the boys stopped the hole and with some difficulty dislodged the box and carried it off with the squirrel in it. On opening it they found that the animal had a costly nest. It was nearly full of bank notes which the squirrel had chewed or torn to pieces. Scarcely a single note was intact, but the fragments showed that the total value must have been several thousand dollars, only a small part of which can be recovered. If the old miser could have foreseen how his hoarded wealth would be wasted, it would have almost broken his heart. He was spared that grief, but he has made the more momentous discovery that the only treasures which can avail him now are those eternal treasures which were once within his reach (Matt. 6: 19, 20).

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. Justin Fulton, D. D., has been delivering lectures on the Pauline Propaganda in Boston, Mass.

Mr. D; L. Moody expects to commence his services in Pittsburgh, Pa., on November 7, or as soon afterward as possible. The churches of the city are united in the work.

A general summary of the English Wesleyan Methodist Conference gives the total membership of the community as 537,000, with nearly 47,000 on trial. The ministers number 2,867, including probationers and supernumeraries.

The ninth Biennial Conference of Young Women's Christian Associations was held in the Hall of the Y. W. C. A., New York, last week. There was a large attendance of delegates from various States, and the sessions were devoted to earnest, practical discussion.

Extensive preparations are being made for Dr. L. W. Munhall's mission at Columbus, O. Prayers for God's blessing on the work are being offered in the churches, and workers from the Y. M. C. A. are volunteering for any kind of service that may be needed. A large outpouring of the Spirit may be expected.

The statistics of the Reformed Episcopal Church; for last year are: Baptisms, 907; confirmations, 916 received otherwise, 519; present number of communicants, 8,429; contributions for all purposes, $155,861.51; church buildings, 87; value of church property, less incumbrances, $1.077,758.

The Louisville, Ky., churches have arranged for the erection of a temporary building for Mr. Moody's services. It will be built on a vacant lot belonging to the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, on Broadway, and will have a seating capacity for five thousand persons. The meetings will commence on January 1, 1888.

Mr. E. P. Telford's work in America has opened with most encouraging tokens of success. Signs of a great movement are observed. Dr. Hamilton's church at Somerville, Mass., where he now is, is crowded every night, and much good is being done. Mr. Telford has accepted invitations for mission work in Lynn, Mass., and at Dr. Baldwin's church, in Boston, Mass.

Sunday, November 13, is the day appointed for United Prayer for young men and Young Men's Christian Associations. The International Committee earnestly request clergymen of all denominations to remember the fact in their sermons and prayers, and commend it to their congregations. In many churches special prayer-meetings will be held each evening from November 13-19.

A sermon was preached under very interesting circumstances, on August 21, in Japan, by Bishop Warren, of the M. E. Church About 1,500 persons assembled to hear it in the Meiji Kaido, at Tokio. That is the building erected by the opponents of Christianity for the use of anti-Christian lecturers. A missionary translated the Bishop's sermon into Japanese, for the benefit of the natives in the congregation.

The sermons of pastor C. H. Spurgeon are now being read every Sunday in many Greek churches in Servia. The order of the Metropolitan of Servia, that the priests should preach in their churches, was being disobeyed, because the priests were not able to preach. A Christian gentleman of Belgrade came to their assistance, by furnishing them with translations of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons, which they now read by permission.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

WALKING IN LIGHT.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"If we say that we have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John 1 : 6, 7.

The Apostle's Warning—The Common Tendency to Pretension—The Christian's Walk—I. Its Light—The Light of Grace—Of Sincerity—Of Publicity—Of the Scriptures—Produces Simplicity of Character—Abhorrence of Sin—II. The Communion of the Walk—III. The Glory of the Communion—Prison Doors Opened—Fellowship with God—In Hatred of Sin—In Love of Jesus—In Joy over Reconciliation—In Purpose.

THE apostle warns us against saying more than we have made our own by experience. He hints at the solemn difference between empty profession and gracious reality. To have fellowship with God is a great matter; but merely to say that we have fellowship with Him is a totally different thing. John warns us that if we say that which our characters do not support, we lie. He leaves it just so, without a word of softening or excuse. Between saying and being, between saying and doing, there may be all the difference in the world. There is a tendency among men, if there be a good experience, to say that they possess it: if there be a high privilege of grace, to say that they are enjoying it. What a folly is this! It is akin to madness. To unsound minds a precious original suggests a desire to fashion an imitation. To the untruthful mind the genuine is an invitation to be the counterfeit. Let us be upon our guard, that we do not flatter ourselves into Saying More than is True.

Let us not stretch our arm beyond our sleeve, nor boast beyond our line. Every profession will be tried with fire; let us, therefore, see to it that we put in no claim which will not endure the severest test. There were certain in John's day who said, "We have fellowship with God." How they had come by it they did not explain: perhaps they claimed they have reached it by philosophical speculation, by exact reasoning, or by long-continued meditation. Whatever the road, they said that they had reached the city of God, and were in communion with the Great Being. John saw that they walked in darkness, rejecting the light of divine revelation from above, and the pure light of the Holy Spirit within; he saw also that they themselves were not true, and that their lives were not pure, and therefore he warned them that they were speaking and acting a lie. The disciple whom Jesus loved spoke like the Son of Thunder that he was, when he had to deal with shams. It is the part of true love to be honest, and to expose that which would be injurious to those he loves. He who will gloss over a falsehood loves but in word only. Learn, then, that if men boast of fellowship with God, and do not receive the revelation of His word, they lie, and know not the truth.

Let us speak of the real thing, the fellowship with God which comes of walking in the light.

I. Consider first,

The Light of our Walk

True believers do not walk in darkness: they have found the road, and they see it before them. They know whom they have believed, and why they have believed, and so they go forward intelligently. How unhappy are those who are sure of nothing but a groping for the way, and wandering in endless circles of hope and fear! True believers walk onward, because a light shows them their path, and makes them sure of safety and progress. What is meant by walking in the light? It is somewhat singular that last Sunday morning our subject was "The Child of Light walking in Darkness." That darkness is very different from the darkness with which we deal this morning. Children of light may for a time walk in the darkness of sorrow; but from the darkness of untruthfulness, ignorance, sin and unbelief they have been delivered. In these respects the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. Moral darkness is contrary to their new-born nature: they cannot endure it. We must distinguish between things that differ. between the darkness of sorrow and the darkness of sin. A metaphor may be used for many purposes, and that of darkness has a wide range of meaning.

What is this Light, then, in which the Christian walks? I answer, first, it is the light of grace. In our natural state we are in darkness, and under the dominion of the Prince of Darkness. When the grace of God comes the day-spring on high visits us. The Holy Spirit brings us out from under the dominion of the old nature by creating within us a new life, and He brings us out from under the tyranny of the Prince of Darkness by opening our eyes to see and our minds to understand celestial truth. The entrance of God's word into the mind by the power of the Holy Spirit gives us light as to ourselves, our sin and our danger. With this comes light as to the way of salvation through Jesus Christ, and light as to the mind of God concerning our sanctification. True knowledge takes the place of ignorance, and a desire for purity becomes supreme over the love of sin. With the driving out of our natural darkness old things pass away, and with the coming in of the divine light all things become new.

The result of this light is seen in various ways. It causes deep sorrow in the beginning, for its first discoveries are grievous to the conscience. Light is painful to eyes long accustomed to darkness. Anon the light brings great joy, for the soul perceives deliverance from the evils which it mourned. Thus light and gladness in the end go together, as it is written, "Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart." Ever, in each condition, you observe conspicuously that the light of grace is seen as

The Light of Sincerity.

Until grace comes into our souls we have no heart for the things of God. We may be fussily religious so far as to be attentive to every outward form of worship; but there is no heart work, no light of truth, in all our devotion. But when once the divine light comes in, then we become intensely real in our dealings with God. We do not merely say that we desire salvation and eternal life; but we feel that we must have them, and cannot be denied. We cease from playing fast and loose with God. We no longer halt between two opinions, but one thing we seek after, desiring it of the Lord; we would be right with God in all respects.

Next to sincerity I regard a willingness to know and to be known as an early result of walking in the light of God. The ungodly come not to the light, lest their deed should be reproved. There are matters about which they desire no light, but rather say, "Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways." Where ignorance affords them a present peace they count it folly to be wise. Alas! it is too commonly the case that men have no inclination to obtain a knowledge which might involve humilation, repentance and a retracing of steps. "Let well alone," cry they. How many will say, "Well, we have been Christians after our own way for a good many years; why need we question ourselves?" They look upon a faithful preacher with suspicion: he comes a deal too close home. When he begins to deal with the heart and conscience, they look at him as if he were a dog hunting about for a rat. Truly the emblem is not so very unlike; for wherever there is a self-satisfaction which is afraid of light, we suspect that the rat of hypocrisy is not far off. A religion which we will not submit to the test of examination cannot be worth much.

Docility.

A still surer evidence of grace is the mind's perception of revealed truth and its obedience to it. Then has true light shone on a man's walk when he perceives the truth revealed by the Holy Spirit in sacred Scripture, and receives it into his heart with a child-like spirit. He that receives Christ also receives Christ's words, and the doctrine which we believe is by no means a matter of indifference. Whatever may be said, brethren, we have received a revelation from God; which we know to be "the faith once for all delivered to the saints." The Lord God has broken through the veil of silence, and had manifested himself to the sons of men. Through the darkness of their minds the carnal cannot see what God has revealed, neither will they believe His truth. The truth of God is spiritual, and the natural man is carnal, and therefore the natural man will not receive the teaching which comes from God. By this test shalt thou know whether the true light is shining upon thee. Dost thou believe what God has revealed in His word? This is to walk in the light. All other teaching is darkness,

This, beloved brethren, leads to a transparency and simplicity of character. Walking in the light produces Israelites indeed, in whom is no guile. Those who are full of deceit and craftiness upon any subject are not walking in the light of God. God will not have fellowship with any whose minds are crooked and deceitful. Some persons are so warped that nothing is straight to them; their minds seem to see things crookedly; long practice in untruthfulness has given them an evil bias. This is not the case with the man in whom is shining. The man who does in reality what he seems to do; the man who says what he means, and means what he says; the man who is truthful, artless and sincere in all his general dealings both before God and man—he it is whose conduct leads us to hope that the light of grace shines within.

The Light of Grace

The man who is walking in the light, as God is in the light, is full of abhorrence of sin. Sin is practical falsehood; it is a moral darkness. The man that abhors evil and injustice; the man that would do good if it cost him his earthly all; the man who would not do wrong though the world should be his reward for doing it—this is the man that walks in the light, and he is the man that shall have fellowship with God, and a sense of cleansing from sin. We cannot attach too great importance to the condition of our minds in reference to sin; for if we wink at it or take pleasure in it, or persistently practice it, we are abiding in the darkness, and we are under the wrath of God. John says: "Little children, let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous." Forget not this practical truth.

II. I come, secondly, to

The Communion of our Walk.

Those who are in the light shall not be alone God Himself will be with them, and be their God. The words, "We have fellowship one with another," constitute a wonderfully condescending expression. John would not have dared coin such an expression; it must have been minted for him by the Spirit from above. Think of God and His people having mutual intercourse! What honor! What joy is this!

God in the light and man in the light have much in common. Now are they abiding in one element, for they are dwelling in one light. Now are they both concerned about the same thing, and their arms are undivided; God loves truth, and so do those who are renewed in heart. It has come to pass that the great Lord and His enlightened ones see things in the same light. God with His great vision beholds more than we can, yet He does not see more than the truth; and we with our narrow perceptions see the truth, and falsehood we cannot tolerate. Now we can speak with God, seeing we speak truth; and He can converse with us, seeing we are ready to hear the truth. In prayer and praise we are no longer false, and therefore the Lord can hear us. His word falls also upon an honest mind, and so its meaning is perceived. Now also we can act together; the great God and His poor feeble children are striving together for truth and righteousness. Our poor little work He might overlook if He were not so good, but being infinitely condescending, He works through us whenever He sees that our work is done in truth. If our works were works of darkness, He could not co-operate with us; but now that we walk and work in the light, He is able to make us laborers together with Himself.

Now we partake with God in sympathy, having a fellow-feeling with Him. Does the great Father mourn His prodigal child? So do we mourn over sinners. Do we see Jesus weeping over Jerusalem? So do we mourn for the perishing who will not be saved. Again, as God rejoices over sinners that repent, so do we rejoice in sympathy with Him. By coming into the light of love as well as into the light of knowledge we have received power to enter into sympathy with God. Is not this a very wonderful thing? But it is as clear and True as it is Wonderful.

We would desire to bring the whole world into the light. We daily pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done." Our will has grown to be like God's will according to its measure, seeing we have come into the same light.

Do you know, dear brothers and sisters, by experience what it is to be honestly dealing with eternal things, to be no longer playing, and toying, and counterfeiting, but to be in real and blessed earnest with God and spiritual facts? Then you have come into fellowship with the great God, for He is in earnest, and in Him there is no trifling nor make-believe; but He is acting with intense reality, acting with His whole heart in His contention against sin, His desire for the glory of His Son, His purpose for the salvation of His people.

III. But now I come, in the third place, to that which strikes me most in the text, and it is this—the glory of this communion: "We have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." Here am I a poor creature reading this text. I find that to walk in fellowship with God, the great and ever blessed. I rejoice to learn this, and my heart responds, "If there is any fellowship with God to be known, I will know it. If I can be reconciled to God, and be at friendship with Him, I desire it beyond everything. But how can these things be? I see that a great stone lieth at the door. I cannot get out of my prison to begin this walk, because this great stone of sin shuts me in." Then the Lord comes in, and He says, "I saw that this hindrance was in thy road, and so in this very verse I have shown thee how I have taken it away. Precious words! The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."

It is Possible for Men

To begin with, here is sin! What an evil thing it is! How our soul hates it! It is uncleanness to us; a loathsome and abominable evil. You that are in the light know how every beam of light makes you see more of the heinousness, blackness, and accursed nature of sin. Even to feel a tendency towards it in your members makes you groan out, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me." Listen! You are having fellowship with God in this. In Him is no sin, but in Him is great abhorrence of sin. If you hate sin, God hates it also; and herein you are agreed. The very thought of inquity, uncleanness, or falsehood, is abhored of God. His holy nature detests it; and in proportion as you feel the same loathing and detestation, you have fellowship with God. This comes to you by walking in the light, as God is in the light.

Let us go a step further. Sin being once perceived, the next step is that it should be got rid of. "Ah!" say you, "I wish, I could be cleansed from it; cleansed from all of it; but how can this be? It is not possible for me to purge away my sin." This also is God's thought about sin: He knows how hard it is to remove its pollution. He saw that nothing of ours could remove the horrible blot. In this persuasion we have fellowship with the pure and holy God, who saw that there was no means of removing sin but one; He must deliver up His own Son to death, or the sin of man could never be purged away. The sacrifice of the Only-begotten is

The Unique Hope of Sinners.

Now go a step further. The glorious Son of God condescends to become the atonement for sin. He is taken to the tree; our sins are made to meet upon His blessed head, and there He dies, the just for the unjust. He was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. Standing by the tree of doom, we look up at that blessed Saviour with all-absorbing admiration and love. We admire Him as the masterpiece of divine wisdom, grace, power, and truth; and, admiring, we love Him; we pledge ourselves to Him. Herein we have entered into fellowship with the great Father indeed and of a truth; for the Father loves His Son infinitely: He greatly delights in Him.

A step further. Beloved, many of us have come to Jesus Christ by faith; we have looked to Him, and have accepted Him as our Saviour, cleansing us from all sin. Joy, joy, joy forever: the brightest day that ever dawned on us was that day when we saw all our sins numbered on our blessed Scapegoat and carried away into the wilderness of forgetfulness! When God saw the blood of old He passed over Israel, for His justice was satisfied; and it is so with Jesus. How glad and content we are to see how Jesus finished the transgression, made an end of sin, and brought in everlasting righteousness! Brethren, the death of Jesus is a cleansing from sin which will bear the light; it is no hole and corner business, no winking at evil, no suspension of law, no making out that sin is no sin. No, the debt is acknowledged, and what is better far, it is paid. The guilty are punished in their Substitute, and in Him are thus justly set free. We rejoice in perfect whiteness, for the Lord has made us whiter than snow. Yes, we have fellowship with God in this cleansing, for God accepts us in the Beloved.

Brethren, we are now as one with God

In His Master-Purpose.

Was it not in His heart to create beings with whom He might have fellowship? He desired to produce and bring to Himself an order of beings who could be glorified without danger of pride, who could think and feel as the Firstborn would do; in fact, would become the friends of the Son of God. It was needful for these creatures to know sin, and yet to hate it more fully than if they had never known it; to know the love of God, and to be bound by it for ever to an unsinning obedience, which would fill them with boundless happiness. Behold the process by which this new creation, this new order of creatures should come forth. Consider the process which, by the Fall, the Incarnation, the Cross, and the new birth work out

The Sacred Result!

When you have read the past in this light, then gaze into the future. Now we see how throughout eternity we shall walk in the light, as God is in the light, and have fellowship one with another—fellowship culminating in Jesus Christ the Only-begotten, and the cleansing from all sin by His blood. The blood-washed are to be the friends of God, with whom He shall speak face to face, as He speaks with no angel or seraph. With these He will dwell, and He will be their God, and they shall be His people; and in them and through them He will make known the glories of His Son to wondering worlds.

This great purpose has been wrought out to a considerable extent by the Lord's having already made us to walk in the light, as he is in the light, and by washing us in the precious blood; but it doth not even yet appear what we shall be. This must we practically seek after: henceforth we live for Christ! Henceforth our chief glory is the Cross! Henceforth our beau-ideal of glory for ourselves is to see Jesus glorified! The torrents have swept us away! We are no longer bound to this earth! We are borne along by the irresistible force of eternal love! God has achieved His purpose in our blood-washed souls; walking in the light we are now in harmony with His master purpose, and we cry: "Father, glorify thy Son"!

I have done; but oh, I wish that all your hearts were brought into the light of God at this moment! Oh, that you would quit the dark ways of self-righteousness, carelessness, thoughtlessness, and sin, and come into the light of truth! Oh, that the light may come to you as to Saul of Tarsus, and at once transform you! May the Spirit of God bring you to know God and His Son Jesus Christ, whom to know is life eternal.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE LIGHTS UNDER THE SEA.*

Among the many revelations of modern science, none have a more absorbing interest than those relating to the illumination of the deep sea. Until within a few years, the ocean has been a sealed book; the surface forms only were known, and it was assumed that, owing to the enormous pressure, lack of sunlight, and consequent darkness, nature—at least in the abyssal depths—was at fault, and this vast region was devoid of life and incapable of supporting it. Recent investigations, however, have shown the reverse; and that this great area, with its plateaux, its mountain ranges and its isolated, coral-capped peaks, whose valleys are now known to lie miles in ocean depths, teem with living forms, and far from being the dismal realm we had supposed, is a region of surpassing wonders; which we may term in fancy that lower firmament, where float sparkling, gleaming constellations, meteor-like disks and globes with trailing luminosity, stars and nebulæ of living lights.

The phosphorescence of the sea is no new discovery, and those who have visited the seashore at night must have witnessed this phenomenon. The region of coves and beaches along the shores of eastern Massachusetts, around Nahant particularly, is a favorable one for its full display. As the waves come rolling in upon the rocks, or upon the long expansive shingle, in tidal measure we see the foaming crest, seemingly ignited all along the line, more and more intense in brilliancy when with a roar it breaks masses of scintillating liquid upon the sands. We glide over the smooth portions of this sea, our boat leaving a golden train; every dip of oar or the dash of some affrighted fish, produces an equally vivid display. Even when not disturbed, looking down in the calm, clear depths, the same phenomenon is witnessed. Pale, ghostly forms are seen here and there moving slowly about, while the seeming silvery atoms seem to suggest the nebulæ of this submarine sky. Deeper yet, the bottom shows weird splendors. The great kelps are bedecked with mystic lights and gleam like diamond's flash from ledge and rock. These wonderful exhibitions of submarine illumination are due to the presence of luminous creatures, or in some cases to large animals swimming through immense numbers of small phosphorescent bodies, so appearing as light-givers themselves.

In nearly every branch of the animal kingdom we find these living lights, some marvellously brilliant, others growing with dim rays, and all contributing often to wonderful illumination, far-reaching or circumscribed. M. De Tessan, a French observer, states that one evening the sea in the roadstead of Simonstown, Cape of Good Hope, presented an extraordinary phosphorescence of a most vivid character. At whatever points the phosphorescence was greatest, the water was colored on the surface as red as blood; and it contained such an immense quantity of little globules that it had the consistency of syrup. Viewed under the magnifying glass, these globules presented the appearance of little transparent and inflated bladders having on their surface a black point surrounded with equally black and radiant stripes. The least agitation or slightest contact made them throw out a vivid greenish light.

* From "Living Lights: a Popular Account of Phosphorescent Animals and Vegetables," by Charles Frederick Holder. Pp. 187. Illustrated. Price, $2. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

Count Lyof N. Tolstoi, the Russian Author.

Russian Nihilists on the Way to Siberia.

When a vessel is ploughing through masses of these creatures, the effect is extremely brilliant. An American captain states that when his ship traversed a zone of them recently in the Indian ocean, the waves presented the appearance of molten metal, of purest white; flames sprang from the bow as the ship surged along, and great waves of living light spread out ahead; a fascinating but appalling sight.

In many of the ports of tropical and semi-tropical America, it is the custom to bathe in the ocean at night, the warmth of the water rendering the recreation most enjoyable. A gentleman who visited one of these places on the Pacific coast, proceeded at night to take a bath, and, upon rising from the water, was amazed to find his entire body become luminous, as if covered with a coating of light, which he found originated from innumerable minute, phosphorescent creatures which clung to his skin and changed it to a golden hue.

LYOF N. TOLSTOI.

(See Portrait).

THE numerous works of the great Russian writer, which have been translated into English, and published in this country, have made Count Tolstoi's name familiar to the American public. Deeply interesting as these works are, they are not so interesting as the personal life and character of the author. He is considered eccentric, and doubtless his teachings are far from being in accord with orthodox doctrine, but his sincerity and his earnest desire to lead his countrymen to lives of humble usefulness in imitation of the life of Christ, are feature of his character to be heartily commended.

Tolstoi is in his sixtieth year, having been born at Yasnaya Polyana, near Tula, Russia, on August 28, 1828. His parents were aristocratic, and occupied a high social position. He studied in the University of Kazan, where he distinguished himself in law and languages. When the Crimean War broke out in 1854 Tolstoi entered the Russian army and took part in the defense of Sebastopol. On the declaration of peace, he bade farewell to military life, for which he never had any taste, though he acquitted himself with credit in the war. A courtier's life, which was open to him, was still less to his liking. He retired to his country house and devoted himself to literary pursuits.

The condition of his countrymen, their ignorance, vice and poverty, soon began to weigh heavily on his heart. He longed to do something for them, but he was comparatively alone, the indifference of wealthy men of his order being beyond his power to penetrate. He tried several philanthropic schemes without success. They were not appreciated either by the people he hoped to benefit, nor by others whose aid he hoped to enlist. His failure so deeply depressed him that he became melancholy and contemplated suicide. Happily some earnest Christian people formed his acquaintance at this time, and Tolstoi was brought to see that in Christ there was hope.

With the promptitude and zeal which have always characterized him, he at once quitted the few frivolities of life which he allowed himself in his retirement, and devoted himself to a life of humble usefulness. He set about the translation of the four Gospels into the dialect of the lower Russian people, and has struggled, by example and teaching, to inculcate the doctrines of Christ, while trying to live as Christ lived, a life of self-sacrifice and beneficence.

EXILES TO SIBERIA.

(See Illustration.)

THE very name of Siberia is a sound of horror throughout Russia. It is a vast territory, larger than the whole United States, extending across the north of Asia. A bleak, inhospitable land having a climate the rigors of which only the most robust of Europeans can endure. It has long been the penal settlement of Russia, to which the Czars have sent political malcontents and other criminals. Those whose crimes were most odious to the government were condemned to labor in the mines, while others were simply banished to its wilds, and left to support themselves by hunting or tilling the barren soil. As Russia has no constitution, no citizen is safe from this horrible doom. Thousands of men suspected of plotting against the government have been seized, secretly examined and without trial, sent off to Siberia. They have simply disappeared from the towns in which they lived, and their friends know nothing of them. It would be dangerous to inquire after them, and would be useless. The organization of the secret police is so perfect and so powerful throughout all Russia, that prisoners leave no trace.

In past years the horrors of the exile began on the very day of condemnation. They were forced to walk manacled together all the way from St. Petersburg to Tobolsk-a, a journey occupying eight months; and many died from fatigue and exposure. Now, however, they are spared some of these hardships. Prisoners accused of crimes of violence and Nihilists likely to escape, are chained to an iron rod, and guarded by soldiers, but the infirm persons and children are placed in wagons, in which they are conveyed by railway from Moscow to Nijni Novgorod, in the month of May, there placed in large covered barges, towed by steamers to Perm, and thence carried by rail to Ekaterineburg, where a conveyance is provided to Tiumen, the first prison town in Siberia. A few are sent by the Orenburg southern route. In spite of this mitigation, however, the horrors of the exile are so terrible, that many prisoners prefer death to banishment to Siberia.

A CONSECRATED LIFE.

(See Illustration on page 701.)

EVERYONE who knew her, spoke pityingly of Olive Chester. Her case truly was almost as sad as it could be. Day and night she lay utterly helpless on her couch, her lower limbs completely powerless. It seemed that though she might live for many years—she was only twenty-three years old—she would never be able to walk abroad, or even to step from one room to another. It was a doleful prospect to look forward to, and many a young girl so circumstanced would have lost all brightness and sunk into a melancholy, querulous state of mind. That was what Olive dreaded, and her ceaseless prayer was that she might be so supported that she might prove by her patience and cheerfulness how mighty a power faith is to overcome all ills.

She had been lying thus for nearly four years, and her prayer had been answered. Her aunt Ethel, having never married, cheerfully devoted her life to waiting on her beloved niece; though she had been with her day and night during all her helplessness, had never heard an impatient word fall from her lips. Many old friends came to see her, and they, too, were amazed at Olive's cheerfulness in circumstances so sad.

"I cannot understand it," said Mrs. Raymond, one of these friends, as she and her husband and their little Florence came away from Olive's room. "I am sure I should go demented with melancholy if I were in her place."

"It is her faith in Christ and her submission to the Divine will that keeps her so," said Mr. Raymond. "Mr. Phayre, the clergyman, told me about it the other day; he said Miss Chester was the best example he knew of what faith could do. Has she always been so afflicted?"

"Oh no," said Mrs. Raymond, "that is one of the saddest features of it. I heard the facts only a few days ago. It seems that a little while before we came here to live she was engaged to be married. She was a beautiful, bright, active girl then, and a bright future was open before her. On the wedding morning she was descending the stairs in her bridal robes, all ready for the ceremony, when she slipped and fell from the top to the bottom. She hurt her spine in some way, and has been paralyzed ever since. And would you believe it! the man to whom she was to have been married has deserted her and married some one else. He said he could not be expected to marry a cripple. Well, perhaps it was not a bad thing for Olive, for he has taken to drink and is going on badly. She is better off as a cripple than as the wife of a libertine."

"Yes, poor girl," said Mr. Raymond; "either is bad, but this is not the worse."

Florence's Saved Life Consecrated to God.

But a strange thing occurred in Olive Chester's state not long after this conversation. Perhaps God, seeing how well she had borne her lot, interposed for her release, as He interposed to spare Abraham when he had proved his full acquiescence in the Divine will. One sultry August morning, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond, with their little daughter, were again at the Chester residence. They left little Florence playing about Olive's room, while they went away on some errand. The child was amusing herself quietly, and Olive, who had passed a restless night, fell into a doze. She awakened presently, disturbed by a German band outside the open window. To her horror, she saw that little Florence had been leaning out of the window so far that she had lost her balance, and was now struggling desperately to regain it by her hold on the sash. It was useless to call out; in another moment she must fall. Olive was in an agony.

What happened, she never knew, but in a moment she found herself on her knees at the window with the child safe on the floor beside her. Her cries brought her aunt and the servant quickly to the room, and she was carried back to her couch, where she fainted. On recovering consciousness, her first words were, "The child! the child! Is she safe?" For answer Mr. Raymond led the little one to her side, and Olive put her hand on the little one's head and reverently thanked God.

But the strange thing was how she had been saved. Olive had never put her feet to the ground before since her fall, and in all those years of helplessness had had no power in her limbs, yet she must have rushed to the window in her anxiety. She thought much of this that day and all that night as she lay awake. Could it be that God was going to give her back the use of her limbs? In the silence of the night she asked Him, and tried if she could move her foot. To her intense joy and thankfulness she found that she could. Calling her aunt to her side, she told her the glad news, and both together they offered praise and thanks to God. The physicians were sent for the next day, and they accounted for the unexpected change in some learned way by the stimulus given by sudden terror to the spinal cord, but Olive shook her head. She was sure that the recovery came from God alone, and when it went on to complete restoration, she consecrated her life afresh to Him, as a trust which He had confided to her for His use.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 686.)

Conversations with his Father—Admits past lack of Tenderness—His Appeals Resented · Tries to Show Love in Action—Deals with an Unconverted Brother—An Honest Man Obstructed by his Wife—Says Farewell to his Father—Perceives that he is Better than his Fellow-Passengers—Returns to England—The S. K. Institution—Family Bereavements.

April 4, 1835. I spent this day in answering questions which my father put to me about secular things in England. This I did for the following reasons:—1. I had scarcely ever spoken about these thing in my letters—indeed so little, that my father told me he had often intended to ask me whether it was forbidden in England to send letters abroad about such matters, as I never wrote about them. I had refrained from doing so, partly on account of want of time; and, partly, because I had better things to write about, wishing to direct his mind to the things of God. 2. Now, however, I spoke on those subjects, because I particularly desired to be as kind, affectionate and obliging as I conscientiously could, as I considered that this was the testimony I was especially called on to give Formerly I had much pressed the things of God on him, and not with sufficient tenderness, knowing not then experimentally the helplessness of the creature. After it had pleased the Lord to show me the truth more clearly, in the summer of 1829, I wrote in a different way; but in the commencement of the year 1833 I felt pressed in spirit once more, most fully, not so much as a son, but as a servant of Christ, to write, and to point out to him minutely his state, showing him the danger of his soul, the grounds of which I fully laid before him.

When this, as formerly, greatly displeased him, I ceased to speak any more in this way, and from that time I aimed, and still aim more and more, to show him love in action, as it becomes a believing son, telling him only how happy I am—how I am supported under such and such trials—how I am not caring about certain things as formerly I did—in what an awful state I was once living, and how God brought me out of it, and how any sinner, by forsaking his evil ways, and believing on the Lord Jesus, may be brought to the same joy and happiness, and what a delight it would be to me to meet my father at last in heaven, etc. Since I have corresponded with him in this way, things have been very comfortable, though I have brought as much truth before him as formerly, and though I have never sent a letter without speaking, comparatively, much about these things. On the same ground I have not on this visit spoken directly to my father about the state of his soul, though he has more than ever heard the truth from my lips. God has indeed been with me, and I believe I have been led by Him to pursue this course. Different, however, has been the way in which I have dealt with my unconverted brother; for the relationship in which I stand to him is a different one. For this afternoon I not only pointed out to him his danger, but spoke also to him respecting his sins, and intend to do so still, if the Lord permit.

This afternoon brother Knabe called on me. He told me that he had already experienced a trial on account of his intention to pay the money, as his wife tried to keep him from it, by endeavoring to persuade him that God does not require him to do such a thing, as he had taken two orphan children into his house. He nevertheless is determined to do it. He saw, however, another difficulty, which was, when he looked over the papers containing the names of his creditors, it was found that all but three, out of about thirty, were dead, and he did not know what to do concerning them. I told him to go to those places where his creditors used to live, and he might find, perhaps, some needy widows and fatherless children whom they had left behind; and, if not, he should inquire after the lawful heirs, and pay the money to them. He saw with me, and declared his full intention to do so, whatever it might cost, and seemed truly glad that God at last, through my advice, had delivered him from this burden; for from time to time the matter had pressed on his conscience that he ought to do it. I spent this evening in relating to my father and brother some of the Lord's dealings with me in England, particularly how He has graciously provided for my temporal wants in answer to prayer, and they both seemed to feel, for the moment at least, the blessedness of such a life.

April 5. I saw brother Knabe this morning, who is still determined to pay the money, though tried by his wife. I also saw some persons who called on me to hear about England, for every one of whom the Lord gave me a word without any effort. A Roman Catholic called, and I set the truths of the Gospel before him, with their blessed effects, without entering upon the Roman Catholic controversy.

April 7, 1835. A part of this morning I spent in walking about with my father in his garden, and some of his fields, because I knew it would give him pleasure; and I felt that I ought in every way to show him kindness and attention, as far as I conscientiously could. To-morrow, God willing, I intend to leave, and to return to England. The Lord in His rich mercy, in answer to my prayer has enabled me so to walk before my father, and has also impressed what I have said so far upon his heart, as to cause him to say, to-day, "May God help me to follow your example and to act according to what you have said to me."

April 9, Celle. Yesterday morning I rode with my father to Halberstadt, where, with many tears, he separated from me. I was alone in the coach, which was a great comfort to me. It was a solemn time. I found myself again on the road to Brunswick, which I had traversed twice in the service of the devil, and now I was travelling on it in the name of Jesus. I discerned, in passing, the inn at Wolfenbüttel, from whence I intended to run away, and where I was arrested. How peculiar were my feelings! In the evening we reached Brunswick, from whence we started the same night. During the night I heard a fearfully wicked, most profligate infidel, and scoffing conversation between the conducteur and a student, and the only testimony I gave was complete silence all the time. I arrived here this morning at eight, and have been here all the morning, as the mail will not start for Hamburg until four this afternoon. It has been far from well with me in my soul to-day. That awful conversation last night has been spiritual poison to me. How very soon do we receive evil!

April 10. Hamburg. I arrived here at ten this morning. April 11. I went on board last night, and at twelve we sailed. This morning at half-past eleven, we arrived at Cuxhaven, where we cast anchor, on account of a strong contrary wind.

April 13. Though I desired as much, perhaps, as any of the passengers speedily to get to the end of our voyage, longing to get back to my work in Bristol and also to my wife and children, yet I was kept in peace; and whilst some murmured at the contrary wind, the Lord enabled me to lift up my heart in prayer that He would calm it, if it were His holy will, and, accordingly, after a delay of about nineteen hours, we sailed again yesterday morning, at seven. At ten I was taken with sea-sickness, from which I had been kept during my four previous short voyages in answer to prayer; but this time I on purpose refrained from praying about it, as I did not know whether it was better for my health to be seasick or not. The sickness continued the whole of yesterday. To-day I am well. We have calm weather.

April 15. Bristol. Yesterday at one we landed in London. In answer to prayer I soon obtained my things from the Custom-house, and reached my friends in Chancery Lane a little before two, where I found a letter from my wife, stating that brother Craik is ill, having an inflammation in the wind-pipe, and therefore, humanly speaking, will be unable to preach for some time. In consequence of this I started immediately for Bristol, where I arrived this morning. I found brother Craik better than I had expected, though completely unable to attend to the public ministry of the Word.

April 16. To-day brother Craik and I received £11 15s. 9d. (about $59) each, being a legacy left to us some time since. We said once or twice to one another that perhaps this money might be paid just at a time when we much needed it. And so it is just now. May I and all my brethren leave the management of all our affairs entirely to the Lord, who best knows what is good for us; and may it be our concern to seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all temporal supplies shall be added to us.

May 1. I went to see brother Craik, and found him better, but heard from his medical attendant that he ought not to preach for several months.

May 5. My father-in-law has been for several days very ill. May 15. Mr. Groves continues very ill. May 29. This morning brother Craik went into Devonshire for change of air.

June 3. To-day we had a public meeting on account of the Scriptural Knowledge Institution for home and abroad. It is now fifteen months since, in dependence upon the Lord for the supply of means, we have been enabled to provide poor children with schooling, circulate the Holy Scriptures, and aid missionary labors. During this time, though the field of labor has been continually enlarged, and though we have now and then been brought low in funds, the Lord has never allowed us to be obliged to stop the work. We have been enabled during this time to establish three day-schools, and to connect with the Institution two other charity schools which, humanly speaking, would have been closed for want of means.

In addition to this, the expenses connected with a Sunday-school and an adult school have been likewise defrayed, making seven schools altogether. The number of the children that have been thus provided with schooling in the day-schools only amounts to 439. The number of copies of the Holy Scriptures which have been circulated, is 795 Bibles and 753 New Testaments. We have also sent, in aid of missionary labors in Canada, in the East Indies, and on the Continent of Europe, £117 11s. The whole amount of the free-will offerings put into our hands for carrying on this work, from March 5, 1834, to May 19, 1835, is £363 12s. ($1,818).

June 20. Our father is evidently to-day near his end. June 22. This morning at two our father died. June 23. Both our children are ill. June 24. Our little boy is very ill. June 24. The dear little boy is so ill, that I have no hope of his recovery. The disease is inflammation on the chest. I spoke this evening comfortably at Gideon, on Psalm 145. 1-4, thinking it right that neither the death of my father-in-law nor my dying child should keep me from the Lord's work. The Lord's holy will be done concerning the little one!

June 26. My prayer last evening was, that God would be pleased to support my dear wife under the trial, should He remove the little one; and to take him soon to Himself, thus sparing him from suffering. I did not pray for the child's recovery. It was but two hours after that the dear little one went home. The eldest and the youngest the Lord has thus removed from our family in the same week. My dear Mary feels her loss much, but yet is greatly supported. As to myself, I am so fully enabled to realize that the dear infant is so much better off with the Lord Jesus than with us, that I scarcely feel the loss at all, and when I weep, I weep for joy.

June 27. My dear wife is graciously supported. May the Lord grant that these afflictions may not be lost upon us! June 28. I preached to-day both times comfortably. June 29. This morning was the funeral. The remains of our father and infant were put into the same grave.

July 3. Our taxes are due, and may be called for any day, and for the first time we have no money to pay them, as we were obliged, on account of our late afflictions, to spend the money which we had put by for them. May the Lord in mercy provide!

July 6. I was enabled to-day, by the free-will offerings through the boxes, and by what I had left, to pay the taxes before they were called for. How kind of the Lord to answer my prayer so soon!

July 8. This evening I had £5 sent from Weston-super-Mare. So the Lord has again appeared. May I praise His holy name for this seasonable help, which came when I had scarcely any money left!

July 14. To-day I had again a suit of new clothes given to me by a brother. My clothes were much worn and old, and our late funeral might have given a second reason for not having new ones. But I did not order any, because I had no money to pay for them, and thought it wrong to contract debts. A fresh paper was brought in to-day for taxes, which ought to have been asked for many months since. May the Lord give us the means to pay them!

July 15. We had again an especial prayer-meeting for the restoration of brother Craik, who, though well in his general health, is yet unable to preach, or even to converse for any length of time.

July 18. I have felt for several days weak in my chest. This weakness has been increasing, and to-day I have felt it more than ever. I have thought it well to refrain next week from all public speaking. May the Lord grant that I may be brought nearer to Him through this, for I am not at all in the state in which I ought to be, and I think sometimes that our late afflictions have been lost upon me, and that the Lord will need to chastise me severely.

July 22. The last mentioned taxes were called for this morning, just after the Lord had sent us £5, from a distance of eighty miles. So the Lord has again of late, repeatedly, in answer to prayer, sent help. May this lead us to trust in Him for the future!

July 28. Since the 14th I have felt unwell, and though sometimes a little better, on the whole I have been getting worse and worse. This morning I have seen our medical attendant, who thinks that all the disease arises from a disordered stomach.

July 31. To-day brother C ——r, formerly a minister in the Establishment, who came to us a few days since, began, in connection with the Scriptural Knowledge Institution, to go from house to house, to spread the truth as a city missionary. [This was a remarkable interposition of God. Brother Craik had before this, for some months, been unable on account of bodily infirmity, to labor in the work of the schools, the circulation of the Scriptures, &c., and my own weakness, shortly after brother C——r's arrival, increased so that I was obliged to give up the work entirely. How gracious, therefore, of the Lord, to send brother C——r, that thus the work might go on! Up to July, 1837, this brother was enabled to continue in his work, and thus this Institution was in a most important way enlarged as it regards the field of labor.]

August 15. To-day dear brother Craik returned from Devonshire, much better in his general health, but not as it regards his voice.

August 24, I feel very weak, and suffer more than before from the disease. I am in doubt whether to leave Bristol entirely for a time. I have no money to go away for a change of air. I have had an invitation to stay for a week with a sister in the country, and I think of accepting the invitation, and going to-morrow.

August 26. To-day I had £5 given to me for the express purpose of using change of air.

August 29. To-day I received another £5 for the same purpose.

August 30. To-day, for the first Lord's day since our arrival in Bristol, I have been kept from preaching through illness. How mercifully has the Lord dealt in giving me so much strength for these years. I had another £5 sent, to aid me in procuring change of air. How kind is the Lord in thus providing me with the means of leaving Bristol!

(To be Continued.)

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller. This reduction in price is made to encourage the study of this important subject.

CHRIST'S WITNESS TO JOHN.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

SS. Lesson for November 13, Matt. 11: 2-15, Memory Text, John 5: 35.

Ver. 2. John Heard through his Disciples. See Luke 7: 18—His Interest Natural—His Own Work Being Consummated—Ver. 3. His Inquiry—A Most Momentous Question—Still Being Asked—There is no Other; See Hosea 13: 4—Ver. 4. Jesus Confident of John's Recognition—The Testimony of Life and Works Always Better than Profession—Ver. 5. John Would Know What Messiah Was to Do—Christ Resting His Claims on Miracles—Preaching to the Poor Among the Wonders—Always a Neglected Class—Ver. 6. Many in All Ages Offended—The Proud, the Selfish, the Avaricious, the Malicious—Christ's Demands too Great for Them—Ver. 7-9. Why John Drew the Crowds—Not a Time Server—Not Luxurious—A God-Sent Man—Ver. 11-15. John's Place in the Dispensations—Greater than all His Predecessors—On the Threshold of the Greatest Age—The Least in Christ's Light More Advanced.

"He was a burning and a shining light" (John 5: 35). Such is Christ's witness to John the Baptist. Jesus valued His forerunner and confessed him before men. It is a marvellous thought, yet none the less true, that not only may we have the privilege of confessing Christ, bearing witness of Him before men, but that He, the Son of God, God the Son, the Mighty Upholder of the Universe, "by whom all things were made," has constituted Himself a Witness to us!

It is His joy to bear witness of us in heaven, for "He ever liveth to make intercession for" us (Heb. 7: 25). He also bears witness to His people upon earth. When Stephen, with his angel face and irresistible words, was hunted down to death by the rage of the men who, "cut to the heart" (Acts 7: 54), by God's message from his lips, Jesus bore witness to him by the opened heaven which beamed down upon the dying martyr. When Peter and John were persecuted, Jesus bore witness to them by bringing them out of prison, and so confounding their judges that they sought in vain for an excuse to punish them, "for all men glorified God for that which was done" to the impotent man (Acts 4: 21). He bore witness to Paul when, with his feet fast in the stocks at Philippi, and, with bleeding back, he looked up without a murmur into the face of his risen Lord, and praised Him. The earthquake, the loosened bonds, the open doors of the prison, and, above all, the jailer's conversion at his feet, were Christ's witness to him. The superhuman, and, therefore, divine patience which He has brought forth in the life of many a lowly woman, many a drunkard's wife, or the wife of a fallen man, the patience of some invalids under excruciating suffering, the love He has placed in the hearts of some towards their enemies—these things, too, are Christ's witness to His people. But above all, does He in His Word bear witness to His own, especially in Heb. 11, where He seems to linger over the portraits of His people, and to point out the features of one and another, with wondrous tenderness. "The Lord hath loved His people (II Chr. 2: 11). "He will rejoice over thee with joy. He will rest in His love. He will joy over thee with singing." (Zeph. 3: 17). "As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee." (Isa. 62: 5.)

Christ's testimony to John, was indeed, a precious one, "He was a burning and a shining light"—one who gave out warmth and light. Can God bear this witness to us also? Are we warm enough to kindle God's love in other hearts from the flame which burns in ours? Are we so letting our light shine before men that they come and light their little lamps by ours, because "it giveth light to all that are in the house" (Matt. 5: 15.)?

Burning and Shining.

This was just like Jesus Himself. John lived for Jesus. He had no other object in life than to bear witness to Him. John had no idea of living a comfortable life, and then adding on a little religion as a kind of flavoring to all the rest; he lived for his mission. All his habits of life were formed by his witness for Christ. He was clothed in camel's hair, not because he became a holier man by wearing a coarse and unfashionable kind of coat, but because it served the purpose of his mission. How should he leave his place of testimony to learn the newest cut at the tailor's, or the choicest cookery in the kitchens of his day? "His meat was locusts and wild honey," not because a man becomes more holy by living on this kind of food, but because his mission was all-absorbing. The absorbing topics of men, in general, "What shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be clothed?" (Matt. 6: 31), were matters of small consequence to this man of God. He sought those things which were above. It was not by this or that particular habit of his life, but by the whole fact of it, that men saw in John the Baptist "a man sent from God" (John 1: 6). God calls His children to be, not to make themselves peculiar, but

A Peculiar People.

If the world is set upon its own glory, its own pleasures, its own rights, its own feelings, its own advantage, its own power, its own praise, and if the man of God is set upon God's glory, upon pleasing God, upon His rights, His interests, His praise—it will lead him into a life which cannot but be the exact contrary of that of the self-seeking world, and this will necessarily touch all the habits of life; they will be peculiar. If we seek "first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness," we cannot make eating, drinking and dress the important things of life. Again, John said, not in word only, but in all he said and did, "He must increase; but I must decrease" (John 3 30). The world asserts itself, and is sensitive to a degree about all which interferes with its prerogatives or touches its dignity. The true messenger of God is glad to see himself

Eclipsed by Another.

That his very littleness and nothingness serves as a foil to throw into prominence the glory and the greatness of his Lord. How important does a man of the world think himself! In his eye, the society in which he moves, the church of which he is a member, the business in which he is a partner, all revolve around him. He cannot think of these things apart from his position in them. But when Christ has shone in all His glory upon a soul, that soul sees Christ where he used to see himself. Christ is the man's mover in all things, Christ the centre of all things. If only Christ is in charge, he can conceive of all going on very well without him. It costs him nothing to be put aside, he has a quiet, deep joy, that his absence brings Jesus more to the front. But John Must Needs be Tried.

He had served his Master faithfully, had borne witness to Him as He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost, "as the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." When Jesus insisted on being baptized, it was John who baptized Him. The question of the priests and Levites from Jerusalem, as to whether he, John, was the Christ presented no temptation to John; he existed only for Jesus. Why was it, then, that when John was cast into prison—for his faithfulness in reproving King Herod for his life of sin with the infamous Herodias, his brother Philip's wife—that Jesus did not exercise His divine power, and rescue him? Rumors reached him in the prison, that this Jesus to whom he had borne witness did wonderful works, but they were all done on the persons of those who had not been His disciples. How could He neglect one who had served Him so well? John was at a loss; he knew not how to understand it. O how many a tried child of God has been just in this position! He has seen those who have not worked for God, who have suffered nothing for His sake, and whom He has looked upon as very inferior Christians, receiving wonderful answers to prayer, and blessed bodily healing, while he, who had given up his whole life to God, appeared comparatively neglected. What is the reason? It is this—God is always occupied with the education of His children. Those who know little of Him need stronger proofs than those who know Him best, of His power and His faithfulness; so He leaves His older children under tests of faith which He would never give to those who are only beginning to walk by faith.

John did the very best thing he could have done under the circumstances—instead of reasoning the matter over in his own mind, or seeking human counsel.

He Sent at Once to Jesus with the question, "Art Thou He that should come, or do we look for another?" Jesus understood John's trouble, but He spoke no word of sympathy. He said, "Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: The blind receive their sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them." All this John knew, and he was conversant enough with Scripture to know how fully the works of Jesus showed him to be God's anointed, but how should that explain his own present difficulty? It would never be explained by being dealt with. God brings us out of depression and temptation, not by dealing with our thoughts, but by turning us to His thoughts. But He sent one last message which gave John the clue to the whole mystery; "Blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in Me." This was the word he wanted. If he was to trust on in the dark, he would do so, and though to man John may appear to have been conquered by Herod, yet when the last and everlasting witness of Jesus is borne to His faithful forerunner, and we know the details of that battle, we shall find that the victory was won by faith in Christ, in the lonely Judean prison.

No sooner were John's messengers gone, than the heart of Jesus, just bursting with love towards His faithful John, found vent in His witness of him to the multitude. Far from dismissing all thoughts of His servant, He asked, "what went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind? But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses (not in deserts). But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet." John said of himself, that he was "a voice;" Jesus said of him that he was "more than a prophet." He said of himself, "I must decrease;" Jesus said of Him." "Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist;" and again, "This is he of whom it is written, Behold, I send My messenger before thy face, which shall prepare Thy way before Thee." O what a glimpse this gives us of

The Heart of Jesus.

It was just when John would be perhaps ashamed that he had doubted, and be perhaps feeling unworthy as never before, that Jesus bore witness of him! We shall never know all the tenderness of His love; "it passeth knowledge." John would soon have to suffer, or rather to be taken away to glory; but we may believe he was never more offended in Christ. He could trust where he could not understand. Many are tried as John was. They think, If God can do such things, if He can heal the sick, if He can provide means for His work to be carried on, why does He let such and such an one suffer so, or be in such perplexity? God does not always unfold His plan to us, but this we know, that in every exercise of faith which is provided for or permitted us, blessed is he who is not offended, who can trust on in the dark, and justify God when he cannot understand Him. The Lord raise up among us men like John the Baptist, and He who bore witness to him will bear witness to them too.

NOT FAR.

Not far, not far from the kingdom,
Yet, in the shadow of sin,
How many are coming and going,
How few are entering in!

Not far from the golden gateway,
Where voices whisper and wait,
Fearing to enter in boldly,
So lingering still at the gate;

Catching the strain of the music
Floating so sweetly along,
Knowing the song they are singing,
Yet joining not in the song;

Seeing the warmth and the beauty,
The infinite love and the light,
Yet weary, and lonely, and waiting,
Out in the desolate night!

Out in the dark and the danger,
Out in the night and the cold,
Though He is longing to lead them
Tenderly into the fold.

Not far, not far from the kingdom,
'Tis only a little space;
But it may be the last and forever,
Out of the resting place.

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

New Temperance Publications.

THE National Temperence Society publishes 1,600 different publications, among which are the following:

The People versus The Liquor Traffic. By John B. Finch. 12mo, 259 pp. Paper $0.30. Eleven great speeches of this eminent lecturer. A most severe, logical, and unanswerable arraignment of the liquor-traffic, and a most convincing argument for Constitutional and Statutory Prohibition.

Mother Goose for Temperance Nurseries By Mrs. J. McNair Wright. 8vo, 68 pp. .25. It consists of 31 songs or rhymes, with 31 beautiful illustrations and 31 wise sayings, for every day in the month, in the best style of Old Mother Goose. Every child should have a copy.

Africa and the Drink Trade. By Canon Farrar. Free Rum on the Congo. 48 pages.....10.

Memorial Addresses of John B. Finch. By T. L. Cuyler, D.D., Gen C. B. Fisk, D.H. Mann, M.D., J. N. Stearns, Mrs. M. T. Burt, I. K. Funk, D. D., Col. R. S. Cheves, and F. F. Wheeler, together with portrait and the address of Mr. Finch in reply to Dr. Dio Lewis.....10

J. N. Stearns, 58 Reade Street, N. Y.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

Christ Before Pilate!

Grandest Painting of Greatest Living Artist. Viewed by millions. Discussed by press more than any modern picture. For original Jno. Wannamaker paid $120,000. Agents Wanted for our magnificent Photo-Etching of this painting. Size 21x28. All religious people will buy. Etchings are the fashion. Retail price $1.00. Send 25c. for sample picture and agent's terms. MANHATTAN ART CO., 51 Lafayette Place, New York.

AGENTS Send for E. B. TREAT'S of new books, including Mother, Home and Heaven. 400 best authors. Prose and Poetry. Edited by Theo. L. Cuyler, D.D. $2.75 by mail. 180,000 sold.

Curiosities of the Bible (10,000) pertaining to persons, places and things, with Key. Also Bible Studies, Prayer topics, &c. Introduction by J. H. Vincent, D.D. 606 pages—$2.

WOMEN'S HAND-BOOK, $2. JUST ISSUED. A lady wanted in every town to introduce it. Quick Sales. Big Pay. Address E. B. TREAT, Pub., 771 Broadway, N. Y.

WANTED—Agents for 5 New Christmas Books from 50 cents to $4.00. A new agent writes that she sold 35 in 2 hours and 35 minutes; one 62 the first week; another 15 that day. The best selling books offered agents. Experience not necessary. CASSELL & CO., L'td., 822 Broadway, New York, 40 Dearborn St., Chicago.

AGENTS WANTED to Sell Our HOLIDAY BOOKS & GAMES $75 per week to workers. Send for Circulars and Illustrated Address American Publishing Co., HANCOCK, BOSTON, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS or CINCINNATI.

A PERFECT FOOD FOR INFANTS.
THE MOTHER'S FAVORITE.
It has been successful in hundreds of cases where other prepared foods failed.

FOR INVALIDS AND DYSPEPTICS.
The Most Nourishing, Most Palatable, Most Economical, OF ALL PREPARED FOODS.
EASILY AND QUICKLY PREPARED.

Send for circulars and pamphlets giving testimony of Physicians and Mothers, which will amply prove every statement we make.
For sale by Druggists 25c., 50c., $1.00.
Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887-BABIES-1887

To the mother of any baby born this year we will send on application a Cabinet Photo, of the "Sweetest, fattest, healthiest baby in the country." It is a beautiful picture, and will do any mother's heart good. It shows the good effects of using Lactated Food as a substitute for mothers milk. Much valuable information for the mother given. Give date of birth.
Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

1887 Xmas Music!

WAITING FOR SANTA CLAUS.

THE NEW CANTATA FOR CHRISTMAS TIME.
By Dr. W. H. DOANE.

Full of pretty Songs, Duetts and Choruses, interspersed with Humorous Dialogues. One of the most charming Cantatas ever written. Can be quickly learned and easily gotten up. It will afford a delightful entertainment.
Sent on receipt of 25 cents.

THE TRUE LIGHT. A new Christmas Service, by Rev. ROBERT LOWRY, consisting entirely of Scripture and Song. Selections made with intelligent care. Songs original and fresh. As Xmas falls on Sunday, this service will be found especially desirable. Easily rendered by any Sunday School.
Price $4 per 100; 5cts. each by Mail.

Christmas Annual No. 18. —Contains pleasing Carols by favorite authors. An abundant supply of Songs for any Christmas Festival.
Price $3 per 100; 4cts. each by Mail.

☞ A full Catalogue sent on request.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 Randolph St., Chicago.

SEDGWICK STEEL WIRE FENCE.

The best Farm, Garden, Poultry Yard, Lawn, School Lot, Park and Cemetery Fences and Gates. Perfect Automatic Gate. Cheapest and Neatest Iron Fences. Iron and wire Summer Houses, Lawn Furniture, and other wire work. Best Wire Stretcher and Plier. Ask dealers in hardware, or address, SEDGWICK BROS., RICHMOND, IND.

GRIND YOUR OWN Bone, Meal, Oyster Shells, Graham Flour & Corn in the $5 HAND MILL (F. Wilson's Patent.) 100 per cent. more made in keeping Poultry. Also POWER MILLS and FARM FEED MILLS. Circulars and testimonials sent on application. WILSON BROS. Easton, Pa.

FOUR HUNDRED

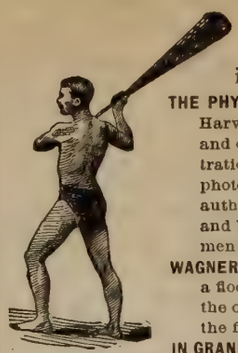
Choice Recitations and Readings bound in handsome lithograph cover, mailed to any address for 30 cts. Satisfaction guaranteed. J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers, P.O. Box, 2767, 57 Rose St., New York.

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed. Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

FLORIDA. Escape sickness and cold. Three tourist hotels, college, refined northern society. High, healthful pine land. No swamps. Orange groves, houses and lands for sale. Dr. Land, Box 1767, N. Y.

Scribner's Magazine



The November number, which is especially in illustrations, contains—

THE PHYSICAL CHARACTERISTICS OF THE ATHLETE. PROF. D. A. SARG Harvard University. Dr. Sargent's second article on Physicial Tr and one of the most unique ever published in a magazine. With trations of distinguished amateur athletes in motion, from instant photographs made expressly for Scribner's Magazine, and with charts author. Dr. Sargent demonstrates from his carefully constructed and by many expert athletes, the distinguishing physical traits w men for excelling in a given branch of athletics.

WAGNER AND SCENIC ART. WILLIAM F. APTHORP. A paper which wil a flood of new light upon Wagner's scenic methods. With illustratio the original designs for the setting of the Bayreuth stage, now engra the first time.

IN GRAND KABYLIA. HENRY M. FIELD, D.D. A description of a little country and people of Northern Algeria—"the Switzerland of Africa." with seven illusti

THE VIKING SHIP. JOHN S. WHITE. With 22 illustrations showing remarkable points of sim between the most successful of modern yachts and this relic of the ancient Vikings

A DIPLOMATIC EPISODE. OLIVE RISLEY SEWARD. A most interesting paper by the adopted ter of ex-Secretary Seward, explaining fully for the first time an important but neglect dent in our diplomatic history. With a full-page engraving and a map of the Town a bor of St. Thomas.

WHAT SHALL WE TELL THE WORKING-CLASSES? GEN. FRANCIS A. WALKER. A vigorous spoken article, and an original and valuable contribution to this much-discussed subje

A COMPLETE MISUNDERSTANDING. (Story) By MARGARET CROSBY.

TIRAR Y SOULT. (Story.) BY REBECCA HARDING DAVIS.

CONCLUSION OF THE SERIAL "SETH'S BROTHER'S WIFE." By HAROLD FREDERIC.

TO RHODOCLEIA, on Her Melancholy Singing. Poem. By ANDREW LANG.

POEMS. By SUSAN COOLIDGE, ELLEN BURROUGHS, HENRIETTA CHRISTIAN WRIGHT and C HENRY LUDERS.

The December issue will be a superb CHRISTMAS NUMBER, the cover of which is enri a handsome border printed in gold, and the number of illustrations much increased.

Price, Twenty-five Cents.

A Year's Subscription to SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE, price $3.00, sisting of twelve monthly numbers, gives—
More than 1,500 pages of the best literature. More than 700 of the finest illustrations.

SUBSCRIBE NOW.
CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 743-745 Broadway N.

Carpets.

A choice selection of the fall styles in Carpetings and Rugs.

We are showing a large line of Best Patterns Smith's Moquette at $1.25, reduced from $1.50 and $1.65.

Also Lowell Body Brussels at $1.00, reduced from $1.50.

Lord & Taylor

Broadway & Twentieth St.

We Want Active Agents!

TO SELL THE
RENNER COMBINED ALARM AND DOOR BELL
in every county in the United States and Canada. George C. Owens, Modesta, Cal., says: "I have canvassed one day and took 22 orders." In same letter he ordered two gross. Wm. McKim, of Grand Haven, Mich., says: "he took 13 orders in 10 hours." Profit on Bell, $2.50. In our extraordinary offer to agents we agree to take back all bells unsold, if the agent fails to clear $125.00 in 30 days. Illustrated circulars sent free.
Address Renner Manufacturing Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

CATALOGUE of USEFUL, POPULAR and HUMOROUS Books sold at Low Prices. Mailed to any address free by
J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
57 Rose St., New York.

WARREN'S FEATHER EDGE WHIPS
The best ever made. Ask your Dealer for them.

WORK FOR ALL. $30 a week and expenses paid. Valuable outfit and particulars free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

JAMES M'CREERY & C

announce the arrival of a large portation of BLACK AND COL SILKS; which they are now of at Special Sale, at remarkably prices.

Offer among their large assor of Fall Dress Goods the foll Special Lines:

One line of Fine Diagonal 65 cents; worth 85 cents.

Also one line of Camel's Hair 75 cents; good value for $1.

Commencing this week, we will a special sale of several thousand of Fine California Blankets, at duction from the manufacturers ent wholesale prices. The foll are the sizes and prices.

10-4 60x70 inches	- -	$5.50 p
11-4 72x84 inches	- -	7.00 p
12-4 78x86 inches	- -	8.50 p
13-4 84x90 inches	- -	10.00 p
14-4 90x96 inches	- -	11.50 p

A special lot of Eider Down Quilts, with handsome Sateen C ings, in single, double, and extr sizes, at $8.00, $9.50, and $ each, being a little over half-pric

Satisfaction assured to every chaser, city or country.

Special attention given to m ders. Mention this paper.

JAMES M'CREERY & CO
Broadway and 11th St.,
New York.

AGENTS WANTED (Samples Fr DR. SCOTT'S beautiful E Corsets, Brushes, Belts, Etc. No risk, qui Territory given. Satisfaction guaranteed. DR. SCOTT, 843 Broadway, New

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 46. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, NOV. 17, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF LORD AND LADY BRASSEY, and Sketches from their Voyages in the Sunbeam.

PARENTAL BLUNDERS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

PICTURE OF A SCENE IN BOLIVIA.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE TARES. By Rev. Sabine Wright.

A Meeting after Seven Years—A Congressman's Wife Healed—Among Chinese Opium Smokers—A Bribe Refused—New Converts in China—A Difficult Rescue.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE REV. N. NIELSEN.

THE WORK AND THE WORKER. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: The Last Sigh of the Exile.

TOM'S GOOD NEWS. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. By George Muller. (Continued.)

JESUS AND THE SABBATH. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Lord Brassey and the late Lady Brassey—Their Yacht, the Sunbeam—Incidents of their Voyages.

LORD AND LADY BRASSEY,

And their Voyages in the Sunbeam.

Recent Death of Lady Brassey—Her Charming Books—Incidents of the Voyages—Nearly Overboard—A Rescue from a Burning Ship—In a Native Church at Tahiti—A Leper Settlement in Hawaii—A Wrestling Fete in Japan—Buddha's Image—The Chinese Holy of Holies—Sunday Services on Board.

THE name of the Sunbeam is familiar to thousands of readers on both sides of the Atlantic, who have been charmed by the brilliant and graceful narratives of its voyages. The hand that wrote those narratives is now still and cold and lifeless. The famous little yacht may go on other voyages, but they will have no interest for the public now that Lady Brassey is not on board to report the scenes and incidents in her bright facinating style. During a voyage from Australia to the Cape of Good Hope, in September last, Lady Brassey succumbed to an attack of malarial fever, and was buried in mid-ocean. The interest excited by her works will render her portrait and that of her husband, with the sketches on the preceding page, welcome to the readers of this journal. Between the portraits is a picture of the residence of Lord and Lady Brassey in England. The picture beneath Lord Brassey's portrait is of Lady Brassey addressing a meeting of an Ambulance Society, in which she took a deep interest. No. 3 represents the launch of a lifeboat at which she officiated. No. 4 is a view of the famous Sunbeam in full sail. No. 5 represents an incident of one of the voyages—Lady Brassey welcoming to the Sunbeam the captain of a wrecked ship, and No. 6 a journey in Japan, which Lady Brassey made in a species of hand-barrow, called a "Jinrikisha."

Lady Brassey was the eldest daughter of Mr. Allnutt, of London, and in 1860 was married to the eldest son and heir of Mr. Thomas Brassey, the famous railroad contractor. He was a member of Parliament, but last year he was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Brassey. Husband and wife were both ardent lovers of the sea, and a portion of each year of their early married life was passed on board the yacht which has now attained world-wide fame. Notes of these voyages with original remarks on the places visited and the incidents on board, were made by the lady whose intelligence and educational training, combined with a singularly natural and graceful style of writing, fitted her for such work. When these notes included a sketch of which Lord and Lady Brassey undertook in 1876, they were read with so much interest and pleasure by the personal friends who were privileged to see them, that Lady Brassey was urged to publish them, and they were accordingly issued in book form. They had a phenomenal success, passed through several editions and were re-printed in this country. The cordial welcome given to her first book encouraged Lady Brassey to continue writing, and the "Voyage in the Sunbeam" was followed by the "Roaring Forties" and other works, all of which had a wide circulation. It is a touching coincidence that one who so loved the Sunbeam and made the sea her home, should have died on her beloved vessel and found her last resting place beneath the billows.

A Tour Around the World,

The most fitting accompaniment to the pictures on the first page will be a few extracts from Lady Brassey's books, which tell her story in her own charming style. The first from the "Voyage in the Sunbeam," we may call

Nearly Overboard

Lady Brassey says: "After dinner, one day, when we were off Ushant, we very nearly met with a most serious accident. We were all sitting or standing about the stern of the vessel, admiring the magnificent dark blue billows following us, with their curling white crests mountains high. Each wave, as it approached, appeared as if it must overwhelm us, instead of which it rushed grandly by, rolling and shaking us from stem to stern, and sending fountains of spray on board. Tom (Lord Brassey) was looking at the stern compass, Allnutt being close to him. Captain Lecky, seated on a large coil of rope placed on the box of the rudder, was spinning Mabelle a yarn. A new hand was steering, and just at the moment when an unusually big wave overtook us he unfortunately allowed the vessel to broach-to a little. In a second the sea came pouring over the stern, above Allnutt's head. The boy was nearly washed overboard, but he managed to catch hold of the rail, and, with great presence of mind, stuck his knees into the bulwarks. Kindred, our boatswain, seeing his danger, rushed forward to save him, but was knocked down by the return wave, from which

He Emerged Gasping.

The coil of rope on which Captain Lecky and Mabelle were seated was completely floated by the sea. Providentially, however, he had taken a double turn round his wrist with a reefing point, and throwing his other arm round Mabelle, held on like grim death; otherwise nothing could have saved them. She was perfectly self-possessed, and only said quietly, 'Hold on, Captain Lecky, hold on!' to which he replied, 'All right.' I asked her afterwards if she thought she was going overboard, and she answered, 'I did not think at all, mamma, but felt sure we were gone.' Captain Lecky, being accustomed to very large ships, had not in the least realized how near we were to the water in our little vessel, and was proportionately taken by surprise. Happily, the children don't know what fear is. Soon after this adventure we all went to bed, full of sincere thankfulness that it had ended as well as it did."

Saving the Crew of a Ship on Fire.

"I was lying down, below, after breakfast, feeling very stupid, when my daughter Mabelle rushed into the cabin, saying, "Papa says you are to come on deck at once, to see the ship on fire." I rushed up quickly, hardly knowing whether she referred to our own or to some other vessel, and on reaching the deck I found everybody looking at a large barque, under full sail, flying the red Union Jack upside down, and with signals in her rigging, which our signalman read as "Ship on fire." We sent off a boat's crew, well armed, thinking it not impossible that a mutiny had taken place on board. In the course of a few minutes the boat returned, bringing the mate of the Monkshaven, a fine-looking Norwegian, who spoke English perfectly and who reported his ship to be sixty-eight days out from Swansea, bound for Valparaiso with a cargo of smelting coal. The fire had first been discovered on the previous Sunday, and by six A. M. on Monday the crew had got up their clothes and provisions on deck, thrown overboard all articles of a combustible character, such as tar, oil, paint, spare spars and sails, planks and rope, and battened down the hatches. Ever since then they had all been living on deck, with no protection from the wind and sea but a canvas screen. Tom and Captain Brown proceeded on board at once. It was perfectly evident that it would be impossible to save the ship, and the captain therefore determined to abandon her. Some of the crew were accordingly at once brought on board the Sunbeam in our boat, which was then sent back to assist in removing the remainder, a portion of whom came in their own boat. The poor fellows were almost wild with joy at getting alongside another ship, after all the hardships they had gone through. Our boat made three trips altogether, and by half-past six we had them all safe on board, with most of their effects, and the ship's chronometers, charts, and papers.

"For two hours we could see the smoke pouring from various portions of the ill-fated barque. Our men, who had brought off the last of the crew, reported that, as they left her, flames were just beginning to burst from the fore-hatchway, and it was therefore certain that the rescue had not taken place an hour too soon."

At a Native Christian Service at Tahiti.

"At half-past eight we breakfasted, so as to be ready for the service at the native Christian church at ten; but several visitors arrived in the interval, and we had rather a bustle to get off in time, after all. We landed close to the church, under the shade of an hibiscus, whose yellow and orange flowers dropped off into the sea and floated away amongst the coral rocks, peeping out of the water here and there. The building appeared to be full to overflowing with an attentive and most devout congregation. The windows and doors were all wide open, and many members of the congregation were seated on the steps, on the lawn, and on the grassy slope beyond, listening to a most earnest discourse in the native language. Most of the people wore the native costume, which, especially when made of black stuff and surmounted by a little sailor's hat, decorated with a bandana handkerchief or a wreath of flowers, was very becoming."

A Leper Settlement.

"A sad interest attaches to the island of Molokai, which is situated midway between Maui and Oahu. It is the leper settlement, and to it all the victims of this terrible, loathsome and incurable disease, unhappily so prevalent in the Hawaiian archipelago, are sent, in order to prevent the spread of the contagion. They are well cared for, and looked after in every way; but their life, separated as they inevitably are from all they hold most dear, and with no prospect before them but that of a slow and cruel death, must indeed be a miserable one. In Molokai there are many tiny children, fatherless and motherless, parents without children, husbands without wives, wives without husbands, 'all condemned,' as Miss Bird says, 'to watch the repulsive steps by which each of their doomed fellows goes down to a loathsome death, knowing that by the same they, too, must pass.' A French priest has nobly devoted himself to the religious and secular instruction of the lepers, and, up to the present time, has enjoyed complete immunity from the disease; but, even if he escapes this danger, he can never return to his country and friends. When one thinks what that implies, and to what a death in life he has condemned himself, for the sake of others, it seems impossible to doubt that he will indeed reap a rich reward hereafter."

A Lively Scene at Tokio, Japan.

"There is always a festival going in some part of Tokio. To-day there had been a great wrestling-match, and we met all the people coming away. Such crowds of jinrikishas, full of gaily dressed and painted women and children, with their hair plastered into all sorts of inconceivable shapes, and decorated with artificial flowers and glittering pins! We met six of the wrestlers themselves, riding in jinrikishas—big men, prodigiously fat, and not at all, according to our ideas, in fighting or wrestling condition. One of their jinrikisha men stumbled and fell just as they passed us, and the wrestler shot out, head over heels, and lay, quite helpless in the middle of the road till somebody picked him up. He was not in the least hurt, and, as soon as he was set on his feet again, began to belabor the poor jinrikisha man most unmercifully."

The Great Buddha of Japan.

"Careful arrangements have been made for our excursion to the island of Inoshima, to see the colossal figure of Daibutz, or Great Buddha. There still remain some of the columns of the temple which once existed in the gardens surrounding the idol. Now he is quite alone; and for centuries has this grand old figure sat, exposed to the elements, serenely smiling on the varying scene beneath him. The figure is bronze, and is supposed to have been cast about the year 1250 or 1260. By eight o'clock we had landed, and packed ourselves into a funny little shaky carriage drawn by four horses. After stopping twice on the road, to drink the inevitable tea, we changed from our carriage to jinrikishas, each drawn and pushed by four strong men, bowling along at a merry pace. The sun was very warm in the sheltered valleys, and the abundance of evergreens of all kinds quite deluded one into the belief that instead of February it was summer time, especially as camellias grew like forest trees, covered with red and white blooms, amidst a dense tangle of bamboos and half-hardy palm. There were many strange things upside down to be seen on either hand—horses and cows with bells on their tails instead of on their necks, the quadrupeds well clothed, their masters without covering; tailors sewing from them instead of to them; a carpenter reversing the action of his saw and plane.

"In less than an hour we reached the narrow strip of land which at low water connects the island or peninsula of Inoshima with the mainland. The isthmus was covered with natives gathering shells and seaweed, casting their nets, and pushing off or dragging up their boats; whilst an island rose fresh and green from the sea, with a background of snowy mountains, stretching across the bay, above which Fujiyama towered grandly. The name signifies 'not two, but one mountain,' the Japanese thinking it impossible that there can be another like it in the world. The lovely little island is called Inoshima, and is conical in shape and covered with evergreens and Buddhist temples, with a few small fishing villages scattered on its shores. We walked across it in about an hour; so you may imagine it is not very large. The sea teems with curiously shaped fish and shells."

The Chinese Holy of Holies.

"At last the city gates of Canton were reached. Here a halt was made, and several of the party got out of their chairs and walked, and we were able to chat, whilst we wended our way by a narrow path through nursery gardens and graveyards. In fact the whole of the White Cloud Mountain is one vast cemetery—it is the Chinese Holy of Holies, whither their bodies are sent, not only from all parts of China, but from all parts of the world. Frequently a shipload of 1,500 or 1,600 bodies arrive in one day. The steamboat company charges forty dollars for the passage of a really live Chinaman, as against 160 dollars for the carriage of a dead Celestial. The friends of the deceased often keep the bodies in coffins above ground for several years, until the priests announce that they have discovered a lucky day and a lucky spot for the interment. This does not generally happen until he—the priest—finds he can extract no more money by divination, and that no more funeral feasts will be given by the friends. We passed through what they call the City of the Dead, where thousands of coffins waiting for interment were lying above ground. The coffins are large and massive, but very plain, resembling the hollowed-out trunk of a tree. The greatest compliment a Chinese can pay his older relatives is to make them a present of four handsome longevity boards for their coffins. Outside the City of the Dead were the usual adjuncts of a large burying-place—coffin-makers and stone-carvers, surrounded by pigs, ducks, and young children."

It is pleasing to observe that the "Journal" of Lady Brassey records that Divine Service was held every Sunday morning and evening on board the "Sunbeam" during her prolonged voyages. Lord Brassey himself is President of the "British and Foreign Sailor's Society," and Commodore of the "Bethel Union Register," an association of avowed Christian captains. In a letter to the members of the "Register," written last year, he said: "I trust that the interest which I am sure you all feel in the welfare of your crews, will be always maintained. There is one point that I should especially like to mention, and that is the desirability of holding services afloat whenever practicable. On my yacht, the "Sunbeam," a service is held regularly every Sunday."

Volume IX. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1886, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1884, and 1885 are also for sale.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

How God Called Willie.—At a Children's meeting Mr. Clyde related: "I was standing in the street the other day, when a man came across the road, and said, 'You called me, sir, what do you want with me? 'I did not call you,' I replied, 'But the Lord called you. What did the voice seem to say?' 'It said, "Willie? Willie!"' Then I continued, 'Do you listen to the rest of the message,' 'Turn ye, turn ye, from the evil ways, for why will ye die'? The man listened attentively to the Gospel message, and on realizing for the first time Christ's great love for him, was completely broken down. But Christ sent the Comforter to comfort him, and he went his way rejoicing in Christ."

"No One Like Jesus for a Friend."—The following confession of an aged woman is very touching: "There's no one like Jesus for a friend. I have no one to care for me but Him. He is with me in the lodging-house, and when I have no money to pay the rent and have at night to walk about the streets, He is with me then. When the police says, 'Move on there, old woman! there's two of us he move on, me and the Master. When I have gone into an empty dustbin for shelter, I have been comforted when I remembered His words: 'The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head."

An Infidel Suicide's Misleading Monument.—"I remember going into a cemetery, in a town in England, and while passing through it I was struck with the beauty of a marble monument raised at the top of a grave. Going forward I read the inscription, 'He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life.' I asked a gentleman whose remains lay there, and he said, 'He was a man of considerable wealth, an infidel, and a drunkard.' And how did he die?' I inquired. 'He committed suicide,' was the reply. Yet his friends engraved these words on his tombstone, as if they had any relation to him. To one who knew the circumstances of his life and death the words had an awful import. He might have had eternal life on such easy terms, and he had despised it."

Search for a Lost Child.—Mr. Pugh said: "A gentleman in London noticed a lady running madly through one of the main streets without bonnet or shawl, or cloak of any kind. He thought her intellect must be touched, for as she ran she looked wildly about her as if in search of something. The gentleman stopped her, and placing his hand firmly upon her shoulder, he asked if he could be of any service to her. 'My child, my child," was all the woman could utter, as she gasped for breath. When she became calmer she explained that the child's nurse had taken him out, and while she was doing some shopping he had wandered from her side, and she knew nothing more of him. She was almost demented with anxiety, and her joy when she found the child was ecstatic. There is joy among the angels of God over every sinner that repents."

A Visit to an Infirmary Ward.—An evangelistic worker says: "A few Sundays ago I was visiting in the Glasgow infirmary, and at the side of the bed where I was standing there stood a man who had come to see his comrade. As he leaned over him, holding him by the hand and speaking kindly to him, I heard him say, 'Now I must go and let the other man up; you know he is waiting his turn to see you.' They took leave of each other, and the one went away and so allowed the opportunity for his friend to come up. The sick man was very feeble, and no sooner had his friend gone than he breathed his last. As I was leaving the building, I met the second man coming along the corridor. 'Where are you going?' I asked. 'To such a ward,' he replied. 'Your friend is dead,' I continued; 'there is no need for you now!" The news seemed to make him very sad; he turned back with me, and I said, 'Where has his soul gone, for it can never die? Had it been you, where would you have been? As the tree falleth, so does it lie; if you live a life of sin, you must die the sinner's death and go to the sinner's eternity.' I pointed him to Christ, and told him what He had done that men 'might not perish, but have everlasting life.' The poor fellow appeared to receive the Saviour, and I believe is now on his way to heaven."

A Remarkable Fishing Incident.—About eighteen months ago there was a very bad fishing "season" in St. Ives: scarcely any fish had been caught; depression was the ruling spirit; money was scarce; and starvation stared many in the face. One of the officers of the Primitive Church, a godly fisherman, was in the habit of retiring to his chamber twice daily, and praying for fish. One week-night service, he said to the pastor before commencing, "You must pray for fish!" The pastor did, and the congregation said Amen. In faith upon God, the nets were cast that night, and on being drawn to shore next day, were found to contain fish that realized at market value the sum of $1000 sterling. Here was the answer to prayer. The recital of this story produced a wonderful impression upon the meeting, for most of those present were eye-witnesses of the fact when it occurred. We trust that the re-telling of this marvellous incident may lead many, weak in faith, to have confidence in God at all times.

Confessing Christ at the Pit's Mouth.—Richard Weaver says: "Many young converts immediately after their conversion to Christ are sore afraid of confessing Him. Well do I remember the first morning after I was converted. As I went up to work the men were seated around the pit mouth, and as soon as I came in sight they began to look at each other and laugh. I almost knew what I was going to get, but I said nothing. I had not been afraid of men before my conversion, and, God helping me, I was not going to be so after it. So simply praying, 'Oh, God, help me,' I was preparing to go about my work, when one of them said, 'Is it true, Richard?' 'What's true?' I asked. 'That you are converted?' 'Yes,' I said, 'it is true.' 'What are you going to make of it?' was the rejoinder, but next moment over half a dozen of the men cried, 'Would to God it was so with us!' We started an inquiry-meeting there and then, and six of them were soon rejoicing with me in the salvation of Christ."

Kicked for Christ's Sake.—An evangelist said: "A little girl of eight years was sent on an errand by her parents. While on her way she was attracted by the singing at a Gospel meeting in the open air, and drew near. The conductor of the meeting was so struck with the child's earnestness that he spoke to her and told her about Jesus. She, being the child of Roman Catholics, did not know much about Him, but the gentleman told her of His love to her. On returning home her father asked what had detained her. She told him, and he cruelly beat her, forbidding her to go to any such meeting again. About a fortnight afterward she was sent on another errand, but she was so taken up with what she had previously heard of Jesus that she forgot all about her message. She saw the same gentleman, who again told her more about the Saviour. On her return home she again told her father, as before, where she had been, and that she had not brought what she had been sent for, but that she had brought Jesus,' Her father was enraged, and kicked the poor little creature until the blood came. She never recovered from this brutal treatment. Just before she breathed her last she called her mother, and said, 'Mother, I have been praying to Jesus to save you and father.' Then, pointing to her little dress, she said, 'Mother, cut me a bit out of the blood-stained piece of my dress.' The mother, wondering, did so. 'Now,' said the dying child, 'Christ shed His blood for my sake, and I am going to take this to Jesus to show Him that I shed my blood for His sake.' Thus she died, holding firmly the piece of her dress stained with her own blood. The testimony of that dear child was the means of leading both father and mother to Christ."

PARENTAL BLUNDERS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached last Sunday Morning, November 13, 1887.

"He fell from off the seat backward by the side of the gate, and his neck brake, and he died; for he was an old man, and heavy."—1 Sam. 4 : 18.

The Blind Nonagenarian—The Future Conquerors of the United States—Cicero's Prefaces—Ruggiero's Shield—The Boy's Training—Prevalent Parental Blunders—I. Undue Severity or Laxity—John Howard's Mercilessness—John Milton's Harshness—The Family Gouge and Pile-Driver—A Scolding Mother Mimicked—II. Lack of Discrimination—Varieties of Temperament—III. One-Sided Development—A Sound Mind in a Sound Body—The Neglected Heart—IV. Suppression of Merriment—V. The Postponement of Moral Culture—Precocious Intellectual Culture—The Spectre of the Brocken—A Dying Mother's Request.

THIS is the end of a long story of parental neglect. Judge Eli was a good man, but he let his two boys, Hophni and Phinehas, do as they pleased; and, through over-indulgence, they went to ruin. The blind old judge, ninety-eight years of age, is seated at the gate, waiting for the news of an important battle, in which his two sons were at the front. An express is coming, with tidings from the battle.

This Blind Nonagenarian puts his hand behind his ear, and listens, and cries: "What meaneth the noise of this tumult?" An excited messenger, all out of breath with the speed, said to him: "Our army is defeated; the sacred chest, called the ark, is captured; and your sons are dead on the field!" No wonder the father fainted and expired. The domestic tragedy in which these two sons were the tragedians, had finished its fifth and last act. "He fell from off the seat backward, by the side of the gate, and his neck brake, and he died: for he was an old man, and heavy."

Eli had made an awful mistake in regard to his children. The Bible distinctly says: "His sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not." Oh, the ten thousand mistakes in rearing children—mistakes of parents, mistakes of teachers in day school and Sabbath classes, mistakes which we all make. Will it not be useful to consider them?

America's Future Conquerors.

This country is going to be conquered by a great army, compared with which that of Baldwin the First, and Xerxes, and Alexander, and Grant, and Lee, all put together, were in numbers insignificant. They will capture all our pulpits, storehouses, factories, and halls of legislation; all our shipping, all our wealth and all our honors. They will take possession of all authority, from the United States Presidency down to the humblest constabulary—of everything between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. They are on the march now, and they halt neither day nor night. They will soon be here, and all the present active population of this country must surrender and give way. I refer to the great army of children. Whether they shall take possession of everything for good or for bad, depends upon the style of preparation through which they pass.

Cicero acknowledges he kept in his desk a collection of prefaces for books, which prefaces he could at any time attach to anything he wanted to publish for himself or others; and all parents and teachers have all prepared the preface of every young life under their charge, and not only the preface, but the appendix, whether the volume be a poem or a farce. Families and schools and legislatures are in our day busily engaged in discussing what is the best mode of educating children. Before this question almost every other dwindles into insignificance, while dependent upon the proper solution is the welfare of governments and ages eternal. Macaulay tells of the war which Frederick the Second made against Queen Maria Theresa. And one day she appeared before the august Diet, wearing mourning for her father, and held up in her arms before them her child, the Archduke. This so wrought upon the officers and deputies of the people that, with half-drawn swords, they broke forth in the war-cry: "Let us die for our Queen, Maria Theresa!" So, this morning, realizing that the boy of to-day is to be the ruler of the future, the popular sovereign, I hold him before the American people to arouse their enthusiasm in his behalf, and to evoke their oath for his defence, his education, and his destiny.

If a parent, you will remember when you were aroused to these great responsibilities, and when you found that you had not done all required, after you had admired the tiny hands, and the glossy hair, and the bright eyes that lay in the cradle, you suddenly remembered that that hand would yet be raised to bless the world with its benediction, or to smite it with a curse. In Ariosto's great poem there is a character called Ruggiero, who has a shield of insufferable splendor, but it is kept veiled, save on certain occasions; and when uncovered, it startled and overwhelmed its beholder, who before had no suspicion of its brightness. My hope to-day is to uncover the destiny of your child or student, about which you may have no especial appreciation, and flash upon you the splendors of its immortal nature. Behold, the shield and the sword of the coming conflict!

I propose in this discourse to set forth what I consider to be some of

The Errors Prevalent

in the training of children.

First, I remark that many err in too great severity or too great leniency of family government. Between parental tyranny and ruinous laxativeness of discipline there is a medium. Sometimes the father errs on the one side and the mother on the other side. Good family government is all-important. Anarchy and misrule in the domestic circle is the forerunner of anarchy and misrule in the state. In the attempt to avoid all this, and bring the children under proper laws and regulations, parents have sometimes carried themselves with great rigor. John Howard, who was merciful to the prisons and lazarettos, was merciless in the treatment of his children. John Milton knew everything but how to train his family. Severe and unreasonable was he in his carriage toward them. He made them read to him in four or five languages, but would not allow them to learn any of them; for, he said, that one tonge was enough for a woman. Their reading was mechanical drudgery, when, if they had understood the languages they read, the employment of reading might have been a luxury. No wonder his children despised him, and stealthily sold his books and hoped for his death. In all ages there is need of a society for prevention of Cruelty to Children.

When Barbara was put to death by her father because she had countermanded his order, and had three windows put in a room instead of two, this cruel parent was a type of many who have acted the Nero and the Robespierre in the home circle. The heart sickens at what you sometimes see, even in families that pretend to be Christian—perpetual scolding, and hair-pulling, and ear-boxing, and thumping, and stamping, and fault-finding, and teasing, until the children are vexed beyond bounds and growl in the sleeve, and pout, and rebel, and vow within themselves that in after days they will retaliate. That child's nature is too delicate to be worked upon by sledge-hammer, and

Gouge and Pile-driver.

Such fierce lashing, instead of breaklng the high mettle to bit and trace, will make it dash off the more uncontrollable. Many seem to think that children are flax—not fit for use till they have been hetcheted and swingled. Some one talking to a child said: "I wonder what makes that tree out there so crooked." The child replied: "I suppose it was trod on while it was young." In some families all the discipline is concentrated upon one child's head. If anything is done wrong, the supposition is that George did it. He broke the latch. He left open the gate. He hacked the bannisters. He whittled sticks on the carpets. And George shall be the scapegoat for all misunderstandings and suspicions. In many a household there is such a one singled out for suspicion and castigation. All the sweet flowers of his soul blasted under this perpetual north-east storm, he curses the day in which he was born.

A mother was passing along the street one day, and came up to her little child, who did not see her approach, and her child was saying to her play-mate: "You good-for-nothing little scamp, you come right into the house this minute or I will beat you till the skin comes off." The mother broke in saying: "Why, Lizzie, I am surprised to hear you talk like that to any one!" "Oh," said the child, "I was only playing, and he is my little boy, and I am scolding him, as you did me this morning." Children are apt to be echoes of their parents. Safer in a Bethlehem manger among cattle and camels with gentle Mary to watch the little innocent than the most extravagant nursery over which God's star of peace never stood.

Yet we may rush to the other extreme and rule children by Too Great Leniency.

The surgeon is not unkind because notwithstanding the resistance of his patient he goes straight on with firm hand and unfaltering heart to take off the gangrene. Nor is the parent less affectionate and faithful because, notwithstanding all violent remonstrances on the part of the child, he with the firmest discipline advances to the cutting off of its evil inclinations. The Bible says: "Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying." Childish rage unchecked will, after awhile, become a hurricane. Childish petulance will grow up into misanthropy. Childish rebellion will develop into the lawlessness of riot and sedition. If you would ruin the child, dance to his every caprice and stuff him with confectionery. Before you are aware of it that boy of six years will go down the street, a cigar in his mouth and ready on any corner with his comrades to compare pugilistic attainments. The parent who allows the child to grow up without ever having learned the great duty of obedience and submission has prepared a cup of burning gall for his own lips and appalling destruction for his descendant. Remember Eli and his two sons, Hophni and Phinehas.

A second error prevalent in the training of children is a laying out of a theory and following it without arranging it to varieties of disposition. In every family you will find striking Differences of Temperament.

This child is too timid, and that too bold and this too miserly and that too wasteful; this too inactive and that too boisterous. Now, the farmer, who should plant corn and wheat and turnips in just the same way, then put them through one hopper and grind them in the same mill, would not be so much of a fool as the parents who should attempt to discipline and educate all their children in the same manner. It needs a skillful hand to adjust these checks and balances. The rigidity of government which is necessary to hold in this impetuous nature would utterly crush that flexile disposition while the gentle reproof that would suffice for the latter, would, when used on the former, be like attempting to hold a champing Bucephalus with reins of gossamer.

God gives us in the disposition of each child a hint as to how we ought to train him, and, as God in the mental structure of our children indicates what mode of training is the best, He also indicates in the disposition their future occupation. Do not write down that child as dull, because it may not now be as brilliant as your other children or as those of your neighbor. Some of the mightiest men and women of the centuries had a stupid childhood. Thomas Aquinas was called at school "the dumb ox," but afterward demonstrated his sanctified genius and was called "the angel of the schools" and "the eagle of Brittany." Kindness and patience with a child will conquer almost anything, and they are virtues so Christlike that they are inspiring to look at. John Wesley's kiss of a child on the pulpit stairs turned Matthias Joyce from a profligate into an evangel.

The third error prevalent in the training of children is the

One-sided Development

of either the physical, intellectual or moral nature at the expense of the others. Those, for instance, greatly mistake who, while they are faithful in the intellectual and moral culture of children, forget the physical. The bright eyes half quenched by night study, the cramped chest that comes from too much bending over school desks, the weak side resulting from sedentariness of habit, pale cheeks and the gaunt bodies of multitudes of children attest that physical development does not always go along with intellectual and moral. How do you suppose all those treasures of knowledge the child gets will look in shattered casket? And how much will you give for the wealthiest cargo when it is put into a leaky ship?

From this infinite blunder of parents how many have come out in life with a genius that could have piled Ossa upon Pelion and mounted upon them to scale the heavens, and have laid down panting with physical exhaustion before a mole-hill. They who might have thrilled senates and marshalled armies and startled the world with the shock of their scientific batteries, have passed their lives in picking up prescriptions for indigestion. They owned all the thunderbolts of Jupiter, but could not get out of their rocking-chair to use them. George Washington in early life was a poor speller, and spelled hat h-a-double-t and a ream of paper he spelled "rheam," but he knew enough to spell out the independence of this country from foreign oppression. The knowledge of the schools is important, but there are other things quite as important.

Just as great is the wrong done when the mind is cultivated and

The Heart Neglected.

The youth of this day are seldom denied any scholarly attainments. Our schools and seminaries are ever growing in efficiency, and the students are conducted through all the realms of philosophy and art and language and mathematics. The most hereditary obtuseness gives way before the onslaught of adroit instructors. But there is a development of infinite importance which mathematics and the dead languages cannot effect. The more mental power, the more capacity for evil unless coupled with religious restraint.

Whether knowledge is a mighty good or an unmitigated evil, depends entirely upon which course it takes. The river rolling on between round banks makes all the valley laugh with golden wheat and rank grass, and catching hold the wheel of mill and factory, whirls it with great industries. But, breaking away from restraints and dashing over banks in red wrath, it washes away harvests from their moorings and makes the valleys shrink with the catastrophe. Fire in the furnace heats the house or drives the steamer; but, uncontrolled, warehouses go down in awful crash before it, and in a few hours half a city will lie in black ruin, walls and towers and churches and monuments. You must accompany the education of the intellect with the education of the heart, or you are rousing up within your child an energy which will be blasting and terrific. Better a wicked dunce than a wicked philosopher.

The fourth error often committed in the training of children, is the Suppression of Childish Sportfulness.

Parents, having for a good many years been jostled about in the rough world, often lose their vivacity, and are astonished to see how their children can act so thoughtlessly of the earnest world all about them. That is a cruel parent who quenches any of the light in a child's soul. Instead of arresting its sportfulness, go forth and help him trundle the hoop, and fly the kite, and build the snow castle. Those shoulders are too little to carry a burden, that brow is too young to be wrinkled, those feet are too sprightly to go along at a funeral pace. God bless their young hearts! Now is the time for them to be sportful.

The fifth error in the training of childhood is the postponement of its moral culture until too late. Multitudes of children because of their precocity have been urged into depths of study where they ought not to go, and their intellects have been overburdened and overstrained and battered to pieces against Latin grammars and algebras, and coming forth into practical life they will hardly rise to mediocrity, and there is now a stuffing and cramming system of education in the schools of our country that is deathful to the teachers who have to enforce it, and destructive to the children who must submit to the process. You find children at nine and ten years of age with school lessons only appropriate for children of fifteen. If children are kept in school and studying from nine to three o'clock, no home study, except music, ought to be required of them. Six hours of study is enough for any child. The rest of the day ought to be devoted to recreation and pure fun. But you cannot begin too early the of a child or on too complete a scale. You can look back upon your own life and remember what mighty impressions were made upon you at five or six years of age. Oh, that child does not sit so silent during your conversation to be influenced by it. You say he does not understand. Although much of phraseology is beyond his grasp, he is gathering up from your talk influences which will affect his immortal destiny. From the question he asks you long afterward you find he understood all about what you were saying. The song with which you sing the child to sleep will echo through all its life, and ring back from the very arches of heaven.

Moral Culture

I think that often the first seven years of a child's life decide whether it shall be irascible, waspish, rude, false, hypocritical, or gentle, truthful, frank, obedient, honest and Christian. The present generations of men will pass off very much as they are now. Although the gospel is offered them, the general rule is that drunkards die drunkards, thieves die thieves, libertines die libertines. Therefore to the youth we turn. Before they sow wild oats get them to sow wheat and barley. You fill the bushel measure with good corn, and there will be

No Room for Husks.

Glorious Alfred Cookman was converted at ten years of age. At Carlisle, Pennsylvania, during the progress of a religious meeting in the Methodist Church, while many were kneeling at the foot of the altar, this boy knelt in a corner of the church all by himself and said: "Precious Saviour, thou art saving others, O, wilt thou not save me?" A Presbyterian elder knelt beside him and led him into the light. Enthroned Alfred Cookman! Tell me from the skies, were you converted too early? But I cannot hear his answer. It is overpowered by the huzzas of the thousands who were brought to God through his ministry. Isaac Watts, the great Christian poet, was converted at nine years of age. Robert Hall, the great Baptist evangelist, was converted at twelve years of age. Jonathan Edwards, the greatest of American logicians, was converted at seven years of age.

Oh for one generation of holy men and women. Shall it be the next? Fathers and mothers, you, under God, are to decide whether from your families shall go forth cowards, inebriates, counterfeiters, blasphemers, and whether there shall be those bearing your image and carrying your name festering in the low haunts of vice, and floundering in dissipation, and making the midnight of their lives horrid with a long howl of ruin, or whether from your family altars shall come the Christians, the reformers, the teachers, the ministers of Christ, the comforters of the troubled, the healers of the sick, the enacters of good laws, the founders of charitable institutions, and a great many who shall in the humbler spheres of toil and usefulness serve God and the best interests of the human race.

You cannot as parents shirk the responsibility. God has charged you with a mission, and all the thrones of heaven are waiting to see whether you will do your duty. We must not forget that it is not so much what we teach our children as what we are in their presence. We wish them to be better than we are, but the probability is that they will only be reproductions of ourselves. German literature has much to say of

The "Spectre of Brocken."

Among those mountains travellers in certain conditions of the atmosphere see themselves copied on a gigantic scale in the clouds. At first the travellers do not realize that it is themselves on a larger scale. When they lift a hand or move the head this monster spectre does the same, and with such enlargement of proportions that the scene is most exciting, and thousands have gone to that place just to behold the spectre of Brocken. The probability is that some of our faults which we consider small and insignificant, if we do not put an end to them, will be copied on a large scale in the lives of our children, and perhaps dilated and exaggerated into spectral proportions. You need not go as far off as the Brocken to see that process.

The first thing in importance in the education of our children is to make ourselves, by the grace of God, fit examples for them to copy. From your side that son or daughter, bone of your bone, heart of your heart, the father's brow his brow, the mother's eye his eye, shall go forth to an eternal destiny. What will be your joy if at last you hear their feet in the same golden highway and hear their voices in the same rapturous song, illustrations, while the eternal ages last, of what a faithful parent could, under God accomplish. I was reading of who had all her children about her, and took each one of them by the hand, and asked them to meet her in heaven, and with tears and sobs such as those only kuow who have stood by the deathbed of a good old mother. They all promised. But there was a young man of nineteen, who had been very wild and reckless, and hard and proud, and when she took his hand she said: "Now, my boy, I want you to promise me before I die, that you will become a Christian and meet me in heaven." The young man made no answer, for there was so much for him to give up if he made and kept such a promise.

A Dying Mother

But the aged mother persisted in saying: "You won't deny me that before I go, will you? This parting must not be forever. Tell me now you will serve God and meet me in the land where there is no parting." Quaking with emotion he stood, making up his mind and halting and hesitating, but at last his stubbornness yielded and he threw his arms around his mother's neck and said: "Yes, mother; I will, I will." And as he finished the last word of his promise her spirit ascended. I thank God the young man kept his promise. Yes, he kept it. May God give all mothers and fathers the gladness of their children's salvation.

For all who are trying to do their duty as parents, I quote the tremendous passage: "Train up a child in the way in which he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." If through good discipline and prayer and godly example you are acting upon that child, you have the right to expect him to grow up virtuous. And how many tears of joy you will shed when you see your child honorable and just and truthful and Christian and successful—a holy man amid a world of dishonesty, a godly woman in a world of frivolous pretension. When you come to die they will gather to bless your last hours. They will push back the white locks on your cold forehead and say: "What a good father he always was to me!" They will fold your hands peacefully and say: "Dear mother! She is gone. Her troubles are all over. Don't she look beautiful?"

AFTER SEVEN YEARS.

THE Rev. R. W. McAll, the devoted founder and manager of the Evangelical Missions in Paris, France, relates the following incident:

A tall, dignified man shook me warmly by the hand at our Montmartre station. "I know you well, Mr. McAll," he said, "though you cannot recognize me. It is seven years since we last met." In a moment I felt that his countenance was familiar, though the intervening years had whitened his hair. He reminded me of his attendance more than seven years before at our first little meeting in Belleville, at the very outset of our work. One time he was very much offended because a good German evangelist spoke, and seemed thenceforward to come as a spy, prepared to resent his return. But after that I had remarked his attentive hearing. One Sunday evening he came to me and said, "In three days I leave Paris for six or seven years, having an official appointment in New Caledonia. I wish heartily to thank you for these meetings before I go." At the door of the room I called him back for a moment, simply to say, "My friend, I shall pray for you." Tears started to his eyes and he was gone. After about seven years he came to me at another station, saying, "I am the man for whom you promised to pray when he was going to New Caledonia. I feel now that you did not forget your promise. Those words seemed to follow me throughout the years and comforted me when I was in trouble. I shall be forever grateful to you for having spoken them." As his stay in Paris was only temporary, he begged me to give him a Bible, inscribed with my name and his, as "a remembrance of the man who promised to pray for him." What a rich recompense for those few words!

A CONGRESSMAN'S WIFE HEALED.

THE following extract is from a letter written by Mrs. W. H. Springer, wife of the member of Congress to Rev. A. B. Simpson, and published in Word, Work and World: I have been an invalid all my life; but for the past twenty-six years, I knew scarcely anything but suffering, and that in its most sensitive regions—the spine and brain. The least over fatigue would produce such intense paroxysms of suffering, lasting often for days at a time, as to render me not only willing but anxious to die, simply to find relief from pain. The nerves on both sides the spine between my shoulders would often become so rigid as to make it impossible for me to move in any way. I could not stir a finger or relax a muscle without excruciating agony. I was taken to the best physicians both in this country and in Europe; but all their skill gave but a slight degree of temporary relief. In the early spring of '84, after a winter of great suffering, I found a few weeks of comparative relief by the use of electricity; but as soon as it was discontinued I became worse than before, and during the entire winter of '84—'85, I was constantly confined to my room, almost constantly to my bed. In the early spring of that year a friend from Philadelphia told me of the wonderful blessing of health that had come to two friends of her own, through prayer offered in their behalf, and urged me to go to you. I believed implicitly that God was able to heal all diseases—that He did answer prayer; but I had not the faith to believe the blessing of health was ever for me. After her return home, this same dear friend wrote me repeatedly, still urging me to go to you, and at last, early in May, I went to New York, she meeting me there. Several days had been set for my going, but I was too ill to start, and when at last I made the attempt, I did not hold my head up an instant the entire day, or take a morsel of nourishment of any kind. The following day we called upon you, and in a lengthy conversation you removed the veil from my eyes, and I saw as I never had seen before that God's promises are "yesterday, to-day and forever the same." I believe I was fully ready for the healing then, for a wonderful peace came upon me as you talked. But I was willing, at your request, to wait and carry the matter more fully to the dear Lord, and be sure that the promise was indeed for me. After a few days of waiting I went to you again, and as you prayed—anointing my head with oil—I felt that every word went direct to the Saviour's throne, and I knew He was there to bless, The power of prayer had prevailed, and I went forth healed in body and soul. I, who for years had scarcely been able to walk at all, spent my summer vacation climbing mountains. And I not only climbed them, but I went up with ease of perfect strength. I felt as though I was lifted on wings. And my heart kept repeating: "So that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's!" We always sang the "Doxology" on the mountain top. It is now nearly a year and a half since that blessed day, and I grow daily in strength physically, and I trust, spiritually.

AMONG CHINESE OPIUM SMOKERS.

THE hospital established at Kalgan, in Northern China, for Opium slaves by Dr. Murdock, is doing a good work. Mr. Sprague of the American Board visited it recently and says: "We met ten or more of the patients. Most of them gave unmistakable proof that they kept aloof from opium. Instead of the gaunt, wild feeble look they had when they entered the hospital, they are now hearty, robust, and ruddy. Indeed, many of them are so changed that their friends who have not seen them since their reform fail to recognize them. I am surprised to see that they pick up as quickly as from some fevers, and lose all traces of opium using. Two or three out of the ten had gone back to their pipes. One said he had been in great pain but would not take opium for relief—no, not if he died of pain. This man said when in pain he prayed God for relief, as Dr. Murdock had taught them to do, and the pain left him. "In the same court with this man we saw an old woman, the mother of our Christian gatekeeper, tear down her paper idols and burn them. We trust the Holy Spirit is working on these hearts.

NEW CONVERTS IN CHINA.

A TOUR of the Ling Ching district in China is described in the Missionary Herald by Dr. Porter who with two other Missionaries of the American Board recently went over that ground. Among the incidents of their journey are the following:

We found the little church at Ho Chia Tun in a very hopeful condition. The school teacher, as local preacher, has his time well occupied, aside from school hours, in discussion with many native scholars and young students as to the relative truth of Christianity and Confucianism; a discussion which tends rapidly to the enlarging of men's ideas of God, creation, spirit, eternity, and which we are always glad to court. The circle of interest is steadily widening. A young man sent to Tung-cho last autumn, and now returned for vacation, has carried these discussions into a large circle of his former associates and fellow-students. They recognize his simplicity, ability, and range of new thought, and rightly ascribe it to his connection with us.

My visitors were many. Among them a wealthy shopkeeper, who was very courteous to me, inviting me to his grounds and guest-room. The good name of the church is extended by such courtesies. The grandson of this man is a student in the local district examination court, under the direction of the hsiao yuan (the district examiner). He came over to have a talk about Confucianism. He laughed loudly at the idea of a Creator above and beyond the two primordial ethers, the yiu and yang! The philosophical crudity of the Chinese is balanced by their gross ignorance in other directions.

I visited another place seven miles south and found there a most intelligent inquirer. A teacher for ten years in Pekin, he had returned home to be a village doctor. He visited us last winter in hopes of getting a place. I gave him books and sent him home. He has used those books most studiously. An intelligent, affable man, of pleasing presence and good gifts of speech, he now interested me very much in the progress he had made in knowledge of the gospel. I shall have hope that he is a true disciple. From him I learned of several others interested through him. The village where we visited was engaged in praying for rain. Every man over seven and under seventy had gone to make a noise and stir up the god. This god had been carried out of his temple and placed in the sun to bake, in the hope that his heart might relent.

A DIFFICULT RESCUE.

A MAN imprisoned in the tank of a locomotive had a narrow escape from death at Paterson, N. J., on Oct. 25. An employee at the Grant Works in that city in examining a locomotive which had been sent there for repairs, found that there was a slight defect in the tank which supplies the boiler, and crawled into it through the hole in the top to remedy it, taking with him, besides his tools, an oil lamp and a piece of carpet to put under his knees when he knelt on the hard iron. The interior of the tank is braced with rods running in all directions, and it is like making one's way through the meshes of a series of nets to move about in it. A few moments afterward the other men heard smothered cries and groans issuing from the hole, and a little later a cloud of smoke came out. The man had upset his lamp, set fire to his clothing and the piece of carpet, and was unable to make his way out. One after another, other men entered the hole, but each immediately came out again, choking and half smothered with the smoke and gases given off by the oily flames inside. The shrieks of the imprisoned man made them redouble their efforts, but in vain. A stream of water was poured in to put out the fire, until it was found necessary to stop lest the water should drown him. Then a stream of air was pumped in to keep him from suffocating. Ultimately the top of the tank was torn off, and the man was rescued more dead than alive. It seems strange that the man could not have got out the same way that he entered, but that is sometimes difficult, and is generally so in the case of moral difficulties. The path into evil is smooth and easy, but return is impossible, except through faith in Christ (Prov. 2: 19).

A BRIBE REFUSED.

A NOTABLE case of steadfastness in a convert to Christianity in Syria is reported by Dr. Ira Harris, who writes from Abeih to The Church. He says: A few weeks prior to my visit to Maharadi the bishop of Hamath made his first visit to this place. He called on our helper, and said that he had heard very much good of him—of the influence his pure life had upon his neighbors, of what a good, consistent Greek he had been, always obedient to the commands of his spiritual fathers, etc., etc.; but his (the bishop's) heart was grieved to learn that he had left his religion and gone over to the children of Satan. Would he not consider a proposition to return to the Greek Church, and use his influence to bring with him all the Protestants of the place? If he would do so, he would give him five thousand piastres ($220).

Our helper replied that he had left the Greek Church because he felt that he could not consistently remain and obey all that it required of its members; that he was happy serving God in his present humble way, and he felt that to do as the bishop requested would be to sin against the Spirit. The bishop tried all that persuasion could do to convince him that he was wrong; but when he saw that all was useless, he changed his tone and began to threaten. He stormed and cursed. By this time the greater part of the villagers had gathered. The bishop called upon them to hear, and pronounced the excommunication and curses of the church upon this "imp of Satan." When this was completed, he gave our helper twenty-four hours to leave the village; and if he did not, he (the bishop) would "fix things with the governor of Hamath that he be put in prison as a bad man."

The bishop felt determined to exterminate Protestants from this village, root and branch. But God watches over His own. When the bishop returned to Hamath, he was made to accompany officers to the seat of government to answer for putting up a bell on the Greek church without having first obtained permission. He had presumed too much upon the friendship of the governor, and did without permission what his predecessors had asked for again and again. The governor was very angry, and ordered the bell taken down. It is said the majority of the Greek sect were provoked with the bishop to give the government a chance to persecute them, and telegraphed to the patriarch to have him removed. In the excitement of the time the Maharadi matter was forgotten.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE TARES.

By Rev. J. Sabine Wright.

The Word for the Inner Circle—Tares Different from Wheat in Nature—Why Satan Plants Them—They Check the Growth of the Wheat—Bring it Into Disrepute—In the Churches, not Outside—Their Characteristics—Outward Resemblance to Wheat—Must Continue Till Christ Comes—The Separation Before the Millennium—The Post-Millennial Judgment—How to Treat the Tares.

THE subject is found in Matthew 13:24. The parable is divided into two parts. The former portion was spoken to "great multitudes," on the shore, and contains such an exhibition of the subject as was needed by those who had no (spiritual) eyes to see, like these which Christ could pronounce "blessed." The more enlightened disciples are called "into the house," where alone they hear the latter part of the parable. The kingdom of heaven means the heavenly reign which God was about to inaugurate by the Son of God, who came from heaven. All other governments are earthly; and even the kingdom of David was not heavenly. It had an earthly sovereign, and all its enactments were made to correspond. It had earthly promises and threatenings. Its subjects were an earthly people, and hence Jesus said of the Jews, (John 8:23,) "Ye are of this world." They were of a kingdom on the earth. His kingdom is not of this world. To its subjects, He said, "Ye are not of the world." Though now the Jews would reject them—would crucify their King—He was giving life to spiritual subjects, and spiritual doctrines, and will return to establish over the earth, as soon as He has, mediatorially, prepared the place for His people—prepared the barn for the housing of the wheat in harvest.

The Heavenly Reign

In the parable of the sower, Satan did mischief in three out of the four parts of the hearers of the kingdom; but he does not there appear to act on those who brought forth good fruit. But in this second parable our Saviour teaches the multitudes about the enemy's designs of evil concerning those also. He warns the people against the error of supposing that the mere approval of His words would constitute them members of the kingdom of heaven, and secure their salvation. They must be living offspring—real wheat. Further, the Lord shows that while men slept, during the inexcusable unwatchfulness of the early children of His kingdom, Satan artfully constrains

Worldly Professors

to mix themselves with genuine disciples in the field—tares among the wheat. We are told that, having secretly done this, he went his way. No one at first suspected it; the act does not appear to the servants of the household at first to be the act of Satan. He put those who knew not God amongst those who do; and made it appear as if the same hand had sowed both wheat and tares. The devil is always seeking to dishonor Christ, by counterfeiting God's work. Thus there are some who "climb up some other way;" men that speak perverse things, to draw disciples after them; those who are seeking to sustain a religion which will please the flesh. Those, too, who creep in unawares; men like Cain, who seek to claim God's favor through the offering of mere human works or fruits; men like Balaam, who can be bought for money; or like Korah, who would usurp to themselves the priestly character which belongs only to those whom faith guides with Christ into the holy place to present spiritual sacrifices. There are Many Kinds of Tares.

But these all profess to be in the kingdom of heaven, and hence such phrases as Christendom; i. e. Christ's kingdom. The state of the field as afterwards discovered by the servants of the householder, will continue to the end of the age. The wheat will always be wheat, and nothing but wheat. The enemy cannot change its nature, although he may damage its growth. The tares continue tares, and nothing but tares, although among the wheat. Their position does not alter their character or nature. They call Christ, Lord, Lord, but He knows them not. By name they would be acknowledged Christians, but in heart they are assimilated to the enemy. God has His wheat, and Satan has his. But in the day of burning, the separation will consign the false wheat to the fire.

Such characters soon appeared when the blade of good seed had sprung up and brought forth fruit of faith in the first season of the operation of the heavenly Man, as the "head of His body, the Church." Alas! are not tares now too numerous in the world? The outwardly wicked are not tares, if they make no profession of Christ. Life in a risen Saviour alone produces the real wheat; this only He approves of, to put into the field as His own. The bare assent to the truth—the mere intellectual understanding of the words of Christ—the profession only, of any form of sound words—the nominal membership of the Church on earth—the upright life of the unregenerate—the zealous advocacy and consistent support of religion—all, all this—if this be all—will leave men bound "in bundles," with no escape from coming judgment.

The purpose and object of the Saviour in the parable of the Tares evidently was not to call attention so much to the wheat, as to warn the Church against false professors. Tares are mostly understood to mean darnel, a kind of grass growing in the East, much but which is really a noxious weed. The darnel of the enemy externally resembles the members of the kingdom of heaven; some of them are in sheep's clothing, but inwardly to use Scripture language, they are ravening wolves, whose lips confess Christ, while their hearts are far from Him (Matt. 7:15).

Like Wheat in Appearance,

The tares represent the ecclesiastical apostacy which is thus by Christ foretold, and afterwards by His apostles. They are the who are chiefly in the churches, but never in the Church of Jesus Christ. It is proved that Satan cannot constitute his children members of the reign of the heavens; and the utmost that he can do is to mix them, by profession, with the children of the kingdom. They are found in all portions of the professed body of Christ, as seen in the unfaithful state of separation from each other; leaning towards something external to the real bond of unity—the resurrection life of Jesus. This sad fact is recognized by every community of Christians. In some religious associations the system of being admitted on trial is practised in order to keep their communion as free as possible of those who are only tares. And in almost all churches this principle is more or less acted on with the same object. All the ministers of Christ are witnesses to the mournful truth that tares are growing abundantly amongst the wheat. This state of things will continue. There is not the least shadow of a hope held out in the Scriptures that it will be otherwise until the "end of the age" (aion). In the true Church of Christ the real wheat will also continue to grow and increase till the coming of the Son of man in the time of harvest; but side by side will "evil men wax worse and worse deceiving and being deceived."

Mock Professors

But this subject has a future as well as a present fulfilment. There will be a class at the End of the Age

who will remain for condemnation, after those who are alive and remain shall be "caught up (with the resurrection saints) to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thess. 4:17). These will join themselves to Antichrist, and must needs be "gathered out from Christ's kingdom" (Matt. 12:41), and be cast into a lake of fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. This judgment will be executed at this time only on those who are, and have up to this, continued alive upon earth, and are, or were, professedly in the kingdom or dominion, over which Christ is to reign. After the martyred saints have been raised (Rev. 10, 1–7), the rest of the dead will not be raised till the thousand years of Satan's temporary punishment expire. So the judgment at the end of the world (age) will be only on the living sinners. All who merely profess to be the people of God, whether Jew or Gentile, will then be destroyed from amongst the people except they meet the Lord in the air, or find mercy in the midst of judgment. At the end of the thousand years, the dead both small and great shall stand before God, before the great white throne, and receive the sentence of a second death, because their names were not written in the Book of Life. Their works cannot save them, and they had refused to be saved through faith. Thus, all who reject Christ will meet a certain doom, too fearful to contemplate!

This parable further teaches that the Church should not persecute. We Must Let the Tares Alone.

We are forbidden to use harsh measures with anyone whose religion we may suspect to be not genuine. "Let them alone," are the words of Christ. We must not gather them up, nor seek to disturb them in the field, however false they are. By taking an opposite course we may be found to fight against God. But, if the children of the wicked one be amongst the children of the kingdom, in their assemblies, let it not be the result of persuasion or encouragement on the part of the Church. The enemy will do this.

Lastly, this parable teaches that God has not commissioned the Church to be a magistrate for the world. "Let both grow together." The evil is not to be rooted up by the servants of the householder—the angels—much less by the children of the kingdom. The seat of ruler and judge is not the place for the Church. Evil will be judged, "when the Lord comes," and we must patiently wait till then (1 Cor. 4:5; see also chap. 5, 10–13). The Church may judge its own children, but not "them also that are without." The wicked person, when found out, must be put away from the Christian assembly: but them that are without (outside) God judgeth.

Our character is to be that of the humble servant; our life a pilgrimage; our place one of subjection; our example one of holiness and obedience to Christ; our theme the Gospel of salvation; our pleasures, those which arise from things unseen; our hope, the coming of the Bridegroom. It will be time enough to "be great in the kingdom of heaven." It will be enough to hear the "well done" of the Lord, so that the absence of the praise of men need not trouble us. We must not seek our portion in this life; for whilst the tares are being cast into the furnace, the righteous will shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of the father. "Who hath ears to hear let him hear."

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller,

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents; always payable in advance. Single copies for sale by, or can be ordered at, all newsdealers'.

New Subscriptions can commence at any time. When no date is mentioned, we begin them with the issue of the week in which the subscription is received.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheques, or drafts or express money order, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. If currency or postage stamps are sent, it should always be in a registered letter. Letters can be registered at any office. Subscribers sending postal notes or currency and not registering, do it at their own risk.

Renewals can be sent any time previous to date of expiry, and the time will be added to that to which the subscriber is already entitled. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed.

Notice of Expiration of subscription is always sent in addition to the date being given on the address label. When not renewed by date of expiration the paper is stopped; no notice from the subscriber being required.

Receipts are not sent, the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that his remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please advise us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Mistakes are sure to arise occasionally, which we will gladly put right on having our attention drawn to them. Please do not allow any error to pass without complaint.

Change of Address. Name of Post Office and State, of both old and new address, should always be given in case of removal.

A year's subscription sent now secures the paper to the end of 1888. The remainder of this year is included free.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Proclamation Issued by the President on Thursday last announced the ratification of a convention with the government of Hawaii. It provides for an extention for seven years of the present privileges enjoyed by the United States, and at the conclusion of that period a further extension from year to year, until one of the two governments gives a year's notice of its desire to terminate the treaty. One of the articles gives to the United States the exclusive right of entrance to Pearl River, sanctions the establishment of a coaling station there, and permission to improve the harbor. It is stated that the President does not intend to take advantage of this latter concession, though it would obviously be valuable to the country. Treaties for the extension of postal facilities similar to that arranged with Mexico, are under negotiation with the governments of Central and South America and the West Indies. The object of these treaties is to develop trade through the post office by affording opportunity for prepayment of duties and for the transmission of parcels of increased weight. The treaty with the Governor of Barbadoes was signed on November 10, and others are expected to be ready for ratification by the Senate early in the ensuing session.

The Lessons of the New York Elections will doubtless be carefully studied by the politicians, and they are worth studying. Though it was what is called "an off year," the abuse of candidates and their sponsors was more voluminous and acrimonious than usual, and, apparently, it had not the slightest influence on the result. Editors called each other Judas and Ananias, and used a variety of opprobrious epithets which may have relieved their own minds, but were certainly neither dignified nor edifying. Nor did Mayor Hewitt do credit to himself. He somewhat gushingly vouched for one of the candidates as a man of "simple Christian life," though the candidate himself did not deny that he had incurred gambling debts, a fact which reveals deplorable ignorance of Christianity on the Mayor's part; and other persons in prominent positions did not improve their reputation by their conduct. The success of the entire Democratic ticket was assured by the agreement between the County Democracy and Tammany Hall, and it fully equalled the expectation the Democratic managers formed of it. Col. Grant, to the general surprise, ran somewhat behind his ticket. The George vote showed a decided decrease, being only about 72,000 in the whole State, and 37,000 in the city; while last year it was 68,000 in the city only. This is remarkable, and a singular feature of it was, that it seems to have been drawn from the Republican ranks as much, or more, than from the Democrats. The Prohibition vote showed a marked increase throughout the State. It is estimated at from 40,000 to 45,000, while last year it was 36,437, and in 1883 only 18,816. The Republicans will still control the Legislature having a majority of ten in the Senate and sixteen in the Assembly—twenty-six on joint ballot. It will, therefore, rest with that party to decide the Temperance and Sabbath Observance questions, which are to come before the Legislature.

In Other States the Results of the Election, have a national importance, Ohio went Republican by an increased majority. It is noticed, however, that the sentiment in favor of Governor Foraker, who was re-elected, is operating to the disadvantage of Senator Sherman. Disinterested observers in that State now assert that the nomination of Foraker for President next year, would be more welcome in Ohio than the nomination of either Sherman or Blaine. In Maryland, in spite of the revolt in the Democratic ranks, the ticket of that party was successful, which is a surprise to those who predicted a Republican victory, as the result of the revolt. In Pennsylvania the Republican State ticket was elected, the plurality being over 32,000. In Virginia the result is likely to have a national importance, as the Democrats will now control the Legislature and choose a successor to Senator Riddleberger.

The Execution of the Chicago Anarchist on Friday last puts an end to the long struggle over their case which has covered eighteen months. Governor Oglesby was besieged with petitions for the commutation of their sentence and gave courteous and attentive hearing to the advocates of the condemned men. He would evidently have been glad to commute the sentence on all of them but could not do so conscientiously. There were some mitigating circumstances in the cases of Fielden and Schwab, and as they had asked for executive clemency the Governor commuted their sentence to imprisonment for life. Spies, the editor who had sent a similar petition, the Governor declined to admit to the same favor. As to Lingg, Parsons, Fischer and Engel, as they did not ask for mercy, but declared that they were innocent of crime, and would not accept anything but a free pardon, the Governor being personally convinced of their guilt had no alternative but to let the law take its course. Lingg, however, in whose cell four dynamite bombs were discovered on November 6, succeeded in procuring a dynamite cartridge which, on Thursday, he put in his mouth and exploded. It failed of his purpose in securing him instant and painless death. He died after suffering horribly for some hours, learning by personal experience what the agonies were of the victims of the Haymarket outrage. The other four met death at the hands of the executioner on the day appointed. They displayed considerable bravado, probably being aware that their words and acts would be fully reported in the newspapers and would, if defiant, insure the applause of their friends.

The Crown Prince of Germany is again Pronounced in a critical condition. Another growth has appeared in his throat, and this, it is believed by some of his physicians, is cancerous. It is certainly more malignant than those which Dr. Mackenzie has previously removed. A slight swelling in the throat prevented a thorough examination, but the fact of the growth reappearing at all is believed to be incontrovertible evidence that the disease is cancer. The German physicians are loud in their protests against Dr. Mackenzie's mode of treatment; they contend that an operation ought to have been performed months ago. That opinion was expressed at the time, but Dr. Mackenzie believed that an operation such as was recommended by the German doctors would certainly destroy the Prince's voice, and, probably, his life. In that respect the case is no worse now. A slight operation, similar to those already performed, will be made, and the particles removed will be submitted to Prof. Virchow for microscopic examination. The prevalent opinion among the physicians, however, is, that the growth is surely cancer, and that the Prince's recovery is hopeless. This, if it prove true, increases the gloom in the European outlook. The Prince's son, who will be the next heir to the throne, favors an aggressive policy, and is less peaceable.

The English Premier's Speech at the Lord Mayor's banquet, on November 9, was of a reassuring character in its references to foreign affairs. Lord Salisbury admitted that political uneasiness existed in Europe, but said that he knew of nothing that would justify alarm. In view of the competition in forming great armaments it was idle to suppose that peace would be for ever maintained, but every present ruler —monarch, president or minister—earnestly desired peace. He said that the agreement with Russia regarding the Afghan frontier, which had been accepted by the Ameer, removed the danger to the world's peace in those quarters. It had also been the good fortune of the Government to make an arrangement with France concerning the New Hebrides difficulty and to come to an understanding with regard to some vexed questions affecting the Suez Canal. He announced that Ayoub Khan had surrendered to the Indian government. He had good hopes of adjusting the difficulty with America upon the ancient fishery dispute. The task had been undertaken with great patriotism by one of the most eminent statesmen of the day, a statesman who went to his work with the almost unanimous good-will of his countrymen, who trusted that the result might be to prevent differences from arising again.

The French Officials Implicated in the Sale of decorations were placed on trial before a civil tribunal last week. General Caffarel admitted his pecuniary embarrassments. He said they were caused by speculations on the Bourse, and had involved the dissipation of his large private fortunes. Being asked why he had recommended Gaillard, a brandy merchant, for the honor of decoration, and whether it was not arranged between them that if Gaillard received the ribbon of the Legion of Honor that he would pay Caffarel's debts, the General evaded the question. He simply said Gaillard was his good friend. The General maintained with energy, under a searching examination, that his object in obliging Mme. Limouzin in recommending the claims of her friends for decoration was to obtain her aid in discounting his bills, and that he never counted upon any direct money transaction. A thorough investigation of the relations to the scandal of M. Wilson, President Grévy's son-in-law, is to be made. Grave suspicions against him have been caused by his production of certain letters which purported to have been written in 1884. The defence contended that the letters were not the originals but altered copies. This M. Wilson denied, but he was confronted by the fact that the paper on which the letters were written was not made until 1885, as the date of manufacture was registered in the water-mark. As President Grévy is identified very closely with his son-in-law, his resignation is regarded as inevitable.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

Enthusiastic Meetings at Berachah Mission, New York, were held on November 5, 6, and 7, to celebrate the second anniversary of the mission. They were held in the new building, 463 West Thirty-second Street, New York, a picture of which appeared in this journal on August 4. On Saturday November 5, ministers and Christian workers were invited, and a large meeting was held. After addresses of congratulation and counsel, the friends were entertained in the basement at a generous repast provided by the hospitable founders of the mission, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Naylor. Early on Sunday morning a service was held on one of the Wilson line steamers in the North River. The Berachah Mission Services have been much blessed to officers and men of this line. Preaching and Communion Service at the mission followed, and there was an out-door service in the evening, preparatory to the usual gospel meeting. Monday was converts' day, and it was thoroughly appreciated. The hearts of the founders, managers, and workers were gladdened by the thrilling testimonies given by men and women whose lives had been transformed by God's blessing on the work of the mission. Last year's record shows a total of 1040 meetings, and an aggregate attendance of over 235,000. Eight hundred persons have presented themselves as seekers after God at the various meetings, and 380 have made a profession of faith. A Free Dispensary has been established in the building, conducted by the International Medical Missionary Society, and has done much good among the sick poor of the neighborhood. Mr. and Mrs. Naylor are arranging to add to the mission other departments of Christian usefulness, the necessity for which, the work of the past two years has revealed.

The Resignation by Dr. McCosh of the Presidency of Princeton University, was presented at the meeting of the Board of Trustees on November 10. "For several years," he said, "I have been sensitive as to whether I may not be continuing in my office to the detriment of the college. I am so far relieved by finding that no such effect has yet followed. Our entrance this year—179—is much larger than ever it was before, as is also our total number of students—603. It was 264 when I came here, and this while we have been gradually raising our standard of entrance and of scholarship. Thanks to God, and, under Him, to the Trustees, the Faculty, the liberal friends of the college, the graduates who have been working for us, and the students who have stood by me to the last, I leave the college in a healthy state, intellectually, morally and religiously." The resignation, if accepted, will not take effect until February, and it is hoped that Dr. McCosh will be persuaded, if relieved of the duties of the Presidency, to continue his services in the chair of Philosophy. He is seventy-six years of age, has been at Princeton nearly twenty years, and the university is very reluctant to lose him. He is one of the most learned men we have, and probably the ablest logician in the country, if not in the world.

A Number of English Baptist Clergymen are reported by cable to be following Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's example, and withdrawing from the Baptist Union. The names reported are those of his personal friends, or ministers who were students in his college; but other ministers are said to sympathize with him and to be desirous of placing themselves on record as adherents of the Orthodox theology. Among the names reported by cable are the Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Croydon, a son of the great preacher; the Rev. Archibald Brown of the East London Tabernacle; the Rev. Mr. Davies, of Brighton, and the Rev. Mr. Burton, of Dalston.

Lured to Death by Liberty's Light would be a suitable epitaph for the hundreds of beautiful birds which are found dead every morning in the gallery surrounding the torch of the statue in the bay of New York. Since the season of migration commenced the brilliant cluster of electric lights which the statue of Liberty holds in its uplifted hand has been the cause of death to many thousands of these winged travellers. On one morning recently thirteen hundred and seventy-five downy little dead bodies were picked up in the gallery all of which had perished in one night. Some of them were of exquisite plumage and they included every variety, from the brilliant little humming bird one inch long to the Canadian woodpecker measuring thirteen inches across the wings. It is supposed that the light, which is visible for forty miles, first attracted the birds in their flight southward, and as they drew nearer blinded them, so that they struck against the brazen hand and breasts of the statue and fell dead. One cannot but feel pity for the poor little creatures, but no one would advocate extinguishing the light on their account. It is not only a great ornament to the Bay, but it serves as a beacon to mariners far out at sea. Thus the statue of Liberty is at the same time a preserver and a destroyer of life, and liberty itself has been so too. Men who have sought spiritual liberty unwisely, and for evil ends have fallen victims while those who have sought the liberty with which Christ makes His people free have found life eternal. Even the gospel which brings life to some, brings condemnation to others. (2. Cor. 2 : 16), Significant Floral Emblems were Displayed at a betrothal reception in Philadelphia a few days ago. The gentleman is a brigadier-general in the United States Army and his affianced bride is a member of the Red Cross Society. At the reception given in their honor the house was brilliantly illuminated from top to bottom, and the floral decorations which adorned the entrances to the rooms, the chandeliers and crimson drapings were rich and beautiful. Suspended from the damask curtains in the front of the parlor and surrounded by a floral wreath were the initials of the pair, the first being of red carnations, with the shoulder stap of a brigadier-general, made of flowers in blue and white for the centrepiece, while the second was made of blue violets, with the emblems of the Royal Order of the Red Cross in the centre of it, the degree having been conferred upon the lady by Queen Victoria, The union of the two emblems was appropriate to the respective missions of the betrothed persons, and it was also typical of the united functions of Christ's bride, the Church. The war on the evil and wickedness which she must wage is accompanied by the love and tenderness with which she must compassionate the sinner and lead him to Christ for healing (Gal. 6 : 1, 2).

Complaints About a Weather Vane on the top of the Post Office, New York, gave the custodian of the building some trouble last week. There are three other weather vanes in sight from that point and the custodian's attention was called to the fact that they were pointing in different directions while that on the Post Office was obviously wrong. An examination was made and it was found that the big dart which shows the way of the wind was moving easily and answering its purpose with accuracy, but the four arrows below which should be directed to the four points of the compass were a long way from being true. The aberration was due to the shifting of the pole on which the vane is fixed. It had partly turned around in its socket under the influence of the wind and the iron clamps which should have held it in place were twisted. Considerable difficulty was experienced in getting the huge pole in place. Upon the roof, the iron balcony and iron girders deflected the needle of the compass which the custodian took up to get the accurate bearings, and when that obstacle was overcome, it was some time before the pole could be twisted around in its socket and securely fixed. Now, the custodian claims that the vane is true in both its functions; it shows which way the wind is blowing and also the exact points of the compass. That is as it should be, and it is much to be wished that as much could be said for our public teachers of religion. In many cases they have veered with the wind of human error and their hearers are in doubt about the immutable truths of God's word (Eph. 4 : 14, 15).

A Daring Rescue at Sea Was Achieved by the officers and crew of the German ship Camelia on November 2. "On that morning," says the Captain, who arrived in New York with his ship last Thursday, "a hurricane struck us, and we laid to under main and fore topsails. The seas were very high. About noon we sighted a brig about a mile to windward, evidently in distress. We ran toward her as well as we could, and when within half a mile of her, as the vessels rose and sunk on the waves, I called for volunteers, and the second mate and four sailors came forward. After several hairbreadth escapes they succeeded in reaching the vessel, and took off five of the crew. The next trip they rescued the remaining four. The brig had weathered the hurricane for forty-eight hours, and had lost her mainmast, bowsprit, and jibboom. Seas had swept her from stem to stern, and had carried away both of her boats. She had started several seams, and had four feet of water in her hold. The crew reported that she would not have lasted four hours longer. What would have been thought of the men on the sinking vessel if they had refused to enter the boat which the brave rescuers had taken to them at the risk of their lives? Yet, that is precisely what sinners do who neglect the great salvation which Christ laid down His life that they might have (Heb. 2 : 3).

BRIEF NOTES.

Dr. W. W. Scudder has accepted the Professorship of Theology in the new Theological Seminary in India.

The Methodists of Sioux City have erected a church in the suburbs, which is called the "Haddock Memorial," in memory of the martyr to Prohibition.

Rev. George Jacoby askes us to state that he is ready to accept calls for Evangelical work. His address is 1122 Savery Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Bowery Village Methodist Episcopal Church, in Seventh Street, New York, between Second and Third Avenues, celebrated its one hundred and first anniversary last Sunday. Services are being held every evening this week, conducted by ministers of various denominations.

The National Convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, announced in a previous number of this journal, is now in session at Nashville, Tenn. Among the speakers is a distinguished lady from India, Pundita Ramabai, a high caste Hindoo. The Bible readings are conducted by Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith.

The Rev. Jacob Freshman has just returned from Chicago, where he has recently established a branch of his Hebrew-Christian work. While in that city he addressed large audiences in the various evangelical churches. A converted Hebrew, now a student in a theological seminary in Chicago, but who formerly attended Mr. Freshman's services in this city will conduct this new mission.

Mr. E. P. Telford's services at Dr. Hamilton's church, Somerville, Mass., close to-day. Much good has been done. At the services last Sunday, the number who asked the prayers of the church was remarkable. Among them were persons of all conditions of life and all ages, from the boy of twelve to the hoary man of seventy. Next Sunday Mr. Telford commences services at Fall River. On Wednesday of last week he attended the convention of Christian Workers in Philadelphia, and delivered an address on "Conditions of Soul-Winning."

The New York Missionary Training College, of which Rev. A. B. Simpson is President, is now open for the admission of students. This is its fifth session. It offers increased facilities for a thorough literary and theological training undenominational in character. Five Professors superintend the studies and give regular lectures. Tuition is free, and students can receive board at $4 per week. Students may be admitted at any time. Further particulars may be obtained from the Secretary, Rev. A. E. Funk, 254 West Fifty-fifth Street, New York.

Bishop Riley gratefully acknowledges the sum of $306, received during the month of October from readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the work in Mexico. Also $20 from a friend in Canada. The monthly subscription list now amounts to over $60. Who will help to bring it up to $100?

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, women or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

THE WORK AND THE WORKER.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"But the salvation of the righteous is of the Lord" Ps. 37 : 39.

A Blessing Peculiar to the Righteous—Mistakes About it—When it will be Full—I. The Essence of Sound Doctrine—The Lord's Work in Planning—In Providing—In Applying—An Awkward Kind of Salvation—II. A Necessary Fact—Because of Inward Conflict—Outward Temptation—III. A Sweet Consolation—IV. A Reason for Humility—V. A Ground of Hope.

SALVATION is a blessing peculiar to the righteous. The ungodly do not, as a rule, believe that they have any need of salvation; therefore they do not desire it, or seek after it. The righteous know that they are born in a fallen state; they acknowledge that they have destroyed themselves by personal sin; and they are conscious of a thousand dangers which surround them. Hence they need salvation, and seek it, and find it. It is to them that salvation has come to make them righteous, for until they are saved they are unrighteous, even as others; but now that salvation has come to their house, they bring forth the fruits of righteousness to the glory of God their Saviour. Beloved friends, we rejoice in

That Right Royal Word

"salvation." We would let its echo fly over the whole world. To us it is a word of great meaning. It does not signify alone salvation from the punishment of sin, though it comprehends that blessing, and we are glad that it does so; but it means complete and immediate salvation from the love of sin, conscious salvation from the power of sin, growing salvation from the propensity to sin, and ultimate salvation from all tendency to sin. When we have gained full salvation, we shall never, never sin again, but shall find ourselves before the throne of God as pure as that throne, made perfect by the work of the Holy Spirit, who will have sanctified us wholly, spirit, soul and body.

Men of the world think, when we talk of salvation, that we mean escaping from hell; this is all they would fear, and so it strikes them as the great matter; but we are not of their mind. Being delivered from the pains and penalties of evil is certainly a great boon, but it is by no means the greatest; it follows in the train of a grander blessing, even as the blaze of the comet follows the central light. The righteous dread sin more than hell, and wrong is more terrible to them than any punishment which awaits it. The joy of salvation to us is that we are delivered from this present evil world, delivered from the lusts of the flesh, delivered from the old death of natural corruption, delivered from the power of Satan, and from the dominion of evil. Our salvation will not be full till we are totally and finally delivered from every trace of sin, and are "without fault before the throne of God." Sanctification completed is our salvation perfected; purity without spot will be our Paradise Regained.

I am going to speak at this time upon our text as a statement by itself. It is complete and self-contained. It is a diamond of the first water. Its words are few, but its sense is precious. "The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord." I. Our first head is:

This is the Essence of sound doctrine. "The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord." More or less I hope that all who preach Christ crucified would subscribe to this; but some are a little afraid of it in all its breadth and length. They must bring in man a little. They must have him do something, or be something. They are always afraid lest grace should be misunderstood, and should be turned into licentiousness; and, truly, I share in their fear, though I would not use their way of preventing the evil which I dread. There will be no hesitancy on my part when I say that "the salvation of the righteous is of the Lord"; neither will you find me guarding the statement as if I thought it a lump of spiritual dynamite which might do infinite damage.

"The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord" in the planning. And as it is of the Lord in the planning, so it is of the Lord in the providing. It was He who gave his Son from His bosom, and truly our Lord Jesus Christ is the full purchase-price of our salvation. We do not add a penny to it.

The Mortgage Upon Humanity

was paid off by Christ Jesus to the last farthing, without any contribution on our part to eke out the matchless price. The Spirit of God, who is another great item in the provision of salvation, is of the Lord. God has given us the Spirit. The Holy Ghost comes, not according to our mind or will, but according to the gift and purpose of the Lord. Nothing is lacking for the salvation of men. God has provided all. The work is finished, and from top to bottom salvation is of the Lord.

So, dear friends, it is of the Lord in the applying. The first application of the blessings of the covenant to us is of God. Of course, that first application is in regeneration, when the soul first begins to live. The first sense of need of mercy springs, not from nature, but is a work of grace. The first desire we have to be right, the first prayer we breathe towards God—all this is the movement of eternal grace upon our souls, which else would have lain as dead as the corpses in their graves. The Lord first deals with us before we have any inclination whatsoever to deal with Him. We do not see this truth at first. Possibly we discover it months after our conversion, when we come to sit down, and look over our experience.

As salvation is of the Lord at the commencement, so it is as to the carrying of it on. Rest assured, beloved, there is no except that which is of the Lord. Nay, there is no sustaining the position to which you have reached except by the Lord. He has wrought all our works in us, and if we have produced any fruit to the honor of His name, from Him has our fruit come, for our Lord truly said, "Without Me ye can do nothing." We must give Him all the glory, for certainly He has given us all the grace: and as it has been, so will it be. We are dependent as much upon grace for spiritual life as we are upon the air we breathe for this natural life. Take the atmosphere from us; put us under an exhausted receiver, and we die; take Thy grace from us, O our God, and we perish at once! What else could happen to us?

True Growth in Grace

Some one said to me the other day, "I do not quite know about that doctrine of final perseverance whether it is true or not." So I said to him, "What kind of life does Jesus Christ give His sheep?" He answered very correctly—"He has said, 'I give unto My sheep eternal life.'" Very well, does not that settle it?

Death is Out of the Question.

I must live if I am one of those of whom the Great Shepherd says, "I give unto My sheep eternal life." But what is next? If you cannot quite see the truth from that one expression, what follows? Will the sheep of Christ ever perish? Here is His answer: "They shall never perish." Does not that secure them? What language could better describe their security? But another question is raised—May it not mean that, if they get away from the Lord Jesus, they shall perish? Then comes the next sentence—"Neither shall any pluck them out of My hand." Does not that answer it? Oh, but perhaps the Saviour might fail! We think not so: but listen again: "My Father, which gave them Me, is greater than all, and no man can pluck them out of My Father's hand."

That is the awkward point about a salvation which is of man; it is worth nothing when you get it. We want an eternal salvation. We want a salvation which does really save. We want something which is not made up of "ifs," and "buts," and "peradventures," and "may be," and "if you do this," and "if you do that." We need sure, immutable, abiding, unchanging salvation; and this is what we get, and what we are not ashamed to preach, while we thunder out this truth, "The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord."

II. Secondly, this is not only the essence of sound doctrine, but this is A Necessary Fact.

"The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord." Assuredly it must be so, or else they will never be saved. Look for a moment, you that love the Lord, to your own inward conflicts. Beloved, we are not all alike, tossed to and fro with the uprising of inbred sin; but there are times with most of God's saints when they are hard put to it to withstand a certain raging temptation: they have to struggle hard to keep it down. And when they have mastered that evil, another form of sin comes on the sly, and attempts to stab them in the back. Thus you were beset behind and before; and had it not been the Lord that was on your side, you would have been quickly swallowed up. Some of us know the truth of this in our experience if the rest of you do not.

Salvation must be of the Lord with me, I know, or else my inward lusts, my proud spirit, my rebellious will, and my natural despondency will surely ruin me. Do you not feel it to be so with you? If God does not save you, you are a lost man. You must feel that. I know that those who have no conflicts sing another song, and praise themselves. Your who wear the regimentals of Christianity, but know nothing of battle with inbred sin, may talk about salvation by self, but he that is hard put to it to wrestle against all wrong-doing will tell another tale. He who grieves if he even utters a rash word, or allows an impure thought to cross his mind, feels that if God does not save him, saved he never can be; and he sees it to be a necessary fact that the salvation of the righteous must be of the Lord.

Carpet-Knights,

When you have looked within a sufficient time to convince you, just look at your outward temptations. Ah! we little know what many of our brethren and sisters have to endure in the form of temptation in their own houses from their own friends. Many have a very hard fight of it. I know some now present who will I believe persevere and hold on to the end, but almost every day they endure a martyrdom. Cruel words are spoken, and unkind actions are done, and a bitter spirit is shown towards them because they are the people of God. Salvation must be of the Lord to these poor persecuted ones, or they will faint under their oppressions.

Outside in the world, what temptations abound! You cannot engage in any business without finding that it has its Peculiar Sins.

Many things are done in the trade—many matters established by custom—which the scrupulously upright child of God cannot tolerate. He has to set his face against the general habit, and hence he has a battle. Need I go into particulars? Why, brethren, we are surrounded with snares! They are on table; you may readily sin there. They are in your secret chamber; you are tempted there. They are in the counting-house, and on the study-table. You cannot sit down to read a book without being in danger; you cannot go among the crowd without risk. If any believer remains steadfast in this day of philosophic doubt, verily, I say unto you, his salvation must be of the Lord. He cannot go through this Vanity Fair, he cannot pass through this horrible slough, this Stygian bog of modern society, and be pure in his heart, and lip, and life, unless God shall grant him his salvation.

We know, dear friends, that it must be so. It is a necessary fact, even if we only look at the contrary view. What professions some make, and how long they keep them up! We have said of such and such a man, "If he is not a child of God, who is?" We have even wished that our soul were in his soul's stead when we have heard him pray, and marked the impressive devotion of demeanor; and yet, we have lived to see the very person we admired rolling in filth, character gone, and hope gone. This happens in the church sadly often. Whenever we see it, we may truly feel that "the salvation of the righteous is of the Lord." If ever you see a Christian man, professedly so, suddenly disappear and melt away, you will say to yourself, "Ah! had it not been for grace divine it would have happened just the same to me, and my fellow-professors also."

The older we grow in the divine life, and the more earnestly we seek to exibit the character of a Christian, the more we shall feel that, if we had to go to this warfare at our own charges, it would be better for us that we had never been born. The life of many modern professors might be lived without supernatural help, but the life of a genuine Christian is a perpetual miracle, which could be wrought by none but the Lord God. True Christian life is produced by God Himself working mightily, even as when He made the world, or raised His Only-begotten Son from the dead. I say that this is a necessary fact, for there can be no salvation but that which is of the Lord.

III. In the third place, our text being true, that "salvation is of the Lord," this is for if my salvation is of the Lord, then I shall be saved. If it had been of anybody else, I should be lost. If man began, he might leave off before he had finished, for want of stores to go on with it, or because he had made a mistake, and changed his fickle mind; but when God begins, as surely as ever He opens the war, He will push on till He has won the victory. As surely as He lays the first stone, He will not withdraw His right hand till He has brought forth the top-stone, with shoutings of "Grace, grace unto it!"

A Sweet Consolation;

This grand fact comforts us partly by leading us to believe in prayer. If the salvation of the righteous is of the Lord, then, whenever we get into any great trouble, we go to Him, and cry, "O Lord, my salvation is of Thee! I have come to Thee for it." When strong temptation seems to catch us, like birds in a net, and we cannot break loose, then we cry, "O God, salvation is of Thee alone! Help me. Thou canst. I look to Thee for it!" When our soul lies dead, as it sometime does, like this heavy weather—when there is little sun to brighten us, or air to enliven us, we feel inactive, and cannot stir. Oh, then it is most blessed in prayer to feel "all my fresh springs are in Thee, my Lord! Thou canst quicken me.

When evidences are bright, you know where you are; but at such a time you could tell that without them. It is easy to tell the time of day by a sun-dial, but then the sun must be shining: and when I am at home, and can see the sun, I know whereabouts the sun is at twelve o'clock, and therefore I do not want the sun-dial to tell me the time. Evidences are exceedingly good things when you do not want them, and they are of very little use when you do. Evidences are clear but when Christ is present you do not want their help; and when Christ is not present, evidences fail to comfort you. It is better to live by a daily faith upon Christ than to live upon evidences. They most readily turn mouldy, and then they are most unwholesome food. Live upon Christ, who is the daily manna, and you will live well.

When Christ is Present:

You will be driven to such a life by the force of this blessed truth, that the salvation of the righteous, just as much as the salvation of the wicked, is of the Lord. A sinner cannot be saved by himself; neither can a righteous man. A sinner must look to the Lord for salvation; so much the righteous man. We are on one footing here—the rich saint as well as the poor sinner. Christ must be everything to one as well as to the other: and what a blessed thing it is that He is everything to us! Let us hourly make Him so.

IV. Fourthly, and very briefly, this doctrine is A Reason For Humility.

"The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord." Are you saved, my dear brother? And do you know it? Then all idea of pride must vanish, for it is clear that you did not save yourself. It is none of your doing. Above all, do not begin to censure others; and when you see a poor brother down—ay, when you see a child of God who has erred, and grossly sinned, do not begin censuring him in bitterness, and giving him over to despair. If you had been in his case, you might have done worse. Do I speak harshly? Any man who says, "If I had been in that brother's place I should have done better," is a fool. He does not know himself. The probabilities are that he would have done worse. Ah, Sir Pharisee! you—yes, oh yes, you are a wonder! Marvellous is your purity! Splendidly you act!

What a Paragon You Are!

If you were to see in God's light, you would see that you are a mass of corruption, smelling of pride. That is what you are. The man who begins to exult over his fallen brother is the likeliest man to fall himself. He who points at a rent in his brother's garment is in rags himself. If we have stood fast amid temptation, we may bless God that we have done so; but we must not find fault with others as though there was some good thing in ourselves.

So, dear friends, we shall have to sing to a grave, sweet melody as long as we are here, whenever we touch the matter that concerns ourselves. When we get to heaven, we shall see then much more than we do to-night that salvation is of the Lord. Mr. Bunyan represents his pilgrim as going through the Valley of the Shadow of Death, and even while he was in the darkness and horror of that defile he knew that he needed the Lord to help him. He felt that he had a terrible walk of it that night, when there was a bog on this side, and a quagmire on that, and hobgoblins and all sorts of horrid creatures all around: he knew that he needed divine aid. He held on his way, with his sword in his hand, and grasping the weapon of All-prayer, till at last he quitted that horrible place; and then he knew better than before how great was his necessity. He looked back when the morning rose, and till then he had not fully known what a place he had been traversing, and how great was the power which upheld him in his night-march. When we get to heaven, and look back upon our life below, we shall then see the wonders of delivering grace which at this time we do not fully appreciate.

V. I close with one more remark, and it is this: This text gives us

A Ground of Hope.

"The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord." Then I believe He will save me. I trust myself with Him, and thus I become righteous by faith; and, therefore, He will save me from my trouble and care. Brother, draw the same conclusion. Sister, draw the same conclusion. You are in a terrible condition just now. Everything has been going wrong. You do not know what to do. But "the salvation of the righteous is of the Lord." He will bring you through. You are in good hands. The Great Pilot knows the navigation of the river of life better than you do. You cannot see a channel for your boat; there are snags everywhere, or quicksands, or rocks, or shallows. He knows all about it. Rest. Trust. Wait. Commit your way unto the Lord. There is personal comfort in the fact that our salvation is of the Lord.

Next, this ought to give hope about seekers. I see some brethren and sisters before me whose lives are spent in trying to encourage poor erring souls to return unto the Lord. Sometimes you are balked and defeated. Well, "the salvation of the righteous is of the Lord." Surely, if the salvation of the righteous is to come from the Lord, much more must the salvation of poor seekers. Have hope about the vilest and worst of men. If there are any such here to-night, let them have hope, for if the Lord bids the righteous, in whom there is a measure of His grace, to look to Him for salvation, assuredly He bids you to do the same, for you have nothing of your own. If those who are righteous before God yet find their salvation in Him alone, where are you to look? You must look to the Lord also. Look to Jesus on the cross, and find salvation in Him; for the Lord Jesus redeemed with His precious blood all who trust in Him. O my dear hearer, come and cast yourself upon Him! "In due time Christ died for the ungodly:" so runs the word. Look to that wondrous death of the Son of God which redeems such as you are, and in your case too it shall be found that your salvation is of the Lord. May God bless you, and cause you to rejoice in His salvation!

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE LAST SIGH OF THE EXILE*

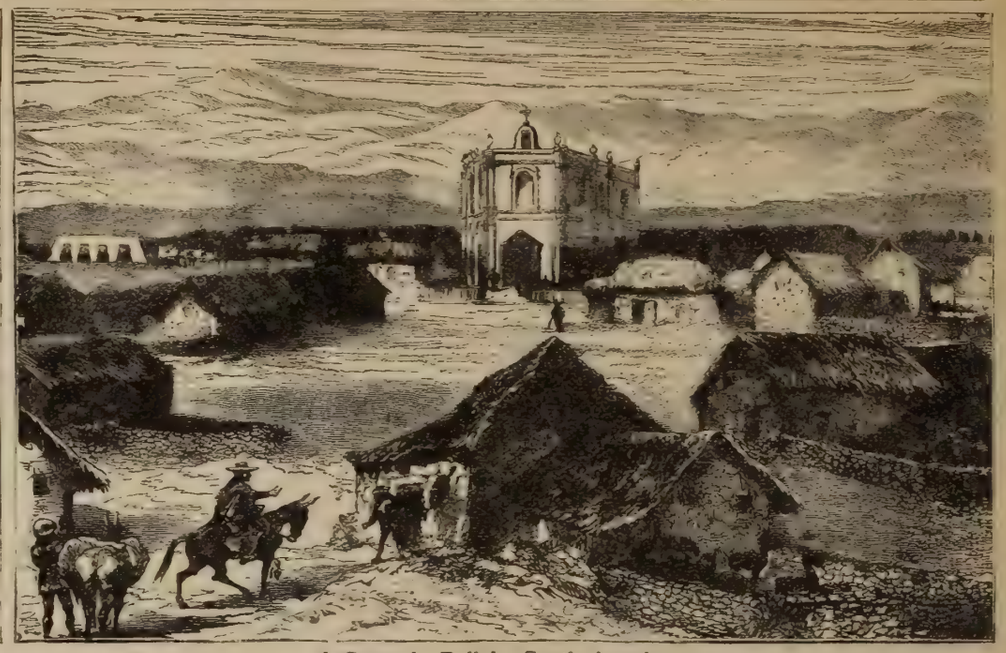
WHEN the armies of Ferninand and Isabella had overcome the heroic resistance of the Moors, and the fair city of Grenada had surrendered to its Christian conquerors, the long train of defeated warriors, with their wives and children, passed in silence from their lost home, and took their way through the mountain passes toward the land of banishment, they could not bear to look upon the triumph of their victors. They turned their backs upon the city, and marched with downcast eyes among the hills. But when they arrived at the eminence which commands the last view of Grenada, the historian tells us that they paused involuntarily to take a farewell gaze at their beloved capital, which a few steps more would shut from their sight forever. Never had it appeared so lovely in their eyes. The Moorish cavaliers gazed with a silent agony of tenderness and grief upon that delicious abode, the scene of their loves and pleasures. While they yet looked, a light cloud of smoke burst forth from the citadel, and presently a peal of artillery, faintly heard, told that the city was taken possession of, and the throne of the Moslem kings was lost forever. The heart of Boabdil, softened by misfortunes and overcharged with grief, could no longer contain itself. "Allah Achbar!" (God is great), he said; but the words of resignation died upon his lips, and he burst into tears. Even to this day that range of hills which commands the first and last prospect of Grenada, is known as "El Ultimo Suspiro del Moro" (the last sigh of the Moor).

The story is beautiful, but how much more pathetic and exquisite is the narrative which the forty-second psalm brings to mind; and how much better does the mountain side of Hermon deserve the name of "The Last Sigh!" For here, also, we see a band of exiles going forth, after a brave but vain resistance from their fallen city. Here, also, we trace their dejected wanderings along the steep and rocky road which led them away from all that they held dear into a strange and distant country. And here, at length, we see them pausing, perhaps at the close of a weary day's march, in the land beyond Jordan, on the first lofty ridge of the eastern mountains, and turning for a long, parting look at their beautiful and beloved Zion. Among these same hills their father, Jacob, had seen his great vision of the hosts of God. Here, also, from Pisgah's height, their deliverer, Moses, had first looked upon the bright and beckoning landscape of the promised land. But now that landscape, fair as ever, breathed a mute farewell. It was the last look at the home of their love, the citadel of their pride, the shrine of their devotion. Every eye was dim with unshed tears, and the well-remembered outlines of the scene trembled and wavered like the edges of a dream. There was mourning and wailing of young and

---

* From "The Story of the Psalms." By Rev. Henry Van Dyke, D. D., Jr. Pp. 259. Price, $1.50 Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway New York.

The Late Rev. N. Nielson.



A Scene in Bolivia, South America.

old, warriors and women, priests and princes—a cry went up like the confused lamentations of a household into which death has entered; and then, perhaps, when the wailing has died away a little, and the eyes of the people were feeding in silent hunger upon the vanishing scene, this sweet and plaintive song arose from the lips of some inspired minstrel, and floated out above the throng: "O my God, my soul is cast down within me: therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from the hill Mizar, ... I will say unto God, my rock, why has thou forgotten me? Why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?"

THE LATE REV. N. NIELSEN.

(See Portrait on this page).

THE eminently useful, devoted and courageous servant of Christ, whose portrait appears on this page, and whose long and beneficent life is now closed, was a man of so quiet and unassuming a character that the general public heard little of him; but he served One who knows all His servants, and is cognizant of all they do and suffer in His cause, His reward is certain. Niels Nielsen was a native of Denmark, where he was born at the little town of Galbjerg, on November 23, 1809, and died in his seventy-eighth year, at his homestead in Cloud county, Kansas, March 10, 1887. His father was a well-to-do farmer, whose seven children were trained in strict moral principles, and received a good secular education. His family belonged to the Lutheran Church and Niels received confirmation according to its rites in the year 1822, when he was thirteen years of age. Shortly afterward, through his father's death, the care of the farm and the support of his mother and five sisters devolved upon him and his brother, and right nobly did the two lads perform the duty.

As the years passed, an earnest desire to reach a higher and more practical realization of divine things took possession of young Nielsen and his brother. They attended some evangelistic services in their neighborhood, and at those meetings, when Niels was seventeen, he gave his heart to God. Persecution for conscience' sake began early in his Christian life, and in his experience was fulfilled Christ's saying, "A man's foes shall be those of his own household." His mother strongly disliked any departure from the orthodox faith, and so extreme was her displeasure with her sons for attending the services that she turned them both out of doors. The same opposition to them was manifested in the village, and they failed to obtain shelter even for one night. They were restored, however, and by a strange way. Their mother retired to rest, strong in her conviction of the righteousness of her harsh conduct; but in the night she had a remarkable dream. She thought her dead husband came to her bedside and upbraided her for her severity. The dream impressed her so deeply that she rose and went forth in the night to seek her boys, found them and took them back to their home. They prayed earnestly for her conversion. and, ultimately, their prayers were answered.

The next ten years of Niels Nielsen's life were years of remarkable activity. Farm-work occupied much of the day, but in the evenings and on Sundays he was indefatigable in holding meetings in private houses, barns, or wherever he was able. In 1838 his services being no longer necessary on his mother's farm, he removed to Zealand, where he continued laboring for Christ and supporting himself by the labor of his hands. In that year he married an earnest. sincere Christian lady, who proved a true helpmeet to him, encouraging him in his Christian work, and frequently herself performing farm duties that he might have more time for teaching and preaching. They joined the Baptist Church and entered thoroughly into the ways of usefulness of that denomination. Eventually, as the way opened. an ever-increasing blessing attended Mr. Nielson's labors; he was received into the regular ministry, and, in 1842, was publicly ordained at Hamburg.

Under the auspices of the German missionary Association, Mr. Nielson commenced the most arduous and dangerous work of his life. He made regular missionary tours throughout the whole of Denmark, with occasional trips to Sweden and Norway, Some of his journeys into the country districts were made on foot, and in the winter he would use an ice-cutter and cross to the islands off the Danish coast. More than once he nearly lost his life by falling through thin ice, and arrived at his destination with his clothing frozen solid upon him.

These labors entailed not only fatigue and danger from the severe climate, but brought him into conflict with the government. The orthodox clergy were indignant at the Baptist doctrines being preached in their parishes, and rightly concluding that Mr. Nielsen was doing more than any one else to propagate them, they induced king Christian VIII. to authorize a prosecution of the Baptist missionary. He was arrested, tried and condemned to pay a heavy fine which he was unable to pay; his property was seized and sold. He was also required to give a pledge that he would refrain from baptizing. He gave the pledge and resumed his work, relegating the duty of baptizing converts to some local brother. This was deemed by the authorities an evasion of the pledge, and he was again arrested, and ordered to pay a fine of $275. Before this was collected the king died, and his successor, Frederic VII., issued an edict of toleration, under which the fine was remitted.

Mr. Neilsen's family by this time had grown to nine children, six of whom—five sons and a daughter—had emigrated, one after another, to America. They urged him to join them here, assuring him that he would have abundant opportunities here for Christian work. Accordingly, in 1865, he, with his wife and three children, crossed the Atlantic, and the whole family was reunited on this side. His departure was a sore grief to his church, who not only urged him to stay with them, but after he had been here some time, sent him a most liberal offer, begging him to return to them. This, however, he did not accept, as he had become pastor of the first Scandinavian Church of Chicago, and was also working among Danish immigrants in that city.

After four years' labor, he removed, in 1869, to Cloud county, Kansas, having a strong desire, now that he was sixty years of age, to spend the remainder of his life in the midst of his family. But he had no intention of passing his time in idleness. There were many Danes in the neighborhood, and he was soon able to gather a little church together, and erect a church building. He continued to preach there regularly, and occasionally at four other churches in the neighborhood, which were established by the Baptist Home Missionary Society, until 1878, when the sturdy health of the veteran began to fail, and he retired from regular ministerial duty. He still, however, preached occasionally, as his strength permitted, until last year, when he was completely prostrated. He died in March last, having faithfully served his Master in his day and generation, joyful, and strong in faith to the last.

A SCENE IN BOLIVIA.

(See Illustration.)

THE Republic of Bolivia in South America presents the unique and disadvantageous feature of having no seaboard, and as its topographical character renders the construction of railroads almost an impossibility, its vast wealth does not give it the prosperity which it would have if it had facilities of transportation.

The silver mines at Potosi are practically inexhaustible, and gold is found in considerable quantities in the mountain ranges. The population is estimated at about two millions exclusive of a quarter of a million of wild Indians. Such religion as they have is Roman Catholic, but it exercises little influence over the people, and there is urgent need for systematic and earnest missionary work.

TOM'S GOOD NEWS.

(See Illustration.)

"Tom ain't at home, I see, Emma," said a short, stout, elderly woman, as she entered an extremely neat and clean room, where a younger woman sat sewing under the gaslight.

"No, mother," was the reply, "he went out just after supper to look after some of the men. His ship sails next Monday."

"Gone to the saloon, you mean. I know all about it. I always told you it was a bad lookout, you marrying a sailor. I guess you've found I was right."

"Tom's very good to me, mother. Nobody sha'n't say a word agin him. He's fond o' liquor and most sailors are that, but he ain't hard nor quarrelsome."

"Well, you made your own bed and you must lie on it. I don't blame you for stan'-ing up for your man. It's nateral. But don't you lie down and let him wipe his shoes on you. Let him see you've got some sperrit, and when he comes home full just you give it to him. You're a sight too easy."

Tom Welcomes Good Friends in a Time of Need.

Emma did not dispute the point; nothing was to be gained by arguing with her mother. She had no intention, however, of taking her advice. Whatever Tom might be, he was not likely to be improved by the treatment her mother recommended, and Emma knew it. Still, if Tom could be improved, what a blessing it would be! The gentle, patient, little woman who would not admit to any one else that Tom had his faults, cried over them in secret, and prayed day and night for the rough brute to whom she was so nobly loyal, hoping against hope for his reformation. She had been married only three years, and already her longing for Tom's ship to come in was tempered by the dread of his drinking bouts ashore. He was off on one now, she felt sure, and she cut her mother's visit short lest Tom should come in while she was there, and there should be a scene between him and "that spitfire," as he irreverently called his mother-in-law.

She sat sewing still, after her mother had gone, listening nervously for Tom's step. Oh! it is a sad and bitter thing that a wife should ever have reason for anything but joy in hearing the footfall of the man who has sworn to love and cherish her all his life. The tears that fell on Emma's work told a tale that was never told in words, though her mother was not the only one who suspected the truth. But Tom must not see she had been crying, and presently the brave little woman rose and washed her face, and was sitting down with a bright, cheery countenance when her husband opened the door. She stole a shy, timid glance at him as he entered, and he knew the meaning of it. Yes, he was sober to-night, but his conscience smote him. How many times he must have come home in a condition to cause fear, before his wife, who used to run to his arms, had got the habit of looking like that at him first!

"It's all right, to-night, my girl," he said, lovingly; "and, please God, it'll be all right from this on. Come and give me a kiss, Emma; I've brought you some news you'll like."

Emma needed no second invitation. She was coy once, and Tom used to have to beg for a kiss; but that was all past, and she was glad and thankful now if her caresses were not rejected. The invitation was doubly welcome.

"What is it, Tom? Have you been promoted?" she asked, seating herself on his knee, nestling in the embrace of his strong arm, and lovingly stroking his whiskered cheek.

"No, it ain't promotion; not in a sense," said Tom, thoughtfully. "Mebbe it'll lead to it, and I don't know but what you'll think it is promotion, too. Guess."

"Oh! don't tease. How can I guess?" said Emma, too glad of his affection to care much about his news.

"Well, I guess you'd hev to give it up, anyway; for it's about the onlikeliest thing under the sun. What 'dye think if y' heard I'd signed the pledge?"

"Oh, Tom! it ain't true. Don't fool me; it's too good to be true!"

"True it is," said Tom, stoutly; "and true it's goin' to continue, world without end, amen. What! crying? Well, I never! I thought you'd be glad."

"Glad ain't no name for it," said Emma; "Why, Tom, it's bliss, it's heaven! How did it happen?"

"Why, that's odd, too. We were all sitting in the old place to-night, when in walks a clergyman. Never saw a clergyman in that place before. Should not have been half so much surprised to see Satan himself come in. Well, we chaffed him a goodish bit, but he took it very well, and we left off when he said he'd come to invite us to supper. We went, you may be sure; and it was first-class, and plenty of it; but no drink. Well, after it was over, he began to talk quite friendly, though he was a real high-toned gentleman; but not a bit stand-offish. Well, the end was, he made us feel we were making fools of ourselves, and we, every one, signed the pledge. He was a smart man; he'd got the blanks ready in his pocket, as if he made sure he'd need 'em. That's all there is to it; only I'm a-going to hear him preach on Sunday."

"God bless him, Tom, whoever he is, and you, too; you've made me a happy woman to-night."

"That's right, my girl. Now, he made us promise we'd say a prayer when we got home, to ask God to help us hold on. I didn't object, though I ain't used to that sort o' thing, 'cause I knew you could do it, and we're one, ain't we? So now we'll do it, and I'll keep my promise."

Emma very gladly complied, for she knew that Tom would need God's help to resist the temptations of his life. She went with him, too, to church on Sunday, saw and heard Tom's friend, the clergyman, and silently invoked blessings on his head. Tom was to sail the next day, and she was a little anxious about how he would act when away from good influences. She went down to the slip and stood among the crowd looking at the ship, to see the last of him. It was a good thing she did so, for she got comfort from what she saw. Standing near the side was the very clergyman whom she heard yesterday. A lady, evidently his wife, was at his side, and they were going on the voyage, as she could see; and there, too, was Tom, with a group of sailors, cap in hand, bidding the young couple welcome. Ah! Tom would be all right now, with them on board. He would have help and encouragement at the beginning, when he most needed it. And Emma went home with joy and thankfulness in her heart, praising God.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 718.)

A Proposal Published—Prospectus of the Institution—Testimony to God's Faithfulness—The Basis of the Proposed Orphanage—Its Principles—A Review of the Year—A Statement.

November 28. I have been, every day, this week, very much in prayer concerning the Orphan House, chiefly entreating the Lord to take away every thought concerning it out of my mind, if the matter be not of Him; and have also repeatedly examined my heart concerning my motives in the matter.

December 2. I have again these last days prayed much about the Orphan House, and have frequently examined my heart, that if it were at all my desire to establish it for the sake of gratifying myself, I might find it out. The only reason which ever made me at all doubt as to its being of God, that I should engage in this work, is the multiplicity of engagements which I have already. But that which has overbalanced this objection in my mind has been: 1. That the matter is of such great importance. 2. That if the matter be of God, He will in due time send suitable individuals, so that comparatively little of my time will be taken up by it. Therefore, I have this day taken the first actual step in the matter, in having ordered bills to be printed, announcing a public meeting on December 9, at which I intend to lay before the brethren my thoughts concerning it.

December 5. This evening I was struck, in reading the Scriptures, with these words: "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it" (Ps. 81 : 10). Up to this day I had not prayed at all concerning the means or individuals needed for the Orphan House. I was now led to apply this Scripture to the Orphan House, and asked the Lord for premises, £1,000, and suitable individuals to take care of the children.

December 7. To-day I received the first shilling for the Orphan House. Afterwards I received another shilling from a German brother.

December 9. This afternoon the first piece of furniture was given—a large wardrobe. This afternoon and evening I was low in spirits as regards the Orphan House, but as soon as I began to speak at the meeting I received peculiar assistance from God, felt great peace and joy, and the assurance that the work is of God. After the meeting, 10s. was given to me. There was purposely no collection, nor did any one speak besides myself; for it was not in the least intended to work upon the feelings, for I sought to be quite sure concerning the mind of God. After the meeting a sister offered herself for the work. I went home happy in the Lord, and confident that the matter will come to pass though but 10s. has been given.

December 10. This morning I have sent to the press a statement which contains the substance of what I said at the meeting last evening. [For the sake of those who have not read it before, it is given here.]

Proposal for the Establishment of an Orphan House in connection with the Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad.

Since the last report of the operations of the Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad was published, the Lord has sent us, in answer to prayer, brother John C——r, formerly a minister of the Establishment, as a city missionary, who goes from house to house, among the poor of this city, to converse with them about the things of God, to circulate the Scriptures among them, to get them to come to the adult school, if they cannot read, and to advise them to put their children to our schools, provided they go to no other. It was particularly gracious of the Lord to send this brother, nearly five months ago, as my brother and fellow-laborer, Henry Craik, has been for these eight months laid aside from the ministry of the Word on account of bodily infirmity, and has, therefore, been unable to take an active part in this institution. Thus I have not only found great help, but I have been greatly encouraged to enlarge the field. That to which my mind has been particularly directed is, to establish an Orphan House in which destitute fatherless and motherless children may be provided with food and raiment, and scriptural education. Concerning this intended Orphan House I would say:

1. It is intended to be in connection with the Scriptural Knowledge Institution for Home and Abroad, in so far as it respects the reports, accounts, superintendence, and the principles on which it is conducted, so that, in one sense, it may be considered as a new object of the Institution, yet with this difference, that only those funds shall be applied to the Orphan House which are expressly given for it. If, therefore, any believer should prefer to support either of those objects which have been hitherto assisted by the funds of this Institution, or the intended Orphan House, it need only be mentioned, in order that the money may be applied accordingly.

2. It will only be established if the Lord should provide both the means for it and suitable persons to conduct it. As to the means, I would make the following remarks. The reason for proposing to enlarge the field, is not because we have of late particularly abounded in means; for we have been rather straitened. The many gracious answers, however, which the Lord had given us concerning this Institution, led brother C——r and me to give ourselves to prayer, asking Him to supply us with the means to carry on the work, as we consider it unscriptural to contract debts. During five days we prayed several times, both unitedly and separately. After that time the Lord began to answer our prayers, so that within a few days about £50 was given to us.

I would also further say that the gracious and tender dealings of God with me, in having supplied, in answer to prayer, for the last five years, my own temporal wants without any certain income, so that money, provisions and clothes have been sent to me at times when I was greatly straitened, and that not only in small, but large quantities; and not merely from individuals living in the same place with me, but at a considerable distance; and that not merely from intimate friends, but from individuals whom I have never seen: all this, I say, has often led me to think, even as long as four years ago, that the Lord had not given me this simple reliance on Him merely for myself, but also for others.

Often, when I saw poor neglected children running about the streets at Teignmouth, I said to myself: "May it not be the will of God, that I should establish schools for these children, asking Him to give me the means?" However, it remained for two or three years. About two years and six months since, I was particularly stirred up afresh to do something for destitute children, by seeing so many of them begging in the streets of Bristol, and coming to our door. It was not, then, left undone on account of want of trust in the Lord, but through an abundance of other things calling for all the time and strength of my brother Craik and myself; for the Lord had both given faith, and had also shown by the following instance, in addition to very many others, both what He can and what He will do.

One morning, whilst sitting in my room, I thought about the distress of certain brethren, and said thus to myself:—"O that it might please the Lord to give me the means to help these poor brethren!" About an hour afterwards I had £60 sent as a present for myself, from a brother, whom up to this day I have never seen, and who was then, and is still residing several thousand miles from this. Should not such an experience, together with promises like that one in John 14: 13, 14, encourage us to ask with all boldness for ourselves and others for all that we need?

The Lord, for I cannot but think it was He, again and again brought the thought about these poor children to my mind, till at last it ended in the establishment of "The Scriptural Knowledge Institution, for Home and Abroad;" since the establishment of which, I have had in a similar way brought to my mind, first about fourteen months ago, and repeatedly since, but especially during these last weeks, to establish an Orphan House. My frequent prayer of late has been, that if it be of God, He would let it come to pass; if not, that He would take from me all thoughts about it. The latter has not been the case, but I have been led more and more to think that the matter may be of Him.

Now, if so, He can influence His people in any part of the world (for I do not look to Bristol, nor even to England, but to the living God, whose is the gold and the silver), to intrust me and brother C——r, whom the Lord has made willing to help me in this work, with the means. Till we have them, we can do nothing in the way of renting a house, furnishing it, etc. Yet, when once as much as is needed for this has been sent us, as also proper persons to engage in the work, we do not think it needful to wait till we have the Orphan House endowed, or a number of yearly subscribers for it; but we trust to be enabled by the Lord, who has taught us to ask for our daily bread, to look to Him for the supply of the daily wants of those children whom He may be pleased to put under our care. Any donations will be received at my house. Should any believers have tables, chairs, bedsteads, bedding, earthenware, or any kind of household furniture to spare, for the furnishing of the house; or remnants of calico, linen, flannel, cloth or any materials for wearing apparel, or clothes already worn, they will be thankfully received.

Respecting the persons who are needed for carrying on the work, a matter of no less importance than the procuring of funds, I would observe that we look for them to God Himself, as well as for the funds; and that all who may be engaged as masters, matrons and assistants, according to the smallness or largeness of the Institution, must be known to us as true believers; and moreover, as far as we may be able to judge, must likewise be qualified for the work.

3. At present nothing can be said as to the time when the operations are likely to commence; nor whether the Institution will embrace children of both sexes, or be restricted either to boys or girls exclusively; nor of what age they will be received, and how long they may continue in it; for though we have thought about these things, yet we would rather be guided in these particulars by the amount of the means which the Lord may put into our hands, and by the number of the individuals whom He may provide for conducting the Institution. Should the Lord condescend to use us as instruments, a short printed statement will be issued as soon as something more definite can be said, 4. It has appeared well to us to receive only such destitute children as have been bereaved of both parents.

5. The children are intended, if girls, to be brought up for service; if boys, for a trade; and therefore, they will be employed, according to their ability and bodily strength, in useful occupations, and thus help to maintain themselves; besides this, they are intended to receive a plain education; but the chief and especial end of the Institution will be to seek, with God's blessing, to bring them to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, by instructing them in the Scriptures.

Bristol, Dec. 10, 1835.

December 11. I have been enabled to pray all this week with increased confidence concerning the Orphan House, as it regards means, a house, suitable individuals to take care of the children, furniture, etc.

December 16. Brother C——r, whom the Lord has kindly allowed to stay above two months among us, to supply brother Craik's lack of service, left us to-day. How very gracious has the Lord been to us in this affliction! Many brethren have been sent to us as helpers for a little while—brother C——t for the greater part of the time, and brother C——r for more than two months. And, in addition to this, when brother Craik and I were both ill, the brethren were kept in peace, and there was a spirit of prayer among them.

December 31. This evening we had an especial meeting for prayer and praise. We continued together from seven till after twelve.

There have been received into the church at Gideon during the past year, 29; ditto Bethesda, 30—altogether 59. Of these 59, 30 have been brought to the knowledge of the Lord through the instrumentality of brother Craik and me. There are now, of those who have been begotten again through us, since we have been in Bristol, at Gideon 63, and at Bethesda 71—altogether 134. Besides this, several have fallen asleep in the faith, who never were in communion with us, and several of our spiritual children have joined other churches in and out of Bristol, and many are now standing as hopeful characters on the list of candidates for communion. There have been added to the church at Gideon, since we came, 125; to Bethesda, 163—altogether 288; so that the number of both churches would have been 356 (68 believers we found at Gideon), had there been no changes; but at present there are in communion with us 297—143 at Bethesda and 154 at Gideon.

As it regards the way in which the Lord in His faithful love, supplied my temporal wants, during the past year, I mention that I received —1. In free-will-offerings, given through the boxes, as my part £130 3s. 7d. 2. In free-will offerings given by believers in and out of Bristol, not through the boxes, £120 7s. 6d. 3. Towards the house rent I received from brother Craik, in consideration that he has no rent to pay, for nine months, £7 10s. 4. The presents sent to us in clothes and provisions, etc., were worth to us at least £27. Altogether, £285 1s. 1d.

January 3, 1836. This morning brother Craik spoke a little in public for the first time after about nine months. January 6. To-day we had three especial prayer meetings, for the full restoration of brother Craik's voice. We had also, on January 7, 8, 9 and 10, especial prayer-meetings for brother Craik's full restoration.

January 16. To-day I put into the press another statement, containing a further account respecting the Orphan House.

(To be Continued.)

JESUS AND THE SABBATH.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for November 27. Matt. 12 : 1-14. Memory Text Matt, 12 : 12.

Ver. 1, 2. A Transgression of the Mosaic law—Luke Says there was Plucking and Rubbing in the Hands—The Pharisaic Slavish Bondage to the Letter of the Law—Characteristic of their Entire System—Ver. 3, 5. Christ's Larger Interpretation—The Law Broken Without Sin—No Sympathy with Formalism—Ver. 6, 8. The Keynote of the New Dispensation—Love of Christ the Higher Law—Ver. 9, 10. Would have Preferred the Man to Suffer Rather than the Law to be Broken—Modern Mission Work Hindered by Quibblers—Ver. 11, 12. Pharisaical Inconsistency Exposed—A Good Deed Permissible on the Sabbath-Ver. 13. The Lawgiver's Authority Proved by Miracle—Ver. 14. The Innovator Persecuted by the Orthodox—Liberal Teaching Always an offence to Formalists and Servile Dogmatists.

"THE Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath day." "It is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days." Here is the keynote to God's thought of the Sabbath. After providing man with life, and placing within his reach food and shade, God's next provision, before the Fall had worked his ruin, was the Sabbath. One day in seven to be the Lord's day was in Paradise! God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it (Gen. 2 : 3). When, through the Fall, labor became a necessity to the unhinged, unstrung, restless being which sin had made of man, then the day of rest, the day of God, was an inestimable blessing to him, and served as God's witness that He had a claim upon His creatures, and, at the same time, as a standing witness of His mercy and love in suspending their labor for one day in seven. God has never withrawn His gift; it is a gift to the world, as well as to His own children, and even worldly politicians allow that it is good for a nation, good for man and beast to have rest one day in seven. But it is only the man who has the fear of God before his eyes who sees it good to consecrate one day in seven, specially to the service of God.

A Gift to Unfallen Man

There is in the present day a great deal of controversy about the consecration of the Sabbath: Christians are getting more and more lax on this subject. The good old Puritan respect for God and holy things is dying out, and a kind of spiritual rationalism is taking its place. The question for the Christian is, "What does God will about the Sabbath?" The fourth commandment binds us to keep the Sabbath day holy, i. e., God filled. Thus it expressly commands us to do all the work we have to do in six days. As regards the seventh day (with us Christians, the eighth day) "In it thou shall not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates." (Ex. 20 : 8–10). God gave the Sabbath "for perpetual covenant" to His people, and as a sign between Him and them, ordained, "Every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death." (Ex. 31 : 13–17). The people were forbidden to gather manna for their food on the Sabbath day, and God gave them to gather twice as much the day before. (Ex. 16 : 22–29). What then must God think of those who open their shops on Sunday, and of those who buy on Sunday? What must He think of those parents who give their children money to buy candies on Sunday, and so teach their little children to break the Sabbath? In the wilderness a man was found gathering sticks on the Sabbath day, Moses sought the Lord's counsel, and His terrible sentence was that the man must be put to death! God counted it doing presumptously, reproaching the Lord, despising His word, and breaking His commandment (Num. 15 : 30–36). "The Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath day." Who can say he opens his shop, and buys or sells on the Sunday in obedience

To the Lord of the Sabbath?

Who that does so can say, "In doing this, I am honoring the Lord's day? Nehemiah, in his day, found men "treading winepresses on the Sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses, as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the Sabbath day." He found also the cry of "Fish alive," and the costermongers busily plying their trade on the day which God had blest and sanctified to Himself. Nehemiah was a reformer, and he began with the great men, and boldly contended with the nobles of Judah, saying, "what evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath day?" God raise up Nehemiahs in our day! This man of God, whose very life was bound up with the cause of God, knew well the history of his people. He knew how God had declared, "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on My holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable, and shall honor Him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words; then shall thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob, thy father, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it" (Isa. 58 : 13, 14). But he saw men then, as now, adopting just as much religion as would serve their purposes, and minister to their own reputation among men, or their own self satisfaction. But when God's will crossed theirs, God's was to be sacrificed, and theirs was to stand! No doubt men were as clever then as they are now, in finding out reasons why they should disobey God, why they should call the Sabbath "a bore" instead of a "delight," why they should appropriate God's day to the doing their own ways, and finding their own pleasure, and speaking their own words. And, no doubt, in their day and generation, they were looked upon as large-hearted men who had escaped from narrow-mindedness and Puritan bondage!

But God has His own way of looking at things, and "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" "The Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart" (1 Sam. 16: 7). And this is His testimony: "I gave them My Sabbaths between Me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them. But . . . they despised My judgments . . . and My Sabbaths they greatly polluted (Ezek, 20: 12, 13, also ver. 16, 21; 22: 8). And His final charge against Jerusalem, at this point, was, "Her priests have violated My law, and have profaned My holy things; they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they showed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from My Sabbaths, and I am profaned among them . . , Therefore have I poured out Mine indignation upon them: I have consumed them with the fire of My wrath: their own way have I recompensed upon their heads, saith the Lord God (Ezek. 22: 20, 31). The terrible destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, when the "wrath of the Lord arose against His people was connected with the desecration of the Sabbaths, both sabbath days and sabbath years. It was "to fulfil the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths; for as long as she lay desolate, she kept Sabbath, to fulfil threescore and ten years (2 Chron. 36 : 16, 21),

To Be A Sign

Till There Was no Remedy,

But many will object, "all that has been advanced is from the Old Testament, and treats of those who are under the law; we are under grace, and Jesus sets the example of greater laxity in the observance of the Sabbath. He healed on the Sabbath day." Blessed be His name, He did heal, and as often, or more often on the Sabbath day than on any other. But He did no work in His healing; there was no physician's knife used; no bandage applied, no plaster laid on, no drugs mixed and prepared: a word, a touch, and it was done.

In the days when our Lord was upon the earth, Judaism had become almost threadbare. There was the most scrupulous attention to external trifles: "the washing of pots and cups," the tithing of herbs, the breadth of phylacteries, and the outward observance of the Sabbath. But all this religiousness was but a shell; touch the conscience or the heart, and it all cracked up, and there was nothing left of it. The Pharisees were perpetually acting as upon Jesus and His disciples. The meals of the Saviour and His followers were not very regular, and, as they passed through the cornfields, the disciples "began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat." It was permitted by the law that one passing through standing corn might pluck it with his hand, but not put a sickle into it (Deut. 23 : 25). The Pharisees, who probably had made a very good dinner of food prepared on the previous day, immediately brought against Christ's disciples a charge of breaking the Sabbath. Christ meets them with two examples from Scripture. The one was that of David and his men eating the consecrated shew-bread, when they were hungry, and there was no other, and God did not reprove them; and the other was that of the priests themselves circumcising on the Sabbath day. And he said, "If ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless. For the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath day." But while disputing their hyper-scrupulosity, Jesus never set the example of buying or selling, of travelling, or of aught else, which would have robbed either Himself or another of the holy rest of the Sabbath. He did nothing which was not done for the glory of His Father. He did always those things which pleased Him.

Self-Constituted Spies

Arrived at the synagogue, He found there a man whose hand was withered. The Pharisee spies knew the heart of Jesus for the sick and infirm and they were not slow to seize the opportunity for

A Point of Controversy.

It served their purpose, they thought, and warded off the soul-searching words of Jesus from them. Thus they asked Him: "Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day?" Jesus put it to them, How they would treat a sheep which had met with an accident, whether it would be breaking the Sabbath to pull it out of a pit on the Sabbath day, especially if it was the owner's only property. And He argued, "How much then is a man better than a sheep? wherefore it is lawful to do good on the Sabbath day." Necessary food (perhaps a cold dinner, if possible), and kind help to those who are in need, are lawful on the Sabbath day. He said to the man, "Stretch forth thine hand." But it was withered; how could he? Just so does He say to the doubting one, "Believe," to the burdened one, "Give praise." He who gives the command, gives the power to obey. In the authority of that command over the disease which had maimed him, the man stretched forth his hand, "it was restored whole like as the other"—the Sabbath had not been broken, but a soul-Sabbath was entered into by the healed man. Glory to God!

Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a Monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to the manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, N. Y. Back numbers for distribution as tracts will be sent, postage paid, at half price, 3 cents per copy.

"HE CARETH FOR YOU."

"Casting all your cares upon him: for he careth for you."—1. PETER, v. 7.

How strong and sweet my Father's care!
The word, like music in the air
Comes answering to my whispered prayer—
He cares for thee.

The thought great wonder with it brings,
My cares are all such little things,
But to the truth my glad faith clings,
He cares for me.

Yet, keep me ever in Thy love,
Dear Father, watch ng from above,
And let me still Thy mercy prove,
And care for me.

Cast me not off for all my sin,
But make me pure and true within
And teach me how Thy smile to win,
Who cares for me.

O still, in summer's golden glow,
Or wintry storms of wind and snow
Love me my Father: let me know
Thy care for me.

And I will learn to cast the care
Which like a heavy load I bear
Down at Thy feet in lowly prayer
And trust in thee.

For nought can hurt me, shade or shine,
Nor evil thing touch me, or mine,
Since thou with tenderness divine,
Dost care for me.

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST AT HAND. —We live in those days wherein the Lord will gather His Israel out of both Jew and Christian Churches, that their spirit, soul and body may be preserved blameless to receive the Lord at His coming. Rom. ix, 4; Isa. xi, 11, 12; Rev. vii, 4; Rom. viii, 29; Rev. xiv, 1; 1 Thess. v, 20, 21, 23; 1 Cor. xv, 52, 53; Phi. iii, 21; Mark xiii, 20; Matt. xxiv, 14; Rom. viii, 11, 22, 23; Rev. xxi, 1, 4, 5; John xiv, 16, 17, 26. Further information can be obtained in two different books, both in German and English, at 12c. each.
J. WIELE, 143 N. Sixth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"No more welcome additions could be made to poetic literature than these compilations."—Boston Evening Traveller.

SONNETS OF EUROPE.

A volume of Translations, selected and arranged with notes,

By Samuel Waddington,

Square 24mo, red lines.

1. Half cloth, gilt top.....75 cents
2. Venetian seal, round corners, padded...$1.50

SONNETS OF THIS COUNTRY

Edited and arranged, with a critical Introduction on the Sonnet.

By William Sharp,

Square 16mo, red lines.

1. Half cloth, gilt top.....75 cents.
2. Venetian seal, round corners, padded...$1.50.

"Where shall we find within so many pages so much real poetry, for have we not here a brimming chalice, or two of them, of the very quintessence of all poetic genius from Dante down! With what delight and satisfaction may the lover of what is most beautiful in art and literature range up and down through these collections to which so many lands and ages have added of their choicest treasures."—The New York Observer.

May be ordered of any bookseller, or copies sent postpaid, on receipt of price.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,

2 and 3 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTMAS, 1887.

AGENTS WANTED for the new book MASTERPIECES OF DORE. 80 fine original engravings. The book for a Christmas Gift. Sold only by agents. Sales immense. Experience not necessary. Terms free. CASSELL & COMPANY (L't'd). 822 Broadway, New York; 40 Dearborn St., Chicago.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS should send us a stamp, to pay postage, and we will forward catalogue and sample packet of Gospel Slips, Tracts, Booklets and Books. Gospel Book and Tract Repository, Orillia, Canada.

WORK FOR ALL. $30 a week and expenses paid. Valuable outfit and particulars free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

DIAMOND DYES

COLOR EVERYTHING.

Unequalled for Silk, Wool, Cotton and all Fabrics and Fancy Goods. Brilliant, Durable and Economical. Any one can use them.

32 COLORS—10 CENTS EACH.

Remember, these are the only Pure, Harmless and Unadulterated Dyes.

Beware of other Dyes, because often Poisonous, Adulterated, Weak and Worthless.

We warrant these Dyes to color more goods, package for package, than any other Dyes ever made, and to give more brilliant and durable colors. Sample cards free.

THE DIAMOND PAINTS,

GOLD, SILVER, BRONZE and COPPER

For gilding Fancy Baskets, Frames, Lamps, Chandeliers, and for all kinds of ornamental work. Equal to any of the high-priced kinds, and only 10 cents a package. Also Artists' Black for Ebonizing.

Sold by Druggists everywhere. Send postal for Sample Card, directions for coloring Photos, doing fancy work, and making ink.

WELLS, RICHARSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

BEST BOOKS FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

1888. NOW READY. 1888.

On the Old and New Testament Lessons.

DR. PENTECOST'S BIBLE STUDIES:

The new Sunday-school Commentary for 1888, by REV. GEO. F. PENTECOST, D. D.; 344 pages, 12 mo. Paper, 50 cts.; cloth, $1.00. This will be found an invaluable help to the study of the lessons for 1888, and besides has a permanent value to all who read it. Dr. Pentecost's work as an evangelist has led him to closely study every portion of the Bible.

On the New Testament.

LYMAN ABBOTT ON MATTHEW:

An Illustrated Commentary on Matthew for Christian Workers. By REV. LYMAN ABBOTT, D.D. 8vo, cloth. Price, $1.75. Study now, and for the first half of the year 1888 will be in Matthew. There is no better commentary for the Christian worker than this.

N. B. Special rates to clubs of 5 to 100. Send early orders for returnable samples.

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,

111 & 113 William Street, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,

Care of J. P. HEATH,

43 Bible House, New York.

We Want Active Agents!

TO SELL THE

RENNER COMBINED ALARM AND DOOR BELL

in every county in the United States and Canada. George C. Owens, Modesta, Cal., says: "I have canvassed one day and took 22 orders." In same letter he ordered two gross. Wm. McKim, of Grand Haven, Mich., says: "he took 13 orders in 10 hours." Profit on Bell, $2.50. In our extraordinary offer to agents we agree to take back all bells unsold, if the agent fails to clear $125.00 in 30 days. Illustrated circulars sent free.

Address Renner Manufacturing Co., Pittsburg, Pa.

GRIND YOUR OWN Bone, Meal, Oyster Shells, Graham Flour & Corn in the $5 HAND MILL (F. Wilson's Patent.) 100 per cent. more made in keeping Poultry. Also POWER MILLS and FARM FEED MILLS. Circulars and testimonials sent on appl'c'n. WILSON BROS. Easton, Pa.

WARREN'S FEATHERBONE Dress Stays

Soft, Pliable, and Absolutely Unbreakable. For Sale Everywhere.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

New Works By

H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

NOW READY.

Romanism and the Reformation

From the Standpoint of Prophecy.

CLOTH. 12MO. 408 PAGES. PRICE, $1.50.

CONTENTS.—Daniel's Foreview of Romanism. John's Foreview of Romanism. Paul's Foreview of romanism. Interpretation of this Triple Prophecy in Pre-Reformation Times, and its Practical Effect. Its Interpretation in Post-Reformation Times, and Practical Effect. Double Foreview of the Reformation in Old Testament Types and New Testament Prophecies.

"These lectures contain I am sure, truth for the times, truth deeply and increasingly needed not only for the preservation of the civil and religious liberties of our country, but for the practical guidance of the People of God in these last days."—Author's Preface.

Light for the Last Days:

A Study, Historical and Prophetical.

LARGE OCTAVO VOL. WITH COLORED DIAGRAMS, $3.50.

"This book is of very high value to the Church of God. It is a flood of light shed on God's dealings, from the beginning of time, but especially illuminating the very time in which we live."

The Approaching End of the Age,

Viewed in the light of History, Prophecy, and Science. There is added to the present edition a COMPLETE CALENDAR of the "Times of the Gentiles," from the beginning of the Kingdom of Babylon to the present time. With a new Preface, written by the author for this (American) Edition, and an appendix of 60 pages.

CROWN OCTAVO VOL., OVER 800 PAGES. $2.50.

Forty Coming Wonders:

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

CLOTH, 12 MO, OVER 500 PAGES. 75 CTS.

This work contains fifty full page illustrations and diagrams representing scenes described in the Prophecies of Daniel and Book of Revelation.

 Either of the above books will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,

77 Bible House, New York.

1887 Xmas Music!

WAITING FOR SANTA CLAUS.

THE NEW CANTATA FOR CHRISTMAS TIME.

By Dr. W. H. DOANE.

Full of pretty Songs, Duetts and Choruses, interspersed with Humorous Dialogues. One of the most charming Cantatas ever written. Can be quickly learned and easily gotten up. It will afford a delightful entertainment.

Sent on receipt of 25 cts. as soon as ready.

THE TRUE LIGHT. A new Christmas Service, by Rev. ROBERT LOWRY, consisting entirely of Scripture and Song. Selections made with intelligent care. Songs original and fresh. As Xmas falls on Sunday, this service will be found especially desirable. Easily rendered by any Sunday School.

Price $4 per 100; 5cts. each by Mail.

Christmas Annual No. 18. —Contains pleasing Carols by favorite authors. An abundant supply of Songs for any Christmas Festival.

Price $3 per 100; 4cts. each by Mail.

☞ A full Catalogue sent on request.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.

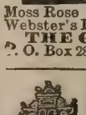
81 Randolph St., Chicago.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. For particulars address

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.



UNIVERSITY ORGANS.— They Lead the World.—$35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, $35 with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. MARCHAL & SMITH,
255 East 21st Street, New York.

AGENTS WANTED to Sell Our HOLIDAY BOOKS & GAMES
$75 per week to workers. Send for Circulars and liberal terms. Address, American Publishing Co.,
HARTFORD, BOSTON, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS or CINCINNATI.

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,

it makes no difference where you see them advertised, or by whom or where they are published or sold, send your orders to me and I will attend to them promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamps received for fractional parts of a dollar.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

"Furley & Buttrum

Merino Underwear for Me
Women and Children.
Superior to any Brand Manufactu

ORDERS BY MAIL } from any part of the cou will receive careful an prompt attention.

James McCreery & C
Broadway and 11th St., New Yo

Antique

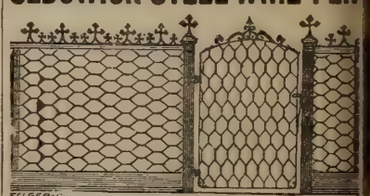
Rug

A very large variety in q ity and size. Popular pri ranging from $3 up.

Lord & Taylo

Broadway & Twentieth St.

SEDGWICK STEEL WIRE FEN



The best Farm, Garden, Poultry Yard, I School Lot, Park and Cemetery Fences and C Perfect Automatic Gate. Cheapest and Ne Iron Fences. Iron and wire Summer Houses, Furniture, and other wire work. Best Wire St er and Plier. Ask dealers in hardware, or ad

SEDGWICK BROS., RICHMOND,

METHODS —OF— CHURCH WOR

By REV. SYLVANUS STALL, A. M.,
Author of "How to Pay Church Debts,"

Received Everywhere with Enthusiasm

"It is stimulating, helpful, worth its wei gold to any minister who wishes to acco anything for the kingdom of Christ.—N. Y. tian Intelligencer. "To master it will be a as a course of training for a much neglecte highly important side of church administra —The Independent.

304 pp. Price, $1.50.

FUNK & WAGNALLS, 20 Astor Place, New Or, J. E. JEWETT, Publ'r, 77 Bible House, Ne

AGENTS Send for E. B. TRE of new books, ir Mother, Hom Heaven. 400 l thors. Prose etry. Edited b L. Cuyler, D.D by mail. 180,0

Curiosities of the Bible (10,000) pertai persons, plac things, with Key. Also Bible Studies, Prayer to Introduction by J. H. Vincent, D.D. 606 pages

WOMEN'S HAND-BOOK, $2. JUST A lady wanted in every town duce it. Quick Sales. Bi

Address E. B. TREAT, Pub., 771 Broadway,

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES CENTS. To duce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organ Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces New full size, finely printed, Gems from the latest o Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic So Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage s taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New

$25 A WEEK and upwards positively ed by men agents selling Dr. Scott's nine Electric Belt, Suspensory and by ladies selling Dr. Scott's Electric Cor Sample free. State sex. DR. SCOTT, 842 Broadway

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at 63 House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. X., No. 47. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, NOV. 24, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THOMAS GUY, and Pictures of Guy's Hospital.

THE GOSPEL OF HEALTH. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

Excommunication Risked—A Tent Worker's Direction—A Heathen Girl's Death—A Russian's Experience—No Smoking in Church—A Student's Treasure—A Mysterious Meal on the Prairie.

THE MILLENNIAL WORLD EXHIBITION. By Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kan.

CURRENT EVENTS:—An Important Resignation—The Canadian Fishery Commission—Mormon Colonization—The Doomed German Prince—The Agitation in London—The French Crisis—A Novel Storage Warehouse—A Marriage in Fun, etc.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A SERMON FOR THE TIME PRESENT. By Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

PORTRAIT OF JOHN BURNS, the London Socialist.

Gems from New Books: A Girl's Journey on a Battle-field—Dr. Marshman's Boyhood, etc.

DR. PHILLIPS AND HIS NEPHEW. (Illust'd.)

PICTURE OF A SCENE IN THE LONDON RIOTS.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. (Continued.)

PARABLE OF THE SOWER. By Mrs. Baxter.

THOMAS GUY, the Eccentric Philanthropist—SCENES IN GUY'S HOSPITAL.

THOMAS GUY AND HIS HOSPITAL.

A Recognized Duty—London Hospitals in the Seventeenth Century—Guy's Birth in 1644—Father's Death—Education at Tamworth—Return to London—Apprenticed to a Stationer—Goes into Business—Illicit Importation of Bibles—Contract with a University—Characteristic Incidents—His Penurious Habits—Hairbreadth Escape from Matrimony—Beneficence to a Would-be Suicide—His Speculation in Sailors' Tickets—The Hospital Built—Its Beneficent Work.

UNTIL sickness and suffering disappear from the world under the glorious millennial reign of Christ, the duty of the Christian to exert himself for the alleviation of the misery they bring is imperative. He who would tread in Christ's steps must move amongst the twin evils which in every age afflict humanity. He must, in loving every man as his brother, pay especial attention to those who are most in need of his help, ever remembering that the poor are Christ's specially appointed whose wants the Saviour regards as His own, and whose benefactors will at the last day receive honorable recognition as men who have ministered to Christ Himself in ministering to the afflicted (Matt. 25 : 34–40). This duty is in our day recognized more generally than ever before, and our Red Cross societies, our Ambulance service, and our Hospital Collections prove the fact. The sketches therefore, which appear on the preceding page, with a brief sketch of the famous institution known as Guy's Hospital, in London England, with some account of its founder, will be of interest.

Representatives on Earth,

Prior to its foundation in 1724 now 163 years ago, with the exception of a few old houses which formed the germ of the future Westminster Hospital, the requirements of the sick and wounded of the British metropolis had been supplied by the two Royal hospitals of St. Bartholomew and St. Thomas, which were converted from religious—that is to say Roman Catholic—to secular institutions about the middle of the sixteenth century. They are situated respectively north and south of the river Thames.

Personal Details.

Thomas Guy was born in the Horselydown district of London, in 1644, near St. John's Churchyard, where his father carried on the trade of a lighterman and coal agent. His father's death, when he was only eight years old, induced his mother to remove from London with her family, of which Thomas was the eldest, to her native town of Tamworth, where he was educated. He must have formed friendly connections in the town during these student days, and have conceived an attachment for it, for when later in life prosperity came to him and he aspired to senatorial honors it was the little town of Tamworth that elected him its representative in Parliament. It thus secured to itself the honor of sending a distinguished man to the legislature, as a century later it was honored by being represented by the great statesman, Sir. Robert Peel. Thomas Guy appreciated the favor, and Tamworth afterward participated largely in his numerous benefactions. At the age of sixteen he returned to London, his mother, who had now married a second time, having apprenticed him for a term of eight years to a bookseller of the name of Clarke, whose place of business was situated in Cheapside, in the porch of the Mercers' Hall. It is generally understood that while engaged here the young philanthropist acquired those habits of business, and knowledge of men and affairs in general, which proved so serviceable to him in after life.

On the expiration of his apprenticeship Guy became a freeman of the Stationers' Company, and at once began on his own account, with a stock and fixtures valued at $1,000. He was specially fortunate in obtaining what must always have been considered an eligible site for business purposes, the corner house between Lombard Street and Cornhill, formerly known as "the lucky house," and which has long since been swept away in the march of city improvements. Guy, who remained unmarried all his life, lived over and behind his bookstall; and from the accounts of his contemporaries and neighbors, it would appear that he had always a keen eye to business, and used every honest effort to improve it. He furnishes an apt illustration of the truth of the wise king's words (Prov. 22 : 29), "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men."

Business as a Stationer

Guy's Eccentricities

were a source of amusement to his contemporaries. He appears to have been a man of extreme frugality, with habits that led people to set him down as a miser. Even after he grew wealthy, he abstained from the pleasures and luxuries which were common in his day, when Charles II. set the example of indulgence, which his people were prompt to follow. Under the stern rule of Cromwell, all public games and shows and amusements had been suppressed, but when "the merrie monarch" came to the throne, the rebound was all the greater for the vigor of the previous severity. Guy, however, took no delight in the common pleasure, and continued to live over his store in the most economical manner, his sole delight being to watch the growth of his hoarded wealth.

Contemporary gossip says that old newspapers served him for tablecloths, and that his furniture was of the poorest description. Persons calling upon him on business in the evening, found him sitting without a light, and when he had ascertained the nature of their business, if he found that it could be arranged in the dark he extinguished the candle he had lighted on their entrance, remarking that it was needless to burn a candle when no reading or writing was to be done.

His Escape From Matrimony was a story that also amused his contemporaries. It seems that he employed but one female domestic, who faithfully served him from the days of his poverty to the time of his affluence, and she was as penurious as her employer. One day, it is said, Guy, in a rare fit of admiration and weakness, made this solitary servant an offer of marriage, which she promptly accepted. The wedding day was fixed, and probably if the event had occurred London would have never seen Guy's hospital. But a week before the day appointed for the ceremony, Guy went into the city on business, having previously given directions to some workmen who were repairing his dilapidated door-step. The servant went to the door to look at the progress of the work, and, thinking that a little more work might advantageously be done while the men were there, and that as she was so soon to become Mrs. Guy, she was entitled to a voice in the matter, gave the order, assuring the workmen that Mr. Guy would not be angry if they told him that she had instructed them to do it. But that order cost her a husband. Guy on his return was duly informed, and was moved to indignation and alarm. He perceived indications, in the act, of a disposition in his affianced wife to assume authority in matters of expenditure, and drew back while he had the opportunity. He refused to marry, and as actions for breach of promise were not at that time a weapon in the feminine armory, the relations of servant and employer were resumed, and Guy continued a bachelor to the end of his days. Yet though penurious he could be Generous on Occasion.

One day, walking on London Bridge, he noticed a stranger, shabbily clad and with a most despondent manner, loitering about. Some resemblance in the man to himself impressed the bookseller, and he accosted the loafer. The man told his story, a pathetic history of misfortune, sorrow and misery, ending with the admission that he was waiting on the bridge for an opportunity to commit suicide. Guy remonstrated with him on his wickedness and folly, and finally being convinced that the miserable creature had the making of a man in him, he supplied him with capital and set him up in business. The result was eminently satisfactory, and Guy's benefaction ultimately proved a profitable investment even in a pecuniary sense.

About this time, the latter part of the seventeenth century, printing and paper were of such an inferior quality in England that London booksellers had to enter into partnership with printers in Holland for large consignments of which were periodically sent over from the Netherlands to the English market, Guy himself being one of the chief consignees in London. But the trade, however profitable it may have been to the venders, was not so to the King's printers, who with the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge had until about sixty years ago the exclusive privilege of printing and selling Bibles in England. Stringent measures were therefore taken to check the illicit traffic.

The Supply of Bibles,

The Oxford authorities, however, being fully aware of the typographical deficiencies of the books they supplied, contracted with Guy to furnish them with a better article, and having supplied himself with the necessary materials from Holland, he produced a new edition, much superior to the old one in clearness of type and accuracy, and this he continued to supply to the University, to the advantage of the public and with profit to himself. But the income of a London bookseller at this period could never have raised sufficient money to build and endow a magnificent hospital, and it may therefore be inferred that Guy must have found other before he could have conferred his splendid benefaction upon his native city. One of these consisted in the purchase of "tickets" from the seamen of the Royal Navy, who had received them in lieu of money for their wages. At that time the wars with France and the extravagance of the Court had completely emptied the treasury. No money was there to pay the men who had fought for their country, and the Government paid them in notes to come due at a future date. The poor sailors could not afford to wait, and were glad to find such men as Guy to turn them into money at a discount. If the government had ever redeemed those notes, Guy had bought so many that he would have gained a large fortune by the operation, but, instead, the Government paid for them, with consent of the holders, in shares in a gigantic speculation known as the South Sea Company. The rage for these shares became so wild that the price rose to ten times their face value, and Guy sold his at that rate a short time before the bubble burst, and so escaped the ruin that fell on other holders. He thus became rich beyond his wildest dreams. Then became practicable. Guy had set his heart on immortalizing himself in his native city by founding a hospital which should bear his name and carry his fame down to future generations. He had no child to live after him, and if he had, he might be unworthy; but this institution would live and speak of him to thousands whose wants and sufferings would be relieved there, and men would call down blessings in gratitude on his name. He was seventy-six years old, and, realizing that no time was to be lost, he set about the work. In 1720 he purchased two entire city blocks on which stood a number of wretched hovels, and securing the assistance of a competent architect, he cleared the land and erected a building capable of accommodating four hundred patients. The excellence of the design is praised by all modern architects. With the exception of the lowness of the ceilings, the arrangements are perfect. Ventilation without draught, readiness of access, conveniences of operating, protection from noise in a noisy city, everything that could make the hospital what it was intended to be—a blessing to the suffering poor of a great city—was foreseen and provided for, and there it stands to this day, a model building.

Ways of Making Money

The Project of the Hospital

Thomas Guy did not live to see it in actual use, but he did have the satisfaction of seeing the exterior completed. Shortly after the roof had been finished, and Guy saw the structure, now so familiar to Londoners (See Illustration No. 1), standing as his monument and declaring his beneficence to his fellow-citizens, the physical strength of the man failed, and on December 27, 1724 the philanthropic octogenarian lay down and died.

The Development of the Hospital has gone steadily forward since Guy's death. About a century after that event another philanthropist bequeathed $900,000 to its endowment fund, and new wings were added, one of which contains the "Mary" ward so well known to a neglected class of patients (See Illustration No. 2). The Hospital has also done excellent work indirectly in training medical students, who after graduation go to various parts of the country to practice their profession. Relays of these "clinical students" are constantly in attendance, and going from one patient to another (See Illustration No. 5), efficiently supplementing the attentions of the regular staff while gaining knowledge and experience for themselves. This was an innovation when commenced at Guy's hospital, for before that time young men went to their duties with a theoretical knowledge only. It was soon found, however, that the student whose training consisted only in listening to the lectures of the professors in the universities, was far less capable of alleviating suffering and performing difficult operations in an emergency than he who had been trained in actual duty by attendance in the wards of Guy's hospital. Since that time the practice has become general.

Some idea of the usefulness of the institution may be gained from the statement that annually are admitted to in-door treatment, forty thousand out-door patients are attended to, and about one hundred accident cases every day are received in the accident ward and their injuries treated by skilled surgeons. Many of these cases are children, and they go into the children's ward as they become convalescent, and their parents and friends visit them there and relieve the nurses of the duty of amusing them (See Illustration No. 3). An important feature of the hospital is its sisterhood of trained nurses. Each ward in Guy's is superintended by a lady, trained as a nurse in the building, who is called a Sister. Under the sisters are placed as many nurses as are required to conduct the ordinary business, who alternate night with day at stated intervals. Besides probationers, ward-maids, and scrubbers, there is in nearly every ward a lady-probationer, or pupil assisting the nurses, performing the same routine of duties, and who is rewarded with a certificate at the end of a year if she has performed her duties satisfactorily. They are especially useful in the women's ward, where their presence and kindly sympathy encourage the patients (See Illustration No. 4), who in the presence of the busy surgeon and his assistant would lose heart were it not for the comfort of having support from one of their own sex.

Five Thousand Patients

Price, Five Cents, Post Free—160th Thousand Enlarged Edition—64 Pages—

COMING WARS AND GREAT EVENTS,

and Ten Signs of the Approaching Final Crisis, by Rev. M. Baxter—Dissolution of the Turkish Empire into the Five Ancient Kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, Thracian Turkey and Bulgaria, which with Britain (separated from Ireland), France, Spain, Italy and Austria, will be formed into an Allied Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms—Subsequent Rise of Napoleon as King of Syria—His Seven Years' Covenant with the Jews—Resurrection and Translation of Saints—3½ Years' Great Tribulation and world-wide Persecution of Christians—Descent of Christ at Armageddon—Ensuing Millennium of 1000 Years after the Year 1900. Address Manager "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Rabbi's Knowledge of the Bible.—The Rev. Mr. Bremrick, a converted Dutch Jew, remarks: "I heard of an aged Hebrew Rabbi, who was said to know his Bible so well that he could take an iron pin, and, piercing his Bible with it, tell exactly every word and letter through which it passed. But unusual as such knowledge is, and it is really marvellous, yet that was only knowing the Bible, and the Bible, though God's own book, is not the way to heaven; it is only that which tells of Him who is the Way, the Truth and the Life, the Lord Jesus. The Apostle says: 'This is eternal life, to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent.'"

Annie's Prayer for Her Uncle.—A Christian worker says: "A little girl got converted, and she went to God to pray for an ungodly uncle. 'Oh, Lord,' she prayed, 'if my living and speaking for Christ in the house will not save him, then, Lord, let me die if my death will win him for Thee.' She fell ill. The doctor came, and soon announced that she was dying. As Annie was approaching her end, and her parents and uncle were standing near her bed, she looked up brightly, and sweetly said, 'I'll tell Jesus that father and mother are coming soon.' Then addressing her uncle, a hardened sinner for forty years, she inquired, 'What have I to tell Jesus from you?' He remained silent for a moment, then breaking down, said with much emotion, 'Tell Jesus your uncle is coming too.' So the death of that dear child was used by God for the conversion of her ungodly uncle; her prayer was answered, as all true, earnest, unselfish prayers are."

Cleaning a House for Christ's Sake.—The Rev. Mr. Ross relates: "I was visiting an aged Christian lady the other night, who told me she had had a visit from a young Christian girl in all the ardor of her first love to Jesus. The girl, when she awoke that morning, began to think that perhaps the dear old lady, whom she had seen the night before, might need some one to help her. So she rose at a very early hour, and went down to the house. She found the aged Christian in bed, but awake, and the smile with which she was greeted amply repaid her. After having given the lady some refreshment, she cheerfully set about cleaning the house, and when everything was in order she departed, but not without leaving a bright ray of sunshine behind, for she left her aged friend happy for the rest of the day. It was the religion of Jesus Christ that did that. The heart of the young girl was so full of love to Christ that it overflowed upon all around, and by the giving of a degree of happiness she secured a large measure of joy herself."

Salvation Instead of Suicide.—Mr. Brealey, whose work for Christ among the Blackdown Hills, Somerset, is well known, thus writes: "I was made to feel the impotency of a man's words the other day. I was endeavoring to make plain the way of salvation to a man, who listened to what I had to say, when he replied, 'I appreciate your good intentions, but I do not wish for the article you recommend; I am satisfied with what I have.' I replied, 'I did not recommend you an article, but a personal Saviour; not religion, as you are pleased to call it, but Christ.' He replied, 'I do not want a Saviour, I can save myself;' and so he fled from my presence. I could only pray that the Lord may deal with him, and show him his need. But the very next man I spoke to said, 'What a mercy it was for me that the Lord caused you to speak to me. I was all but damned, and was just about to kill myself, but was turned from my purpose by a little conversation with you. You were relating an incident of a man you knew, who was about to cut his throat, under the influence of drink, when a lady knocked at the door to invite the man to a meeting for workingmen. The knock at the door frightened the man, so he let the razor fall; and that was the means of his going to the meeting, which ended in his salvation. I felt very uncomfortable while you were speaking, and when you turned to me you said, 'And He can save you!' That saved my life, sir, and I shall have to bless God for those words, 'He can save you.' 'And has He saved you?' I asked. 'Yes,' he replied, 'He has; and I find much joy in seeking to tell others of that same Saviour."

A Debt Paid in Answer to Prayer.—A man who recently sent a gift to Mr. George Muller for his orphanges gave the following account of it: "Dear Sir: I wish the cheque to be used as you think fit for the Lord's work. Perhaps I ought to mention the circumstances under which I send this little amount. It was a debt owed for many years, and I sent many bills and asked for the money, without effect. About a year ago I was informed by a friend that the man who owed the money to me never paid his debts without a county court summons, and that, if I used this means, I should be sure to get it, as several persons had proved. When I heard this, my prayer was, 'Lord, lead me not into temptation,' as I considered such a course would not become me as a child of God. Some months ago I felt stirred up to pray concerning this debt, and had faith to believe I should get the money; and I resolved that when the money was paid it should be sent on to you. On Saturday last the man called on me, saying he wished to pay me, which he did, and I now send the money, as I promised the Lord."

Confessing Christ in a Police Office.—Mr. Clyde, an evangelist, observes: "I was called in to visit a person in the police office a few days ago. He was a clever, cultured, intelligent man, but drink had mastered him, and had dragged him down to the lowest depths. His condition was so miserable that it had awakened the sympathy of the officer in charge. When I arrived he had been repeating poetry of his own composition, and they said to me, 'If that man were converted to God he would get on.' The poor man, on hearing this, moaned, 'Oh, if somebody would just take me in hand and give me a chance!' 'But,' I interposed, 'the first sixpence you got you would spend it on drink, and there would be an end of your good resolution!' Then I spoke to him of his duty toward God, and after a little further talk he professed to give himself to Christ. A suit of clothes was given him, and as he came out he said, 'I am clean once more outwardly and inwardly.' He has not tasted drink since, though it has often been put in his way as a temptation. He obtained a small book called, 'Learning to Float,' and he says that now, thank God, he has learned to float by doing nothing but just resting on the Lord, and exercising trust."

An Expelled Son Reconciled.—Rev. Mr. Allan narrates: "A worthy old couple had an only son, and, like too many similarly circumstanced, he was spoiled in his infancy. When he grew up he departed year by year further and further from the paths of righteousness, until at length his father was compelled to order his boy out of the house. He went away, saying he would never return until his father asked him to come back. The mother grieved much over her son's absence, which so preyed upon her mind as seriously to imperil her health. Then she pleaded with her husband to ask their son to return, but he was obdurate. 'No,' he replied, 'I cannot.' The husband held out long, but when he saw his wife was really dying, he yielded, and sent for his son, who came immediately. While the son was talking with his mother, the father entered the sick-room. His wife beckoned him to come, but hanging his head he sullenly walked to the window. The son walked to the other side to let his father approach the bed. His wife took his hand in hers, and calling her son over, took his hand in her other, and then placed that of her son in the father's, and thus father and son were reconciled over her deathbed. Similarly the wanderer from God is reconciled to his heavenly Father over the dead body of Christ, who has laid down His life that such a reconciliation might be made."

THE GOSPEL OF HEALTH.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning Nov. 20, 1887.

"Till a dart strike through his liver." Prov. 7 : 23.

The God-built Castle of the Body—The Siamese Twins of Body and Soul—Two Fortresses—The Liver the Fortress of the Furies—I. Responsible for Depression of Spirit—Consecrated Men Needing a Physician—The Devil's Favorite Point of Assault—Two Aspects of a March in Italy—The Melancholy of Good Men—The Opportunities of the Christian Physician—II. The Organ in Which Wild Oats are Sown—Religion Changes the Heart, Not the Liver—Mortgages to the Devil—Infernal Squatter Sovereignty—Too Late All Through—Suggestions for an Epitaph—Glorious Wounds—Frelinghuysen's Martyrdom—Enlistment too Late for Service.

SOLOMON'S anatomical and physiological discoveries were so very great that he was nearly three thousand years ahead of the scientists of his day. He, more than one thousand years before Christ, seemed to know about the circulation of the blood, which Harvey discovered sixteen hundred and nineteen years after Christ, for when Solomon in Ecclesiastes, describing the human body, speaks of the pitcher at the fountain, he evidently means the three canals leading from the heart that receive the blood like pitchers. When he speaks in Ecclesiastes of the silver cord of life, he evidently means the spinal marrow, about which in our day doctors Mayo and Carpenter and Dalton and Flint and Brown-Sequard have experimented. And Solomon recorded in the Bible thousands of years before scientists discovered it, that in his time the spinal cord relaxed in old age, producing the tremors of hand and head: "Or the silver cord be loosed."

In the text he reveals the fact that he had studied that largest gland of the human system, the liver, not by the electric light of the modern dissecting room, but by the dim light of a comparatively dark age, and yet had seen its important function in

The God-Built Castle

of the human body, its selecting and secreting power, its curious cells, its elongated branching tubes, a divine workmanship in central and right and left lobe, and the hepatic artery through which God conducts the crimson tides. Oh, this vital organ is like the eye of God in that it never sleeps. Solomon knew of it, and had noticed either in vivisection or post-mortem what awful attacks sin and dissipation make upon it, until with the fiat of Almighty God it bids the body and soul separate, and the one it commends to the grave, and the other it sends to judgment. A javelin of retribution, not glancing off or making a slight wound, but piercing it from side to side "till the dart strike through the liver." Galen and Hippocrates ascribe to the liver the most of the world's moral depression, and the word melancholy means black bile.

I preach to you this morning the Gospel of Health. In taking diagnosis of the diseases of the soul you must also take the diagnosis of the diseases of the body. As if to recognize this, one whole book of the New Testament was written by a physician. Luke was a doctor, and he discourses much of the physical effects, and he tells of the good Samaritan's medication of the wounds by pouring in oil and wine, and recognizes hunger as a hindrance to hearing the Gospel, so that the five thousand were fed: and records the sparse diet of the prodigal away from home, and the extinguished eyesight of the beggar by the wayside, and lets us know of the hemorrhage of the wounds of the dying Christ and the miraculous postmortem resuscitation. And any estimate of the spiritual condition that does not include also the physical condition is incomplete.

When the door-keeper of Congress fell dead from excessive joy because Burgoyne had surrendered at Saratoga, and Philip the Fifth of Spain dropped dead at the news of his country's defeat in battle, and Cardinal Wolsey expired as a result of Henry the Eighth's anathema, it was demonstrated that the body and soul are Siamese twins, and when you thrill the one with joy or sorrow you thrill the other. We might as well recognize the tremendous fact that there are two mighty fortresses in the human body, the heart and the liver; the heart the fortress of the graces, the liver

The Fortress of the Furies.

You may have the head filled with all intellectualities, and the ear with all musical appreciation, and the mouth with all eloquence, and the hand with all industries, and the heart with all generosities, and yet "a dart strike through the liver."

First, let Christian people avoid the mistake that they are all wrong with God, because they suffer from depression of spirits. Many a consecrated man has found his spiritual sky befogged and his hope of heaven blotted out and himself plunged chin deep in the slough of despond, and has said: "My heart is not right with God, and I think I must have made a mistake, and instead of being a child of light I am a child of darkness, No one can feel as gloomy as I feel and be a Christian." And he has gone to his minister for consolation, and he has collected Flavel's books and Cecil's books and Baxter's books, and read and read and read, and prayed and prayed and prayed, and wept and wept and wept, and groaned and groaned and groaned. My brother, your trouble is not with the heart, it is a gastric disorder or

A Rebellion of the Liver.

You need a physician more than you do a clergyman. It is not sin that blots out your hope of heaven, but bile. It not only yellows your eyeball, and furs your tongue, and makes your head ache, but swoops upon your soul in dejections and forebodings. The devil is after you. He has failed to despoil your character, and he does the next best thing for him—he ruffles your peace of mind. When he says that you are not a forgiven soul, when he says you are not right with God, when he says that you will never get to heaven, he lies. You are just as sure of heaven as though you were there already. But Satan finding that he cannot keep you out of the promised land of Canaan, has determined that the spies shall not bring you any of the Eschol grapes beforehand, and that you shall have nothing but prickly pear and crab-apple. You are just as good now under the cloud as you were when you were accustomed to rise in the morning at five o'clock to pray and sing "Hallelujah, 'tis done!"

My friend, Rev. Dr. Joseph H. Jones, of Philadelphia, a translated spirit now, wrote a book entitled: "Man, Moral and Physical," in which he shows how different the same things may appear to different people. He says: "After the great battle on the Mincio in 1859, between the French and Sardinians on the one side and the Austrians on the other, so disastrous to the latter, the defeated army retreated followed by the victors, A description of the march of each army is given by

Two Correspondents

of the London Times, one of whom travelled with the successful host, the other with the defeated, The difference in views and statements of the same place, scenes and events, is remarkable. The former are said to be marching through a beautiful and luxuriant country during the day, and at night encamping where they are supplied with an abundance of the best provisions, and all sorts of rural dainties, There is nothing of war about the proceeding except its stimulus and excitement. On the side of the poor Austrians it is just the reverse. In his letter of the same date, describing the same places and a march over the same road, the writer can scarcely find words to set forth the suffering, impatience and disgust existing around him. What was pleasant to the former was intolerable to the latter. What made all this difference? asks the author. 'One condition only: The French are victorious, the Austrians have been defeated.'"

So my dear brother, the road you are travelling is the same you have been travelling a long while, but the Difference in Your Physical Conditions makes it look different, and therefore the two reports you have given of yourself are as widely different as the reports in the London Times, from the two correspondents. Edward Payson, sometimes so far up on the Mount that it seemed as if the centripetal force of earth could no longer hold him, sometimes through a physical disorder was so far down that it seemed as if the nether world would clutch him. Glorious William Cowper was as good as good could be, and will be loved in the Christian Church as long as it sings his hymn beginning: "There is a fountain filled with blood," and his hymn beginning: "Oh, for a closer walk with God," and his hymn beginning: "What various hindrances we meet," and his hymn beginning: "God moves in a mysterious way." Yet so was he overcome of melancholy, or black bile, that it was only through the mistake of the cab-driver who took him to a wrong place, instead of the river bank, that he did not commit suicide.

Spiritual condition so mightily affected by the physical state, what a great opportunity this gives to for he can feel at the same time both the pulse of the body and the pulse of the soul, and he can administer to both at once, and if medicine is needed he can give that, and if spiritual counsel is needed he can give that—an earthly and a divine prescription at the same time—and call on not only the apothecary of earth, but the pharmacy of heaven. Ah, that is the kind of doctor I want at my bedside when I get sick, one that can not only count out the right number of drops, but who can also pray. That is the kind of doctor I have had in my house when sickness or death came. I do not want any of your profligate or atheistic doctors around my loved ones when the balances of life are trembling. A doctor who has gone through the medical college, and in dissecting room has traversed the wonders of the human mechanism, and found no God in any of the labyrinths, is a fool, and cannot doctor me or mine. But, oh, the Christian doctors! What a comfort they have been in many of our households. And they ought to have a warm place in our prayers, as well as praise on our tongues.

The Christian Physician,

Dear old Dr. Skillman! My father's doctor, my mother's doctor, in the village home. He carried all the confidences of all the families for ten miles around. We all felt better as soon as we saw him enter the house. His face pronounced a beatitude before he said a word. He welcomed all of us children into life, and he closed the old people's eyes when they entered the last slumber. I think I know what Christ said to him when the old doctor got through his work. I think he was greeted with the words: "Come in, doctor. I was sick and ye visited me!" I bless God that the number of Christian physicians is multiplying, and some of the students of the medical colleges are here to-day, and I hail you, and I ordain you to the tender, of a Christian physician, and when you take your diploma from the Long Island Medical College, to look after the perishable body, be sure also to get a diploma from the skies to look after the imperishable soul. Let all Christian physicians unite with ministers of the gospel in persuading good people that it is not because God is against them that they sometimes feel depressed, but because of their diseased body. I suppose David, the psalmist, was no more pious when he called on everything human and angelic, animate and inanimate, and from snow flake to hurricane, to praise God, than when he said: "Out of the depths of hell have I cried unto Thee, O Lord," or that Jeremiah was any better when he wrote his prophecy than when he wrote his "Lamentations," or that Job was any better when he said: "I know that my Redeemer liveth," than when covered over all with the pustules of elephanti as he sat in the ashes scratching the scabs off with a broken piece of pottery: or that Alexander Cruden, the concordist, was any better man when he compiled the book that has helped ten thousand students of the Bible, than when under the power of physical disorder he was handcuffed and straitwaistcoated in Bethnal Green Insane Asylum.

Beautiful, Heaven-Descended Work

"Oh," says some Christian man, "no one ought to allow physical disorder to depress his soul. He ought to live so near to God as to be always in the sunshine." Yes, that is good advice; but I warrant that you, the man who gives the advice, has a sound liver. Thank God for for, just as certainly as you lose it, you will sometimes, like David, and like Jeremiah, and like Cowper, and like Alexander Cruden, and like ten thousand other invalids, be playing a Dead March on the same organ with which now you play a Toccata.

Healthful Hepatic Condition,

My object at this point is not only to emolliate the criticisms of the well against those in poor health, but to show Christian people who are atrabilious what is the matter with them. Do not charge against the heart the crimes of another portion of your organism. Do not conclude that because the path to heaven is not arbored with as fine a foliage, or the banks beautifully snowed under with exquisite chrysanthemums as once, that therefore you are on the wrong read. The road will bring you out at the same gate whether you walk with the stride of an athlete or come up on crutches. Thousands of Christians morbid about their experiences, and morbid about their business, and morbid about the present, and morbid about the future, need the sermon I am now preaching.

Where Wild Oats Grow.

Another practical use of this subject is for the young. The theory is abroad that they must first sow their wild oats, and afterwards Michigan wheat. Let me break the delusion. Wild oats are generally sown in the liver, and they can never be pulled up. They so preoccupy that organ that there is no room for the implantation of a righteous crop. You see aged men about us at eighty, erect, agile, splendid, grand old men. How much wild oats did they sow between eighteen years and thirty? None, absolutely none. God does not very often honor with old age those who have in early life sacrificed swine on the altar of the bodily temple. Remember, O, young man, that while in after life, and after years of dissipation you may perhaps have your heart changed, religion does not change the liver. Trembling and staggering along these streets to-day are men, all bent, and decayed, and prematurely old for the reason that they are paying for liens they put upon their physical estate before they were thirty. By early dissipation they put on their body a first mortgage, and a second mortgage, and and these mortgages are now being foreclosed, and all that remains of their earthly estate the undertaker will soon put out of sight. Many years ago, in fulfilment of my text, a dart struck through their liver, and it is there yet. God forgives, but outraged physical law never, never, never. That has a Sinai, but no Calvary. Solomon in my text knew what he was talking about. He had in early life been a profligate, and he rises up on his throne of worldly splendor to shriek out a warning to all the centuries.

A Third Mortgage to the Devil;

Stephen A Douglas gave the name of "squatter sovereignty" to those who went out West and took possession of lands and held them by right of preoccupation. Let a flock of sins settle on your heart before you get to twenty-five years of age, and they will in all probability keep possession of it by an Infernal Squatter Sovereignty.

"I promise to pay at the bank five hundred dollars six months from date," says the promissory note. "I promise to pay my life thirty years from date at the bank of the grave," says every infraction of the laws of your physical being.

What? Will a man's body never completely recover from early dissipation in this world? Never. How about the world to come? Perhaps God will fix it up in the resurrection body so that it will not have to go limping through all eternity; but get the liver thoroughly damaged and it will stay damaged. Physicians call it cirrhosis of the liver, or inflammation of the liver, or fatty degeneration of the liver, but Solomon puts all these pangs into one figure, and says: "Till the dart strike through his liver."

Hesoid seemed to have some hint of this when he represented Prometheus, for his crimes, fastened to a pillar and an eagle feeding on his liver, which was renewed again each night, so that the devouring went on until finally Hercules slew the eagle and rescued Prometheus. And assures a ferocity pecking away and clawing away at the liver year in and year out, and Death is the only Hercules who can break the power of its beak or unclench its claw. So, also, Virgil and Homer wrote fables about vultures preying upon the liver; but there are those here with whom it is no fable, but a terrific reality.

A Dissipated Early Life

That young man smoking cigarettes and smoking cigars has no idea that he is getting for himself smoked liver. That young man has no idea that he has by early dissipation so depleted his energies that he will go into the battle only half armed. Napoleon lost Waterloo days before it was fought. Had he attacked the English army before it was reinforced, and taken it division by division, he might have won the day, but he waited until he had only one hundred thousand men against two hundred thousand. And here is a young man who, if he put all his forces against the regiment of youthful temptations, in the strength of God, might drive them back, but he is allowing them to be reinforced by the whole army of mid-life temptations, and when all these combined forces are massed against him, and no Grouchy comes to help him, and Blucher has come to help his foes, what but immortal defeat can await him?

Oh, my young brother, do not make the mistake that thousands are making, in opening too late, for this world, too late, and for the world to come, too late. What brings that express train from St. Louis into Jersey City three hours late? They lost fifteen minutes early on the route, and that affected them all the way; and they had to be switched off here and switched off there, and detained here and detained there; and the man who loses time and strength in the earlier part of the journey of life, will suffer for it all the way through—the first twenty years of life damaging the following fifty years.

The Battle Against Sin

Some years ago a scientific lecturer went through the country exhibiting on great canvas different parts of the human body when healthy and the same parts when diseased. And what the world wants now is some eloquent scientist to go through the country, showing to our young people on blazing canvas the drunkard's liver, the idler's liver, the libertine's liver, the gambler's liver. Perhaps the spectacle might stop some young man before he comes to the catastrophe, and the dart strike through his liver.

My hearer, this is the first sermon you have heard on the Gospel of Health, and it may be the last you will ever hear on that subject, and I charge you, in the name of God, and Christ, and usefulness, and eternal destiny, take better care of your health. When some of you die, if your friends put on your tombstone it will read: "Here lies the victim of late suppers;" or it will be: "Behold what chicken salad at midnight will do for a man;" or it will be: "Ten cigars a day closed my earthly existence;" or it will be: "Thought I could do at seventy what I did at twenty, and I am here;" or it will be: "Here is the consequence of sitting a half day with wet feet;" or it will be: "This is where I have stacked my harvest of wild oats;" or, instead of words, the stone-cutter will chisel for an epitaph on the tombstone, two figures, namely, a dart and a liver.

A Truthful Epitaph,

There is a kind of sickness that is beautiful when it comes from over-work for God, or one's country, or one's own family. I have seen Wounds That Were Glorious.

After the battle of Antietam, in the hospital, a soldier in reply to my question: "Where are you hurt?" uncovered his bosom and showed me a gash that looked like a badge of eternal nobility. I have seen an empty sleeve that was more beautiful than the most muscular forearm. I have seen a green shade over the eye, shot out in battle, that was more beautiful than any two eyes that had passed without injury. I have seen an old missionary worn out with the malaria of African jungles, who looked to me more radiant than a rubicund gymnast. I have seen a mother after six weeks watching over a family of children down with scarlet fever, with a glory around her pale and wan face that surpassed the angelic. It all depends on how you got your sickness and in what battle your wounds.

Frederick T. Frelinghuysen,

the pride of New Jersey—aye, of the nation—and one of the pillars of the Christian church, and for nearly four years practically President of the United States, although in the office of Secretary of State, in his determination to make peace with all the governments on this American continent, wore himself out, and while his brain was as keen as it ever was, and his heart beat as regularly as it ever did, he was, according to the bulletin of his physicians at Washington and Newark, dying of hardening of the liver. Satan, who does not like good men, sent a dart through his liver. The last time, my dear friend—for he was my friend and my father's friend before me—the last he was seen in Washington was in the President's carriage, leaning his head against the shoulder of the President on his way to the depot to take the train to go home to die. Martyr of the public service, he died for his country, though he died in time of peace. In his earlier life he was called the nephew of his uncle Theodore Frelinghuysen, but he lived to render for God and his country a service that will make others proud to be his nephew, and which will keep his name on the scroll of history as the highest style of Christian statesman that this century has produced. If we must get sick and worn out, let it be in God's service and in the effort to make the world good. Not in the service of sin. No! No! One of the most that I ever witness and I often see it, is that of men or women converted in the fifties or sixties or seventies wanting to be useful, but they so served the world and Satan in the earlier part of their life that they have no physical energy left for the service of God. They sacrificed nerves, muscles, lungs, heart and liver on the wrong altar. They fought on the wrong side, and now, when their sword is all hacked up and their ammunition all gone, they enlist for Emanuel. When the high-mettled cavalry horse, which that man spurred into many a cavalry charge with champing bit and flaming eye and neck clothed with thunder, is worn out and spavined and ring-boned and spring-halt, he rides up to the great Captain of our Salvation on the white horse and offers his services. When such persons might have been, through the good habits of a lifetime, crashing the battle-axe through the helmeted iniquities, they are spending their days and nights in discussing the best way of breaking up their indigestion, and quieting their jangling nerves, and rousing their laggard appetite, and trying to extract the dart from their outraged liver. Better converted late than never! Oh, yes; for they will get to heaven. But they will go afoot when they might have wheeled up the steep hills of the sky in Elijah's chariot. There is an old hymn that we used to sing in the country meeting-house when I was a boy, and I remember how the old folks' voices trembled with emotion while they sang it. I have forgotten all but two lines, but those lines are the peroration of my sermon:

Pathetic Scenes

"'Twill save us from a thousand snares
To mind religion young."

THE MILLENNIAL WORLD EXHIBITION.

By Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kan.

A Unique Enterprise—The World Metropolis—The People—One Race from Many Lands—How They will Become Homogeneous—Their Centralizing Force—Contributions from all Lands—Their Immense Wealth—Palestine to be the Earth's Treasury—A Curious Architectural Spectacle—A Godly City—The Ark and the Stones of the Law may be Found—Certainly Still in Existence—The Return Commenced—The Magnetism of the City—Facilities of Travel Prepared.

WORLD exhibitions have been held in Berlin, London, Paris and New York, and as we all know are institutions of modern times, producing great national improvements, and a cosmical intercourse of nations.

The most unique world exhibition has yet to come, and is in store for the nations of the world, when Israel shall be gathered in their land of Canaan, and when Jerusalem shall be the metropolis of the whole earth. (Isa. 62: 7, 65: 18. Jer. 33: 9.) "And it shall be to Me a name of joy, a praise, and an honor before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them."

To take a ramble through this wondrous scene of the future, and to bring this interesting subject into the light of present day thought will be our endeavor.

The People.

The Holy land with Jerusalem as its Metropolis will once be the object, the attraction, and the desire of all nations. (Zech. 14.) It will be a curiosity to see a nation "a diversity in unity," a people gathered from all countries, and from all lands; to look at the Israelites arrived from the Flowery Kingdom, and Orient dwelling with the opulent refined Jews migrated from Spain, England, and America, mingling themselves with the colored Jews of Ceylon and Tangier, and living in peace with the Caraite and Polish Jew. It may be called, a world exhibition of "one nation" as never before was exhibited. It will indeed afford an interesting study to become acquainted with their singular customs, usages, and diversified manner of dress, and how easy it will be for the children of Abraham to become a homogeneous people, and adapt themselves to their circumstances.

Centralization.

Another fact will draw the attention of the nations, namely, that the returned Jews shall possess and be acquainted with the arts and sciences, and the curiosities of ages; and how they have accumulated stores of wisdom and experience. The Chinese, Japanese and Oriental Jews knowing the secrets of China and Hindoostan, associated with the Jews of the occident will profit of their experience in machinery, and great developments may be expected. In Agriculture, in Botany, in Horticulture and other arts, the returned Isralites will bring a wealth of knowledge and discoveries from the lands visited in their Diaspora. Especially, in Astronomy, Jurisprudence, Physics, and in many curious arts, in which the Jews are experts, will be subjects of the closest attention. The acute, penetrating eye, ear and cultivated mind, of thousands of Jewish Savants, having a cosmetic experience and sagacity, all drawn as it were into "a focus," must be an event worthy the attention of all civilized nations, and no doubt it will be. In Micah. 5: 7 is said "And the remnent of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people as a dew from the Lord."

A Land of Wealth.

When Israel went out from Egypt, "They" asked "of the Egyptians jewels of silver, and jewels of gold and raiment." (Exod. 12: 35,) and went out loaded with gifts and wealth from the land in which they had been strangers and in bondage. We do know, as a certainty, that when Israel shall bid farewell to the nations, and depart to their own land, that they shall go loaded with "the wealth" of the nations, "gold, silver and precious stones." (Isa. 60: 16, 17: "Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, and shalt suck the breast of kings." And to accomplish this fact, the God of Israel has brought to light in this nineteenth century the hidden treasures of the globe the gold mines of America and Australia, the diamond-fields of Africa and the treasures of Asia, and Israel has reaped already a golden harvest, and this is only the beginning of "the gathering," spoken of in Zech. 14: 14; Israel must be paid and receive an equivalent for their labor of the ages past. And when returned, the "wealth" of the Gentiles and that of their kings shall be brought." (Isa. 60: 11. Ps. 72: 10.) Palestine will be the treasury vault of the earth, and consequently the nations will manifest an anxiety to see that country and come from afar.

Architecture.

It must be indeed a curious city and environs, where the lovers of the pagodas and Eastern minarets live together with persons who have an inclination and desire for Western architecture and Western improvements. No doubt the East will join hand with the West, and no doubt a unity and yet a diversity will be seen in tastes and enjoyments. The description of Jerusalem found in the Prophets and in the Revelation, directs our attention to order beauty and glory. Hygiene will be a prominent feature in the commonwealth of Israel; temperance and cleanliness will be applied in all things; natural and spiritual laws will be observed and architecture of course must and will occupy a prominent place among the people.

Spirituality.

That spiritual-mindedness shall be the portion of Israel above all the nations of the earth is a fact undeniable. In Rom. 11: 26 "And so all Israel shall be saved." In Heb. 8: 11 the Lord says: "For all shall know me, from the least to the greatest." In Ezek. 43: 4–5, "The glory of the Lord came into the house, and filled the house." In Isa. 30: 26, their light shall be "as the light of seven days." Isa. 25: 6–7, "the vail" shall be taken away. The prediction of Christ, which we find in Matt. 23: 39, will then have its fulfilment, "For I say unto you, ye shall not see Me henceforth, till ye shall say: Blessed is He, that cometh in the name of the Lord." It is not our design, at this time, to speak about the personal return of our Lord to His throne and people. Our aim is but to speak of the intellectual and spiritual-mindedness of Israel, and their great privileges, which will at that time stimulate the nations to visit Jerusalem and Canaan; and in that connection, we point out archæology, the great revealer of secrets and the witness of the truth of Jehovah. We fondly hope that the stones and the parchments, on which the Mosaic laws were written, will be found, and every problem will be solved; and that the Hebrew-Chaldean Aramean characters yet will be seen in their originality. In the hands of Israel, the greatest linguists of all nations, the wealth of the language will shine, and the plenary inspiration will be fully acknowledged and every dark sentence in the Bible fully explained.

No Dream.

The return of the Jews to Palestine, and the going of the nations is not a dream, neither is it "one of the Thousand and One Arabian Night stories;" it is an event already in accomplishment Jerusalem with her fourteen thousand Jews can already be called a Jewish city under Moslem rule, visited from year to year by a multitude of representatives of many nations; already that land of Canaan and the City of Jerusalem have an attraction, not experienced since the times of the Crusaders.

Not only the true followers of the Lord Jesus are looking to the East—the followers of Mohammed, according to their Koran, believe that Jesus will return to Jerusalem, and call that place the Holy City. There is an idiosyncracy among Jew, Greek, Catholic and Protestant to look upon Jerusalem as a magnetic city. There is a sentiment slumbering in the mind of nations about Jerusalem that cannot be explained but by the student of prophecy; and, indeed, it cannot be denied: that the way to its fulfilment is already pre-eminently prepared. It is only seventy years ago, since the first steamboat was launched, and now, as by magic "steam engines" have shortened the distance; the telegraph has annihilated, as it may be said, time and distance; and the telephone brings every place in speaking distance. Every thing is concentrating, and drawing to one focus. Already a cosmical spirit is observed, a spirit for travel is growing rapidly, and an unrest is found in the movement of nations and people.

Shall a kind Providence provide all those means for the use of commerce and for the pleasure of sinful men, and lose sight of the future? We answer: all those great improvements of the nineteenth century are made to accelerate the great and coming events in the kingdom of our Lord, and the return of Israel to Canaan.

The Caravan.

Finally, we hear in John 12: 20, that Greeks desired to see Jesus. We do know that Islam has Mecca, the Roman Catholics, Rome and Loretto; that Ireland has Knock. It seems that the love of "going up to some shrine is deeply buried in the hearts of the multitude"—and who, we ask, can reasonably doubt, that the prophecy found in Zech. 14: 16–17, shall remain unfulfilled? We emphatically declare: God shall bring to pass, that great event: "That nations shall even go up from year to year to Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts, and to keep the feast of Tabernacles." What a joyous time that shall be, to do homage to Him, whom we love supremely; and when that glorious anthem will be sung in the most melodious voice:

O! sing in joyful strains
In songs His truth made known;
God over all the nation reigns,
High on His holy throne.

The heirs of Gentile thrones
With Abram's children meet,
The shields of earth Jehovah owns;
Exalted is His seat. (Psalm 47. S. M.)

EXCOMMUNICATION BRAVED.

MISSIONARY work in the United States of Colombia has of late been restricted almost entirely to the city of Bogota, owing to the difficulties of travel and the unsettled state of the country. The Gospel, however, has made its way into the country, through pupils in the mission schools at Bogota going to reside in other cities. Recently, Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell have ventured on a tour, which they describe in a letter to the Church, and have been surprised to find what their former pupils have been enabled to do. They encountered opposition in every place from the Roman Catholic priests, but were not driven back, and in many places were welcomed in spite of them. Mrs. Caldwell says:

"The war the priests make against the Bible is something surprising. From Tunja they sent word to one place and another, and the priests of each place have preached against us and our 'prohibited books.' They are careful not to say that it is the Bible we desire to sell, but say that the books are bad ones, very bad ones, and thus make the people think that they are immoral, obscene books. Some have been very much surprised when they have found that it was the Bible we were selling. Where the priest comes out openly and attacks Mr. Caldwell in the streets, the sales as a rule have been increased, because he could be answered before the people, and the falsity of his statements shown; but where they only preach against the books in a church crowded with ignorant people, with no one to refute the misstatements, the effect is often very great. For example, the Sabbath before we arrived at Pie de Cuesta, the priest announced our coming, and spoke at length about the very bad books, saying over and over again that the people should not buy the dreadful books, or even look at them, and threatening anyone who should disobey his commands with instant excommunication. He also warned the people that they should not give us boarding, and said that he would excommunicate any one receiving us. I asked our landlady if she was not afraid of losing her soul for having received us and treated us so kindly. 'No,' she replied, 'I am not afraid, and it makes but little difference to me what the priest says.'"

A TENT WORKER'S DIRECTION.

An evangelist who goes from place to place in the summer, hold meetings in a tent, relates a remarkable incident which occurred in his work. He and his assistant had determined to go to a certain town which was described as a very citadel of Satan. They would need a place on which to erect the tent, and some friendly assistance of other kinds. They therefore inquired of a gentleman who knew the town if he knew any Christian there who would give them hospitality. His replies were discouraging. A name was suggested to him, "No," he said, "from him you will get no help, but he mentioned the name of another whom he said, might perhaps, help, the perhaps being given with an emphasis. After thanking him for his advice and wishing him good morning, the evangelists started, but had scarcely gone twenty yards, when up came a boy about nine or ten years of age. "Who he was, and whence he came," says the evangelists, "we knew not." He said, "Are you the gentlemen with the tent?" We said, "Yes; why?" "Oh!" said he, "Auntie says that when you go to W—— (the town to which they were going), "you can put it on her ground." Well, we thought the Lord certainly intends us to go there and also to direct us by this child. Not a little surprised, we inquired of him her name, and after obtaining it with several particulars, on we went. We soon came to the village, and as we entered, noticed a certain field, and remarked, "that would be just the place for the tent, if we could only get it." However, our first inquiry was for this boy's aunt, and very soon we were directed to her house. We found that the little lad was perfectly correct. The aunt said it was all right, we could have the ground, and, to our astonishment it turned out to be the very field that had attracted our attention on entering the village. For a month the tent stood there on her ground, the Lord blessing the preaching of His Word, to the conversion of many souls, amongst the number being this very woman and her husband.

A HEATHEN GIRL'S DEATH.

A pathetic description of a Christian lady's effort to lead a dying girl in Africa to Christ, is contained in a letter from Miss Alice Lyle which Rev. A. B. Simpson publishes in his Word, Work and World. Miss Lyle, after describing her arrival at Monrovia, where there are several Christian churches, says, that she has been to a heathen village inhabited by the Kroo tribe. There she went into a hut where a poor girl lay dying. She was lying on a straw mat laid on the earth; not a garment on her body, only a strip of calico thrown over her limbs, her head on a board. "I spoke to her," says Miss Lyle, "and she looked anxiously at me, but could not understand a word I said. I spoke of Jesus. The poor mother came in; not a garment on her body, but a handkerchief around the hips. She lifted the girl in her arms and wept. She looked at me with anxious eye. I tried to get her to repeat after me the name of Jesus. They might have hope through the promise: "Whoever shall call on the name of Jesus shall be saved;" but they did not know anything I said. I kneeled down, and motioned to the mother to do as I did. She kneeled down, put her head on the ground, and remained in that position till I ceased praying. I pleaded for God to let that poor heathen know the name of Jesus, and call on Him before she died. A man (a Mohammedan), came to the door who seemed to understand something I said. I told him to tell the mother to say what I said. It seemed to avail nothing. I kept saying: "Jesus, Jesus." His name must prevail—even in the very camp of the enemy. Finally, the mother said, "Jesus." Then said I, "Save me." This she repeated after me three or four times. Then I turned to the girl and said: "Jesus, save me." She understood me and repeated the prayer. I raised my hands and again repeated the prayer of three words. She lifted her hands, but was so weak I held one for her, till she repeated it three or four times. But as soon as she could speak His name, before she said "Save me." His presence thrilled my being, and I believe He saved that soul at that moment, and lighted up the dark vale of death."

A RUSSIAN'S EXPERIENCE.

A Remarkable case of Divine Healing related at Bethshan, is reported in the current number of *Thy Healer. The speaker was Mr. D. Ottmann, a Russian citizen who recently travelled in this country. He said: I went as far as Texas, and while there, I had chills and fever, and took different medicines, but they did not do me any good. I took quinine and other things, but the fever got worse, and at last I could do no work. Then I saw about Divine Healing in The Christian Herald, and I thought: "If I put away this medicine, the Lord will heal me." There is much sickness about that part, and people suffer very much. But after I saw I could not get any good from the medicine, and other people who took it were no better, I packed it all away. I did not throw it away, but merely packed it up and put it away, and took no more of it. "The Lord," I thought, "will save my soul and He will heal me." The Lord then took the case, and the fever disappeared. When I got back to Russia, I again had a little attack of fever, but took no medicine. I prayed and the fever stopped. It never came to much. Three days after, it came back again. That was the second temptation. My father said: "Take a little powder—a little quinine will do you good." "No; no medicine for me," I answered. I prayed to the Lord and the fever went off. I then got up and took my dinner, and have had no fever since. It was just the same way the Lord took my case when I was full of sin. I did my best to get out of it, but I only got deeper. I could not get rid of the trying to make money, but the Lord has turned the curse into a blessing and saved me.

A COLLEGE STUDENT'S TREASURE.

In an important examination of university students one of the examiners noticed a student furtively thrust his hand into his breast-pocket, draw out some paper or card, look at it earnestly, put it back, and resume his writing with increased energy. Now as the examination was to test the students' memory, and to find out how much of the lectures and text-books studied during their term they had digested and made their own, it was obvious that any consultation of memoranda would defeat the object of the examination. Long experience had made the professor aware that students who had been idle during term, and yet were anxious to pass, often smuggled into the examination room, lists of dates and names to help them in answering the questions, he, therefore, was glad to catch this culprit in the act. He slipped quietly behind the young man and the next time his hand came out of his breast-pocket he seized it and insisted on the paper being given up. The young man objected, but at last, finding he was misunderstood, he reluctantly handed to the professor the portrait of a young lady. He had been getting inspiration for his difficult task from the features of the girl he loved. The examiner restored the portrait with an apology for his suspicions and the candidate passed his examination. Doubtless, the portrait did help him, though even a metaphysician might have some difficulty in explaining the process. It was for her sake that he was trying to do the work, and it grew easier as he reminded himself of the fact by gazing on her picture. Many a tried and troubled Christian has passed triumphantly through an ordeal in a similar way. The thought that it was for Christ's sake has supported and energized him (1 Peter 1: 6–7).

* A monthly magazine edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, containing original articles on Holiness and Divine Healing, Annual subscription 75 cents. May be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York.

NO SMOKING IN CHURCH.

In the account of a church dedication at Wei Hien, in China, which Rev. J. H. Laughlin sends to The Church, he says: "The new church is a solid, substantial building, with capacity for seating as large an audience as we may hope for for a long time to come. It promises to be an exceedingly important adjunct to our work. Last Sabbath, it furnished us the opportunity of preaching the gospel to a considerable number of men, who might otherwise never have heard it. It was market day in the city, and the road was thronged, as usual, with people of all ages and both sexes. Our big gate was wide open, and just inside the court the open door of the chapel invited all to enter. Many accepted. They came with their broad sun-hats on their heads, their pantaloons rolled up to their knees or higher, to let the breezes play about their legs, and strings of onions, cash-bags and other burdens on their shoulders. Sitting down, out would come, first thing, the inevitable pipe—for this with John Chinaman is the common expression of both sociability and respect—and one brother was kept well employed in informing the auditors that this was not a smoking room. They were perfectly ready to observe the customs of the place, and invariably laid down the pipe without a word. In the afternoon at our Sunday-school the crowd of strangers was greater than in the morning. We formed them into one big class, and our school teacher, a graduate of Tungchow, told them of Christianity, while the rest of us taught the Christians present. I hope, but only God knows, that the poor, laboring and heavily-laden fellows received some benefit from that hour's rest in the new chapel. Let us hope, too, that from this day on to the day of its crumbling into ruins it will be to thousands of weary souls a door to the rest eternal.

A MYSTERIOUS MEAL ON THE PRAIRIE.

The following illustration of the way God provides for those who trust in Him is related by Rev. A. J. Gordon in his Watchword: A poor woman who has been washing for us said: "Seems as if the Lord took very direct ways of reaching people's feelings sometimes. Now, I was astonished once in my life. I lived away out West, on the prairie, with my four children, and couldn't get much work to do, and our little stock of provisions getting lower and lower. One night we sat hovering over our fire, and I was gloomy enough. There was about a pint of corn meal in the house, and that was all. I said, 'Well, children, may be the Lord will provide something.' 'I hope it will be a good mess of potatoes,' said cheery little Nell. After they were asleep I lay there tossing over my hard bed and wondering what I could do next. All at once the sweetest rest and peace came over me, and I sank into such a good sleep. Next morning as I opened the door to go down to the brook to wash, I saw something new. There on the bench, beside the door, stood two wooden pails and a sack. One pail was full of meat, the other full of potatoes, and the sack filled with flour. I brought my hands together in my joy, and just hurrahed for the children to come. Little dears! They didn't think of trousers and frocks then, but came out all of a flutter, like a flock of quails. Their joy was supreme. They knew the Lord had sent some of His angels with the sack and pails. Oh, it was such a precious gift! I washed the empty pails, and put the empty sack in one of them, and at night I stood them on the bench where I found them, and the next morning they were gone. I tried and tried to find out who had befriended us, but I never could. The Lord never seemed so far off after that time," said the poor woman, looking down with tearful eyes.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Subscribers Who Are Kindly Endeavoring to secure new subscribers for this journal would confer a favor by sending on money and names as they get them, instead of waiting for the completion of their lists. This course is better for all parties. The new subscriber begins to receive the paper at once, without extra charge; the canvasser is duly credited with the number sent, whether sent singly or in bulk; and the publishers are less liable to errors now than in the press of business at the beginning of the year. In reply to numerous inquiries, it may be well also to say here, that as many subscribers are unable to canvass themselves, any members of their households may canvass on the same terms as if their own names were on our list.

CURRENT EVENTS.

In Observing Thanksgiving Day Our Citizens in all the States will give evidence of their personal character. It is not a day "for a man to afflict his soul," nor is the giving of thanks a duty to be performed mournfully, or with lugubrious countenance. It becomes Christians, however, to remember the purpose for which the day was set apart, and to consecrate it to that purpose. There is no nation on earth so blessed of God as this nation, and it is our duty as Christian men to show, by our method of observing this day, that we acknowledge that all our blessings, our prosperity, liberty and religious privileges, come from God. Feasting and thoughtless hilarity are consistent in those who do not recognize national and individual dependence upon God for daily mercies, but not for men who believe that every good and perfect gift descends from their Father in heaven. At this time, too, when many are in poverty and sadness, abundant opportunities are placed within our reach for practically proving our thankfulness by helping a poor family to enjoy the day.

The Canadian Fishery Difficulty will be Adjusted, if the spirit which pervaded Mr. Chamberlain's speech in New York on November 15 is carried into the discussion and manifested on both sides the council-table. Addressing the Chamber of Commerce, whose guest he was, he said: "I bring with me to the settlement of what is a difficult task, the universal sympathy of every Englishman whose opinion is worth consulting. The anxious concern of my countrymen is to remove every just cause of difference that exists between you and them, and that there shall not be anything left to imperil the good relations which have hitherto existed. I do not doubt, then, that we shall be able to settle amicably any difference, any trivial dispute, that may have arisen. And I will go farther and assure you that I do not look forward to any settlement of the questions which we have to discuss which will give undue advantage to either party. I do not think it is at all likely I could gain such an advantage in a discussion with the representatives of the shrewdest nation of the world. But if I could gain it I would not attempt to try it—because I am perfectly convinced it is not the interest of any great nation to make a settlement which is not permanent, and satisfactory to all parties concerned." Mr. Chamberlain, Sir Charles Tupper and their colleagues have now gone to Washington, and it may be hoped that their mission will result in a mutually satisfactory settlement of the difficulty. Mr. Chamberlain's action on the Irish question should not operate to his prejudice, though it undoubtedly will do so in some influential quarters.

The Resignation of Land Commissioner Sparks involves a loss to the Department of the Interior. It was, however, inevitable, as a difference of opinion apparently irreconcilable had arisen between him and Mr. Lamar. As the Secretary is the responsible head of the Department, the Commissioner had no alternative to resignation in the circumstances. The question in dispute arose out of the vexed question of the indemnity lands. Mr. Lamar decided that the Chicago and St. Paul Railroad Company were entitled to indemnity on account of certain lands which had been seized under prior grants. Mr. Sparks contended that the Company never had any claim on the lands, and as they were never able to take possession of them they were not entitled to indemnity. The President accepted the Commissioner's resignation with unconcealed regret, and in this the public sympathize, for Mr. Sparks was a stout champion of the rights of the people against the monopolies.

The Proposal to Establish a Telegraph System in connection with the Post-office, and under Government control, is to be introduced in the Senate by Senator Edmunds. He told a reporter last week that he does not advocate the lease or purchase of existing lines, but believes that the Government should have its own telegraph as it has its own post-offices. Mr. Holman, on the other hand, is quoted as saying that a bill regulating the telegraph rates of the country would be much better than Government telegraphy. In regard to the reduction of the surplus, Mr. Holman expects, as do many Members of Congress on both sides of the House, the passage of a compromise bill, dealing with both taxes and the tariff, reducing the revenue to the extent of $90,000,000. This will include part at least of the tobacco tax, and a considerable slice of the duty on sugar. Salt, coal and lumber are spoken of as likely to be put on the free list, though neither Mr. Holman nor any other member speaks authoritatively as to details. The entire surplus for the fiscal year amounts to $103,471,597, nearly ten millions more than last year.

The Extent to which Mormon Colonization is carried may be estimated by the recently published "epistle" from Wilford Woodruff for the twelve "apostles." From this it appears that in Arizona the colonists are prospering, and that the act requiring voters to take the oath has been repealed by the Legislature. In Idaho, where there are many thousands of Mormons, hopes are entertained of a similar repeal. In Colorado and Wyoming, the Mormons receive fair treatment and kind consideration. In Mexico, they have 150,000 acres of grazing, timber and agricultural lands. Mormon books are translated into Spanish, and are being extensively circulated, and native converts are being made. At Alberta, in the Canadian Northwest the Mormon settlers are raising grain and pasturing stock. They have also found a vein of fine coal, and more men will be needed to work it. These men, scattered thus from Canada to Mexico, are zealously propagating their errors and immoral teachings, and are thus preparing a fruitful source of trouble for the various governments.

The Arrest of Herr Most, the Anarchist, on Thursday last was the logical outcome of his incendiary speeches. The law under which the Grand Jury of New York indicted him is an excellent preventive enactment, coinciding with the Illinois law under which the Anarchists were executed. It provides a penalty for making speeches tending to incite a breach of the peace, whether violence results from it or not. Most has already served a year's imprisonment for violating that law, and on November 12 he committed another offence. In a speech at an Anarchist meeting, he said that a day of reckoning for the capitalists was nigh, and that Anarchists need not fear the soldiers and the police, for Anarchism's weapon was more terrible than theirs. He then proceeded to name the victims in their order. First, Grinnell, the Chicago prosecutor; then Judge Gary, the United States Supreme Court Judges, and finally Gov. Oglesby. Most said he wanted to strangle the executioner who hung their brethren. "In conclusion," he said, "I tell you, brothers, to arm yourselves, and not be asleep at the present time—to resist and kill these scoundrels of capitalists and of the press." The speech, which was in German, was reported by two detectives, and Most was indicted.

The French Chambers have Decided to Prosecute M. Wilson, the son-in-law of President Grèvy, for corruption and being concerned in selling decorations. The vote was reached on November 17. The committee who were appointed to investigate the affair, were unanimous in recommending a prosecution, and the Legislature authorized it by a vote of 527 to 3. Evidence has been obtained that Wilson received $400,000 from a contractor when certain Government contracts were signed, and that $16,000 was paid to him by the recipient of the decoration of the Legion of Honor. Gragnon, the Prefect of Police, who had charge of the incriminating letters, which were abstracted and replaced by substitutes, has been dismissed from his office. President Grèvy's resignation is considered inevitable, and the leading legislators are discussing candidates for his office.

Unfavorable Reports of the Crown Prince of Germany continue to arrive. The most serious was a statement cabled on Thursday last after Dr. Mackenzie had left him for a short trip to London. It was to the effect that the fatal green discharge from the patient's throat had made its appearance. Physicians here and in Europe regard this as positive evidence that the Prince is suffering from a soft cancer of malignant type. Whether an operation could save his life is now doubtful. A despatch from Berlin says: "Dr. Hahn, at a meeting of the Medical Society, said that in cases of soft, quickly growing cancer he preferred to refrain from operating, because in such cases an operation was seldom successful. The Prince is also said to be opposed to an operation. Neither he nor his wife has lost faith in Dr. Mackenzie, who has not concealed his opinion that the disease might develop into a cancer, though the pieces of the growth which he removed bore no trace of the hair-fibre which distinguishes cancer. It is generally admitted that soft cancers, such as that the Prince is believed to have, are incurable.

The London Riots have Caused Excitement throughout Great Britain. They have added new strength to the Conservative Government. On being appealed to as to the action of the Government in suppressing the meeting in Trafalgar Square on November 13, Mr. Gladstone wrote: "Until a decision can be had, it is the duty of every citizen to refrain from all resistance to the decision of the executive Government, which is clearly entitled to administer the laws according to what it may be advised is their true construction." This advice is opposed to that of the Radical journals, which denounce the Government for applying coercion to London as they have applied it to Ireland, and urge the Radical clubs to resist. The property-holding classes reply, that if the suppression of such riots as that of November 13 is "coercion," they approve of coercion, and think the Government is justified in applying it either in England or Ireland. It is believed that the outbreak will cost the Gladstonian party the loss of a large number of votes, and further, to use Mr. Gladstone's phrase, set the classes against the masses.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, women or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Secession of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon from the Baptist Union continues to be a prominent subject of discussion in English religious circles. It is contended that Mr. Spurgeon is separating from his brethren because they no longer adhere as a body to the Calvinistic theology, but it is certain that many ministers who are not pronounced Calvinists approve his action, and are following his example. It appears to be in the matter of Biblical criticism that Mr. Spurgeon finds the chief obstacle to union, The tendency of modern thought is to doubt the verbal inspiration of the Bible, which the great preacher implicitly believes. Mr. Spurgeon sees no reason to regret the step he has taken; he says that when he entered the conflict he made up his mind that even if he were left alone he would be none the less decided as to the propriety of his course. It is pleasing to find, however, he says, that many valued friends approve of his action. He urges that continual prayers be offered that some good may come out of the inquiry which has been aroused.

An Instructive Comparison of American cities was made by Dr. L. W. Munhall, in the course of an address at one of the enormous meetings he is holding at Columbus, O. Referring to Sabbath desecration, he said that he had been in all the cities of over 25,000 inhabitants in the country, except two, and he had not found a place that was proportionately burdened with this evil to a greater extent than was Columbus. Cincinnati and Chicago have had in their riots the results of Sabbath desecration. He mentioned the city of Toronto, the wealthiest city for its population in America, where Sunday was strictly observed in all departments of business and manufacture. He said he was the friend of the workingmen, and he had some good advice to give them. Half the oppression of the laboring classes was not from poor pay, but because they spent too much of their money for liquors and tobacco. If there was less intemperance there would be less anarchy, The Ohio State Journal says that at the meeting for women only, on November 13, fully 3,500 attended, and over one thousand rose to ask for prayers. Columbus has never seen a movement so widespread and so remarkable in its results. The meetings were arranged by the Y. M. C. A., of which Mr. A. Paul is secretary.

A Novel Storage Warehouse is to be Erected in New York. Plans have been filed for the construction of an immense fire-proof edifice in which goods may be deposited for safety. The designers say that nothing will be used in it but iron and concrete, so that the building itself can never be burned. But it has been proved that even in a fire-proof building the contents may be burned, so a plan has been devised to meet that danger. The goods will be placed in separate cells, each of which is provided with a distinct flue, connecting with the open air, so that if one case of goods catches fire it will be consumed without setting fire to the others. The cause of fire in these cases is generally loose matches which have fallen in the process of packing, sometimes by the owners themselves, and being trodden on or by the gnawing of rodents, ignite and set fire to the valuables. The separate storage system, and the individual flues, will, it is expected, prevent such accidents leading to a general conflagration in the building. The carelessness of a depositor may still involve the destruction of his own property, but will not injure that of others. Unhappily, there is no such protection against moral carelessness, involving the loss of the soul. The influence and example of wicked men cause terrible mischief to others, and often precipitate their ruin (Rom. 14 : 17).

A Marriage in Fun has Exercised the Ingenuity of the most learned lawyers in Wisconsin. The daughter of a millionaire residing at Fairchild, recently went through the marriage service with a station agent at that place. The whole thing was done in jest at a party of merry young people, and none of them regarded it as serious, until a lawyer, hearing the details of the affair, declared that the marriage was valid under the laws of the State. The statement was an unpleasant surprise, and it was at first thought that a formal divorce would be necessary to free the young lady from the consequences of the joke. But a consultation of local lawyers with eminent council from Augusta and Eau Claire was held, and decided that a divorce might be avoided by a formal declaration, on the part of all the persons present at the mock-marriage, that it was performed without any serious intent and merely as a jest. Accordingly, bride, groom, witnesses and Justice of the Peace made solemn affidavit to that effect, and the bride and groom "exchanged receipts," as it were, and the marriage is pronounced void. The decision causes some surprise, coming from lawyers who are generally prone to attach more importance to the letter and form of a transaction than to its spirit. They are doubtless right in this matter, and it would be well if the same principles came into recognition more fully in spiritual concerns. Too many people think that the formal joining of a church constitutes union with Christ, forgetting that there can be no true union with Him without the surrender of the soul (Rom. 12, 1–2).

Ten Days and Nights in an Open Boat with little food and no water were passed by six shipwrecked seamen, who arrived in New York on November 14, on board a Norwegian ship, which had rescued them out at sea. They belonged to the bark Augusta, which foundered on October 14, while on its voyage from Swansea to Aspinwall. When the vessel was near sinking, these six men got into a small boat, but had no time to take provisions in the boat; one basket of biscuit was all the food they had. The men were put on an allowance of one-half a biscuit each per day. After being in the boat seven days, all the provisions were gone and no sail in sight. After enduring the pangs of hunger for two days longer, there was talk of drawing lots to see which one of the six should die, but the second mate would not consent, and the matter was put off until the next day. Another day passed and the men were growing desperate, when a ship hove in sight about six miles off, and, seeing the signal of distress, bore down directly toward the boat. In half an hour she was alongside, but the men were so weak they were unable to get aboard, and two sailors clambered down the side and lifted them up one by one. What they did for the poor debilitated, shipwrecked sailors, Christian workers are trying to do for castaways in the world. They succeed, in Christ's strength, when, as in this case, the men are willing and anxious to be rescued (1 Cor. 9 : 22).

The Son of a Heroine is a Student in a College in New Orleans. The Picayune of that city states that a boy recently came from the country to New Orleans, and was entered at a certain college there. With him he brought a letter from his mother in which she said: "At last I can give my boy the blessed privileges of education. The money has been hardly earned. I earned every penny of it by walking in the cotton fields picking cotton." The full significance of this avowal was not discovered for some time, although it was something of a surprise, that a woman who was engaged in picking cotton should care so much for a college education for her son as to devote the proceeds of her hard earnings to the purpose. Subsequent inquiries, however, explained the mystery, and at the same time revealed the heroism of the mother. Before the war she was a wealthy lady of high-breeding, but she is now in extreme poverty. She was so anxious that her son should be well educated that she determined to earn the necessary money in the only way open to her—that of picking cotton, for which she was paid so much a pound. She did the work on the very plantation that was once her own property. Whether the result will repay her for her noble labor and humiliation depends on the young man himself. If he does not, by study and earnest endeavor, avail himself of his opportunities, his mother's sacrifice will be wasted. Better things may be hoped of the son of such a mother, but we know that an opportunity far more precious and purchased by far greater humiliation is slighted, and that by men who know its value and its cost (Heb. 12 : 1, 2).

A Diver's Desperate Struggle Under Water is vividly described in a despatch from Portland, Me. It states that while a well-known diver of that city was at work in deep water at Mattawamkeag, on the foundation for a new bridge for the Canadian Pacific Railroad, he came near losing his life. He had put a chain around a big rock, ready for hoisting, when a large piece of the rock broke off. It fell upon the diver, knocked him down, and pinned one leg and foot to the bottom. His crowbar was just beyond his reach, and he feared every moment that his air supply would give out. The bottom was of mud and gravel, and rather soft, so the diver set to work to dig himself free with his hands. He dug away for dear life for just half an hour before he succeeded in getting his leg free; then he gave the signal to hoist. He was completely exhausted when he reached the surface, and his leg was badly bruised and swollen. The man knew that his life depended on his getting clear of the rock that was holding him down, so it is not surprising that he worked desperately to get free. There are many men whose salvation hangs on their getting free from evil habits that are holding them back from God. Some strive like the diver to deliver themselves, but he alone is sure of success who, while struggling, looks to Christ for deliverance (11 Tim. 2 : 26).

BRIEF NOTES.

The government census in China has been completed, and the population is found to exceed 317,000,000.

Messrs. Brown and Avis have been laboring at Staunton, Va., with much success. They are now commencing services at Charleston, Va. Two services each day, one service on Saturday and three on Sunday are held, and many conversions are reported.

Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, has accepted the counsel of the Advisory Committee, and has formally invited Rev. Charles A. Berry, of Wolverhampton, England, to succeed the late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, as pastor of the church.

The centenary of the founding of the first Baptist Church for the colored race, in Georgia, will be celebrated in January next. There are now 1,400 colored Baptist churches in the South, with 500 ministers, 2,000 licentiates, and 160,000 members.

Mrs. Warnes Huntley, the English Evangelist, now visiting this country, has been holding meetings in Pittsburgh, Pa., and is now laboring in the adjacent towns. Meetings are being held at Braddock's, Dravosburg, Emsworth and Allegheny. Invitations may be sent to Mrs. Huntley, Lawn St. Soho, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. C. P. Huntington, of New York, the railroad manager, has built a beautiful chapel, at an outlay of over $50,000, in memory of his mother, for the Congregational Church of Harwinton, Conn., his native place. It is built of granite, is finished in oak, and is furnished completely in the most substantial manner.

It is desired to secure the widest possible representation of American churches at the Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in London next June. Rev. James Johnston, the Secretary of the committee that is arranging for the Conference, has come to America to confer with the Missionary Societies on the subject.

The Young People's Christian Association, of New York, will hold its Second Annual Convention, in Calvary Baptist Church, Fifty-Seventh Street, between Sixth and Seventh Avenues, on Thursday, Dec. 8. The sessions commence at 2 and 7 p.m. Full particulars may be had from the Secretary, A. L. Whitelaw, Jun., 391 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Missionary Doane, of Ponape, whose case recently commanded general attention, since his liberation from prison by the Spanish Governor-General at Manilla, has received a letter from the latter, expressing entire confidence in him as a man and as a missionary, approving of his work, and of the work generally of the American missionaries in the Caroline Islands, and officially assuring him that in the future the missionaries would be protected from all interference and that work would suffer no interruption.

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

A SERMON FOR THE TIME PRESENT.

A New Sermon, by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear thou not: and to Zion, Let not thine hands be slack. The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; He will save, He will rejoice over thee with joy; He will rest in His love, He will joy over thee with singing. I will gather them that are sorrowful for the solemn assembly, who are of thee, to whom the reproach of it was a burden."—Zephaniah 3:16-18.

Threshing Golden Grain—An Inexhaustible Supply—Suitable to the Present Crisis—I. A Trying Time—The Church Assemblies Under Reproach—A Time of Laodicean Indifference—Worldly Conformity—Great Judgments May be Expected—II. A Source of Consolation—God in the Midst of His Church—Able to Save—Soap in a Child's Eyes—III. Brave Conduct Suggested—To be Happy—The Devil's Puzzle—Alexander's Courage—Athanasius Against the World—Fearlessness—Be Zealous.

HOLY Scripture is wonderfully full and abiding in its inner sense. It is a springing well, whereat you may draw, and draw again; for as you draw, it springs up forever new and fresh. It is a well of water springing up everlastingly. What would you say of a man who had wheat upon his barn floor, and threshed it until he had beaten out the last golden grain; but the next day he went and threshed again, and brought back as much as the day before; and on the day after, again taking his flail, he went to the same threshing, and again brought back his measure as full as at the first, and so on for all the days of the year? Would it not seem to you as a fairy tale? It would certainly be

A Surprising Miracle.

But what would you say if, throughout a long life, this miracle could be prolonged? Yet we have continued to thresh the promises ever since faith was given us, and we have carried away our full portion every day. I will not dwell upon the specific application of the text before us; I do not doubt that it was specially fulfilled as it was intended; and if there still remains some special piece of history to which this passage alludes, it will again be fulfilled in due time; but this I know, that those who have lived between whiles have found this promise true to them. Children of God have used these promises under all sorts of circumstances, and have derived the utmost comfort from them; and this morning I feel as if the text had been newly written for the present occasion, for it is in every syllable most suitable to the immediate crisis. If the Lord had fixed his eye upon the condition of His Church just now, and had written this passage only for this year of grace 1887, it could scarcely have been more adapted to the occasion. Our business shall be to show this; and I would aim at much more.

I. At the eighteenth verse, we notice for God's people. The solemn assembly had fallen under reproach. The solemn assemblies of Israel were her glory; her great days of festival and sacrifice were the gladness of the land. To the faithful their holy days were their holidays. But a reproach had fallen upon the solemn assembly, and I believe it is so now at this present moment. It is a sad affliction when in our solemn assemblies the brilliance of the gospel light is dimmed by error. The clearness of the testimony is spoiled when doubtful voices are scattered among the people, and those who ought to preach the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, are telling out for doctrines the imaginations of men, and the inventions of the age. Instead of revelation, we have philosophy, falsely so-called; instead of divine infallibility, we have surmises and larger hopes. The gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, is taught as the production of progress, a growth, a thing to be amended and corrected year by year.

A Trying Day

If added to this we should see creeping over the solemn assembly of the church a lifelessness, an indifference, and a lack of spiritual power, it is painful to a high degree. When the vitality of religion is despised, and gatherings for prayer are neglected, what are we coming to? The present period of church history is well portrayed by the church of Laodicea, which was neither cold nor hot. That church gloried that she was rich and increased in goods, and had need of nothing, while all the while her Lord was outside, knocking at the door, a door closed against Him. That passage is constantly applied to the unconverted, with whom it has nothing to do; it has to do with a lukewarm church, with a church that thought itself to be in an eminently prosperous condition, while her living Lord, in the doctrine of His atoning sacrifice, was denied an entrance. Oh, if He had found admission—and He was eager to find it—she would soon have flung away her imaginary wealth, and He would have given her gold tried in the furnace, and white raiment with which she might be clothed. Alas! she is content without her Lord, for she has education, oratory, science, and a thousand other baubles. Zion's solemn assembly is under a cloud indeed, when the teaching of Jesus and His apostles is of small account with her.

If in addition to this, worldly conformity spreads in the church, so that the vain amusements of the world are shared in by the saints, then is there reason enough for lamentation, even as Jeremiah cried: "How is the gold become dim?" Her Nazarites, who were purer than snow and whiter than milk, have become blacker than a coal. "All our enemies have opened their mouths against us." If no longer there is a clear distinction between the church and the world, but professed followers of Jesus have joined hands with unbelievers, then may we mourn indeed! Woe worth the day! An ill time has happened to the church and to the world also.

We May Expect Great Judgments, for the Lord will surely be avenged on such a people as this. Know ye not of old that when the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair, and they were joined unto them, then the flood came and swept them all away? I need not pursue this subject further, lest our burdens take from us the time for consolation.

It appears from the text that there were some to whom the reproach was a burden. They could not make sport of sin. True, there were many who said that the evil did not exist at all, and others who declared that it was not present in any degree. Yes, and more hardened spirits declared that what was considered to be a reproach was really a thing to be boasted of, the very glory of the century. Thus they huffed the matter, and made the mourning of the conscientious to be a theme for jest. But there was a remnant to whom the reproach of it was a burden; these could not bear to see such a calamity.

The sins of the church of God are the sorrows of all living members of it. This also marks a healthy sensibility, a vital spirituality. Those who are unspiritual care nothing for truth or grace: they look to finances, and numbers, and respectability. Utterly carnal men care for none of these things; and so long as the political aims of Dissenters are progressing, and there is an advance in social position, it is enough for them. But men whose spirits are of God would sooner see the faithful persecuted than see them desert the truth, sooner see churches in the depths of poverty full of holy zeal than rich churches dead in worldliness.

Spiritual Men

care for the church even when she is in an evil case, and cast down by her adversaries: "Thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof." The house of the Lord is to many of us our own house, His family is our family. Unless the Lord Jesus be extolled, and His gospel conquer, we feel that our own personal interests are blighted, and we ourselves are in disgrace. It is no small thing to us: it is our life.

When the pure gospel is not preached, God's people are robbed of the strength which they need in their life-journey. I know many of the people of God living in different parts of this country to whom the Sabbath is very little of a day of rest, for they hear no truth in which rest is to be found, but they are worried and which neither glorify God nor benefit the souls of men. In many a place the sheep look up and are not fed. This causes much disquietude and breeds doubts and questionings, and thus strength is turned to weakness, and the work of faith, the labor of love, and the patience of hope are all kept in a halting state. This is a grievous evil, and it is all around us. Then, alas! many are "driven out," of whom the nineteenth verse says, "I will gather her that was driven out." By false doctrine many are made to wander from the fold. It is terrible to me that this dreadful blight should come upon our churches; for the hesitating are driven to destruction, the weak are staggered, and even the strong are perplexed. The false teachers of these days would, if it were possible, deceive the very elect. This makes our hearts very sorrowful. How can we help it?

Wearied With Novelties

II. Secondly, let us think of something which shines like a star amid the darkness. The second verse of the text presents

A Ground of Consolation.

Here is a rich text indeed. This passage is like a great sea, while I am as a little child making pools in the sand which skirts its boundless flood. A series of discourses might be founded on this one verse: I mean the seventeenth.

Our great consolation in the worst times lies in our God. The very name of our covenant God—"the Lord thy God"—is full of good cheer. Children of God, whatever you have not got, you have a God in whom you may greatly glory. Having God you have more than all things, for all things come of Him: and if all things were blotted out, He could restore all things simply by His will. He speaketh, and it is done; He commandeth, and it stands fast. O believer, the Lord God is altogether and wholly your God! All His wisdom, all His foresight, all His power, all His immutability—all Himself is yours. As for the church of God, when she is in her lowest estate she is still established and endowed in the best possible sense—established by the divine decree, and endowed by the possession of God all-sufficient. The gates of hell shall not prevail against her.

To strengthen this consolation, we notice next, that this God is in the midst of us. He is not a long way off, to be sought with dufficulty, if haply we may find Him. The Lord is a God nigh at hand, and ready to deliver His people. Is it not delightful to think that we cry not to God across the ocean, for He is here? We look not up to Him from afar, as though he dwelt beyond the stars, neither do we think of Him as hidden in the fathomless abyss; but the Lord is very near. Our God is "Jehovah in the midst of thee." Let us think of this when we are going forth to Christian service: "The Lord of hosts is with us." When you call your class together in the Sabbath school, say to your Lord, "If Thy presence go not with me, carry me not up hence." Ah, friends! if we have God with us, we can bear to be deserted by men.

Let us go a step further, and note that our consolation is largely to be found in the fact that this God in the midst of us is full of power to save. "The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; He will save." Come, my brother, we see around us this and that to discourage us; let us, like David, encourage ourselves in the Lord our God. We may very well forget all difficulties, since the God who is in the midst of us is mighty to save. Let us pray, then, that He will save; that from lukewarmness and from deadly error; that He will save her from her worldiness and formalism; save her from unconverted ministers and ungodly members. Let us not seek power of rhetoric, much less of wealth; but let us look for the power which saves. This is the one thing I crave. Oh, that God would save souls! I say to myself, after being badgered and worried through the week by the men of modern thought: "I will go my way and preach Christ's gospel, and win souls." One lifting up of Jesus Christ crucified is more to me than all the cavillings of the men who are wise above what is written. Converts are our unanswerable arguments. "Happy is the man," saith the Psalm, "that hath his quiver full of them: they shall speak with the enemies in the gate." Blessed is the man who has many spiritual children born to God under his ministry; for his converts are his defence. Beholding the man who was healed standing with Peter and John, they could say nothing against them. If souls are saved by the gospel, the gospel is proved in the surest manner. Let us care more about conversions than about organizations. If souls are brought into union with Christ,

He Will Save His Church

We May Let Other Unions Go.

We go yet further, and we come to great deeps: behold God's joy in His people. "He will rejoice over thee with joy." Think of this! The prodigal son wept in his father's bosom, but the father rejoiced over his son. We are questioning, doubting, sorrowing, trembling; and all the while He who sees the end from the beginning knows what will come out of the present disquietude, and therefore rejoices. Let us rise in faith to share the joy of God. Let no man's heart fail him because of the taunts of the enemy. Rather let the chosen of God rouse themselves to courage, and participate in that joy of God which never ceaseth,

It is added, "He will rest in His love." I do not know any Scripture which is more full of wonderful meaning than this, "He shall rest in His love," as if our God had in His people found satisfaction. He comes to

An Anchorage:

He has reached His desire. As when a Jacob, full of love to Rachel, has at length ended the years of his service, and is married to his well-beloved, and his heart is at rest; so is it spoken in parable of the Lord our God, Jesus sees of the travail of His soul when His people are won to Him; He has been baptized with His baptism for His church, and He is no longer straitened, for His desire is fulfilled. It is right that we should be discontented with ourselves, yet this holy restlessness should not rob us of our perfect peace in Christ Jesus. If the Lord hath rest in us, shall we not have rest in Him? If He rests in His love, cannot we rest?

He sees no cause of alarm as to His redeemed, nor as to the cause of truth and the reign of righteousness. As to His true church, He knows that she is right, or that He will make her right. She is being transformed into the image of Jesus, and He rests in the full assurance that the image will ere long be complete. He can carry out His own purposes in His own way and time. He can see the harvest as well as the sowing; therefore He doth "rest in His love." You have seen a mother wash her child, and as she washes its face the child perhaps is crying, for it does not for the present enjoy the cleansing operation. Does the mother share the child's grief? Does she also cry? Oh, no! she rejoices over her babe, and rests in her love, knowing that the light affliction of the little one will work its real good. Often our griefs are no deeper than the cry of a child, because of the soap in its eyes, While the church is being washed with tribulations and persecutions, God is resting in His love. You and I are wearying, but God is resting.

Sometimes also the Lord does not speak to His people: we cannot get a cheering word from Him; and then we sigh for a promise, and long for a visit of His love; but if He be thus silent, let us know that He is only silent in His love. It is not the silence of wrath, but of love, His love is not changed, even though He does not comfort us.

> "His thoughts are high, His love is wise,
> His wounds a cure intend;
> And though He does not always smile,
> He loves unto the end."

III. I close with a brief word upon the Brave Conduct Suggested Thereby.

There are three things for God's people to do. The first is, to be happy. Read verse fourteen—"Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all thy heart, O daughter of Jerusalem." Any man can sing when his cup is full of delights; the believer alone has songs when waters of a bitter cup are wrung out to him. Any sparrow can chirp in the daylight; it is only the nightingale that can sing in the dark. Children of God, whenever the enemies seem to prevail over you, whenever the serried ranks of the foe appear sure of victory, then begin to sing. Your victory will come with your song. It is a very puzzling thing to the devil to hear saints sing when he sets his foot on them. He cannot make it out: the more he oppresses them, the more they rejoice.

Let us resolve to be all the merrier when the enemy dreams that we are utterly routed. The more opposition, the more we will rejoice in the Lord: the more discouragement, the more confidence. Splendid was the courage of Alexander when they told him that there were hundreds of thousands of Persians. "Yet," he said, "one butcher fears not myriads of sheep." "Ah!" said another, "when the Persians draw their bows, their arrows are so numerous that they darken the sun." "It will be fine to fight in the shade," cried the hero. O friends, we know whom we have believed, and we are sure of triumph! Let us not think for a single second, if the odds against us are ten thousand to one, that this is a hardship; rather let us wish that they were a million to one, that the glory of the Lord might be all the greater in the conquest which is sure. When Athanasius was told that everybody was denying the Deity of Christ, then he said, "I, Athanasius, against the world;" Athanasius contra mundum became a proverbial expression. Brethren, it is splendid to be quite of the Lord. Suppose we had half-a-dozen with us. Six men are not much increase to strength, and possibly they may be a cause of weakness, by needing to be looked after. If you are quite alone, so much the better: there is the more room for God. When desertions have cleaned the place out, and left you no friend, now every corner can be filled with Deity. As long as there is so much that is visible to rely upon, and so much to hope in, there is so much the less room for simple trust in God: but now our song is of the Lord alone; "for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee."

Alone in the Warfare

The next duty is fearlessness: "Fear thou not." What! not a little? No. "Fear thou not." But surely I may show some measure of trembling? No "Fear thou not."

Tie that Knot Tight

about the throat of all your unbelief. "Fear thou not:" neither this day, nor any day of thy life. When fear comes in, drive it away; give it no space. If God rests in His love, and if God sings, what canst thou have to do with fear? Have you never known passengers on board ship, when the weather was rough, comforted by the calm behavior of the captain? One simple-minded soul said to his friend, "I am sure there is no cause for fear, for I heard the captain whistling." Surely, if the captain is at ease, and with him is all the responsibility, the passenger may be still more at peace. If the Lord Jesus at the helm is singing, let us not be fearing. Let us have done with every timorous accent. O rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him. "Your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; He will come and save you."

Lastly, let us be zealous: "Let not thine hands be slack." Now is the time when every Christian should do more for God than ever. Let us plan great things for God, and let us expect great things from God. "Let not thine hands be slack." Now is the hour for redoubled prayers and labors. Since the adversaries are busy, let us be busy also. If they think they shall make a full end of us, let us resolve to make a full end of their falsehoods and delusions. I think every Christian man should answer the challenge of the adversaries of Christ by working double tides, by giving more of his substance to the cause of God, by living more for the glory of God, by being more exact in his obedience, more earnest in his efforts, and more importunate in his prayers. "Let not thine hands be slack" in any one part of holy service.

Would God that all were on Christ's side out of this great assembly! Oh, that you would come to Jesus, and trust Him, and then live for Him in the midst of this crooked and perverse generation! The Lord be with us. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A GIRL'S JOURNEY OVER A BATTLE-FIELD.*

If any of you doubt whether it is in you to be self-controlled and masters of yourselves, remember that unless you are very bad indeed, you must be so in the presence of a little child. Sir William Napier describes, in his history of the Peninsular War, how affecting it was to see, at the battle of Busaco in Portugal, a beautiful Portuguese orphan girl coming down the mountains, driving an ass loaded with all her property through the midst of the armies. She passes over the field of battle with a childish simplicity, scarcely understanding which were French and which were English, and no one on either side was so hard-hearted as to touch her.

Let me give you two stories which show how the strongest men are open to those tender, kindly feelings which little children are given by our heavenly Father to promote in all of us. That same Sir William Napier once, in one of his walks, met with a little girl of five years old sobbing over a pitcher she had broken. She, in her innocence, asked him to mend it. He told her that he could not mend it, but he would meet her trouble by giving her sixpence to buy a new one, if she would meet him there at the same hour the next evening, as he had no money in his purse that day. When he returned home he found that there was an invitation waiting for him, which he particularly wished to accept. But he could not then have met the little girl at the time stated, and he gave up the invitation, saying, "I could not disappoint her; she trusted me so implicitly." That was the true Christian gentleman and soldier.

Another example is that of Martin Luther, one of the fiercest and most courageous men that ever lived. But when he thought of his little children, especially of his little daughter, he was gentle and kind as any woman. His daughter, Magdalen, died when she was thirteen years of age, and it is most affecting to read of his grief and at the same time of his resignation. "Magdalen, my little daughter, thou wouldst gladly stay with thy father here, and thou wouldst also gladly go to thy Father yonder. Ah! thou dear little thing, thou shalt rise again and shine like a star; yea, like the sun. Her face, her words, cleave to our heart, remain fixed in its depths living and dying—the words and looks of that most dutiful child. Blessed be the Lord Jesus Christ, who called, chose and magnified her. I would for myself and all of us, that we might attain to such a death; yea, rather to such a life."

Dr. Marshman's Boyhood.

There was a boy who used to carry parcels from a bookseller to his customers. He went every day trudging through the streets with a parcel of books under his arm, and one day he was sent to the house of a great duke with three folio volumes of Clarendon's History of England. The parcel was so heavy, his shoulders were so tired, that as he passed through Broad Sanctuary, opposite Westminster Abbey, he laid down his load and sobbed at the thought that there was nothing higher in life for him to look forward to than being a bookseller's porter. Suddenly he looked up at the great building which towered above him. He thought of the high thoughts and great men enshrined within it. He brushed away his tears, replaced the load on his shoulder, and walked on with a light heart, determined to bide his time. And his time came at last. He became one of the best and most learned of our Indian missionaries.

* From "Sermons for Children," by Dean Stanley. A beautiful little volume, containing among others, the last sermon the Dean ever preached. These sermons are full of excellent teaching in simple language, and so full of anecdotes and incidents that every intelligent child would derive benefit from their perusal. 157 pages; price $1; published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

John Burns, the London Socialist.

The Socialist Riots in Trafalgar Square, London, on Nov. 13.

JOHN BURNS AND THE LONDON RIOT.

(See Portrait and Illustration.)

LONDON was again on Sunday, November 13, the scene of a fierce conflict between the police, assisted by soldiers on the one side, and a mob led by John Burns, the socialist engineer (whose portrait appears on this page), Mr. R. Cunningham Graham, a radical member of Parliament and other well-known men on the other side. A meeting had been called by the twenty-two Radical clubs in the various districts of the city, to be held in Trafalgar Square, on the Sunday afternoon. The reasons for selecting that place for the meeting were, that the stone pedestals supporting Landseer's bronze lions at the foot of Nelson's column make an excellent place for speakers to stand, and also that an imposing meeting held there in the immediate vicinity of the aristocratic clubs, might be expected to impress and overawe the Tory statesmen. The authorities, however, objected to the meeting being held there, because the Square is in the centre of a densely populated district in which there is much traffic, and is surrounded by stores containing property of enormous value, which the rougher and more unscrupulons persons who might be attracted to such a gathering might be tempted to loot. Sir Charles Warren the chief of police, therefore forbade the meeting, basing his action on the technical ground that the Square is the property of the Crown.

The conveners of the meeting, however, resolved to hold the meeting in spite of the authorities, and, accordingly, preparations for a struggle were made on both sides. Sir Charles Warren massed a strong force of police in the Square, and posted a regiment of cavalry and a detachment of infantry behind the National Gallery which forms one side of the Square. Mounted police were also stationed in the various streets which converge on the Square, with instructions to break up any procession which approached. This showed astute generalship on Warren's part, as it enabled him to deal separately with each contingent as it arrived from its local headquarters before it could combine with the general mass. As each procession from north, south and east wended its way, with red flags flying, to the rendezvous, it was broken up into detached groups, which, as right of way was not forbidden, filtered into the Square. There they were met by police patrols, who would not allow them to stand around, but ordered them to "move on."

Some rough scenes took place in the side streets, as the police not only broke up the procession, but seized and confiscated the red flags in spite of a stubborn resistance, in which the crowd used sticks and stones and the police their clubs. In one of these fights Graham, the member of Parliament, received a severe clubbing about the head, and he and Burns, who were marching at the head of four hundred men, were both arrested. The struggle reached a crisis when a procession of seven wagons loaded with men bearing red flags arrived from East London. The police tried to turn the horses' heads but failed. They would not, however, allow them to stand, but kept them moving around the four sides of the Square. By four o'clock the open space was so packed with people that movement became impossible, and a socialist orator climbed up beside one of the lions and commenced an inflammatory harangue. He was speedily dragged down by the police, who forced their way through the throng with their clubs. Red flags were still waving at various points, and one of them was confided to the care of one of the women, of whom there were many in the crowd. This flag was captured after a desperate struggle, and the woman who carried it was borne off the field in a faint.

The sun was setting, and the police, exhausted by their long struggle, were fearful of the consequences of having the Square crowded at night. They declared that every thief and pickpocket in London was in the crowd, longing for the opportunity to plunder. Two stores had their windows broken already, and there had been a rush for the contents. At this juncture the regiment of cavalry appeared on the scene, and at its head a magistrate holding in his hand a printed paper which every one knew to be the Riot act. The soldiers, eight abreast, trotted around the Square, while the police, ranging themselves at the edge of the sidewalks, hustled along the roughs as they ran from under the feet of the horses. Again there was rough fighting; several of the police received blows from sticks and stones, and a few were stabbed with knives, and many of the rioters were badly clubbed; but the neck of the riot was broken. The mob dispersed before the cavalry, and was unable to re-form, as squads of soldiers galloped up each side street as indications of trouble appeared. Quiet reigned at nightfall, but the day had been one of terror and excitement, such as London has not seen for more than twenty years. Public opinion is generally on the side of the police, who showed much patience and magnanimity, and it is, besides, clearly seen that while there are large parks accessible, there is no reason for holding so large a meeting in the city, where it is an inconvenience, and a menace to property.

DR. PHILLIPS AND HIS NEPHEW.

(See Illustration on Page 749.)

"YOU are late, dear" said Mrs. Phillips, a gentle, motherly lady, as her husband, a physician in extensive practice, entered the family dining-room and took his place at the table.

"Yes, papa," said his eldest daughter, "and you ought not to be late, for you promised to take us to the concert. You did not know but it might have been a bad disappointment for us. It would have been, if Harold had not offered to be our escort. What is it that you call such conduct when you sit in judgment on us—a grave dereliction of duty?" And the playful girl uttered the words in a tone of voice as near to her father's bass as her vocal organs would allow. "Have you anything to say in your defence, sir?"

"Patients, dear," said her father, with an air of mock humility.

"We have been exercising patience for nearly an hour, and it is exhausted. That is not a defence. A person on trial should not lecture the court."

"If the court were not so obtuse it would understand that the culprit referred to his patients, not to the feeble and attenuated quality which the court calls its patience. The defence is valid; the delay was caused by patients."

"You are forgiven, sir. Your nephew will supply his uncle's deficiencies to perfection."

"Then get you gone, and leave your father to eat his dinner in peace."

The girls were not slow to obey the injunction, and Dr. Phillips sat down to enjoy his dinner and a cosy evening with his wife.

"I am glad Harold is taking the girls," he said presently. "I shall be happier at home, and he will be a more lively companion for them than I. He is getting quite a bright, handsome young fellow, and prospering too. I hear an excellent account of his business capacity."

"Yes," said Mrs. Phillips; "he has developed wonderfully of late. But I am a little nervous about him, he seems to have so little moral principle. Several expressions I have heard him use imply a recklessness that is dangerous in a young man."

"Oh, I hope not; he speaks carelessly, and you may have misunderstood him. I cannot believe that the son of so good a woman as my sister could be lacking in morality. The thought of his dead mother must be sufficient to keep him from dishonor. I wish every young man who is inclined to immorality could stand at the bedside I have just left. It would teach him a lesson."

"A new patient, dear?"

"Yes; and one of the most interesting I have ever had. A simple, affectionate, gentle creature, quite refined and lady-like in manner, who would have made the most fastidious man a good wife; her presence in any home would brighten it. Some wicked, merciless cur has taken advantage of her simplicity and led her to ruin."

"Oh, that is terrible," said Mrs. Phillips. "Will she live?"

"Very doubtful, I should say. She has no heart now; her spirit seems completely crushed; as she said to-day, why should she wish to live, now that her good name is gone. Even her own sex would shun her. She seems so listless and despairing that medical treatment will have a difficulty in saving her. Yes, I think she will die. Yet the little creature is brave, and shows marvellous fidelity. She will not expose the man who has done the cowardly deed, Obstinately refused to tell me his name, though I pressed her. Oh! it is a mean outrage; the fellow deserves to be thrust out of society. But he will escape. Even if he were exposed he would find no door shut against him. That is the shame of it. The woman is an outcast, but the man suffers no punishment."

A few days later Dr. Phillips, coming home from a round of professional visits, found his family gathered around the luncheon-table. His favorite nephew, Harold, was seated among them and he rose as the Doctor entered, and greeted him with warm affection. "You are so busy a man, uncle," he said, "that one scarcely ever sees you except in your carriage. I thought you never came home. How are you?"

To the surprise of the assembled family, the Doctor, instead of grasping his nephew's extended hand, held up both his own with a horrified, indignant expression of face. "How dare you offer me your hand?" he said. "How can you have the effrontery to come into my house? I forbid you ever to enter it again. You are a disgrace to your family, sir!"

"What in the world do you mean?" asked the young man in astonishment at the fierce denunciation of a man whose good-will he was most anxious to retain, and who was his nearest relative in the world, and from whom he had hitherto received nothing but kindness.

"Come into my room and I will tell you," said the Doctor sternly. "Look at this portrait," he said when they were alone. "You will not deny that it is your own. The poor dead girl to whom you gave it, has asked to have it buried in the coffin with her. She loved you to the last, you see. How did you return her love? Betrayal and desertion are all the reward she had from you."

Dr. Phillips Surprises His Nephew.

The young man hung his head in shame. "I am very sorry," he said at last, "but I do not see why you should be so severe. Indiscretions of that kind are common enough."

"That is true," said the Doctor, "but if every man would show his abhorrence of them, and treat the perpetrators as I shall treat you, they would be far less common. Until you feel a proper repentance and prove it by your life you are a stranger to me. I will not acknowledge you, nor allow my family to associate with you. If your victim had lived she would have been an outcast, and if every man felt as I do about it you would be an outcast too. At any rate, I will do my duty."

And Harold went from his uncle's presence feeling that he would give his right hand if he could have undone the past by the sacrifice.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 735.)

A Direct Prayer—Asked for Five Thousand Dollars—Some Small Gifts—Subscriptions Promised—A Seamstress Gives $500—Character of the Donor—Paying her Father's Debts—Other Charities—Sinks Into Poverty—Ministered to—An Interval of Suspense—An Offer of Premises.

WHEN, of late, the thoughts of establishing an Orphan House, in dependence upon the Lord, revived in my mind, during the first two weeks I only prayed, that, if it were of the Lord He would bring it about; but, if not, that He graciously would be pleased to take all thoughts about it out of my mind. My uncertainity about knowing the Lord's mind did not arise from questioning whether it would be pleasing in His sight that there should be an abode and Scriptural education provided for destitute fatherless and motherless children; but whether it were His will, that I should be the instrument of setting such an object on foot as my hands were already more than filled. My comfort, however, was, that if it were His will, He would provide not merely the means, but also suitable individuals, to take care of the children, so that my part of the work would take such a portion of my time, as, considering the importance of the matter, I might give, notwithstanding my many other engagements.

The whole of those two weeks I never asked the Lord for money, or for persons to engage in the work. On December 5, however, the subject of my prayer all at once became different. I was reading Psalm 81, and was particularly struck, more than at any time before, with verse 10: "Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it." I thought a few moments about these words, and then was led to apply them to the case of the Orphan House. It struck me that I had never asked the Lord for anything concerning it, except to know His will respecting its being established or not; and I then fell on my knees, and opened my mouth wide, asking Him for much.

I asked in submission to His will, and without fixing a time when He should answer my petition. I prayed that He would give me a house, i. e., either as a loan, or that someone might be led to pay the rent for one, or that one might be given permanently for this object further, I asked Him for £1,000; and likewise for suitable individuals to take care of the children. Besides this, I have been since led to ask the Lord to put into the hearts of His people to send me articles of furniture for the house, and some clothes for the children.

When I was asking the petition, I was fully aware what I was doing, i. e., that I was asking for something which I had no natural prospect of obtaining from the brethren whom I know, but which was not too much for the Lord to grant. As I have stated that I desire to see clearly the Lord's will concerning the Orphan House, by His providing both the means and suitable individuals for it, I will mention how He has been dealing with me in these respects.

December 7, 1835. Anonymously was given 2s. In the paper in which they were inclosed was written, "1s. for the Orphan House, and 1s. for the Scriptural Knowledge Institution. In the name of the Lord alone lift up your banners. so shall you prosper." 1s. besides was given.

December 9. I found 3s. in the box, which I had put up two days before in my room for the Orphan House, and a large wardrobe was given in just before the meeting in the evening, when I stated publicly my desire concerning this object before the brethren. After the meeting 10s. was given. Also a sister offered herself at the same time for the work.

December 10. This morning I received a letter, in which a brother and sister wrote thus: "We propose ourselves for the service of the intended Orphan House, if you think us qualified for it; also to give up all the furniture, etc., which the Lord has given us, for its use; and to do this without receiving any salary whatever; believing that if it be the will of the Lord to employ us, He will supply all our need, etc." In the evening a brother brought from several individuals three dishes, twenty-eight plates, three basins, one jug, four mugs, three salt stands, one grater, four knives, and five forks.

December 12. While I was praying this morning that that the Lord would give us a fresh token of His favor concerning the Orphan House, a brother brought three dishes, 12 plates, one basin, and one blanket. After this had been given I thanked God, and asked Him to give even this day another encouragement. Shortly after £50 was given, and that by an individual from whom, for several reasons, I could not have expected this sum. Thus the hand of God appeared so much the more clearly. Even then I was led to pray, that this day the Lord would give still more. In the evening, accordingly, there were sent 29 yards of print. Also a sister offered herself for the work.

December 13. A brother was influenced this day to give 4s. per week, or £10 8s. yearly, as long as the Lord gives the means; 8s. was given by him as two weeks' subscriptions. To-day a brother and sister offered themselves, and all their furniture, and all the provisions which they have in the house, if they can be employed in the concerns of the Orphan House, December 14. To-day a sister offered her services for the work. In the evening another sister offered herself for the Institution.

December 15. A sister brought from several friends ten basins, eight mugs, one plate, five dessert spoons, six tea spoons, one skimmer, one toasting fork, one flour dredge, three knives and forks, one sheet, one pillow case, one tablecloth; also £1. In the afternoon were sent 55 yards of sheeting, and 12 yards of calico.

December 16. I took out of the box of my room 1s.

December 17.—I was again rather cast down last evening and this morning about the Orphanage, questioning whether I ought to be engaged in this way, and was led to ask the Lord to give me some further encouragement. Soon after were sent by a brother two pieces of print, the one seven and the other twenty-three yards, six yards of calico, four pieces of lining (about four yards altogether), a sheet and a yard measure. This evening another brother brought a clothes-horse, three frocks, four pinafores, six handkerchiefs, three counterpanes, one blanket, two pewter salt-cellars, six tin cups and six metal teaspoons; he also brought 3s. 6d., given to him by three different individuals. At the same time he told me that it had been put into the heart of an individual to send £100.

December 18. This afternoon I received the £100 above referred to. [Since the publication of the second edition it has pleased the Lord to take to Himself the donor of this £100, and I therefore give in this present edition some further account of the donation and the donor, as the particulars respecting both, with God's blessing, may tend to edification. Indeed, I confess that I am delighted to be at liberty, in consequence of the death of the donor, to give the following short narrative, which, during her lifetime, I should not have considered it wise to publish.

A. L., the donor, was known to me almost from the beginning of my coming to Bristol in 1832. She earned her bread by needlework, by which she gained from 2s to 5s. per week; the average, I suppose, was not more than about 3s. 6d. (84 cents), as she was weak in body. But this dear, humble sister was content with her small earnings, and I do not remember ever to have heard her utter a word of complaint on account of earning so little. Some time before I had been led to establish an Orphan House, her father had died, through which event she had come into the possession of £480 ($2,400), which sum had been left to her (and the same amount to her brother and two sisters) by her grandmother, but of which her father had had the interest during his lifetime.

The father, who had been much given to drinking, died in debt, which debts the children wished to pay; but the rest, beside, A. L., did not like to pay the full amount, and offered to the creditors 5s. on the pound (25 cents on the dollar), which they gladly accepted, as they had not the least legal claim upon the children. After the debts had been paid according to this agreement, A. L. said to herself, "However sinful my father may have been, yet he was my father, and as I have the means of paying his debts to the full amount, I ought, as a believing child of God, to do so, seeing that my brothers and sisters will not do it."

She then went to all the creditors secretly, and paid the full amount of the debts, which took £40 more of her money, beside her share which she had given before. Her brother and two sisters now gave £50 each of their property to their mother; but A. L. said to herself, "I am a child of God, surely I ought to give my mother twice as much as my brother and sisters." She, therefore, gave her mother £100. Shortly after this she sent me the £100 toward the Orphan House.

I was not a little surprised when I received this money from her, for I had always known her as a poor girl, and I had never heard anything about her having come into the possession of this money, and her dress had never given me the least indication of an alteration in her circumstances. Before, however, accepting this money from her, I had a long conversation with her.

But I had not conversed long with this beloved sister before I found that she was, in this particular, a quiet, calm, considerate follower of the Lord Jesus, and one who desired, in spite of what human reason might say, to act according to the words of our Lord: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth" (Matthew 6:19.) Sell that ye have, and give alms" (Luke 12:33.) When I remonstrated with her, in order that I might see whether she had counted the cost, she said to me: "The Lord Jesus has given His last drop of blood for me, and should I not give Him this £100? Rather than that the Orphan House should not be established, I will give all the money I have."

When I saw that she had weighed the matter according to the Word of God, and that she had counted the cost, I could not but take the money, and admire the way which the Lord took to use this poor, sickly sister as an instrument in so considerable a measure, for helping, at its very commencement, this work, which I had set about solely in dependence upon the living God. At that time she would also have me take £5 for the poor saints in communion with us. I mention here particularly that this dear sister kept all these things to herself, and did them as much as possible in secret; and during her lifetime, I suppose, not six brethren and sisters among us knew that she ever possessed £480, or that she had given £100 toward the Orphan House.

Some time after this £100 had been given by her, brother C——r (who was then laboring as a city missionary in connection with the Scriptural Knowledge Institution, and who about that very time happened to visit from house to house in that part of the city where A. L. lived). told me that he had met with many cases, in which A. L. had given to one poor woman a bedstead, to another some bedding, to another some clothes, to another food; and thus instance upon instance of acts of love, on the part of our dear sister A. L., had come before him. I relate one instance more.

August 4, 1836, seven months and a half after she had given the £100, she came one morning to me and said: "Last evening I felt myself particularly stirred up to pray about the funds of the Scriptural Knowledge Institution: but whilst praying I thought what good is it for me to pray for means, if I do not give when I have the means? and I have, therefore, brought you this £5" As I had reason to believe that by this time by far the greater part of her money was gone, I again had a good deal of conversation with her, to see whether she really did count the cost, and whether this donation also was given unto the Lord, or from momentary excitement, in which case it was better not to give the money. However, she was at this time also steadfast, grounded upon the Word of God, and evidently constrained by the love of Christ; and all the effect my conversation had upon her was, that she said: "You must take five shillings in addition to the £5, as a proof that I give the £5 cheerfully." And thus she made me take the £5 5s.

Four things are especially to be noticed about this beloved sister, with reference to all this period of her earthly pilgrimage: 1, She did all these things in secret, avoiding to the utmost all show about them, and thus proved that she did not desire the praise of man. 2, She remained, as before, of an humble and lowly mind, and she proved thus, that she had done what she did unto the Lord, and not unto man, 3, Her dress remained, during all the time that she had this comparative abundance, the same as before. It was clean, yet as simple and inexpensive as it was at the time when all her income had consisted of 3s. 6d., or at most 5s., per week. There was not the least difference as to her lodging, dress. manner of life, etc. 4. But that which is as lovely as the rest, she continued working at her needle all this time. She earned her 2s. 6d., or 3s., or a little more, a week, by her work, as before; whilst she gave away the money in sovereigns or five pound notes. At last all her money was gone, and that some years before she fell asleep; and as her bodily health had never been good as long as I had known her, and was now much worse, she found herself pecuniarily dependent upon the Lord, who never forsook her up to the last moment of her earthly course. The very commencement of her life of simple dependence upon the Lord was such as greatly to encourage her. She related the facts to me as I give them here.

When she was completely without money, and when her little stock of tea and butter was also gone, two sisters in the Lord called on her. After they had been a little while with her, they told her that they had come to take tea with her. She said to herself, "I should not at all mind to go without my tea, but this is a great trial, that I have nothing to set before these sisters;" and she gave them, therefore, to understand, that their staying to tea would not be convenient at that time. The sisters, however, I suppose, not understanding the hint, remained, and presently brought out of a basket, tea, sugar, butter and bread, and thus there was all that was requisite for the tea, and the remainder of the provisions was left with her. She told me that at that time she was not accustomed to trials of faith, as she afterwards was.

Her body became weaker and weaker, in consequence of which she was able to work very little for many months before she died; but the Lord supplied her with all she needed: though she never asked for anything. For instance, a sister in communion with us sent her for many months all the bread she used, Her mouth was full of thanksgiving, even in the midst of the greatest bodily sufferings. She fell asleep in Jesus in January, 1844. I have related these facts, because they tend to the praise of the Lord, and may be instrumental in stirring up other children of God to follow this dear departed sister in so far as she followed the Lord Jesus; but, in particular, that I may show in what remarkable ways the Lord proved, from the beginning, that the Orphan House was His, and not mine.

(To be continued.)

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles among others are contained in the number for November:

The Seven Seals Fully Explained in Their Double Fulfilment. Year-Day and Literal-Day. By Rev. M. Baxter.

Sin During the Millennium. By the Rev. E. J. Hytche, (Part II.)

Socialism and Christianity.

Russian Jews' Conversion to Christianity. By Prof. G. H. Schodde, Ph. D.

Our Lord's Prophecy. By G. H. Pember.

Russia's Future in Prophecy.

Italy's Alliance with Germany.

The Jewish Movement in South Russia.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes containing the monthly numbers for 1884 or 1883 may be had; price $1.]

THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for December 4, Matt. 13 : 1-23.
Memory Text, Luke 8 : 11.

Christ's Picture Preaching—Suited to the Masses—Arrested Attention—Stimulated Thought—Led to Inquiry—The Sower Going About His Work—Carrying Good Seed—Productive Under the Right Conditions—He Does His Part in Scattering It—No Partiality, No Ground Neglected—Where the Seed Falls—The Wayside Trodden Hard—Seed Falls On It Not In It—Exposed to Birds—Sceptics, Scoffers, Trifler, Remove It—The Stony Places—An Advance for the Seed Springs Up—Superficial Persons Easily Moved—Volatile, Emotional, Impulsive Persons—Easily Discouraged—Ridicule or Trial Wither the Growth—The Thorny Ground Already Occupied—Thorns of Ambition, Averice, Vice—Life for a Time—A Conflict Inevitable—It is the Good that Dies—The Good Ground—Understanding is the First Process—Not Effected in the Other Soils—Degrees of Productiveness—What the Fruit is, See Galatians 5: 22-23.

JESUS by His teaching about the Sabbath, had greatly scandalized the ritualistic Pharisees. Knowing nothing themselves of personal contact with God, and being altogether devoid of spiritual life and spiritual power, they conceived that every mighty work which they could not do, must necessarily be the work of the devil. So "they held a council against" Jesus, "how they might destroy Him." Therefore, "He withdrew Himself from them;" Jesus never invited or provoked persecution. "And great multitudes followed Him." Though the Pharisees found in Him no form nor comeliness, and no beauty that they should desire Him, the poor and sick, the blind and infirm, the bereaved and the oppressed found all they needed. "Great and He healed them all" (Matt. 12 : 13). Among these was a man possessed of a blind and dumb devil; no uncommon thing, even in our day. Jesus healed him, and "the blind and dumb both spake and saw." It was the devil's work to destroy sight and speech; Jesus came to "destroy the works of the devil" (1 John 3 : 8), and the afflicted one recovered his faculties. Such a miracle was indisputable. The sceptics of the day could not say it was hysteria, or attempt to prove that the blindness and deafness had only been simulated. The facts were patent to all. But how was the healing to be accounted for? The multitude thought they recognized the Messiah and said, "Is not this the Son of David?" The Pharisees were mad at such an idea. The Son of David! and not even a Pharisee! Impossible! Such an idea was abhorrent to them. Yet the work was supernatural; none of their number could emulate such power. So in their blind rage against the holy Jesus, they said, "This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils." The die was cast; they had gone one step too far, and sinned a sin for which there is no forgiveness. Then it was that Jesus spoke of which "shall not be forgiven unto men, because they said He hath an unclean spirit" (Mark 3 : 30). From this time Jesus began to speak unto the multitude in parables, and when His disciples asked Him, "Why speakest Thou unto them in parables?" He said, "Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. "Therefore, speak I unto them in parables; because they, seeing, see not; and hearing, they hear not; neither do they understand."

Multitudes Followed Him,

"The Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost,"

In His wondrous considerateness of love, Jesus would not add to the condemnation of those who rejected Him; He would not increase their responsiblity, and so would speak in mysteries, under a veil. If they asked for an interpretation He would gladly explain. His first parable was significant; He said of it to His disciples, "Know ye not this parable? and how then shall ye know all parables?" (Mark 4 : 13). It was this, went forth to sow; and when he sowed, some seeds fell by the wayside, and the fowls came and devoured them up. Some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth, and forthwith they sprung up, because they had no deepness of earth; and when the sun was up they were scorched; and because they had no root, they withered away. And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprung up and choked them. But others fell into good grounds and brought forth fruit, some a hundred fold, some sixty fold, some thirty fold." Such is the story. In answer to the request of the disciples, Jesus explained the parable. "The seed is the Word of God" (Luke 8 : 11). "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man" (Matt. 13 : 37); and it is plain from what follows, that the soil on which the seed falls is the heart of man, not the intellect, which may form an opinion, or assent to a doctrine, but the heart, the affections, the will, which have power to receive the seed in such a way that it may germinate and bring forth fruit. "When anyone heareth the Word of the Kingdom and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart." The seed fell on the surface, and it was a hard, well-trodden surface, and there was no entrance for the Word. Hundreds of thousands in our churches, chapels and mission halls are like these Wayside Hearers.

"Behold a Sower

They hear and enjoy an interesting, lively service, they discuss points of doctrine and criticise, often with a certain amount of cleverness. the various defects of the preacher; but it does not strike them that the Word is a message from God to them; they look upon the service just as they would on a performance at the theatre or the circus, on the Word as they would on the last new novel, useful to while away their time for an hour, but nothing to take to heart as though it had anything to do with them. They, very likely, patronize the best preachers, and defend them against others, but they do not lay to heart the state of their own souls, nor God's claims upon them; and they ignore the fact, full of terrors for them, that the Word which Christ has spoken, and to which they have been so long indifferent, "shall judge" them "in the last day" (John 12 : 48). But there is another class of hearers: "He that received the seed into Stony Places.

The same is he that heareth the Word, and anon with joy receiveth it; "yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while; for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the Word, bye-and-bye he is offended." O how many there are like this! They go readily forward to the enquiry room or the penitent form; they eagerly sing God's praises; they rejoice in forgiveness, and they are very happy; they have got what they want, a feeling of happiness in their hearts, and as long as this lasts, they are all right; they have gone in for joy; they sought salvation for their own sakes, they have not taken into consideration that a real conversion consists in yielding up ourselves to God and accepting Him on His own terms. They have never been converted from themselves to God; they have not been turned from their own will to the will of God, they live for themselves still. As long as the happy meetings bring them more joy than the performances in the theatre, or the dance in the ballroom, or the song in the saloon, they will remain with the people of God; but when any trial comes, when people begin to speak against them, when there is a little falling off in the meetings, when the speaker to whom they are attached leaves, then they fall away. They had no root, the Word had not gone deep into the soil and got possession of the heart; it was all surface work; they could not bear the light of the Sun of Righteousness which detected their unreality, they could not bear the heat of His refining fire, and so they fell away! the Word only fell upon, and not into their hearts, and the conversion was not a real one.

"He also that received seed

Among the Thorns.

Is he that heareth the Word; and the care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the Word, and He becometh unfruitful." O, how many there are of this class! really converted, the heart really given up to God, and yet shared with something else. These are the miserable believers who go about the world with long faces, and whining voices, and grumbling dispositions; and who lead many to think, "If that is religion, the farther I keep from it the better it will be for me and my family." These are the people who have no doubt about their title to heaven, who can leave the care of their soul's salvation with God; but when it comes to the market prices, the speculations, the newest inventions, the competition of the day, you see by all their words and actions that they think God is nowhere in such things, and so they bear the burden themselves; and these things absorb the heart which should be fertilizing the good seed of the Word. They have just enough religion to make them miserable in the world, and just enough of the world to make them powerless in the church. "Their heart is divided." (Hosea 10 : 2.) Poor powerless, fruitless, dead-alive Christians, for whom the Church of Christ is not a home, but a hospital, for they never come to meeting as though they were quite at home, but only to get some sore healed, or a little eye salve, or some other remedy, for their spiritual life is below par.

O, what a relief to turn to Him "that received seed into (not on to)

The Good Ground."

When a man offers all his being to the Word of God, and gives himself up to the God who created him, the Saviour who redeemed him, and the Spirit who sanctified him, then God can make something of him. God wants all His children to be fruitful. "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit" (John 15: 16). "Herein is My Father glorified that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be My disciples" (John 15 : 8). There are some (surely they are those who are choked by the thorns) who only bear "thorns and briers" (Heb. 6 : 8), But what is the fruit which God seeks on the good ground?

The Fruit

of the Word, the fruit of the Spirit—"love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Gal. 5 : 22) which is indeed the fruit of Christ in us. God calls us as soil in which He plants His own divine nature, that where sin hath abounded, and self hath abounded, the very virtues of Christ Himself may abound. To this purpose hath He saved us, "that we shall shew forth the virtues of Him who has called us out of darkness into His marvellous light" (1 Pet. 2 : 9). A Christian who is saved, and yet unloving, is a false witness of Christ, bearing "thorns and briers," which scratch and wound other people. A selfish, touchy, grumbling Christian, shows forth not Christ's virtues, but his own failings under the name of Christ, and he does incalculable injury to the cause of God, by making people think that he is a sample of the fruit which the Word of God produces. If the soil, the heart, the life, is fully yielded up to God, then we have not to look after the cultivation. "My Father is the Husbandman," says our blessed God; and He will not fail to do His work, when He is not hindered. It is true that the good ground brings forth in different measure—with some there is the hundred fold; with some, the sixty fold; with others, only the thirty fold. Where the will is fully yielded, the good Husbandman will press everything, every circumstance in life into His service for His wheat field; trial, persecution, temptation, sorrow, as well as victories and joys, all will be forced into His service to the end that we may "bring forth fruit with patience."

FORWARD.

"Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."—Ex. xiv. 15.

Forward—let this be our motto,
Henceforth we will win the day;
Upward—Christ has gone before us
Evermore to light our way.

Forward—though our path be dreary,
And beset with cares and fears;
Bye and bye our Saviour'll meet us:
Upward—there are no more tears.

Forward—though our way be lonely,
And no kind word greets our ears;
He who notes the sparrow's falling,
Will surely wipe away each tear.

Forward—lies the land celestial,
There the pure-in-heart abide;
Unseen angels round us hovering,
Beckon upward to His side.

Forward pilgrim—just before thee
Lies that shining land of light;
Soon, aye, soon the Bridegroom cometh:
Upward—there is no more night.

Forward ever—be our watchword,
Let it ring the wide world o'er,
'Till He comes, our glorious Leader,
Comes to reign forevermore.

—Mary W. Batchelder.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

LIVING VOICES OF LIVING MEN.

Practical sermons intended for family and lay reading. 12mo, neat cloth binding, $1.25.

"Among excellent religious publications worthy of more notice than we can find space for we name 'Living Voices of Living Men,' a collection of parochial sermons written and preached in their own pulpits by some twenty-six representative ministers of the Episcopal Church. They are published as written, without editing, and have in them the effective force of blows actually delivered."—Independent.

"Is well adapted, both as to matter and style, for reading in the family worship and for lay readers' services."—Standard of the Cross.

 Copies mailed postpaid upon receipt of price.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 & 3 Bible House, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

Earth's Earliest Ages,

And Their Connection with Modern Spiritualism and Theosophy.
By Rev. G. H. Pember.

CROWN OCTAVO, CLOTH..... $1.50.

This New Prophetic Work of over 500 pages draws a parallel between our time and the age before the Deluge, showing how closely in spirit and moral tone they resemble each other, and how many of the distinguished features of the earlier age have reappeared among us in modern dress. Thus proving that it fulfils the conditions which were to indicate the time of Christ's Second Advent as recorded in Matt. xxiv. 37-39.

 Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

GRIND YOUR OWN Bone, Meal, Oyster Shells, Graham Flour & Corn in the $5 HAND MILL (F. Wilson's Patent.) 100 per cent. more made in keeping Poultry. Also POWER MILLS and FARM FEED MILLS. Circulars and testimonials sent on application. WILSON BROS. Easton, Pa.

WORK FOR ALL. $30 a week and expenses paid. Valuable outfit and particulars free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

DIAMOND DYES

COLOR EVERYTHING.

Unequalled for Silk, Wool, Cotton and all Fabrics and Fancy Goods. Brilliant, Durable and Economical. Any one can use them.

32 COLORS—10 CENTS EACH.

Remember, these are the only Pure, Harmless and Unadulterated Dyes.

Beware of other Dyes, because often Poisonous, Adulterated, Weak and Worthless.

We warrant these Dyes to color more goods, package for package, than any other Dyes ever made, and to give more brilliant and durable colors. Sample cards free.

THE DIAMOND PAINTS,

GOLD, SILVER, BRONZE and COPPER

For gilding Fancy Baskets, Frames, Lamps, Chandeliers, and for all kinds of ornamental work. Equal to any of the high-priced kinds, and only 10 cents a package. Also Artists' Black for Ebonizing.

Sold by Druggists everywhere. Send postal for Sample Card, directions for coloring Photos, doing fancy work, and making ink.

WELLS, RICHARSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

FOR GAS. BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free. FOR OIL.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed, Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

"THE WORD FOR THE DAY."

Text, Hymn and Prayer for every day in the year. Compiled by A. J. A. R.

"The Word for the Day" is an excellent little book consisting of a Scripture text, a selection from a hymn, and a brief prayer for each day in the year. The compilations are made with reference to the practical needs of every-day life. Bible verses that are helpful, inspiring, and that serve to put one on guard against the surrounding evils are chosen as the leading thought, and following them come "their echoes from the human mind." It is a book which would serve to sweeten and brighten daily life in every home.—Chautauquan.

"The word for the day" has been compiled with reference to real every-day needs not ficticious or sentimental ones. Its thoughts are very well selected, and its brief prayers are prayers indeed; for devoutness it is admirable.—New York Evangelist.

To arouse, to comfort, and to strengthen the believer. We think it will accomplish its mission.—Christian Observer.

The selections are appropriate, and the daily prayers brief and pertinent.—Western Christian Advocate.

Its circulation can hardly fall to do good.—National Presbyterian.

"The Word for the Day" is one of those strong helps to a true Christian life.

16mo, Cloth, plain, 75c.; Gilt, $1.00: American Seal $1.75; Calf, flex., $2.50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publisher, JOHN IRELAND, 1197 Broadway, N. Y.

1887 Xmas Music!

WAITING FOR SANTA CLAUS.

THE NEW CANTATA FOR CHRISTMAS TIME.
By Dr. W. H. DOANE.

Full of pretty Songs, Duetts and Choruses, interspersed with Humorous Dialogues. One of the most charming Cantatas ever written. Can be quickly learned and easily gotten up. It will afford a delightful entertainment.

Sent on receipt of 25 cts. as soon as ready.

THE TRUE LIGHT. A new Christmas Service, by Rev. ROBERT LOWRY, consisting entirely of Scripture and Song. Selections made with intelligent care. Songs original and fresh. As Xmas falls on Sunday, this service will be found especially desirable. Easily rendered by any Sunday School.

Price $4 per 100; 5cts. each by Mail.

Christmas Annual No. 18. —Contains pleasing Carols by favorite authors. An abundant supply of Songs for any Christmas Festival.

Price $3 per 100; 4cts. each by Mail.

☞ A full Catalogue sent on request.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 Randolph St., Chicago.

THE Pulpit

Yearly in Advance, $2.50. SINGLE COPY, 25 cents. Clergymen, $2.

A NEW EVANGELICAL MONTHLY CONDUCTED BY A CORPS OF EMINENT CLERGYMEN.
Devoted to Sermons, Lectures, Biblical Comments, Questions of the Day, Prayer Meeting Talks, The Sunday School Cause, Mission Work, etc. ILLUSTRATED.

By the ablest writers on Theology, Christian Ethics, Evangelistic Work, Home and Heart Culture, etc. A welcome guest to the Pastor, Teacher, and Family. Send for Club Rates and Terms to Agents.

Treasury

E. B. TREAT, Publisher, NEW YORK.

WILL PLAY 200 Tunes

ONLY $7 WITH MUSIC

THE NEW AMERICAN ROLLER ORGAN

PERFECTION IN MECHANICAL MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS ATTAINED AT LAST.

PLAYS ANY TUNES arranged for it, from a lively waltz to the slowest church music, with perfect tunes and concert time. Gives better satisfaction than a Hundred Dollar Parlor Organ and will give ten times more pleasure. Plays Two Hundred Different Tunes in a superb manner and charms every listener. Beyond a doubt the grandest and most marvellous Musical Instrument ever presented to the great music loving public of America. This is a new instrument never before offered and should not be confounded with the cheap Automatic Instruments. It is as much superior to them as the Silver Tongued Cornet is to the ear piercing Fish Horn. No perforated strips of paper to bother the player and require frequent repairing. THE NEW AMERICAN ROLLER ORGAN is operated upon a somewhat similar plan as the FINEST FIVE HUNDRED DOLLAR FRENCH MUSIC BOXES, from a roller with metal pins; the pins operate upon valved keys, made of finely tempered steel, the roller being connected with the gearing which also works the bellows. The working parts of this magnificent instrument are made of solid metal, are easily taken apart or examined. No better workmanship is found in the most expensive musical machinery. The instrument is thoroughly made and yet so simple a child can operate it without fear of injuring it in any way. The rollers are made of light wood and the bearings and pins which are made of metal. WILL NEVER WEAR OUT. This instrument is the Perfection of Musical Ingenuity and PLAYS MARCHES, WALTZES, POLKAS, JIGS, Reels, Sacred Music, selections from Operas, Popular Songs, etc., and is peculiarly arranged for playing DANCE MUSIC in perfect time. If you have purchased any other style of an Automatic Musical Instrument and have found it a disappointment and a nuisance YOU SHOULD SEND FOR ONE of the above described Instruments. Nothing grander, more reasonable in price or combining so many desirable features can be found in French or Swiss Music Boxes. For a short time these instruments will be offered for Seven Dollars in BEAUTIFULLY CARVED CASES with Music. Send for one and take our word for it, it will fill you with astonishment and delight. Send money by Post Office order, Registered letter or by Express. Address all Orders to World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau Street, New York

THE Estey Organ

THE BEST

The Thousands Estey Organs Homes, Church and Chapels eve where, prove th long and lead popularity.

Illustrated C alogues sent fr

Estey Organ Co.
BRATTLEBORO Vt

Silks and Velvets

JAMES M'CREERY & CO.

offer during November, as spec ties, a choice line of Black Fa Francaise, Black Peau de Soie Plain, Barree, and other Wea Colored Faille Francaise, in Day Evening Shades, at $1.25 and $1 and several hundred pieces of F Velvet and Plush Novelties, at cents, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00, about one-third their ac value.

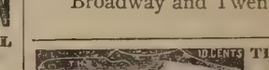
Broadway and 11th St., New York.

Furs, Fur Trimmin

Quite a number of new sha and styles in Fur Wra Decided Novelties in M and Boas. Everything t is new in Fur Trimmings.

Lord & Taylo

Broadway and Twentieth Street.



THE FOUNTAI FALCON PEN 251 Broadway, New sent by Mail. Sampl Writes on ordinary letter with one dipping into t

We Want Active Agen

TO SELL THE

RENNER COMBINED ALARM AND DOOR B

in every county in the United States and C George C. Owens, Modesta, Cal., says: "I hav vassed one day and took 22 orders." In same le ordered two gross. Wm. McKim, of Cragg' Mich., says: "he took 13 orders in 10 hours." Pr Bell, $2.50. In our extraordinary offer to age agree to take back all bells unsold, if the agent clear $125.00 in 30 days. Illustrated circulars se

Address Renner Manufacturing Co., Pittsbu

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAM (avoid Agents and Dealers wh fits and expenses double the every Piano they sell) and s First-Class UPRIGHT Cabin 7⅓ Octave Rosewood Piano ranted 6 years, for $193 send it—with Beautiful Co Stool—for Trial in your own h fore you buy. Send for circ

Marchal & Smith, 235 East 21st St.,

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured to 20 days. No pay till c Dr. J. Stephens, Lebano

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published at 63 House, New York, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. X., No. 48. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, DEC. 1, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF MRS. FINN AND MISS VON FINKELSTEIN, and Scenes in Jewish Work.
THIRST IN A CAVERN. Dr. Talmage's Sermon.
THE FULFILMENT OF THE THIRD SEAL.
A Little Girl's Syllables—Horologic Prayers—A Substituted Composition—How Nihilists Work, etc.
PICTURE OF THE STRAIT OF MAGELLAN.
SITTING BY. A new Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.
PORTRAIT OF THE LATE JENNY LIND.
THREE HEARERS. (With Illustration.)
THE PARABLE OF THE TARES. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

MRS. FINN and MISS VON FINKELSTEIN, Friends of the Persecuted Jews—Scenes in Mrs. Finn's Work.

MRS. FINN.

THE FRIEND OF PERSECUTED JEWS.

The Reproach of Christendom—Mrs. Finn's Birth in Poland—Her Father's Labors—A Rabbi Teaches her Hebrew—Residence in Breslau—Her Father Declines a Bishopric—Marriage and Removal to Jerusalem—Her Husband's Consulship—A Clumsy Salute—Narrow Escape of a Jewess—An Indignant Priest—A Visit to the Site of the Holy of Holies—Plans for the Welfare of the Jews—Mr. Finn's Death—Providential Assistance to Russian Jews.

THE two ladies whose portraits appear on the preceding page have earned a title to the respect and gratitude of the Christian church. They have both labored in their respective spheres to remove a reproach which is justly brought against Christendom as a whole. They have loved the Jewish race, and have endeavored by every means in their power to alleviate the physical miseries of Jewish exiles,, and to open their eyes to the truth as it is in Jesus. It is a sad and disgraceful fact that while the whole world is indebted to the Jews for the preservation of spiritual truth, while their literature has been for centuries the delight and comfort of Christians in all lands, and, notwithstanding, that whatever of human there was in our Lord and Saviour was Jewish, yet the Jew has been received wherever he has gone with hostility. In past days he was and every European nation in its turn has persecuted him. In semi-barbarous countries, like Russia, he has even in our own day been stripped of his property and has only saved his life by flight, and even in Germany and America he has been subjected to a species of social ostracism more galling to a sensitive nature than physical maltreatment. All the more honor, therefore, is due to those who have shown kindness to the Jews, and among them these two ladies are conspicuous. They have not only served them personally and directly, but have done them indirect benefit by influencing the public mind in their favor and removing some of the prejudice which exists against them.

The Outcast of Europe,

Mrs. Finn is a native of Warsaw in Poland, where she was born nearly sixty years ago. Her father was the late Dr. McCaul, the eminent Hebrew scholar and historian, who for many years made his home among the Jews of Russia and Poland, and found his most intimate friends among the Jewish Rabbis of those lands. She passed her early years in Warsaw, and saw much of these Jewish teachers, one of whom was so much interested in the child that he taught her Hebrew and guided her studies in Jewish literature (See Illustration No. 1). Subsequently her father removed to Breslau, where she became proficient in the German language and literature. Still later she accompanied her father to Ireland, and finally to his last place of Residence at Palestine Place,

London, England. There he continued his labors on behalf of the Jews. At his house Jews from every nation under the sun might be found who, called to London on business, found there congenial society and ready sympathy, and since his death it has not lost its associations, for it has now become the centre of the missionary operations of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. (A picture of it forms illustration No. 2 on first page.)

In the year 1841 the King of Prussia, whose acquaintance Dr. McCaul had made in Germany, proposed the foundation of a Protestant Anglo-Prussian Bishopric in Jerusalem, and asked him to be the Bishop. This honor Dr. McCaul declined on the ground that it should be held by one of Jewish birth, and ventured to nominate his friend Dr. M. S. Alexander. The nomination was accepted, and at Dr. Alexander's consecration Dr. McCaul preached the sermon. There was present at that ceremony a friend who had taken an active interest in the Bishopric, and in the work going on in the Holy Land, and who himself was an excellent Hebrew scholar, and had published a valuable work on the Spanish Jews. This was Mr. Finn, whose friendship for Dr. McCaul was destined to develop into a closer connection. He became a frequent visitor at Palestine Place, drawn thither, at first, by a community of interest in the Jews, but later by a growing affection for Miss McCaul. His affection was reciprocated, and they were married in 1846. Shortly afterward Mr. Finn's profound Hebraic knowledge, and his well-known interest in the Jewish race attracted the attention of the British Government, who at that time needed a representative in Palestine. Mr. Finn was made Consul for Palestine with a itself, and there he and Mrs. Finn removed, and commenced a life of beneficent labor, congenial to them, beneficent to the country, and useful to the British Government. They held the position for seventeen years, and during that time endeared themselves to thousands of persons to whom Mr. Finn's official position enabled him to become a protector. Many remarkable incidents occurred during Mr. Finn's official term, which he has graphically described in his book entitled "Stirring Times."

Residence in Jerusalem

The English Consulate at this time occupied the house adjoining Christ Church on Mount Zion, and immediately faced the Castle of Hippicus, from which during Mohammedan feasts, it is customary to fire salutes with artillery. Mr. and Mrs. Finn having been away from home during one of these festivals, returned to make

An Unexpected Discovery.

The clumsy Turkish gunners had damaged their house. In firing one of the castle guns they had thrust into it, as an extra wadding, a soldier's old jacket with brass buttons, and this had been fired through the windows of the Consulate, the distance being very short. The bundle had crashed through the window, carrying glass and woodwork before it, and hit the wall opposite just above a bed in which a child would have been sleeping, if the Consul and Mrs. Finn had been at home.

Mr. Finn says: "The gunners were in the habit of ramming anything that came to hand into their cannon, to make the greater noise in the discharge. Some years before, a poor Jewess had a narrow escape of her life from this cause. She was passing down the narrow lane close to our house at the moment when a salute began. A troop of donkeys, just released from their loads, came scampering down the lane behind her, the donkey-boy lagging in the rear. The donkeys pushed past, one of them pinning the Jewess to the wall. At that instant the cannon was again fired; the wadding (an old soldier's jacket in this instance too) struck the donkey on the head, killing it on the spot. The woman was covered with dust and some of the blood of the slain beast, which had to be removed before she could be extricated, terribly shaken and frightened, but safe. The donkey had saved her life at the expense of its own." (See Illustration No. 3.)

The question of the employment of the poor Jewesses and of Jews, had from Mr. and Mrs. Finn's first arrival in Jerusalem engaged their attention. These poor people go to the Holy City from religious motives, and finding no employment there, sink into a condition of hopeless poverty. The first effort made was on behalf of the Jewesses, some of whom were given employment in sewing and knitting. After a couple of years this branch of the work was handed over to the late Miss Cooper, who founded a sewing and knitting school, which is still one of the Institutions of Jerusalem. Various occupations were tried for the men and boys, but none promised permanent success except agriculture and the various industries therewith connected. Efforts were made to encourage and promote agricultural industry during the whole time of Mrs. Finn's residence there, and was abundantly proved in the work carried on at Urtas, near Solomon's Gardens, where waste land was turned into a very paradise of luxuriant verdure. The willingness of the Jews themselves to earn even scanty wages by hard work, was also shown at a place near Jerusalem called the Industrial Plantation. Here Jews of all ages, including men of learning, glad of any occupation which would maintain them near their beloved city, thankfully labored under the hot sun at building and clearing the ground, receiving in return bare peasants' wages and a bit of bread.

The Great Fertility of the Land

"After operations were fairly started on the plantation," observes Mr. Finn, "I one day, after a hard day's office work, rode out towards the land, to see the men return from their labor. They were met coming over the lanes and fields carrying their baskets and tools on their shoulders; a ragged troop, very ragged but very happy, singing a chorus in Hebrew, 'We are laborers in the field of Abraham, our father.' My eyes filled with tears as the words came to recollection, 'They shall return to Zion with singing, and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads.'" (See Illustration No. 4.)

A Priest's Mishap

is another incident related by Mr. Finn. On one occasion, while Mr. and Mrs. Finn were exploring in the region of Khân Nakhôra, they had their table-cloth spread upon the ground by the roadside, when there came up a portly priest belonging to the Convent of the Saviour, beyond Sidon, riding a mule and escorted by a peasant on foot. In attempting to dismount alone, the mule's girth being loose, the saddle turned round, so that the priest tumbled on his head, and lay prostrate, his feet still in the stirrups, unable to move, and in imminent danger of being dragged down the road by the mule. He was rescued by Mr. Finn's cook, who ran up and cut the stirrups off with his sword. (See Illustration No. 5.) The priest felt deeply humiliated, and finding that he was indebted for his rescue to the servant of Protestants, he rode off without a word of thanks.

An interesting circumstance described by Mr. Finn was the first admission of Christians since the recapture of Jerusalem to

The Temple Sanctuary.

This was granted to Mr. and Mrs. Finn in 1853, and they were allowed to conduct to that hallowed spot the Duke and Duchess of Brabant (now the king and queen of the Belgians), and subsequently the eminent Jewish philanthropist, Sir Moses Montefiore, who, as a British subject, was under the protection of the consul. Of this visit Mr. Finn thus wrote: "We were to approaeh the very interesting, if not awful spot, where the threshing-floor of Araunah the Jebusite had been; the site of King David's altar; the site of Abraham's altar on Moriah; the site of the Holy of Holies; the earthly throne of Divine majesty and presence, the spot where the Veil had been rent in twain. There was a multitude of eager expectants. We passed through a narrow, dark passage, which forms the private entrance to the Sanctuary precincts from the Pasha's residence. On a sudden we emerged into daylight and bright sunshine; and we stood within the Sanctuary, on the smooth scarped rock, cut away about a thousand years before. Here the main body of the Turkish garrison awaited the company. The soldiers were fully armed, and closed around us as we followed the Pasha, who, with the officers in command, led the visitors forward (See Illustration No. 6). The innovation was astonishing, and as fanatical Turks regarded it as sacrilege, it was not without its dangers. Not many years before, the resident English mission physician had been attending one of the chief Moslem families in their house, which overlooks the Hharam precincts. Out of gratitude they led him a very little way within the gates of the open court, that he might behold, if even only in a glimpse, something of the beauty of the Sanctuary. But two of the watchmen espied the intruders, and fiercely rushing upon them with their clubs (see illustration No. 7), they knocked down, not only the English doctor, but the Moslem gentleman who was conducting him, and would have killed both had not help been at hand, and the gate so close by that they could be dragged out of reach by the Hereditary Guardian himself, who was friendly, and who was just in time to save them, though with extreme difficulty."

Departure from Jerusalem and the abandoning of their beneficent work to other hands, became unavoidable in 1863, by the chronic sickness of Mr. Finn. He and his devoted wife quitted the country with poignant regret, but continued residence there would have been fatal to the sufferer. He lived until 1872, and though retired from active life never ceased to take a deep interest in the welfare of "God's chosen people." Since his death Mrs. Finn has devoted her life to the same cause. She became Secretary of the movement for assisting Jews to settle in the Holy Land known as "The Syrian Colonization Fund." During the recent Russian persecution her house was besieged by Russian Jews pleading for help to go to the land of their fathers'. (See Illustration No. 8). Mrs. Finn seemed to be an instrument specially prepared for such a crisis, as during her childhood she had acquired familiar knowledge of both the Russian and Hebrew tongues, and could converse with all who came. The money she distributed from the public fund and her own private purse during that time was enormous.

MISS LYDIA VON FINKELSTEIN.

MANY of our readers have already made the acquaintance of Lydia Manreoff von Finkelstein, whose portrait accompanies that of Mrs. Finn on the first page. She resided, for several years in this country and lectured in most of our great cities. The father of Miss Finkelstein was a Russian noble, whose sympathies with the people and persistent advocacy of constitutional government brought him into collision with the Czar, and rendered his flight from Russia imperative. He eventually migrated to Syria, and settled in Jerusalem, where his daughter Lydia was born, and where she spent the first eighteen or twenty years of her life. There in "The City of the Great King" she herself lived the life she now so graphically describes in her lectures, in many of its modes.

A few years ago Miss Finkelstein left the Holy Land and settled in the United States, and here she was led to consecrate herself to the important work in which she is now engaged. Atheists of the lowest type, full of coarse conceit and noisy bluster, and trading, as is their wont, on the ignorance of the masses, were publicly attacking the Bible, and by distortion and misrepresentation were laboring to destroy all confidence in its accuracy. They openly asserted that its descriptions of places and persons, manners and customs of the East, were fallacious, and from this argued that no faith could be placed in its revelations of moral and spiritual truth. To counteract these falsehoods, Miss von Finkelstein felt moved to inform American audiences of such details of Eastern life, derived from her own personal experience and knowledge, as would place the Bible in its true light, and thus destroy the ground on which the infidel attack was made.

Her lectures were exceedingly vivid as commentaries on Biblical themes, for she had brought with her the wardrobe she and her brother used in the Holy Land, and at her lectures her brother wore the dress of the Bedouin, or the country shepherd, or the city man, as the case might be; while she herself personified representatives of each of the different classes. The lectures were delivered in many parts of the States to large audiences, and were highly appreciated.

In the summer of 1887 Miss von Finkelstein revisited the Holy Land and collected new facts respecting it and its Jewish settlers. She has now embodied these in new lectures showing how marvellously God is preparing the way for Jewish nationalization in Palestine, and is delivering them in the chief cities of Europe. Their influence is very beneficial in arousing public interest in the Jewish people and enlisting public sympathy in their exiled condition.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

An Aged Soldier's Testimony.—"It is now many years since I gave myself to Jesus, and, with the exception of a short time, I have continued to serve under His banner. When I first joined the army I became so discontented that I deserted, but surrendered myself and was imprisoned for a few months. It was during solitary confinement that I was, in answer to the oft-repeated prayer of godly parents, brought to Christ. I left prison a new man, trusting in Christ, and determined to perform my duty towards God and man. I have been all over the world, and in nothing could I find satisfaction but in the Lord Himself, and in Him I rest to-day, and Him I trust to keep me until that day when I shall answer to my name on the glorious muster-roll on high."

Trying to Drown the Cat.—Mr. Climie Remarked: "I knew a man who had in his house a vicious cat, which he determined to destroy, So one day he took the cat down to the river, and taking a rope from his pocket he tied a stone around the neck of the animal, and threw it into the water. He turned to go home with a feeling of satisfaction at having accomplished the task, But when he got home he found that the cat was there before him, and waiting at the door to welcome him. And it is much the same with the man who tries to fight his besetting sin in his own strength. He faces it, fights it, and struggles against it until he thinks it is dead, but unexpectedly it meets him again, and gets him in its power once more. Men are very foolish to fight sin in their own strength. It is only through the grace of Christ that any conquest may be achieved and evil overcome."

A Christian Railway Ticket-Collector.—Mr, D. J. Findlay observes: "I was travelling from Manchester to Bradford a short time ago, and when we stopped to have the tickets collected, I noticed that the collector was a fine, bright young fellow, and I took the opportunity of speaking to him of his soul. 'I suppose there is sometimes an accident on this line?' I remarked. He laughingly replied that there was. Then, pointing to my companion, who sat beside me, I said, 'If there be a collision this run, my friend and I are going straight to heaven, if the Lord sees fit to take this life from us. If anything should happen to you, would you go there also?' 'Yes, I would,' was the confident reply. 'Then you are a Methodist?' I continued. 'Oh, no,' he answered, 'we do not need to be Methodists to be saved. All who believe in Christ are saved; Jesus does not save for the church's sake, but for His own sake.' I was much pleased with this young man's answer, for I saw that he had built on a sure foundation."

The Patient and the Medical Students.—A worker says. "Not long ago a young man in Alexandria was brought to Christ. He became ill and consulted a doctor, who told him that he was unable to form any opinion of the nature of his disease, and that he thought the best thing he could do was to consult a medical professor. The young man acted upon that advice, and the professor honestly told him that he had upon him a disease that certainly would end with his death. There was only one possibility of cure: if he would consent to undergo a painful operation he might be saved, but the result was not at all certain. The young man, after an earnest prayer to God to give the operator wisdom, prayed for the students, who had come in, that God would save such as were unconverted, and that He would bless them all. Then casting himself upon the Lord, he declared himself ready. Many of the students were completely broken down, and the professor himself was moved to tears, and turning to the students, he said, 'Young gentlemen, many of you have heard it said that there is nothing in religion, but I think that we must all see that there is something in a religion that enables a young man to look at death so bravely, and in the midst of his own overwhelming troubles to think of the salv tion of others. I had much fear regarding the success of this operation, but now I have none.' The operation was a success, and while lying in the infirmary the young man was visited by many of the students, who thanked him for showing them the way of salvation, for that earnest prayer offered in the operating-room had gone to their hearts."

A Lad's Avowal of Christ.—An Evangelist relates: "When I was addressing a Gospel meeting in London, not long ago, among those who waited at the close of the service to be spoken with was a young lad, who told the worker that he would like to be saved, but he was afraid of his companions laughing at him. The worker showed him the necessity of confessing Christ, and that he need not go forth in his own strength, that God would be always with him to strengthen and uphold, and that if he were ashamed to confess Christ, Christ would not confess him before His Father. The lad accepted Christ, resolving to openly avow Him. Next day, as the friend who had spoken to him was walking along the street, a bright-faced lad came up to him, and held out his hand. At first the gentleman did not remember the face, but a second look enabled him to recognize the anxious inquirer of the previous night. 'Well,' he asked, 'how did you get on?' 'Oh, I just told them the whole story, and after they had laughed and mocked a bit, that was all they could do.'"

An Ex-Saloon-Keeper's Story.—A Member of a Mizpah band remarked: "I owned a rum-shop once in one of the lowest parts of Glasgow. There I stood day by day and carried on that abominable traffic which is filling our poor-houses, our lunatic asylums, and, worse than all, is filling hell with the ruined souls of men and women. I began to grow weary of it, and longed to give it up. One day, three fine-looking young fellows came in, and when they went to the back shop they informed me that one of the three had fainted. We tried to revive him, but failing to do so we sent for a doctor, who came, and, having looked at him, told us that he was dead. That pale face haunted me night and day. I went to one of Mr. Moody's meetings, and there the late Mr. J. Scott asked me if I were a Christian. I said that I was not, and I feared I was too great a sinner. 'Are you a greater sinner than Christ is a Saviour?' he inquired. He lovingly pointed me to Jesus. I went home, gave up the liquor trade, and trusted God for the rest. My self-interest and my sin blinded my eyes for years, but now all is changed, and I bless the Lord that He has saved me through Christ."

Ministering to an Infidel Nobleman.—Mr. W. Clyde related: "A great French nobleman went about doing much harm by his infidel conversation. Soon he became tired of this work, and longed for something to satisfy his weary soul. He tried pleasure of all kinds, but it would not do. He went about from place to place, thinking that new scenes would divert and satisfy his mind, but he grew depressed in spirits and took pleasure in nothing. So morbid did he become that his great friend Napoleon III., fearing that his health would give way, sent him to London, and put him under the care of a skilful physician there. When the medical man saw him, he said, 'You have something on your mind. Have you done anything to spoil your character or reputation?' The man declared that he had not, but still the physician insisted that he had, and tnat he must be told. 'What is depressing and weighing me down,' replied the sceptic, 'is eternity, and where shall I spend my eternity?' 'You have come to the wrong physician,' replied the doctor. 'What, do you tell me that there is no hope?' he cried in dismay. 'Yes, if you will go to the right Physician; He has a certain cure.' 'Ah, if you could just assure me that Christ is the Son of God; but this suspense is more than I can bear,' the nobleman answered. The godly physician opened his Bible and proved from Scripture that it was so, and the French nobleman found relief in Christ."

THIRST IN A CAVERN.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning, Nov. 27, 1887.

"Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate." II Sam. 23 : 15.

War in Harvest-time—David's Hiding Place—His Deep Thirst—A Desperate Enterprise—The Water from the Well—The Gospel Well—I. A Well of Bethlehem—Dug in the Night—For a Thirst-Smitten Race—The Hunted Deer of the Adirondacks—II. A Captured Well—The Philistines who Repel Thirsty Comers—Substitutes for the Water—The Old Well to be Recaptured—III. A Well at the Gate—For Purification—For Renovation—For Comfort—Caves Where Men Get Thirsty—Caves of Bereavement—Of Trouble—Cool, Fresh Promises—At the Gate of Heaven—Ablution from Earth's Dust—Three Lost Children in New Jersey.

War, always distressing, is especially ruinous in harvest-time. When the crops are all ready for the sickle, to have them trodden down by cavalry horses, and heavy supply-trains gullying the fields, is enough to make any man's heart sick. When the last great war broke out in Europe, and France and Germany were coming into horrid collision, I rode past their golden harvest-fields and saw tents pitched and the trenches dug in the very midst of the ripe fields, the long scythe of battle sharpening to mow down harvests of men in great winrows of the dead. It was at this season of harvest that the army of the Philistines came down upon Bethlehem. Hark to the clamor of their voices, the neighing of their chargers, the blare of their trumpets and the clash of their shields!

Let David and his men fall back! The Lord's host sometimes loses the day. But David knew where to hide. He had been brought up in that country. Boys are inquisitive, and they know all about the region where they were born and brought up. If you should go back to the old homestead, you could, with your eyes shut, find your way to the meadow, or the orchard, or the hill back of the house, with which you were familiar thirty or forty years ago. So David knew

The Cave of Adullam.

Perhaps, in his boyhood days, he had played "hide-and-seek" with his comrades all about the old cave; and though others might not have known it, David did. Travellers say there is only one way of getting into that cave, and that is by a very narrow path; but David was stout and steady-headed and steady-nerved; and so, with his three brave staff-officers, he goes along that path, finds his way into the cave, sits down, looks around at the roof and the dark passages of the mountain, feels very weary with the forced march, and water he must have, or die.

I do not know but there may have been drops trickling down the side of the cavern, or that there may have been some water in the goat-skin slung to his girdle; but that was not what he wanted. He wanted a deep, full, cold drink, such as a man gets only out of an old well with moss-covered bucket. David remembered that very near that cave of Adullam there was such a well as that, a well to which he used to go in boyhood—the well of Bethlehem; and he almost imagines that he can hear the liquid plash of that well, and his parched tongue moves through his hot lips as he says, "Oh, that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate!"

It was no sooner said than done. The three brave staff-officers bound to their feet and start. Brave soldiers will take even

A Hint from the Commander.

But between them and the well lay the host of the Philistines; and what could three men do with a great army? Yet where there is a will there is a way, and, with their swords slashing this way and that, they make their path to the well. While the Philistines are amazed at the seeming fool-hardiness of these three men, and cannot make up their minds exactly what it means, the three men have come to the well. They drop the bucket. They bring up the water. They pour it in the pail, and then start for the cave. "Stop them!" cry the Philistines. "Clip them with your swords! Stab them with your spears! Stop those three men!" Too late! They have got around the hill. The hot rocks are splashed with the overflowing water from the vessel as it is carried up the cliffs. The three men go along and with cheeks flushed with the excitement, and all out of breath in their haste, they fling their swords red with the skirmish, to the side of the cave, and cry out to David: "There, captain of the host, is what you wanted, a drink of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate!"

The Dangerous Path,

A text is of no use to me unless I can find Christ in it; and unless I can bring a gospel out of these words that will arouse and comfort and bless, I shall wish I had never seen them; for your time would be wasted, and against my soul the dark record would be made that this day I stood before a great audience of sinning, suffering and dying men, and told them of no rescue. By the cross of the Son of God, by the throne of the eternal judgment, that shall not be! May the Lord Jesus help me to tell you the truth to-day!

You know that carrier pigeons have sometimes letters tied under the wing, and they fly hundreds of miles—one hundred miles in an hour—carrying a message. So I thought I would like to have it now. Oh, heavenly Dove! bring under thy wing to-day, to my soul and to the souls of this people, some message of light and love and peace!

It is not an unusual thing to see people gather in summer-time. The husbandman puts down his cradle at the well curb. The builder puts down his trowel. The traveller puts down his pack. Then one draws the water for all the rest, himself taking the very last. The cup is passed around, and the fires of thirst are put out; the traveller starts on his journey, and the workman takes up his burden.

Around a Well

My friends, we come to-day around the Gospel well. We put down our pack of burdens, and our implements of toil. One man must draw the water for those who have gathered around the well. I will try and draw the water to-day; and if, after I have poured out from this living fountain for your soul, I just taste of it myself, you will not begrudge me a "drink from the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate."

This Gospel well, like the well spoken of in the text, is A Well of Bethlehem.

David had known hundreds of wells of water, but he wanted to drink from that particular one, and he thought nothing could slake his thirst like that. And unless your soul and mine can get access to the Fountain open for sin and uncleanness, we must die. That fountain is the well of Bethelem. It was dug in the night. It was dug by the light of a lantern—the star that hung down over the manger. It was dug not at the gate of Cæsar's palaces, not in the park of a Jerusalem bargain-maker. It was dug in a barn. The camels lifted their weary heads to listen as the work went on. The shepherds, unable to sleep, because the heavens were filled with bands of music, came down to see the opening of the well. The angels of God, at the first gush of the living water, dipped their chalices of joy into it, and drank to the health of earth and heaven, as they cried, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace." Sometimes in our modern barns the water is brought through the pipes of the city to the very nostrils of the horses or cattle; but this well in the Bethlehem barn was not so much for the beasts that perish as for desert-travelled and simoon-struck. Oh, my soul, weary with sin, stoop down and drink to-day out of that Bethlehem well!

Our Thirst-smitten Race,

David said: "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so my soul panteth after thee, O God." You would get a better understanding of this amidst the Adirondacks in summer-time. Here comes a swift-footed deer. The hounds are close on the track; it has leaped chasms and scaled cliffs; it is fagged out; its eyes are rolling in death; its tongue is lolling from its foaming mouth. Faster the deer, faster the dogs, until it plunges into Schroon Lake, and the hounds can follow it no farther, and it puts down its head and mouth until the nostrils are clean submerged in the cool wave, and I understand it: "As the hart panteth for the water-brook, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." Oh, bring me water from that well! Little child, who has learned of Jesus in the Sabbath-school, bring me some of that living water, Old man, who fifty years ago didst find the well, bring me some of that water. Stranger in a strange land, who used to hear sung amidst the Highlands of Scotland, to the tune of "Bonnie Doon," "The Star, the Star of Bethlehem," bring me some of that water. Whosoever drinketh of that water shall never thirst. "Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate."

Again, this Gospel well, like the one spoken of in the text, is A Captured Well.

David remembered the time when that good water of Bethlehem was in the possession of his ancestors. His father drank there, his mother drank there. He remembered how the water tasted when he was a boy, and came there from play. We never forget the old well we used to drink out of when we were boys or girls. There was something in it that blessed the lips and refreshed the brow better than any thing we have found since. As we think of that dear old well, the memories of the past flow into each other like crystalline drops, sun-glinted, and all the more as we remember that the hands that used to lay hold the rope and the hearts that beat against the well-curb are still now. We never get over these reminiscences. George P. Morris, the great song-writer of this country, once said to me that his song, "Woodman, Spare that Tree," was sung in a great concert-hall, and the memories of early life were so wrought upon the audience by that song that, after the singing was done, an aged man arose in the audience, overwhelmed with emotion, and said, "Sir, will you please to tell me whether the woodman really spared the tree?" We never forget the tree under which we played. We never forget the fountain at which we drank. Alas for the man who has no early memories!

David thought of that well, that boyhood well, and he wanted a drink of it, but he remembered that the Philistines had captured it. When those three men tried to come up to the well in behalf of David, they saw swords gleaming around about it. And this is true of this Gospel well. The Philistines have at times captured it. When we come to take a full, old-fashioned drink of pardon and comfort, do not their swords of indignation and sarcasm flash? Why, the sceptics tell us that we cannot come to that fountain! They say the water is not fit to drink anyhow. "If you are really thirsty now, there is there is the well of art, there is the well of science." They try to substitute, instead of our boyhood faith, a modern mixture. They say a great many beautiful things about the soul, and they try to feed our immortal hunger on rose-leaves, and mix a mint-julep of worldly stimulants, when nothing will satisfy us but a drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is at the gate." They try to starve us on husks, when the Father's banquet is ready, and the best ring is taken from the casket, and the sweetest harp is struck for the music, and the swiftest foot is already lifted for the dance. They patronize heaven and abolish hell, and try to measure eternity with their hour-glass, and the throne of the great God with their yard-stick! I abhor it.

The Well of Philosophy,

I tell you the old Gospel well is a captured well. I pray God that there may be somewhere in the elect host three anointed men, with courage enough to go forth in the strength of the omnipotent God, with the glittering swords of truth, to hew the way back again to that old well. I think the tide is turning, and that the old Gospel is to take its place again in the family, and in the university, and in the legislative hall. Men have tried worldly philosophies, and have found out that they do not give any comfort, and that they drop an arctic midnight upon the death-pillow. They fail when there is a dead child in the house; and when the soul comes to leap into the fathomless ocean of eternity, they give not even a broken spar to cling to.

Depend upon it, that well will come into our possession again, though it has been captured. If there be not three anointed men in the Lord's host, with enough consecration to do the work, then the swords will leap from Jehovah's buckler, and the Eternal Three will descend—God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Ghost—conquering for our dying race the way back again to "the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate."

Again, the Gospel well, like the one spoken of in my text, is

A Well at the Gate.

The traveller stops the camel to-day, and gets down and dips out of the valley of the East, some very beautiful, clear, bright water, and that is out of the very well that David longed for. Do you know that that well was at the gate, so that nobody could go into Bethlehem without going right past it? And so it is with this Gospel well—it is at the gate. It is, in the first place, at the gate of purification. We cannot wash away our sins unless with that water. I take the responsibility of saying that there is no man, woman or child in this house to-day, that has escaped sinful defilement. Do you say it is outrageous and ungallant for me to make such a charge? Do you say, "I have never stolen—I have never blasphemed—I have never committed unchastity—I have never been guilty of murder?" I reply, you have committed a sin worse than blasphemy, worse than unchastity, worse than theft, worse than murder. We have all committed it. We have by our sin re-crucified the Lord, and that is deicide. And if there be any who dare to plead "not guilty" to the indictment, then the hosts of heaven will give verdict against us: guilty one, guilty all. With what a slashing stroke that one passage cuts us away from all our pretensions: "There is none that doeth good—no, not one."

"Oh," says some one, "all we want, all the race wants, is development." Now I want to tell you that the race develops without the Gospel, into a Sodom, a Five Points, a great Salt Lake City. It always develops downward, and never upward, except as the grace of God lays hold of it. What, then, is to become of our souls without Christ? Banishment. Disaster. But I bless my Lord Jesus Christ that there is a well at the gate of purification. For great sin, great pardon. For eighty years of transgression, an eternity of forgiveness. For crime deep as hell, an atonement high as heaven; that where sin abounded, so grace may much more abound: that as sin reigned unto death, even so may grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord. Angel of the Covenant, dip thy wing into this living fountain to-day, and wave it over this solemn assemblage, that our souls may be washed in "the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate"!

Further, I remark that this well is at

The Gate of Comfort.

Do you know where David was when he uttered the words of the text? He was in the cave of Adullam. That is where some of you are now. Has the world always gone smoothly with you? Has it never pursued you with slander? Is your health always good? Have your fortunes never perished? Are your children all alive and well? Is there one dead lamb in the fold? Are you ignorant of the way to the cemetery? Have you ever heard the bell toll when it seemed as if every stroke of the iron clapper beat your heart? Are the skies as bright when you look into them as they used to be when other eyes, now closed, used to look into them? Is there some trunk or drawer in your house that you go to only on anniversary days, when there comes beating against your soul the surf of

A Great Ocean of Agony?

It is the cave of Adullam! The cave of Adullam! Is there some David here whose fatherly heart wayward Absalom has broken? Is there some Abraham here who is lonely because Sarah is dead in the family-plot of Machpelah? After thirty or forty years of companionship, how hard it was for them to part! Why not have two seats in the Lord's chariot, so that both the old folks might have gone up at once? My aged mother, in her last moment, said to my father, "Father, wouldn't it be nice if we could both go together?" No, no, no. We must part. And there are wounded hearts here to-day. The world cannot comfort you. What can it bring you? Nothing, nothing. The salve they try to put on your wounds will not stick. They cannot, with their bungling surgery, mend the broken bones.

Zophar the Naamathite and Bildad the Shuhite and Eliphaz the Temanite come in, and talk and talk and talk, but are they all. They cannot pour light into the cave of Adullam. They cannot bring a single draught of water from "the well of Bethlehem which is by the gate." But, glory be to Jesus Christ, there is comfort at the gate! There is life in the well at the gate. If you give me time, I will draw up a promise for every man, woman and child in this house. Ay, I will do it in two minutes. I will lay hold the rope of the old well. What is your trouble? "Oh," you say, "I am so sick, so weary of life—ailments after ailments." I will draw up a promise: "The inhabitants shall never say 'I am sick.'" What is your trouble? "Oh, it is loss of friends—bereavement," you say. I will draw you up out of the well: "I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." What is your trouble? You say it is the infirmities of old age. I will draw you up a promise: "Down to old age I am with thee, to hoary hairs will I carry thee." What is your trouble? "Oh," you say, "I have a widowed soul, and my children cry for bread." I bring up this promise: "Leave thy fatherless children—I will preserve them alive, and let thy widows trust in Me." I break through the armed ranks of your sorrows to-day, and bring to your parched lips "a drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem which is by the gate."

Miserable Comforters

A Promise, Fresh and Cool,

Again, the Gospel well is

At the Gate of Heaven.

I have not heard yet one single intelligent account of the future world from anybody who does not believe in the Bible. They throw such a fog about the subject that I do not want to go to the sceptic's heaven, to the transcendentalist's heaven, to the worldly philosopher's heaven. I would not exchange the poorest room in your house for the finest heaven that Huxley or Stuart Mill or Darwin ever dreamed of. Their heaven has no Christ in it; and a heaven without Christ, though you could sweep the whole universe into it, would be a hell! Oh, they tell us there are no songs there; there are no coronations in heaven—that is all imagination. They tell us we will do there about what we do here, only on a larger scale—geometrize with clearer intellect, and with alpenstock go clambering up over the icebergs in an eternal vacation. Rather than that, I turn to my Bible and I find John's picture of that good land—that heaven which was your lullaby in infancy—that heaven which our children in the Sabbath-school will sing about this afternoon—that heaven which has a "well at the gate."

After you have been on a long journey, and you come in, all bedusted and tired to your home, the first thing you want is and I am glad to know that after we get through the pilgrimage of this world—the hard, dusty pilgrimage—we will find a well at the gate. In that one wash, away will go our sins and sorrows. I do not care whether cherub or seraph, or my own departed friends in that blessed land place to my lips the cup, the touch of that cup will be life, will be heaven! I was reading of how the ancients sought for the fountain of perpetual youth. They thought if they could only find and drink out of that well, the old would become young again, the sick would be cured and everybody would have eternal juvenescence. Of course they could not find it. Eureka! I have found it! "the water of the well of Bethlehem, which is by the gate."

Refreshing Ablution,

I think we had better make a bargain with those who leave us, going out of this world from time to time, as to where we will meet them. Travellers parting appoint a place of meeting. They say: "We will meet at Rome, or we will meet at Stockholm, or Vienna, or Jerusalem, or Bethlehem." Now, when we come to stand by the death-pillow of those who are leaving us for the far land, do not let us weep as though we would never see them again, but let us, there standing, appoint a place where we will meet. Where shall it be? Shall it be on the banks of the river? No; the banks are too long. Shall it be in the temple? No, no; there is such a host there—ten thousand times ten thousand. Where shall we meet our loved ones? Let us make an appointment to meet at the well by the gate. Oh, heaven! Sweet heaven! Dear heaven! Heaven, where our good friends are! Heaven, where Jesus is! Heaven! Heaven!

But while I stand here there comes a revulsion of feeling when I know there are notwithstanding the well at the gate. Between them and the well of heaven there is a great army of sin; and though Christ is ready to clear a way to that well for them, they will not have His love or intercession.

Souls Dying of Thirst.

But I am glad to know that you may come yet. The well is here—the well of heaven. Come; I do not care how feeble you are. Let me take hold of your arm, and steady you up to the well-curb. "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come." I would rather win one soul to Christ this morning, than wear the crown of the world's dominion. Do not let any man go away and say I did not invite him. Oh, if you could only just look at my Lord once; if you could just see him full in the face; ay, if you could only do as that woman did whom I read about at the beginning of the services—just come up behind Him and touch His feet—you would live.

Three Lost Children.

In northern New Jersey, one winter, three little children wandered off from home in a snow-storm. Night came on. Father and mother said, "Where are the children?" They could not be found. They started out in haste, and the news ran to the neighbors, and before morning it was said that there were hundreds of men hunting the mountains for those three children, but found them not.

After a while a man imagined there was a place that had not been looked at, and he went and saw the three children. He examined their bodies. He found that the older boy had taken off his coat and wrapped it around the younger one, the baby, and then taken off his vest and put it around the other one; and there they all died, he probably the first, for he had no coat or vest. Oh, it was a touching scene when that was brought to light! I was on the ground a little while after, and it brought the whole scene to my mind; and I thought to myself of a more melting scene than that: it is that Jesus, our elder Brother, took off the robe of His royalty, and laid aside the last garment of earthly comfort, that He might wrap our poor souls from the blast. Oh, the height, and the depth, and the length, and the breadth of the love of Christ!

A LITTLE GIRL'S SYLLABLES.

THE late Dean Stanley related the following in one of his sermons to children :

There was a little girl living with her old grandfather. She was a good child, but he was not a good man, and one day when the little child came back from school he put in writing over her bed, "God is nowhere." For he did not believe in the good God, and he was trying to make the child believe the same. What did the little girl do? She had no eyes to see nor ears to hear what her grandfather tried to teach her. She was very small; she could only read words of one syllable at a time; she rose above the bad meaning which he tried to put into her mind; she rose, as we ought all to rise, above the temptation of our time; she rose into a higher and better world; she rose because she could not do otherwise, and she read the words, not "God is nowhere," but "God is now here." That is what we all should strive to do. Out of words which have no sense or which have a bad sense, our eyes, our minds, ought to be able to read a good sense. The old grandfather was touched and made serious, and we ought all of us to be made serious in like manner by the innocent questions and answers of little children. God is now here, for God is everywhere—your help in ages past, your hope for years to come.

HOROLOGIC PRAYERS.

A GENTLEMAN who resided for some time in Naples, states that he was much annoyed by the way in which his eggs were cooked for breakfast. They were boiled quite hard. He remonstrated with the cook and was at last invited to go into the kitchen himself and superintend the boiling. He went, saw the eggs put into the boiling water and stood, watch in hand, beside the cook ready to give the signal for taking them out. At the end of three and a half minutes he gave the signal and the cook obeyed. "You shall have them done exactly after this," she said. "But how will you do it as you have no watch?" the gentleman asked. "Oh that is easy" was the reply, "the Signor likes the eggs to boil ten Paters and a half." The woman was a devout Roman Catholic and while the gentleman had been watching the eggs, she had been silently reciting Paternosters (the Lord's prayer) and she had said it over ten and a half times in the time. If familiarity had not bred contempt in her case it had produced irreverence. She evidently attached no meaning to the words she uttered though it is probable that she thought there was some merit in repeating them. There is reason to fear that many better instructed persons fall into her error. Mere mechanical repetition of set phrases too often does duty for prayer, and that too by persons who would not be guilty of the rudeness of addressing a human being in the same spiritless, thoughtless fashion. He who reads all hearts is not deceived by such counterfeit prayers (Isa. 29: 13.)

A SUBSTITUTED COMPOSITION.

A SCHOOL principal's unconscious criticism of a famous author has caused much amusement in Boston, Mass. The author's son, whose first name is the same as his father's, was required to write a composition, and, not possessing any of his father's literary ability, found himself utterly unable to perform the task. In his despair he appealed to his father, who not only explained it fully to him, but wrote a composition as a model for him. The boy, either misunderstanding his father, or failing to carry out his object, placed his father's work on the principal's desk with the compositions of the other boys. The schoolmaster, overhauling the lot at his leisure, misled by the identity of the name, mistook the popular author's work for the boy's composition. He returned the paper with his annotations, finding the chirography "execrable," the rhetoric "ill-considered," the spelling "abbreviated and uncertain," and ordered another trial. It is needless to say that the schoolmaster's chagrin at his mistake was equal to the father's indignation and the boy's merriment over the joke. Probably the boy will now despair of attaining to the principal's standard of literary excellence, as his famous father failed. As he grows older and learns what God requires of him in His law, he will have reason to despair of fulfilling that too. But then he may learn that what he cannot do has been done by Christ, whose perfect righteousness God has accepted in his behalf (Rom. 8: 3, 4).

HOW NIHILISTS WORK.

A PROMINENT author thus describes the mode of work adopted by the Russian Nihilists :

The Czar or his corrupt officials, can send any man to Siberia, and he has no appeal. This odious tyranny is too often forgotten when the crimes of the Nihilists are denounced. That it does not justify the crimes must be admitted, but it does extenuate them. Too frequently the Nihilists act in blind unreasoning madness, and are careless of everything but vengeance. It appears, however, that among them are many cases of patriotic self-sacrifice, and an enlightened effort to emancipate the people. There are among the Nihilists men of aristocratic birth, of wealth and position. Instead of spending their fortune in idleness and pleasure, they put the whole of it in the treasury of the order, go down into some country district where the people are poor and ignorant. There they get their living by working in some factory where many men are employed. They make friends, marry and become in all respects like the other workmen. Then they begin cautiously to disseminate their doctrines. They set an example of sobriety and industry, get their friends to become total abstainers, teach them to read and to think, tell them of nations that have liberty and free speech, explain to them what a constitution is, and the blessings it would bring to them; and after years of such toil the whole district is transformed. Then the aristocratic teacher moves off to a new district, or the government learns what has been done and swoops down upon him, and hangs him or sends him to Siberia. This work is going on all over Russia, and through it the Nihilistic order is growing in power and influence in spite of the discredit brought upon it by the dastardly crimes of some of its reckless members.

SABBATH KEEPING TOURISTS.

"BEFORE the days of steamships," says the late Mr. Dodge, in his diary just published, "I was on my way to Liverpool in one of the largest ships that ever sailed out of New York. We had a twenty-four days passage to the mouth of the channel, and there we rested; there was not wind enough to carry us farther. A pilot-boat came out from old Kinsale. There was just a breath of air sufficient to move the little boat with its large sails. I was anxious to stop at Cork, to see Father Mathew, and a number of us made an arrangement to get on the pilot-boat, and go on. Soon after we left the ship, we found there was not wind enough for the boat, even; just as we got under the head of Kinsale, the tide began to run out swiftly, for it rises there thirty feet, and we had to lie under the head of Kinsale all night—a terrible night, too. Next day was Sunday. The sun rose in all its beauty, and about seven we ran in with the tide to the little village of Kinsale. We were all tired, many of our friends had been sick during the night, and it so happened that each one of them had a most pressing reason for going on. Some of them had never travelled on the Sabbath, but now they were so situated that they must go on, particularly one lady, who had come out in charge of two girls ten or twelve years of age, and she was most anxious indeed to keep on travelling. A gentleman and his wife from New York, Mrs. Dodge and myself were all that remained. We had nice rooms in a little bit of a hotel, where we changed our clothes, washed ourselves and got breakfast. We went to a beautiful little church and had a most delightful service. After the service, the young preacher, seeing us there as strangers, made us welcome, and we attended church again in the afternoon. On Monday morning as the coach came up we found the young clergyman was to be our companion to Cork; and he said, "Now get up on the top of the stage; I know all the country and will show you everything."

"We had a charming ride of two days and two nights. Bu the second day about ten o'clock we stopped at one of the principal stage villages, and there on the platform stood every one of our fellow-passengers. There they stood, and that poor woman with her two children; they had travelled day and night and become tired, and waited for this coach to come along; but there was not a seat to be had, and we left them there utterly forlorn."

A LADY'S REQUEST.

A LADY travelling from Edinburgh to Glasgow, was much annoyed by a young officer's conversation in the carriage—being interspersed by oaths. She sat uneasy until she could no longer keep silence. "Sir," she said to the officer, "can you talk in the Gaelic tongue?" To this he replied in the affirmative, seemingly with great pleasure, expecting to have some conversation with the lady in that dialect. She then politely requested that if he wished to swear any more, it might be in that language, as the practice of swearing was very offensive to herself and the rest of the company. The officer was confounded at this reproof, and no more oaths were heard from him during the remainder of the journey.

THE MAGNETIC MESSIAH.

THE Rev. D. P. McPherson, the Canadian Baptist preacher who has succeeded the late Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown, and whose portrait appeared in this journal on Nov. 10, in the course of a recent sermon thus spoke of the wonderful attractive power of the Saviour :

"Unto what shall I liken Christ? Before His advent the moral sense of the whole world expected some one in their midst to fill a vacant place? He came, the world looked at Him, and, despite His mean and lowly circumstance, assigned Him a supernatural place. The world never 'looked down' on Christ—it never can. It paid Him respect in its strongest hate, its strongest love, its universal pause and thought, its profoundest fear. Haughty Jerusalem and its heathen court were moved as never before over the birth of a poor child in a rock-cave by the wayside among the cattle!

"The 'publicans and sinners,' with feelings long buried, 'drew near' Him; and the women and the children and the 'multitudes.' He drew them and they followed, magnetized as they gazed on Him. And the penitent, believing man to-day, whether white or black, red or olive, finds in Jesus a bread for his hunger, a home for his sickness, a crown for ashes, and the 'portion' of His soul."

A SCULPTOR FROZEN TO DEATH.

IN the School of Fine Arts in Paris there is a statue that attracts general attention, not only on account of its beauty and grace, but on account of the story associated with it. The work is a bronze Mercury drawing a thorn out of his heel—the last work of the sculptor Briants. Although a man of genius, he was very poor, and a garret had to serve him for studio as well as home. During the severe winter he was working at the statue, and had to save his small allowance of fuel for the hours during which his model was sitting to him. One night the cold was so intense that he heaped upon his bed all the clothing he possessed. Suddenly he remembered his masterpiece; and, dreading lest the damp clay should be frozen, he stripped himself and put all his clothing and bed-covering around the figure. When his friend Cavalié entered next day, the sculptor lay on his bed frozen to death. In memory of him, his friends had the Mercury cast in bronze. This is the figure which is now exhibited for the study and inspiration of young French sculptors in the Ecole des Beaux Arts. It cost a life, and there is much other work being done that is costing lives, though in a less tragic way. Those who leave home and friends to preach the gospel in Africa and other heathen lands know that their lives may be required of them, and they are willing that it should be so. The spirit of self-sacrifice which could prompt the sculptor to strip himself to shield his work, is more noble in the man that lays down his life that others may learn the way to life eternal. He rejoices to do it now, and when he enters into the joy of his Lord he proves the truth of the promise that he who loses his life for Christ's sake shall find it (Matt. 10:39).

THE THIRD SEAL.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

Successive Developments Symbolized—The Seal of Spiritual Famine and Darkness—The Rider on the Black Horse—A Significant Equestrian Accoutrement—Papal Despotism Succeeding Anarchy—The Dearth of Spiritual Food—The Oil and Wine Preserved—Five Centuries of Demoralization—Testimony of Secular Historians—The Vision Fulfilled.

THE entire period of the Church's history from the year 39, when our Lord ascended into heaven, to the year 1901, when He may be expected to return to the earth is, as we have seen, * pictorially represented in this vision of The Seven Seals. Each seal represents a clearly defined epoch under a characteristic symbol. The first seal covering an epoch of 285 years from 39 to 324, an era of purity, holiness and self-denial, was symbolized by a White Horse. The second seal, covering a period of 242 years, from 324 to 566, a time of wealth and prestige, combined with heresies, schisms and dissensions, was symbolized by a red horse, the Rider of which was armed with a great sword. The third seal, which we have now to consider, relates to a period of 508 years, bringing the history down to the year 1073. It was a time of Papal domination, marked by priestly greed, avarice, spiritual famine, darkness and superstition. It is symbolized by a black horse, the Rider of which carries a pair of scales.

"And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo, a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine" (Rev. 6: 5, 6),

The visible Christian Church has now entered on a period in its history in which it answers no longer to the description of a red or fire-colored horse, but of a black horse. The fiery conflagration of sanguinary sectarianism and intestine strife between rival ecclesiastical leaders and various churches becomes comparatively extinguished, and is succeeded by the deathlike stillness of the night of Popish Darkness and Despotism.

The establishment of the Pope's universal authority over Christendom substituted the deceptive peacefulness of despotism for the distraction of anarchy. Hence, the collective body of ecclesiastical leaders and rulers are no longer represented, like the rider of the fire-colored horse, wielding the great sword of sanguinary strife so as to kill one another, but are now depicted as a rider holding a pair of balances in his hand; that is to say, doling out the bread of life with scanty and parsimonious admeasurement to the common people. And the accompanying cry, "A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny," implies a period of great dearth and scarcity of food, for ordinarily a penny, or denarius, would purchase ten or twenty measures of wheat. In this historical fulfilment the famine implied is not so much of literal food as of the spiritual bread of life, like that mentioned by Amos, "I will send a famine in the land: not a famine of bread nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the Word of the Lord. They shall run to and fro to seek the Word of the Lord, and shall not find it." The uniform result of Popish dominion is the withholding of the Bible—the bread of life—from the common people, under the false pretext of danger arising from its contents being misinterpreted. Popery systematically locks up the Scriptures in the dead languages, recites its public services in the Latin tongue, and rigidly suppresses the circulation of God's Word, where it has power to do so. At the same time,

The Prohibitory Injunction,

"See that thou hurt not the oil and the wine," seems to imply that in the midst of all this darkness of superstition and famine of spiritual food, the Divine oil * of the Holy Spirit's sanctifying, purifying and enlightening influence, and the new wine † of Divine love, gladdening, comforting and cheering the soul of man, should not be withheld from those who, amidst prevailing superstition and apostasy, should still remain faithfully worshipping God, in spirit and in truth.

The death of the Emperor Justinian in 565 delivered the Church from a dangerous intermeddler, who, first as the zealous champion of orthodoxy, and afterwards as the fiery partisan of heresy, had powerfully stimulated controversy and discord. Gibbon says that "his death restored in some measure the peace of the Church, and the reigns of his four successors, the Emperors Justin, Tiberius, Maurice and Phocas, are distinguished by a fortunate vacancy in the ecclesiastical history of the East." Hitherto the Christian Church has been like the fire-colored horse, full of fiery dissension and the flames of discord, wielding "the great sword" of fratricidal strife, and "taking peace from the earth, and killing one another," but now it begins to resemble a black horse—passing into the midnight darkness of ignorance and superstition, and lulled into a deathlike slumber by the Delilah enchantments and composing draughts of Popery. The following extracts are specimens of the unanimous testimony of historians as to the spiritual famine and darkness of the visible Church from 565 to 1073.

Mosheim says of the sixth century, "The barriers of ancient simplicity and truth being once torn up, there was a nor can it easily be said how much of impurity and superstition religion gradually received. The controversialists of the East were continually darkening the great doctrines of revelation by the most subtle distinctions. Those who instructed the people were only intent upon imbuing them more and more with ignorance, superstition, reverence for the clergy, and admiration for empty ceremonies, so that they lost all sense and knowledge of true piety;" and speaking of the seventh century, Mosheim says: "During this century true religion lay buried under a senseless mass of superstitions, and was unable to raise her head. The early Christians had worshipped only God and His Son, but these so-called Christians, in this age, worshipped the wood of a cross, the images of holy bones, and bones of dubious origin; they depicted a certain fire (of purgatory) prepared to burn off the imperfections of the soul; they seemed to inculcate that the gates of heaven would be closed against none who should enrich the clergy with their donations; they practically placed the substance of religion exclusively in external rites and bodily exercises."

Constant Progress for the Worse,

Milner, speaking of the ninth century, says: "We are penetrating into the regions of darkness and of the shadow of death, and we are carried by every step into scenes still more gloomy than the former. Here and there, indeed, a glimmering ray of the Sun of Righteousness appears; it is vain to look for any steady lustre of Evangelical truth and holiness." Of the tenth century Milner says, "Baronius, the famous annalist of the Roman Catholic Church, whose partiality to it was notorious, has, however, the candor to own that this was barren of all goodness: a leaden age, abounding in all wickedness; and a dark age, remarkable above all others for the scarcity of writers and men of letters." Of the same period D'Aubigne writes, "What crimes in these ages of darkness! What might be feared when a small contribution to the building of a church was supposed to deliver from the punishment of the future world. What hope of revival, when the communication between God and man seemed at an end, and man, afar off from God, moved only in a circle of pitiful ceremonies and gross practices, in an atmosphere of death. The evil of the period we speak of bore a character of universality that it has not borne at any subsequent date."

An Iron Age,

Hallam, speaking of the Dark Ages from the sixth to the eleventh century, said: "A cloud of ignorance overspread the whole face of the church, hardly broken by a few glimmering lights, who owe much of their distinction to the surrounding darkness. France reached her lowest point about the beginning of the eighth century, but England did not fall into till the middle of the ninth. The universal ignorance was rendered unavoidable, among other causes, by the scarcity of books, which could only be procured at an immense price." Haweis, in his Church History, describes this same period "as a descending into the regions of darkness and the shadow of death, where scarce a ray of truth casts its feeble glimmerings to light the benighted traveller on his way to the celestial city." Dr. Robertson also says of the ninth century: "Charlemagne in France, and Alfred the Great in England, endeavored to dispel this darkness, and gave their subjects a short glimpse of light and knowledge. But the ignorance of the age was too powerful for their efforts and institutions. The darkness returned, and settled over Europe more thick and heavy than before."

Complete Degradation

According to "White's Christian Centuries:" "About the year A. D. 1000, misery and wickedness were the characteristics of the times. A breaking-up of all morals and all law, and a wide deluge of sin overspread all lands. And at Rome itself, the capital of intellect and religion, such iniquities were perpetrated on every side, that Protestant authors themselves consent to draw a veil over them for the sake of human nature."

It may be thought that the survey of this and the preceding periods concerns the student of history rather than the student of prophecy; but the importance of a close examination of them is perceived when we realize that by a comparison of history with prophecy we may find the key to correct interpretation. As in our school-days we were taught by the rules of proportion how to find a fourth term when three terms were given, so in the study of prophecy we have (1) certain prophecies already fulfilled; (2) their fulfilment in history; and (3) certain other prophecies not yet fulfilled—three terms from which we learn the fourth term—what the future fulfilment will be. By this method of study the course of future events is seen, not in guesses but with mathematical certainty.

* See Article on the Seven Seals in the issue of October 27, of this journal, page 679, and more fully in The Prophetic News. Price 6 cents; on sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

* 1 John 2: 20-27.

† Sol. Song, 1: 2; Eph. 5: 11; Isa. 55: 1.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a rséumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Fisheries Commission Commenced its sittings in Washington on November 22, and on the following day the American brief was presented. The difficulty to be removed relates chiefly to the right of American ships to trade at Canadian ports. The existing treaty, which dates from 1818, was negotiated at a time when the conditions of trade were far behind those of our days, and, therefore, the provisions of that treaty will require radical change. So far as the demands of our Government have been disclosed, they appear to be for the right of American ships to enter Canadian ports for purposes of trade, subject to Canadian customs regulations, while the present treaty restricts the right of entry to ships entering for repairs, shelter, or obtaining wood or water. Beside this, there is the difficult question of the bays. It is conceded that American vessels are not entitled to fish within three miles of the Canadian coast, but while our Government contend that the distance should be measured from actual land, the Dominion Government claim that in the case of a bay or indentation of the coast, the three miles should be measured from a straight line drawn from the projecting headlands. These two are the problems the Commissioners have to solve, though probably other incidental questions may be discussed.

Conferences of Democratic Leaders are Taking place, at the President's suggestion and with his assistance. It is understood that they concern not only the organization of the House, the first and immediate business in hand, but the crucial question of the surplus. In the face of a Presidential election, the President urges upon the leaders of the party the necessity of unity, which of course can only be attained by compromise. With so wide a divergence of opinion as exists between Mr. Carlisle and Mr. Randall it will be difficult to find a basis of agreement, but Mr. Randall is reported to have professed himself favorable to negotiation, and, as one step on his side, that he was ready to consider "a fair and just revision of the present tariff and internal revenue taxation. If the Democratic party fails in the next session to pass through the House a comprehensive financial measure, it will be discredited in the country. That fact is certain and the Democratic leaders appear to be recognizing it. Whether they harmonize or not it may be hoped that some relief will be given by the coming Congress to the people, who are now bearing heavier burdens than is necessary. If the statesmen of both parties that compose this Congress are incapable of solving the problem, they will have to give place to others who are able.

The Organization of a New Political Party is announced, and eighteen hundred persons are said to have enrolled themselves as members in a few days. Its principles are practically those of the American or "Know Nothing" party, which flourished about thirty years ago. The platform of the party, as stated by the Evening Post, consists of the five following planks: (1) Restriction or regulation of immigration, with rigid exclusion of paupers, criminals, Anarchists and Socialists. (2) That the time for naturalization be extended to fourteen years, with the possible addition of an educational qualification. (3) That our American free school system shall be protected and extended in every community in the land. (4) That American lands shall not be owned by foreign capitalists. (5) That no public funds shall be used for sectarian purposes. The fact that the greatest menace to the public welfare is the agitation of the Anarchists, who are nearly all foreigners, gives an impetus to this new "American Party," which it would not otherwise have.

An Attempt to Mislead the Public on the subject of the Anarchists was made by Most's counsel at his trial, and is being supported by certain influential journals. It is contended that the prosecution of Most is a violation of the right of free speech. Precious as that right is to every American citizen, he ought not to object to limits being assigned to its exercise. The utmost freedom ought to be, and is, given to men who criticise our laws, and urge their fellow-citizens to organize for their amendment or repeal; but free speech is abused and put to a pernicious use, when men urge others to set the law at defiance and to kill the officers appointed to execute the law. Their words may incite weak-minded and ignorant men to crime, and they ought to be punished for uttering them. The punishment of such men as Most will not endanger the right of free speech.

The Burning of Mr. P. T. Barnum's Famous menagerie caused some excitement at Bridgeport, Conn., on November 20. It was in winter quarters there, and was kept in an immense building, the upper portion of which was filled with hay and other fodder. The fire broke out in the night, and was not discovered by the attendants until the trumpeting of the scared elephants gave the alarm. The fire had by that time gained possession of the hay, and but few of the animals could then be rescued. Some of them escaped as the sides of their cages burned away, but in those cases most of the animals died of their burns. Among them was the huge hippopotamus. Four of the elephants perished, and one that escaped was drowned. A lion that escaped, caused considerable alarm in the city, and as it could not be secured, it was shot. Zebras, ibexes, tapirs, wolves, serpents, etc., were burned to death. Mr. Barnum estimates his loss, over and above insurance, at half a million dollars.

The Secretary of the Treasury has Decided that the duty levied on the idol imported by the Chinese of San Francisco must be paid. The entire import consists of the image of a dragon, a quantity of "sacred" cord, some metal incense pots, a number of wooden poles to be used for elevating the dragon, and bamboo hoops for extending its tail. The How Wong Mew, a society which is the consignee of these articles, claimed that they were entitled to free entry, as they were regalia for use in religious services. The Collector at San Francisco, however, insisted that they were theatrical properties, and assessed them accordingly. The society then appealed to Mr. Fairchild, who has now approved the decision of the Collector. There is no doubt about its justice. It would be absurd to treat dragon worship as religion.

The Wreck of the German Steamship W. A. Scholten, adds another catastrophe to the year's list. She left Rotterdam for New York on November 19, with 214 souls on board. The same night, when off the English coast near Dover, she struck a coal steamer which is said to have been riding at anchor, and sank in twenty minutes; a dense fog prevailed at the time. There appears to have been a lack of discipline among the crew, and several of the boats, when they were lowered, proved unseaworthy. Only two were of any use. They were lowered, but the struggle to secure places in them was frightful. They put off from the ship before they were full, and very few passengers managed to get into them. The people left on board put on life-belts, and some leaped into the icy water. Many, however, who waited on the ship, went down in the awful suction that accompanied her final plunge, and were seen no more. A rescuing vessel—the Ebro—succeeded in picking up some of the passengers who had jumped overboard. They were benumbed with the cold, and one died after being rescued. After the wreck 125 persons were reported missing. Of these, thirteen have since come to land, having been picked up at sea. Possibly more may have been saved by passing vessels, but there is reason to fear that 112 must have perished.

The French Presidential Crisis Resulting from the exposure of M. Wilson, President Grevy's son-in-law, keeps the whole country in suspense. The Rouvier Cabinet was defeated on November 19 by the decisive vote of 328 to 242. It was on a question raised by M. Clemenceau respecting the Domestic policy of the Government. Prime minister Rouvier asked the Chamber to postpone the debate. A division was taken, with the result stated, and M. Rouvier promptly announced the resignation of himself and his colleagues. The resignation of the President of the Republic was also called for, but M. Grevy declared that he could not, and would not, resign until he had been vindicated in the Wilson affair. The leaders of all parties, however, combined to force his resignation. They, one after the other, refused to take office under him. Clemenceau, Goblet, de Freycinet, Ferry and others were invited, but all refused. The Paris Municipal Council grew menacing on Wednesday, and the Senate, which in former difficulties had stood by the President, refused its help. Thereupon President Grevy reluctantly and ambiguously promised to resign. Prince Napoleon took advantage of the opportunity to issue a manifesto, avowing radical sentiments and urging an appeal to universal suffrage. His manifesto was an evident attempt to win popularity by flatteries (Daniel 11: 21).

The German Reichstag was Opened on Thursday last. The Emperor's speech, which was read by Minister Von Bœtticher, had evidently been written with the desire of reassuring the empire and European peoples. It strenuously disclaimed any aggressive purposes, and asserted that the military establishment was in no sense a menace to peace, but only to make Germany "strong in parrying surprises, and defending her independence." The venerable Emperor's allusion to his son's critical condition was pathetic but dignified. He said: "The grave complaint with which the Crown Prince has been visited fills the mind, not only of the Emperor, but also of his august allies and the whole of Germany, with anxious care. Nothing that human science and knowledge and careful tending can do will be left undone. Our eyes and prayers, however, are directed toward God, whose decrees rule the destinies of nations, as well as the life of the individual man." The speech also intimated an increase in the corn duties, announced the extension of the Austro-German treaty of alliance and promised relief from some financial burdens.

The London Riots were not Resumed on Sunday, November 20. The chief of police made extensive preparations for preventing a meeting in Trafalgar Square. Ten thousand special constables, principally clerks in stores and offices, were sworn in and armed with staves, but their services were not required. The officers patrolled the square all day, while mounted police held the converging streets. A large crowd assembled, but it was not of a political character. It was made up chiefly of spectators and roughs, who attended to make a profit out of a riot, rather than to take part in it. About five thousand persons held a meeting in Hyde Park, and passed resolutions denouncing the police and the Government, but as there was no breach of the peace the police did not interfere. The press correspondents, while admitting that the apprehensions of disturbance were falsified, predict that the end of the trouble has not been reached. Large numbers of unemployed workmen are on the verge of starvation, and are growing more discontented and inimical to the Government daily.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal, have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $16.50. They are from: Independence Ia., $1; Hudson, N. Y. $2; Cincinnati, O., $1; Lacota, Mich., $1; Philadelphia, Pa., $1; E. Des Moines, Ia., $2.50; Seaward, Me., $5; St. Paul, Minn., $3. We gladly welcome these sums on behalf of ministers to whom THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a necessity, as they have but little, if any other assistance in expounding the Word of God to their congregations. Many others are anxiously waiting and earnestly praying that God will put it into the hearts of some who love Him to aid them in their work for Christ by sending them the paper which has been blessed to them, for another year.

Mr. E. P. Telford's Services at Fall River, Mass., have been much blessed. The Evening News of that city says the interest grew from the first, and "has become intense." Mr. Telford's preaching, it goes on to say, "reaches many hearts, pricks many consciences, if the close attention and expression of the congregation may be taken as a sign. The Gospel is preached in a manly fashion, and without cant, a way that recommends it to the common sense of the people. Mr. Telford does not hesitate to state humorous incidents in his ministry, and has a quiet wit which incites his hearers to laughter, but they are quickly subdued by his powerful application of the truth. Mrs. Telford sang last night one of her touching solos, "Sunshine." How intently the audience listened to the sweet song, and evidently wished for that sunshine in their lives and homes! This lady is a very effective singer. She sings the Gospel, and is able to express the true meaning of the author. She is also a very efficient worker in the inquiry room."

A Dog's Share in the Rescue of a Ship's crew is described in a despatch from Chicago. A terrible storm raged all day on November 19, and a schooner named the Stampede was disabled and drifted off South Chicago, her crew half-frozen and nearly dead. The captain, fearing that the vessel would founder, and being unable to signal the life-saving station for help, persuaded one of his men, an athletic young fellow, to make the attempt to swim ashore, a distance of about 100 yards, through the heavy sea, with his arms around the neck of a huge Newfoundland dog which belonged to the vessel. The dog did his duty magnificently and swam ashore, but the poor man was helpless and unconscious when he gained the beach. He would have perished in the cold if a man who was passing had not heard the dog's cries. In this way word was sent to the life-saving station in Chicago, and the whole crew was taken from the vessel in safety. Of all on board the imperilled ship the dog must have seemed the most useless, yet it was through him that the men's lives were saved. So it is in spiritual matters; a despised man, or even a child, has often been the means used of God for the rescue of souls in danger of perishing (1 Cor. 1: 27).

An Extraordinary Surgical Operation Was performed at the New York Hospital on November 22 by the chief of the surgical staff. A child twelve years of age, the daughter of poor parents who live in a rear tenement house, was brought into the operating-room. Her legs were curved to such a degree that she could not walk. The surgeon said that her deformity had been caused by lack of proper nourishment, bad air and drainage, and the inattention of her overworked parents. The child had not walked since she was two years old. She was put under the influence of anæsthetics and the operation commenced. The operator bared the bones, and cut from each a small piece the shape of a wedge, and was then able to straighten the bones. The wounds were then dressed and the limbs encased in plaster-of-paris. The surgeon said that in a short time the child would be able to walk like other children, and her limbs would be strong and straight. If that result is achieved the parents of the child will doubtless be very thankful, though they cannot but grieve that so terrible an operation should have been necessary. How much of the moral obliquity we see among young people may be due to the atmosphere of the home and the inattention of parents, none can tell. Unhappily the moral surgery of prisons and reformatories, which the world has tried in these cases has not proved very successful. The only permanent cures are those that Christ has worked by His transforming grace (Ezekiel 11: 19, 20.)

The Success of a Bride's Appeal to the Post-master-General is reported by the Washington Star. Heretofore, when a lady employed as a clerk in the Post Office Department married, it was customary for her to hand in her resignation, and there have been cases in which ladies neglecting to do so have been discharged. But recently a young lady became a bride without losing her position. She had been engaged for some time to a young man who was also in the Post Office, but they had deferred marriage because of the loss it would entail. The young lady at last resolved to appeal to the Postmaster-General himself. She told him her story, and asked if it were not possible to marry and keep her position too. Mr. Vilas told her that he saw no reason why she could not do so, and said that he did not think that marriage would interfere with her official duties. At least, he was married, and he thought that he gave as good, and perhaps better, service to the Government than if he was unmarried; and so with the official benediction of the head of the Department upon their union, the two young clerks, after office hours, betook themselves to the minister's and were duly made man and wife. Whether the marriage would have taken place if Mr. Vilas had insisted on the bride's resignation, we need not ask. Perhaps the young lady's affection for her lover was strong enough to have made the sacrifice. It is certain that those who enter into true Union with Christ, must be ready to sacrifice anything they hold dear for His sake, even life itself (Luke 14: 26).

Ladies Despoiled of their Diamonds have of late made numerous applications to the police of New York for their recovery. A short time ago, a gentleman desiring to have some gems belonging to his wife set in more modern style, sent them to a well-known jeweller for the purpose. A day or two afterward the jeweller wrote him that they were not worth so expensive a setting as he had ordered, being only imitation stones. The gentleman and his wife were horror-stricken, as they had paid an enormous sum for the jewels, which were undoubtedly genuine when purchased. Similar cases came to light, and then the police, making inquiries, discovered that in each of the families where a loss had occurred, a certain man had been employed as butler or valet. The man was traced, and has been caught. He proves to have been a diamond-setter by trade and a very skilful workman. His plan appears to have been, when in the confidence of his employers, to take a cast of their jewels, procure imitation stones of the same size, and substitute those for the real ones. The chief of police, speaking of these cases, said: "Incessant vigilance seems to be the price of possession. Indeed, I sometimes think it is too high a price to pay for the pleasure of wearing costly jewels. But some people will have them at any cost." In these days of false teaching and prevalent scepticism, there is need of incessant vigilance, also, on the part of those who possess a treasure more precious than diamonds (Rev. 3: 11).

A Remarkable Invention was Tested at Ridgefield Park, N. J., on Nov. 22. It was a new air-brake for stopping trains, invented by Mr. Westinghouse. Until now, the air-brake has been used very successfully on freight trains of not more than twenty-five cars, but it was found that when this number was exceeded, a limit was set to the system's utility. This difficulty has now been overcome, and a party of gentlemen were taken to see the new system in operation. It was tried on a train of fifty cars, 1,900 feet long, and weighing two million pounds, drawn by a mighty engine of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road. A post by the side of the track marked the point at which the brake was to be applied. An emergency stop with the freight train running twenty miles an hour, was the first test. The brake was applied at the instant the post was reached. Twelve and a quarter seconds later, at 200 feet from the post, the train was at a standstill. A high-pressure test, with the train running twenty-two miles an hour, resulted in its being pulled up in six seconds, 91 feet from the stopping post. A final comparison was made with two trains running abreast, at forty-five miles an hour, one with the old brake and one with the new. At a given signal the brakes were applied simultaneously on both trains, and while the new brake stopped the train in 495 feet, the old brake did not bring its train to a standstill until it was 1,204 feet beyond the post. Of the immense advantages of the invention there can be no question, and it will probably, when brought into use, save many lives. As "the down grade" in religion is being much travelled just now, there is reason for applying a powerful brake on that line. Mr. Spurgeon has recommended that of earnest prayer, and it cannot be surpassed (Jer. 23: 11, 12).

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. George F. Pentecost, D. D., is now engaged in evangelistic work in Augusta, Me., which will continue for several weeks.

The site for the proposed Protestant Episcopal Cathedral, in New York City, has been selected. It covers the three blocks between 110th and 113th Streets, between Tenth Avenue and Morningside Drive.

The ten cent fund for the Memorial Church, collected by Dr. Edward Judson in memory of his father, Adoniram Judson, the pioneer missionary in India, now amounts to nearly $25,000.

The receipts of the British Foreign and American Bible Societies from their origin to the present year are reported to be $160,578,463. The amount received by these Societies for the last year amounted to $5,479,948.

The Congregational ministers in England and Wales number somewhat over 3,000. It was stated at the autumnal meeting of the Congregational Union, that the abstainers outnumbered the non-abstainers by 400. Of the 373 theological students, 315 are abstainers.

Some forty-five societies were represented in the meeting of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor of Western Massachusetts, held in the First Church of Springfield. The Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong, of New York, delivered the principal address.

Large numbers of young men in Michigan have recently lost their reason and had to be sent to the insane asylum. Prominent physicians, who have examined them, positively assert that their affliction has resulted from the excessive smoking of cigarettes.

A New York journalist, who last week announced his retirement from work, states that he has been laboring on his journal for forty-eight years, often remaining at his desk for sixteen hours daily. This, which is not an uncommon experience, may be a useful fact for young men to know, who aspire to the editorial chair.

Smoking has been prohibited in the University of Pennsylvania. The prohibition is the result of the efforts of Dr. T. William White, Director of Physical Culture at the University. Prof. Jackson, Secretary of the Faculty, says: "We have done this in consideration of the health and welfare of the undergraduates."

Dr. Meredith, who succeeded Dr. George F. Pentecost as pastor of the Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, holds a Bible Class every Tuesday night in the church, for Sunday-school teachers. The International Lesson for the following Sunday is the subject studied. A similar class, which Dr. Meredith conducted in Boston, had three thousand members.

A Seaside Institute has been built and furnished at Bridgeport, Conn., by the Warner Brothers, for the use of the eleven hundred women and girls whom they employ in their corset-making business. The Institute cost $100,000, and contains a library of 3,000 volumes, a music room, etc. Mrs. Cleveland attended the opening exercises, to which only working women were admitted. Three thousand attended, and the President's popular wife greeted each one with a shake of the hand

Clergymen and Evangelists who will Allow Copies of the CHRISTIAN HERALD to be placed in the seats of churches, or will have them distributed at the doors, will be supplied with assorted parcels of back numbers if they will write to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

"SITTING BY."

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And it came to pass on a certain day, as He was teaching, that there were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by" Luke 5 : 17.

Four Kinds of Hearers—The Fourth, Spectators Rather than Hearers—I. What They Were Doing—Indulging their Curiosity—Criticising—Perhaps Admiring—No Practical Result—Carlyle's Remark About the Cricket—II. What was Happening—Responsibility Piling Up—Hearts Growing Harder—Obstructing Christ—Mail-Clad Hearers—III. Why They Sat By—Were Conceited—A Man Turned Inside Out—IV. An Estimate of Them—V. Persons who Should not Sit By—Why a Scotchman Left the Kirk.

A CONGREGATION is a strange aggregate: it is like the gatherings of a net, or the collections of a dredge. If it is a very large one, it is specially remarkable. If anybody could write the histories of all gathered here, the result would be a library of singular stories. In the present congregation we have a large company of people who have long known the Lord, and have for years rejoiced in His name. We have another company of persons who do not know the Lord savingly, but are not far from the kingdom of God. We have also among us some who are far removed from divine life; a people about whom we have little or no hope.

In every congregation we have a fourth class, who would decline to be classed at all: they may be said to be here and not here. They are Spectators Rather Than Hearers.

Like the gentlemen mentioned in our text, they are "sitting by." They are too respectable to be numbered with the vulgar crowd. No, no; they are only callers, sitting by. They would not like to have it supposed that they are regular hearers, much less converts: they are "sitting by." They are not repenting; they are not believing; they are not entering into the truth at all; but they are "sitting by." They have come to look on, take notes, and make remarks. They are on the outskirts of the battle, but they are not combatants at all; they are "sitting by," where they hope they are out of gunshot.

Let me freely speak to you concerning certain of those who sat by. They were by no means to be despised, for some of them were eminent persons. They were Pharisees, members of the separate sect, who kept themselves to themselves, and were punctilious about the externals of religion. Very superior indeed were these Pharisees; and you could see by their faces that they felt themselves to be persons of importance. With these were doctors of the law, the learned men who had studied the Scriptures very carefully, counted the words of each holy book, and found out the middle letter of it. These doctors of the law the unlettered peasant of Nazareth, concerning whom they had a very strong, but by no means favorable, opinion. They had heard about Him, and they condescended to give Him a hearing, half blushing at their own modesty in doing so. Not, of course, that He could teach them anything; they were merely "sitting by," and nothing more. We do not see many of these great folk among our crowds, and perhaps there are none such here on this occasion, but we cannot be sure. I do not much care to know whether the learned and profound are here; but they do come among us at times, though it is only to sit by. I will say no more about these remarkable people just now, for many others come into congregations merely to sit by.

Had Come to Hear

I. Let our first head answer the inquiry—what were these people doing? They were "sitting by." There is a good deal in this. First, they were Indulging Their Curiosity.

They had come out of every town of Galilee and Judea and Jerusalem to know what this stir was all about. They had heard the great fame of Christ for working miracles, and this drew them into the throng which continually surrounded Him. Besides, the crowd itself drew them. Why was there such a large company? What could it be all about? They would like to know for the sake of curiosity. They would for once hear the man, that they might be able to say that they had heard Him; but they were not going to be influenced by what they heard; they would hear Him as outsiders, "sitting by." They were curious, but not anxious.

Many come into our assemblies and sit by in this respect—that they are Altogether Indifferent.

I do not suppose that these scribes and Pharisees were quite good enough to be altogether indifferent; they leaned the wrong way, and were bitterly opposed. Too many act as if they said, "I come to hear a noted preacher; but what his doctrine may be I neither know nor care." They do not want to know too much. This atoning sacrifice—they hear so much about it; this shedding of the precious blood of Jesus, this putting away of sin by the sacrifice of Jesus—they will not lend an ear to this saving mystery, but treat it as a matter of little or no consequence. It is nothing to them that Jesus should die. O, dear sirs, it ought to be something to you! If there is anything worthy of a man's inquiry, it is the matter which concerns his own soul for eternity. Would God you would no longer be found "sitting by," but would in earnest feel: "There is something here for me. Perhaps for me there is a peace which I have never known, a joy which I have never imagined. I will see for myself." May that be your resolve, and may you no longer be among those who sit by in stolid indifference.

The scribes and Pharisees were sitting by in another and a worse sense; for

They Were There to Criticise

in an unfriendly spirit, and either find faults or invent them. I see them take out their notebooks to jot down a word the Saviour said which they thought could be twisted. How they nudged one another, as He said something which sounded unusual and bold! Oh, could they but catch Him! When, at last, He said to the sick man, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," I think I see their eyes flash with malignant fire. "Now we have got Him! Now we have got Him! This Man blasphemeth." My hearers, this was a wretched business, was it not? It is a very poor business to go to the house of God to criticise a fellow-mortal who is sincerely trying to do us good. It will not, in the present case, affect the preacher much; for his skin is hardened, and he feels not the tiny strokes of ordinary censure In no case can ungenerous criticisms do any good; but the pity of it is, that when we earnestly desire to show to you the way of salvation, some of you should hinder us by petty observations upon a faulty mannerism, a slight blunder, a mispronunciation of a word, or an inaccurate accent. Alas, what small things put eternal truth on one side! Was it Carlyle who spoke of the cricket as chirping amid the crack of doom? I am apt to think that many people are like that cricket; they go on with their idle chit-chat when Christ Himself is set before them.

This is Poor Work.

It is a waste of time for yourself, and a trial of temper to others. Yet there are many who are in this manner "sitting by."

Now, I do not care to go further into these different forms of "sitting by"; but no doubt some kindly admire, but do not profit. Hundreds of people are "sitting by" who are attentive hearers and warm friends, and yet have no part nor lot in the matter. They have been more or less regular attendants at this house of prayer for, say twelve, fourteen, fifteen, twenty years, and yet they are not one whit the better.

Why, some of you have been prayed for time out of mind, and you have been preached at as well, and still you are "sitting by." I cannot make out why you come so constantly, and yet profit so little. It would seem to all who know you a very odd thing if you were seen loafing about a certain shop for an hour and a half one day in the week for twenty years, and yet you never bought a pennyworth of goods. Why do you hang about the gospel shop, and yet purchase nothing? On your own showing you are a fool. I do not like using a hard word; still, it is used in Scripture for such as you are. He who believes a thing to be so important that he spends one day in the week in hearing about it, and yet does not think it important enough to accept it as a gift, stultifies himself by his own actions. How will you answer for it at the last great day when the Judge shall say, "You believed enough to go and hear about salvation; why did you not accept it? What answer will you give, you that are "sitting by"?

II. Secondly, let us inquire

What Was Happening

while these persons were "sitting by"? They had entered the room where Jesus was preaching, where crowds were listening, where miracles of mercy were being wrought. They were criticising, carping and cavilling; but what was happening to them all the while?

Well, first, they were incurring responsibility. Sirs, you cannot hear the gospel and refuse it, and yet remain as you are. You are either better or worse after hearing the gospel. Oh, you that have heard the gospel so long, and have been "sitting by" all the while, what a mountain of guilt rests upon you! How shall you escape? What must become of you after such base ingratitude? Besides that, they were gathering hardness of heart. Every hour that you listen to the gospel, and bar your heart against it, you are less and less likely to admit it. The bolt that is rusted is hard to move back from its place. The path that has long been trodden by daily traffic has become hard, as though it were paved with stone: hearts that have often been traversed by the gospel become like iron beneath its tread. I fear your consciences have grown hardened by the traffic of the gospel, I know that it is so with many. The Lord forgive them.

Once again, let me remind you that those who were "sitting by" were obstructing Christ all that they could. There is a something—every preacher has felt it—there is a something in a congregation itself which affects the preacher, even as he affects the congregation. When the doctors of the law and the Pharisees are "sitting by," they drag us down, and we cannot do many mighty works. If my eye catches the glance of one of these ice-men; if I perceive his wretched indifference, and detect his half-concealed sneer—I am weakened by it. I fancy I hear such folks saying, "We care nothing for what you say. We do not belong to those whom you can influence.

We are Clad in Mail

against your weapons." This chills one to the marrow. Now, this is the tendency of your conduct if you are "sitting by"—you chill the preacher, and in chilling the preacher you do boundless mischief to the congregation.

It is a terrible fact, that certain of you may be so acting as to hinder the salvation of others by your indifference to the sacred message. I believe that this is eminently the case with you that are very good people in all but the one thing needful. You do not fear God, and your very goodness works for evil. The example of a rank and rotten profligate will not influence certain minds; for they are disgusted by its grossness, and driven to seek something better. But when young men see an excellent person like you, so moral and amiable, without religion, they gather from your example that godliness is not absolutely needful, and take license to do without it. Thus, you who are "sitting by" may be a curse where you little suspect it: you may be encouraging others in the attempt to live without the Saviour.

III. Next, let us inquire what was the cause why these people were "sitting by."

Why Did They Come to hear Jesus, and yet did not become a part of the really attentive congregation, but were hovering round the skirts of it, and "sitting by"?

I would not needlessly offend any of those who have come hither at this time, but let me quietly say a few things which may be applicable to them.

In the first place, in the case of the scribes it was self-conceit which made them sit by. They were divided from the common throng by a sense of superiority. That is the reason why so many sit by; in their own opinion they are quite as good as the best, and are not in need of any great change. They are most respectable people, and they believe that they are also upright and generous. There went a man out of this place one evening who was spoken to by one of our friends, who happened to know him in trade, and had him in good repute. "What! have you been to hear our minister to-night?" The good man answered, "Yes, I am sorry to say I have." "But," said our friend, "why are you sorry?" "Why," he said, "he has and spoiled my idea of myself. When I went into the Tabernacle I thought I was the best man in Newington, but now I feel that my righteousness is worthless." "Oh," said the friend, "that is all right; you will come again, I am sure. The Word has come home to you, and shown you the truth: you will get comfort soon." That friend did come again, and he is here to-night: he takes pleasure in that very truth which turned him inside out; and he comes on purpose that the Word of the Lord may search him, and try him, and be to him as a refiner's fire. He that is most afraid to be turned inside out is the man who most needs to undergo that process.

Turned Me Inside Out,

Many are "sitting by" because of resolute unbelief and determined self-confidence. O friends, it is born in us by nature to believe in ourselves. What is that but clear idolatry? It is not till we are born again that we come to believe in Jesus Christ, and so to trust in the living God, and receive a living hope. May the Lord deliver us from that old, good-for-nothing confidence in self, confidence in works, confidence in outward ceremonies, confidence in the flesh! Prejudice is the ruin of thousands. They might be made to see, if they did not think that they saw already; they might be happy in the Lord, if their groundless conceit did not make them to be "sitting by."

IV. What shall we say of these sitters-by? Why, first they seem to me to be when you think of the Lord who was preaching. How could they be indifferent in His presence? He was at a white heat, and they were blocks of ice. He was all energy, and they were "sitting by." He spending and being spent, and they "sitting by." He engaged all night in prayer with His divine Father, and now coming forth "clothed with divine power to heal; and they sitting by." Pretending to be doctors and teachers of the people, and therefore under great responsibility, they were yet content to be "sitting by" when Jesus was pouring out His soul. O, sirs, none of us ought to be indifferent in the presence of the Christ of God. Oh, it is sadly strange! Lord, teach this foolish generation wisdom! Let them not be "sitting by"!

Wonderfully Out of Place

It was equally incongruous also with the condition of the rest of the congregation. See, there is such a crowd around the Lord Jesus, that they are wanting to bring in a man who is sick of the palsy, and they cannot get him near. Nobody will make way, they are all so eager to hear and to get a blessing. At last they take the palsied man to the top of the roof; they actually break up the tiling; they let the man down with ropes over the heads of the people; yes, right in amongst the learned lawyers and the proud Pharisees. They are not moved, not they! A man is about to be healed who has long been paralyzed, and they treat it as if it were an interesting case in the hospital, around which a company of medical students gather, as to a show. How can they act in this way? It will be an awful thing for some of you to be cast away forever, and then to remember that you sat next to people that were saved; sat next them at the very time when they heard unto eternal life.

Who Should not Sit By.

V. I had much more to add upon this point, but time admonishes me. Let me in a few sentences speak to some who should not be among those who are "sitting by." You that feel your soul-sickness will not be of that number. You feel your guilt; you feel your need of Christ; you are broken down to-night; then do not for a moment sit by. Rise; He calleth thee! Press through the crowd to Jesus. Believe in Him and live. May His spirit lead you to do so at once! Before I found the Saviour, I visited nearly every place of worship in the town where I lived; but I did not find full salvation at any one of them. I believe that it was through my own ignorance. In the little Primitive Methodist chapel, when I heard Christ preached, and was bidden to look alone to Him, I found rest unto my soul; but the reason why I found Him was, because His grace had made me know that I wanted Him. I do not suppose that the sermon which was made useful to me had anything in it more remarkable than other gospel sermons. The special point was that the Lord had prepared me to receive the gospel message.

Why the Scotchman Left.

I have heard of a man who had long attended one of the kirks in Scotland, and as he did not get any good, he went off to listen to certain irregular preaching, and there he found peace with God. The old minister warned him of his wickedness in being away from the kirk, and said in Scotch what I must put into English, "Donald, you should not have gone to hear that man; he is not of the old kirk." "Well," said Donald, "but I wanted a blessing, and I felt I must go anywhere to get it." "Well," said the minister, "Donald, you should have waited at the pool, like the man in the gospels, till the water was stirred." "Well, sir," said the man, "but you see that man saw that the water was sometimes stirred, and though he did not get in himself, yet he knew that others stepped in and were healed, and that encouraged him to wait a little longer, in the hope that his turn might yet come. But I have lain at your pool these forty years, and I never saw the water stirred, neither did anybody get healed in it; and so I thought it was time for me to look somewhere else." Indeed it was. We cannot afford to be lost for the sake of kirks or chapels. O my hearer, do seek the Lord with all your heart; and seek Him on and on, till you find him.

You that are in great sorrow I do not think it possible that you can be altogether sitters-by! You have been disappointed in love; you have met with a world of trouble, or else you have been the round of amusements, and have seen no end of gaiety, but you are sick of it, and weary of the world and of yourself. You are one of those that cannot afford to be "sitting by," for sin curses you, death threatens you, and eternal wrath pursues you. I know how it will be with you unless grace prevents: you will go home, and the sermon will be over, and the many of you will still be sitters-by, for you will shake off conviction and be careless still. Remember, I have warned you.

Will You Despise the Warning?

A poor fallen woman is here at this time, worn out with her crimes. Does she desire to know the Saviour? Let her confess her sin and forsake it, then she will not be 'sitting by." "There is a broken-hearted youth here who begins to reap the wild oats he has sown. Will he sit by? Does he wish to know how his heart can be changed, his sin forgiven, his soul comforted? Let him arise and go to his Father, and no longer be 'sitting by.'"

And so I close with a full and free gospel call. Come and welcome, you that fain would come to Jesus. Come just now, with all your sins about you, and behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. If you want to know what it is to come to Him, know that it is to trust Him. Go to your chamber, and look up and say, "Jesus, I cannot see Thee; but Thou art wherever there is a broken heart. Behold, I seek Thee; reveal Thyself to me. I trust Thee to forgive me, and to renew me." Jesus will not refuse you, for He casts out none that come to Him. I said "Go home," but I will alter that word. Keep your seats, and seek Him where you are, and as you are. Before you leave this place, commit yourselves into that dear hand which was pierced for the guilty, and is always ready to grasp a sinner. O Lord, lead all these sinners to look to Jesus by Thy Holy Spirit for Thy mercy sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE LATE WILLIAM E. DODGE'S COURTSHIP.*

IN the circle of Mr. David Dodge's family friends, none were more respected and cherished than Mr. and Mrs. Anson G. Phelps. They also had removed from Hartford, Conn., and had come to reside in New York in the year 1813, living at first in a large brick house on Broadway, opposite St. Paul's church, but soon changing on account of the noise of the thoroughfare, to Beekman Street, near old St. George's church, where a spacious fruit garden was an attraction, and afterward moving to Cliff Street, near Fulton. The growth of the city led them, later on, to Fourth Street, between Second and Third Avenues; and they finally occupied a noble old mansion, with extensive grounds reaching to the banks of the East River, on Thirtieth Street.

The two households were intimate, and the younger members frequently saw each other. William Dodge's residence in Connecticut had separated the young people for five or six years, and at just the age when most marked changes in person and mind occur. Knowing each other as children, they had met again, on his return to the city, almost as strangers. He had now developed into the alert, vigorous, ambitious young man, with more than usual maturity from his early responsibilities. She had grown into the tall graceful, lovely woman, not so old as he by four years, but as an elder sister, and having a large share in the household and social duties of her father's hospitable home, she had seen much of society, and had also gained other and wider views of life, by her faithfulness as a Sabbath-school teacher, and as a visitor.

During the interval correspondence had been maintained between the families; and William recalled in after years the solemn impression he received, on hearing of the revival at New Haven, where she was attending school, and of her uniting with the church. In a momentous letter found after his death, he tells her that their renewed acquaintance had awakened a regard he never felt for any other person; that he had endeavored to repress these feelings, and concluded he must avoid going where she was; yet when an opportunity occurred even to attend a meeting where she might come, his resolutions wholly failed—he could not resist the pleasure of accompanying her home; and when she was sick during the past summer he determined as soon as she recovered to make his attachment known. All the more he had besought the Lord to be the guide of his youth, and not leave him to take any step inconsistent with His will and glory. He had then purposely called at her father's house as often as he could with propriety, anxious to become better acquainted with her general views on religious and other subjects. Each visit had given increased satisfaction; every day had strengthened his affection. He can never be happy with any one else. He prays that God will give her wisdom and grace in deciding this important matter, and closes with the hope that she will not keep him long in suspense, but as soon as consistent grant him a

* From "memorials of William E. Dodge" compiled and edited by D. Stuart Dodge; a worthy tribute to the eminent Christian merchant, citizen and statesman, whose memory will be ever fragrant in the United States. 407 pages with life-like portrait. Price $1, or by mail $1.15 Published by Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., 38 Twenty-third Street, New York.

The Late Mrs. Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt

Three Hearers of a Momentous Address.

frank reply, adding as postcript, that he has his own parents' entire approbation. The reply was frank enough to convince him that his suit was not in vain, and also that perfect accord could be found in reference to religious questions—a condition which he believed could alone insure a happy and lasting union. Two years later, June 24, 1828, they were married.

THE LATE JENNY LIND.

(See Portrait.)

The name of Jenny Lind has for many years been but a musical memory. Her absolute retirement in 1868, from the scenes of her triumphs, discounted the sorrow that her death would have produced among the lovers of sweet sounds. After nearly twenty years of seclusion, the news of her death, on November 2, came upon the world only as an echo from the past.

Jenny Lind was a native of Sweden. She was born at Stockholm, October 6, 1820. Her father was a teacher of languages in that city, and on discovering in her girlhood the gift his daughter possessed, he placed her under Professor Erasmus Berg, of the Swedish Royal School of Singing, for training. Her first public appearance was in 1838, when she was eighteen years old. The marvellous purity and scope of her voice at once attracted public attention and gave assurance of her future success. Three years later she went to Paris, where she made the acquaintance of Meyerbeer and Manuel Garcia, who took a deep interest in her and rendered her valuable aid. Thence she went to Berlin to study German and perfect her musical education. She sang at a reception given by the King of Prussia to Queen Victoria, and the English critics present went wild about her, and made her most liberal offers to sing in London. She went there in 1847, and met with a most enthusiastic reception. Her triumph eclipsed every living singer, and for three years she reigned a queen over delighted assemblies in the British metropolis.

Her American tour commenced in 1850, under the management of P. T. Barnum. Its pecuniary success was prodigious. It is stated that her share of the proceeds of the concerts of the twenty months she was here exceeded one million dollars. Before her return she married the pianist of her troupe, Herr Otto Goldschmidt, of Hamburg, a union which has been supremely happy. On her return to England magnificent offers were made to her to sing at the opera-houses, but she decisively rejected them. It is stated that her refusal was dictated by religious principle, and was due to impressions produced under the preaching of Bishop Stanley, the father of Dean Stanley. In spite of the large sums offered her she continued firm, and though she gave a series of concerts afterward, she could not be induced to appear on the stage.

THE STRAITS OF MAGELLAN.

(See Illustration on page 765.)

The most southern point of the South American continent is unequalled for rugged grandeur. On the mainland, and on the other side of the Strait of Magellan, in Terra del Fuego, precipitous mountains, from six to nine thousand feet in height, raise their snow-capped summits to the clouds. In the passage known as Admiralty Strait may be seen the group depicted in the illustration on the next page. The natives on the mainland and on the islands across the strait have long borne the worst kind of reputation. Crafty, merciless and treacherous, they were the terror of mariners. Many attempts have been made to carry the Gospel to them. Among others was that of Captain Allen Gardiner, in 1850. The heroic missionary was met from the first with violent hostility, and after patient and persistent labor, he and his whole party perished there; not, however, at the hands of the people, but of starvation. But the effort to introduce Christianity was not abandoned. In 1855 another party of missionaries went there, and being driven away, settled on Keppel Island, one of the Falkland group. They succeeded in getting a few of the Fuegian Indians to visit them there, and they were instructed in civilized arts, farming, and in religion. When they went home they carried with them tools and seeds, and a good report of the friendliness of the missionaries. This led to an invitation to the missionaries to settle in Terra del Fuego, which they were glad to accept. A mission station was founded, with a branch station at Ooshooia, on the mainland, both of which are now doing good work.

THREE HEARERS.

(See Illustration.)

One beautiful day in midsummer, memorable ever afterward to at least two persons, Allan Cokefair, with his sister Laura and her friend Ella Coleman, were strolling through the woods on the outskirts of a small but populous city near New York. They evidently had no special object in view; for the listlessness which characterizes the person engaged in the laborious occupation of killing time sat on each of the trio. Yet the most indifferent mind might have been aroused and enraptured by the rare beauty of the scene spread before them. In the distance they could see the Palisades, while below rolled the glorious Hudson, calm and blue under the summer's sun, its surface broken by an occasional boat which, gliding along, left ripples that glistened and sparkled where the sunbeams gilded them. Across the river, embowered in the foliage that clothed the hills as with a garment, little villages, their white-walled cottages reflecting the light, seemed to smile on the spectator. The sky was a perfect blue, and, altogether, the scene was a picture to live in the memory as an ideal summer landscape. How little its beauty impressed the three saunterers might be inferred from their conversation. It ran on the smallest topics, and was chiefly made up of the current gossip of their circle; each contributing an item in desultory fashion.

"There is a church, I declare," said Laura, as a spire showed itself above the trees before them. "Now if the doors are open I propose we go in and rest awhile. It will be cool and shady at any rate."

"Resting is your idea of enjoyment I believe, Laura," said her brother Allan; "you never seem to have the slightest energy before midnight, and then, to see you on a ballroom floor, one would think you never tired. Well, I am not fatigued, but if you and Miss Coleman feel drawn to the church, and it is open, I will e'en join you in a siesta."

The church was open, and for service, too. Groups of worshippers were passing in, and it was evident that some special cause was drawing them together. "Let us go in," said Ella Coleman; "perhaps it is a wedding."

It was not a wedding, however, but a missionary service, and the preacher was a man who could speak practically on the subject; for, through long years, he had labored in a most unpromising field, in imminent danger of death at the hands of the people he went to teach, earnest, prayerful, trusting in God, whose promise that His word shall not return to him void, had at last been fulfilled. Now, the missionary, full of joy and gratitude, had returned to his native land to tell the good news, to ask for help in funds, and more especially in laborers to enter the field now white with harvest.

Our three friends, comfortably ensconced in a pew, looked around at the assembled crowd, and, last of all, at the preacher, who sat watching the seating of the congregation with a look of interest, doubtless contrasting the faces before him with the dusky complexions which were wont to meet his gaze under a tropical sun. He was a man worth looking at. The poor toil-worn, sunbrowned, weather-stained visage was not handsome, but it had the transparent beauty that comes from a soul consecrated, self-sacrificing, absorbed in a noble aim.

Mountain Peaks in the Strait of Magellan, South America.

It was an interesting study to watch the countenances of the three involuntary hearers, who had gone in to rest, as this service proceeded. Allan, conscious of good looks and correct attire, sat at his ease, satisfied with himself and incapable of rising above the small world of which his own ease and enjoyment were the centre. His low brow seemed never to have been ruffled by thought; as with bejewelled hand he twirled the end of his mustache, he must have seemed to the preacher a creature so vain and vacuous as to be very far down indeed in the scale of intelligence. His sister, Laura, on his right hand, looked still more impervious to the shafts of gospel truth. Pretty, and conscious of her prettiness, her brow hidden under carefully arranged bangs, eyes expressionless, busy on some fancy picture that her memory was painting for her, and thoughts far away from the scene around her. Ella Coleman, on Allan's left, was, however, a very different type of hearer. Her dark eyes, directed unswervingly on the preacher, told of sympathy and intelligent reception of his glowing words, while absolute self-forgetfulness and depth of feeling could be read in the intensity of her gaze—a girl whose heart, once enlisted in any cause, was capable of doing and suffering to the death.

A sigh escaped from her as the missionary closed his address, and the general movement that follows released attention passed through the assembly. Ella came back from the strange scenes, which had been so vividly portrayed, to time present, and her companions, but it was by an effort, and she came back a new creature. Her unsatisfied longings for something higher and nobler than the life she was leading, could, she now perceived be fulfilled. Here was a life worth living, if she were but fit for it. To drift on to middle age and gray hairs with no occupation but domestic duty, interspersed with frivolous amusement, need not be her fate. How she would delight in consecrating herself to labor such as that which the missionary had described. She was an orphan, on whose service no relatives had claims that others could not satisfy, and her small fortune would enable her to work without being a burden on any society. If she were only fit—that was the crucial question.

The next day she sought the missionary whose words had thrilled her, and poured out all her soul before him. Her eagerness, her unselfishness, pleased him, and he gently led her to the Saviour whose footsteps she longed to follow, but whom until now she had not accepted as her own personal Lord and Master. The revelation was as a new world to her. Jesus belonged not to the past, but was living now, a King to be served, a Friend to be loved, and this service to the heathen which she had desired to undertake for their sake took on a grander and nobler aspect, being done for Him.

In the presence of such an inspiration the protests of friends fell like waves on a rock. Laura thought her a fanatic, but admitted that she had never been able to understand her. Allan was amazed and indignant that a girl so charming should throw herself away. He even went so far as to offer himself as a husband, which, to him at least, seemed an offer that ought to satisfy any girl's ambition. Arguments, appeals, remonstrances, came from all quarters, but Ella was immovable, and she had her way. Not the way of ease and luxury, but the narrow way which is not free from trial and hardship, but in which there is joy unspeakable and at the end a crown of rejoicing.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 750.)

Gifts for the Orphan House—A Programme—Farewell to Missionaries—Funds in a Time of Need—The Opening of the Orphanage—The First Orphans—How God Answered Prayer—A Book Commenced—Sickness—Timely Relief.

Dec. 28, 1835. During the last four days I had received no offerings, and was rather cast down about it, not knowing why the Lord dealt thus. Yet, in the midst of it, I had a hope that He was in the meantime working for the Orphan House, though nothing had been given. I was again stirred up to pray that the Lord would appear to-day. A little after, I saw a brother, who told me that ever since he had received the printed proposal for the establishment of an Orphan House, he had considered the matter, and that he was willing to give for the use of it certain premises, which he built some years since, and which cost him £2,600, provided there could be raised about £500, to add to the buildings what may be needed, to fit them for the purpose. There is a piece of ground belonging to the premises, sufficiently large to build thereon what may be required. The buildings are very suitable for an Orphan House, containing some large rooms.

If, therefore, the Lord should put it into the hearts of His people, who have the means, to give money, the premises will be given.

December 29. A clergyman gave 10s. December 30. A brother at Sidmouth sent £5.

January 1, 1836. Through a sister was given 6s., being six different donations; also, fromherself, £1, as a donation, beside 1s. as a monthly subscription. Also, a lady sent through her £1 1s. as a yearly subscription. January 2. A sister sent £5. January 3. A gentleman sent 5s. January 4. Weekly subscription of 4s.

All this money and all these articles have been given, and all these above-mentioned offers have been made without my asking any individual for anything; moreover, almost all has been sent from individuals, concerning whom I had naturally no reason to expect anything, and some of whom I never saw. Upon the ground of these facts, therefore, I am clearly persuaded that it is the will of the Lord that I should proceed in the work, and I shall, therefore, now state something more definite than I could in the former paper.

1. If the Lord should not provide, previous to the middle of February, a house in the way of gift, which in a few weeks may be occupied for an Orphan House, or put it into the heart of some one who loves Him to pay the rent for one, or to lend us one for this purpose, I intend, God willing, to rent certain suitable premises, which are to be had for about £50 yearly.

2. It is intended, God willing, to open the Institution about April 1.

3. It is purposed to confine the Orphan House; for the present, to female children. My desire is to help both male and female orphans, and that from their earliest youth; but hitherto the Lord has pointed out only a small commencement. Should it, however, please Him to give me the means, and to increase my faith and light, I shall gladly serve Him more extensively in this way. It has appeared well to me to commence with female children, because they are the more helpless sex, and they need more particularly to be taken care of, that they may not fall a prey to vice.

4. It is intended to receive the children from the seventh to the twelfth year, and to let them stay till they are able to go to service.

5. As the children will be brought up for service, they will be employed in useful household work.

January 30. To-day I went to meet two sisters, who were expected from London. I sat down in the coach-office, took out my Bible, and began to read; and though in the midst of the noise of the city, the Lord most especially refreshed my soul, so much so, that I remember scarcely ever to have had more real communion with Him, which lasted for more than an hour. It was the love of Christ which led me there. I would gladly have remained at home, to have had time for prayer and reading the Word, especially as I had to leave the house early in the morning. Yet I went for the Lord's sake, and

He gave me a blessing: so that, though I had to wait more than two hours, and after all the sisters did not arrive, I was richly repaid. May I but leave myself more and more in His hands. He orders all things well!

February 3. I have been very weak for some days. This evening brother Craik was able to preach, instead of me, for the first time at the week meetings. How good is the Lord in restoring him thus far!

February 16. To-day was a day of thanksgiving, on account of brother Craik's restoration. We had three public meetings.

February 17. I have been repeatedly praying to-day for a text, but obtained none. About five minutes before the time of preaching, I was directed to Rev. 2:19, on which I preached with much assistance and dnjoyment to my own soul, without any previous preparation, and the Word was felt by many to be a word in season. February 26. This evening both churches met at tea together, with the brethren and sisters who intend to leave us in a few days for missionary work.

February 29. This evening we had a meeting on behalf of the missionary brethren and sisters. They were commended to the Lord in prayer.

March 1. This afternoon brother and sister Groves, and the brethren and sisters going with them for missionary purposes, twelve in number, left us for the East Indies. In consequence of the journey to the Continent, in the commencement of the last year, four brethren and two sisters have gone out—two brethren in October last, and two brethren and two sisters to-day. This evening we had again a prayer-meeting for the dear missionary party. May the Lord soon give us the privilege of seeing some one of our own number go forth.

April 21. This day was set apart for prayer and thanksgiving concerning the Orphan House, as it is now opened. In the morning several brethren prayed, and brother Craik spoke on the last verses of Psalm 20. In the afternoon I addressed our Day and Sunday-school children, the orphans and other children present. In the evening we had another prayer-meeting There are now seventeen children in the Orphan House.

May 3. I have now been for many days praying for the supply of our own temporal wants, and for the funds of the Scriptural Knowledge Institution; but, as yet, I have had not only no answers to my prayer, but our income has been less than usual, and we have had also but very little coming in for the funds of the Institution. We have not been able to put by our taxes, and expect them daily to be called for. My clothes also are now worse than any I ever wore, and I have also but one suit.

May 6. I have now been for some years, and especially these last few months, more or less thinking and praying respecting publishing a short account of the Lord's dealings with me. To-day I have at last settled to do so, and have begun to write.

May 16. For these several weeks our income has been little; and though I had prayed many times that the Lord would enable us to put by the taxes, yet the prayer remained unanswered, In the midst of it all, my comfort was that the Lord would send help by the time it would be needed. One thing particularly has been a trial to us of late, far more than our own temporal circumstances, which is, that we have scarcely in any measure been able to relieve the distress among the poor saints.

To-day the Lord at last, after I had many times prayed to Him for these weeks past, answered my prayers, there being £7 12*s.* given to me as my part of the free-will offerings through the boxes, two £5 notes having been put in yesterday, one for brother Craik, and one for me. Thus the Lord has again delivered us, and answered our prayers, and that not one single hour too late; for the taxes have not as yet been called for. May He fill my heart with gratitude for this fresh deliverance, and may He be pleased to enable me more and more to trust in Him, and to wait patiently for His help!

A third statement containing the announcement of the opening of the Orphan House for destitute female children, and a proposal for the establishment of an Infant Orphan House, was on May 18, 1836, sent to the press, from which the following is an extract: In a previous printed account, a statement has been given of the success with which the Lord has been pleased to crown the prayers of His servant, respecting the establishment of an Orphan House in this city. The subject of my prayer was, that He would graciously provide a house, either as a loan or as a gift, or that some one might be led to pay the rent for one; further, that He would give me £1,000 for the object, and likewise suitable individuals to take care of the children. A day or two after I was led to ask, in addition to the above, that He would put it into the hearts of His people to send me articles of furniture and some clothes for the children. In answer to these petitions more than £184 ($920), and many articles of furniture and clothing, were sent, a conditional offer of a house, as a gift, was made, and individuals proposed themselves to take care of the children.

1. It may be well to state that the above results have followed in answer to prayer, without any one having been asked by me for one single thing, from which I have refrained, not on account of want of confidence in the brethren, or because I doubted their love to the Lord, but that I might see the hand of God so much the more clearly. For, as the work has been begun without any visible support, in dependence only upon the living God, it was of the utmost importance to be sure of His approbation at the very commencement.

2. From this statement, and from that contained in the last printed account, it will be seen how the Lord, in a great measure, has already answered the petition of December 5, 1835; for a house has been given, suitable individuals have offered themselves to take care of the children, and much more furniture and many more articles of clothing have been sent than I ever had expected. The only part of the prayer which has not been as yet quite fulfilled, is that which respects the £1,000, which however, the Lord, I doubt not, will likewise send in His own time. In the meantime, let my brethren help me to praise Him, that He has sent already more than one half of that sum, and therefore more than has been needed.

3. So far as I remember, I brought even the most minute circumstances concerning the Orphan House before the Lord in my petitions, being conscious of my own weakness and ignorance. There was, however, one point I never had prayed about, namely, that the Lord would send children; for I naturally took it for granted that there would be plenty of applications. The nearer, however, the day came which had been appointed for receiving applications, the more I had a secret consciousness that the Lord might disappoint my natural expectations, and show me that I could not prosper in one single thing without Him, The appointed time came, and not even one application was made. I had before this been repeatedly tried, whether I might not, after all, against the Lord's mind, have engaged in the work.

This circumstance now led me to lie low before my God in prayer the whole of the evening, February 3, and to examine my heart once more as to all the motives concerning it; and being able, as formerly, to say, that His glory was my chief aim, i. e., that it might be seen that it is not a vain thing to trust in the living God—and that my second aim was the spiritual welfare of the orphan children—and the third their bodily welfare; and still continuing in prayer, I was at last brought to this state, that I could say from my heart, that I should rejoice in God being glorified in this matter, though it were by bringing the whole to nothing. But as still, after all, it seemed to me more tending to the glory of God to establish and prosper the Orphan House, I could then ask Him heartily to send applications. I enjoyed now a peaceful state of heart concerning the subject, and was also more assured than ever that God would establish it. The very next day, February 4, the first application was made, and since then forty-two more have been made.

4. The house mentioned in the last printed account, which we had intended to rent, having been let before any applications had been made, and nothing more having been done about the premises offered as a gift, on account of the want of money needed to complete the building, I rented, at least for one year, the house No. 6 Wilson Street, as being, on account of its cheapness and largeness, very suitable, and in which, up to March 25, I had been living myself. Having furnished it for thirty children, we began on April 11, 1836, to take them in, and on April 21 the Institution was opened by a day being set apart for prayer and thanksgiving. There are now twenty-six children in the house, and a few more are expected daily. They are under the care of a matron and governess.

5. In the last-printed account it was mentioned that we intended to take in the children from the seventh to the twelfth year. But after six applications had been made for children between four and six years of age, it became a subject for solemn and prayerful consideration, whether, as long as there were vacancies, such children should not be received, though so young. For it appeared to me, that if it becomes the saints to care in this way, according to their ability, for those whom God has bereaved of both parents, when they become seven years of age, that it becomes them equally so to take care of them whilst they are under seven years, and therefore completely unable to help themselves.

Further, orphan children are often left to themselves, and thus, at the age of eleven or twelve years, have already made much progress in wickedness Therefore, I came at last to the conclusion to take in the little girls under seven years of age, for whom application had been made. Further, there are exceedingly few Institutions in the kingdom in which infant orphans are received, and provided with Scriptural education. Further, it has been repeatedly brought before me, how desirable it would be to establish also in this city an Orphan House for male children.

Partly, then, on account of these reasons, and partly because the Institution already opened will be quite filled in a few days, and applications continue to be made; and partly, because the Lord has done hitherto far above what I could have expected: I have at last, after repeated prayer, come to the conclusion, in the name of the Lord, and in dependence upon Him alone for support, to propose the establishment of an Infant Orphan House. It is intended to open this institution as soon as suitable premises, and individuals to take care of the children, furniture and funds, have been obtained.

a. It is intended to receive into this Infant Orphan House, destitute male and female infants bereaved of both parents, from their earliest days up to the seventh year, and to provide them with food, clothing, needful attendance and Scriptural education. b. It is intended to let the female children stay up to the seventh year in the Infant Orphan House, and then to remove them to the Institution already opened, till they are able to go to service. c. It is also intended, as far as the Lord may help, to provide for the boys, when they are above seven years, though we cannot at present say in what manner.

In proposing the establishment of this second Orphan House, I do it in the same simple dependence upon God alone, as in the case of the former. And feeling my own weakness, and knowing that it is not in my power to give faith to myself, I ask the brethren to help me with their prayers, and that my faith may not fail.

(To be Continued.)

THE PARABLE OF THE TARES.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for December 11, Matt. 13:24-30. Memory Text, Matt. 13:29.

Relates to the Good Ground of Verse 8—Ver. 24, 25. The Two Sowers—The Owner of the Field and His Enemy—What Each Sowed—The Good Seed in the Good Ground Safe—The Enemy could not Injure It—Tries to Discredit It—Tares Resemble Wheat in Appearance—When Grown, Bear no Fruit—Sown While the Servants are Off their Guard—Hypocritical Professors in the Church—Ver. 26. Reveal their True Character by their Barrenness—Not Recognized until Fruit-bearing Time—Ver. 27-29. The Concern of the Servants—Puzzled by the Existence of the Tares—The Lord Understands It—Will not Allow His Servants to Deal with the Interlopers—No Persecution Permitted—Mistakes Always made in Persecution—Good Men have Perished in It—Ver. 30.—The End of the Tares—Gathered, Bound and Destroyed by Angels—The Wheat Safely Housed—Christ will Care for His own.

THE first of Christ's series of parables in Matt. 13, the Sower and the seed, pictures the heart of man in its reception or rejection of the word of God; it treats of conversion. The parable of the tares pictures one aspect of the church of Christ. In order to belong to the church of Christ, men must be converted; that is, must accept Christ. "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber" (John 10:1). "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it" (Matt. 7:14). No doubt, in the first beginning of the Christian church, only converted people belonged to it. "The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul, neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was upon them all" (Acts 4:32, 33). This was the fulfilment of the words, "The Kingdom of heaven is like unto a man which in his field." "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man; the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom." All that God has done is good. "God hath made man upright" (Eccl. 7:29). When He had finished His work in the days of the creation, He saw that everything that He had made was "very good." And yet the world filled with sin until "the earth was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence;" and "it repented God that He had made man upon the earth, and it grieved Him at His heart" (Gen. 6:12, 6).

Sowed Good Seed

Just so did Jesus in His church sow only good seed, only the children of the kingdom; there was no mixture. Yet now, what do we see among professing Christians, even among members of Christian churches? Lying, cheating, drunkenness, hypocrisy, money-loving, hatred, strife, evil speaking, and, above all else, unconverted self-righteousness side by side with the Godly few! Jesus foretold it all. "While men slept, His enemy came and sowed and went his way. But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also." It is not in the words of a man alone that the bent of his heart is to be seen. It is in the fruit which his life produces. God speaks of those who draw near Him with their mouth and with their lips do honor Him, but who remove their heart far from Him, and their fear toward Him is not divine, for it is "taught by the precept of men" (Isa. 29:13). These are the tares among the wheat, whom Jesus calls "the children of the wicked one." There are few congregations without one or more hypocrites, there are few without members, whose life is so near that of the world that the puzzle is where to place them, whether among the children of light, or the children of darkness. The aim of God is to keep His people distinct from the world, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world" (John. 17:14, 16). He declares that "that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God" (Luke 16:15). "The servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? From whence then hath it tares? He said unto them,

Tares Among the Wheat,

"An Enemy Hath Done This."

"The enemy that sowed them is the devil." All the mixture of the saved and the unsaved, the unworldly and the worldly, the self-denying and the self-indulgent, the earnest workers and the indolent do-nothings, is the work of God's enemy and ours. But the question arises on many sides, "What do you consider worldly?" Let the Master speak. He says, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." Now let us test those things which have place in connection with many of our churches. "Is there any harm in a bazaar? Why, we got it up to pay off the debt upon our beautiful new church." If Jesus were now upon earth, can you imagine Him authorizing you to build a church so expensive that you need to go down to the world's resources in order to pay for it? Is the church itself, its architecture and its costliness, of the world, or is it of Christ? And then the bazaar—could you imagine the Lord Jesus taking part in a bazaar? When He wanted money He sent Peter to the sea, and told him that in the mouth of the first fish he should catch, there would be the money which was wanted to pay the tribute; there was no

Going Near the World

to get it. "You don't think a quiet dance is any harm?" says another. Dear friend, can you picture to yourself Jesus Christ dancing in a modern ballroom? "It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord." If it is becoming for the disciple to dance, it would have been so for the Master. Judge, then, whether dancing is of the world or of Christ. Could you picture Jesus at the card-table, with the pipe or the novel? Are these things then of the world, or are they of Christ? "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John 2:15). The work of the enemy in this mixture is apparent everywhere. In the early days of the Church, in the early days of the Reformation, when Wyckliffe and his travelling priests went from place to place with the Word of God, enduring the greatest hardships, among the Waldenses, the Huguenots, the early Friends, Baptists, Methodists, etc., only the good seed appeared. But the enemy has been at work wherever he has prevailed upon the children of the Kingdom to fall asleep.

Satan Never Sleeps.

But he has any amount of sedatives which he administers to the children of the Kingdom, and just when a church gets sleepy, then the sowing of tares goes on apace, the tone of the church goes down, conversions become rare, and are of such a nature that those who are converted hardly know it, and nobody else can find it out. Then pride and self-importance, the greed of gain, political partizanship, and all which characterizes the world, slips in; the Spirit of God is grieved, and the church becomes a valley of "dry bones."

This state of things is the burden and trial of many Christian workers. Looking upon the field which should yield only fruit unto God, the church which should be only light in the midst of darkness, which should manifest only Christ to an ungodly world, they see these tares around them taking their place as though they were true and genuine children of God. A zeal for God takes hold upon them, and in holy indignation they cry to Him, "Wilt Thou then that we go and gather them up?" But He said, "Nay." This is the cross which the Christian has to bear. The tare is so like the wheat that only a practised eye can detect the difference, and Jesus trusts no one but Himself with this work. "His eyes (are) as a flame of fire" (Rev. 1:14). "Nay," He says; "lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them." Our sight is not always clear, but God cannot. "Let both grow together until the harvest, and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them; but gather the wheat into My barn." "The harvest is the end of the age; and the reapers are the angels. As, therefore, the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this age (or dispensation). The Son of Man shall send forth His angels, and they shall gather out of His kingdom all things that cause stumbling (R. V.), and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." It is more than probable that we are now near the end of this age; the harvest is at hand. Many of us desire intensely to have pure churches. Yet the Lord tells us to bear with that which He bears with. There are many things about which we must suspend our judgment until He comes. There may be wheat where we have thought we saw only tares; there may be tares which we have taken for wheat. We have all made mistakes sometimes, and our mistakes ought to have humbled us.

We Might Make Mistakes,

That which often makes us most desirous to have a pure church is, that we feel every inconsistent member is a reflection upon us, and we would like to retain only those who do us credit. We may say it is the Lord's glory which we seek, and to a certain extent this may be true, but O how much of self is mixed up with the motives of each one of us! If it is indeed the Lord's glory which we seek, it must be of more moment to Him than it is to us, and surely then we can leave it in His hands. Meanwhile, let us time, ready to be called away when Jesus comes. Then the tares are burned, the poor, unhappy, doomed ones—and, O, how awful is their fate!—how then will be that "manifestation of the sons of God," which Paul says the creation is waiting for; then every face will shine like Moses' face, and Stephen's, for "then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," "and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever" (Deut. 12:3). All glory be to God!

Be Ready for the Harvest

MRS. M. BAXTER'S WORKS.

THE following works by Mrs. M. Baxter, and others, may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York:

"Words for Daily Life," "Practical Lessons," "Life Lessons," "Leaves from Genesis," "Trials and Teachings of Paul." By Mrs. M. Baxter. Each, paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 35 cts. "Record of International Conference on Divine Healing London, 15" Paper, 25 cts. "Living Word in the Gospel of St. John." Paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. "God's Prophets." Paper 35 cts.; cloth 50 cts. "Lessons from St. Matthew's Gospel." Paper, 35 cts.; cloth 50 cts. "Teachings from St. Mark's Gospel." Paper, 35 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. "Sunday-School Lessons, 1877 and 78." By Mrs. Baxter. Each, cloth, 50 cts.

Any of Mrs. M. Baxter's tracts in the following list may also be had at one cent each or ten cents the dozen: "If it be Thy Will," "Does Sickness Sanctify?" "Casting All Your Care," two cents each or twenty cents the dozen. "God's Purpose in Sickness," "The Great Physician," "Job's Sickness," "God's Side of Prayer," "Pastor Rein," "The Body for the Lord." Also the following tracts at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen, by the late Rev. W. E. Boardman: "He Careth for You," "A Perfected Self," "Paul's Thorn," "The Father's Rod," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "The Law of Liberty," at three cents each, or thirty cents the dozen. "Bethsban, a House for Healing," and "Enduement with Power," Miss C. C. Murray's tracts, at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen. "Repeating Prayer," "Thou Art Loosed," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Redeemed from all Evil," "Anointing Him with Oil," at three cents each or, thirty cents the dozen. "Pastor Blumhardt," by Miss Sisson, at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen. "What About the Use of Means," and "The Apostolic Attitude," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Asking and Receiving," by Mrs. Boardman, at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Simple Truths about Faith." By T. Kirkman, "Health by Grace," and by H. W. S., "The Lord Hath Done It."

UNDER HIS WINGS.

He shall cover thee with His feathers, and under His wings shalt thou trust.—Ps. 91:4.

Covered with feathers of mercy,
Covered with feathers of love,
Covered from all that might harm me,
Safe till God calls me above.

Under His wings am I trusting,
Under His wings do I hide,
Safe in this beautiful shadow
Let me forever abide.

Here is my refuge and cover,
Under the wings of my God;
Here am I perfectly resting,
Trusting His love and His rod.

Under the wings of His healing,
Under the wings of His might,
Keep me forever, dear Saviour,
Sheltered by day and by night.

Selected.

POPULAR CHRISTMAS TOKENS.

A series of new booklets designed for presentation at Christmas tide:

WHATMAN PAPER SERIES of five beautiful booklets. Excellent as substitutes for cards, and are selling largely. Following are the titles:

LIGHTS FROM GOLDEN SKIES. Poems original and selected.

GEMS OF GOLD. Poems original and selected, by BASIL WOOD.

SHOULD AULD ACQUAINTANCE BE FORGOT. Four favorite ballads.

STRAY JEWELS. By CECELIA HAVERGAL. Fourteen beautiful and short poems.

GEMS STREWING THE PATH TO HEAVEN. Six favorite poems and hymns.

All these are attractively bound in rough white card-board, with deckle edge, embossed and illuminated. Single copies 40 cents each: a set of five or five assorted, $1.60; one dozen assorted, $3.60.

CROWNING MERCIES. A text book for every day in the month, in colors. Arranged and illustrated by J. STANLEY, M. A., with gold edges. Price, 25 cents. Ten copies by mail for $2.

CHRISTMAS CARDS.

☞ Those desiring to obtain by mail a selection of beautiful chaste cards, the best of the year, should order promptly our

SPECIAL SAMPLE PACKETS.

No. 1,—6 of the best designs..... .....$ .25
No. 2.—12 of the best designs..... .50
No. 3.—15 beautiful (larger) cards.. ..... 1.00

☞ No duplicates. All new designs from the catalogues of Prang, Raphael Tuck, Hildesheimer, "Nivel," etc. ☜ Remit stamps for sums under $1.00. No charge for postage, and safe delivery guaranteed.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 & 3 Bible House, New York.

"THE WORD FOR THE DAY."

Text, Hymn and Prayer for every day in the year. Compiled by A. J. A. R.

"The Word for the Day" is an excellent little book consisting of a Scripture text, a selection from a hymn, and a brief prayer for each day in the year. The compilations are made with reference to the practical needs of every-day life. Bible verses that are helpful, inspiring, and that serve to put one on guard against the surrounding evils are chosen as the leading thought, and following them come "their echoes from the human mind." It is a book which would serve to sweeten and brighten daily life in every home.—Chautauquan.

"The word for the day" has been compiled with reference to real every-day needs not fictitious or sentimental ones. Its thoughts are very well selected, and its brief prayers are prayers indeed; for devoutness it is admirable.—New York Evangelist.

"The Word for the Day" is one of those strong helps to a true Christian life.

16mo, Cloth, plain, 75c.; Gilt, $1.00: American Seal, $1.75; Calf, flex., $2.50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publisher,
JOHN IRELAND, 1197 Broadway, N. Y.

SEDGWICK STEEL WIRE FENCE.

The best Farm, Garden, Poultry Yard, Lawn, School Lot, Park and Cemetery Fences and Gates. Perfect Automatic Gate. Cheapest and Neatest Iron Fences. Iron and wire Summer Houses, Lawn Furniture, and other wire work. Best Wire Stretcher and Plier. Ask dealers in hardware, or address, SEDGWICK BROS., RICHMOND, IND.

IF you are questioning what to give a girl too old for juveniles and too young for novels, send a postal for full description of the best book for girls, endorsed by Miss Alcott, Marion Harland, Grace Greenwood, and others. Address JEREMIAH NELSON, Station D, New York City.

A Splendid Christmas Book for Girls.
THE AMERICAN GIRL'S HANDY BOOK.

What the American Boy's Handy Book, by DANIEL C. BEARD, is to boys, this new volume by LINA and ADELIA BEARD is to girls. It covers the entire field of indoor and outdoor instruction and amusement for girls. It is a complete encyclopedia that every girl will treasure, and is illustrated by over 500 apt engravings and pictures, one upon nearly every page, made by the authors. Price $3.00. Mention the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

MARION HARLAND says of the book: "I consider it one of the most entertaining and yet most practical works of the kind I have ever seen. It gives me honest pleasure to commend it 'to our girls' all over the country."

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS wishes she "were a girl again for the sake of having a book of such merit and entertainment."

LOUISA M. ALCOTT writes: "I have put it down in my list of good and useful books for young people, as I have many requests for advice from my little friends and their anxious mothers. I am most happy to commend your very ingenius and entertaining book."

GRACE GREENWOOD writes: "It is a treasure which, once possessed, no practical girl would willingly part with. It is an invaluable aid in making a home attractive, comfortable, artistic, and refined. The book preaches the gospel of cheerfulness, industry, economy, and comfort.

The American Boy's Handy Book, Invaluable for boys, $2. The two books $5.

For Sale by all Booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, - - 743-745 Broadway, New York.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE

THE completion of the first year of publication, the success of which has never been equalled by a new magazine, is signalized by a beautiful Christmas, number, with stories by BRET HARTE, H. C. BUNNER, S. O. JEWETT, T. R. SULLIVAN, poems by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, AUSTIN DOBSON, EDITH M. THOMAS, and many other contributions, with illustrations by WILL H. LOW, HOWARD PYLE, WILLIAM HOLE, J. W. ALEXANDER, F. S. CHURCH, SWAIN GIFFORD, and many others. During the year 1888 some notably interesting features have been arranged to appear; a prospectus will be sent on application. Mr. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON will contribute to every number, and will write in a familiar and personal way which will form new bonds of friendship between the author and his thousands of readers. An especially important series of papers will be devoted to RAILWAYS, their administrations and construction, including great engineering feats, famous tunnels, passes, and, indeed, those branches of the subject which in this day engage the attention of the whole country. The illustrations which will accompany this series will be very elaborate, original and beautiful. There will be some most charming MENDELSSOHN LETTERS, now first published, with unique illustrations, and the art-work throughout the Magazine will be of increased excellence. There will be many interesting contributions by new authors, while at the same time the most distinguished writers are largely represnted,

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
NEW YORK.

TERMS: { 25c. a Number, / $3.00 a Year.

☞ To enable new readers to possess the Magazine from the first number (January, 1887), the following offer is made:

A year's subscription for 1888 and copies of the twelve back numbers mailed for . $4.50
A year's subscription for 1888 with the back numbers bound in cloth, 2 vols., gilt top, 6.00

Subscribe Now, beginning with the Christmas Number.

COMFORT OF THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM.
A GIFT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

What can you find more beautiful and appropriate as a remembrance for your friend or your Sunday School Class, than our new picture illustrating the Twenty-Third Psalm? It is an exquisitely colored card with the central figure A Shepherd leading his flock by the still waters; the halo around his head reminding all of the Great Shepherd of whom David wrote. The illuminated text is in dark blue and gold upon adelicately tinted background, and in choice lettering, which can be distinctly read. This picture (10) has the advantage of needing no frame, having a heavy gold border; it is a gem of art, has just been published, and is obtainable only through our house. Safely packed, we send it on receipt of Twenty-five Cents.

LARGE PROFIT TO AGENTS.

SPECIAL OFFER—Send back this advertisement and fifty cents, within thirty days, and we will forward three sample copies, or seven for One Dollar. Now is the time to work. Lower prices for larger orders.
WM. P. BRECK & CO., 59 John Street, New York.

THE BEST XMAS MUSIC!

Dr. DOANE'S NEW CHRISTMAS CANTATA:
Waiting for Santa Claus, JUST OUT. Merry Songs, Interesting Dialogue, Splendid Effects. Can be given by any School after FOUR Rehearsals. Sent on receipt of 25 cents.

Dr. LOWRY'S NEW CHRISTMAS SERVICE:
The True Light, Most appropriate Scripture Selections, new and melodious Songs, admirably arranged and adapted for celebrating Christmas times, on Sunday, or any other day.
Sent for 5 cents; $4 per 100.

Christmas Annual No. 18, A beautiful collection of Carols by the best authors. Furnishes an abundance of useful songs for the Christmas gathering. Sent for 4 cents: $3 per 100.

ANTHEMS CANTATAS, SERVICES and CAROLS issued in previous years can be furnished. A full catalogue sent on application.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

Pulpit Treasury Devoted to Sermons, Lectures, Bible Comments, Questions of the Day, the Prayer Meeting, Sunday School and Mission Work. By the ablest writers on Theology, Christian Ethics, Evangelistic Work Home Culture, etc. A welcome guest to the Pastor, Teacher, and Family, 5th Year, Monthly, Illustrated, $2.50, Pastors, $2. Sample Free. E. B. TREAT, Pub. New York

Furs,
Fur Trimmings

Quite a number of new shapes and styles in Fur Wraps. Decided Novelties in Muffs and Boas. Everything that is new in Fur Trimmings.

Lord & Taylor,

Broadway and Twentieth Street.

GRIND YOUR OWN Bone, Meal, Oyster Shells, Graham Flour & Corn in the $5 HAND MILL (F. Wilson's Patent.) 100 per cent. more made in keeping Poultry. Also POWER MILLS and FARM FEED MILLS. Circulars and testimonials sent on application. WILSON BROS. Easton, Pa.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

JAMES M'CREERY & CO.

offer the following choice lines:

A Choice Line of Black and Colored SILKS. Superior Quality. Late Weaves. Lowest Prices.

In DRESS GOODS they offer Fine Diagonal Serge, at 65 cents, worth 85 cents. Camels' Hair Cloth, at 75 cts good value for $1.00.

Several thousand pairs of Fine California BLANKETS, at a large reduction per pair from the manufacturers' present wholesale prices.

HOUSEKEEPING LINENS, Table Cloths, Table Damasks, Napkins Towels, Toweling, etc., at about one-half former retail prices.

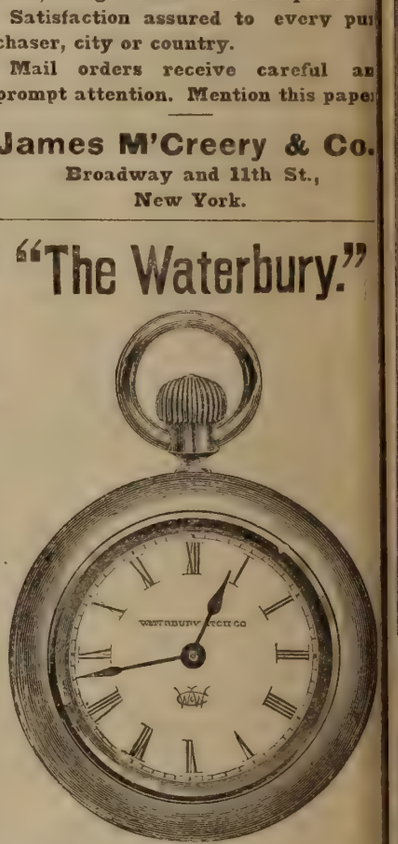
A Special lot of Eider Down Bed Quilts, with handsome Sateen Coverings, in single, double, and extra bed sizes, at $8.00, $9.50, and $11.00 each, being a little over half price.

Satisfaction assured to every purchaser, city or country.

Mail orders receive careful and prompt attention. Mention this paper.

James M'Creery & Co.
Broadway and 11th St., New York.

"The Waterbury."



AN ACCURATE WATCH.
Sold Only by Retail Watch Dealers
For $2.50.

The BOW in the CLOUD Or WORDS of COMFORT
For those in Sickness, Sorrow and the varied Afflictions of Life. By 200 best Authors Prose and Poetry, Edited by J. Sanderson, D.D. A Home Treasury and Gift Book of rare excellence. 450 Pages, $1.75
E. B. TREAT, Pub., N. Y.

100 PER CENT PROFIT & SAMPLES FREE to men canvassers for Dr. Scott's Genuine Electric Belts, Brushes, &c. Lady agents wanted for Electric Corsets. Quick sales. Write at once for terms. Dr. Scott, 842 B'way, N. Y.

WORK FOR ALL. $30 a week and expenses paid. Valuable outfit and particulars free.
P. O. VICKERY,
Augusta, Maine.

WARREN'S FEATHERBONE HEALTH WAISTS.
Best in the World. Soft, Pliable and Comfortable.

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed, Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 49. Office, 63 Bible House, N. Y. THURSDAY, DEC. 8, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF CORTES, and Picture of the Cathedral of Mexico, etc.
THE CONVERSION OF MANUEL AGUAS, "The Luther of Mexico."
HEART DISEASE. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
THE FOURTH SEAL EXPLAINED. By Rev. M. Baxter.
The Diabolized Atmosphere—Raw Material for Jewels—A Juvenile Bride—Work Among Japanese Students—Mormon Tyranny—A Medical Missionary under Arrest.
PICTURES OF MOUNTAINS AND FORESTS IN PERU.
"HE COMETH WITH CLOUDS." Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's New Sermon.
A STARTLING COMMUNICATION. With Illustration.)
THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN. By George Muller. (Concluded.)
THE FIVE PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

Hernando Cortes, the Conqueror of Mexico—Interior of the Cathedral of Mexico—The Plaza of Guadalajara.

HERNANDO CORTES.

MUCH has been written, and many are the disputes that have been waged, as to the character of the Spanish commander whose portrait appears on the first page and whose advent in Mexico marks the commencement of credible history for that country. That he was valiant, courteous, proud and sagacious, is admitted by his friends and enemies; but while the former represent him as generous and deeply religious, the latter insist that he was vindictive and unscrupulous. Probably he was neither better nor worse than the great generals of his time, and was raised above the host of Spanish adventurers who were attracted to the New World in the sixteenth century, by his heroism and mental gifts rather than by his character.

Cortes was born at Medellin, in Spain in 1485. He studied two years at the University of Salamanca, but at the end of that time, weary of study and seeing no prospect for distinguishing himself by learning, he quitted the university for a life of adventure. After a series of disappointments he arrived in Cuba, in 1504, and succeeded in ingratiating himself with Velasquez, the Spanish governor of the island. He subsequently offended the governor, who on one occasion was so exasperated with Cortes that he determined to hang him. Friends, however, interceded, and a reconciliation took place. Velasquez evidently had a high opinion of the young man's abilities; for, when fitting out the expedition to conquer Mexico, the newly discovered land, he gave the command to Cortes.

It was on the night of November 18, 1518, that Cortes sailed with eleven ships, 879 men, ten howitzers and four falconets, on the expedition which was to have results so momentous for Mexico. After a halt at the island of Cozumel, the expedition sailed along the coast of Yucatan, and made a landing March 20, 1819, at Grijalva. A battle ensued with the Indians, in which the Spaniards were victorious, and Cortes succeeded in obtaining valuable assistance to his force from among his defeated foes. His most important acquisition was a female slave, La Marina, who understood the coast language as well as that of the interior, and who, quickly learning Spanish, became the interpreter for the expedition. On April 21 the point was reached where now stands the city of Vera Cruz, and there, discontent breaking out among his men. Cortes took the heroic step of burning his ships, and so forcing his soldiers to identify themselves with his plans, or die. Troubles with the Indians delayed the march into the interior, but on Nov. 8, 1819, Cortes entered the capital. The Aztec monarch, Montezuma, received him graciously, and subsequently performed an act of vassalage to the invader as representative of the King of Spain. The insolence and domineering conduct of the Spaniards, however, and especially their capture and imprisonment of Montezuma, led to a rising, and Cortes and the Spaniards were driven out of the city with slaughter. He retreated to the coast, and, collecting his Indian allies, returned and laid siege to the city, Dec. 31, 1820, finally reducing it and entering in triumph Aug, 13, 1521. Mexico from that time, remained for three centuries under Spanish rule, governed by Viceroys of whom Cortes was the first. The close of this life strikingly resembles that of Columbus. Intrigues in Spain; jealousies, charges false and true, against the man who had excited the envy of the ambitious, embittered his life, and finally he returned to Spain in poverty to defend himself. He never returned to the country he had conquered. He died Dec. 2, 1547, at the age of sixty-two.

The Cathedral

of the City of Mexico, a picture of the interior of which appears on the first page, is a magnificent structure, the building of which was commenced in 1573. It cost over two million dollars. The second picture is that of the Plaza of Guadalajara, in the State of Jalisco, from which some idea may be gained of the grandeur and beauty of the buildings to be found in other parts of the country beside the capital.

It is in this great country with its magnificent possibilities, that an effort is now being made to arouse the interest of the Christian public of the United States. It waits for their help to deliver it from the darkness of spiritual error. How much may be done for it with small cost, may be inferred from one important fact. When Dr. Riley went there but a few years ago, he not only preached extensively and organized congregations, but he issued Christian tracts. some of them original and some translations from Protestant writers. One of these fell into the hands of Manuel Aguas, the popular preacher of the Cathedral. It is remarkable that at the very time that Aguas first studied this tract, Dr. Riley was in imminent danger of his life, for issuing that and others. He was notified that six men had taken a solemn oath to asassinate him. But he went on with his work, and in a short time was rewarded by the open avowal by Aguas of his conversion. Aguas proved a fearless and valiant leader in the cause, and to the day of his death never ceased to labor to extend the work that Bishop Riley had commenced. No better statement of the importance and the grandeur of that work could be made, than that which Aguas himself wrote with unexcelled eloquence and pathos, and which we here reprint.

THE CONVERSION OF MANUEL AGUAS.

Related by Himself.

[Not long before the death of Manuel Aguas, who is called the Luther of Mexico, he wrote a letter recording the circumstances under which he, while a Roman Catholic priest and for six years the most popular preacher in the cathedral (a picture of which appears on the first page), was brought to see the errors of Romanism and was converted to Christ. The following is a translation of his letter from the Spanish.]

I HAVE learned that you take a sincere and practical interest in the propagation of the Gospel in this Republic of Mexico—a nation until now sadly unfortunate—unfortunate because it has not enjoyed the blessings of true religion.

The Lord has, most clearly and signally, blessed the Christian efforts that you have made in our behalf. Let me tell you how: You contributed funds in behalf of Gospel work in this, my native land. Part of these funds were employed in the publication of Christian pamphlets, which were widely distributed here. These publications were the instrumentality that the Lord selected, in order that I might realize the spiritual blindness in which I found myself. I was

A Presbyter in the Roman Church,

and most anxiously longed for salvation. With all sincerity did I follow the errors of that idolatrous sect, and imagined Protestantism, or true Christianity, was coming to make us in Mexico more unfortunate than ever. I consequently opposed its doctrines with all my power. I sincerely thought that, in so doing, I did good service to my native land. How unfortunate was I! I knew that Jesus Christ had died for us; but that most precious belief was to me obscured, because from childhood I had been taught, that in order to obtain salvation, besides the merits of the Redeemer, the meritorious works of men were also needed; as if, forsooth, the sacrifice of Calvary was not enough to save the soul that truly trusts in it. Being imbued with these Romish errors, it is not strange that I should oppose and attack true Christianity; that I should frequently declaim against it in the pulpit; that I should go to the confessional in search of a remedy for my spiritual evils; and, as one precipice often leads to another, I prayed to the Virgin Mary and to the saints, and endeavoured to gain all the indulgences possible; all which practices offend and tend to dishonor Jesus, our Saviour. As a natural consequence, for my soul; and I was truly unfortunate, because I observed with sorrow that, after all I did, my heart remained unconverted and dragged me often into sin.

I Had Not Obtained Peace

I was in this sad state when there reached me the pamphlet called "True Liberty." I read it most carefully; and, notwithstanding that I tried to find, in the arsenal of my Romish subleties, arguments with which to answer the clear reasoning that I found in this publication, a voice within—the voice of my conscience—told me that my answers were not satisfactory, and that perhaps I was in error.

I commenced to reject the errors of Romanism, and dedicated myself to the study of all the Protestant books and pamphlets that I could lay my hands on. I carefully read the History of the Reformation in the sixteenth century, by Merle D'Aubigné, and, above all, I commenced to study the Bible, without paying any attention to the Romish notes and interpretations. This study, accompanied by earnest prayer, led me to true happiness.

I Commenced to See the Light

The Lord had pity on me, and enabled me to clearly understand the great truths of the Gospel. I first realized that it is false—most false—that salvation is only found in the Roman Church, as the Romanists pretend. But what completely convinced me of the falseness of the Romish system, was, the finding that, after I distrusted my own natural strength and trusted in Jesus alone, abandoning all other intercessors, and believing that true safety, salvation, and the remedy for our guilt are alone to be found in the sacrifice of Calvary, I felt a great change in my heart; my feelings were different; what formerly pleased me, now was repugnant to me; I felt real and positive sentiments of love and charity towards my brethren—sentiments which before were fictitious and artificial in me; in a word, I found the long-desired peace of my soul. By the grace of the Lord, I was enabled to resist temptations, and passed a happy life. As I had dedicated several years to

The Study of Medicine,

I was able to maintain myself by this profession. In the evening I read the Holy Scriptures to my household, and prayed with them.

Although all this was very agreeable to me, it was not just that I should continue inactive in the Gospel cause. I soon commenced to think that I was in conscience bound to participate with my brethren the happiness I enjoyed, and especially so, as I had much facility in speaking to multitudes, from my long practice and experience in preaching that I had had while yet a Roman Catholic. I determined to manifest, publicly, that I had separated myself from the Roman Church, and that I had joined the true Church of Jesus. But in order to take this step I found myself laboring under great difficulties, which the Devil would fain have me believe to be insurmountable. The idea of poverty from want of a livelihood presented itself to me with all its deformity; as I was aware that the moment I made such a declaration, the Roman Bishop would excommunicate me, and as I lived among an essentially fanatic people, I felt sure that not only my patients would abandon me immediately, but that my friends would turn a cold shoulder upon me, and also abandon me, and that my life would be menaced, and attacks made against it.

Nevertheless, my resolution was unshaken, and I commenced to attend the Provisional Protestant Church, which had been established in a large hall situated in the street of San Juan de Letran. Being near-sighted, I there began to know my dear brother, solely by his voice. It filled me with comfort to hear him speak of Jesus and His precious blood; the liturgy and hymns which the congregation used, enchanted me, as they were full of the pure faith of the primitive Christian; and I anxiously desired the arrival of Sundays, because, in our church services, I enjoyed delicious moments of peace and joy — Christian emotions that I had never felt in the Roman sect. I had for some time been thinking how to become personally acquainted with my brother Henry. One night, as I was at one of our churches, I heard my brother preach with so much valor and faith, that I became quite ashamed of myself, and was filled with a holy envy of that Chilian who, in Mexico, in the midst of the most loathsome idolatry, and surrounded by enemies, presented himself as an intrepid soldier of Jesus, ready to lay down his life for his divine Captain. I then was determined to present myself to him alone, and to give him a fraternal greeting, exclaiming: "We are brothers; our cause is the same; let us unite our efforts, and strengthened by our adorable Saviour, let us contend for the faith of Jesus, even though we perish in the contest."

The Rev. Henry Chauncey Riley,

Various persons had spoken to my brother Riley about me. I was presented to him by an elderly gentleman, who is a Protestant. We had a long interview, in which we were convinced that we were brothers in the faith; we loved one another; and, since then, unitedly. Our Lord God has deigned to bless our work; for, notwithstanding the intense and furious persecution that the Romanists have raised against me, the number of true Christians is increasing most marvellously in Mexico.

We Work Together

We have opened the church of the former Roman Catholic Convent of San José de Gracia to the public, and a large congregation now attends there. We have established a Christian Association, and also classes for young men who want to study for the ministry. In Central Mexico we have some fifty Christian congregations, and their numbers are increasing rapidly, even among the smaller towns, where our brethren often suffer the most terrible persecutions from the Roman Catholic curates and fanatics. The Romanists have burned the houses of some of our fellow-Christians, wounding men, women and children, in their efforts to check the progress of the Gospel in Mexico; but, in spite of all their efforts, we have the consolation of knowing that the sacred light of the Gospel, which is now so brightly shining in my native land, and increasing in splendor every day, will not be darkened, even with all the efforts that our persecutors are making against it.

By this brief account of the progress of the Gospel in Mexico, you can see that we have reason to hope that the Gospel seed already sown here, will soon give the best and choicest fruits of holiness.

Allow me to heartily thank you for

What You Have Done

in our behalf. Part of your contribution for Mexico was converted into Christian pamphlets, that were widely and effectively circulated here. One of these arrived at my sad dwelling, where I was despairingly suffering because I had not been able to find peace for my soul, finding myself, as I then did, in the darkness of Roman idolatry; but, from the time that I read that Christian pamphlet—little esteemed by the worldly, but most precious to me, as containing the Divine Truth—the Lord commenced to lead me, little by little, in a manner at once sweet and powerful, without coercing my free will, until He guided me into the glorious light of faith.

By what I have already said, you will clearly understand that these are solemn moments for my native land, as these may have much to do with her future happiness. The admirable religious movement that is now making such rapid progress in this republic, is likely soon to spread the Gospel in its purity far and wide throughout this nation, and lead to a great Reformation in the Mexican Church.

This reformation is absolutely needed. Our society is divided between "Liberals" and "Conservative Romanists." The "Liberals" have plunged into the dark horrors of infidelity, and are the slaves of their evil inclinations; the Romanists are the slaves of the tyrant of Rome. In a word, true religion has not been the foundation of our society. The results of this want have been fratricidal wars, insecurity, avarice, poverty and misery. Scenes of wickedness have been the schools where our Mexican children have been educated.

Such a heart-rending picture ought to fill Christians with sorrow. They ought to ask themselves: "Why should Mexico find itself on the border of a precipice where deepest ruin threatens?"

The answer is a very simple one. Allow me to point it out with frankness, but without meaning to give the slightest offence, for I love you for Jesus Christ's sake. Having made this observation, I must say that all you who compose the true Church of Christ in that country neighboring to ours, are partly to blame for our misfortunes. I know that you are true Christians; I know that you send your missionaries to remote parts of the world, where you generously and disinterestedly aid the Gospel work. Why, then, have you for so many years forgotten your brethren, who, by your very side, have been without the bread of the divine word?

Why Do You Allow Them To Perish, and to sink, day by day, into deeper ignorance and fanaticism? It is well and good that you should exercise your charity with those people to whom you send the light of the Gospel, however distant they may be; but this is no reason why you should leave the Mexicans by your very side in the darkness of idolatry. I am sure that you and your friends will agree with me, that it is necessary to do what is possible, in order that the true faith may be extended throughout this, my native land. If you think on this subject with earnest prayer to God, your consciences will call upon you to fulfil this duty as Christians. God has not in vain bestowed on your wealthy Church riches, nor in vain has He endowed you with generous hearts.

We are greatly in want of pecuniary aid to defend the Gospel cause in Mexico from our fanatical enemies, among whom are very rich and powerful persons, who spend their money lavishly in publishing newspapers and other publications, to try and crush us; who refit churches with splendor, and maintain "Paulinos," who declaim against us.

In the meanwhile, we who work in the harvest of the Lord are very much checked in our work, for want of the necessary resources. With sorrow do we constantly see most promising opportunities that are offered us for doing most precious and important Christian work, lost for lack of funds. MANUEL AGUAS.

Subscriptions in aid of the Church of Jesus, in Mexico, its pastors, evangelists, church and orphanages, will be thankfully received by the Rt. Rev. H. C. Riley, 43 Bible House, New York.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

How a Father's Prayer was Answered.—Mr. Thomson observed: "A Christian man, when speaking to me of how he first came to know the Lord, told me this strange experience. He said: 'Some years ago, before I was a Christian, my little child fell very ill. I began to be afraid that I was going to lose it, and the doctor confirmed my fears by telling me that the child would die in a few hours. Although it was young, I loved my baby dearly, and the thought of parting with it was a great sorrow to me. I went to my room, and prayed that the Lord would save my soul and take my child to Himself. Then I thought that I must have a very definite proof that Jesus would indeed take my darling, so I prayed again that, as a sign to me, before the child died He would make it raise its hand to heaven. I crept down-stairs and went quietly into the sick-room. The nurse sat there by the bed of the child, for the tired mother, worn with watching, had gone to seek a little rest. I sat down and watched the child, and bye-and-bye the coverlit began to move. There was a slight trembling of the tiny hand under it. Then the hand was pushed feebly out, and before I had power to stop her the nurse had lifted it, and put it under again. Once more the little hand came out, and I warned the woman not to touch it. I sat and watched with trembling breath, for the hand was raised slowly upwards, until it was pointing straight to heaven. I bent over my child, and found that its spirit was gone, that Jesus had indeed carried it in His arms. I fell down and worshipped Him in a way that I had never done before, and could say from a full heart, 'The Lord taketh away, and blessed be the name of the Lord.'"

A Grand Testimony.—Mr. Campbell narrated: "A well-known Christian lay on his death-bed, and his family was gathered around him. After he had said good-bye to them all, one after the other, he turned to the wall, and was heard to say, 'Where is Jesus of Nazareth? He has never failed me, and, I am sure, will not fail me now.' That was a grand testimony. Jesus says, 'Lo, I am with you always,' and that dying Christian fully realized it. He was filled with joy to overflowing, he laughed and sang from excess of gladness; and, presently, with a shout of 'Victory through the blood of the Lamb!' he entered into the presence of his Lord. Thank God, we have not to pass through the shadow of death alone, for there Jesus will assuredly be with us."

Alarmed by a Dead Man's Boot.—"A Man who was a great drunkard, who habitually squandered his money and then returned to his wretched home to strike and kick his starving wife and children, on one occasion, after a prolonged drinking bout, was siezed by that terrible disease delirium tremens. He had spurned Christ again and again, and now his day of grace had gone for ever. He died blasphemous in his fearful frenzy. A short time after the father's death, his son, a little boy, was walking in the garden and came across one of his father's boots. At the sight of this boot, which when worn by his father had so often kicked the boy, he turned and ran terrified into the house, all the remembrances of his father's cruelty crowding upon his young mind. Should not the fearful curse of drink be exterminated, that has the power to turn parental affection into cruelty!"

Freeing a Captive Sparrow.—Mr. Harris, a well-known Christian worker, related: "A friend of mine was working one day, near Dublin, when he came upon a boy holding a sparrow. My friend went up to the lad and asked him to release the bird; but the boy refused, saying, 'No, it is mine; I caught it.' 'What are you going to do with it?' my friend asked. 'I am going to sell it,' was the prompt reply. All this time the tiny creature, imprisoned in his hand, had been struggling to get free, but in vain; the boy held it fast. 'What do you expect to get for the bird?' my friend then asked. 'A penny,' was the answer. 'I will buy it,' said the man, and with one hand he gave the boy the penny, while with the other he took the sparrow, which he at once set at liberty. Just as the struggles of that bird were ineffectual to free itself from the power of its captor, so the struggles of the sinner are ineffectual to free himself from the power of Satan. But Christ, the Friend of sinners, has purchased our liberty with a great price, and has ransomed us that we may go eternally free."

A Collier Who Became a Deacon.—Mr. Climie said: "One Saturday night I was preaching the Gospel to a crowd of colliers. I was standing on an old monument, and there were some hundreds around me. I happened to say that 'Christ is the end of the law, to all who come to Him.' Among the crowd there was an old man into whose heart the words, 'Christ the end of the law,' sunk deeply. As he afterwards told me, he struck his hands together and exclaimed, 'Man! if you can explain that text I will be on your side.' Unconscious of the feeling which had been stirred within him, I went on to explain that Christ in His life as man obeyed, and in His death satisfied for us the law's demands. The poor fellow listened most intently, while great tears rained down his begrimed face, and the Holy Spirit blessed the word to which he hearkened. That night, the first time for twenty years, he went home sober. He accepted Christ as his Saviour, and has since lived a consistent Christian life and is now a most useful and beloved deacon, in the church of which he is a member."

HEART DISEASE.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning, Dec. 4, 1887.

"Is thine heart right?" II Kings 10: 15.

A Momentous Inquiry—Touches the Centre of Things—Human Nature all Atwist—Poor, Blind and Naked—A Way to have it Remedied—What is Needed—I. A Repenting Heart—Beasts that have Befouled It—A Heathen's Treasured Idol—II. A Believing Heart—The Burdened Victim—Bore the World's Sins—The Ransom Paid—A Unique Criminal—The Earth Redeemed—Rare Old Wines in Heaven—III. A Forgiving Heart—Three Opportunities—One Unforgiven Enemy—A Rough Sailor Astonished—IV. An Expectant Heart—Castles in the Air—Josephine's Statue in Paris—A Vast Empire—Rough Water Outside the Harbor—A Business Question—A Domestic Question—The Inscription on a Window—A Scottish Chief's Fatal Delay.

WITH mettled horses at full speed, for he was celebrated for fast driving, Jehu, the warrior and king, returns from battle. But seeing Jehonadab, an acquaintance, by the wayside, he shouts "Whoa! whoa!" to the lathered span. Then leaning over to Jehonadab, Jehu salutes him in the words of the text—words not more appropriate for that hour and that place than for this hour and place.

Is Thine Heart Right?

I should like to hear of your physical health. Well, myself, I like to have everybody else well; and so might ask, is your eyesight right, your hearing right, your nerves right, your lungs right, your entire body right? But I am busy to-day taking diagnosis of the more important spiritual conditions. I should like to hear of your financial welfare. I want everybody to have plenty of money, ample apparel, large storehouse, and comfortable residence; and I might ask, is your business right, your income right, your worldly surroundings, right? But what are these financial questions, compared with the inquiry as to whether you have been able to pay your debts to God; as to whether you are insured for eternity; as to whether you are ruining yourself by the long-credit system of the soul? I have known men to have no more than one loaf of bread at a time, and yet to own a government bond of heaven worth more than the whole material universe.

The question I ask you to-day is not in regard to your habits. I make no inquiry about your integrity, or your chastity, or your sobriety. I do not mean to stand on the outside of the gate and ring the bell; but coming up the steps, I open the door and come to the private apartment of the soul; and with the earnestness of a man that must give an account for this day's work, I cry out, Oh, man, oh, woman immortal, is thine heart right?

I will not insult you by an argument to prove that we are by nature all wrong. If there be a factory explosion, and the smoke-stack be upset, and the wheels be broken in two, and the engine unjointed, and the ponderous bars be twisted, and a man should look in and say that nothing was the matter, you would pronounce him a fool. Well, it needs no acumen to discover that and askew and unjointed. The thing doesn't work right. The biggest trouble we have in the world is with our souls. Men sometimes say that though their lives may not be just right, their heart is all right. Impossible! A farmer never puts the poorest apples on top of his barrel; nor does the merchant place the meanest goods in his show window. The best part of us is our outward life. I do not stop to discuss whether we all fell in Adam, for we have been our own Adam, and have all eaten of the forbidden fruit, and have been turned out of the paradise of holiness and peace; and though the flaming sword that stood at the gate to keep us out has changed position and comes behind to drive us in, we will not go.

Our Nature is all Atwist

The Bible account of us is not exaggerated when it says that we are poor and wretched and miserable and blind and naked. Poor: the wretch that stands shivering on our doorstep on a cold day is not so much in need of bread as we are of spiritual help. Blind: why, the man whose eyes perished in the powder blast, and who for these ten years has gone feeling his way from street to street, is not in such utter darkness as we. Naked: why, there is not one rag of holiness left to hide the shame of our sin. Sick: why, the leprosy has eaten into the head and the heart and the hands and the feet; and the marasmus of an everlasting wasting away has already seized on some of us.

But the meanest thing for a man to do is to discourse about an evil without pointing

A Way to have it Remedied.

I speak of the thirst of your hot tongue, only that I may show you the living stream that drops crystalline and sparkling from the Rock of Ages, and pours a river of gladness at your feet. If I show you the rents in your coat, it is only because the door of God's wardrobe now swings open, and here is a robe, white with the fleece of the Lamb of God, and of a cut and make that an angel would not be ashamed to wear. If I snatch from you the black, moldy bread that you are munching, it is only to give you the bread made out of the finest wheat that grows on the celestial hills, and baked in the fires of the Cross; and one crumb of which would be enough to make all heaven a banquet. Hear it, one and all, and tell it to your friends when you go home, that the Lord Jesus Christ can make the heart right.

A Repenting Heart,

First we need a repenting heart. If for the last ten, twenty or forty years of life, we have been going on in the wrong way, it is time that we turned around and started in the opposite direction. If we offend our friends we are glad to apologize. God is our best friend, and yet how many of us have never apologized for the wrongs we have done Him!

There is nothing that we so much need to get rid of as sin. It is a horrible black monster. It polluted Eden. It killed Christ. It has blasted the world. Men keep dogs in kennels, and rabbits in a warren, and cattle in a pen. What a man that would be who would shut them up in his parlor. But this foul dog of sin, and these herds of transgression, we have entertained for many a long year in our heart, which should be the cleanest, brightest room in all our nature. Out with the vile herd! Begone, ye befoulers of an immortal nature!

Turn Out The Beasts

and let Christ come in! A heathen came to an early Christian who had the reputation of curing diseases. The Christian said, "You must have all your idols destroyed." The heathen gave to the Christian the key to his house, that he might go in and destroy the idols. He battered to pieces all he saw, but still the man did not get well. The Christian said to him, "There must be some idol in your house not yet destroyed." The heathen confessed that there was one idol of beaten gold that he could not bear to give up. After a while, when that was destroyed, in answer to the prayer of the Christian the sick man got well.

Many a man has awakened in his dying hour to find his sins all about him. They clambered up on the right side of the bed, and on the left side, and over the headboard, and over the footboard, and horribly devoured the soul.

> "Repent! the voice celestial cries,
> Nor longer dare delay;
> The wretch that scorns the mandate, dies,
> And meets a fiery day."

Again, we need

A Believing Heart.

A good many years ago a weary one went up one of the hills of Asia Minor, and with two logs on His back cried out to all the world, offering to carry their sins and sorrows. They pursued Him. They slapped Him in the face. They mocked Him. When He groaned they groaned. They shook their fists at Him. They spit on Him. They hounded Him as though He were a wild beast. His healing of the sick, His sight-giving to the blind, His mercy to the outcast, silenced not the revenge of the world. His prayers and benedictions were lost in that whirlwind of execration. Away with Him! Away with Him!

Ah! it was not merely the two pieces of wood that He carried: it was the transgressions of the race, the anguish of the ages, the wrath of God, the sorrows of hell, the stupendous interests of an unending eternity. No wonder His back bent. No wonder the blood started from every pore. No wonder that He crouched under a torture that made the sun faint, and the everlasting hills tremble, and the dead rush up in their winding-sheets as He cried: "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me." But the cup did not pass. None to comfort.

There He hangs! What has that hand done that it should be thus crushed in the palm? It has been healing the lame and wiping away tears. What has that foot been doing that it should be so lacerated? It has been going about doing good. Of what has been guilty? Guilty of saving a world. Tell me, ye heavens and earth, was there ever such another criminal? Was there ever such a crime? On that hill of carnage, that sunless day, amid those howling ricters, may not your sins and mine have perished? I believe it. Oh, the ransom has been paid. Those arms of Jesus were stretched out so wide, that when He brought them together again they might embrace the world. Oh that I might, out of the blossoms of the spring, or the flaming foliage of the autumn, make one wreath for my Lord! Oh that all the triumphal arches of the world could be swung in one gateway, where the King of Glory might come in! Oh that all the harps and trumpets and organs of earthly music might, in one anthem, speak His praise!

The Victim

But what were earthly flowers to Him who walketh amid the snow of the white lilies of heaven! What were arches of earthly masonry to Him who hath about His throne a rainbow spun out of everlasting sunshine! What were all earthly music to Him when the hundred and forty and four thousand on one side, and the cherubim and seraphim and archangels stand on the other side, and all the space between is filled with the doxologies of eternal jubilee!—the hosannah of the hallelujah of unfallen angels, song after song rising about the throne of God and of the Lamb. In that pure, high place, let Him hear us. Stop! harps of heaven, that our poor cry may be heard. Oh, my Lord Jesus! it will not hurt Thee for one hour to step out from the shining throng. They will make it all up when Thou goest back again. Come hither, O blessed One, that we may kiss Thy feet. Our hearts, too long withheld, we now surrender into Thy keeping. When Thou goest back, tell it to all the immortals that the lost are found, and let Thy Father's house ring with the music and the dance.

A Redeemed Earth,

Celestial Wines.

They have some old wine in heaven, not used except in rare festivities. In this world, those who are accustomed to use wine on great occasions, bring out the beverage and say, "This wine is thirty years old," or "forty years old." But the wine of heaven is more than eighteen centuries old. It was prepared at the time when Christ trod the wine-press alone. When such grievous sinners as we come back, methinks the chamberlain of heaven cries out to the servants, "This is unusual joy! Bring up from the vaults of heaven that old wine. Fill all the tankards. Let all the white-robed guests drink to the immortal health of those new-born sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty." There is joy in heaven among the angels of God, over one sinner that repenteth; and God grant that that one may be you!

Again, to have a right heart it must be

A Forgiving Heart.

An old writer says, "To render good for evil is God-like; good for good is man-like; evil for good, devil-like." Which of these natures have we? Christ will have nothing to do with us as long as we keep any old grudge. We have all been cheated and lied about. There are people who dislike us so much that if we should come down to poverty and disgrace, they would say, "Good for him! Didn't I tell you so?" They do not understand us. Unsanctified human nature says, "Wait till you get a good crack at him, and when at last you find him in a tight place, give it to him. Flay him alive. No quarter. Leave not a rag of reputation. Jump on him with both feet. Pay him in his own coin—sarcasm for sarcasm, scorn for scorn, abuse for abuse." But, my friends, that is not the right kind of heart. No man ever did so mean a thing toward us as we have done toward God. And if we cannot forgive others, how can we expect God to forgive us? Thousands of men have been kept out of heaven by an unforgiving heart.

Here is some one who says, "I will forgive that man the wrong he did me about that house and lot; I will forgive that man who overreached me in a bargain; I will forgive that man who sold me a shoddy overcoat; I forgive them—all but one. That man

I Cannot Forgive.

The villain—I can hardly keep my hands off him. If my going to heaven depends on my forgiving him, then I will stay out." Wrong feeling! If a man lie to me once, I am not called to trust him again. If a man betray me once, I am not called to put confidence in him again. But I would have no rest if I could not offer a sincere prayer for the temporal and everlasting welfare of all men, whatever meannesses and outrage they have inflicted upon me. If you want to get your heart right, strike a match and burn up all your old grudges, and blow the ashes away. "If you forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses."

A Sailor Overcome.

An old Christian black woman was going along the streets of New York with a basket of apples that she had for sale. A rough sailor ran against her and upset the basket, and stood back expecting to hear her scold frightfully, but she stooped down and picked up the apples, and said, "God forgive you, my son, as I do." The sailor saw the meanness of what he had done, and felt in his pocket for his money, and insisted that she should take it all. Though she was black, he called her mother, and said, "Forgive me, mother, I will never do anything so mean again." Ah! there is a power in a forgiving spirit to overcome all hardness, There is no way of conquering men like that of bestowing upon them your pardon, whether they will accept it or not.

Again, a right heart is An Expectant Heart.

It is a poor business to be building castles in the air. Enjoy what you have now. Don't spoil your comfort in the small house, because you expect a larger one. Don't fret about your income when it is three or four dollars per day, because you expect to have, after a while, ten dollars per day; or ten thousand a year, because you expect it to be twenty thousand a year. But about heavenly things, the more we think the better. Those castles are not in the air, but on the hills, and we have a deed of them in our possession. I like to see a man all full of heaven. He talks heaven. He sings heaven. He prays heaven. He dreams heaven. Some of us in our sleep have had

The Good Place Open to Us.

We saw the pinnacles in the sky. We heard the click of the hoofs of the white horses on which victors rode, and the clapping of the cymbals of eternal triumph. And while in our sleep we were glad that all our sorrows were over, and burdens done with, the throne of God grew whiter and whiter and whiter, till we opened our eyes and saw that it was only the sun of the earthly morning shining on our pillow. To have a right heart, you need to be filled with this expectancy. It would make your privations and annoyances more bearable.

In the midst of the city of Paris stands of the good but broken-hearted Josephine. I never imagined that marble could be smitten into such tenderness. It seems not lifeless. If the spirit of Josephine be disentabernacled, the soul of the Empress has taken possession of this figure. I am not yet satisfied that it is stone. The puff of the dress on the arm seems to need but the pressure of the finger to indent it. The figure at the bottom of the robe, the ruffle at the neck, the fur lining on the dress, the embroidery of the satin, the cluster of lily and leaf and rose in her hand, the poise of her body as she seems to come sailing out of the sky, her face calm, humble, beautiful, but yet sad—attest the genius of the sculptor and the beauty of the heroine he celebrates. Looking up through the rifts of the coronet that encircles her brow, I could see the sky beyond, the great heavens where all woman's wrongs shall be righted, and the story of endurance and resignation shall be told to all the ages. The rose and the lily in the hand of Josephine will never drop their petals. The children of God, whether they suffer on earth in palaces or in hovels, shall come to that

A Statue

Glorious Rest,

Oh, heaven, sweet heaven! at thy gate we set down all our burdens and griefs. The place will be full. Here there are vacant chairs at the hearth, and at the table, but there are no vacant chairs in heaven. The crowns all worn; the thrones all mounted. Some talk of heaven as though it were a very handsome church, where a few favored spirits would come in and sit down on finely cushioned seats all by themselves, and sing psalms to all eternity. No, no. "I saw a great multitude that no man could number, standing before the throne. He that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and it was twelve thousand furlongs"—that is, fifteen hundred miles in circumference. Ah! Heaven is not a little colony, at one corner of God's dominion, where a man's entrance depends upon what kind of clothes he has on his back, and how much money he has in his purse; but a vast empire. God grant that the light of that blessed world may shine upon us in Our Last Moment.

The roughest time we had in crossing the ocean was at the mouth of Liverpool harbor. We arrived at nightfall, and were obliged to lie there till the morning, waiting for the rising of the tide, before we could go up to the city. How the vessel pitched and writhed in the water! So, sometimes, the last illness of the Christian is a struggle. He is almost through the voyage. The waves of temptation toss his soul, but he waits for the morning. At last the light dawns, and the tides of joy rise in his soul, and he sails up and casts anchor within the veil.

Is thy heart right? What question can compare with this in importance? It is

A Business Question.

Do you not realize that you will soon have to go out of that store, that you will soon have to resign that partnership, that soon among all the millions of dollars worth of goods that are sold in New York, you will not have the handling of a yard of cloth, or a pound of sugar, or a penny-worth of anything; that soon, if a conflagration should start at Central Park and sweep everything to the Battery, it would not disturb you; that soon, if every cashier should abscond, and every insurance company should fail, it would not affect you? What are the questions that stop this side the grave, compared with the questions that reach beyond it? Are you making losses that are to be everlasting? Are you making purchases for eternity? Are you jobbing for time when you might be wholesaling for eternity? What question of the store is so broad at the base, and so altitudinous, and so overwhelming as the question, "Is thy heart right?" Or is it

A Domestic Question?

Is it something about father, or mother, or companion, or son, or daughter, that you think is comparable with this question in importance? Do you not realize that by universal and inexorable law, all these relations will be broken up? Your father will be gone, your mother will be gone, your companion will be gone, your child will be gone, you will be gone, and then this supernal question will begin to harvest its chief gains, or deplore its worst losses, roll up into its mightiest magnitude, or sweep its vast circles. What difference now does it make to Napoleon III whether he triumphed or surrendered at Sedan? whether he lived at the Tuilleries or at Chiselhurst, whether he was Emperor or exile? They laid him out in his coffin in the dress of a field-marshal. Did that give him any better chance for the next world than if he had been laid out in a plain shroud? And soon to us what will be the difference, whether in this world we rode or walked, were bowed to or maltreated, were applauded or hissed at, were welcomed in or kicked out, while laying hold of every moment of the great future, and burning in all the splendor or grief, and overarching and undergoing all time and all eternity, is the plain, simple, practical, thrilling, agonizing, overwhelming question, "Is thy heart right?" Have you within you a repenting heart, an expectant heart? If not, I must write upon your soul upon the window-pane with his diamond ring. He tarried in an elegant house over night, but found that there was no God recognized in that house. Before he left his room in the morning, with his ring he wrote upon the window-pane, "One thing thou lackest." After the guest was gone, the housewife came up and looked at the window, and saw the inscription, and called her husband and her children; and God, through that ministry of the window-glass, brought them all to Jesus. Though you may to-day be surrounded by comforts and luxuries, and feel that you have need of nothing, if you are not the children of God, with the signet-ring of Christ's love, let me inscribe upon your souls, "One thing thou lackest."

What George Whitefield Wrote

I pray you that, whatever else you may miss, you may not miss heaven. It is too bright a home to lose. Your soul has been bought at too dear a price. I preach to you of the blood that cleanseth from all sin. Casting all your sins behind you, I beg of you to start this morning for the Kingdom. "Yes," you say, "I will start, but not now." William III. made proclamation, when there was a revolution in the north of Scotland, that all who came and took the oath of allegiance by the 31st of December should be pardoned, Mac Ian, a chieftain of a prominent clan, resolved to return with the rest of the rebels, but had some pride in being the very last one that should take the oath. He postponed starting for this purpose until two days before the expiration of the term. A snow-storm impeded his way, and before he got up to take the oath and receive a pardon from the throne, the time was up and past. While the others were set free, Mac Ian was miserably put to death. He started too late and arrived too late. In like manner, some of you are in prospect of losing for ever the amnesty of the Gospel. Many of you are going to be for ever too late. Remember the mistake of Mac Ian!

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled. "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God. The book may be obtained for seventy-five cents from any bookseller.

THE DIABOLIZED ATMOSPHERE.

In the course of his Friday evening talk, Dr. Talmage, alluding to the recent outrages on private individuals, which have taken the form of sending deadly explosive packages to them, by express, advanced a striking theory in explanation. He said:

The loveliness of this autumn has been disturbed by the crash of several infernal machines, and, on all sides, I hear people cry: "What are we coming to?" They say this is one of the bad signs of the times. Do not, however, have any idea that this is a sign of the fact that our time is exceptionally degraded. In our boyhood days the infernal machine was frequently on the programme of stirring events, not a half-and-half contrivance, like some of those recently sent, but instruments that did their work with appalling accuracy and destructiveness. But while these attempts illustrate that the spirit of evil is still abroad, what is most amazing is, that when people go to work to maim or kill, they generally maim or kill the wrong persons. They either injure unsuspecting women and children, or some useful man whose earthly detention is of great importance. I hope there is to be no epidemic of such attempts. How to account for such coincidences of crime, or such concerts of injustice I know not, unless at such times there be something in the air that induces them. Satan is the Prince of the power of the air. The Bible says so. Being the Prince of the power of the air, he may at times surcharge the atmosphere with malicious tendencies.

RAW MATERIAL FOR JEWELS.

Surprise is often expressed that evangelists who are working among criminals, drunkards, and vicious people should have any hope of success in their work. They would not have any, did they not have unbounded faith in the transforming power of God's grace, and a firm conviction that in the vilest creature is material which, in His hands, can be made a stone fit for His living temple (1 Peter 2:5). An illustration of the process in nature which scientists describe as natural law, but which the Christian regards as God's own work, was recently mentioned in the course of an address in Chicago, by Dr. S. M. Campbell. He said, summarizing from a distinguished scientist's work:

Take an ounce of the blackest slime of a beaten footpath on a rainy day in a manufacturing town. That slime we shall find, in most cases, composed of clay (or of brick-dust, which is burnt clay) mixed with soot, a little sand and water. Let us suppose that this ounce of mud is left to perfect rest, and that its elements gather together, like to like, so that these atoms may get into the closest relations possible. Let the clay begin. Ridding itself of all foreign substances, it gradually becomes white earth, already very beautiful, and with the help of congealing fire, to be made into the finest porcelain, and to be kept in kings' palaces. But such artificial consistence is not its best; leave it still quiet to follow its own instinct of unity, and it becomes not only white, but clear; and not only clear, but hard; and not only clear and hard, but so set that it can deal with light in a wonderful way, and gather out of it the loveliest blue rays only, refusing the rest. We call it a sapphire. Such being the consummation of the clay, we give similar permission to the sand. It also becomes first a white earth, then proceeds to grow clear and hard, and at last arranges itself in mysterious, infinitely fine parallel lines, which have the power not only of reflecting the blue rays, but the blue, green, purple and red rays, in the greatest beauty in which they can be seen through any hard material whatever. We call it an opal. In next order the soot sets to work. It cannot make itself white at first; but instead of being discouraged, it tries harder and harder, and comes out clear at last, and the hardest thing in the world; and for the blackness, it has obtained in exchange the power of reflecting all the rays of the sun at once, in the vividest blaze that any solid thing can shoot. We call it a diamond. Last of all, the water purifies or unites itself, contented enough if it reach the form of a dewdrop. But if we insist upon its proceeding to a more perfect consistence, it crystallizes into the shape of a star. And for the ounce of black mud we had . . . we have a sapphire, an opal, and a diamond set in a star of snow.

A JUVENILE BRIDE.

In a letter from Miss Caddy, who is laboring among her own sex in Calcutta, to the Missionary Link, she thus refers to one of her pupils, a child nine years old: I was grieved on returning to my Eutally school to find that Mohamaya, my best pupil, had been married. Shortly before the holidays her father had expressed his pleasure at the progress she had made, and had assured me that she should continue with me two years longer. But "an exceedingly nice young man" had been found, and the father thought it a pity to lose the chance. The servant told me that the father was afraid to let me know anything about it until it was all over. The young bridegroom has given up idolatry and is a Brahmo. He wants to have his wife well educated. After a few months spent at his father's house, she is to return to Calcutta to finish her education. He wanted to see me before he left Calcutta, and I went to the house and had an interview with him. He seemed like a very intelligent, bright young man, good looking, with a frank, open manner. He told me plainly that the only objection he had to my school was, that we taught Christianity; that that was a strong point with him, and he had thought of the Bethune school, where no Christianity is taught. We talked for more than an hour. He tried to get me to compromise, and teach morality, without religion. This gave me a chance to talk plainly though kindly. When I rose to leave, he told me he felt less afraid to send his wife back to me, and he half promised that she should not go elsewhere. Now I want to tell you just what I desire about this, that you may help me with your prayers. My faith in prayer gets stronger every year. I would like "Mohamaya" to come back to us for for two years, and then go into Miss Gardner's higher school to finish. Mohamaya is only about nine years of age, and so much of her future happiness and usefulness depend upon the next few years of her life. "Moha," as they call her at home, was very reserved and shy, but as soon as her husband left she ran to me and asked, "I am to come back to your school, am I not?" Her people are very wealthy, but have not much education.

WORK AMONG JAPANESE STUDENTS.

A correspondent in Yokohama, Japan, sends encouraging news to the Woman's Missionary Record. She states that the educated young men of Japan, and notably the students in colleges, are earnestly seeking knowledge of Christianity. She says: "The superintendent of one of the public schools in Yokohama is the leading Japanese teacher in our school; he is quite a cultured Japanese gentleman, but not a Christian, and it seems that he was desirous of this position for one reason, that he might become acquainted with our Christianity. He is very much interested, and is having private Bible study with Mr. C. His wife also is much interested, and there is no doubt but that they will become Christians. Such a person converted to Christianity will be able to exert a wide influence for good in this town. Many have already been brought to the church and Sunday-school, by the working of the students throughout the community. In the Normal school, the students are not allowed to have the Bible, and last summer one of their students, who had been attending our Sunday-school, came and requested to spend his vacation with us for Bible study and English. The request was granted, and he has, as the result, developed not only in English, but in Christianity, and is one of our best workers; his influence in that Normal school is being felt; he has succeeded in bringing to Sunday-school and church twenty of those young men, and several of them have declared their determination to be Christians."

MORMON TYRANNY.

In spite of the efforts of the United States government, which has done much to free the people of Utah from the cruel despotism of the Mormon priesthood, the power of that tyrannical hierarchy is still exercised with crushing effect. A Scandinavian evangelist in Utah writing recently to The Church says:

A lady with whom I had a talk last week said that she and her husband would both attend our meetings, (they have several times promised to come), and would also leave the Mormon church, were it not that by so doing her husband would lose his place of employment, and they would be reduced to starvation. She said, "We do not believe in Mormonism, but we are bound to stick to it till better times come for Utah. We would sell our property and go East were it possible, where we could be free." There are many such families in Utah disgusted with Mormonism, yet bound to hold to it. They are poor people and timid, fearful of the "priesthood."

A man who began to show some interest in our work (as manifested by his regular attendance at our place of worship and questions that he asked) suddenly dropped off, and has altogether ceased to come. I met him, one day, on the street, and asked him why he did not come to church any more. He would give me no definite answer. But I had no trouble in seeing where the difficulty was. I said nothing, however, but cordially invited him to come to our next meeting. He said, "I will see," but did not come. I have called on him since, and also met him on the street and asked him to attend the services, but he does not come. The reason is obvious.

A MEDICAL MISSIONARY UNDER ARREST.

The difficulties of mission work under Turkish rule, even when authorized by the Sultan, were illustrated in a recent journey which Dr. Ira Harris took in the mountainous region of Syria, a description of which he has sent for publication to The Church. He says:

All arrangements were made to visit Kudmoos, a large Ismailiyeh village five hours to the west. While our men were getting our baggage ready, two Turkish officers and a number of soldiers made their appearance. One of them took our men aside and told them that they might unload the animals, for the Kackeem (American missionary) was not going yet.

One of the officers told me that I must go to the Pasha and give an account of myself, what was my business among the Nusairiyeh, what were the books I was selling and the tracts I was giving away. I replied that I was a physician, plying my profession on a certificate granted by the Sultan, that I had a Turkish passport, properly signed, granting me permission to travel anywhere in the empire; that the books I was selling had the imperial sanction and the tracts I was distributing were selections from the Bible. I referred to the fact that I had spent several days in the governor's own village, and had treated many of the soldiers, and now when I was about to leave the district I was ordered to go eight miles back to give an account of myself. But for the intercession of our host they would have arrested me and taken me by force; as it was, we were told not to leave the village; soldiers were stationed to enforce this order until a messenger could bring instructions from the pasha. When he returned, the officers came to our room and said that the pasha was satisfied that I had a right to travel and practice my profession, but that we must submit to having our baggage examined lest our papers should contain anything against the Turkish Government, and he also ordered that a thorough examination of the books we were selling be made, for it was rumored that we were political agents of some foreign power, inciting the Nusairiyeh to rebellion. Of course they found nothing in our baggage. They then turned their attention to our books.

The senior officer took a Bible, read a whole chapter, then asked the price, said he had heard of the book, but had never seen one; would like to purchase that he might compare it with the Koran. I offered to give him one, but he would not receive it as a present. He bought a Bible, a new Testament and a Gospel of Matthew. I told him that the Testament and Matthew were contained in the Bible; but he replied, "Never mind; I will give them to some of the soldiers to read." He asked for the tracts. I gave him fifty, telling him that if he found nothing objectionable in them he might distribute them among the garrison. He said he would do so. The officers then salaamed, and took their departure.

THE FOURTH SEAL.

By Rev. M. Baxter.*

The Historic Fulfilment—Explanation of the Symbols—A Turning Point in Papal History—A Time of Persecution—War on Heretics—The Progressive Degradation of the Church—The Zenith of Papal Power—A New Variety of Holy War—A Typical Massacre—Joy at a Hideous Holocaust.

"AND when he opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth living creature say, Come, And I looked and beheld a pale horse; and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with the sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth" (Rev. 6:7, 8).

Explanation of the Symbols.

The visible Christian Church, in its downward course of progressive decay and declension, is now depicted as a pale or livid horse—the last stage of corruption. Its rider, representing the professed clergy of Christendom, is portrayed as Death, the King of Terrors, for the ecclesiastical leaders and rulers were prominently occupied at this era, in dealing death on every side throughout the Roman-imperial world, by means of the Crusades and Inquisition, which the Pope and Romish priesthood originated. And while Death is thus personified as going forth to mow down with the scythe of mortality, and to reap with the sickle of destruction, Hell, or Hades, the place of departed spirits, follows to gather the slain into the garner of the world of the dead.

A Pontifical Era.

Previous to the popedom of Hildebrand, in 1073, or Gregory VII., as he was called, the Romish pontiffs are described by Hallam, the historian, as "having neither leisure nor capacity to perfect the great system of temporal supremacy, but looking rather to a vile profit for the sale of episcopal confirmations, or exemptions of monasteries; and all writers concur in vigorously stigmatizing the dissoluteness of the clergy."

But now Hildebrand, and his successor, Pope Urban, were no longer content, like their predecessors, with mere indulgence in covetousness and dissolute luxury, but they organized the vast expeditions of the Crusades, for the extermination of the Turks abroad; and this led, in another century, to the formation of crusades for the destruction of heresies at home; and again, out of this the establishment of the Inquisition arose. Thus the murderous spirit of the Crusades now took possession of the visible Church, and animated the mind of Papal Christendom with a fanatical zeal to exterminate by fire and sword all whom the Pope deemed to be heretics, whether they were Jews, Turks, Infidels or Protestants.

In the Fourth Seal, a mounted warrior again passes before the apostle: but the horse is of the most loathsome hue, the color of leprosy, and the rider is emphatically named Death. To add to the terrific nature of the scene, an attendant is given to him whose name is Hell. The rider and his companion are busy with the work of death in every most terrific form, and their domain extends over no less than a quarter of the globe. These hateful images represent the so-called ministers of Christ, who tried to quench the dawning light of Reformation in the blood of the Inquisition. The rulers of Christendom, ecclesiastical and civil, used every effort to stem the torrent of the Reformation. Pious men raised their voices against the corruption of the times, but their testimony brought them, in most cases, to the rack or to the stake. We see, then, in this fourth seal a symbol of the persecuting clergy, before and during the Reformation—a corrupt, established ministry, persecuting those who attempt to reform its errors. The rider still bears the outward form of Christ's minister, but his works are the works of Christ's enemy—a wolf devouring the sheep. Thus, in the first four seals we trace of the professed ministers of Christ—first, in the earlier centuries as a rider in white, trampling beneath his horse's hoofs the idols of pagan Rome, or nourishing with a martyr's blood the vine-roots of the infant church—next, in the ages following the era of Constantine, grasping the sword of temporal power, and plunging it into the bosom of those who, like themselves, bear the name of Christian: controversy, strife and lust of temporal power defiling the white robes of the clergy. After this, when the battles of controversy have been fought out, and differences of opinion have been crushed beneath the weight of an established hierarchy, supported by the sword of civil power, the love of money comes in, and we see them studying their own sordid interest, given over to the lust of filthy lucre, buying and selling the food of immortal souls. And lastly, the established priesthood of Christendom, when assailed by the remonstrances of faithful individuals, becomes the fierce persecutor and murderer of His faithful people; when men were tortured and burnt for attempting the reformation of the Church, and a return to apostolic doctrine and practice. Thus, most fearful warnings against three forms of clerical sin are here set forth; the lust of worldly power: the love of money: and the determination to uphold established systems, whether they be right or wrong.

The Downward Course

History of the Period.

Llorente says Gregory VII. undertook in 1074 to form a crusade against the Turks, but as he died before he could put his plan in execution, his successor, Urban II., caused it to be proclaimed in the council of Clermont, in 1095. The efforts of the Pope had an incredible success; a numerous army left Europe soon after, which first took the city of Antioch, and afterwards Jerusalem, in 1099. The injustice of this war, and other expeditions of the same kind which succeeded it, would have disgusted all Europe, if the people had not been prepossessed with the absurd idea that it was meritorious to make war for the exaltation and glory of Christianity.

Hallam says Pope Gregory VII. (A. D. 1073) completed the destruction of the liberties of the national churches (i. e., the Catholic churches of the nations), which, long abridged of their liberties by gradual encroachments, now found themselves subject to an undisguised and irresistible despotism.

The Noonday of Papal Dominion extends from the pontificate of Innocent III. (1198) to that of Boniface VIII. (1294); or, in other words, through the thirteenth century. Rome inspired, during this age, all the terror of her ancient name. She was once more the mistress of the world, and kings were her vassals. Of the thirteenth century White states: "The Crusades had hitherto (up to A. D. 1200) been directed against the Infidels. As yet some reluctance was felt, to put a professing Christian to death for errors in doctrine, though there had been some occasional instances of it. But the thirteenth century was marked by the turning of the edge of the Christian sword against Christian men for differences of opinion."

Five Papal bulls were launched between 1056 and 1290 against the Vaudois and their followers in France and Piedmont, demanding exterminating crusades to be undertaken against them. Dr. Keith says:

"A New Order of Holy Wars was proclaimed. And by the authority of the Pope, the monks of Citeaux, with a zeal outrivalling that of Peter the Hermit, the great preacher of the Palestine war, proclaimed a crusade against the Albigenses. In the year 1208, 'in the name of the Pope and of the apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, they promised to all who should perish in this holy expedition, plenary absolution of all sins committed from the day of their birth to that of their death.' A campaign of forty days, in so holy a cause, was reckoned, by papal infallibility, merit enough to secure eternal salvation. 'Bull after bull was fulminated from the court of Rome. And never had the Cross been taken up with a more unanimous consent.' 'The immense preparation resounded throughout Europe, and filled Languedoc with terror.'

"'As the crusade approached, the Bishop of Beziers delivered to the legate of the Pope a list of those among his flock whom he suspected of heresy, and wished to see consigned to the flames. The citizens refused to surrender them to the avengers of the faith, notwithstanding that the assemblage of the tents and pavilions of the crusaders was so great that it appeared as if the world was collected there. All the inhabitants of the country had taken refuge in Beziers. The city was taken. The multitude were whither they had fled; 7,000 dead bodies were counted in that of the Magdalen alone. When the crusaders had massacred the last living creature in Beziers, and pillaged the houses of all that they had thought worth carrying off, they set fire to the city in every part at once, and reduced it to a vast funeral pile. Not a house remained standing—not one human being alive. Historians differ as to the number of victims. The abbot of Citeaux, feeling some shame for the butchery which he had ordered, in his letter to Innocent III. reduces it to 15,000, others make it amount to sixty.'

Massacred in the Churches,

"'Our pilgrims,' wrote the monk of Vaux-Cernay, 'collected the innumerable heretics that the castle contained, and burned them alive with the utmost joy.' In Bernard's life of Innocent III., their number is stated at 400. The castle of Montjoyre was abandoned, but burned by the crusaders. The castle of Cassero afforded them more satisfaction, as it furnished human victims for their sacrifices. It was surrendered on capitulation; and the pilgrims, seizing nearly sixty heretics, burned them with infinite joy. This was always the phrase employed by the monk who was the witness and the panegyrist of the crusade.

Such was the style of the persecutions which, at small intervals, and in different degrees, mark the whole history of this suffering and faithful people during the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries. In 1488 the Pope fulminated against the Vaudois a bull of extermination, and commanded a crusade against them. About 3,000 Vaudois were killed, most of them being suffocated in a large cave to which they retreated, by fires kindled by the crusaders at the cave's entrance.

* An extract from his article in the November number of the Prophetic News, for sale, price six cents at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a Monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing. Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to the manager of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, N. Y. Back numbers for distribution as tracts will be sent, postage paid, at half price, 3 cents per copy.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents; always payable in advance. Single copies for sale by, or can be ordered at, all newsdealers'.

New Subscriptions can commence at any time. When no date is mentioned, we begin them with the issue of the week in which the subscription is received.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheques, or drafts or express money order, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Renewals can be sent any time previous to date of expiry, and the time will be added to that to which the subscriber is already entitled. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed.

Notice of Expiration of subscription is always sent in addition to the date being given on the address label. When not renewed by date of expiration the paper is stopped; no notice from the subscriber being required.

Receipts are not sent, the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that his remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please advise us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Mistakes are sure to arise occasionally, which we will gladly put right on having our attention drawn to them. Please do not allow any error to pass without complaint.

Change of Address. Name of Post Office and State, of both old and new address, should always be given in case of removal.

A year's subscription sent now secures the paper to the end of 1888. The remainder of this year is included free.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Important Changes in the National Bank Laws, will be submitted to Congress early in the session by Mr. W. L. Trenholm, Controller of the Currency. He proposes to divide the banks into two classes, the first class to comprise banks having a capital of more than a quarter of a million, and the second class those with that amount of capital and under. The first class will deposit $25,000 with the Government instead of $50,000, and the second class one tenth of their capital. Officers of a bank are in no case to constitute a majority of the Board of Directors. A clause is to be inserted in the oath taken by directors, which will bind them to "inform themselves at all times as to the business and condition of the bank." Penalties are provided for making loans contrary to law. Hitherto that offence had but one punishment—the forfeiture of the charter and dissolution of the corporation, which in some cases is far too severe a penalty for technical violations, but that penalty is still retained for use when there is evident fraud. Many other suggestions are made, affecting minute details of management, which will tend to facilitate business, and the whole of the laws are codified and revised. Some of the provisions, which have been made to relieve Western banks, especially of onerous restrictions, are likely to give rise to vigorous opposition.

The National Conference of the Prohibition party was held last week in Chicago. Among the business transacted was the appointment of time and place for the Convention next year. It is to be held at Indianapolis on June 10, 1888. Miss Frances E. Willard pronounced a eulogy on the lamented John D. Finch, who was chairman of the National Committee. Mr. Samuel Dickey, of Albion, Mich., was elected to fill the place which had unhappily become vacant. Twenty-six States and Territories are represented on the national committee. A long discussion took place, as to the basis of representation in the National Convention. It was finally decided to suggest to the National Committee, that the basis be one representative from each Congressional District, and one for each five hundred voters. The exact return of the Prohibition vote in New York State at the recent election is now in. It was, for the head of the ticket, 41,249, and for the second place, 42,486. In 1885, the latest year when a full vote was polled, it was 30,867. As compared with that year the Democratic vote decreased six per cent., the Republican vote decreased nearly eight per cent., while the Prohibition vote increased more than thirty-five per cent.

The Expedition to Commence the Last Survey of the route for the Nicaragua canal, sailed from Brooklyn on November 30, on the Hondo. The vessel carried forty officers, two experienced physicians, and 130 men. It had also on board a complete equipment of tools and apparatus for the enterprise. The expedition will be joined at Kingston, Jamaica, by Mr. J. Ford, who went ahead to engage laborers. The survey is expected to occupy six months, and when it is complete the actual task of digging the canal will begin. This will take six years. The start is made under the most favorable auspices, with the best wishes of distinguished people all over the United States, and with the substantial backing of plenty of American capitalists. It is confidently predicted that the enterprise will be successful. Señor Don Horatio Guzman, the Nicaraguan Minister to the United States, whose portrait appeared in this journal on September 8, was present when the Hondo sailed, and was extremely cordial in wishing success to the expedition.

Jacob Sharp, the Briber of the New York aldermen, has reason to be thankful for the peculiar construction of the laws governing criminal trials. The Court of Appeals, on November 29, quashed his conviction, and granted him a new trial. The ground for this remarkable decision was, that, in the trial before Judge Barrett, the jury were allowed to take into consideration the fact that Sharp had practically admitted his guilt, when giving evidence at another inquiry. There is general disappointment in the community, and some murmuring, against the Court of Appeals. The latter, however, ought not to be uttered. There is no question about the honesty and ability of the Court, and its members have doubtless decided according to the letter of the law. It is, nevertheless, a matter for deep regret that this ruling was not foreseen at the first trial, as the delay in getting the wealthy and powerful criminal behind the bars has an injurious effect on the community. It produces the impression that wealth has more power than it ought to have, in shielding the wrongdoer from the just punishment of his crimes.

A Colossal Statue of the Pharaoh who Enslaved the Israelites, has been brought from Egypt and placed in the Museum of Fine Arts, at Boston, Mass. It has been acquired through the influence of Rev. Dr. W. C. Winslow, the American Vice-President of the Egyptian Exploration Fund Society. It was found at Nebesheh, a few miles from Tanis (the Zoan of the Bible), in a vast chamber, excavated in the ground, beneath the foundation of an ancient Egyptian Temple. It is a sitting figure, of dark gray granite, beautifully carved, and bearing the cartouch and name of Rameses the Great. The height is nine feet three inches, and its weight exceeds three tons. A fine profile, in limestone, of the same monarch, has also been presented to the museum. The skill of the sculptor has evidently produced a striking likeness of Rameses. The features show a proud, haughty, severe cast of mind, in which there is no pity, and, looking at them, one sees confirmation of the Bible statement, that he made the Children of Israel serve with rigor.

A Noble Tenement House Experiment is being made in New York, which it may be hoped will extend largely, both in this and other cities. A large building has been erected in Cherry Street, by philanthropic capitalists, containing one hundred and four suites of rooms, the majority having three each. The sanitary arrangements are perfect, and in the rear of the building is a wide airy court. In the centre of the building are three rooms—one large and two small—which are set apart for a free kindergarten school for the use of children living in the building, whose mothers work outside in the day. The rent of each suite varies from $10 to $15 a month, according to location. This amount will pay seven per cent. on the capital invested, but the owners will take not more than four per cent., the surplus being carried to a fund to be used in paying the rent of tenants out of employment, or incapacitated by sickness, and if there are no demands upon it for that purpose, it will be used to relieve families in distress through misfortune. Applications were received the first day the building was opened for more suites of rooms than it contained.

Enthusiastic Loyalist Meetings in Dublin were held on November 29 and 30. Lord Hartington, the leader of the Unionists, and Mr. Goschen attended, to explain the policy of the Government and the Unionists. Leinster Hall, which was engaged for the occasion, was crowded, and a second hall was secured for an overflow meeting. That too was filled, and a crowd numbering several thousands clamored for admission. It was estimated that fully eight thousand persons were present at the two meetings. Hundreds of leading citizens, several bishops and many members of the clergy were present on the platform. Upon the arrival of Lord Hartington and Mr. Goschen, they were accorded an enthusiastic greeting, the whole assembly rising and repeatedly cheering them. The chairman handed to Lord Hartington an address, approving his policy and signed by 1,300 members of the Chamber of Commerce.

Three Prominent Irish Leaders were Sent to prison last week. One of them was the Lord Mayor of Dublin. He is a newspaper proprietor and an ardent Nationalist. Since the proclamation of the League it has been a misdemeanor to publish reports of the proscribed meetings, but the Lord Mayor has systematically violated the law. On Friday, he was placed on trial and convicted. He was sentenced to two months' imprisonment. It was expected that he would appeal, but he preferred the rôle of a martyr, and declared that he would suffer his punishment proudly, if it had been ten times as much. Timothy Harrington, who has been conducting the plan of campaign since O'Brien was imprisoned, was arrested on Friday. His brother, Edward Harrington, member of Parliament for Tralee, had been arrested the day before. It is expected that Mr. Healy and other leaders will also be seized, the Government being evidently determined to crush the League.

The French Capital was the Scene of Continued excitement through the whole of last week. M. Grévy's reluctance to resign the Presidency, and his vacillation, produced general uneasiness and apprehension. The Legislature had evidently determined to force his resignation, and the Monarchists and Communists alike rejoiced in the spectacle of Republican institutions in peril. On Monday the President intimated to the chambers that his resignation might be expected on Thursday, and the Legislature adjourned until that day. In the meantime the rumor was circulated that M. Ferry would be elected to the Presidency, and an indignant protest was made by his numerous enemies. Better, they said, that Grévy should remain, than Ferry become President. Grévy, clinging to office, thought that a reaction had set in, and when the Legislature re-assembled on Thursday his resignation was not forthcoming. But there was no break in the deadlock. The Legislature suspended its sitting, and strong representations were made to the President that he must resign. Accordingly on Friday he yielded, and sent his resignation to the chambers. On Saturday, the Senate and Deputies in joint session elected M. Sadi-Carnot President of the Republic. M. Carnot is fifty years of age, is a son of M. Hippolyte Carnot who figured in the revolution of 1848, and a grandson of the celebrated war minister of the revolution of 1789.

The Work Among College Students is Bearing fruit in Harvard. A petition has been presented by about fifty of the undergraduates of the University, to the faculty, suggesting the propriety of holding special evangelistic services in Boston during the winter, and offering to assist in the meetings. The Rev. Francis G. Peabody replying for his colleagues said: We entirely agree with your suggestions, and are ready to undertake a series of five meetings in Boston. We do this with the full sense of the seriousness of such a movement, and we feel that success will be best obtained by committing all details to the students themselves.

Dr. Justin Fulton's Lectures on Romanism have excited the malignity of the Roman Catholics of Biddeford, Me. Large audiences attended the lecture, but they were outnumbered by an open-air assemblage of Romanists at the doors. The Hall was stoned, and Dr. Fulton was chased by an excited mob, from which he escaped with difficulty. It is alleged by one of the Protestant clergymen of the town, that the Mayor not only failed to afford proper protection for Dr. Fulton, but expressed personal ill-feeling toward him. Dr. Fulton is not to be driven out of a place, however, by opposition, and he has announced another course of lectures in Biddeford.

A Remarkable Statement was Made by Dr. F. F. Emerson at a meeting of Congregational Ministers in New York last week. He quoted statistics, showing that while wealth and church membership had greatly increased since 1850, the donation of members of the evangelical churches in this country to home and foreign missions had remained at an average of fifty cents per capita, or about one mill on every dollar of property during thirty years. The significance of this fact, he said, appeared when contrasted with the prominence given by Christ in His teaching as to the use of money. It appeared repeatedly in the Parables, and in describing the Last Judgment it was the testing question, for the Judge said nothing about devotion to creeds, but denounced the guilty for neglect of the hungry and the sick.

The Danger of Immigration was Portrayed in earnest words on November 23, by Prof. Richmond M. Smith in his address at Columbia College. There were, he said, about fifteen million persons in the United States who were of foreign or mixed parentage. This was about one-third of the entire population. In portions of New England the foreign element was very large. Over half of the population of Boston and the other large cities of Massachusetts was of foreign or mixed parentage. Formerly the difficulties of travel prevented any but the best people coming here; now there were so many facilities that any one could come. Illiteracy had been greatly increased by recent immigration. Would not the large foreign element have strong effect on the national character of America? The new immigrants were not enthusiastic about the superiority of American institutions, as earlier immigrants were, and they did not assimilate. The Professor favored restriction of immigration, but he did not explain how or by what tests he would have it reduced to only "the best people." It is well for the world that no such restriction is placed on Christ's kingdom. It was not the best people that He sought, but the outcasts, and those are assimilated by Divine power (Luke 5: 32).

A Telegraph Operator's Fatal Negligence is assigned as the cause of a terrible railroad accident in Pennsylvania. Two freight trains on the Wheeling division of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad arrived, on November 26, at a point fifteen miles from Pittsburg, Pa. One of the trains should have been side-tracked for the other to pass, and the company assert that orders to that effect were telegraphed to an agent, but that the operator neglected to deliver the order. In consequence, the two trains, which were running at a high rate of speed as they rounded a curve, came into view too late to be checked. An instant later they came together with a terrible crash. Both locomotives were lifted from the rails and thrown to one side, completely wrecked. The cars were all derailed and reduced almost to kindling wood, and the débris piled up high around the locomotives. There was not a moment's warning, and both crews were caught in the wreck. Three of the trainmen were almost instantly killed. The others were held prisoners in the confused mass, and were extricated with difficulty, all more or less seriously injured. If the disaster did really result from the operator's negligence, his remorse must be terrible. Still more terrible, however, will be the remorse of parents or teachers or preachers who have failed to warn those committed to their charge, when they see them go into eternal disaster (Ezek 33: 8).

Eighty-Six Years Imprisonment is the Aggregate sentence imposed on a horse-thief in Texas. On November 23 he was released from the Rusk Penitentiary, where he had been confined for horse-stealing. He was promptly rearrested and taken to Gainesville, where he was placed on trial for a series of similar thefts, and a conviction was obtained in each case. When he was removed from court, after the trials, the sentences upon him, including those he had already served, covered a period of eighty-six years. The thought that death will prevent his serving so long a time in the penitentiary must be not unwelcome. It may be hoped that before that event occurs he may repent of his evil deeds, and look to Christ for salvation, or his soul will pass to a judgment where even death will be denied him. (Matt. 25: 46).

A Popular Actress was Maimed in the New York Hospital on December 1. Some three years ago she was troubled by a bunion on her heel, and applied to a chiropodist for relief. The man advised her to have it cut out, and she consented. The wound never completely healed, and at length caused her so much pain and inconvenience, that she consulted an eminent physician. He tried various remedies without success, and two weeks ago he informed her that he had discovered in the wound the well-known cells which indicate cancer. He said that it was the species known as Epithelioma or soft cancer, which spreads rapidly, and advised her to lose no time in having it operated upon. She inquired what would be done, and was told that she would have to lose her foot and ancle, but that unless they were cut off immediately her whole limb must go; while if there were a longer delay even the amputation of the limb would not save her life. Her decision was quickly taken, and the operation has been performed. She acted wisely, for though her decision involved the sacrifice of her position and prospects in her profession, they are not so dear to her as her life. Men do not realize the meaning and value of eternal life, or, when their way to that is barred by some sinful habit, though it were dear as a right hand, they would be similarly ready to give it up. (Matt. 5: 30.)

A Buffalo Lady's Revenge on her Rivals is described by the Courier of that city. It states that a well-known leader of fashionable society recently gave an entertainment of magnificent proportions. There were two or three ladies among the guests, whose presence she would have been glad to dispense with, if custom and courtesy had permitted, for they are her rivals, and deep-seated jealousy exists between them. The hostess decorated her rooms with marked skill for the occasion, and the guests were enchanted with the preparations. A peculiarity in the lighting of the dining-room, however, caused some surprise. The large chandeliers had long branches so arranged that a light was over the head of each guest at the table. The lights were enclosed in globes of colored glass which had a curious effect when the company was seated. It was observed that each of the rivals of the hostess was seated under a pale blue light, and, though they were really beautiful ladies, under that light they looked aged and ghastly, while comparatively unattractive ladies sitting under ruby lights looked charming. The result was all that the hostess desired. The time is coming when a still more trying ordeal will be witnessed. In the light of God's countenance mere natural beauty will fade, and only those who have put on Christ will appear lovely (Micah 7: 8, 9).

The Rescue of Passengers on a Ship in Distress, is the purpose of an invention submitted to the Secretary of the Navy by Rear Admiral Ammen last week. It is called a "balsa," and consists of an arrangement of casks supporting a platform. The casks are so placed that they may be filled with provisions, which can be taken out as they are needed, by persons on the platform. An oil-bag is attached to each balsa, to be used in calming the surrounding sea. The Admiral says that in the event of the abandonment of a vessel at sea, the balsas could be used in a sea so rough that ordinary boats could not be lowered safely. He states that balsas, of the model he has constructed, sufficient to hold a thousand persons, could be carried on an ordinary steamer without inconvenience. As no steamer carries sufficient boats to accommodate all on board, the Admiral's invention is a much needed provision for emergencies which frequently arise. If it fulfils all he claims for it, many lives may be saved by its means, for when a vessel is sinking the passengers are eager to avail themselves of any means of escape—even of a temporary character. They do not hesitate and delay, as men do in this shipwrecked world, when a sure salvation is offered them (Heb. 2: 3).

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. E. J. Parker, one of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's evangelists, is conducting successful evangelistic meetings at Marblehead, Mass. His sister, Miss Parker, is rendering him efficient assistance.

As an aid to the Convalescents' Home in New York, an office has been opened at 116 East 125th Street, where persons may send articles of clothing to be mended. The work will be neatly executed at low rates. Bachelors will find this a convenience, and they will at the same time enable a deserving charity to give employment to invalid ladies.

Mr. E. P. Telford's services at Fall River, Mass., are being much blessed. They are held in Rev. A. McCord's church, which is densely crowded at every meeting. Mrs. Telford's meetings for women only, attract large numbers, and great good is being done. The Fall River Evening News describes the interest manifested as being unprecedented in that town.

Mrs. Warnes Huntley's meetings at Pittsburgh, Pa., have been blessed to many. Among others, a saloon keeper has given up his business, signed the pledge and united with the church. Mrs. Huntley, in addition to her evangelistic work, has rendered valuable aid to the W. C. T. U. during her stay in the city. Her address is Lawn Street, Soho, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Messrs. H. W. Brown and E. C. Avis are holding meetings at Columbia, Boone Co., Mo. The Columbia Herald reports a very extensive awakening as the result. The services are held in University Chapel, and Christian workers of all denominations are taking part. The meetings are growing in interest, and the numbers attending fill the building to overflowing.

Mrs. M. F. Shipman and Rev. A. G. Jones are continuing their services at Lawrence, Mass. They still occupy the building formerly used as a liquor saloon, the proprietor of which, as previously mentioned in these columns, was converted at one of Mrs. Shipman's meetings. Mr. Jones will be disengaged after December 18, and will be glad to receive invitations to labor. His address is 30 Chelmsford Street, Lawrence, Mass.

The Bowery Branch of the Y. M. C. A. in New York has issued an appeal for funds. Many destitute young men who have drifted to the city in search of employment from all parts of the country have had to be relieved. Meals, and in many cases clothing, have been given to them, and the relief-fund is exhausted. During the past year the class of applicants have had no less than 26,227 meals, and in 6,532 cases a night's lodging has been furnished. The committee will be glad of assistance to continue the work through the winter. Cheques may be sent to Mr. C. N. Talbot, 111 Broadway, New York.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, women or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

HE COMETH WITH CLOUDS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Behold He cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him. Even so, Amen" (Rev. 1:7).

John's Benediction and Adoration—His Expectation of Christ's Coming—I. The Lord is Surely Coming—An Event to be Realized—And Proclaimed—Already on the Way—Much had to be Done in the Interval—The Clouds the Hangings of the Heavenly Throne Room—II. His Coming to be Universally Seen—In His Material Body—A Blind Man's Expectation—Specially Seen by Those who Pierced Him—How He is Pierced Now—III. His Coming Will Cause Sorrow—A Proof that the World will not be Converted First.

IN reading the chapter, we observed how the beloved John saluted the seven churches in Asia with, "Grace and peace be unto you." Blessed men scatter blessings. When the benediction of God rests on us, we pour out benedictions upon others. From benediction John's gracious heart rose into adoration of the great King of Saints. As our hymn puts it, "The holy to the holiest leads." They that are good at blessing men will be quick at blessing God. It would seem from the chapter that the adoration of John was increased by his expectation of the Lord's second coming; for he cries, "Behold, He cometh with clouds." His adoration awoke his expectation, which all the while was lying in his soul as an element of that vehement heat of reverent love which he poured forth in his doxology. "Behold, He cometh," said he, and thus he revealed one source of his reverence. "Behold, He cometh," said he, and this exclamation was the result of his reverence. He adored until his faith realized his Lord, and became a second and nobler sight.

I think, too, that his reverence was deepened and his adoration was rendered more fervent by his conviction of

The Speediness of His Lord's Coming.

"Behold, He cometh," or is coming: he means to assert that He is even now on His way. As workmen are moved to be more diligent in service. when they hear their master's footfall, so, doubtless, saints are quickened in their devotion when they are conscious that He whom they worship is drawing near. He has gone away to the Father for a while, and so He has left us alone in this world; but He has said, "I will come again and receive you unto Myself," and we are confident that He will keep His word. Sweet is the remembrance of that promise.

I. May the Holy Spirit help us while we remember that our Lord Jesus Christ comes!

The Announcement

is thought worthy of a note of admiration. As the Latins would say, there is an "Ecce" placed here—"Behold, He cometh." As in the old books the printers put hands in the margin pointing to special passages, such is this "behold!" It is a Nota Bene calling upon us to note well what we are reading. Here is something which we are to hold and behold. We now hear a voice crying, "Come and see!" That same Jesus who went up from Olivet into heaven is coming again to earth in like manner as His disciples saw Him go up into heaven. Come and behold this great sight. If ever there was a thing in the world worth looking at, it is this. Hearken to the midnight cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh!" It has practically to do with you. "Go ye forth to meet Him." This voice is to you, O sons of men. If we read the words of our text carefully, this "Behold" shows us, first, that this coming is to be vividly realized. Have you and I ever realized the coming of Christ? Perhaps we believe that He will come. I should hope that we all do that. If we believe that the Lord Jesus has come the first time, we believe also that He will come the second time; but are these equally assured truths to us? Do we now say to each other, as we meet in happy fellowship. "Yes, our Lord cometh?" It should be to us not only a prophecy assuredly believed among us, but a scene pictured in our souls, and anticipated in our hearts. My imagination has often set forth that dread scene: but better still, my faith has realized it. I have heard the chariot-wheels of the Lord's approach, and I have endeavored to set my house in order for His reception. I have felt the shadow of that great cloud which shall attend Him, damping the ardor of my worldliness. I hear even now in spirit the sound of the last trumpet, whose tremendous blast startles my soul to serious action, and puts force into my life. Would God that I lived more completely under the influence of that august event!

This coming is to be zealously proclaimed, for John does not merely say, "He cometh," but he vigorously cries, "Behold, He cometh." Just as prefaces his message by a trumpet blast that calls attention, so John cries, "Behold!" As the old town-crier was wont to say, "O yes! O yes! O yes!" or to use some other striking formula by which he called upon men to note his announcement, so John stands in the midst of us, and cries, "Behold, He cometh!" He calls attention by that emphatic word "Behold!" It is no ordinary message that he brings, and he would not have us treat his word as a commonplace saying. He throws his heart into the announcement. He proclaims it loudly, he proclaims it solemnly, and he proclaims it with authority: "Behold, He cometh."

The Herald of a King

And next, it is to be unquestionably asserted. "Behold: He cometh." It is not, "Perhaps He will come"; nor, "Peradventure He may yet appear." "Behold, He cometh" should be dogmatically asserted as an absolute certainty, which has been realized by the heart of the man who proclaims it. "Behold He cometh." All the prophets say that He will come. From Enoch down to the last that spoke by inspiration, they declare, "The Lord cometh with ten thousands of His saints." You shall not find one who has spoken by the authority of God, who does not, either directly or by implication, assert the coming of the Son of man, when the multitudes born of woman shall be summoned to His bar, to receive the recompense of their deeds. All the promises are travailing with this prognostication, "Behold He cometh." We have His own word for it, and this makes assurance doubly sure. He has told us that He will come again. He often assured His disciples that if He went away from them, He would come again to them; and He left us the Lord's Supper as a parting token to be observed until He comes. As often as we break bread we are reminded of the fact that, though it is a most blessed ordinance, yet it is a temporary one, and will cease to be celebrated when our absent Lord is once again present with us.

There is this sense in the background—that

He is Already On The Way.

All that He is doing in providence and grace is a preparation for His coming. All the events of human history, all the great decisions of His august majesty whereby He ruleth all things—all these are tending towards the day of His appearing. Do not think that He delays His coming, and then upon a sudden He will rush hither in a hot haste. He has arranged for it to take place as soon as wisdom allows. We know not what may make the present delay imperative; but the Lord knows, and that suffices. You grow uneasy, because near two thousand years have passed since His ascension, and Jesus has not yet come; but you do not know what had to be arranged for, and how far the lapse of time was absolutely necessary for the Lord's designs. Those are no little matters which have filled up the great pause: the intervening centuries have teemed with wonders. A thousand things may have been necessary in heaven itself ere the consummation of all things could be arrived at. When our Lord comes it shall be seen that He came as quickly as He could, speaking after the manner of His infinite wisdom; for He cannot behave Himself otherwise than wisely, perfectly, divinely. He cannot be moved by fear or passion so as to act hastily, as you and I often do. He dwells in and in the serenity of omnipotence. He has not to measure out days, and months, and years, and to accomplish so much in such a space or else leave His life-work undone; but according to the power of an endless life He proceeds steadily on, and to Him a thousand years are but as one day. Therefore be assured that the Lord is even now coming. He is making everything tend that way. All things are working towards that grand climax. At this moment, and every moment since He went away, the Lord Jesus has been coming back again, "Behold, He cometh!" He is on the way!

The Leisure of Eternity,

And we are told that His coming will be attended by a peculiar sign. "Behold He cometh with clouds." We shall have no need to question whether it is the Son of man who has come, or whether He is indeed come. I cannot quote at this time all those many passages of Scripture in which it is indicated that our Lord will come either sitting upon a cloud, or "with the clouds," or "with the clouds of heaven"; but such expressions are abundant. The clouds are the dust of His feet in that dread day of battle when He shall ease Him of shaking them out of the earth with His thunder, and consuming them with the devouring flame of His lightning. Not as the Man of sorrows, despised and rejected of men, shall Jesus come; but as Jehovah came upon Sinai in the midst of thick clouds and a terrible darkness, so shall He come.

His Adversaries,

The clouds, also, denote the terror of His coming to the ungodly. His saints shall be caught up together with Him in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; but to those that shall remain on earth the clouds shall turn their blackness and horror of darkness. Then shall the impenitent behold this dread vision—the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven. The clouds shall fill them with dread, and the dread shall be abundantly justified, for those clouds are big with vengeance, and shall burst in judgment on their heads. His great white throne, though it be bright and lustrous with hope to His people, will, with its very brightness and whiteness of immaculate justice, strike dead the hopes of all those who trusted that they might live in sin, and yet go unpunished. "Behold, he cometh. He cometh with clouds."

II. Our second head is: Our Lord's coming

Will Be Seen of All.

"Behold, He cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him." I gather from this expression, first, that it will be a literal appearing, and an actual sight. If the second advent was to be a spiritual manifestation, to be perceived by the minds of men, the phraseology would be "Every mind shall perceive Him." But it is not so; we read, "Every eye shall see Him." Now, the mind can behold the spiritual. but the eye can only see that which is distinctly material and visible. The Lord Jesus Christ will not come spiritually, for in that sense He is always here; but He will come really and substantially, for every eye shall see Him, even those unspiritual eyes which gazed on Him with hate, and pierced Him. Go not away and dream, and say to yourself, "Oh, there is some spiritual meaning about all this." The Lord Jesus shall come to earth a second time as literally as He has come a first time. The same Christ who ate a piece of broiled fish, and of a honeycomb, after He had risen from the dead; the same who said, "Handle me, and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see Me have"—this same Jesus,

With a Material Body, is to come in the clouds of heaven. In the same manner as He went up He shall come down. He shall be literally seen. The words cannot be honestly read in any other way. Note well that He is to be seen of all kinds of living men: every eye shall see Him: the king and the peasant, the most learned and the most ignorant. Those that were blind before shall see when He appears. I remember a man, born blind, who loved our Lord most intensely, and he was wont to glory in this, that for his Lord. Said he, "The first whom I shall ever see will be the Lord Jesus Christ. The first sight that greets my newly-opened eyes will be the Son of man in his glory." There is great comfort in this to all who are now unable to behold the sun. Since "every eye shall see Him," you also shall see the King in His beauty.

His Eyes Had Been Reserved

He will be seen of those who have been long since dead. What a sight that will be for Judas, and for Pilate, and for Caiaphas, and for Herod! What a sight it will be for those who, in their lifetime, said that there was no Saviour, and no need of one; or that Jesus was a mere man, and that His blood was not a propitiation for sin! Those that scoffed and reviled Him have long since died, but they shall all rise again, and rise to this heritage among the rest—that they shall see Him whom they blasphemed sitting in the clouds of heaven.

It is mentioned here that He will especially be seen by those that pierced Him. In this is included all the company that nailed Him to the tree, with those that took the spear and made the gash in His side; indeed, all that had a hand in His cruel crucifixion. It includes all of these, but it comprehends many more. "They also who pierced Him" are by no means a few.

Who Have Pierced Him?

Why, those that once professed to love Him, and have gone back to the world. Those that once ran well, "What did hinder them?" And now they use their tongues to speak against the Christ whom once they professed to love. They also have pierced Him whose inconsistent lives have brought dishonor upon the sacred name of Jesus. They also have pierced Him who refused His love, stifled their consciences, and refused His rebukes. Alas, that so many of you should be piercing Him now by your base neglect of His salvation! If you will look at Jesus now, and mourn for your sin, He will put your sin away; and then you will not be ashamed to see Him in that day. Even though you did pierce Him, you will be able to sing, "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood." But, remember, if you persevere in piercing Him, and fighting against Him, you will still have to see Him in that day, to your terror and despair.

Will you kindly think of all this as I close this second head? Silently repeat to yourself the words, "Every eye shall see Him, and they also that pierced Him."

III. And now I must close with the third head, which is a painful one: His coming

Will Cause Great Sorrow.

What does the text say about His coming? "All kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him." "All kindreds of the earth." Then this sorrow will be very general. You thought, perhaps, that when Christ came, He would come to a glad world, welcoming Him with song and music. You thought that there might be a few ungodly persons who would be destroyed with the breath of His mouth, but that the bulk of mankind would receive Him with delight. See how different—"All kindreds of the earth" that is, all sorts of men that belong to the earth; all earth-born men, men out of all nations and kindreds and tongues shall weep, and wail, and gnash their teeth at His coming. O sirs, this is a sad outlook! We have no smooth things to prophesy. What think you of this?

And, next, this sorrow will be very great. They shall "wail." I cannot put into English the full meaning of that most expressive word. Sound it at length, and it conveys its own meaning. It is as when men wring their hands and burst out into a loud cry; or as when Eastern women, in their anguish, rend their garments, and lift up their voices with the most mournful notes. All the kindreds of the earth shall wail: wail as a mother laments over her dead child; wail as a man might wail who found himself hopelessly imprisoned and doomed to die. Such will be the hopeless grief of all the kindreds of the earth at the sight of Christ in the clouds: if they remain impenitent, they shall not be able to be silent; they shall not be able to repress or conceal their anguish, but they shall wail or openly give vent to their horror. What a sound that will be which will go up before high heaven when Jesus sits upon the cloud, and in the fullness of His power, summons them to judgment! Then "they shall wail because of Him."

Will your voice be heard in that wailing? Will your heart be breaking in that general dismay? How will you escape? If you are one of the kindreds of the earth, and remain impenitent, you will wail with the rest of them. Unless you now fly to Christ and hide yourself in Him, and so become one of the kindred of heaven who shall praise His name for washing them from their sins—unless you do this there will be wailing at the judgment-seat of Christ, and you will be in it.

Then it is quite clear that men will not be universally converted when Christ comes; because if they were so they would not wail. Then they would lift up the cry, "Welcome, welcome, Son of God!" These acclamations come from His people. But according to the text and wail, and therefore they will not be among His people. Do not, therefore, look for salvation to some coming day, but believe in Jesus now, and find in Him your Saviour at once. If you joy in Him now, you shall much more rejoice in Him in that day; but if you will have cause to wail at His coming, it will be well to wail at once. It is quite certain that when Jesus comes in those latter days men will not be expecting great things of Him. You know the talk they have nowadays about "a larger hope." To-day they deceive the people with the idle dream of repentance and restoration after death, a fiction unsupported by the least tittle of Scripture. If these kindreds of the earth expected that when Christ would come they would all die out and cease to be, they would rejoice that thereby they escaped the wrath of God. Would not each unbeliever say, "It were a consummation devoutly to be wished?" If they thought that at His coming there would be a universal restoration and a general jail delivery of souls long shut up in prison, would they wail? If Jesus could be supposed to come to proclaim a general restoration they would not wail, but shout for joy. Ah, no! It is because His coming to the impenitent is black with blank despair that they will wail because of Him.

The Multitude Will Weep

Why do They Wail

because of Him? Will it not be because they will see Him in His glory, and they will recollect that they slighted and despised Him? They will see Him come to judge them, and they will remember that once He stood at their door with mercy in His hands and said, "Open to me," but they would not admit Him. They refused His blood: they refused His righteousness: they trifled with His sacred name; and now they must give an account for this wickedness. They put Him away in scorn, and now, when He comes, they find that they can trifle with Him no longer. The days of child's play and of foolish delay are over; and now they have solemnly to give in their life's account.

See, the Books are opened! They are covered with dismay as they remember their sins, and know that they are written down by a faithful pen. They must give an account; and unwashed and unforgiven they cannot render that account without knowing that the sentence will be, "Depart, ye cursed." This is why they weep and wail because of Him.

O souls, my natural love of ease makes me wish that I could preach pleasant things to you; but they are not in my commission. I need scarce wish, however, to preach a soft gospel, for so many are already doing it to your cost. As I love your immortal souls, I dare not flatter you. As I shall have to answer for it in the last great day, I must tell you the truth. I have come here in pain to implore you to be reconciled to God. "Kiss the Son lest He be angry, and ye perish from the way, when His wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him." But if you will not have my Lord Jesus, He comes all the same for that. He is on the road now, and when He comes you will wail because of Him. Oh that you would make Him your friend, and then meet Him with joy! Why will ye die? He gives life to all those who trust Him. Believe, and live. God save your souls, and He shall have the glory. Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

IN FLORENCE WITH ROMOLA.*

THERE are in the world few grander buildings than that citadel of Florentine liberty, the Palazzo Vecchio; it is an embodiment of militant beauty in stone. In earlier times the scene of so much that was noble and base, it became in the fifteenth century the place of Savonarola's triumph and agony. For there, in the vast hall of that great council he so labored to secure, he set a whole people to work at a fever-heat of enthusiasm, with Michael Angelo and Leonardo da Vinci among the workers, that an asylum might be created, a refuge and an appeal to the many against the injustice of the few. The Medici changed the place; the arch-patrons of art destroyed the designs of Angelo and Leonardo, setting up the clumsy statues of Leo and the dukes, and the ceilings of Vasari, celebrating Cosimo; they wanted no unpleasant souvenir of the great council. But the centuries have seen "the Medicean stamp outworn," and have placed the statue of the mighty monk in the middle of his hall. . . .

Savonarola died mute and unjustified; his friends and disciples robbed, murdered and driven into exile; his life's work undone; and the kingdom, he had labored to found, shaken to its foundations. But only a few years after, under a Medicean pope, he is solemnly rehabilitated by the Church—the historians estimate him at his true value, devotees make pilgrimages to his cell, Fra Bartolommeo paints him as the patron of his Order, and Raphael places him in a frescoed Paradise among a glorious company of prophets and sages. To-day, in an Italy that does not love monks, Ferrara raises his statue before the castle of the Estensi; and in Florence, in the vastness of the great council-hall, is his colossal image. Many changes have come to his beloved city; but she is faithful to his memory, and those who do not reverence the priest, honor the patriot who withstood tyrants and loved liberty. Ghirlandajo will show us in art many of the characters in the book—he who, if he did not paint the walls of Florence as he wished, portrayed the world that moved within those walls. In the choir of Santa Maria Novella, the artist painted the stories of the Virgin and St. John the Baptist; but he has taken his pictures from contemporary life; he has painted his friends and neighbors, not idealized into cold abstractions, but real men and women, with keen, subtle faces, acute and critical, but not unkindly, sharpened by shop-keeping and the tramontana, but ennobled by wide culture, and capable of kindling into enthusiasm. Many of them are ugly in line and modelling, with an occasional quite abnormal development of cheeks and

* From Scribner's Magazine for December which contains besides this article contributions from Bret Harte, Edwin P. Whipple, Robert Louis Stevenson, Louise I. Guiney, H. C. Bunner, Elizabeth Gunner, Austin Dobson, Elizabeth Akers, Sarah Orne Jewett, and many other eminent writers. Also numerous superb Illustrations; 126 pages; Price 25c. Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

A Startling Communication.

The Palm-Trees of Peru.

chin, bony and flaccid at once. But intellect can do much to beautify the most ill-favored. Each of these figures is a definite personality, clearly and distinctly marked, invaluable to the student of history, with no softening of lines or angles—a portrait straight from life. Here we are face to face with the old Florentines.

PERUVIAN MOUNTAINS AND FORESTS.

(See Illustrations).

The lover of the grand and imposing in nature, finds in Peru abundant gratification for his taste. "In no part of the world," says a recent traveller, "does nature appear in more varied forms than here. Deserts as bare and repulsive as those of the Sahara alternate with valleys as luxuriant as those of Italy. Lofty mountains, crowned with eternal snow, lift high their rugged sides over broad bleak punas, or table-lands, themselves more elevated than the summits of the Alleghanies. Rivers taking their rise among melting snow, precipitate themselves through deep and rocky gorges into the Pacific, or meander with gentler current among the majestic Andes to swell the current of the Amazons. There are lakes ranking in size with those that feed the St. Lawrence, whose surfaces lie almost level with the summit of Mont Blanc." The greater part of the coast-line presents a bare and forbidding aspect. It is bare and lifeless, except for the narrow green strips along the streams. In the distance rises the gigantic range of the Cordilleras, with steep, precipitous, rocky walls varied here and there by deep, jagged gorges. Beyond these are extensive barren steppes, three broad, well inhabited and fertile valleys, and then again over the Andes the fine slopes leading to the Amazon and its tributaries, where the real tropical vegetation is seen in all its luxuriance.

The Montaña is the most tropically beautiful portion of Peru. There gigantic palms (See Illustration) rear their heads to an almost incredible height, and the forests supply an almost endless variety of woods, gums and resins. Flowers of rare beauty grow there in wild luxuriance, while lovely birds flutter through the foliage. A large Indian population lives in the woods, gathering india-rubber, gum copal, indigo, vanilla, cinnamon, sarsaparilla and other products. The most famous product, however, is the "Jesuit's bark," from which quinine is produced. It is derived from various growths of cinchona, and has been used by physicians ever since the end of the seventeenth century. The Peruvian Government showed stupid carelessness about the cultivation and preservation of this source of wealth, and as the Indians were allowed to cut down the trees, there was a strong probability of the supply of quinine being utterly exhausted in process of time. This calamity, however, was averted by the exertions of the English Government. They determined to attempt the cultivation of the plant in India, and sent Mr. Clements Markham and a party of naturalists to Peru, to obtain seeds and roots and young plants. The difficult and dangerous mission was successfully accomplished, and now a plantation. already producing a considerable quantity of quinine, is flourishing.

The population of Peru is estimated at three millions. A census was taken in 1876, which gave the figures at 2,670,075, but the lower class of people were afraid that some new system of taxation was contemplated, and absented themselves from their homes. The Indians largely outnumber any of the other races; though there are negroes and Chinese in large numbers, the latter imported directly from China, to work on the sugar plantations and the guano lands. They are practically living in slavery, as the planters, to whom they are consigned for eight years, can transfer them to other planters.

There is urgent need for missionary labor among the people of Peru, for though there is a large foreign population, chiefly English, French and Germans, comparatively little effort has been made by them to extend the knowledge of Christianity among the natives. It is Bishop Riley's hope, in laboring for the evangelization of Mexico, to make it a centre of Christian work for the whole of South America, and he has already sent large quantities of evangelical tracts and books in the Spanish language to trustworthy agents in the various countries, which have been widely distributed. He asks the prayers of God's people that these silent messengers of truth may be blessed to the readers of them, and so the way may be prepared for missionaries of the Cross who, when the Church is aroused to its duty, will be sent out to make a systematic and organized effort to win South America for Christ.

A STARTLING COMMUNICATION.

(See Illustration.)

In a dimly lighted room an aged Christian woman lay dying. By her side stood a handsome girl of sixteen years. The old woman looked lovingly at her, and the girl's eyes were suffused with tears as she read the meaning of that lingering gaze.

"Miss Marie," said the sufferer, "I am dying. Fifteen years ago, when your dear mother was in her last illness and I was your nurse, she put you in my arms and made me promise, as I loved Christ, to train you up for Him. All these years I have tried to do so, and now I am going to heaven, and I shall see your mother. I want to tell her that you have given your heart to God. May I?"

"Dear nurse," said the girl, her voice broken by tears, "tell her I will try."

"If you seek Him, He will be found of you; that's sure," said the dying woman and closing her eyes exhausted by the effort she had made, she seemed to sleep. But she never woke again in this world; her departure was so calm and peaceful that the watchers did not know when she passed the portal.

The girl fell on her knees and wept bitterly. Her life now, as she believed, would have a vacant place in it that never would be filled. Her father, a busy merchant, was cold and undemonstrative, and she was sadly conscious that she had never enjoyed his confidence nor the love that a son would have had from him. He had always been generous, almost lavish, in supplying her with money, but he had ignored her in his home. As her tears flowed less copiously she, remembering her nurse's last words, prayed earnestly for God's blessing. She rose with a solemn resolve to seek God with all her heart and to live her future life in this strength.

Weeks passed, during which Marie earnestly sought light, and, as all who seek it prayerfully do, she found it, and began a new and better life. The difference in her was observed by all with whom she came in contact. Even her father perceived, worldly man as he was, that there was a change, and he began to observe her more closely. He talked with her more than he had ever done before, and seemed interested in finding out her views of the events of the day. Her religious principles surprised him more than all. He had never given any attention to religion himself and Marie's firm, open confession of her faith and its influence over her was a revelation to him. He sought her society more and more frequently, and seemed to find increasing pleasure in it. How welcome this change was to Marie may be imagined, and she on her part strove with all her might to prove herself worthy of the place in his heart, to which he seemed at last inclined to give her after so many years.

A Mountain Scene in Peru.

Their talks usually took place in the evening, immediately after the evening meal, but one night Marie supped alone, her father being detained by business in the city. She supposed that he would not return until late, as his habit was when he did not return at his usual hour. She was therefore much surprised when going into the library before retiring to rest, she found him sitting there. One look at him showed that something momentous had occurred. His face was pale and haggard. He looked an older man by twenty years than when Marie had bade him good-by in the morning. Going to his side, and kissing him affectionately, Marie asked him if he felt sick.

"No, Marie," he said. "I am in trouble; it is worse than sickness."

"May I know what it is, papa?" she inquired.

"You will have to know some time, he said, and there is nothing to be gained by delaying it I suppose. The fact is, my child, I am ruined. A few years ago I was a millionaire, but I have been wickedly, basely deceived, and that by a man who owed his all to me. I trusted him implicitly, and he has ruined me. I do not think I can even escape bankruptcy." The man covered his face with his hands, and groaned heavily. "I would rather have died," he said. "Even now I would rather commit suicide than have my name disgraced."

"Dear papa," said Marie, drawing close to him, and pleading earnestly with voice and eyes, "do not speak so. It is hard for you to bear, but do not let it tempt you to so awful a crime. Let us face poverty together. I am not afraid of it, and I will try to be a comfort to you."

For more than an hour Marie sat by his side pleading with him, speaking words of affection and encouragement.

"I do not know how it is, Marie," he said at last, "but you give me courage. I feel now that I have never appreciated you at your true worth. Is it your religion that gives you this power?"

"I believe that if I have been able to do you any good it is as God has helped me," said Marie, "and I thank Him for it."

"Well, my child, you must teach it to me. I shall have need of any consolation it can give."

Matters did not turn out so badly as the merchant feared, but he was no longer a wealthy man. He, however, confessed in after years that he was really richer than ever he had been; for, by the blessing of God on Marie's efforts he had become a child of God, and had a treasure in heaven, which neither moth nor rust could corrupt, nor thieves break through to steal.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY DOWN,

Where Two Thousand Orphans are fed, clothed and educated at an annual cost of $250,000.

By George Muller,

who, without funds of his own, and without making any appeal to the public for help, has received Five Million Dollars in answer to Prayer.

(Continued from page 767.)

Sickness—The Narrative Commenced—A New Day School—Excellent Premises for the Infant Orphans—Opening Exercises—Interesting Gifts—Employment for the Orphans—The Completion of the Thousand Pounds—Assurance in Prayer—The Record of Fifty Years.

JUNE 3. From May 16 up to this day I have been confined to the house, and a part of the time to my bed, on account of a local inflammation, which keeps me from walking. Almost every day during this time I have been able to continue writing a narrative of the Lord's dealings with me, which had been again laid aside after May 7, on account of a number of pressing engagements. It is very remarkable, that the greatest objection against writing it for the press was want of time. Now, through this affliction, which leaves my mind free, and gives me time, on account of confinement to the house, I have been able to write about 100 quarto pages. May the Lord in mercy teach me about this matter!

June 8. I am still getting better. The abscess is now open. This affliction has been, by the mercy of the Lord, an exceedingly light one. Not one day have I had severe pain, and not one day have I been kept altogether from working. June 9. I was able to go again to-day to the Orphan House and to read the Scriptures with the children. This day came three more children, who have made up our number, so that there are now thirty in the house.

June 11. I am, by the mercy of God, still getting better, but, as yet, unable to walk about. All this week I have been again enabled to go on writing for the press. June 12. To-day the Lord allowed me to preach again, and much sooner than I could have expected.

October 1. To-day, in dependence upon the Lord alone for means, we engaged a brother as a master for a sixth day school. Last Saturday, for the first time, we were so low in funds that we needed £1 more than we had, to pay the salaries a week in advance; but one sister, on account of the death of her father, as we afterwards learned, was kept from calling for her money, and on the next day we received more than was needed to pay her. On account therefore, of the many deliverances which we have had of late, we have not hesitated to enlarge the field, as another boys' school was greatly needed, there having been many applications for admission standing these several months past.

October 19. To-day, after having many times prayed respecting this matter, I have at last engaged a sister as matron for the Infant Orphan House, never having been able, up to this day, to meet with an individual who seemed suitable; though there has been money enough in hand for some time past for commencing this work, and there have been also applications made for several infant orphans.

October 25. To-day we obtained, without any trouble, through the kind hand of God, very suitable premises for the Infant Orphan House. If we had laid out many hundred pounds in building a house, we could scarcely have built one more suitable for the purpose. How evident is the hand of God in all these matters! How important to leave our concerns, great and small, with Him, for He arranges all things well, if our work be His work!

December 15. This day was set apart for prayer and thanksgiving respecting the Infant Orphan House, which was opened on November 28. In the morning we had a prayer-meeting. In the afternoon, besides prayer and thanksgiving, I addressed the children of our day-schools and the orphans, about 350, on Ecclesiastes 12: 1. In the evening I gave a further account of the Orphan Houses, commencing from the time when the last printed account had been issued, dated May 18, 1836.

Of the £1,000 which I had asked of God on December 5, 1835, I had actually received on May 18, 1836, £450 13s.; and besides this, £70 had been promised by two brethren. As it regards premises, articles of clothing, furniture, etc., I had received even beyond my petition.

From May to November, a miscellaneous assortment of goods was sent in. There was also given by a brother £100—£50 of which was previously promised. It is a remarkable fact concerning this donation, that I had, in December of last year, repeatedly asked the Lord to incline the heart of this brother to give one hundred pounds, and I made a memorandum of this prayer in my journal of December 12, 1835. On January 25, 1836, fifty pounds was promised by him, and on November 5, fifty pounds besides that sum was given; but it was not till some days after that I remembered that the very sum for which I had asked the Lord had been given. Thus we often may receive an answer to prayer, and scarcely remember that it is an answer. When it came to my mind that this prayer had been noted down in my journal, and I showed it to the donor, we rejoiced together; he to have been the instrument, and I to have had the request granted.

It has been more than once observed to me, that I could not expect to continue to receive large sums; for that persons, when first such an institution is established, might be stirred up to give liberally, but that afterwards one had to look to a number of regular subscribers, and that, if those were lacking, it was not likely that such a work could go on. On such occasions I have said but little, but I have had the fullest assurance that it is a small matter for the Lord to incline donors to give liberally, a second or third time, if it were for our real welfare. And accordingly the donor above referred to, added to the first £50 another £50, and another benefactor, to the £50 given on a former occasion, added £40, with the promise to give another £40 at Christmas.

I would only add, on this subject, that there are some subscribers, and even some who give considerably; yet I would state, for the Lord's glory, that if they were twenty times as many I should desire that my eyes might be directed, not to them, but to the Lord alone, and that I might be enabled to take the payment of every subscription as a donation from Him. On the other hand, if there were no subscribers at all, yet the Lord, who heareth prayer, is rich to give according to our need. There was given also to-day "A widow's mite," 10s.; also 4d. Continuing the list until December 9, Mr. Muller observes:—

After frequent prayer that, if it were the will of God, He would be pleased to send us a Matron and a Governess for the Infant Orphan House, this petition has also been answered. In addition to this we obtained a convenient house for the purpose, No. 1 Wilson Street, together with a piece of ground for a play-ground; and we therefore began to furnish it on November 21, and on November 28 we took in the first children.

Of late it has appeared well to us to employ some of the strongest and eldest girls of the Orphan House in the work of the Infant Orphan House, under the direction of the Matron and Governess. From this plan it appeared the following advantages would result. 1st. Thus the wages which we should have to pay to assistants would be saved. 2d. Without any further expense to the Institution, we should in this way be able to support five or six orphans more. 3d. If thus the bigger girls of the Orphan House pass through the Infant Orphan House before they are sent into service, they will be accustomed to nursery work, which is so important for young servants. 4th. This plan would allow us to have the bigger girls longer under our care, as we should have full employment for them.

December 31, 1836. We had this evening a prayer-meeting to praise the Lord for His goodness during the past year, and to ask Him for a continuance of His favors during the coming year. We continued together till half-past eleven. There have now been admitted into Gideon Church seventy-nine brethren and sisters, who have been converted through our instrumentality, and eighty-six into the Church of Bethesda: 165 seals to our ministry in Bristol. Besides this, several have fallen asleep in the faith who never were in communion with us; several of our spiritual children are connected with other churches, in and out of Bristol; and many are now standing as hopeful characters on the list of candidates for fellowship.

The Lord has been pleased to give me during the past year, as it regards my temporal supplies:—1. In offerings through the boxes, £133 8s. 9d.; 2. In presents of money, from brethren in and out of Bristol, £56 13s.; 3. Through family connection, £5; 4s. Besides this have been sent to us clothes, provisions, etc., which were worth to us at least £30; 5s. We have been living half free of rent during the last nine months, whereby we have saved at least £7 10s.; total £232 11s. 9d.

January 5, 1837. To-day a sister told me about the conversion of her father, who, after having for many years lived openly in sin, is at last brought to the knowledge of the Lord. May this encourage the children of God to continue to pray for their aged parents and other persons; for this sister had long prayed for the conversion of her father, and at last, though only after twenty years, the Lord gave her the desire of her heart. It was an especial refreshment to my spirit to hear the particulars of this case, as I had known so much of the sinful life of this aged sinner.

April 8. There are now 60 children in the two Orphan Houses, 30 in each.

April 24. This evening we had a comfortable meeting with thirty brethren and sisters over the Word. Of late, brother Craik and I have frequently set apart an evening, generally once a week, to meet with ten, twenty, or thirty brethren and sisters, to take tea with them, and to spend the rest of the evening in prayer and meditation over the Scriptures. We began these meetings chiefly on account of having thus an opportunity of seeing more of the saints, as the greatness of the number of those in communion with us makes it impossible to see them as often in their houses as it might be profitable, or as often as we desire. We commenced these meetings in our own houses, choosing those in particular of whom we had seen little. After we had had several meetings in our own houses, we were invited by the brethren and sisters, and they have asked others to meet us. Sometimes, also, we have proposed those for invitation whom we see but seldom. These meetings we have found, both for ourselves and others, very useful, and they will, no doubt continue to be a blessing, as long as the Lord shall enable us to precede and follow them with prayer. They are also particularly important as a means of the brethren becoming acquainted with each other, and of uniting their hearts.

May 28. The narrative of some of the Lord's dealings with me is now near being published, which has led me again most earnestly, and repeatedly since, to ask the Lord that He would be pleased to give me what is wanting of the £1,000, for which sum I have asked Him on behalf of the orphans; for though, in my own mind, the thing is as good as done, so much so that I have repeatedly been able to thank God that He will give me every shilling of that sum, yet to others this would not be enough.

As the whole matter, then, about the Orphan House had been commenced for the glory of God, that in this way before the world and the Church there might be another visible proof that the Lord delights in answering prayer, and as there was yet a part of the £1,000 wanting, and as I earnestly desired the book might not leave the press before every shilling of that sum had been given, in answer to prayer, without one single individual having been asked by me for anything, that thus I might have the sweet privilege of bearing my testimony for God in this book—for these reasons, I say, I have given myself earnestly to prayer about this matter since May 21.

On May 22, came in £7 10s., and on May 23, £3. On May 24, a lady, whom I never saw before, called on me and gave me £40. This circumstance has greatly encouraged me, for the Lord showed me thereby afresh His willingness to continue to send us large sums, and that they can even come from individuals whom we have never seen before. On May 25 £3 6s. was sent, from two unexpected quarters. On May 27, was sent anonymously a parcel of worn clothes from London and a sovereign. To-day (May 28), I received again £4 3s. 6d., and also a parcel was sent from a considerable distance, containing seven pairs of socks, and the following trinkets to be sold for the support of the orphans: One pin with an Irish pearl, fifteen Irish pearls, two pins, two brooches, two lockets, one seal, two studs, eleven rings, one chain and one bracelet, all of gold.

June 15. To-day I gave myself once more earnestly to prayer respecting the remainder of the £1,000. This evening £5 was given, so that now the whole £1,000 is made up. To the glory of the Lord, whose I am, and whom I serve, I would state again, that every shilling of this money, and all the articles of clothing and furniture which have been mentioned in the forgoing pages, have been given to me without one single individual having been asked by me for anything. The reason why I have refrained altogether from soliciting any one for help is, that the hand of God evidently might be seen in the matter, that thus my fellow-believers might be encouraged more and more to trust in Him, and that also those who do not know the Lord, may have a fresh proof that it is not a vain thing to pray to God.

As the Lord, then, has condescended most fully, and even above my expectations, to answer my prayers and to fill my mouth (Psalm 81: 10), will you help me, brethren and sisters beloved in the Lord, to praise Him for His condescension. It is a wonderful thing that such a worthless, faithless servant as I am should have power with God. Take courage from this for yourselves, brethren, Surely, if such an one as I am, so little conformed to the mind of Jesus, has his prayers answered, may not you also, at last, have your requests granted to you. During eighteen months and ten days this petition for £1,000 has been brought before God almost daily. From the moment I asked it, till the Lord granted it fully, I have never been allowed to doubt that He would give every shilling of that sum. Often have I praised Him beforehand in the assurance that He would grant my request. The thing after which we have especially to seek in prayer is, that we believe that we receive, according to Mark 11: 24, "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them and ye shall have them." But this I often find lacking in my prayers. Whenever, however, I have been enabled to believe that I receive, the Lord has dealt with me according to my faith.

[Fifty years have passed since the above words were written, but in this year of grace, 1887, Mr. Muller has the same testimony to give. He has continued faithful to his work, and has not departed from his resolve never to ask any man for money or help. Every year he has published a record of the sums received and his expenditures, and thus the whole world has heard of the work, and doubtless that has led to numerous gifts; but he has made no appeal. His object has been to convince the world that God does hear and answer prayer, and that those who trust in Him will surely be kept and fed. The account is made up to May of this year and shows that since the Orphan work was commenced, he has received $5,601,839. He has sixty-seven schools in operation, in which 104,079 children have been educated. There are now five orphan houses which cost in building and furnishing $575,000 and the number of orphans who have been reared, fed, clothed and educated in them, including those now there, is seven thousand five hundred and five. Mr. Muller is now eighty-two years of age, yet he has made long missionary journeys during the past three years, going all over the world, encouraging the missionaries in heathen lands and preaching and teaching everywhere with energy and vigor. Nor have his mental powers deteriorated. When he was last in New York, he wrote in a short space of time and apparently without effort, an article of six columns for this journal, which displayed remarkable ability. The man himself and the work he has done and is doing, are an object lesson—a practical proof of God's love and faithfulness, such as no previous generation of modern days has seen].

THE FIVE PARABLES.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for December 18, Matthew 13 : 31–33; 44–52. Memory Text, Daniel 7 : 27.

Ver. 31, 32. The Contrast Between the End and the Beginning—The Mustard Seed a Common Type of the Insignificant—The Small Beginning of the Church—A Few Illiterate Disciples—The End Universal Dominion—Ver. 33. The Leaven From Without—Its Silent, Unobserved Progress—How the Kingdom has Spread—Ver. 44–46. A Couplet of Parables—The Treasure Found by Two Men—One who was not Seeking it and One who was—Converts From Among Sinners and Philosophers—Both Understand its Value and Secure it—Ver. 47–50. The Parable of the Drag-Net a Sequel to that of the Tares—To Prepare the Disciples for Disappointment—Ver. 50–52. An Inexhaustible Treasury in the Gospel.

"AND the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him" (Dan. 7 : 27). Such is the consummation towards which we are pressing! And such, no doubt, was the ideal of the first apostles when they asked, "Wilt Thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts 1 :6.) But the prophecy is not yet fulfilled, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. 11 : 15). Again and again our blessed Master reminded His disciples that His mission and theirs was to announce and establish "the kingdom of heaven," a spiritual kingdom which is not meat and drink; but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 14 : 17), which "cometh not with observation, but which is "within" us (Luke 18 : 20, 21). A state is not a Kingdom Without a King.

Wherever a king reigns, there is his kingdom. The kingdom of heaven exists wherever Christ reigns, whether in our hearts, or in the church, or in heaven. Wherever He reigns, He brings heaven with Him; His kingdom, whether great or small, is always the kingdom of heaven.

"The kingdom of heaven," in this chapter, means the Church of Christ on earth. We have seen it under the figure of the wheat and the tares, and a very similar description is given in the parable of the net which was cast into the sea and gathered of every kind, which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. So shall it be at the end of the age: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." In the parable of the wheat and the tares, the bad are taken away first; in the parable of the net, the good are first gathered; but the bad in both cases are cast into "a furnace of fire where there is wailing and gnashing of teeth." It is fashionable in these days to such expressions as this, as though men could improve upon the Word of God, and as though they were more really loving that the Saviour who has died 1or them! Let the Word of God stand; He is responsible for all He says, and God forbid that we should either take from or add to His Holy Word. In our day, we see Christianity including something of all sorts. In the Romish Church, Christianity includes idolatry, superstition, priestcraft, hatred of Protestants, vows to overthrow all Protestant governments, etc. Only a short time since a Roman Catholic gentleman who had lived near a child of God on terms of close friendship, said to him "I am looking forward to the day when I shall walk up to my neck in the blood of Protestants." And all this is in the name of Christ. The Greek church is full of idolatry and superstition, but all in the name of Christ! The Protestant Churches contain rationalism, which denies the inspiration of the Scriptures and the atonement of Christ; spiritualism, which maintains intercourse with evil spirits; worldliness and hypocrisy, as well as some of the little flock whose is the kingdom of heaven. And all this mixture is in the name of Christ! Truly, the net has gathered of every kind! It is only when Christ comes again that the complete and final separation shall be made.

Tone Down and Explain Away

O how often the question arises in the minds of God's children, "Why cannot we have a pure Church? Why does God permit evil to abound?" We might ask in the same breath, "Why did not God make people believe on Jesus when He was upon earth, so that evil might then have been abolished, and righteousness brought in?" We but we do see that in giving every man a free will to choose the good, and reject the evil, God has put man upon his own responsibility, to act with God or not. And in the daily walk through a world full of sin, full of the powers of darkness, God has given such opportunities for making acquaintance with Him in His power to deliver, as could not have been if all evil had been banished. We are called to be "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with Him." If we choose Christ's portion here, we have His portion for ever. It is a life of perpetually choosing Christ, and trusting Christ in everything. There is more to admire in Ittai, the Gittite, who followed David when he fled from Absalom, and said, "As the Lord liveth, and as my Lord, the King liveth, surely in what place my lord, the king, shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be" (II Sam. 15. 21)—than in Haman, who was simply a parasite, hanging on King Ahasuerus' favor.

Cannot Sound the Counsels of God,

The Lord likens the kingdom of heaven to "a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and sowed in his field; which, indeed, is the least of all seeds (i. e. the Syrian mustard seed); but when it is grown it is the greatest among herbs and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air lodge in the branches thereof." In the first days of the church, quality was the great thing, "great grace" was upon all the disciples. When it became national, quantity prevailed over quality, and the greatness of the spread of Christianity made it a wise move of Satan's, to send his evil ones to lodge in it, so that he might spread his evil odor, and that men might say, when Christians ceased to love one another, "What difference is there between this religion and idolatry?"

Christianity To-Day is but Babylon

(confusion), and it is, indeed, "the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird" (Rev. 18: 2). Again, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, until the whole was leavened." Neither the mustard-seed nor the leaven are like the good seed. Both symbolize the outward Christianity of the day. Christ is universally King, yet the birds of the air, the emissaries of the Evil One, are quite at home, in the religion of the day, and though the Kingdom is Christ's, the woman leavens it with the world. the flesh and the devil!

Is this all, then, that we are to expect from the Kingdom of Heaven? Is the King to be set at nought and to be overcome by the world and the devil? God forbid! Jesus told us very plainly, "My Kingdom is not of this world" (John 18 : 36). There is another and glorious aspect of the Kingdom of Heaven, "The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath and buyeth that field. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman seeking goodly pearls, who, when he hath found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it." Those who want to make of the kingdom of heaven a something which the world can look at and admire, something which will do them credit, and which they can bring to a state of perfection, are only sowing for a harvest of disappointment. But there is a treasure hid in the field. If in the field Christ is discovered, and the heart's deepest affections go out to Him, then all the world, its esteem, its pleasures, its honors, are of no account. If Jesus is not worth to us the giving up all that we have, we have not yet found the treasure in the field. "Whosoever he be of you, that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be My disciple" (Luke 14: 33). And this is not by constraint. When Jesus becomes our treasure, it is and not with compunction, that we give up all that we have. It is so exquisitely blessed to have it all His, not ours; to let the care of it, and the disposal of it, be His. It hurts us no more to be misunderstood when Jesus is our treasure; for we live before Him, and not before man. The old pain of a wounded spirit ceases to be known, when Jesus is our treasure, for it becomes so easy, so natural, to take all from Him. It is so impossible to want the enjoyments of the world, when He is our treasure, for Jesus more than satisfies every longing of our hearts. We cannot be disappointed about our Christian work when it is given over to Him, for He is more to us than all the work, and if He wills to have us more occupied with prayer than with work, we are just as happy to see others instead of ourselves bringing home the sheaves. But we cannot have Jesus as our treasure and our Pearl of great price while we have any earthly thing which is our heart's treasure, "He that loveth father or mother more than Me, is not worthy of Me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than Me, is not worthy of Me. And he that taketh not his cross and followeth after Me, is not worthy of Me" (Matt. 10; 37, 38). There are very many who are longing for more joy in the Lord, who seek their own joy, not Jesus as their treasure.

"For Joy Thereof,"

No Self-Seeking

is compatible with having Him as our heart's one treasure. "He that prizeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for My sake, shall find it." Unless we can trust Him sufficiently to run the apparent risk of sacrificing our own interests, we have not the true spirit of the bride. "Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people, and thy father's house: so shall the King greatly desire thy beauty; for He is thy Lord; and worship thou Him" (Ps. 45: 10, 11). Paul was so enamored with Jesus that he says, "What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in Him . . . That I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being made conformable unto His death; if, by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead '(Phil. 3: 7, 11). Peter says of Him, "Whom, not having seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Such was their estimate of the treasure hid in the field!

CHOICE BOOKS FOR HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

A BEAUTIFUL HOLIDAY PRESENT.

Every Christian's Every-Day Book.

Being choice selections for daily reading for every day in the year, from over 200 of the best Christian Authors.

Handsome cloth, 12mo, bevel boards, 370 pages, $1.00

BOYS' USEFUL PASTIMES.

Pleasant and profitable amusement for spare hours. By PROF. ROBERT GRIFFITH, A. M. This volume comprises chapters on the use and care of tools, and detailed instructions by means of which boys can make, with their own hands, a large number of toys, household ornaments, scientific appliances, and many pretty, amusing and necessary articles for the playground, the home and out of doors. Bound in Handsome Cloth Binding, with 300 illustrations, $1.00.

 Either of the above books will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address,

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,

77 Bible House, New York.

[For the CHRISTIAN HERALD.]

GLAD TIDINGS.

"I am pacified toward thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord, God."—Ezek. xvi. 63.

Peace! Peace Divine! His word proclaims,
This peace to sinners lost.
Good news for thee, poor sinner now,
Peace at tremendous cost.
"I am," says God, "at peace."
Let fears and cares all cease,
Thou could'st not pacify.
Though thou should'st choose to die,
Thou could'st not satisfy
Demands divine.
To struggle in the pit
Thou would'st but sink the deeper
In miry clay; but let Him save;
He, then, will be thy keeper.
And say: "thou'rt mine."

But dost thou say: "My sin is great,
"So great, I dare not tell
"It all to Thee. I know that it "Deserves eternal hell."
"For all that thou hast done,"
"No sin excepted, none,
"I'm pacified." You say:
"But why?" Christ's blood one day
Was shed, our debt to pay,
And it is paid.
That's why. Trust in his work,
He cannot prove untrue.
"I'm pacified toward thee,"
Your sins, He speaks to you,
On Christ were laid.

REV. G. B. GREIG.

Sydney, Australia.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets and cards, assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

What every one wants. A Christmas gift. Read marked advertisement in last week's paper.

☞ A favorite book for Christmas Gifts for young and old.

Hid in the Heart.

Short Bible Readings for Every Day in the Year.

Selected and arranged by Mrs. E. H. RICHES.

Printed from new plates.

Square, 32mo. 400 pages. Bound in the following styles:

Cloth, white edges	75c.
Cloth, extra, gilt edges	75c.
French morocco, limp, round corners	$1.25
Persian calf, round corners, padded	1.75
Persian calf, tooled lines, round corners, padded	1.75
Persian calf, embossed, round corners, padded	1.75
German calf, round corners, padded	2.50

☞ This series of Bible Readings, arranged under a subject for each day of the year, is especially fitted for presentation to friends, Sunday School scholars, and others, to whom a helpful text-book would be an aid in their Christian course. Its popularity is so great, we have, in response to many inquiries, bound up copies in a variety of styles, suited to every purse. Copies will be forwarded promptly, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 and 3 Bible House, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

"THE WORD FOR THE DAY."

Text, Hymn and Prayer for every day in the year. Compiled by A. J. A. R.

"The Word for the Day" is an excellent little book consisting of a Scripture text, a selection from a hymn, and a brief prayer for each day in the year. The compilations are made with reference to the practical needs of every-day life. Bible verses that are helpful, inspiring, and that serve to put one on guard against the surrounding evils are chosen as the leading thought, and following them come their echoes from the human mind." It is a book which would serve to sweeten and brighten daily life in every home.—Chautauquan.

"The word for the day" has been compiled with reference to real every-day needs not ficticious or sentimental ones. Its thoughts are very well selected, and its brief prayers are prayers indeed; for devoutness it is admirable.—New York Evangelist.

"The Word for the Day" is one of those strong helps to a true Christian life.

16mo. Cloth, plain, 75c.; Gilt, $1.00: American Seal, $1.75; Calf, flex., $2.50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publisher,
JOHN IRELAND, 1197 Broadway, N. Y.

One Picture Calendar, 1888, one elegant colored Card Picture, one beautiful Picture Card and Two Poems, sent on receipt of seven two-cent stamps. Brooklyn Art Co., 881 Greene Avenue, Brooklyn, New York.

DIAMOND DYES

COLOR EVERYTHING.

Unequalled for Silk, Wool, Cotton and all Fabrics and Fancy Goods. Brilliant, Durable and Economical. Any one can use them.

32 COLORS—10 CENTS EACH.

Remember, these are the only Pure, Harmless and Unadulterated Dyes.

Beware of other Dyes, because often Poisonous, Adulterated, Weak and Worthless.

We warrant these Dyes to color more goods, package for package, than any other Dyes ever made, and to give more brilliant and durable colors. Sample cards free.

THE DIAMOND PAINTS,

GOLD, SILVER, BRONZE and COPPER

For gilding Fancy Baskets, Frames, Lamps, Chandeliers, and for all kinds of ornamental work. Equal to any of the high-priced kinds, and only 10 cents a package. Also Artists' Black for Ebonizing.

Sold by Druggists everywhere. Send postal for Sample Card, directions for coloring Photos, doing fancy work, and making ink.

WELLS, RICHARSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

The Waterbury Watch

For $2.50 — Always Accurate. Readily Regulated. Simple Stem-winder. Economical, Exact. Admirably Adjusted.

For $2.50 — Guaranteed. Thoroughly tested. Considered Cheap. Durable. Non-magnetic.

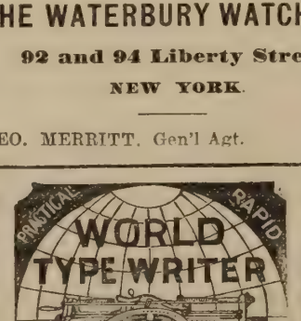
For $2.50 — True Time Keeper. Unique, Unexcelled. Prompt, Pretty. Cleverly Constructed. Particularly Popular.

Sold only by retail Watch dealers, and sold only to the retail Watch dealers by

THE WATERBURY WATCH CO.,
92 and 94 Liberty Street,
NEW YORK.

GEO. MERRITT, Gen'l Agt.

ASK YOUR STATIONER FOR IT.



We want AGENTS in every city and town. BIG COMMISSION.

Does the work of one costing $100.

INDORSED BY LEADING BUSINESS MEN.

GEO. BECKER & CO.,
30 Great Jones St., New York City.

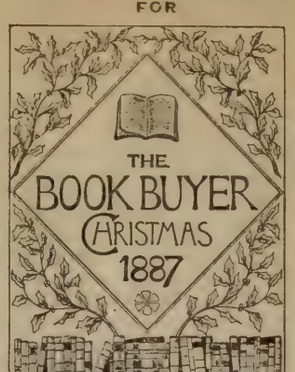
Send for Circular.

The Pulpit Treasury Devoted to Sermons, Lectures, Bible Comments, Questions of the Day, the Prayer Meeting, Sunday School and Mission Work. By the ablest writers on Theology, Christian Ethics, Evangelistic Work Home Culture, etc. A welcome guest to the Pastor, Teacher, and Family, 5th Year, Monthly, Illustrated, $2.50, Pastors, $2. Sample Free. E. B. TREAT, Pub. New York

WORK FOR ALL. $30 a week and expenses paid. Valuable outfit and particulars free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

SEND 10 CENTS

FOR



WITH 50 BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS.

A complete review by distinguished writers of the holiday books, with fifty superb illustrations,—over twenty-five in colors. Special cover in three colors. The fullest and most beautiful guide to the Christmas literature of the year. SENT, POSTPAID, FOR 10 CENTS.

Contributions by	Illustrations by
JOHN BURROUGHS,	W. HAMILTON GIBSON,
EDITH M. THOMAS,	F. S. CHURCH.
HOWARD PYLE,	JOSEPH PENNELL,
Mrs. BURTON HARRISON.	CHILDE HASSAM.
H. H. BOYESEN,	F. HOPKINSON SMITH,
R. H. STODDARD,	FRANK S. KING,
LAURENCE HUTTON,	FRANCIS DAY.
J. B. MILLET,	EDMUND H. GARRETT,
H. W. MABIE.	HOWARD PYLE,
J. ASHBY-STERRY.	PHILIP G. HAMERTON.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
743-745 Broadway, New York.

UNIVERSAL TRIPOD COAT RACK.

IN HALL, PARLOR OR BEDROOM

The Cheapest in the Market. Suitable Everywhere.

$4.00 at retail. If dealer does not keep them, get up a club of 12, buy a dozen for $36.00, and make $12.00 a day. Send for sample outfit, cards and circulars. Boxed. Assorted Woods, Antique and Mahog. Rub Finish, Solid Polished Brass Trimmings. Active person can make money.

UNIVERSAL TRIPOD CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE BEST XMAS MUSIC!

Dr. DOANE'S NEW CHRISTMAS CANTATA:

Waiting for Santa Claus, JUST OUT. Merry Songs, Interesting Dialogue, Splendid Effects. Can be given by any School after FOUR Rehearsals. Sent on receipt of 25 cents.

Dr. LOWRY'S NEW CHRISTMAS SERVICE:

The True Light, Most appropriate Scripture Selections, new and melodious Songs, admirably arranged and adapted for celebrating Christmas times on Sunday, or any other day. Sent for 5 cents; $4 per 100.

Christmas Annual No. 18, A beautiful collection of Carols by the best authors. Furnishes an abundance of useful songs for the Christmas gathering. Sent for 4 cents: $3 per 100.

ANTHEMS CANTATAS, SERVICES and CAROLS issued in previous years can be furnished. A full catalogue sent on application.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

FOR GAS.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

FOR OIL.

GRIND YOUR OWN Bone, Meal, Oyster Shells, Graham Flour & Corn in the $5 HAND MILL (F. Wilson's Patent.) 100 per cent. more made in keeping Poultry. Also POWER MILLS and FARM FEED MILLS. Circulars and testimonials sent on application. WILSON BROS. Easton, Pa.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

Scribner's Magazine

EVERYTHING COMPLETE.

CONTRIBUTORS:

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON,
BRET HARTE,
H. C. BUNNER,
AUSTIN DOBSON,
SARAH ORNE JEWETT,
EDITH M. THOMAS,
T. R. SULLIVAN,
EDWIN PERCY WHIPPLE,
E. H. & E. W. BLASHFIELD,
AND OTHERS.

"Not only is this the most ambitious of all the issues of Scribner, it is the most signal example of the extent of its resources. Scribner has leaped to the fore front of the magazine company."—New York Times.

ILLUSTRATORS:

WILL H. LOW,
HOWARD PYLE,
J. W. ALEXANDER,
HOPKINSON SMITH,
GEORGE FOSTER BARNES,
C. JAY TAYLOR,
W. L. TAYLOR,
M. J. BURNS,
WILLIAM HOLE,
AND OTHERS.

"We have seen a good many holiday volumes brought out at prices far beyond the reach of moderately-filled purses, which were by no means its equal either in literary or artistic wealth."—Boston Pos.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—To enable readers to possess the Magazine from the first number (January 1887), the following inducements are offered:

A year's subscription and the 12 back numbers for 1887 - - - - - - - - $4 50

A years subscription and the numbers for 1887, bound in two volumes, cloth, gilt top - - - - - - - - - 6 00

Charles Scribner's Sons, Publishers,
743 Broadway, New York.

Furs,
Fur Trimmings

Quite a number of new shapes and styles in Fur Wraps. Decided Novelties in Muffs and Boas. Everything that is new in Fur Trimmings.

Lord & Taylor,

Broadway and Twentieth Street.

The BOW in the CLOUD Or WORDS of COMFORT

For those in Sickness, Sorrow and the varied Afflictions of Life. By 200 best Authors, Prose and Poetry, Edited by J. Sanderson, D.D. A Home Treasury and Gift Book of rare excellence. 450 Pages, $1.75.

E. B. TREAT, Pub., N. Y.

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs & Melodeons, Violins, Accordions, etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed, Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World.—$35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35 MARCHAL & SMITH, 235 East 21st Street, New York.

WE WANT LADIES TO GET UP CLUBS for a leading magazine. Increase your incomes. Write at once. CHARLES TRAINOR, Station D, New York City.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 50. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, DEC. 15, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF M. CARNOT, the Newly Elected President of the French Republic.

MUCH ADO ABOUT LITTLE. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

A Singular Rescue from a Mine—A Persian Girl's Testimony—A Change of Title—An Effectual Mirage—An Indian Prince on Missions—A Child Bitten by a Snake.

THE FIFTH SEAL. By Rev. M. Baxter.

CURRENT EVENTS: The President's Message—The Parting of the Ways—Cabinet Changes—The Reports of the Departments—Meetings of the Evangelical Alliance in Washington—The Austro-Russian Complication—The French Cabinet—The Crown Prince's Malady—A Midnight Search for Shelter—Citizenship Restored by Gov. Hill, etc.

IRENE MORLEY'S VACATION. (With Illustration.)

DRIVING AWAY VULTURES. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

PICTURE OF THE CONSECRATION OF A NEW CATHEDRAL.

Gems from New Books: Daniel Webster's Avowal, etc.

THE FAMILY OF TRIPE COURT. (A Serial Story.)

A WOUNDED SPIRIT. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

M. Carnot, Elected President of France, Dec. 3—The Vendome Column in Paris—Entrance to the Louvre.

M. SADI-CARNOT.

The New President of France.

The Ominous Incidents of the Election—Their Tendency—M. Carnot's Early Life—His Engineering Triumphs—Election to the National Assembly—Member of the Chamber of Deputies—Becomes Minister of Public Works—Secretary of the Treasury—His Sterling Integrity—A Remarkable Incident—How they Elect a President in France—M. Carnot's Advice to the Shouters—His Famous Ancestors.

CONGRATULATIONS from all quarters of the world are extended to the French Republic on the safe and peaceful transfer of the Executive power from M. Grévy to M. Sadi-Carnot, which was accomplished on Saturday, December 3. There were, however, some ominous features of that transfer, which awaken apprehension, and render the friends of the Republic on this side of the Atlantic doubtful whether warnings should not be mingled with the congratulations. Both the resignation of M. Grévy and the selection of M. Sadi-Carnot indicate a modification, if not a disregard, of the principles of the Constitution.

M. Grévy followed the example of his predecessor MacMahon in resigning at the behest of the Legislature, but we can conceive of circumstances—and illustrations might be found in our own history—in which it would be a national calamity for the Legislature to have the power of compelling the President to resign before the expiration of the term for which he was elected. The principle of fair-play demands that, if the President is at issue with the Legislature, or if he is charged with maladministration, the case should be submitted, not to one of the parties to the dispute, but, by impeachment, to properly constituted judges. But M. Grévy was driven to resignation by the Chamber of Deputies.

A Concession to the Reds.

Again, in the selection of his successor there was an obvious homage to a power still lower in the scale. The Legislature, in whom the election is vested in France, was swayed by the conviction that the election of M. Ferry would be followed by a rising of the communists, which would not be quelled without bloodshed. While it is generally admitted that M. Carnot will make a better President than M. Ferry would have done, it is evident that in selecting him the Legislature was actuated not so much by that fact as by the will of the lowest classes of the people. Thus, while obeying the letter of the Constitution, the spirit of it, which provides a system of mutual checks and safeguards, was disregarded. Both the resignation of M. Grévy and the triumph of M. Carnot over M. Ferry are doubtless blessings for France, but it would have been more hopeful if they had been achieved by other processes. The power which the radical masses of Paris have exerted, in this case, for good, may, now that it has been recognized and obeyed, be used again with less beneficent results. It will surely become stronger and more audacious, tending to develop that crisis which prophecy indicates in the near future, when a Napoleonic genius shall arise, and, being representative of the masses, "be mighty, but not by his own power," and "shall come in peaceably and obtain the kingdom by flatteries" (Dan. 8 : 24 and 11 : 21).

"Who is M. Carnot?"

was the question asked by thousands of persons, when the cable despatch announcing his election was published. M. Sadi-Carnot is a civil engineer by profession. He is fifty years of age, having been born at Linoges on August 11, 1837. He studied at the Ecole Polytechnique, where he graduated fifth in his class in 1857, and in the School of Bridges and Railroads he reached the head of his class at his graduation in 1863. He was appointed Government engineer in various provincial districts in the Annecy district, and continued to act in that capacity until 1870. During that time, he superintended the construction of many important public works, including the great Collonge bridge over the Rhone, near the Swiss frontier, where he adopted a new system of tubular foundation. On the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian War he was placed in charge of the construction of the forts, etc., for the defence of Normandy, being made a Commissary Extraordinary of the Lower Seine, Eure, and Calvados, and Prefect of the Lower Seine. He held this position until the conclusion of peace.

His first appearance in the Legislative Chamber was in 1872, when he was elected to the National Assembly by the District of Côte d'Or. He took his seat with the Republican Left, and was appointed Secretary of that section. In 1876 the District of Beaume elected him to the Legislature. He continued to sit with the same group, and his practical experience enabled him to render efficient service on committees of public works and industrial matters. He was also placed on the Finance Committee, in which he unexpectedly developed remarkable financial abilities. He became

Minister of Public Works

on the advent of M. Ferry to the Premiership in 1880, having previously served as Under Secretary under De Freycinet. In this office his duties were more arduous than those which usually attach to the office in other countries, as in France the Government controls the chief lines of railroad. The construction of ports, canals, bridges, etc., involved labor to which M. Carnot brought natural ability, long and careful training, and years of experience. He had in his Department seventy-two chief engineers, 240 ordinary engineers, and 1,500 assistant engineers. He thoroughly reorganized the Department, and made it a model of energy and efficiency. In 1885, on the resignation of the Secretary of the Treasury, M. Carnot was invited to succeed him, and he carried into his new Department the energy which had distinguished him in that of Public Works. When the Cabinet resigned and M. De Freycinet succeeded to the Premiership in 1886, M. Carnot was requested to retain his portfolio. On the downfall of that ministry he quitted office. His record up to that point is one of Unimpeachable Integrity, and a conspicuous illustration of it, was recently mentioned in Parliament. When M. Rouvier, the late Premier, was trying to defend M. Grévy and his son-in-law, M. Wilson, from the charge of misapplying public funds, the question was raised, whether certain sums which had been paid into the National Treasury for stamps and registering duties by the Dreyfus firm, in which M. Wilson is interested, had not been returned to them, M. Rouvier said that an application had been made for the return of the money while M. Carnot was in office, but that he had refused it. It also appeared that this refusal was the cause of M. Carnot leaving office, as it brought upon him the hostility of the President and his wretched son-in-law. When these facts were disclosed, the whole chamber rose, and turning to the ex-Secretary, cheered him vociferously. He sat pale and with bowed head, evidently touched by this recognition of his integrity.

His Election to the Presidency on December 3 is another of those significant facts from which young men may learn a valuable lesson. In the race of life it is character that tells. When men are needed for responsible positions, when a great trust is to be confided to some one man, the man who commands public confidence is usually less remarkable for brilliant talents than for unstained character. M. Grévy sent in his resignation on Friday, December 2, and on the following day, at 2 o'clock; the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, according to the French Constitution, went to Versailles to elect a President. There are no stated periods for the termination of the Presidential terms, so the new incumbent was to be elected, not to finish M. Grévy's term, but for the full term of seven years. The prize was one of great magnificence. To be ruler of all France for seven years, with a salary of $120,000 a year, a free residence in the Palace of the Elysée, and an allowance of $60,000 a year for household expenses, render it one to satisfy the most ambitious citizen of France. The election lay with the eight hundred and fifty members of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies, and the votes were taken by ballot. M. Leroyer, the President of the Senate, was ex-officio chairman of the session. He took the roll and called over the names. As each name was called, the owner stepped up to the tribune, where a little marble ball was handed him from a basket. The voter put the ball into one urn, and into another urn a card with the name written on it of the person for whom he voted. The marbles being counted afterwards, were a check on any person who might in excess of zeal drop two cards instead of one into the urn.

The Balloting.

The first ballot resulted in no election, only 303 votes being cast for M. Carnot, who had the largest number. The Constitution requires an absolute majority for the successful candidate. After the result was announced M. De Freycinet, who had received 76 votes, and M. Ferry, who had received 212, withdrew their names, and requested their friends to vote for M. Carnot. This turned the tide, and on the second ballot M. Carnot received 616 votes. His chief competitor was General Saussier, for whom the monarchists cast 186 votes.

After receiving the congratulations of the Assembly, M. Carnot returned to Paris, where he was greeted with enthusiasm. His reply to the ovation was brief but sensible. He said: "Thank you, my fellow citizens, for this demonstration, and for your acclamation. Like yourselves, I am warmly devoted to the Republic. Now show that you are good citizens, and go home quietly." The Frenchman on election-day is a little too much given to shouting, and quarreling with any one who does not display the degree of enthusiasm which appears to be due to the occasion. The new President's advice appears to have been taken, and the day, which had been so much dreaded, passed without bloodshed. Extensive preparations had been made to quell a disturbance, and Gen. Saussier, the Governor of Paris, had fifty thousand troops, and batteries of Gatling guns, mitrailleuses and field artillery in readiness for the emergency. The people, however, were satisfied with the result, and the danger of street barricades and anarchical risings was avoided for the time.

The Family of Carnot is not unknown in French History. The father of the new President, M. Lazare Hippolyte Carnot, took a prominent part in the Revolution of 1848. He was born in 1801, and in early life identified himself with the Simonians, and became their advocate in the press. He devoted himself to the study of Oriental Literature, and seemed at one time to be destined to a life of philosophical research. His strong Republicanism, however in later years, and his sturdy principles of virtue, led him to separate from the group of socialistic theorists with whom he consorted in his youth, and to denounce especially the hateful marriage doctrine which M. Enfantin had promulgated. He then entered the political field, and in 1839 was elected deputy to the Legislature. He connected himself with the Republican section, and acted, and voted with them until the Revolution. He was rewarded with the office of minister of Public Instruction. After the overthrow of the Republic, by Louis Napoleon in December 1851 Mr. Carnot was among the proscribed deputies. He was elected by the city of Paris to the Legislature, his colleague being General Cavaignac. Both men, however, refused to take the oath of allegiance to Napoleon III, and retired into private life. M. Carnot devoted himself to literary pursuits. He produced several historical works which were widely read, and translated into all the European Languages. In 1863, he yielded to the urgent entreaties of his fellow citizens, and believing that he might be able to do something toward extending the liberties of the nation, he consented to return to political life. He was promptly elected to the Legislature where he became one of the leaders of the Republican Party. After the fall of the Empire in 1870, he was honored by being made Senator for life.

The Grandfather of the President was still more famous in his day. He was the Captain Hippolyte Carnot, of whom Carlyle says, in describing the leaders of the Revolution of 1789, he was "the highest faculty of them all. Sent to Paris from Calais, with his cold mathematical head and silent stubbornness of will. Iron Carnot, far planning, imperturbable, unconquerable; who in the hour of need shall not be found wanting. His hair was black; but it grew gray under many kinds of fortune, bright and troublous: and with iron aspect this man faced them all." He was War Minister in the famous Committee of Public Safety—a position of terrific responsibility in the days when France, torn and distracted within, stood at bay before united Europe. It was he that organized the army, and made the victories of Napoleon Bonaparte a possibility. It was he too, a little later, that was prominent among the daring men who hurled Robespierre from his dreaded dictatorship. He was the man who at a bachelor dinner one hot night at Barrere's, during the Reign of Terror, when the guests had laid aside their coats, made the discovery that precipitated the fall of the tryant. Carnot needing a blank sheet of paper, and going to the pile of garments felt in this pocket, and that for what he wanted. He came upon a slip in the course of his search—not blank, but bearing in Robespierre's writing the names of forty prominent men—Robespierre's associates—his own among them, who were to be sent to the guillotine. That detected treachery sealed Robespierre's doom, and Carnot organized the attack which delivered France from the hated tyrant. When Napoleon established the Empire, Carnot disappeared from public view, and when the Bourbons were restored, Carnot was honored by being formally proscribed by name, and hedied in seclusion. It is from such a stock that we now have a new President of France.

A CONVERT'S SACRIFICE.

A REMARKABLE example of self-denial for the sake of Christian principle, is reported to the Missionary Herald by Mr. W. N. Chambers, a missionary in Eastern Turkey. He says: "Two years ago a boy from Khasdoor, came to the city to enter school, if he could pursuade us to accept him. He was penniless, and walked all the way, about seventy miles. He was told he could not be received, but fortunately work was obtained for him for a year. He showed himself as made of good stuff, and he was able to pay his school expenses for last year. At the close of the school he returned to his village for vacation, and although his father had turned him out of his house for his Protestant proclivities, he returned directly to his father's house. During the summer he was called to work three days on the road, and his lot fell on Friday, his companions being only Catholics and Turks. In the evening, when all were gathered in the tent, Arslan would propose to read the Testament and pray. Thus he would spend fifteen or twenty minutes in expounding the gospel to his companions, before retiring for the night. They, on their part, listened with attention and respect. Bread had been provided for three days, Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

"When Sunday morning came, Arslan announced his intention of not working that day, and in order that he might have something to eat when putting in his time on the Monday, he ate but a small portion of his bread on Sunday. All the persuasion of his Catholic fellow-villagers to work on Sunday, and be free to return with them to the village, was of no avail. He worked on half-rations on Monday, filling up his quota of time, and returned to his village alone and hungry, on Monday night. The influence of the young convert's action was very great both on Turks and Christians.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Lord in the Counting-House. "As a boy I was serving an apprenticeship under a Christian book-keeper. That good old man had one of the best of habits; he prayed about everything. He took the Lord Jesus into the counting-house with him. Whenever anything went wrong in the big ledger he got down on his knees beside the stool and prayed God to help him out of the difficulty, and it was not long before God answered his prayer and sent the solution to the problem, no matter how intricate. What we want is every-day religion"

Making a Third Fortune.—Mr. D. M'Lauchlan remarked at a recent meeting: "I have a friend who, at one time, was possessed of a considerable fortune, but he lost it, through no fault of his own; a second time he accumulated wealth, and a second time lost it, and now, for the third time, he is building up a competence, and is a considerable distance on the way. That man has twice held a fortune, and each time it slipped from his grasp. But when we have secured the riches of heaven, through accepting Christ, we shall find that, unlike earthly riches, which elude our grasp, and which, at the most, we can only retain in this life, they shall abide with us for ever."

A Boatman Saved from Folly.—Mr. Montgomery observes: "I spoke to an old boatman some time ago, and tried to get him to come to Christ. He said to me in reply, 'Well, look here; if I'm going to be saved I shall be saved, and if I'm going to be condemned, I shall be condemned.' 'Look at this text,' I replied; "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." Now, strive does not mean you have to fold your arms and do nothing. It means you have to make an effort.' By the grace of God, I was enabled to show that misguided boatman that, while he had in one sense to do nothing, he had in another sense to do something. He had to do nothing in the procuring of his salvation, but he had to put out his hand and accept it—to step into the life-boat that God has graciously provided; to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thus be saved."

Looking Over a Lady's Album.—Mr. Gardiner says: "A lady was one day showing me her album, and among other photographs was that of her mother. 'That is a fine-looking old lady,' I remarked. 'Yes; a true Christian and a good mother to me,' was the quiet reply. 'Then you are the child of many prayers! May I ask if you believe on the Lord Jesus Christ as your Saviour?' 'No,' she frankly replied, 'and I can never believe until I feel it.' 'If you wait for the feeling before believing, you will never believe; you believe in Christ, and that He is the only Saviour?' I said. 'Yes,' she responded. 'Then give Him your heart's confidence, for if you believe in Him you will have eternal life. Now, just confide in Him, and take Him at His word.' 'I will,' she said. She begged of me to see her husband. I willingly agreed, and I told him of his wife's conversion, and offered the same Saviour to him. Ere twenty minutes had passed I had the joy of seeing him also rejoice in Christ."

A Drowning Laundress Saved.—Mr. Dunn, observed: "Three old women went to Glasgow Green one day, to do some washing in the Clyde. Unfortunately, at the place where they washed, the bank had been undermined by the river, and as soon as one of the three put her foot upon it, it crumbled away, and she fell into the water. Her companions were unable to help her; they could only call for assistance. At once a crowd collected, but no one went to the help of the drowning woman, until a strong young fellow rushed up, crying, 'Where did she fall?' One of the lookers-on threw a piece of earth near the spot where she had been last seen, to indicate the place. The young man waited for no more, but bravely plunged in. There was a minute of suspense, then a cheer arose as he was seen to rise to the surface bearing the inanimate body of the woman. Soon they were both on dry land, where every means was taken to revive her. A tender-hearted man in the crowd, seeing that the woman was but poorly clad, thought that now, when men's hearts were moved to pity, was a good time to make a collection for the poor creature, so he handed round his hat to receive it. By the time he was done the patient was partially recovered, and going up to her, he emptied the money into her lap. She thanked him for his kindness, but cried, 'Let me see the man who has saved me!' The young man stepped forward. She neglected the money, forgot the crowd, and only saw him who had saved her; she embraced, thanked, and almost worshipped him. In a similar manner the sinner who has been saved by trusting in Christ, saved from a sea of sin and wrath which threatened to engulf him, forgets everything but His Saviour, and leaving the riches and pleasures of this world behind, he clings only to Christ."

A Wife Changed into a Maniac.—The Rev. Canon B. Wilberforce said in a recent address: "I would take you to where, a few months back, there lived, worked, and prayed, a Christian wife and mother; and I would ask you to bear with me while I tell you of her story, which is known now to the angels of heaven. The hard hand of want sometimes dulled the fire on her hearth, for the father of the family was away beyond the seas; but by the master-secret of all spirituality, she loved her God, and she had learned to say. 'Not my will, but Thine, be done.' She hoped on in patience for her husband's return, when his earnings would wipe off the debts which she had incurred for food and clothing, and the sad times of pinching would have passed away from her. Brighter and brighter I saw the weary face become, as the time approached for his return, and at last the flag proclaimed the welcome news of the safe arrival of the vessel in which he served; upon the following day a hasty summons took me to the house, and there I saw the wife and mother, her reason fled, her eyes rolling in frenzy—a hopeless maniac. The human brute who was her husband had returned upon the previous day, and had staggered drunk and penniless into his home. Such a termination to weary months of watching extinguished in a moment the feeble light of that overtasked brain. They bore her to the County Lunatic Asylum, and in three days she had passed away to that home 'where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest.'"

How Financial Ruin was Averted.—The Pastor of a church in Scotland says: "In the commercial crisis of 1857 a merchant wrote to a friend saying, 'I am ruined, irretrievably ruined.' His friend wrote asking how it had occurred, and received a reply from the distressed merchant, stating that a report had been circulated that he was about to fail, and that he anticipated that before noon the next day he would be requested by his creditors to close his accounts with them forthwith. He was unable to meet them all at such short notice, and would therefore be obliged to stop payment, though if he had a little time granted him he was well able to pay twenty shillings, aye, twenty-five shillings in the pound. The gentleman visited the merchant, and asked him to accompany him to the office of one of the richest men in England, and the gentleman said to him, 'Will you please, as a favor to me, walk arm in arm with my friend past the Bank of England?' The rich man complied, and together they walked through Threadneedle Street, Lothbury, and around the Royal Exchange. The merchant's creditors soon heard of it, and the next day no exceptional accounts came in, and the firm stands to this day. As those two men were seen walking together, the riches of the one were in a manner imputed to the other, though in reality the merchant did not receive a fraction. But we sinners were totally bankrupt, and could not pay a farthing in the pound, but Christ stepped in and said, 'Trust in me; take My arm, and I will pay your debt.'"

MUCH ADO ABOUT LITTLE.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon preached last Sunday Morning, December 11, 1887.

"Ye blind guides which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." Matt. 23 : 24.

The Prince of Inconsistencies—The Pharisees Dissected—Their Hypocrisy Exposed—The Pharisees of To-day—I. In the Pulpit—Denouncing Humor in the Sermon—Their Somnolent Sermons—A Smiling Audience Better than a Sleepy One—The Consecrated Wit of the Bible—The Hump of Sanctimonious Gloom—II. In the Market—Watering Stocks—Punishing Thieving Paupers—Going to Perdition in A Carriage—Fattening Camels for the Table—Defrauding the Assessors—Smuggling Watches—III. In Conversation—Grammatical Profanity—IV. In the Church—The Watch-Dog in the Pew—The Gnats of Time—The Camel of Eternity.

A PROVERB is compact wisdom, knowledge in chunks, a library in a sentence, the electricity of many clouds discharged in one bolt, a river put through a mill race. When Christ quotes the proverb of the text, He means to set forth the ludicrous behavior of those who make a great and have no appreciation of great ones. In my text a small insect and a large quadruped are brought into comparison—a gnat and a camel. You have in museum or on the desert seen the latter, a great awkward, sprawling creature, with back two stories high, and stomach having a collection of reservoirs for desert travel; an animal forbidden to the Jews as food, and in many literatures entitled "the ship of the desert." The gnat spoken of in the text is in the grub form. It is born in pool or pond, after a few weeks becomes a chrysalis, and then, after a few days becomes the gnat as we recognize it. But the insect spoken of in the text is in its very smallest shape, and it yet inhabits the water—for my text is a mistranslation and ought to read "strain out a gnat."

Bluster About Small Sins,

My text shows you

The Prince of Inconsistencies.

A man after long observation has formed the suspicion that in a cup of water he is about to drink, there is a grub or the grandparent of a gnat. He goes and gets a sieve or strainer. He takes the water and pours it through the sieve in the broad light. He says, "I would rather do anything almost than drink this water until this larva be extirpated." This water is brought under inquisition. The experiment is successful. The water rushes through the sieve and leaves against the side of the sieve the grub or gnat. Then the man carefully removes the insect and drinks the water in placidity. But going out one day, and hungry, he devours a "ship of the desert," the camel, which the Jews were forbidden to eat. The gastronomer has no compunctions of conscience. He suffers from no indigestion. He puts the lower jaw under the camel's forefoot, and his upper jaw over the hump of the camel's back and gives one swallow, and the dromedary disappears. He strained out a gnat, he swallowed a camel. While were yet smiling at the appositeness and wit of His illustration—for smile they did in church, unless they were too stupid to understand the hyperbole—Christ practically said to them, "That is you." Punctilious about small things; reckless about affairs of great magnitude. No subject ever withered under a surgeon's knife more bitterly than did the Pharisees under Christ's scalpel of truth. As an anatomist will take a human body to pieces, and put them under a microscope for examination, so Christ finds His way to the heart of the dead Pharisee, and cuts it out, and puts it under the glass of inspection for all generations to examine. Those Pharisees thought that Christ would flatter them and compliment them, and how they must have writhed under the red-hot words as He said, "Ye fools, ye whited sepulchres, ye blind guides, which strain out a gnat and swallow a camel."

Christ's Audience

There are in our day a great many gnats strained out and a great many camels swallowed, and it is the object of this sermon to sketch a few persons who are extensively engaged in that business.

The Clerical Pharisee.

First, I remark that all those ministers of the Gospel are photographed in the text, who are very scrupulous about the conventionalities of religion, but put no particular stress upon matters of vast importance. Church services ought to be grave and solemn. There is no room for frivolity in religious convocation. But there are illustrations, and there are hyperboles like that of Christ, in the text, that will irradiate with smiles any intelligent auditory. There are men like those blind guides of the text, who advocate only those things in religious service which draw the corners of the mouth down, and denounce all those things which have a tendency to draw the corners of the mouth up; and these men will go to installations and to presbyteries and to conferences and to associations, their pockets full of fine sieves to strain out the gnats, while in their own churches at home, every Sunday, there are fifty people sound asleep. They make their churches a great dormitory, and their somniferous sermons are a cradle, and the drawled-out hymns a lullaby, while some wakeful soul in a pew with her fan keeps the flies off, unconscious of persons approximate. Now, I say it is in church, for the latter implies, at least, attention, while the former implies the indifference of the hearers and the stupidity of the speaker. In old age, or from physical infirmity, or from long watching with the sick, drowsiness will sometimes overpower one; but when a minister of the Gospel looks off upon an audience and finds healthy and intelligent people struggling with drowsiness, it is time for him to give out the Doxology or pronounce the benediction. The great fault of church services to-day is not too much vivacity, but too much somnolence. The one is an irritating gnat that may be easily strained out; the other is a great sprawling and sleepy-eyed camel of the dry desert. In all our Sabbath-schools, in all our Bible classes, in all our pulpits, we need to brighten up our religious message with such Christ-like vivacity as we find in the text.

Worse to Sleep than to Smile

I take down from my library the biographies of ministers and writers of past ages, inspired and uninspired, who have done the most to bring souls to Jesus Christ, and I find that without a single exception they and humor to Christ. Elijah used it when he advised the Baalites, as they could not make their god respond: telling them to call louder, as their god might be sound asleep, or gone a hunting. Job used it when he said to his self-conceited comforters, "Wisdom will die with you." Christ not only used it in the text, but when He ironically complimented the putrefied Pharisees, saying, "The whole need not a physician," and when by one word He described the cunning of Herod, saying, "Go ye, and tell that fox." Matthew Henry's commentaries, from the first page to the last, are coruscated with humor as summer clouds with heat lightning. John Bunyan's writings are full of humor as they are of saving truth, and there is not an aged man here, who has ever read "Pilgrim's Progress" who does not remember that while reading it he smiled as often as he wept. Chrysostom, George Herbert, Robert South, John Wesley, George Whitefield, Jeremy Taylor, Rowland Hill, Nettleton, George G. Finney, and all the men of the past who greatly advanced the kingdon of God, consecrated their wit and their humor to the cause of Christ. So it has been in all the ages, and I say to these young theological students, who cinster in these services, Sabbath by Sabbath, sharpen your wits as keen as scimitars, and then take them into this holy war.

Consecrated Wit

It is a very short bridge between a smile and a tear, a suspension bridge from eye to lip, and it is soon crossed over, and a smile is sometimes just as sacred as a tear. There is as much religion, and, I think, a little more, in a spring morning than in a starless midnight. Religious work, without any humor or wit in it, is a banquet with a side of beef, and that raw, and no condiments, and no dessert succeeding. People will not sit down at such a banquet. By all means remove all frivolity, and all bathos and all lightness and all vulgarity—strain them out through the sieve of holy discrimination; but, on the other hand, beware of that monster which overshadows the Christian Church to-day, conventionality, coming up from the Great Sahara Desert of ecclesiasticism, having on its back a bump of and vehemently refuse to swallow that camel. Oh, how particular a great many people are about the infinitesimals, while they are quite reckless about the magnitudes. What did Christ say? Did He not excoriate the people in His time who were so careful to wash their hands before a meal, but did not wash their hearts? It is a bad thing to have unclean hands; it is a worse thing to have an unclean heart. How many people there are in our time, who are very anxious that after their death they shall be buried with their feet toward the east, and not at all anxious that during their whole life they should face in the right direction, so that they shall come up in the resurrection of the just, whichever way they are buried. How many there are, chiefly anxious that a minister of the Gospel shall come in the line of apostolic succession, not caring so much whether he comes from Apostle Paul or Apostle Judas. They have a way of measuring a gnat until it is larger than a camel.

Sanctimonious Gloom,

Commercial Pharisees.

Again: My subject photographs all those who are abhorrent of small sins, while they are reckless in regard to magnificent thefts. You will find many a merchant who, while he is so careful that he would not take a yard of cloth or a spool of cotton from the counter, without paying for it, and who, if a bank cashier should make a mistake and send in a roll of bills five dollars too much, would despatch a messenger in hot haste to return the surplus, yet who will go into a stock company in which, after a while, he gets control of the stock, and then waters the stock and makes one hundred thousand dollars appear like two hundred thousand dollars. He only stole one hundred thousand dollars by the operation. Many of the men of fortune made their wealth in that way.

One of those men engaged in such unrighteous acts, that evening—the evening of the very day when he watered the stock—will find a wharf-rat stealing a newspaper from the basement doorway, and will go out and catch the urchin by the collar, and twist the collar so tightly the poor fellow cannot say that it was thirst for knowledge that led him to the dishonest act, but grip the collar tighter and tighter, saying, "I have been looking for you a long while; you stole my paper four or five times, haven't you? you miserable wretch." And then the old stock gambler, with a voice they can hear three blocks, will cry out, "Police! police!" That same man, the evening of the day in which he watered the stock, will kneel with his family in prayers, and thank God for the prosperity of the day, then kiss his children good-night with an air which seems to say, "I hope you will all grow up to be as good as your father." Prisons for sins insectile in size, but Palaces for Crimes Dromedarian.

No mercy for sins animalcule in proportion, but great leniency for mastodon iniquity. A poor boy slyly takes from the basket of a market woman a choke-pear—saving some one else from the cholera—and you smother him in the horrible atmosphere of Raymond Street Jail, or New York Tombs, while his cousin, who has been skilful enough to steal fifty thousand dollars from the city, you will make him a candidate for the New York Legislature!

There is a great deal of uneasiness and nervousness now among some people in our time who have gotten unrighteous fortunes; a great deal of nervousness about dynamite. I tell them that God will put under their unrighteous fortunes something more explosive than dynamite—the earthquake of His omnipotent indignation. It is time that we learn in America that sin is not excusable in proportion as it declares large dividends and has outriders in equipage. Many a man is postilion ahead and lackey behind. To steal one copy of a newspaper is a gnat; to steal many thousands of dollars is a camel. There is many a fruit-dealer who would not consent to steal a basket of peaches from a neighbor's stall, but who would not scruple to depress the fruit market; and as long as I can remember, we have heard every summer the peach crop of Maryland is a failure, and by the time the crop comes in, the misrepresentation makes a difference of millions of dollars. A man who would not steal one peach basket, steals fifty thousand peach baskets.

Riding to Perdition,

Go down in the summer-time into the Mercantile Library, in the reading-rooms, and see the newspaper reports of the crops from all parts of the country, and their phraseology is very much the same, and the same men wrote them, methodically and infamously carrying out the huge lying about the grain crop from year to year, and for a score of years. After a while there will be a "corner" in the wheat market, and men who had a contempt for a petty theft, will burglarize the wheat-bin of a nation, and commit larceny upon the American corn-crib. And some of the men will sit in churches, and in reformatory institutions, trying to strain out the small gnats of scoundrelism, while in their grain elevators and their store-houses they are which they expect, after a while, to swallow. Society has to be entirely reconstructed on this subject. We are to find that a sin is inexcusable in proportion as it is great. I know in our time the tendency is to charge religious frauds upon good men. They say, "Oh, what a class of frauds you have in the Church of God in this day!" and when an elder of a church, or a deacon, or a minister of the Gospel, or a superintendent of a Sabbath-school, turns out a defaulter, what display heads there are in many of the newspapers. Great primer type. Five line pica. "Another Saint Absconded!" "Clerical Scoundrelism;" "Religion at a discount!" "Shame on the Churches!" While there are a thousand scoundrels outside the Church to where there is one inside the Church, and the misbehavior of those who never see the inside of a church is so great it is enough to tempt a man to become a Christian to get out of their company. But in all circles, religious and irreligious, the tendency is to excuse sin in proportion as it is mammoth. Even John Milton, in his "Paradise Lost," while he condemns Satan, gives such a grand description of him you have hard work to suppress your admiration. Oh, this straining out of small sins like gnats, and this gulping down great iniquities like camels!

Fattening Huge Camels,

This subject does not give the picture of one or two persons, but is a gallery in which thousands of people may see their likeness. For instance, all those people who, while they would not rob their neighbor of a farthing, appropriate the money and

The Treasure of the Public.

A man has a house to sell, and he tells his customer it is worth twenty thousand dollars. Next day the assessor comes around, the owner says it is worth fifteen thousand dollars. The Government of the United States took off the tax from personal income, among other reasons because so few people would tell the truth, and many a man with an income of hundreds of dollars a day made statements which seemed to imply he was about to be handed over to the overseer of the poor. Careful to pay their passage from Liverpool to New York, yet smuggling in their Saratoga trunk ten silk dresses from Paris, and a half dozen watches from Geneva, Switzerland, telling the Custom House officer on the wharf, "There is nothing in that trunk but wearing apparel," and putting a five-dollar gold-piece in his hand to punctuate the statement.

Described in the text are all those who are particular never to break the law of grammar, and who want all their language an elegant specimen of syntax, straining out all the inaccuracies of speech with a fine sieve of literary criticism, while through their conversation go slander and innuendo, and profanity and falsehood larger than a whole caravan of camels, when they might better fracture every law of the language and shock intellectual taste, and better let every verb seek in vain for its nominative, and every noun for its government, and every preposition lose its way in the sentence, and adjectives and participles and pronouns get into a grand riot worthy of the Fourth Ward on Election Day, than to commit a moral inaccuracy. Better swallow a thousand gnats than one camel.

Such persons are also described in the text who are very much alarmed about and have no alarm about their own great transgressions. There are in every community and in every church watch-dogs who feel called upon to keep their eyes on others and growl. They are full of suspicions. They wonder if that man is not dishonest, if that man is not unclean, if there is not something wrong about the other man. They are always the first to hear of anything wrong. Vultures are always the first to smell carrion. They are self-appointed detectives. I lay this down as a rule without any exception, that those people who have the most faults themselves are most merciless in their watching of others. From scalp of head to sole of foot they are full of jealousies, and hypercriticisms. They spend their life in hunting for musk-rats and mud-turtles instead of hunting for Rocky Mountain eagles; always for something mean, instead of something grand. They look at their neighbors' imperfections through a microscope, and look at their own imperfections through a telescope upside down. Twenty faults of their own do not hurt them so much as one fault of somebody else. Their neighbors' imperfections are like gnats, and they strain them out; their own imperfections are like camels, and they swallow them.

The Small Faults of Others,

But lest some might think they escape the scrutiny of the text, I have to tell you that we all come under the divine satire when we make the questions of time more prominent than the questions of eternity. Come, now, let us all

Go Into The Confessional.

Are not all tempted to make the question, Where shall I live now? greater than the question, Where shall I live forever? How shall I get more dollars here? greater than the question, How shall I lay up treasures in heaven? the question, How shall I pay my debts to man? greater than the question, How shall I meet my obligations to God? the question, How shall I gain the world? greater than the question, What if I lose my soul? the question, Why did God let sin come into the world? greater than the question, How shall I get it extirpated from my nature? the question, What shall I do with the twenty or forty or seventy years of my sublunar existence? greater than the question, What shall I do with the millions of cycles of my post-terrestrial existence? Time, how small it is! Eternity, how vast it is! The former more insignificant in comparison with the latter than a gnat is insignificant when compared with a camel. We dodged the text. We said, "That doesn't mean me, and that doesn't mean me," and with a ruinous benevolence we are giving the whole sermon away.

But let us all surrender to the charge. What an ado about things here! What poor preparation for a great eternity! As though a minnow were larger than a behemoth, as though a swallow took wider circuit than an albatros, as though a nettle were taller than a Lebanon cedar, as though a gnat were greater than a camel, as though a minute were longer than a century, as though time were higher, deeper, broader, than eternity. So the text which flashed with lightning of wit as Christ uttered it, is followed by the crashing thunders of awful catastrophe to those who make the questions of time greater than the questions of the future, the oncoming, overshadowing future. O eternity! eternity! eternity!

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

A NOBLE INDIAN.

BRIGHT EYES, who is now Mrs. Tibbles, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on October 20, relates the following affecting incident: "The chief of my tribe once told me of a remarkable case of self-sacrifice, which had occurred within his own personal knowledge. While he was on the reservation, a small tribe of Indians came into the neighborhood. They were Christians, and among the number was a remarkably fine youth, but, unfortunately, with a quick temper. This young man came up to the well to drink, and the soldier who was stationed there, in sport, threw some water upon him. If there be anything an Indian cannot stand, it is ridicule. Stung with the thought that he was being laughed at, the young man in his anger drew an arrow from his quiver, and stabbed the soldier. As soon as the deed was done, he realized the consequences and fled. General O. made a demand on the tribe to give up the culprit. But the man, knowing the demand would be made, had fled from the tribe, so the chief could only say that they were unable to find him, but if the General would give them fourteen days they would scour the hills, and, if possible, take him and give him up. Their search was unsuccessful, and when it was heard at Governmental headquarters that the culprit was not forthcoming, word was sent to General O. to make war upon the tribe. When this was known the Indians called a council, and one young man stood up and said, 'It is plain that we cannot get the man who killed the soldier, and because of that the white man will make war on us. It is better that one should die, than that all should perish. Take me and give me up for the man that killed the soldier.' They reluctantly accepted his generous offer, and, killing him, brought his dead body to the feet of General O. He died a martyr for his tribe. The real culprit was never found; if he had been the Government would not have punished him, as they supposed that the dead man was the guilty one." It is so that Christ laid down His life that a whole world might be saved (John 18: 14).

Volume IX. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1886, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1884, and 1885 are also for sale.

Price, Five Cents, Post Free—160th Thousand Enlarged Edition—64 Pages—

COMING WARS AND GREAT EVENTS,

and Ten Signs of the Approaching Final Crisis, by Rev. M. Baxter—Dissolution of the Turkish Empire into the Five Ancient Kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, Thracian Turkey and Bulgaria, which with Britain (separated from Ireland), France, Spain, Italy and Austria, will be formed into an Allied Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms—Subsequent Rise of Napoleon as King of Syria—His Seven Years' Covenant with the Jews—Resurrection and Translation of Saints—3½ Years' Great Tribulation and world-wide Persecution of Christians—Descent of Christ at Armageddon—Ensuing Millennium of 1000 Years after the Year 1900. Address Manage "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

A SINGULAR RESCUE FROM A MINE.

An incident reported in a German journal, and translated by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, for his Watchword, is very suggestive. It serves to remind us of that pit into which the whole human race had sunk, and of Him who descended, and died to bring salvation.

One day, in harvest time, my mother sent me into the cellar to fetch a pitcher of beer for the reapers. I was about ten years old, and of a lively temper, always going with a hop and a bound rather than walking. On coming into the dark cellar, I felt a little timid, and, to keep up my courage, sprang and danced about at a greater rate than usual.

Now it happened that Harrach, my native town, was built over old mines, which had fallen in a long time before. All around the place lie great fragments of stone from the abandoned works, and in many of the houses are found half-opened passages, which are sometimes used as cellars. Our house, likewise, was built over a shaft, but this was either not known or not thought of. But while I was capering about, and had just seized the pitcher which stood in the corner, suddenly the earth opened under me, and I was gone, I knew not where.

I went down to a great depth, and should have plunged to the very bottom of the abyss, had not a hook, which probably had been used for fastening the mining ladder, caught me by the coat. At the instant of falling I had uttered a fearful shriek, which reached the ears of my mother, who was busy in the kitchen. She came running down with a light, and when she saw the opening in the ground, and could neither find me nor hear my answer to her call, she could not doubt that I had perished.

My mother has often told me that she was beside herself with terror, and was near plunging down after me. It became so dark before her eyes that she could hardly sustain herself upon her trembling knees. But the thought that possibly I might yet be rescued brought her to herself.

She hastened up-stairs and called for help; but no one heard her, for all the household were at work in the harvest field. It was not until she had run down the street that some women heard her, and hastened to the spot. They stood around wringing their hands and looking down into the aperture, but knew not what to do.

In falling I had lost my consciousness, and it would have been a happy thing to have remained thus till the moment of my deliverance. But after a time I came to myself. I knew not where I was, but I felt that I was hanging between heaven and earth, and that the next moment might plunge me into the bottomless abyss. I hardly ventured to make a sound, so great was my terror; but when I heard voices and piteous lamentations above me, I begged in God's name for help. At this the lamentations ceased for a moment, and then burst out more violently than before; for to know that I was alive, and yet no way to help me, only added to their misery.

There was no lack of counsel. Each one had something to propose. But it was soon seen that nothing was to be effected in this way. They tried to let down cords, but they did not reach me. Poles were still more useless. Indeed, how could it have been possible for me to hold on to a cord or a pole long enough to draw me to that height?

At length they called in the aid of an old miner, who at once saw what was to be done. His first business was carefully to enlarge the aperture. He then set up a windlass beside it, with a long rope coiled upon it, and to this fastened a bucket. The compassionate neighbors watched every movement with agonizing impatience. Many prayed aloud. And in those terrible moments of consciousness which now and then broke in upon my swoon, for I had swooned after my fall, my ear caught single words of hymns and prayers for the dying, which I understood too well.

When all was ready, the brave old miner stepped into the bucket, and trusting to the women above to keep a firm hold of the windlass, without which he would surely be killed, he was lowered to where I hung. He took me in his arms, and giving a joyful shout, we were both drawn up out of the pit.

A PERSIAN GIRL'S TESTIMONY.

An affecting incident occurs in the course of the report of the Oroomiah Mission, published in the Church. Rev. J. H. Shedd D. D., says: "The examinations of the high schools, female seminary and college occupied the last week. Certificates were given to thirteen young women for completing their course of study. This is one of the largest classes the school has ever sent out. There would have been fourteen, but a few weeks before their graduation, one of them was taken to her Saviour. She died in the triumph of faith, and sent to her classmates a very touching letter of dying testimony. At the last hour, as the thirteen were standing to receive their certificates, Banosha's place was vacant. A girl stepped into her place, and read the letter she wrote from her dying bed. At this reading the tears flowed freely, and without doubt these dear girls will remember to their dying day that hour and that letter. May it be to them, in all changes of life, an inspiring memory and a stimulus to be faithful and to meet the sister who has gone before!"

A CHANGE OF TITLE.

In a letter to the Missionary Herald Mr. Sprague, who is laboring at Kalgan, in Northern China, says: "Though we have not accomplished as much as we hoped, still, we think, the result has been worth all it has cost. The best visible result has been the establishing of friendly relations with the families of the boys in our school. And as the school has had three locations in different parts of the upper city, a large part of the people have been reached by this influence. And we are usually accosted on the streets as teacher, while in some parts of the lower city, as in other new cities, we are often styled foreign devil.

"In this school two teachers have come into a loving trust in Christ, and after a few years' helping have died. A good many boys, first and last, have expressed their intelligent belief in Jesus, and their earnest desire to follow this and no other way; but most of these have been prevented by their parents or friends from joining the church. I hope some of these have truly sought and found forgiveness, and so will be kept, though at present hidden disciples. Several church members' sons have come through the school into the church. One boy's parents joined the church after he did. Two or three from the school have fallen out by the way after starting.

"No one can know without experiencing, what a trial of faith it is, to work on and on, and see so little fruit come to maturity for the Master's harvest."

AN EFFECTUAL MIRAGE.

In a letter recently received by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, the writer says: "One Sunday morning during the Russian war (1854), when the war-ship Vesuvius was anchored off the mouths of the Danube, the signalman on the watch reported a remarkable appearance of a cloud in the sky, over the southern horizon, resembling an inverted canoe, and a man on his knees in the attitude of prayer. It did not at first occur to us that it was anything but a cloud, peculiarly shaped and sharply defined, and many times larger than a canoe. Presently, however, the figure of the man moved to and fro, still in the attitude of prayer, and it was at once recognized as a mirage. The cutter, an eight-oared boat, was sent away immediately in search of the canoe, and as it pulled towards the cloud, and when about three or four miles from the ship, it disappeared on the horizon, and reappeared soon after, inverted and enlarged in the sky, pulling towards the canoe, on reaching which the man, who had risen from his knees on the approach of the boat, was seen to step into it; the canoe to be taken in tow, and the cutter to steer for the ship again, their reflection soon disappearing from the sky; and in a minute or two after, both the canoe and cutter appearing on the horizon. On arriving on board, the man, who was a dark-skinned and half-naked native, having almost the appearance of a slave, was questioned, when it was ascertained that he had drifted out of the Danube with the loss of his paddles. Drifting he knew not whither, yet knowing that there was no possibility of regaining the river, and no probability of his finding the land again, he realized his helplessness, and prayed to God for help, and God sent relief to him in the way indicated."

AN INDIAN PRINCE ON MISSIONS.

No more valuable testimony to the value of Foreign Missions was ever given, than that of a speech made in London recently by the Prince of Kapurthala, who with his wife paid a visit to England. In the course of an address before the committee of the Church Missionary Society, he expressed his deep sense of indebtedness to Christian missionaries and gave emphatic testimony to the value of their labors. He affirmed that notwithstanding all that has been done for India by the great statesmen, such as Lords Dalhousie, Canning, Lawrence, Ripon and others, it is to such men as Marshman, Carey and Duff that India owes most. "There are many," he said, "who ask, What good are missionaries doing in India? I say, without any hesitation, that had it not been for the knowledge that has been imparted by these humble, unpretending men, not English laws and English science, no! nor British arms, would have effected such changes in the social condition of India as is evident to all observing men in these days!" The Prince referred to his own struggles in forsaking the religion of his ancestors, and of the fact that the missionaries must always wound the feelings of the people, in the very act of showing them that their ancestral faith "is a great imposture, and must almost be blotted out and forgotten, to admit the simple doctrine of faith in Christ." Though he admits that the opposition to Christianity is now greater than ever, he believes that the various societies, like the Brahmo-Somaj, the Arya-Somaj, and others, will help to break the chains of caste and superstition, and that Christianity will in the end prevail.

A CHILD BITTEN BY A SNAKE.

A remarkable test of faith was applied recently among the Santhals in India. It is the invariable custom among the heathen, when any one is bitten by a deadly snake, for the friends of the sufferer to offer a sacrifice to Mahadeo, the monkey-God. Rev. A. E. Halgert, the well-known missionary of Santhalistan, states that Thekra, a bright little girl ten years old, the daughter of Christian parents, was lately bitten by a Karait snake, the bite of which is generally fatal. He says, "She was bitten at 6:30 A. M. and was brought to me at once. I washed the bite, and then lanced it freely, and placed the hand in warm water to induce bleeding, and otherwise treated it medically. By-and-bye swelling of the arm set in and coma; so I appointed two men to keep her walking. The clammy perspiration, weak pulse, and the great swelling at 10 A. M. made me very anxious. Her father and mother were both present, anxiously watching their child. Would she die? would she live? who could tell?

After Thekra was bitten, the heathens surrounded the father, and said: "Now then, quick, sacrifice to Mahadeo, and save your child. If the sacrifice will do no good, it will do no harm. Your Saheb (missionary) will not be able to do anything." The father replied, "We worship Jesus and not Mahadeo. He saves His people." And all the heathens' urging was in vain. In consequence of this the heathens from two villages had a meeting, in which it was agreed that the Christians were a stupid lot, that would not even sacrifice to Mahadeo when bitten by a snake; that Miss Thekra would die; that it served them right; and that the missionary Saheb would not be able to cure her.

Our Christians hearing all this became rather anxious, and prayed privately that God would help their Saheb to save Miss Thekra. At 5 P. M. the swelling subsided, and at 6 P. M. the child was out of all danger, for which we fervently thanked God at the evening service.

THE FIFTH SEAL.

A. A. 1517-72 to 1793.

By Rev. M. Baxter.*

The Change of Scene from Earth to Heaven—The Little Chronos Explained—The Cry of the Martyrs—The Response—The Time when Vengeance Would be Taken—The History of the Period—Persecution in Many Lands—The Climax of St. Bartholomew—The Slaughter in France—The Death of Charles.

"AND when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled" (Rev. 6: 9-11).

Explanation of the Symbols.

The prophetic scene is here shifted from earth to heaven, and the climax of the visible Church's degeneracy and desolation is indicated to be now reached. In answer to the Martyr's cry for retributive judgment, it is declared that an interval of a little season, or chronos, is yet to elapse before the final Day of Vengeance. But a prophetic chronos signifies 360 years,† as Bickersteth and others have long since pointed out: therefore the expression a little chronos denotes a period rather shorter and less than 360 years. Hence this cry of the martyrs is indicated to be uttered somewhere between 300 and 360 years before 1901, which from all the chronological dates appears to be the approximate year of the consummation.

In accordance with this conclusion, we find that precisely from the commencement of Luther's Reformation in 1517 until the Massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day in 1572—a period from 300 to 360 years antecedent to 1901—there was on the whole of persecutions ever known, and which naturally arose from papal bigotry and intolerance striving to their utmost to crush the Reformation.

The Severest Half-Century

D. N. Lord, who in common with Cuninghame, M. Habershon, J. Hooper, E. Huntingford and others, commences this fifth seal about the period of the Reformation, makes the following excellent remarks regarding the cry of the Martyrs:

"The cry of the martyrs is an appeal to the faithfulness of Christ to fulfil the promises of a speedy advent to take possession of the earth, redeem His people from the power of His usurping enemies, and crown them with the full redemption which is to mark

His Millennial Reign.

Their cry sprang not therefore from impatience under sufferings, nor resentment against their persecutors, but from a regard to the word and glory of the Redeemer, whose victory cannot be completed till Antichrist is overthrown, and the earth restored to the dominion of righteousness.

"With these feelings were intermixed, not improbably, pity and love for those whom they had left exposed to the sufferings and dangers of persecution, and desire that their families and friends might by the speedy advent of Christ be freed from those trials, and admitted to share in the infinite gifts of His Millennial reign. The form in which they uttered their surprise at his delay is eminently beautiful, becoming beings approaching for the first time His visible presence, meeting His smile and beholding His majesty.

"The gift of a white robe to each of them denotes that they were formally accepted, and adjudged to the inheritance of life; a white robe being the symbol of justification. The response to their appeal, that they should rest yet for a short time till their fellow servants and their brethren who were to be killed also as they, were completed, indicates that they were in expectation of a great and blissful change in Christ's administration over the world, when He should descend to vindicate their blood; that that change was to take place as soon as the number of the martyrs was completed, and that the period to intervene was but short. It is an indubitable announcement therefore that is to be one of persecution. That great change, it is subsequently shown, is the extinction of the idolatrous and persecuting powers, the banishment of Satan to the abyss, the resurrection of the saints and reign with Christ on earth, the sanctification universally of the nations, and conversion of the world into a paradise of righteousness and peace. The answer thus clearly shows that it was in reference to these events that they uttered their wonder at his delay."

The Last Period of Antichrist

History of the Fifth Seal Period.

The persecutions carried on by the Inquisition, which was first constituted in A. D. 1208, were intensified in fierceness on account of the opposition of the Reformers to the Church of Rome: and the Papal onslaught against Protestants reached its meridian at the Bartholomew Massacre, in 1572, after which the annual victims of the Inquisition gradually diminished in number, until they nearly ceased by the time of the French Revolution in 1793.

In Spain the Inquisition seems to have raged with more cruel violence than elsewhere, and the history of its dominion there has been fully written by Llorente, who was its official secretary in 1789-91. It was first fully established there in 1481, and from thence until 1572—a period of 91 years—22,725 persons were publicly burnt to death. From the year 1572, which was the zenith of Papal persecutions, to the year 1781, not more than 10,787 persons were publicly burnt; but there were altogether more than 300,000 condemned to exile, which often involved entire ruin. Moreover, many others perished in dungeons of confinement and broken-heartness, bringing desolation upon their families and relatives. Such were its victims in Spain alone, apart from its ravages in Italy, France, Germany, Switzerland and Flanders.

In Britain the only time of general persecution was the five years of Queen Mary's reign, from 1553, to 1558, during which period several hundred persons were put to death by burning or otherwise, including Ridley and Latimer and Cranmer.

In the Netherlands, during six years from 1567 to 1573, eighteen thousand persons were publicly executed by the sword, the gibbet, the rack and the flames; in the persecution by the Duke of Alva's Spanish troops; and many others were killed in fighting against the Duke. According to Gibbon, Grotius and Mede, 100,000 were all killed altogether. The Netherlands had been ceded by Charles V. of Austria to the crown of Spain in 1556, and, as many of the Dutch had adopted Luther's Protestant faith, Philip II. of Spain, sent the Duke of Alva to exterminate the Dutch Protestants.

In Italy, during the period from A. D. 1500 and 1600, the historian McCrie states that the prisons of the Inquisition, particularly in Rome, were filled with victims, including prisoners of noble birth, male and female, men of letters and mechanics. Multitudes were condemned to penance, to the galleys, and other arbitrary punishments, and others were put to death.

In France, in 1545, Baron d'Oppeda, military commander of Provence, proceeded, in obedience to the Pope's mandate, to extirpate the Vaudois in that provinces; he led his troops against them and slew 4,000 persons, including 500 women who had taken refuge in a church, but who, as the Abbe Guerin, an eye-witness, relates, were there outraged and killed. The Roman Catholics celebrated this event by singing Te Deums in their churches.

During 1559 and 1560, a colony of Protestant Vaudois in Calabria was extirpated by the Pope's crusaders, and 1,600 victims were killed.

In 1568, the populace in many towns in France were incited by the Jesuits to raise tumults against the Huguenots, so that several thousand Protestants were assassinated in consequence.

The St. Bartholomew Massacre.

On August 23, 1572, the unparalleled massacre of Protestants (styled in France, Huguenots) took place on the eve of St. Bartholomew's Day. Charles IX., the King of France, had been earnestly exhorted by Pope Pius V. "to destroy the remnant of the enemy, and utterly to extirpate all the roots of so great an evil: for if they be not altogether eradicated, they will spring up again in quarters the least expected." These slaughter-breathing letters of the Pope to Charles IX., dated March 28 and April 13, 1562, urged the example of the Israelites in slaying the Amalekites and other heathen nations, and also said, "It is your duty to be deaf to every prayer, to reject every claim of consanguinity and kindred, to manifest yourself inexorable to every voice which may dare to petition for the most impious of men; and to that holy task, as it becomes our pastoral office and our paternal affection, well knowing that you are inclined to undertake it; we nevertheless think it fitting to stimulate you by this fatherly admonition." In obedience to these injunctions, Charles IX., on the evening of August 23, 1572, issued orders for the massacre of the Huguenots. The unprecedented slaughter continued for some days in Paris, until 10,000 Protestants were killed, and it was carried on throughout the French provinces and principal towns, such as Orleans, Lyons, Rouen, with more or less violence during two months, until, according to the historian Sully, 70,000 persons were killed; Perefixe, Archbishop of Paris, estimated the slain to amounted to 100,000!*

---

*An extract from his article in the November number of the Prophetic News for sale, price six cents, at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

†All year-day expositors understand a time, times and a half time, i. e., 3½ times, to be equal to 1260 years, and the word a time to mean a year, i. e., 360 days literally, but 360 years mystically. In Greek either kairos or chronos is used to express a time; chronos, which here in Rev. 6: 11 is translated season, is translated time in Rev. 10: 6; Matt. 2: 7, 25: 19; Luke 1: 57; Acts 1: 7; kairos is translated time in Rev. 12: 14, and season, in Acts 1: 7, 24: 25. Thus kairos and chronos are equivalent and interchangeable terms, each being sometimes translated time and sometimes season.

Bickersteth, in his "Guide to the Prophesies" (chap. 14, page 183), speaking on Rev. 10: 6, "There shall be a time no longer," i. e. 360 years no longer (from the Reformation), says, "O chronos is elsewhere used in Rev. 6: 11, apparently in the same sense of 360 years; the Greek word used in time, times, and half a time (Rev. 12: 14), is kairos; there is a manifest analogy between the two words kairos and chronos; chronos is used when an interval of delay has to occur (chronidzei, delayeth, Matt. 24: 48, polun chronon, a long time, Matt. 25: 19). Either of them may be equally significant of a precise period.

* The King Charles IX., who was persuaded to order the Bartholomew massacre, never had a day's health afterwards, and died in two years' time. His malady was affirmed to be unknown to medical science. Sully records that blood was said to have exuded for many days from every pore (the same is recorded of Voltaire's death), and his whole frame to have been torn by agonizing convulsions, which no sedative could mitigate. De Thou represents him as indulging sparingly in sleep, but even those short slumbers were interrupted by nightly terrors of remorse after the massacre; and he was compelled to have recourse to music as a soother and an opiate. A few days before he breathed his last, he summoned his physicians to his bedside, and complained that he was "most horribly and cruelly tortured," but received their distressing assurance that their art had been exhausted in fruitless efforts to affect his relief. Then as his favorite nurse stood by his bedside, he addressed her in a violent burst of despair, "What blood! what murder! how evil are the counsels I followed! Oh, my God, pardon and pity me. What will be the end of it? What will become of me? I am lost for ever."

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements, etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Cabinet Changes Predicted During the summer were formally announced on December 6. The President sent three nominations to the Senate, Mr. Lamar, the Secretary of the Interior, was nominated for Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court; Mr. Vilas, the Postmaster-General, was nominated Mr. Lamar's successor as Secretary of the Interior; and Mr. Don M. Dickinson, of Michigan, to succeed Mr. Vilas as Postmaster-General. None of these changes meet with general approval. Mr. Lamar is universally respected, but as he is sixty-two years old, and does not enjoy robust health, it is believed that the arduous labors of the Supreme Court will be a strain upon his powers that he will not be able to bear. The removal of Mr. Vilas from the Post Office is welcomed, but if he carries into the Interior Department the passion for small savings, which has characterized his management of the Post Office, there will probably be trouble with the Indians, for which the money saved will be small compensation. Mr. Dickinson, the new Postmaster-General, is highly respected in his own State, though not much known to the country at large. He has now, however, an excellent opportunity for distinguishing himself, which it may be hoped he will use by making the Postal Service still more efficient than it now is.

The President's Message, Sent to Congress on December 6, is a unique document in two senses of the word. There is no precedent for it, and it deals with only one subject. Instead of following the usual course of presenting to Congress a general survey of the condition of the country, and its foreign relations, Mr. Cleveland devoted his entire message to the subject of the surplus, and the means which, in his opinion, should be adopted to dispose of it, That subject, he said, was of paramount importance, and he, therefore, believed it to be his duty to urge upon Congress its immediate and undivided consideration. He estimated that at the close of the fiscal year on June 30, 1888, the surplus, added to former accumulations, would amount to one hundred and forty million dollars. This condition of affairs the President regards as a wrong done to the whole people, and a source of financial danger. He said: "This wrong inflicted upon those who bear the burden of national taxation, like other wrongs, multiplies a brood of evil consequences. The public treasury, which should only exist as a conduit conveying the people's tribute to its legitimate objects of expenditure, becomes a hoarding place for money needlessly withdrawn from trade and the people's use, thus crippling our national energies, suspending our country's development, preventing investment in productive enterprise, threatening financial disturbance, and inviting schemes of public plunder." He explained the measures taken by the Treasury to give temporary relief, and then proceeded to discuss the various schemes for preventing the accumulation. He avowed his disapproval of the application of the surplus to the purchase of bonds, or to the direct or indirect return of it to the people. Nor was he favorable to a reduction of the Internal Revenue. He said, that as the largest part of it was derived from tobacco and intoxicating liquor, which were not necessaries, it fell upon a class which could afford to pay it, and who could not present any just reason for its removal. It is to the tariff that he urged Congress to give its attention in devising means of relief. He denounced the tariff laws as "vicious, inequitable and illogical sources of unnecessary taxation," and insisted that they ought to be revised and amended. This he believed could be done "without imperiling the existence of our national interests." Especially he urged that all raw materials should be placed on the free list. Taking wool as a specimen, he contended that the farmer to whom the wool belongs, spent in the enhanced price of clothing a larger sum than he gained by the enhanced price of the wool, and he said it was the same with other commodities. Finally the President said: "The simple and plain duty which we owe the people, is to reduce taxation to the necessary expenses of an economical operation of the Government, and to restore to the business of the country the money which we hold in the Treasury through the perversion of governmental powers. These things can and should be done with safety to all our industries, without danger to the opportunity for remunerative labor which our workingmen need, and with benefit to them and all our people, by cheapening the means of subsistence and increasing the measure of their comforts."

In Deciding to write the Message, President Cleveland must have been aware that he was taking his stand at the place familiarly known as "the parting of the ways." Though in theory he submits to Congress the facts of the situation, and points out their significance and probable tendency, leaving to that body the duty which belongs to it, of providing a remedy, he makes no attempt to conceal his own opinion, of the course it is proper to pursue. He takes his stand with that section of his party which advocates a revision and reduction of the tariff. As we have seen in previous sessions, Mr. Randall and other protectionist Democrats are firmly opposed to that course, and, by voting with the Republicans, have hitherto succeeded in preventing a reduction. There is, as yet, no reason to suppose that they have changed their views; if they have not, the step Mr. Cleveland has taken will prevent his being the leader of a united party.

In the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury several important changes are recommended. One is the amalgamation of the customs and Internal Revenue systems, with a view to the abolition of several offices. A second relates to the silver problem. Mr. Fairchild proposes to stop coining silver dollars, and to melt all silver purchased into large bars, and not to coin it until there is need, but issuing certificates against its coining value. There are now two hundred and fourteen million silver dollars in the Treasury, and the Secretary suggests that Congress fix the amount of reserve to be held, and whenever that amount is exceeded by five millions, the purchase of silver shall cease. The Secretary of the Navy asks for further appropriations for new ships. He disapproves of the suggestion of Engineer Melville and others, to spend half a million in repair of the single-turret monitors. He considers that the money would be thrown away, as they would be useless in conflict with ironclads. The Secretary is naturally somewhat elated by his success in the manufacture of armor, which he says, will now cost only one-fourth more than in Europe.

The Anxiety of Prohibitionists Throughout the country as to the decision of the United States Supreme Court, in the Kansas cases, was relieved last week. On December 5, Mr. Justice Harlan pronounced the decision of the Court in favor of the State. The question raised was a new one, and the enemies of prohibition claimed, not without reason, that it would be fatal to the movement. It was contended that any State adopting prohibition, and failing to compensate the owners of breweries and distilleries for the depreciation of their property, violated the Constitution. The U. S. Circuit Court of Kansas held that view, but the Supreme Court has reversed its decision. If the people of a State, the Court says, deem any business detrimental to the welfare of the community, they have the power to suppress it just as they have the power to abate a nuisance, without being required to make compensation for whatever damage to property may thereby be caused. This is called the "police power" of a State. The decision is one of immense value, and in making it, the court has rendered a great service to the country.

The Massing of Russian Troops on the Austrian frontier caused serious apprehension in Vienna last week, and disturbed the money markets of Europe. It was supposed that Russia, having decided to settle the Bulgarian difficulty by a seizure of that principality, was preparing to meet any opposition on the part of Austria with a prompt invasion. The Austrian press and people were profoundly moved by the display of force. A prominent journal, the Pesther Lloyd said: "The situation is undeniably most serious. Russia's attitude is so threatening that we cannot but think that war is inevitable." Four Russian army corps have been placed on a war footing, and are now within a short distance of the Austrian frontier The Russian press, which is inspired by the Government, has endeavored to allay apprehension, by explaining that the troops have been sent to the district only for the purpose of quelling disturbances which were expected, and at the close of the week a more hopeful feeling was manifested.

The French President Intrusted to M. Goblet the task of forming a Cabinet, and a slate was prepared which received the President's approval. It was broken, however, by the refusal of two of its chief members to become colleagues of two other members. M. Goblet sought to make the Cabinet representative; he therefore gave two places in the Cabinet to the Radicals. Thereupon M. Ribot, who was selected for the Portfolio of Justice, and M. Richard, who was chosen for the Department of Education, declined their appointments. M. Goblet tried to remove their objections, and President Carnot used his influence to the same purpose, but without avail. The two statesmen positively, refused to sit in the same Cabinet with the Radicals. M. Goblet therefore abandoned the attempt to form a ministry, and M. Fallières was requested by the President to undertake it. Should he succeed, the Cabinet will probably be one of the same character as that of which M. Rouvier was the head.

The Crown Prince of Germany has Improved in health so much during the past two weeks that rumors have been circulated that his malady is not cancer, after all. The physicians, however, do not confirm this hope, though they appear to be surprised at the improvement. The Crown Prince himself has written a letter to a personal friend, which has been published. It shows a disposition very remarkable in a man of his station. He says: "I am able to inform you that the treatment, which the physicians prescribed after consulting together, has entirely removed the inflammation and caused the dangerous symptoms to subside. Meanwhile my bodily health has been excellent. I have never lost strength, my appetite is good, and my general appearance is that of perfect health. I purposely communicate these details to you, because it appears to me beyond a doubt that exaggerated accounts have been circulated, of the appearance of a fresh growth of unfavorable character. God will determine the course which the disease shall take. The treatment is intrusted to most eminent experts, who, in spite of all attacks levelled against them, possess my full confidence. I am in no way disheartened, and I hope one day to be able, though, perhaps, only after a long period of careful treatment, once more to devote my powers to the service of the Fatherland."

The Evangelical Alliance Commenced its Conference in Washington, D. C., on December 7. The meetings were held in the Congregational Church, on the corner of Tenth and G streets, which is one of the largest in the city. The building was densely crowded at the opening session. Mr. William E. Dodge, the President of the Alliance, called the meeting to order, and made the opening address. He briefly explained the object of the Conference and the results hoped for. The Alliance, he said, had thoughtfully studied the social and economic changes in the country, and sought to know whether existing Christian organizations were sufficient to meet growing needs. He referred to the organized power of the saloons and secular unions, the dangerous growth of cities, the loosening of family ties, the luxury of the times, the increasing passion for money, and the dying out of religious influences in many sparsely settled portions of old States, the increase and massing of immigrants, who retain their habits, language and prejudices, and who do not understand the old American ideas founded on love to God, respect for law, and a live moral sentiment. These ideas must be preserved. The Church, he said, had lost its hold on workingmen. Everywhere among them is unrest and a looking for a higher good. This meant a grand opportunity, and a time for an applied Christianity. On Friday a number of the delegates called on President Cleveland by special invitation, and were very cordially received.

An Astonishing Trick has been Played on the Civil Service examiners. They recently held an examination for positions in one of the Departments, and one hundred and twenty applicants presented themselves. One of the candidates presented an application in which his steadiness, industry and sobriety were vouched for by several influential citizens. He was a driver for a lumber firm, but his papers in the examination showed a high degree of intelligence and education, and resulted in his securing the first position on the list, with a rating of ninety-seven and a half per cent. Now the discovery is made that the man can neither read nor write. Investigation was made, and it was found that he had employed some one else to pass the examination for him, which, owing to the large number of applicants, was done without being detected by the examiners. It is expected that a prosecution will be commenced against both men. As the applicant is evidently a fraud, and must have committed perjury, he is guilty not only of breaking human laws, but of a heinous sin against God. It may be hoped that he will be led to repentance, and then he will learn that through the very principle of substitution, which he fraudulently used for a wicked purpose, he may hope for pardon. Then he can rejoice that God provided in Christ a Substitute, whose perfect life and vicarious death are accepted in his behalf (1 Cor. 1 : 30).

A Midnight Search For Shelter by a Crowd of homeless people was made in New York, on December 2. A large tenement house in Forty-third Street caught fire, and was in a short time completely gutted. It was a five-story house, and was let out in single rooms. The next morning the building presented a deplorable sight, with blackened walls, and empty window-frames from which long icicles hung. The pile of burned furniture, kitchen utensils and broken crockery in the basement, showed how much the poor tenants had suffered. A newspaper reporter was curious to learn what becomes of such persons, when fire drives them out of a great hive like that, and made inquiries. He traced a considerable number and learned their stories. One or two of them walked along the fire-escapes in their night-clothes to the next house, and begged admission, but were refused. On other floors the tenants of the next house were hospitable, and admitted the refugees. One woman who walked barefoot six blocks to the house of some friends, was asked if she had no friends nearer. She said: "No. An' I've lived here years. Ye can live years in a tinement an' niver know the people in the house, let alone the nixt door. It's not like the country. I lived in the country, and it's neighborlike there. We were freezin' in the streets." The managers of a large religious institution opposite the burned building were blamed for not receiving the barefoot crowd, who stood on the freezing pavement in their night-clothes, but they stated that no one appealed to them for admission. The man who lived next door to the institution opened his doors, built a large fire in his stove, made hot coffee for free distribution, and his wife gave away all her spare clothing, and shoes to the women. That man was a saloon-keeper. This story sounds very much like that told more than eighteen centuries ago, as an answer to the question, "Who is my neighbor?" The command, the Divine narrator appended to it, "Go thou and do likewise" is too much forgotten, even by Christians, in our great cities still. (Luke 10 : 33-37).

A Schoolboy's Comment on the Golden Rule is reported by the Bulletin, of Norwich, Conn. The school trustees of that city insist on the teachers giving prominence to instruction in morals, and they are generally obeyed. In one school, however, the result is not quite satisfactory. At a recent examination the children were asked who could recite the Golden Rule. Several hands went up, and the boys were given precedence. They had it, "Do unto others as others do unto you." The girls were then tried, and answered, "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you." The boys who had missed were evidently chagrined, and one of them was heard saying, with considerable asperity, "I guess not; that wouldn't work." Many grown-up boys seem to be of the same opinion, but those who, by the grace of God, have received new hearts, and have made the rule the law of their lives know that, like all God's laws, it works to perfection (Prov. 16 : 7).

The Timely Arrival of a Document during a trial in New York, on December 6, saved the defendant from serious detriment. He is an engineer of some skill in his trade, but some rival had informed the Inspectors that he was not entitled to hold a license, as he was not a citizen. The law is very clear that no person who is not a citizen shall have a license. The case, therefore, turned on the question whether the man was or was not a citizen. It was alleged that ten years ago he had been convicted of manslaughter in the fourth degree, and had lost his citizenship by being sent to State's prison for the offenee. The man delayed the trial as long as he could, and during its progress interposed frivolous objections, and by ingenious devices tried to protract it. He was warned that he was only injuring his case, but he persisted in order to gain time. When the Inspectors' patience was exhausted, and they were about to decide against him, a messenger entered the court and handed a paper to the defendant. He passed it over to the Inspectors in triumph. It was a document signed by Governor Hill, restoring him to citizenship, and therefore removing the obstacle to his retaining his license. He might have had it long before if he had taken the trouble to apply for it, but he did not do so until his right to hold a license was challenged, and then it was almost too late to save him from ruin. How many persons there are, acting similarly about a still more vital matter! Though Christ has died to restore to men their forfeited sonship, and God is willing for His sake to receive them, they neglect the opportunity (Rom. 5 : 18).

The Apparent Transparency of Ladies Who were photographed in Philadelphia recently is puzzling the photographer, and several scientific men whom he has consulted. The Inquirer states that one of the most experienced photographers in the city has taken a photograph of a group of eighteen young ladies in a sitting-room. When the proof was taken from the negative it presented a peculiar appearance. The ladies appeared to be transparent. In one case the panelling of the wall is clearly seen through the shoulder of a figure; in another, the edge of a half-open door, which was behind one of the ladies, cuts clear through face and bust, and also through the picture of a lady sitting in front of her, both being between the door and the camera. If this were all, it might be supposed that the ladies moved during the moments of exposure, but, in another case, a lady who was sitting in an arm-chair with a plaited willow back could not have moved, her figure being quite clear. Yet the pattern of the willow back can be seen through her neck and body to the waist, almost as clearly as if her body had not been between the chair and the camera. There is no known law of optics that explains the phenomenon, and the problem will be submitted to scientific societies for solution. However it may be explained, the singular circumstance may serve to remind us of the fact that every one stands so transparently in the sight of God. His eye reads all hearts and penetrates the flesh, which is often but the beautiful covering of a spirit hideous with sin's deformity (1 Sam. 16 : 7).

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. D. L. Moody expects to commence work at Louisville, Ky., on January 1, 1888.

Rev E. P. Hammond started for the Pacific Coast, but halted at Denver, Col., and began meetings there, several churches uniting in the movement. He expects to spend the winter in California.

Major D. W. Whittle's meetings at Dubuque, Iowa, have closed with an earnest and organized movement for a winter's hard work. The inspiration given to the churches is not likely to decline. It has gone deep down into all hearts, and Christians of all denominations are looking for the best results.

Major J. H. Cole's meetings at Sedalia, Mo., will never be forgotten in that city. The movement has not been confined to any one class. Business men and persons prominent in social circles, have made profession of faith as well as tramps and loafers. Many drunkards and vicious persons have been reclaimed.

The Bible and Fruit Mission, of New York, has had a very satisfactory return on its year's work. The restaurant and lodging-house yielded a return of $25,000, which is only $625 less than its expenditure. An important branch of the mission's work is the protective work, which is intended to care for young girls who are strangers in the city until they obtain employment.

The work in Cleveland, Ohio, conducted by Dr. L. W. Munhall, is extending through the whole city. It has been blessed especially to young men. On Sunday, December 4, an audience was gathered such as is rarely seen in a church. Dr. Munhall asked every one who had not been in a church for six months, to hold up a hand, and several hundred went up. The inquiry room is crowded every night, and some very wonderful conversions have taken place.

Mr. E. P. Telford's meetings at Fall River, Mass., are arousing a deep interest in that city, and are being much blessed to the conversion of souls. Dr. A. McCord, the pastor of the Church in which the meetings are being held, writes: "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD made no mistake, when it announced the coming of this consecrated worker and recommended him to the churches of America. He has been enabled to do great good in this city, and his visit is being blessed to the conversion of many souls." The church, which holds fourteen hundred persons, is crowded at every service.

An association for the promotion of Sabbath observance in Illinois has been organized, which will have the hearty good wishes of all Christians. We may hope that it will be only the first of many such in other States. Its methods of work are indicated in the first steps which have been taken. These are 1. To petition Congress to enact laws dispensing with the running of the mails; and with all military and naval parades; and to close the post offices on Sunday. 2. To request railroad officials to discontinue running passenger, excursion and freight trains on that day. 3. To request those who have control of our telegraphs not to receive or transmit over their lines, messages of a secular or business character on the Sabbath. 4. To request those who have control of the public press not to publish newspapers on Sunday.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, women or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 03 Bible House, New York.

DRIVING AWAY VULTURES.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And when the fowls came down upon the carcases, Abram drove them away." Gen. 15 : 11.

A Sacrifice Prescribed in Detail—A Solemn Service Disturbed by Foul Birds—Their Attack on the Sacrifice—I. The Great Sacrifice of Jesus—An Object of Attack—Divinely Ordained—The Black Prince's Order of Battle—How the Birds are Driven Away—II. On the Sacrifice of the Christian Life—Vultures of Doubt—Of Ambition—Of Care—Of Temptation—III. On the Sacrifices of Devotion—A Boy's Prayer in a Hay Loft—An Impudent Visitor on a Saturday Night—When Satan Flies—A Lord Mayor's Engagement—A Staff to be Borrowed.

ABRAHAM, when he was childless, received the amazing promise that his seed should be as the stars of heaven for number. This he believed, and his faith in Jehovah "was counted unto him for righteousness." Surely there is more righteousness in trusting the Lord, than in all the works of the flesh! Those who speak lightly of faith are of a different mind from the Lord, whose judgment is according to truth.

For the confirmation of the patriarch's faith the Lord resolved to give to His servant a gracious visitation, which should be regarded as the solemn making of a covenant, and also as a prophecy of the future history of the promised seed. Abraham was bidden to bring victims: a heifer, a she-goat, a ram, a turtle-dove and a pigeon. The man of God obeyed the command of God with great exactness and deliberation, laying the pieces of the sacrifice in due order, and then waiting upon God until He should be pleased to reveal Himself. But what is this?

The Solemn Service is Disturbed

by foul birds. The most intense devotion is liable to interruptions of the worst sort. In the East, if a camel falls dead in the lone desert, the air is almost immediately full of winged things. Vultures that had not been visible before, not so much as one of them, will suddenly appear, as if by magic, coming from every quarter and circling over the carcase. "Wheresoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered."

These and smaller carnivorous birds are the scavengers of warm countries, and do not long allow any flesh to remain undevoured. So, doubtless, when the victims presented by the patriarch Abram were laid upon the altar, they spied the bodies from afar, and hastened to the prey. It was nothing to the vultures whether they were victims slaughtered for God, or creatures that had fallen dead on the plain, for, true to their instinct, they discovered the carcases and flew to them, even as Job said of the eagle, "Where the slain are, there is she." Flights of buzzards and kites and carrion-crows began to make their appearance in the sky, and they would have swooped down upon the sacrifices and defiled them, or borne them away piece-meal, if the patriarch, who had presented the sacrifices, had not kept watch at the altar. This he did right earnestly and vigorously, so that we read in the text, "When the fowls came down upon the carcases, Abram drove them away." When we meet with God, we must be serious and resolute in His worship; and if difficulties arise, we must encounter them with all our might, resolving that we will offer to God a sacrifice which shall not be torn by Distracting Influences.

I think that this staying of Abram to defend the sacrifice, when the ravenous birds came down upon it, may be used as a lesson to us in three respects. First, let us zealously guard the great Sacrifice of Christ. When the foul birds, which are so numerous, especially just now, come down upon the sacrifice, let us drive them away. Secondly, let us guard that minor sacrifice, the grateful sacrifice of ourselves. When the birds of temptation come down upon it, let us drive them away. Thirdly, let us anxiously guard those separate sacrifices of devotion which come out of our dedicated lives. When anything comes down to disturb us in prayer or praise, let us resolve that we will drive it away.

I. First, with regard to the great Sacrifice of our Lord Jesus Christ. This has been, and always will be by the enemies of God. One would have said, if one had not known human nature, that the doctrine of the substitutionary Sacrifice, Christ dying in our stead, would, at all events, have commanded the loving confidence of every human heart. It would seem too grave a charge to bring against our apostate race that they would set to work to cavil at the divine expedient, and so pick holes in their own salvation, and try to contradict the kindest hope that God Himself could set before them. But so it has been. The preaching of the Cross is, to them that perish, foolishness. Therefore, dear friends, all of you who by faith approach the Sacrifice of our Lord Jesus, and who base your hopes of heaven thereon, watch lest the vultures come down, and be ready to drive them away.

The Great Object of Attack

Note well that the sacrifice which Abram guarded was of divine ordination. Because this sacrifice was divinely appointed, he could not bear that kites and crows should peck at it, and tear it at their pleasure. It is even so with the Sacrifice of our Lord Jesus Christ: my blood boils, that so many men should dare to assail that which the Lord

Jehovah Has Appointed.

They dare to say that it is immoral to suppose that our sin could be transferred to Christ, or His righteousness to us. Thus to charge the essential act of grace with immorality, is to profane the Sacrifice of God, and count the blood of Jesus an unholy thing. We are anxious to drive off those who peck at our Lord's substitutionary Sacrifice, because that Sacrifice is of divine appointment.

Next, we see a further reason for guarding the Sacrifice in the fact, that it is of most solemn import. That sacrifice was so to Abram. It meant, you know, a covenant. The sacrifice, as Abram had presented it at God's appointing, was the token of his being brought into covenant relationship with God. Now, to my mind it is one of the most delightful truths of Scripture, though so much neglected, that God's people are in covenant with God, by a covenant of grace. An old Scotch theologian was wont to say that he who understood the two covenants, understood the whole science of theology, and I believe it is so. The very pith of the whole business lies in that broken covenant of works, by which we are ruined, and in that everlasting covenant of grace, ordered in all things and sure, by which we are saved. Therefore will we drive away the ravenous birds as long as we have a hand to move. As we love the souls of men, we will spend our last breath in the defense of our Lord's substitution.

We will do this all the more because, as I have said to you before, this is the chief point of attack. Every doctrine of revelation has been assailed. but passed by the black prince at this hour runs as follows: "Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the crucified King of Israel." If they can carry the bastion of substitution, if they can throw down the great truth of atonement, then all the rest will go, as a matter of course. Therefore let us gather up our strength, that we may vigorously chase the vultures from the altar of the living God. "How are we to do it?" says one. Well, we can all of us help in this struggle. First, by a constant, immovable faith in Jesus Christ our crucified Saviour for ourselves. Oh, rest in Him, my beloved! Rest in His great Sacrifice every day more; rest more intelligently, more happily, more implicitly, in that finished work of His, which He has wrought out for all His people. Let your own confidence be strong, and then very frequently make an open declaration of your faith in the atoning Sacrifice. I say "very frequently," for I think the oblation of our confession of Christ should be presented continually in these days. The more frequently we bring forward the truth of the atonement the better, when so many are covering it, caviling at it, or contradicting it. Let your conversation be full of Christ crucified; and if there be any question anywhere about this matter, take your stand, and let all know that you have seen that Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. Take care that there be no hesitancy about this truth. When the birds come down upon the Sacrifice, let your childlike faith, and your clear statement of the truth, help to drive them away.

The Order of Battle

"God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Stand ye fast, each man in his place, in the defence of this central truth of our most blessed faith, and be prepared, for the sake of this, to endure all things from the adversary. Abram was an old man; and a vulture, and especially a dozen vultures, eager for their prey, are not easy to deal with; they are show no respect for the sacrifice, and certainly not for those who would prevent them from dishonoring the sacrifice. Angry, and resolute, and free from every principle of reverence, nothing is finer play to them than to tear the great Sacrifice of God. Be you ready to endure anything for the sake of the doctrine of a crucified Saviour, made sin for us though he knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him. "When the fowls came down upon the carcases, Abram drove them away." To this work let us give ourselves till the sun goes down, and we fall asleep to behold the vision of God.

Very Ugly Customers,

II. But now, coming, perhaps, closer home to some of you dear friends, let us apply this example of Abram to ourselves in the matter of

The Sacrifice of Our Lives.

It is our reasonable service, that we present ourselves a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God by our Lord Jesus Christ, and we must guard our consecration against the temptations which will assail it. We have been "bought with a price," and henceforth we put in no claim to ourselves, for we belong absolutely to the Lord that bought us. Now, now the vultures will come! The carrion-crows and kites will from afar behold this sacrifice, and they will hasten to the prey. You do not see them now, perhaps. No, but the traveller does not see these evil fowls, till all of a sudden the sky seems darkened with them. The horrid, hideous creatures come like lightning for rapidity, and they are hungry as death when they arrive on the scene. You that are consecrated to God may expect that, though you do not see them, there are vultures looking upon the sacrifice, and you must be prepared to drive them away.

"What Sort of Vultures will there be?" says one. Well, there will come doubts as to eternal things. There will be questions about your own wisdom in giving yourself up to God. I hope you have been strangers to such birds of prey, but some of us have not been: doubts as to whether there be a God to serve; doubts as to whether there be a heaven, an eternal future, a blessed reward; doubts as to whether it is well to give up this world for the next, or not. Drive them away, brethren! Drive them away!

Possibly there will come to some of you younger folks fond dreams of ambition. Now you are content to be a Christian; satisfied to mix with poor people in holy service; quite pleased at an opportunity of teaching in a ragged-school. Ah! but there may come a moment when Satan will shew you the kingdoms of this world, and he will say, "All these will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me;" and you may feel as if the service of Christ was not, after all, very respectable; that you could do better in the world; find choicer company, enter more select society. But drive, drive these carrion-crows away, my brothers and sisters; there cannot be anything comparable in the world to the service of God; there cannot be anything so worthy of your noblest manhood, as to be truly the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ. When these fowls come down upon the sacrifice, drive them away.

Another wretched sort of

Black Crows,

however, assails men more frequently; they come in the form of the cares of life—the care of getting bread, the hardness of labor. Many a man has said "Well now, I have many children, and I work hard, and I am poor; surely I must not seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness;" and straightway he begins to neglect the assembling of himself together with God's people, and he thinks that he must spend a part of the Sabbath in labor, and times that he used to spend in prayer are given up to meaner employment. But oh! if ever a man ought to cling to Christ more than at any other time, it is when he is poor. You that are burdened with cares, you are the people who want Christ most of all. The heavier your difficulties, the more grace you need. Cling you all the more closely to your Lord when troubles come. When the birds come down upon the sacrifice—those carking cares, and wearinesses, and troubles of life—drive them away.

Perhaps I may be speaking to certain consecrated men and women, who have met with other horridly filthy fowls. Of course, you never saw vultures in their native state; if you did see them once, you would never want to see them again, they are such loathsome creatures. But there will come to godly men, sometimes, temptations to sin. The purest have been tempted to impurity; the most devout have been tempted to blaspheme; men full of integrity have been tempted to dishonesty, and the most truthful to falsehood. We cannot tell what we may be tempted to do. But here is our one business with vultures: let us drive them away.

But there is a nasty sleepy kind of vulture, called idleness; one of the vultures that sit and sleep by the hour together—and I think I have seen them about here sometimes. This vulture comes to some good men, who say they belong to Christ, but that question we must leave to their own consciences. It is and they say that "they think they have labored long enough." They used to be in the Sunday-school when they were younger, but they are now weary of such constant toil. I have been slenderly cheered lately by a large number of brethren who have greatly sympathized with me, and helped me to fight the Lord's battles, by bravely looking on. They remind me of Mr. Gough's story of Betty and the Bear. She beat the bear with her broom with all her might, and her brave husband, who had climbed a ladder into the loft, helped her grandly by bidding her hit the bear harder and harder, while he looked on. I hope I may yet receive worthier help than this. Let us all be up and doing, and take our full share of the warfare. I exhort you, if the vulture of indolence comes your way, to drive it away.

A Sleepy Vulture,

One vulture, too, that wants to be driven away, is that of measuring yourselves with other people. Let no one make another man his measure and standard. I pray you not to do so, for if you do, it will be a vulture that will defile your sacrifice. Therefore, when any of the ravenous fowls of evil come down upon your life's sacrifice, drive them away.

III. And so I must close with only a few sentences upon this last point: Guard all

The Sacrifices of Your Devotion.

When the fowls come down upon your sacrifices of prayer and praise and meditation, drive them away. Have you noticed that if all day long there is not a knock at the door, there will be one if you retire to pray? It is wise to do as the Saviour says, "Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut to the door, pray to thy Father that seeth in secret." That shutting of the door means, that we are to seek secrecy, and to prevent interruption. A little boy, who was accustomed to spend a time every day in prayer, went up into a hayloft, and when he climbed into the hayloft he always pulled the ladder up after him. Someone asked him why he did so. He answered, "As there is no door, I pull up the ladder." Oh, that we could always in some way cut the connection between our soul and the intruding things which lurk below!

There is a story told of me and of some person, I never knew who it was, who desired to see me on a Saturday night, when I had shut myself up to make ready for the Sabbath. He was very great and important, and so the maid came to say that some one desired to see me. I bade her say that it was my rule to see no one at that time. Then he was more important and impressive still, and said, "Tell Mr. Spurgeon that a servant of the Lord Jesus Christ desires to see him immediately." The frightened servant brought the message; but the sender gained little by it, for my answer was, "Tell him I am busy with his Master, and cannot see servants now." Sometimes you must Use Strong Measures.

Did not our Lord tell His messengers, on one occasion, to salute no man by the way? Courtesy must give way to devotion. It is incumbent on you that you should be alone with your Lord, and if intruders force an entrance, they must be sent about their business.

Alas! if you send men and women away, still evil birds will not be so dismissed. Wandering thoughts and inward troubles—how shall these be chased away? That door must be well listed which keeps the devil out. He comes in at the smallest opening, for he is a serpent, and serpents get in where other creatures cannot; they have a wriggling way with them. Satan will twist himself into us when we hope we are beyond his reach. Drive him away, brother! He will go if you resist him. "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." He will not stand fire if you are determined to have a shot at him. As to vain thoughts which harass and distract you, seriously determine that you will drive them away. All your thoughts of sorrow, dismiss them at the mercy-seat. As for all business thoughts, do not entertain them. Say what Abraham said to the servants, "Abide here whilst I go and worship God yonder." Tell the world, "So far may you come, but no farther—I must, I will, keep my sacrifice of praise and prayer before the Lord."

A Lord Mayor's Engagement.

Sir Thomas Abney had been accustomed to have family prayer at a certain time. He was made Lord Mayor of London. His hour of family prayer being some time about the time of the banquet, he begged to be excused for a little, for he had an urgent engagement with a special friend. He then went and called his family together, to meet with God in prayer. Do the same; if even a banquet should come down upon you, quit the table for the altar, and your guests for your God. When our time for prayer draws near, if all the twelve apostles were to preach in our street, we ought not to give up our private prayer for the sake of hearing them all. When the birds come down upon the sacrifice, drive them away, however fine they may be: drive off the golden eagles as well as the crows.

Now, my dear hearers, I will keep you no longer, except to say this: those of you who came here to hear the Word, I pray you do not go away without a blessing. Something or other has happened, perhaps, to distract you; drive it away. The Sacrifice of Christ is the thing you have to look to. Look unto the Lord Jesus, and be saved; and if anything comes between you and His atoning death, drive it away. You that have believed in Jesus unto eternal life, and have just begun the divine life, you will not be long before you are beset with various temptations.

Be Prepared For Those Fowls

whose chief is the prince of the power of the air, and labor to drive them away. You think that, since you are converted, it will be all plain sailing now. You make a mistake: it is now that the battle begins. Be prepared for conflict. I have no doubt Abram, being a sheik, carried a good staff with him. Be ready with a staff, borrowed from the Good Shepherd, to drive away the temptations that are sure to assail young believers

As for you, dear old saints, you have offered your sacrifice, and it is towards evening, and the sun is going down, do not be surprised if you should feel a horror of great darkness, even at the last; but rest assured that the Lord will come, and cheer your darkness with the vision of His covenant love. Drive those doubts away, and those fears of death. You are going home; do not be afraid. Jesus is coming to meet you; therefore dismiss every fear. Stand by the sacrifice all the day; stand by the sacrifice when night comes on, birds or no birds. Stand by the sacrifice whether you see a vision of glory or not. Stand by the sacrifice till you behold the Lamb on His throne. One thing I have made up my mind to: whether I find present joy or present sorrow, present commendation or present censure, I will be faithful to my Lord, and stand by the sacrifice until I die, with one hand upon this Book and another upon the horns of the altar. I will be a sacrifice for Jesus because He is a Sacrifice for me. I count it all joy to preach Him and His Cross if I may but win souls and be found in Him at the last. The Lord bless you, and be with you, my brethren, for Christ's sake!

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

DANIEL WEBSTER'S DOMINANT THOUGHT.*

AT a dinner at the Astor House, when Daniel Webster was Secretary of State under President Fillmore, after a period of silence which fell upon the company of some twenty gentlemen who were present, one of the guests said:

"Mr. Webster, will you tell me what was the most important thought that ever occupied your mind?"

Mr. Webster slowly passed his hand over his forehead, and in a low tone inquired of one near him:

"Is there any one here who does not know me?"

"No; all are your friends."

"The most important thought that ever occupied my mind," said Mr. Webster, "was that of my individual responsibility to God." And after speaking on this subject in the most solemn strain for some twenty minutes, he silently rose from the table and retired to his room.

This incident, related by Harvey in his Reminiscences, serves to illustrate the attitude of great minds towards eternal things. Great men are not scoffers. The men of flippant sneers and godless jests are men of small calibre and shallow intellect. It is not the wise man who has "said in his heart there is no God." It is not the great man who casts off fear and restrains prayer before Him.

An Indian Chief's Reasoning.

One evening, the Indian Chief Teedyuscung, King of the Delawares, was sitting at the fireside of a friend. Both of them were silently looking at the fire, indulging their own reflections. At length the silence was broken by the friend, who said, "I will tell thee what I have been thinking of. I have been thinking of a rule delivered by the author of the Christian religion, which, from its excellence, we call the Golden Rule."

"Stop," said Teedyuscung, "don't praise it to me, but rather tell me what it is, and let me think for myself. I do not wish you to tell me of its excellence; tell me what it is."

"It is for one man to do to another, as he would have the other do to him."

"That's impossible; it can't be done," Teedyuscung immediately replied. Silence again ensued. Teedyuscung lighted his pipe and walked about the room. In about a quarter of an hour he came to his friend with a smiling countenance, and taking the pipe from his mouth, said, "Brother, I have been thoughtful of what you have told me. If the Great Spirit that made man would give him a new heart, he could do as you say, but not else." Thus the Indian found the only means by which man can fulfil his social duties.

* From Christian Thought, a Bi-monthly magazine, edited by Rev. Charles F. Deems, D. D., L. L. D. Price 40c. a number; six numbers for $2. Published by Wilbur B. Ketcham, 71 Bible House, New York.

The Consecration of the New Cathedral at Truro, England.

Voltaire Proved a Dotard.

It is a remarkable fact that Sir Isaac Newton, in his work on the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation, said that, "if they were true, it would be necessary that a new mode of travelling should be invented." He said that "the knowledge of mankind would be so increased before a certain date or time terminated—namely, one thousand two hundred and sixty years—that they would be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour." Voltaire got hold of this, and, true to the spirit of scepticism of all ages, said: "Now, look at the mighty mind of Newton, who discovered gravitation! When he became an old man, and got into his dotage, he began to study the Book called the Bible; and, it seems, in order to credit its fabulous nonsense, we must believe that the knowledge of mankind will be so increased, that we shall be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour. The poor dotard!" The self-complacency of the philosophic infidel made his friends laugh. But if he should get into a railway train, even a sceptic to-day would have to say, "Newton was the philosopher, Voltaire the dotard."

CONSECRATION OF TRURO CATHEDRAL.

(See Illustration.)

A CEREMONY of a deeply interesting and significant character was performed in England on November 3. It was the dedication and consecration of a new cathedral. It is six centuries since such an event occurred before. After the great fire in London St. Paul's Cathedral was rebuilt, but the cathedral at Truro is the first absolutely new cathedral that has been built in the country since the Reformation. The interesting event attracted a large and distinguished company, among which was the Prince of Wales, who eight years ago laid the corner-stone, with appropriate ceremonies.

The cathedral is a massive structure, costing more than half a million dollars. Its style is Early English, and its chief external features are a central and two western towers. It is situated in the centre of the city of Truro, in Cornwall, and when fully built will be 300 feet long; the height of the central spire, 250 feet; the width of the nave and choir, 29 feet; and the height of the vaulting, 70 feet.

The city of Truro was gaily decorated for the occasion with flags and evergreens, while the principal streets were thronged with people. The weather was showery, which somewhat marred the public enjoyment.

Shortly before eleven o'clock the choristers, clergy, and bishops proceeded round the church, singing, "Blessed City, Heavenly Salem," and afterwards stood in two lines along the covered entrance. The prelate present was the Archbishop of Canterbury, and twenty-one bishops took part in the ceremony. On the arrival of the Prince a procession was formed, and after a sentence from the Litany and a collect the choir sang, "Lift Up Your Heads, Oh Ye Gates." After the ceremony of consecration, the Archbishop offered a prayer of thanksgiving, and the Bishop of Truro, and the Prince of Wales, as Earl of Cornwall, signed the sentence of consecration. The consecration sermon was preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

His Grace took for his text Gal. 6:9: "In due season we shall reap if we faint not." He spoke of life as the season of sowing, and said that now is the seed time, and "autumn lies beyond," so that the work just concluded must be part and parcel of some vast spiritual preparation, which is being widely made for the future, and makes it greater far than its own greatness."

IRENE MORLEY'S VACATION.

(See Illustration on Page 797.)

A KNOTTY question was being debated one summer night in July, in a small bedroom in New York. A number of illustrated pamphlets and large sheets of paper were lying around, forming the material for discussion, and over these were bending two young ladies clad in dressing-gowns, over which fell their luxuriant flowing locks. Brushes and combs were on the table, too, and in the pauses of the discussion the girls would bring a handful of the bright silky hair over a shoulder and comb and brush it vigorously.

The question to be decided was one that had been reached by a long and toilsome road. Jennie and Irene Morley were employed in one of the large dressmaking establishments of the city, and away back before Christmas they had resolved that they would commence a little fund, which was to grow by careful economy until the fall, when it should pay the cost of a holiday of a week or two in the country. Every cent was valiantly guarded, walking instead of riding in the cars was rigidly practiced whenever the weather would permit, chocolate-creams and caramels were abjured, and so the fund grew from nickels into quarters, and from quarters into dollar-bills. On this July evening it was sufficient for the purpose, and business now being dull and vacations in order, the question came up of the place to which they would go. The advantages of various country retreats were set forth in the pamphlets which Irene had collected, and were being critically compared.

It was refreshing on this sultry night, even to think of fresh breezes, shady trees and cool rippling streams. Not a breath was stirring, and the mingled aroma of the gutter below the window, and the hide and leather warehouse opposite, floated into the room. But the girls did not care for that to-night while their thoughts were busy with the prospect before them. At last the various attractions were winnowed down, and a little village named Gloverdale selected. The railroad fare to that point was larger than to some others, but it would cost less for board there, and so the account was balanced.

"I do hope Minnie will take my class for me," said Irene, when that question had been settled. "It will spoil half my pleasure if I cannot arrange for those girls before I go."

"I have no patience with you, Irene," said her sister. "You think as much of that wretched Sunday-school class as if you were the mother of the children. Surely you are entitled to a holiday, after going Sunday after Sunday all the year, in all weathers, and sitting there teaching them when you ought to have been resting and enjoying yourself. No girl that has to earn her own living ought to teach in Sunday-school, and I verily believe if you had not me to look after you, you would not go to the country at all if you failed to find a substitute for the class."

"Ah! Jennie, you do not understand my feelings about those poor girls. They are so poor and have such wretched homes, and God has enabled me to do so much for them. Nearly every one of them was so miserable at home, and was so beset with temptations to vice, that ruin seemed inevitable. I have won their confidence and have convinced them that lives of purity are worth living. Some of them are genuine Christian girls now, and all of them are virtuous. They have done much, too, to raise the character of their homes. And the influence is spreading. When they see a girl in danger, they get hold of her and bring her to the class. Oh! it is a delightful work."

"Well, you always did like to slave for other people, and I suppose you always will," said Jennie, "but we should never agree about it. I believe in getting some enjoyment when one can. We work hard enough!"

A few days later, the two girls realized the long expected pleasure, and began a two weeks' sojourn in Gloverdale. It was all that they expected of it, and their enjoyment was all the greater for their vivid recollection of the miseries they had left behind. It seemed to them perfect bliss to rise, and instead of going to the hot work-room, with its sultry atmosphere, to wander off into the woods to gather wild-flowers, to sketch, or only to sit still on some mossy bank and listen to the birds and inhale the invigorating air.

Irene's Country Acquaintance.

"Look," said Jennie, one evening as they were thus seated, "there is an aboriginal native; poverty and wretchedness are not confined to the cities, it seems."

Irene's eyes followed the direction indicated, and lighted on a young girl about her own age, whose unkempt hair and general slovenliness contrasted strongly with the neatness of the city girls.

"I should like to speak to her," said Irene.

"Oh, let her alone," said Jennie; "she is not worth any trouble. Those country girls are so stupid!"

"They have souls," was Irene's quiet answer. And she rose and went over to where the girl was. The "native," as Jennie had dubbed her, noticed Irene's approach and turned around to confront her like an animal at bay. Resting her back against a rustic fence, and extending both her arms, she stood gazing at the approaching girl. There was a rough grace about her posture, and her face had a beauty of its own. Her dress was gathered up to hold the firewood she had been collecting, revealing feet and ankles innocent of stockings. That one of the city boarders should speak to her evidently surprised her, and she was still more surprised at the gentleness of Irene's salutation, so different from the supercilious airs that city folks generally put on.

A very few words put her at her ease, and Irene soon learned where she lived and all about her. Jennie, who watched the interview languidly from her seat, was astonished to see her sister actually kiss the girl as they parted, and she thought she could see tears in her eyes.

"Oh! you do not know what a nice girl that is," said Irene, as she rejoined her sister. "She is really intelligent, but so poor. Her father is too old to work, and she and her mother work to keep him and themselves. They live quite on the other side of the wood, and I have promised we will go and see their home to-morrow."

"How ridiculous you are, Irene! I shall not go, I am sure. The next thing, you will be making dresses for that girl and her mother, and soups for the wretched old man. I have no patience with you. You carry philanthropy to an extreme."

Jennie's prediction was fulfilled. Her sister became, during their stay, a ministering angel to the poor family, not only making dresses, but reading the Bible to them and explaining it. She lost something of the delights of the country, but when she went back to her city home, she was able to thank God that the light of the glorious Gospel had entered one dark soul through her labors.

THE FAMILY OF TRIPE COURT.

By Brenda.

THE MOTHER'S CROSS.

EIGHTEEN months ago, in mid-winter, at about twelve o'clock one morning, two wretched children, girls of about seven and nine, might have been seen rushing down Tripe Court at full speed, looking back every now and then with affrighted faces, as if all the tigers and wolves in the world were after them. A fog, thick and yellow, like a bad-colored blanket, hung over London, especially about the Thames, hiding everything on its murky waters in impenetrable gloom. One end of the narrow street called Tripe Court opened on to the river, and the mud and slime of its banks seemed not only to cover the uneven footway, but to have crept up with damp and set their unsavory hue on the fronts of the houses. The houses were tumbled-down, rickety dwellings of three stories high, crammed with rickety children and rickety folk of all ages. One hardly knew which to pity most, the poor little boneless, big-headed children who swarmed there, or the poor old people with their lumbago and rheumatism and worn-out bodies, and hearts that had long ceased to hope for any warmth or comfort on earth.

Well, it was for those aged ones—and the Vicar and the district visitors could have happily pointed you to some here and there—who in their dark and draughty corners, and in their pain, where able to contemplate with quiet rapture their entrance, that soon must be, into that—

"Happy land, Far, far away,"

whose music sometimes seemed to reach them in faint, sweet echoes, borne through endless vistas of gone years, when through an open door or window they heard their children's children singing the dear familiar hymn on Sunday afternoons in the Mission Church of St. Peter close by.

Up from the river a keen, icy wind was blowing to-day, making the rags that hung on them in the name of clothes to flutter about the two children as, clinging to each other, they ran headlong down the court. Their terror was evidently from behind. Something was at their heels, or they fancied it was, and pressing them very closely, for they kept glancing back, and ran all the madder when they saw it was gaining upon them. What could their eyes see in the yellow mists—a bull, broken loose, and wild from the shambles, tearing after them; or, a runaway horse, with flyaway mane and snorting nostrils? Yet neither of these could it have been, for neither bull nor horse could have wedged itself in at the doorway, or walked up the stairs of the house in Tripe Court, into which the children at last bolted, and they seemed not a whit calmer for gaining this shelter than when they were outside. Whatever was pursuing them could pursue them into their very home—it was clear the children felt that. Helter-skelter they scrambled up the stairs: they were met half-way by a big rat calmly descending from the upper regions, but that was nothing—rats in Tripe Court were thought little of, unless they got into the larders or gnawed the babies. Reaching the first-floor front room, the children burst in with the distracted cry, "Mother! Mother! he's coming! he's coming down the court now, as fierce as he can be!"

The room was clearly a place where "washing was taken in." A clothes-line hung along the blackened ceiling, on which a few tattered and coarse under-garments were hanging out to dry in a sorry sort of way, with arms and legs extended, showing the great gaps and rents in them. The air was full of steam, and a strong smell of soapsuds pervaded it. The wooden floor was bare, and there were great holes in the skirting boards, suggestive of mice and rats, and black beetles and other crawling things, which made one wonder how anyone could settle himself down to sleep at night in Tripe Court. Perhaps no one ever did, at least not in this particular room, for where were the beds? They were not evident on first entering, and the family inhabiting this room had no other apartment, They ate, drank and must have slept—if they ever wanted to sleep—here.

In the general muddle and dirt of the place, for it was very dirty, notwithstanding the presence of soap and water, one could see a broken chair or two and a table, and a few other articles of miserable furniture. A safe, hung up by a cord like a birdcage in mid air, was discernible through the steam and fog in one corner. It had once on a time been a wire safe, but the wire had long ago been torn off it by the pests of these poor dwellings, the rats; and now there remained only the wooden framework, exhibiting to view on every side the broken scraps of cheese and bread and dried fish and what-not, that made up the household larder. It was a "safe" still in its exalted position, so far as the rats and mice were concerned, but not as regarded anything else. The smoke and smuts and blacks of the foul river-side got in and covered the food, and a thieving hand had only to be outstretched to get from it anything it wanted.

In front of the fire, which was the one bright spot in the room, a crazy old wicker cradle was set. A tattered shawl had been thrown over the head, to keep the draughts out from the little bundle that lay inside. At the window, before a large wash-tub, enveloped in steam, a woman was busy wringing sheets. She turned as the children entered, and the impression that one first got of her was that she was a stout, bonny sort of person, with a very broad chest and back, and strong arms and a healthy red face. Looking closer, however, the impression faded. In every line of her face, rendered hot and red from her exertions over her tub, there was suffering written. Her forehead was crumpled with it, her large, dark eyes expressed it, her lips were drawn tightly together by it; she wore, in short, the anxious, harassed look of a person goaded by some intolerable pain, from which there was not an instant's respite or relief.

Bridget Mite, for this was the woman's name, the mother of the two fugitive children, had been a sufferer for years from a bad leg, such a leg as poor laundresses and others get, from standing continually over their employment. She had been treated for it from time to time at the poorhouse Dispensary, but as rest was what was always prescribed for her there, and as rest in her miserable circumstances she could not have, being, though not a widow, the chief bread-winner of the family, her visits to the parish doctor were of little use, and her leg now was worse than it had ever been before. At her children's cry—"Mother, mother, he's coming, he's coming down the court now, as fierce as he can be!"—Bridget dropped the sheet she was wringing, shook her hands free of water, and caught up in her red, smoking arms the little bundle out of the cradle. Then she said, pushing back the hair from her heated forehead with a gesture of great weariness, mingled with a slight touch of impatience, "Get the bed ready, children."

As if it were a matter of routine they were quite accustomed to, the two little girls had already flown to a corner of the room, in which there was a thing popped upright against the wall, and were hauling it down with all their might. It turned out to be a folding-up bedstead. They prepared it with an old mattress and pillow with quickest despatch, then, leaving it ready for whoever was coming to lie on it, the poor little creatures, after their struggles, came over and stood beside "mother," holding a little bit of her gown, and their eyes fixed intently toward the door. In perfect silence they waited a few moments, then their faces grew more apprehensive, and they took a firmer grip of mother's gown. A footstep was heard underneath the window, next a loud thud against the house-door, as if an elbow had forced it open, then a voice muttering and growling at something, and a sounding blow against the stair.

"That's the rat," said Polly, the elder child, to her little sister Sue, under her breath; "he's having a whack at that there rat we met a-comin' in."

There was another blow, and another, and yet another, and the two little sisters, as they listened, could not help bursting out into an hysterical sort of giggle, for they knew the rat was being missed each time.

They did not giggle for long though; their faces quickly re-assumed their terrified expression as the game of trying conclusions with the rat below was soon given up, and the tumbling and bumping and creaking of uncertain footsteps began ascending the stairs. They came nearer and nearer, those footsteps; there was a grand tumble and shuffle, finally on the landing outside, a fumbling at the door handle, and then the door burst open and the dreaded figure, before whom the children had fled dismayed, appeared on the threshold—the figure that of all others should have brought joy to that home, at whose coming there should have been little arms outstretched to welcome, little lips put up to be kissed, little happy voices shouting "Father!" and a woman's heart, whatever her bodily suffering, made infinitely lighter and gladder. For the figure that entered only to bring consternation and trouble was none other than that of Tom Mite, the father of the children and the husband of Bridget.

Father and husband!—he was a disgrace to the sacred names. He stumbled in—a fearful-looking object in his drunkenness, his clothes covered with mud where he had had a tumble, his eyes fearfully bloodshot and rolling; his hat crushed in, his hair anyhow, and his great fists clenched and held in front of him, as if he were parrying or preparing to deal a blow. No bear ever looked more morose, no bear ever more dangerous. He advanced a few steps, pointing at the wall straight in front of him, and "hallooing" and shouting to an imaginary object, then something brought him up short—a wooden stool, lying back downwards on the floor, with its one leg in the air. He looked down at it, began swearing at it, and trying to smite it with his fists, as he had tried to smite the rat on the stair; he found he could not hit it any more than the rat; he did not stoop low enough, but the stool could not do what the rat could—run away; it remained, and with a fearful oath the wretched man at last kicked it violently with his boot and sent it spinning and whirling across the boards in the direction of the window. Seeing the stool making straight for them with its one little dangerous spike, the children fled in different directions from their mother's side to avoid it. The next moment they heard a cry and a moan, and they saw their mother leaning backwards, with her face whiter than anything else in the room, and her eyes closed. They saw what had happened: the stool had hit mother, hit her on her bad leg. They ran forward to her assistance—she clutched at them just as she was fainting, and they all fell to the ground together, and the man, who should have been the first to raise and succor them, strode to the bed and lay down to sleep.

If it had been on any other occasion, the little sisters, Poll and Sue, would probably have laughed at their all rolling over together, but oh! it was impossible to laugh. There was poor baby screaming on the floor, where it had rolled when the mother's arms slackened their grasp and let it go; and there was mother lying so perfectly still and white on the bare, hard boards, making no effort to rise, that a fear stole over them that she might be dead.

They quickly regained their feet, Sue picked up the baby, and Poll stooped low down over her mother, and called anxiously once or twice, "Mother, dear!" There was no answer.

"One of us must go for Mrs. Treeby, or else Mrs. Job," said Sue decisively, rocking the baby to and fro.

"Not Mrs. Treeby—Mrs. Job," replied Poll as decisively. "Mother likes her the best."

The women spoken of were near neighbors, and both equally kind, but with this difference: that the one came in and helped quietly in emergencies, without comment, and the other came in and helped, but passed her remarks, and gave her advice freely upon everything. Mrs. Treeby would remark on the dirty floor, and insist on scrubbing it there and then, whether convenient or otherwise. She would wonder that Bridget did not set to work and mend the children's clothes, and tidy her room oftener. "Did she like such rags and dirt and disorder? She really thought she must, or she would manage differently." Then Mrs. Treeby would rate away at Tom Mite for his drunkenness, and make him angrier than before, and call him a brute and other names behind his back to Bridget, who of course did not like it. Wives never do like to hear their husbands abused by others, however bad they may be; at least the good wives do not, for there is always the remembrance of that solemn vow they made once "to obey, serve, love, and honor" him, and in their own undaunted fidelity they cling to the hope that if not possible now, they will be able to do it all again one day when Tom, Jack or Bill shall have been won back to the paths of holiness and sobriety from which he has for a time strayed.

The other neighbor, Mrs. Job, loved cleanliness and order, and sober husbands, quite as well as did Mrs. Treeby. She saw the dirt and disorder of poor Bridget's home, the rags of the children, their grimy faces which had earned for them at St. Peter's Schools the nicknames of "Sooty" and "Smuts." She had quite as critical an eye for these things as had Mrs. Treeby, but, when she was called in to help, Mary Job remarked on none of them. She made proper allowances for Bridget; she knew what a sufferer she was and how she toiled at that tub for bare bread, and how, with that aching, throbbing leg of hers, she must have felt after her washing was done, in the days that she must let everything else go just for a few minutes' rest; that she was beyond scrubbing floors, or mending clothes, or tidying up her "place," and if people thought her careless and blind to it all—"well, they must." It never occurred to Mary Job to think such a thing, and she would have been ready to give her poor friend, Bridget Mite, credit at any moment for having the same longing and aspirations after better things that she herself felt in her own home in Tripe Court, though it was cleaner than the Mites's—those longings that found expression in the hymn they sometimes sang at the little riverside Mission Church, and which brought tears to the eyes of so many:

"O for the pearly gates of heaven;
O for the golden floor;
O for the Sun of Righteousness,
That setteth never more!"

And Mary Job never abused Bridget's husband, or took him to task for his drunkenness. She knew that the kind, true way of helping Bridget, was to take things as she found them, without passing any remarks or offering advice. So little Poll guessed quite rightly when she said mother liked Mrs. Job the best.

"Which of us shall go?" asked Sue.

"You go, and leave me baby, and I'll stand by mother," said Poll, with her little black face looking very pinched and miserable.

Sue gave up the baby, and ran off. In less than three minutes she came running back, followed by Mary Job, a thin, spare woman with arms bare to the elbow, and steaming as if she, too, had been washing. Without a word she knelt down beside Bridget, loosened her gown, raised her in her arms, and held something under her nose that she had brought with her in a bottle. The little girls stood by, intently watching everything that Mrs. Job did.

(To be Continued.)

QUARTERLY REVIEW.

S. S. Lesson for Dec. 25, John 1: 1-16. Memory Text, John 6: 63.

The Centurion a Model of Great Faith—The Tempests Which Christ is Able to Control—Christ a Complete Healer of Body, Soul and Spirit—His Power Thrice Manifested—His Proclamation of the Theocracy—Conditions of Naturalization in His Kingdom—His Explanation of John's Relation to the Kingdom—The Two Alternatives Presented—The Spirit of Christ's Legislation—How the Kingdom was to be Founded—The Tactics its Enemy Would Pursue—Its Progress and Consummation.

A WOUNDED SPIRIT.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.*

"The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity; but a wounded spirit, who can bear? Prov. 18; 14

The Wounds of Friends—Unkindness Leading to Backsliding—The Cure for a Wounded Spirit—In Jesus Only—Forgiveness of Wrong—Argument Seldom Remedies—An Apology not to be Waited for—Wounds Caused by Self-Love.

WHO does not know the bitterness of a wounded spirit? Who is there that has never felt the keen pangs, which a sense of injustice and wrong done to him have caused? Who is there that has not at some time or other tossed from side to side through the livelong night, stung with the remembrance of uncalled for words and deeds which and trod upon love? Who has not felt the ingratitude of the deceiver, and felt as though his very heart would burst when he cried, with David: "It was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it: neither was it he that hated me that did magnify himself against me; then, I would have hid myself from him: but it was thou, a man mine equal, my guide and mine acquaintance. We took sweet counsel together, and walked unto the House of God in company." When the sorrow comes from one who has been all in all to us, as a Christian brother or a Christian sister, the sorrow is intensely poignant, and God's question comes with tremendous force, "A wounded spirit, who can bear?" Jesus knows this sorrow, for in all our afflictions He was afflicted (Isa. 63: 9); and surely it is of Him that it is prophesied, "One shall say unto Him, 'What are those wounds in thine hands?' then He shall answer, 'Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends'" (Zech. 13: 6).

Ruptured Friendship

Is God aware of it, when anything thus wounds us to the quick? Is it a matter of any moment to Him? If not, why did He permit David to write such words as we have quoted? Why let us know that He understands it all? Now we have met with very many children of God who have gone into direct backsliding through a wounded spirit. Only a week or two since said, "I have known the Lord, I used to be full of joy in Him; I walked in the light, and my life was one song of joy, because for Christ's sake God had pardoned all my sins, and I lived for Him alone. But the leader of the mission did a very unkind thing, and it hurt me! I could not stand it, so I left off coming to the meetings and I left off prayers, and Bible reading, and now I do just as the world does, and I don't care for anything better." "Are you happy?" "Happy, why, no; of course I'm not happy, but then, I can't go back amongst those that have hurt me, and I don't care to go anywhere else." "Then you will punish Jesus who died for you, and lose your own soul, because some one, you think, has done you wrong." And this is the case with thousands. Man wounds them, and instead of carrying their cause to God, and trusting Him to set the wrong things right, they turn their backs on Jesus, and revenge themselves on Him who died for them. Is this like Jesus? When He was reviled, He reviled not again, when He suffered (for He did suffer exquisitely). He threatened not, but committed Himself unto Him that judgeth righteously (1 Pet. 2: 23).

A Deeply Convicted Woman

Is there no cure for a wounded spirit? Yes;

But Only in Jesus.

The great Physician alone can bind a broken heart, and He knows how. "He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds" (Ps. 147: 3); He was anointed "to bind up the broken-hearted" (Isa. 61: 1) and it needs divine anointing to do it. The sympathy of man only makes the wound deeper, and reminds us the more of all we have had to suffer, but Jesus attracts the eye to Himself, and shews why such a God of love has permitted such a wound, and His healing rests that heart upon His own strong heart, so that, instead of continuing to nurse up its own wrongs, the wounded one is taught to love, pity, pray for and do good, to the one who has injured him. There is no such cure for a wounded spirit as the divine power to love his enemies. Dear friend and reader, have you a wounded spirit? Do you carry in your heart a bitter, stinging sense of wrong done to you? If you are a Christian, let me ask you, Did you never do as much wrong to Jesus when you despised His offers of salvation? Are you not now treading "under foot the Son of God, and counting the blood of the covenant wherewith you were sanctified, an unholy thing, and doing despite unto the Spirit of grace? (Heb 10: 29.) Does He feel toward you, as you feel toward those who have injured you? Or does He love one who is acting as His enemy, does He offer an instant reconciliation, and say, "Turn ye, backsliding children (Jer. 3; 14), "I will heal their backsliding" (Hos. 14: 4)?

There are many who attempt to heal their wounded spirit by asserting their rights, and arguing the matter out, and seeking explanations. But, however right and just their cause may be, there are always two sides to a dispute, and one person cannot see the other's side, and will always feel that he is the aggrieved party. But when the matter is put into God's hands, He "makes the crooked places straight, and the rough places plain." He begins by showing that He makes no mistakes, that He was not asleep when the thing happened—He permitted it, and had a purpose of love in it. "The Lord executeth righteousness and judgment for all them that are oppressed" (Ps. 103: 6). If we were never oppressed, we should how He would execute righteousness and judgment. How blessedly He did it for Joseph, who was so bitterly wronged by his brethren, and then, again, by Potiphar's wife! God permitted it all, that He might bring out this despised brother, this unjustly accused prisoner, and set him next to the throne of Egypt. If Joseph had not passed through this oppression, he would never have passed his examination with God, for the great post of deliverer in the time of the famine. If we had no enemies, we could never exercise the divine prerogative of loving our enemies, blessing them that curse us, doing good to them that hate us, and praying for them that despitefully use us and persecute us. It is a heavenly, a noble, vocation to love our enemies, since Christ loved us when we were enemies. Jesus teaches this in the parable of the unmerciful servant. His lord forgave him the enormous debt he owed, but, instead of acting towards his fellow-servant as his lord had acted towards him, he took him by the throat, and commanded payment, and, when the poor debtor could not pay he who had been forgiven threw his fellow-servant into prison until he should pay all that was due unto him; and then, he who had forgiven him reversed his sentence, and dealt with him as he had dealt with his fellow. God wills that we should do unto others as He does unto us. "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful" (Luke 6: 36). "But," says one, "it is he who has wronged me! Let him humble himself, and I will be merciful." Dear friend, is that the way God has done with you, or do you remember the Shepherd going after you until He found you? O, if He could afford to love you when you were yet an enemy—"God commendeth His love toward us in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us"—surely, you can afford to love the one who wounds you and wrongs you. "But," you say, "I cannot; all my sense of justice revolts against it." Dear friend, with Jesus, "mercy rejoiceth against judgment" (Jas. 2: 13).

Never Know

Are You Willing

that God should make your heart full of love? Are you willing to give up the little pleasure which your indignation against your enemy affords you, and which makes you tell your story to so many sympathisers? Are you willing to give up self-pity, and to let Jesus come into your heart, to live His own life of love there? If so, He will show you how you have grieved Him, by losing Him the opportunity of showing how a Christian can love his enemies; but He will not reproach you. He will undertake the whole thing, and make it a hundred times sweeter to pray for the one who has injured you, than it ever has been to tell the story of your wrongs. O, it brings us so near to Jesus, to forgive and to love our enemies, and bury the past where He has buried it, in the depth of the sea. And it is wonderful how He uses a Christ-like soul to bless his enemies, and to bring them nearer to God. After all, that which causes a wounded spirit is self-love; we are not wounded so much because wrong has been done to Christ, as because wrong has been done to us. The healing of Jesus lifts us out of ourselves into a purer atmosphere, a diviner life, in which self has no voice, no vote, in which not we live, but Christ liveth in us. The old sensitiveness to how we were treated is gone, when Christ takes possession; we no longer feel as we did, because self-love is no longer on the throne. Perhaps nothing has done so much

To Injure God's Work

all over the world, as the indulgence of a wounded spirit. Nothing so grieves the Holy Spirit, nothing so shuts up our hearts from large sympathy with the interests of Christ's kingdom, as this wounded spirit. The Lord lead us, each one, to come quickly to the Great Healer, that this stumbling block in the way of His people may be removed, and that instead of, for our own wrongs, we may say, with Jeremiah, "For the hurt of the daughter of my people I am hurt." (Jer. 8. 21).

*In some schools the teachers are not required to devote the time to-day to a Review of the quarter's lessons, but may select a subject for themselves. Mrs. Baxter has sent this article as a suggestion to such teachers.

MRS. M. BAXTER'S WORKS

THE following works by Mrs. M. Baxter, and others, may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York:

"Words for Daily Life." "Practical Lessons." "Life Lessons." "Leaves from Genesis," "Trials and Teachings of Paul." By Mrs. M. Baxter. Each, paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 35 cts. "Record of International Conference on Divine Healing. London, 15" Paper, 25 cts. "Living Word in the Gospel of St. John." Paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. "God's Prophets." Paper 35 cts.; cloth 50 cts. "Lessons from St. Matthew's Gospel." Paper, 35 cts.; cloth 50 cts. "Teachings from St. Mark's Gospel." Paper, 35 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. "Sunday-School Lessons, 1877 and 78." By Mrs. Baxter. Each, cloth, 50 cts.

Any of Mrs. M. Baxter's tracts in the following list may also be had at one cent each or ten cents the dozen: "If it be Thy Will," "Does Sickness Sanctify?" "Casting All Your Care," two cents each or twenty cents the dozen. "God's Purpose in Sickness," "The Great Physician," "Job's Sickness," "God's Side of Prayer," "Pastor Rein," "The Body for the Lord." Also the following tracts at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen, by the late Rev. W. E. Boardman: "He Careth for You," "A Perfected Self," "Paul's Thorn," "The Father's Rod," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "The Law of Liberty," at three cents each, or thirty cents the dozen. "Bethshan, a House for Healing," and "Enduement with Power," Miss C. C. Murray's tracts, at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen. "Repeating Prayer," "Thou Art Loosed," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Redeemed from all Evil," "Anointing Him with Oil," at three cents each or, thirty cents the dozen. "Pastor Blumhardt," by Miss Sisson, at one cent each, or ten cents the dozen. "What About the Use of Means," and "The Apostolic Attitude," at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Asking and Receiving," by Mrs. Boardman, at two cents each, or twenty cents the dozen. "Simple Truths about Faith." By T. Kirkman, "Health by Grace," and by H. W. S., "The Lord Hath Done It."

PRAYER.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will avail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take,
What parched grounds refresh, as with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear—
We kneel, how weak! we rise how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others,—that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee?

To the Reader.

If you are on the look-out for a particularly excellent religious book for either your own use or for a gift to a friend, allow me to recommend this one.

AT JESUS' FEET,

A Prayer, Promise and Poem for Every Day in the Year.

(Thoroughly Scriptural and Evangelical.) 12mo., 372 pages, neat cloth binding, gilt top and a silk marker. Price, by mail, $1.25, or five copies sent prepaid for $5.00.

"We believe this class of books have a blessed mission, and we think the reader will find this among the choicest of the many that are sending streams of sunshine through the world."

It makes a very acceptable Christmas Gift or New Years Present.

NEW CHRISTMAS TOKENS.

FROM MORN TILL EVE. By Cecelia Havergal. Illuminated Texts with Poem for every day in the month. "Exquisitely beautiful." price 35c. Copies also in special binding, hand-painted, 75 cents.

PINE AND CEDAR. Bible Verses for every morning and evening of the month. Arranged by O. E. L. S. Preface by Anna Warner. Printed in Emblematic Colors, and tastefully bound in cloth. Size 3x4½ inches. "One of the prettiest booklets of the year." Price, 30c.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE—An Illustrated Text-Book of Precept and Promise. Printed in Colors. In full gilt cloth and gold edges. Price 40c.

FLOWERS OF HOPE—A Scripture Text-Book for every day in the year. Arranged by R. E. M. Printed in colors by Nister. Size 4x5¼. "Strikingly attractive." Price, 60c.

☞For Sunday-schools we will supply any of these four booklets, one dozen assorted, at 20 per cent. discount. Postage free.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 & 3 Bible House, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

They Interest as well as Educate.

Ask your Bookseller to show them.

TWELVE TIMES ONE. By Miss M. A. LATHBURY, artist-author of "Seven Little Maids," "Ring-a-Round-a-Rosy," etc., etc. Facsimile water-color drawings. 4to. boards. $1.75.

WORTHINGTON'S ANNUAL for 1888—A series of Original Interesting Stories, Biographies, Natural History, Sketches, Poems, etc., etc., for the young. Illustrated with upward of 500 original engravings, printed in colors. 4to. boards. $1.50.

WORTHINGTON CO., 747 Broadway, N. Y.

BEAUTIFUL HOLIDAY GIFT!

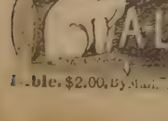
Life of Mrs. MARY D. JAMES, by Her Son.

"This is the very thing to present to a friend.

"No book produced in the past ten years seems to us so well adapted to promote true Christian living, suffering and dying, as the life of Mrs. James."

This is the judgment of REV. J. M. BUCKLEY, expressed in an editorial in the Christian Advocate of September 1st, 1887. Sent post-paid, for one dollar.

PALMER & HUGHES,
32 and 64 Bible House, New York.



AGENTS Send for E. B. TREAT'S new books, including MOTHER, HOME, and HEAVEN, and poetry by 30 best authors. Both sold. Elegantly ill., $2.75. Send $1 for outfit. Also 5000 Curiosities of the World. $2.00. By Mail. E. B. TREAT, 757 Broadway, N. Y.

DIAMOND DYES

COLOR EVERYTHING.

Unequalled for Silk, Wool, Cotton and all Fabrics and Fancy Goods. Brilliant, Durable and Economical. Any one can use them.

32 COLORS—10 CENTS EACH.

Remember, these are the only Pure, Harmless and Unadulterated Dyes.

Beware of other Dyes, because often Poisonous, Adulterated, Weak and Worthless.

We warrant these Dyes to color more goods, package for package, than any other Dyes ever made, and to give more brilliant and durable colors. Sample cards free.

THE DIAMOND PAINTS,
GOLD, SILVER, BRONZE and COPPER

For gilding Fancy Baskets, Frames, Lamps, Chandeliers, and for all kinds of ornamental work. Equal to any of the high-priced kinds, and only 10 cents a package. Also Artists' Black for Ebonizing.

Sold by Druggists everywhere. Send postal for Sample Card directions for coloring Photos, doing fancy work, and making ink.

WELLS, RICHARSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

WORTHINGTON'S NEW BOOKS.

LOCRINE.

A TRAGEDY IN VERSE.

BY ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

1 vol., 12mo, 149 pages. Printed on select woven paper, large type, English cloth, $1.50. Same English edition, $1.75.

NEW NOVEL.

VANDERHEYDE MANOR-HOUSE. By M. CRUGER, Author of "A Den of Thieves," etc. 1 vol., 12mo.....$1 25

PURITANS AND PILGRIM FATHERS. By HOWELL and WILSON. 1 vol., 12mo.....$1 75

WORTHINGTON CO., 747 Broadway, N. Y.

THE BEST XMAS MUSIC!

Dr. DOANE'S NEW CHRISTMAS CANTATA:

Waiting for Santa Claus. JUST OUT. Merry Songs, Interesting Dialogue, Splendid Effects. Can be given by any School after FOUR Rehearsals. Sent on receipt of 25 cents.

Dr. LOWRY'S NEW CHRISTMAS SERVICE:

The True Light. Most appropriate Scripture Selections, new and melodious Songs, admirably arranged and adapted for celebrating Christmas times on Sunday, or any other day.

Sent for 5 cents; $4 per 100.

Christmas Annual No. 18. A beautiful collection of Carols by the best authors. Furnishes an abundance of useful songs for the Christmas gathering. Sent for 4 cents; $3 per 100.

ANTHEMS CANTATAS, SERVICES and CAROLS issued in previous years can be furnished. A full catalogue sent on application.

BIGLOW & MAIN, 76 E. Ninth St., New York.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago.

GRIND YOUR OWN Bone, Meal, Oyster Shells, Graham Flour & Corn in the $5 HAND MILL (F. Wilson's Patent.) 100 per cent. more made in keeping Poultry. Also POWER MILLS and FARM FEED MILLS. Circulars and testimonials sent on application. WILSON BROS. Easton, Pa.

"THE WORD FOR THE DAY."

Text, Hymn and Prayer for every day in the year. Compiled by A. J. A. R.

"The Word for the Day" is an excellent little book consisting of a Scripture text, a selection from a hymn, and a brief prayer for each day in the year. The compilations are made with reference to the practical needs of every-day life. Bible verses that are helpful, inspiring, and that serve to put one on guard against the surrounding evils are chosen as the leading thought, and following them come "their echoes from the human mind." It is a book which would serve to sweeten and brighten daily life in every home.—Chautauquan.

"The word for the day" has been compiled with reference to real every-day needs not ficticious or sentimental ones. Its thoughts are very well selected, and its brief prayers are prayers indeed; for devoutness it is admirable.—New York Evangelist.

"The Word for the Day" is one of those strong helps to a true Christian life.

16mo. Cloth, plain, 75c.; Gilt, $1.00: American Seal, $1.75; Calf, flex., $2.50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publisher,
JOHN IRELAND, 1197 Broadway, N. Y.

UNIVERSAL TRIPOD COAT RACK.

IN HALL, PARLOR OR BEDROOM

The Cheapest in the Market. Suitable Everywhere.

$4.00 at retail. If dealer does not keep them, get up a club of 12, buy a dozen for $36.00, and make $12.00 a day. Send for sample outfit, cards and circulars. Boxed, Assorted Woods, Antique and Mahog. Rub Finish, Solid Polished Brass Trimmings. Active person can make money.

UNIVERSAL TRIPOD CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

CHRISTMAS TIME.

No time like

The Present.

No time-keeper like

The Waterbury.

No present like the

Waterbury Time-keeper.

A perfect stem-winding watch for $2.50.

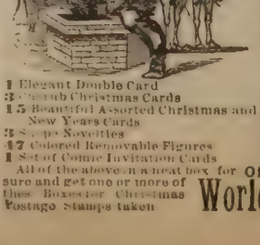
Sold only by retail watch dealers.

WARREN'S FEATHERBONE Health Waists

Boned with Featherbone. Not Injured by Perspiration or Laundrying

100 PER CENT PROFIT & SAMPLES FREE to men canvassers for Dr. Scott's Genuine Electric Belts, Brushes, &c. Lady agents wanted for Electric Corsets. Quick sales. Write at once for terms. Dr. Scott, 842 B'way, N. Y.



"At Xmas play with merry cheer, for Christmas comes but once a year."

SANTA CLAUS SURPRISE BOX OF CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR ALL.

During the past summer months when all branches of trade were unusually quiet, we took advantage of the dullness of the market and purchased for spot cash an immense stock of Cards, Toys, Jewelry, Fancy Goods, etc. from this stock we have made up our Santa Claus Surprise Box, which gives for the small sum of 50c. the best assortment of the kind ever offered for the money. The Santa Claus Surprise Box Contains

1 Elegant Satin Fringed Christmas Card
250 Motto & Autograph Album Verses
Game of Game of Fox and Geese
25c Package Imported Perfume
Game of Nine Penny Morris
1 Fine Silver Plated Thimble
250 Riddles and Conundrums
1 Pack of Divination Cards
1 Every to Plated Finger Ring
2 Fine Landscape Xmas Cards
Half Doz. Red Lunch Satchels
18 Scrap Embossed Pictures
1 Handsome Birthday, stamped ready to be worked
2 Knots Embroidery Silk
1 Embroidery Needle
1 Book of Kensington and other Embroidery Stitches

All of the above in a neat box for ONLY FIFTY CENTS. Three Santa Claus Surprise Boxes for $1.20. Be sure and get one or more of these Boxes for Christmas Postage Stamps taken World Manu'f'g Co. 122 Nassau St. New York.

Another Reduction in India Shawls

Valley Cashmere.

$200	Shawls	for	$125
$250	"	"	$150
$275	"	"	$175
$300	"	"	$200

All other kinds marked d wn in proportion.

Lord & Taylor,

Broadway and Twentieth Street.

NEW YORK.

SILKS.

James McCreery & Co.

announce a continuance of their special sale of Black Silks during this week, and, in addition thereto, they will offer 200 pieces of Colored Silks in Satin Weaves at 85 cents. They are worth $1.25, and contains the most select colorings now in use.

A personal examination or by sample is solicited.

Broadway and 11th St.,

New York.

SEDGWICK STEEL WIRE FENCE.

The best Farm, Garden, Poultry Yard, Lawn, School Lot, Park and Cemetery Fences and Gates. Perfect Automatic Gate. Cheapest and Neatest Iron Fences. Iron and wire Summer Houses, Lawn Furniture, and other wire work. Best Wire Stretcher and Plier. Ask dealers in hardware, or address

SEDGWICK BROS., RICHMOND, IND.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS should send for catalogues and sample packet of Gospel Tracts, Booklets and Books for Sunday School and Evangelistic work. Send stamp for postage. Gospel Book Depot, Orillia, Canada.

We Offer Cash Inducemets to gentleman or ladies sending us orders for a leading family magazine. We are confident you can get up a club of five or more. Write us. Charles Trainor, Station D, New York P.O.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. X., No. 51. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, DEC. 22, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER:

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE REV. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL. D.

RECREATIONS GOOD AND BAD. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE SIXTH SEAL. By Rev. M. Baxter.

MISS BARTLETT'S BENEFACTION. (With Illustration.)

Modern Phylacteries—The Medical Mission at Shanghai—Fifty Years Among Indians—A Robber Robbed—A Shoeblack's Rescue—A Petition in a Locket, etc.

PICTURE OF A REMARKABLE MONUMENT IN CHILI.

THE THREE CONDITIONS. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: A Servant's Reproof, etc.

PICTURE OF A PERUVIAN INCA.

THE FAMILY OF TRIPE COURT. A Serial Story. (Continued.)

HEROD AND JOHN THE BAPTIST. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE LATE REV. W. MORLEY PUNSHON, LL. D—Scenes in His Life.

THE LATE REV. W. M. PUNSHON, LL. D.

Birth and Early Life—Death of his Mother—Conversion and Theological Studies—Preaching in a Poor Woman's Home—Appointment by the Conference—Marriage—Denominational Recognition—Popularity of his Lectures—Visiting a Condemned Murderer—Death of his Wife—Exile from his Native Country—Welcome in America—Shipwrecked on Lake Superior—Return Home—Last Illness and Death.

WHEN the news of Dr. Punshon's death was cabled to this country in April, 1881, a portrait and brief biography of him was published in this journal (April 28). After the lapse of more than six years, a voluminous "Life," by the Rev. F. W. Macdonald, has appeared, in which many more facts than were accessible in 1881 are recorded. As Dr. Punshon made many thousands of friends in this country during his five years' sojourn here, the following sketch collated from the "Life" will be appreciated:

William Morley Punshon was born at Doncaster, England, on May 29, 1824, and died on April 14, 1881, within a few weeks of the completion of his 57th year. His school life was over before he was fourteen, and during that brief period he had been to at least four different schools. Considering the career that lay before him, one cannot but regret that in the means of culture and discipline were not more abundantly forthcoming. His love of poetry showed itself very early, and he would commit it to memory almost without effort. An old friend, still living in Doncaster, writes: "My earliest recollection of Dr. Punshon is that of hearing him, when eight years old, standing on a chair, repeat Byron's lines beginning, 'The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold.' This he did in a vigorous style, which I have remembered ever since." (See Illustration on first page, No. 1.) At the end of the year 1837, when he was only thirteen years old, his school life terminated. and almost immediately afterwards he entered the office of his grandfather, Morley, who was in business as a timber merchant, at Hull. To such routine work of the counting-house as fell to his share, he was fully equal, but it would have been impossible to mistake him for "a successful merchant" in embryo. He read poetry more eagerly than ever, and tried his hand at writing it, and devoted much of his time to the study of political oratory—his ambition at this time being that one day he would obtain a seat in Parliament.

His Youth

He had been with his grandfather but little more than six months when a crushing blow fell upon him in the death of his mother. The lad loved her dearly, and her loss blotted out the light of his young life. It was, however, the means of leading him to the true Light. It sobered and solemnized him, and led him to seek Christ. The Rev. S. Romilly Hall, his pastor, took a deep interest in his welfare, and under his preaching and conversation the lad found peace. He joined the Methodist Church on May 23, 1839, when he was under fifteen years of age. It was a working church, as most of the Methodist churches of Yorkshire are, and young Punshon was encouraged to labor. He was but two months over sixteen when he preached

His First Sermon.

It was delivered at the little village of Ellerby, near Hull, and to a congregation which doubtless had no conception of the extent to which the work would grow, the commencement of which they were witnessing. Exactly three years later Mr. Punshon bade farewell to commercial life, and at the age of nineteen commenced his theological studies. He continued preaching while studying earnestly, availing himself of every opportunity that came within his reach. Sometimes his services were held in a barn, sometimes in a farmer's kitchen, and once he went to a village where the only available meeting place was the one room which a pious woman called "home." There the audience became so large, that several persons clambered on the poor woman's bed, doubtless much to its detriment, and from that point of vantage listened to the young preacher (See Illustration No. 2). This was his first introduction to an experience with which he afterwards became very familiar—that of speaking to an audience pressed for room.

An Appointment by the Conference was received by Mr. Punshon, in 1845, when he was twenty-one years of age. It came from the Whitehaven circuit, and after the four years of probation customary in the Methodist community, he was designated to the Newcastle circuit. It was at Carlisle that his real power and value were first clearly recognized. His church was crowded at every service, members of other denominations coming to the Wesleyan chapel to hear the young preacher. It was during his residence there that he married Miss Vickers, a lady to whom he was devotedly attached, and who became a true helpmeet to him in his work. In 1852 he was removed to Sheffield, where he met with success similar to that in Carlisle.

Denominational Recognition came to Mr. Punshon earlier than to the majority of Methodist ministers. The truest test of the man's capacity was given in this. The young man of twenty-nine who is singled out from among his two thousand ministerial brethren for honorable service, must have proved his worthiness in a very signal manner. This honor was bestowed on Mr. Punshon in 1853, when he was requested to take a prominent part in the annual missionary demonstration in London. The manner in which he performed it introduced him to another sphere, in which he won some of his most remarkable triumphs and became known outside the borders of his denomination. The Young Men's Christian Association invited him to lecture, and as it was the custom of that body to publish at the end of the course, a volume containing verbatim reports of all the lectures of the series, Mr. Punshon's production appeared side by side with those of the most famous men of

The Religious Platform

of that day, and it did not suffer by comparison. His subject was "The Prophet of Horeb" and the lecture was delivered January 17, 1854. It occupied two hours in delivery, and the vast audience sat spell-bound to the close. From that time forward Mr. Punshon's fame as a lecturer rivalled his fame as a preacher, and his services in that capacity were in continual request. His lectures made him known to other denominations of Christians, and many heard him who would never have set foot inside a Methodist Church though an angel had been preaching there. His eloquence conquered all prejudice, and the young Wesleyan preacher became a power in the community. Throughout England, Scotland and Ireland the Y. M. C Associations in all the great towns invited him to lecture, and in all he met with the same success. His lectures on "John Bunyan," "The Huguenots," "Daniel in Babylon" "Wesley and his Times," and "Science and Literature in Relation to Religion" were all marvels of oratory which captivated the audiences.

In 1855, the Conference appointed Mr. Punshon to take charge of the church at Leeds where he remained for the usual three years. During his residence there he had a painful duty to perform which made a deep impression on his mind. A condemned murderer sought his services in the brief interval of two weeks which in England is all that elapses between sentence and execution. Mr. Punshon had none of that sickening sentimentality which makes some ministers and laymen run over with sympathy for a criminal under sentence of death, and forget that the victim of his crime was not allowed the time for spiritual preparation that the murderer gets. However no minister, least of all a man so kindly as Mr. Punshon, would reject such an appeal, and he visited the villain in his cell (See Illustration No. 3). He says in the diary which forms part of the biography: "I felt an awful responsibility, apart from the mere natural shrinking, which was sufficiently painful, but I cast myself on the Lord. In the far-off future, if I am spared to see it, this man's case will be a study (the pathology of the heart); at present all minor questions are absorbed in the gain or loss of his soul."

His next sphere of labor was in the Bayswater district of London, and it was while laboring there that he was bereaved of his beloved wife, a loss which for a time completely prostrated him. This loss ultimately led to his Coming to America.

After his wife's death, the care of his motherless children was undertaken, with great devotion, by her sister. One could feel no surprise, and it would have occasioned no remark, that he should have resolved to make the lady his second wife, but for the peculiar state of the English law on this vexed question. Like many others, Mr. Punshon was convinced that in taking such a step, while he was obeying a law of nature, he was contravening no law of God; though he could not take it in Great Britain without infringing the existing law of the realm. An invitation to visit Canada, by the Methodist body of the Dominion, gave the opportunity he wished for. Such marriages, strangely enough, are of legal force in the colonies, though not in the mother country. He was married in Toronto. His brethren in the ministry in England thereupon struck his name off the roll of "the legal Hundred," or managing committee of the Wesleyan denomination. As Mr. Punshon's conscience was at ease, and he was happy in his choice of a wife, he bore the obloquy with equanimity, knowing that it disgraced the men who inflicted it, and not him. He went on with his work unmoved, but, after two brief years of wedded happiness, he had again the unspeakable sorrow of seeing her who was the light of his eyes and the companion of his life suddenly fade away from his view, and enter the mysterious spirit world. Later on in life, he married again, and his third wife has survived him.

He sailed from Liverpool April 14, 1868, accompanied by his eldest son and on the 14th of May he was introduced to the General Conference of the M. E. Church, assembled at Chicago. as the representative of the English Wesleyan Church. He was greeted with enthusiastic and long-continued applause. In a communication made at this time to the Methodist Recorder, Mr. Punshon graphically refers to his Visit to a Camp-Meeting.

"I have twice had the opportunity of seeing the true American camp-meeting. One day I drove to the famous Sing Sing camp-ground, and was hardly prepared for anything so systematic or so vast. For several days before, the weather had been unusually showery, which had somewhat diminished the attendance, but when I preached in the afternoon there could not have been fewer than 4,000 people present, and on the following Sabbath I understand there were twice that number.

"I afterwards attended a meeting on the Ebenezer camp-ground, near Wilton, in Ontario, Canada, which, on the whole, pleased me better. Some 200 conveyances of all kinds and sizes were hitched to the trees, the horses taking it as quietly as if they knew the wherefore of the gathering. The circle was a clearing in a forest over-arched by a leafy shadow of elm, maple and pine. As I gazed upon the upturned faces. three thousand of them at least. with the silvery moonlight glancing through the bright leaves overhead, and the ruddy camp-fires throwing radiance upon strong features, I thought I had rarely seen a spectacle so sublime, and it was to me an opportunity awful and yet inspiring, to preach in that cathedral of God's own architecture, 'all the words of this life.'" (See Illustration No. 4).

The Presidency of the Conference was conferred upon him during his residence in Canada, five successive years (1868–1872), a remarkable and unqualified endorsement of the estimate formed of Mr. Punshon in the Old World. The Victoria University of Montreal added to this tribute of esteem by conferring upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. During his stay on this side the Atlantic, Dr. Punshon travelled extensively. One of the scenes that appears to have impressed him most was that of Chinatown' San Francisco. He visited the mission there (see Illustration No. 5), and afterward paid a visit to the Chinese Temple. He thus describes it in his diary: "We went into a Chinese joss-house—not an imitation one, but a veritable heathen temple—where these idolaters are in the habit of worshipping. It was altogether a novel and admonitory spectacle. A heathen temple in full blast in a professedly Christian city. But God sends the heathen to the Gospel, when His Church is too penurious to send the Gospel to the heathen."

A Shipwreck on Lake Superior

was a thrilling experience of one of his journeys. He says: "We left Toronto on July 8, and travelled to Sarnia by rail. Embarked on board the steamer Manitoba, and on the 11th went through the canal at Sault Ste. Marie, which separates Lake Huron from Lake Superior. About 1 P. M. on Thursday, the 12th, the fog was coming down heavily, so I retired into the saloon. Not two minutes after I saw the captain rush frantically to the alarm bell and reverse the engines. At that moment the fog lifted, and there was a desolate coast close upon us, towards which we were drifting at the rate of six miles an hour. Two seconds only, as it seemed, of agonizing suspense, and the ship struck with a tremendous concussion, smashing crockery, glasses, doors, etc., flinging ladies down upon the floor, and causing, as you may suppose, immense consternation. For a moment the scene was terrible; happily there was no rebound, and the vessel remained hard and fast upon the rock. We found by-and-by we were on an island which was uninhabited, save at one end of it, some fifteen miles distant from the scene of our shipwreck. We all (150) landed, made fires on the beach, or rather on the rocks (see Illustration No. 6), and spent the day here, the captain trying all manner of ways to get the boat off.

At 11 A. M. next morning a sail was descried, which turned out to be the steamer Cumberland bound for the same port as ourselves. She bore down to our rescue, and stayed with us for thirty hours in vain efforts to dislodge us. At length on Saturday at about 6 P. M., the 'Manitoba' was pulled off the rocks, but alas! only to fill with water; so she was beached, and all the passengers transferred to the Cumberland, in which we made the rest of our voyage."

After the death of his wife, Dr. Punshon's thoughts turned longingly to his native country and in 1873 he concluded to return. He found his popularity had increased rather than diminished by his absence. He was elected and was appointed a Secretary of the Missionary Society, an office held in high honor by Wesleyan Methodists. He continued preaching and lecturing with unwearied energy until the spring of 1881, when he was prostrated by a severe attack of sickness. He was ordered rest and change of air, and accordingly went to Mentone in the south of France. The change was not beneficial and after a brief stay he returned home. His days were evidently numbered. On Wednesday April 3, 1881, the physicians saw that the end was near at hand. The Rev. Hugh Johnston, an old and valued Canadian friend, shared with Mrs. Punshon the watches of that night with him. About one o'clock the difficulty of breathing increased and great restlessness developed. He insisted on being dressed and sitting in his easy chair. His desire was gratified and Mr. Johnston and Mrs. Punshon made him as comfortable as possible (See Illustration No, 7,) soon afterward a change came over him." "Am I going, Doctor?" he asked. "Yes" was the answer, The successful preacher looked upward with a beaming countenance and said with a firm voice and in a deeply reverent tone, "Christ is to me a bright reality. Jesus! Jesus!" There was a smile as of rapture, then his head drooped, and so he died.

President of the English Conference

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Speaking Well of the Devil.—"A Spaniard who had lived a wild, wicked life, was upon his death bed. A priest came to visit him, and he tried to comfort the poor unhappy fellow and prepare him for death. He noticed that whenever the man had occasion to speak of Satan, he referred to him as 'My Lord the Devil.' The priest reprimanded him for speaking in such a respectful manner of the enemy of mankind, but the man replied, 'I am dying, and I do not know into whose hands I shall fall; so I do not wish to offend anyone, not even the devil.' Very few of Satan's servants are as thoughtful. They hate him while they serve him, and many are longing to quit his service if some one would show them how.

A Great Shock For Willie.—"I Know a man" said Mr. Climie, the evangelist "who had been with a friend reading one of those trashy and baneful infidel papers. Leaving his friend he went home, and was just sitting down when a sharp knock was heard at the door, and some one cried 'Willie! Willie! Are you there?' Quickly he opened the door, and found there an acquaintance who told him, much to his surprise, that the friend whom he had only just left was dead. This was a solemn warning to him. His first thought was, 'If that had been me, where should I now have been?' and the answer in his mind came quickly and fearfully, 'In hell.' But that was the beginning of his salvation, and now he is going on his way safe in Jesus.

Safe From the Demon at Last.—A Railroad conductor, speaking at the mission for railroad employees, said: "Five weeks ago last Sunday, I was running my train as usual. I was the worse for drink when we started; indeed, so helpless was I, that I lay down in the van and fell fast asleep, nor did I awake until a man came and shook me, asking me if I intended to do any work that night. Staggering to my feet, and rubbing my eyes, I found much to my surprise that we were at a junction, and I had been sleeping all the time. I prepared to do my usual work, but found it had been done for me. But this showed me that I could not trust myself, that I was powerless against the demon of strong drink. I knew that there was but one refuge, and to it I went, even to Jesus, and He has since kept me safe from drink."

John Ashworth, of Rochdale, took a great interest in the poor and the outcast. He possessed a mill of his own at Rochdale, and into it he gathered the poorest, that they might hear the Gospel. One day he was called to visit a young woman who was dying. He found her in a house of ill-fame, surrounded by her companions in misery, many of them shedding tears and trying, in every way, to comfort her; but she pushed them aside, saying, 'You can do me no good.' Mr. Ashworth spoke to her, and showed her Christ as ready to forgive and accept her, urging her to receive and confess Him as her Saviour, and she would be saved. But she seemed unable to understand. But she knew how good a man Mr. Ashworth was, and she clung to him as if his merit could help her. She took his hand in hers, and, clutching it convulsively, said, 'While I hold the hand of such a good man as you are, I am safe.' And she died while holding his hand. Ah, if she could but have carried her faith and confidence further she might have been saved. Her Christian visitor's merits could not benefit her, but Christ's righteousness would have availed.

The Only Way of Escape.—A Railroad Employee in Scotland recently related the following: "Last New Year's Day I was very much intoxicated, and as I was running along the platform to catch my train, which had just started, I was so incapable that I missed it, and fell between the rails, and the low wall of an embankment; and there I continued to lie, sleeping the drunkard's sleep, for six hours, so near to the rails that the foot-boards of the trains passed over me, When I awoke I went home, feeling very cold and stiff, but my truly providential escape from death had no effect on me, and next morning I was so intoxicated that I had to be sent home. On the following Sunday, I was very much troubled about my dreadful conduct, and the power that strong drink had over me. Could I ever get free from it? I thought, for I had tried many times, but it was of no use. There was only one way of escape open, and I knew it well. That way I determined to take; so I just went to Christ, and told Him all the sad story of my weakness and my sin. This I did, and put myself completely under His management, and asked Him, not only to save me, but to keep me from sinning against Him. And now I can thank Him that He has done both."

How the Lawyer was Convinced.—Rev. Mr. Ross relates: "Three years ago a gentleman, a lawyer of celebrity, powerful in mind and clear in intellect, began to read some infidel writings. When asked by his minister to become a Christian, he replied, 'No, I cannot; I cannot make up my mind upon this point, and I am not at all sure about the doctrine of regeneration.' His pastor, wise in the Lord, did not attempt to argue with him, but asked Him to go to a Gospel meeting that night. 'What like is it to be?' the gentleman inquired. 'Oh, nothing very much; a few poor working men testifying what the Lord has done for them. Nothing very intellectual or scientific; in all probability it will not affect you much,' the minister said. He accompanied the minister, and that night eighteen men testified to the Lord's saving power. At the close of the meeting the lawyer reached over, and, taking the minister's hand, shook it warmly, saying, 'Now I know that there is in reality a living and true God, a loving Saviour, and from this time I will serve Him!'"

How The Locomotive Fireman Conquered.—A fireman employed on a locomotive, speaking at a Railroad Men's Mission, said: "The day after I was converted to Christ I was speaking to one of my mates, and told him what the Lord had done for me, and invited him to attend the meeting where I had found Christ, and where he also might find Him. Being overheard by a number of others, one of them cried, 'Why, man, you are surely not going to speak at the meeting already?' Holding out my Bible, I said, 'There is my stay; that would enable me to speak at a meeting, or to you at a street corner, and on its precious promises I trust.' As I turned to go home, one of them asked me, 'Are you not coming for a drink to night?' 'No, thanks,' I replied, 'when I took Christ I gave up drinking.' 'Ah, man, you were not like that two weeks ago, and it is a question if you will hold out as long again,' they said jeeringly. They would have been right if I had been left to myself; but I had strength they did not know of—the strength of the Holy Spirit who has kept me."

The Conductor's Pipe Put Out.—A Railroad conductor related: "Only about eight weeks ago I was going down the street, making straight for a saloon that I was only too familiar with, when I met a friend. We stopped, and, as usual, shook hands. He asked me where I was going. I frankly told him. 'I am going to a Gospel meeting,' he said. 'Will you come with me, like a good fellow?' I refused point-blank. Then he spoke to me of Christ, and pleaded so tenderly and earnestly with me, that at last I could stand out no longer, and gave myself to Christ. I went to the meeting and much enjoyed it. As we were coming out I began to smoke. My friend looked at the pipe, then at me, and remarked, 'When one gives oneself to Christ, and Christ dwells in him, it is not becoming to pollute God's dwelling-place with tobacco smoke, is it?' I did not answer a word, but, taking the pipe from my lips, I put it beneath my heel, and ground it to atoms. Then I threw away my tobacco, determined to offer incense to none but the living and true God. Nor have I at all regretted it. I find that Christ can satisfy all my wants, and He fills me with joy."

RECREATIONS GOOD AND BAD.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached last Sunday Morning, December 18, 1887.

"They that use this world as not abusing it." 1 Cor. 7: 31."

"And it came to pass, when their hearts were merry, that they said, call for Samson, that he may make us sport." Judges 16: 25.

The Approaching Festive Season—Need for Discrimination—The Fatal Amusement of the Philistines—A Lawful Use of the World—Children in the Father's Mansion—Healthful Amusements—Music—Its Power to Soothe and Stimulate—The Effect of Music at Waterloo—Benefits of the Gymnasium—The Soul Influenced by the Body—Luther's Muscular Development—Parlor Games—How to Prevent Dissipation—Lectures and Picture-Galleries—Outdoor Recreations—The Pleasure of Doing Good—Colonel Gardiner's Discontent—Moravians in a Lazaretto—Missionaries Becoming Slaves—A Sinful Woman's Presentiment.

We are entering the gayest season of the year. The winter opens before us the gates of a thousand amusements, some of them good and some bad. One of my texts will show you that amusements may be destructive; my other text will show you that amusements may be under the Divine blessing and direction.

There were three thousand people assembled in the temple of Dagon. They had come to make sport of eyeless Samson. They were all ready for the entertainment. They began to clap and pound, impatient for the amusement to begin, and they cried, "Fetch him out, fetch him out!" Yonder I see coming, led by the hand of a child into the very midst of the temple. At his first appearance there goes up a shout of laughter and derision. The blind old giant pretends he is tired, and wants to rest himself against the pillars of the house; so he says to the lad who leads him, "Show me where the main pillars are!" The lad does so. Then the strong man puts his right hand on one pillar and his left hand on another pillar, and, with the mightiest push that mortal ever made, throws himself forward until the whole house comes down in thunderous crash, grinding the audience like grapes in a wine-press. "And so it came to pass, when their hearts were merry, that they said, call for Samson, that he may make us sport. And they called for Samson out of the prison-house; and he made them sport."

The Blind Old Giant

In other words, there are amusements that are destructive, and bring down disaster and death upon the heads of those who practice them. While they laugh and cheer, they die. The three thousand who perished that day in Gaza, are as nothing compared with the tens of thousands who have been destroyed by sinful amusements.

But the other text implies that there is

A Lawful Use of the World, as well as an unlawful abuse of it, and the difference between the man Christian and the man un-Christian is, that in the former case the man masters the world, while in the latter case the world masters him. For whom did God make this grand and beautiful world? For whom this wonderful expenditure of color, this gracefulness of line, this mosaic of the ground, this fresco of the sky, this glowing fruitage of orchard and vineyard this full orchestra of the tempest, in which the tree branches flute, and the winds trumpet, and the thunders drum, and all the splendors of earth and sky come clashing their cymbals? For whom did God spring the arched bridge of colors resting upon buttresses of broken storm-cloud? For whom did He gather the upholstery of fire around the window of the setting sun? For all men; but more especially for His own dear children.

The Heirs of the World.

If you build a large mansion, and spread a great feast after it, to celebrate the completion of the structure, do you allow strangers to come in and occupy the place, while you thrust your own children in the kitchen, or the barn, or the fields? Oh, no! You say, "I am very glad to see strangers in my mansion, but my own sons and daughters shall have the first right there." Now, God has built this grand mansion of a world, and He has spread a glorious feast in it, and while those who are stangers to His grace may come in, I think that God especially intends to give the advantage to His own children—those who are the sons and the daughters of the Lord Almighty, those who through grace can look up and say, "Abba, Father." You cannot make me believe that God gives more advantages to the world than He gives to the Church bought by His own blood. If, therefore, people of the world have looked with dolorous sympathy upon those who make profession of religion, and have said, "Those new converts are going down into privation and into hardship. Why did they not tarry a little longer in the world, and have some of its enjoyments and amusements and recreations?"—I say to such men of the world, "You are greatly mistaken;" and before I get through I will show that those people who stay out of the kingdom of God have the hardships and self-denials, while those who come in have the joys and satisfactions.

This morning, in the name of the King of heaven and earth, I serve upon all the sinful and polluted who have squatted on the domain of earthly pleasure as though it belonged to them, while I claim, in behalf of the good and the pure and the true, the eternal inheritance which God has given them. Hitherto, Christian philanthropists, clerical and lay, have busied themselves chiefly in denouncing sinful recreations; but I feel we have no right to stand before men and women in whose hearts there is a desire for recreation amounting to positive necessity, denouncing this and that and the other thing, when we do not propose to give them something better. God helping me this morning, and with reference to my last account, I shall enter upon a sphere not usual in sermonizing, but a subject which I think ought to be presented at this time. I propose now to lay before you some of the recreations which are not only innocent, but positively helpful and advantageous.

A Writ of Ejectment

Music.

In the first place, I commend, among indoor recreations, music—vocal and instrumental. Among the first things created was the bird, so that the earth might have music at the start. This world, which began with so sweet a serenade, is finally to be demolished amidst the ringing blast of the archangel's trumpet, so that as there was music at the start, there shall be music at the close. While this heavenly art has often been dragged into the uses of superstition and dissipation, we all know it may be the means of high moral culture. Oh, it is a grand thing to have our children brought up amidst the sound of cultured voices, and amidst the melody of musical instruments.

There is in this art an indescribable fascination for the household. Let all those families who have the means to afford it, have flute, or harp, or piano, or organ. As soon as the hand is large enough to compass the keys, teach it how to pick out the melody. Let all try this heavenly art upon their nature. Those who have gone into it fully have found in it illimitable recreation and amusement. Dark days, stormy nights, seasons of sickness, business disasters, will do little toward depressing the soul which can gallop off over musical keys, or soar in jubilant lay. It will cure pain. It will rest fatigue. It will quell passion. It will revive health. It will reclaim dissipation. It will strengthen the immortal soul. In the battle of Waterloo. Wellington saw that the Highlanders were falling back. He said, "What is the matter there?" He was told that the band of music had ceased playing, and he called up the pipers and ordered them to strike up an inspiriting air: and no sooner did they strike the air than the Highlanders were rallied, and helped to win the day. Oh, ye who have been routed in the conflicts of life, try by the force of music to Rally Your Scattered Battalions.

Our Young Men

I am glad to know that in our great cities there is hardly a night in which there are not concerts, where, with the best musical instruments and the sweetest voices, people may find entertainment. Patronize such entertainments when they are afforded you. Buy season tickets, if you can, for the "Philharmonic" and the "Handel and Haydn" societies. Feel that the dollar and a half or two dollars that you spend for the purpose of hearing an artist play or sing is a profitable investment. Let your Steinway Halls and your Academies of Music roar with the acclamation of appreciative audiences assembled at the concert or the Oratorio.

Still further: I commend, as worthy of their support,

The Gymnasium.

This institution is gaining in favor every year, and I know of nothing more free from dissipation, or more calculated to recuperate the physical and mental energies. While there are a good many people who have employed this institution, there is a vast number who are ignorant of its excellences. There are men with cramped chests and weak sides and despondent spirits who through the gymnasium might be roused up to exuberance and exhilaration of life. There are many Christian people despondent from year to year, who might, through such an institution, be benefited in their spiritual relations. There are Christian people who seem to think that it is a good sign to be poorly; and because Richard Baxter and Robert Hall were invalids, they think that by the same sickliness they may come to the same grandeur of character. I want to tell the Christian people of my congregation that God will hold you responsible for your invalidism if it is your fault, and when, through right exercise and prudence, you might be athletic and well. The effect of the body upon the soul you acknowledge. Put a man of mild disposition upon the animal diet of which the Indian partakes, and in a little while his blood will change its chemical proportions. It will become like unto the blood of the lion or the tiger or the bear, while his disposition will change, and become fierce and unrelenting. The body has a powerful effect upon the soul.

There are good people whose ideas of heaven are all shut out with clouds of tobacco-smoke. There are people who dare to shatter

The Physical Vase

in which God has put the jewel of eternity. There are men with great hearts and intellects, in bodies worn out by their own neglects—magnificent machinery, capable of propelling a Great Eastern across the Atlantic, yet fastened in a rickety North River propeller. Martin Luther was so mighty for God, first, because he had a noble soul, and secondly, because he had a muscular development which would have enabled him to thrash any five of his persecutors, if it had been Christian so to do. Physical development which merely shows itself in fabulous lifting, or in perilous rope-walking, or in pugilistic encounter, excites only our contempt; but we confess to great admiration for the man who has a great soul in an athletic body, every nerve, muscle and bone of which is consecrated to right uses. Oh, it seems to me outrageous that men, through neglect, should allow their physical health to go down beyond repair—a ship which ought, with all sail set and every man at his post, to be carrying

A Rich Cargo for Eternity, employing all its men in stopping up leakages! When you may, through the gymnasium, work off your spleen and your querulousness and one-half of your physical and mental ailments, do not turn your back upon such a grand medicament.

Still further: I commend to you a large class of parlor games and recreations. There is a way of making our homes a hundred-fold more attractive than they are now. Those parents can not expect to keep their children away from outside dissipations unless they

Make the Domestic Circle Brighter than anything they can find outside of it. Do not, then, sit in your home surly and unsympathetic, and with a half-condemnatory look because of the sportfulness of your children. You were young once yourself: let your children be young. Because your eyes are dim and your ankles are stiff, do not denounce sportfulness in those upon whose eyes there is the first lustre, and in whose foot there is the bounding joy of robust health. I thank God that in our drawing-rooms and in our parlors there are innumerable games and sports which have not upon them the least taint of iniquity.

Light up all your homes with innocent hilarities. Do not sit down with the rheumatism, wondering how children can go on so. Rather thank God that their hearts are so light, and their laughter is so free, and that their cheeks are so ruddy, and that their expectations are so radiant. The night will come soon enough, and the heart-break, and the pang, and the desolation—it will come soon enough for the dear children. But when the storm actually clouds the sky, it will be time enough for you to haul out your reef-tackles. Carry, then, into your homes not only the which are the inventions of our own day, but the games which come down with the sportfulness of all the past ages—chess and charades and tableaux and battledore and calisthenics and lawn-tennis, and all those amusements which the young people of our homes know so well how to contrive. Then there will be the parlor socialities—groups of people assembled in your homes, with wit and mimicry and joviality, filling the room with joy from the door to the mantel, and from the carpet to the ceiling. Oh, is there any exhilaration like a score of genial souls in one room, each one adding a contribution of his own individual merriment to the aggregation of general hilarity?

Innocent Sports and Games

Suppose you want to go abroad in the city, then you will find the panorama and the art gallery and exquisite collections of pictures. You will find the Metropolitan Museum and the Historical Society rooms full of rare curiosities, and scores of places which can stand plainly the test of what is right and wrong in amusements. You will find the lecturing hall, which has been honored by the names of Agassiz in natural history, Doremus in chemistry, Boynton in geology, Mitchell in astronomy, John B. Gough in moral reform, and scores and hundreds of men who have poured their wit and genius and ingenuity through that particular channel upon the hearts and consciences and imaginations of men, setting this country fifty years farther in advance than it would have been without the lecture platform.

I rejoice in the popularization of Outdoor Sports.

I hail the croquet ground and the fisherman's rod and the sportsman's gun. In our cities, life is so unhealthy and unnatural that when the census-taker represents a city as having four hundred thousand inhabitants, there are only two hundred thousand, since it takes at least two men to amount to one man, so depleting and unnerving and exhausting is this metropolitan life. We want more fresh air, more sunlight, more of the abandon of field-sports. I cry out for it in behalf of the Church of God as well as in behalf of secular interests. I wish that this winter our ponds and our rivers and our Capitoline Grounds might be all aquake with the heel and the shout of the swift skater. I wish that when the warm weather comes, the graceful oar might dip the stream, and the eveningtide be resonant with boatman's song, the bright prow splitting the crystalline billow.

We shall have the smooth and grassy lawn, and we will call out people of all occupations and professions and ask them to join in the ball-player's sport. You will come back from these outdoor exercises and recreations, with strength in your arm and color in your cheek and a flash in your eye and courage in your heart. In this great battle that is opening against the kingdom of darkness, we want not only a consecrated soul, but a strong arm and stout lungs and mighty muscle. I bless God that there are so many recreations that have not on them any taint of iniquity; recreations in which we may engage for the strengthening of the body, for the clearing of the intellect, for the illumination of the soul.

Philanthropy.

There is still another form of recreation which I commend to you, and that is the pleasure of doing good. I have seen young men, weak and cross and sour and repelling in their disposition, who by one heavenly touch have wakened up and become blessed and buoyant, the ground under their feet and the sky over their heads breaking forth into music. "Oh," says some young man in the house to-day, "I should like that recreation above all others, but I have not the means." My dear brother, let us take an account of stock this morning. You have a large estate, if you only realize it. Two hands. Two feet. You will have, perhaps, during the next year at least ten dollars for charitable contribution. You will have twenty-five hundred cheerful looks, if you want to employ them. You will have five thousand pleasant words, if you want to speak them. Now what an amount that is to start with!

You go out to-morrow morning and you see a case of real destitution by the way-side. You give him two cents. The blind man hears the pennies rattle in his hat, and he says, "Thank you, sir; God bless you!" You pass down the street, trying to look indifferent; but you feel from the very depth of your soul that you made that man happy. You go on still farther, and find a poor boy with a wheelbarrow, trying to get it up on the curbstone. He fails in the attempt. You say, "Stand back, my lad; let me try." You push it up on the curbstone for him and pass on. He wonders who that well-dressed man was that helped him. You did a kindness to the boy, but you did a great joy to your own soul. You will not get over it all the week.

A Profound Satisfaction

On the street, to-morrow morning, you will see a sick man passing along. "Ah," you say, "what can I do to make this man happy? He certainly does not want money; he is not poor, but he is sick." Give him one of those twenty-five hundred cheerful looks that you have garnered up for the whole year. Look joy and hopefulness into his soul. It will thrill him through and there will be a reaction upon your own soul. Going a little farther on, you will come to the store of a friend who is embarrassed in business matters. You will go in and say, "What a fine store you have! I think business will brighten up, and you will have more custom after a while. I think there is coming a great prosperity to all the country. Good morning." You pass out. You have helped that young man, and you have helped yourself.

Which was the Happier?

Colonel Gardiner, who sat with his elbow on a table, spread with all extravagant viands, looking off at a dog on the rug, saying, "How I would like to change places with him; I be the dog and he be Colonel Gardiner;" or, those two Moravian missionaries who wanted to go into the lazaretto for the sake of attending the sick, and they were told, "If you go in there, you will never come out. We never allow any one to come out, for he would bring the contagion." Then they made their wills and went in, first to help the sick, and then to die. Which was the happier—Colonel Gardiner, or the Moravian missionaries dying for others? Was it all sacrifice when the missionaries wanted to bring the Gospel to the negroes at the Barbadoes, and, being denied the privilege, sold themselves into slavery, standing side by side, and lying side by side, down in the very ditch of suffering, in order that they might bring those men up to life and God and heaven? Oh, there is a thrill in the joy of doing good! It is the most magnificent recreation to which a man ever puts his hand, or his head, or his heart.

But, before closing, I want to impress upon you that mere secular entertainments are

Not a Fit Foundation

for your soul to build on. I was reading of a woman who had gone all the rounds of sinful amusement, and she came to die. She said "I will die to-night at six o'clock." "Oh," they said, "I guess not; you don't seem to be sick." "I shall die at six o'clock, and my soul will be lost. I know it will be lost. I have sinned away my day of grace." The noon came. They desired to seek religious counsel. "Oh," she said, "it is of no use. My day is gone. I have been all the rounds of worldly pleasure, and it is too late. I shall die to-night at six o'clock." The day wore away, and it came to four o'clock, and to five o'clock, and she cried out at five o'clock, "Destroyed spirits, ye shall not have me yet; it is not six, it is not six!" The moments went by, and the shadows began to gather, and the clock struck six; and while it was striking her soul went. What hour God will call for us I do not know—whether six o'clock to-night or three o'clock this afternoon, or at one o'clock, or at this moment. Sitting where you are, falling forward, or dropping down,

Where Would You Go To?

But our hour for adjourning has already come, and the last hour of our life will soon be here, and from that hour we will review this day's proceedings. It will be a solemn hour. If from our death-pillow we have to look back and see a life spent in sinful amusement, there will be a dart that will strike through our soul, sharper than the dagger with which Virginius slew his child. The memory of the past will make us quake like Macbeth. The iniquities and rioting through which we have passed will come upon us, weird and skeleton as Meg Merrillies. Death, the old Shylock, will demand and take, the remaining pound of flesh and the remaining drop of blood: and upon our last opportunity for repentance, and our last chance for heaven, the curtain will forever drop.

THE INCAS OF PERU.

(See Illustration on Page 812.)

AN irresistible fascination attaches to the very name of the Incas. Who they were, where they came from, and how they succeeded in establishing their ascendancy over the inhabitants of Peru, are questions which have furnished a field for study of the most fascinating kind. The Indian traditions, which form the basis of the only historical knowledge accessible, are unreliable, but they furnish a key to the remains of sculpture, architecture and relics which is of great value. The traditions confirmed by these discoveries lead to the belief that it was about the year A. D. 1020 that the first Inca, Manco Capac, with his wife, Mama Ocllo, appeared in Peru, and, announcing themselves children of the sun, declared that their father the sun, whom the aborigines worshipped, had sent them to instruct the people.

It would appear that the aborigines peaceably accepted the supremacy of the Incas, and obyed and reverenced them as demigods. Manco became not only the king, but the lawgiver and high-priest of the nation. He ruled the people by a mild despotism, and they appear to have been happy and contented under his sway and that of his successors. They appear, however, to have been utterly ignorant of the art of writing. The only records of the reigns of the dynasty were in a twisted woollen cord, in which threads of various colors were woven or tied. This was called a quipu, and every cross-thread, according to its length, color and position with the knots in it, told a story or recorded an event. But the art of reading the quipu was never revealed to the Spaniards, and the key to this very peculiar writing is, therefore, utterly lost. All we know is that they retained their power until 1532, when Pizarro overthrew them.

THE SIXTH SEAL.

Revelation 6: 12–16. A. D. 1793—1873.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

Two Contrasted Periods—Convulsion and Quiescence—The Terrific Convulsion of the French Revolution—A Secular Historian's Vivid Description of It—The Quiescent Period of Sealing—Our Present Position—The Saints being Sealed—On the Verge of Conflict and Trial.

Historical Fulfillment.—Retributive convulsions of the French Revolution, premonitory of the day of vengeance: and then from 1815, an interval of general peace and withholding of the winds of desolation, until the sealing of the 144,000 watchful Christians is finished, and they are translated to heaven just before the Final Great Tribulation.

"And I beheld when he had opened the Sixth Seal, and lo! there was a great earthquake," etc. (Rev. 6: 12–16, and all Rev. 7, describes this Sixth Seal). The terrible commotions of the French Revolution of 1793 to 1815, are clearly symbolized by the great earthquake and convulsions figuratively depicted in Rev. 6: 12–17.

The Sixth seal comprises two strongly contrasted scenes. The first is of violent natural convulsion, typifying national and governmental overthrow; and, secondly, a period of unnatural calm like that sultry, oppressive stillness which precedes a thunder-storm, during which the one hundred and forty and four thousand are sealed."

The terrible commotions of the French Revolution, extending from 1793 to 1815, are clearly symbolized by this great earthquake and convulsions figuratively depicted in Rev. 6: 12–17. It was the stupendous explosion, the elements of which had been gathering all through the century. Carlyle thus describes the process and the development. "The eighteenth century has nothing grand in it, except that named French Revolution, by which it terminated its otherwise most worthless existence by setting fire to its old home and self, and going up in flames and volcanic explosions in a truly memorable and important manner. A very fit termination for such a century! Century spendthrift, fraudulent-bankrupt, gone at length utterly insolvent, without real money of performance in its pocket, and the shops declining to take hypocrisies and speciosities any farther: What could the poor century do, but at length admit, 'Well, it is so. I am a swindler century, and have long been, having learned the trick of it from my father and grandfather. And behold it ends; and I am a detected swindler. What remains but that I blow my brains out?' Which the poor century accordingly did. And in that whirlwind of the universe—lights obliterated and the torn wrecks of earth and hell hurled aloft into the Empyrean; black whirlwind enough to make even apes serious and drive most of them mad—there was to men a voice, audible, as if to say, 'Lying is not permitted in this universe, and Beelzebub, never so elaborately decked in crowns and mitres, is not God.'" Truly a time for which an earthquake was a most appropriate symbol.

Grand Universal Suicide,

The Remarkable Period of Quiescence which followed, is described and explained at the beginning of chapter 7, where we read:

"And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads."

Our Present Position

is in this parenthetical interval of the holding back of the four winds of desolation, between 1815 and the years following, while the sealing of God's servants is being finished. The eminent Rev. Edward Bickersteth, in his "Divine Warning," in 1846, fully expresses this view; he says: "I view these Seals as describing the whole Christian dispensation till our Lord's return; and I consider that we are now in the pause of judgment connected with the Sixth Seal from the withholding of the winds, Rev. 7: 1. It appears to me, we have seen the events pointed out at the beginning of the Sixth Seal, where is set before us the figurative description of the French Revolution of 1793. and we are now at the period of withholding of the four winds.

"The present state of the world may seem to some to be such as to make it unreasonable and unsuitable to give warning of danger. It is a time of universal peace: wars are hushed throughout the earth. But we have no reason to expect that the present state of peace and prosperity will continue many years. It will rather, we have reason to think from God's Word, soon cease, and times will succeed of Peculiar Trial and Conflict.

"The withholding of the tempests of Divine wrath appears in the course of the prophecies of Revelation to be predicted at this very season (Rev. 7: 1–3). The ceasing of this restraint at the appointed time brings on the Great Tribulation, which is more fully described in the seventh vial (Rev 7: 14, 16: 17–21). The description of Europe's political state in Mr. Canning's celebrated speech in 1826, gives us, from an able statesman, that view of the world which is the very counterpart of what God has foretold it should be at this time; that statesman compares the restraint in which 'the nations of Europe are at present kept,' amidst the struggle of political opinions, to Æolus restraining the fury of the winds. The certainty and nearness of the last great tribulation is a most seasonable truth in this day, when we have not only the prophetic word announcing it, but many signs of the times showing its near approach."

It is perfectly clear that Daniel has foretold when the Jewish people shall be delivered, there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time (Dan. 12: 1); and that our Lord has repeated the warning (Matt. 24: 21); and that St. John has told us in the seventh of Revelation, after the sealing of the 144,000, about the tribulation even the great one: and has also made it a part of the seventh vial, after the completion of the sixth vial under which we are now living, saying, 'There was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great.' (Rev. 7: 14. 16: 18.) It is true that Europe is still kept in peace, but the tempest lowers in the distance, and are heard from afar—so slightly are the four destroying winds withheld. (Rev. 7: 1–3). The more the outward peace abounds, the more is the faithful watchman called upon to sound the trumpet of alarm: and to show distinctly on what false foundations the hope of continued peace and tranquillity rests. We are assured that this will be the state of the world, before the last and greatest of all its troubles—the unequalled great tribulation yet to come—'The day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night; for when they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape.' (1 Thess. 5: 1–11; Luke 17: 26–30.)

The First Mutterings of the Storm

"The worldly selfishness of those who have been amassing riches in trades, manufactures and commerce, or by other means, without any regard to the spiritual or even temporal welfare of those who have toiled for them, thinking dependents only to be employed and retained for their own convenience, and casting them off with careless indifference when they can no longer serve their worldly interest, has alienated the working class from the wealthy class. Both classes seem greatly unconscious of their own danger, in consequence of this state of things."

W. Cuninghame writing in 1832, said, "The Sixth Seal commenced at the period of the French Revolution, in 1792; and, after more than twenty years of unceasing convulsions and bloodshed, unequalled in the past history of the world, peace was at length obtained in 1815, by the gigantic efforts of a mighty confederacy of the nations of Europe. It seems to me we now witness the holding of the four winds, which are held or restrained, in order that the servants of God may be sealed. But as soon as is past, the calamities shall be renewed with an overwhelming impetus. From these final judgments, however, the sealed servants of God are to be delivered—being the watchful living saints, who, at the advent of our Lord in the air, are to be caught up to meet Him (1 Thess. 4: 17; Luke 21: 36).

The Allotted Interval of Calm

There is a double gathering of His saints unto our Lord during His abode in the air; first, of the 144,000 sealed ones, at the first moment of advent in the air, and secondly, at a later period, of those who are left to the Great Tribulation and who are gathered to the Lord just before the concluding act of wrath. Though the winds are not yet loosed, still all things testify to the approach of that awful hour, when the hurricane of wrath shall again go forth, and sweep into one common gulf of ruin the institutions of former ages, as well as the most recent forms of administration and government."*

MODERN PHYLACTERIES.

One of the charges which Christ brought against the hypocritical teachers of his day was that "they make broad their phylacteries and enlarge the borders [or fringes] of their garments" (Matt. 23: 5). The significance of this offence, which to modern eyes does not seem very heinous, becomes apparent when it is perceived that it was a kind of advertisement or public claim to superlative piety. It is not generally known that these phylacteries are still used by orthodox Jews. A clergyman interested in the study of Jewish manners and customs recently explored a Jewish colony and found the phylacteries on sale. He says.

One store particularly interested me. It was kept by an intelligent old Jew, who sold the various articles used by his nation in their religious observances, such as phylacteries, fringes, door-post plates, etc., several of which I purchased for a few shillings. The phylacteries go in pairs, one for the forehead, and one for the arm, and consist of a tiny black box, less than an inch square, attached to a long strip of leather. Each box contains a piece of parchment on which are inscribed four passages from the Pentateuch, namely, Deut. 4: 4-10; 11: 13-21; Exod. 13: 1-10; and 13: 11-16. These phylacteries, are worn in literal obedience to the command in Deut. 6: 8. The one used for the head is marked with the Hebrew letter "shin," and is worn on the brow; the other, which is plain, is attached to the left arm, and is so placed that it can be pressed against the heart, and thus serve to recall the words of David in Ps. 119: 11. Another curious article I purchased was a small garment known as "Arba Confoth," or "Four Corners." There is a command in Num. 15: 37 to the effect that fringes are to be worn on the borders of the garments. As, however, it would be inconvenient literally to carry out this precept, the Jewish conscience finds relief in inventing an undergarment, consisting of a wide strip of linen, with a hole in the middle large enough for the head to pass through, which is worn over the shoulders, falling down before and behind, and having the corners adorned with fringes. A third article I met with, worthy of notice, was a small plate, called "Mezuzo," or "door-post," a fold of tin an inch broad and about six inches long, containing two extracts from the Pentateuch on parchment, viz., Deut. 6: 4-9, and 11: 13-21. A small hole had been made in the tin, which revealed the word "Shaddai," i. e., the Almighty, inscribed beneath. These little plates are nailed by pious Jews on the right hand post of every door in their houses, in literal obedience to the injunction in Deut. 6 : 9.

*In addition to Bickersteth, Habershon, Hooper and Cuninghame, the following writers also similarly understand the Sixth Seal to commence with the French Revolution of 1793, namely, Rev. E. Cooper, Robert Baxter, D. N. Lord, Shimeall, Frere, Irving, Miller and others. Cuninghame, like many others, held that the 75 years (the excess of the 1335 beyond the 1260—Dan. 12: 7, 12) was the final interval between the earthquake of the French Revolution, in 1792-3, and the final great earthquake in the Time of the End.

THE MEDICAL MISSION AT SHANGHAI.

BEFORE finishing his vacation, Dr. Henry W. Boone has returned to his successful work in China. A record of his labors, which he wrote prior to leaving New York, is published in the Spirit of Missions, from which the following is an extract:

"I began work at Shanghai somewhat more than seven years ago. The hospital was small, and soon became insufficient for our work. The Rev. H. N. Woo, now the chaplain of the hospital, interested his fellow-countrymen. They came to me, and asked how they could help our work. I said, 'We own one corner of this city block; buy the whole block for this work.' They hesitated at this rather large proposal; but Mr. Li Chu Bing, the leader, said, 'Don't tell any one, or the price of the land will rise.' They meant it, and in a few months they bought the land and pulled down the houses which were standing upon it. Then they came and asked for plans to build new wards. I gave them plans for one-story pavilions. They said, 'Land is dear; make them two-storied.' I did so, stipulating for first-class work and materials. They built the wards, re-modelled the old building, and have helped to support the work ever since. We have four good buildings, furnished with the best of everything and supplied with good instruments and the best of drugs. We earn a part of our support, as we have paying as well as charity wards. The officials, the Chinese and the foreign residents contribute every year, and for years our St. Luke's Hospital has been self-supporting."

FIFTY YEARS AMONG INDIANS.

A ROMANTIC incident is related by Elizabeth P. Allan in the Independent, which is strictly true, yet rivals in thrilling interest the most sensational fiction. It illustrates the fact that many of Satan's captives remain away from their Heavenly Father because they are deceived by their captor, who desires to keep them, and persuades them it is useless to return (Ezek. 13 : 22).

In the early days of the settlement of Virginia, a young man and his wife and their two sons, Daniel and Samuel, aged eleven and nine years respectively, lived in Bath County, then a wilderness, cleared only in patches. They and their neighbors erected a stockade fort as a refuge from the Indians, and it was not an unnecessary precaution. One day the two boys, returning home from an excursion, caught sight of an Indian stealthily crawling through the underbrush. They knew only too well what that meant. Dan sent his brother to the stockade to give the signal of alarm, while he ran around to the clearing where his father and mother were, to warn them. But the Indians were too quick for the boys. Dan was seized and kept for torture, while Sam arrived at the fort only to find it in flames. The Indians became alarmed at the approach of Captain Paul and his band and made their escape, carrying Dan with them.

They did not carry out their threat of putting him to the torture, but disposed of him to a Frenchman, who had married a squaw and lived with the tribe. They told him that his home was burned and his father and mother and brother were all killed, and showed him the pile of bloody scalps in proof. The boy was kept in the tribe and made useful in various ways at their settlement at Lake Huron. He fully believed the Indians, and feeling now that he had no home, made no attempt to run away. Eventually he became valuable to the Indians as an interpreter and, marrying one of the Frenchman's dusky daughters, settled down among them.

Fifty years after the attack on the home of Dan's parents, he, with a grown-up son and daughter and a few warriors, passed through Virginia. They went to a handsome house standing on the site of Dan's home, where with the hospitality of that day they were invited to remain. Supper was served in the large kitchen, and when it was on the table the host went into an inner room and returned with a venerable lady on his arm. Instantly Dan, clad in his Indian costume, sprang to his feet, and with his son and daughter ran to meet her. In Indian fashion they knelt before the white-haired octogenarian and remained silent. The old lady looked at them in astonishment, and then more closely. At last, throwing her arms around her son's neck, she cried, "O Dan, my boy, my boy!" After half a century she knew him, though he was but a boy when she lost him, and he was now an elderly man.

During all those years the boy had never doubted the Indian story of the massacre, but, a month before his return, a Virginian had visited the tribe, and Dan, learning his origin, had questioned him. The Virginian told him that his mother and brother were still alive. Instantly with his children and warriors he set out to see them. As long as his mother lived he remained with her, but after her death he bade good-by to his brother and returned to the tribe; the habits of a lifetime being too strong to uproot.

A ROBBER ROBBED.

A PRESS despatch from Omaha, Neb., gives a curious history of some stolen money. God does not always punish sin in this life. Sometimes He allows the wrongdoer to prosper and fill up the measure of his iniquity, but in this case the criminal doubtless bitterly regrets his crime already. He has discovered, what all wrongdoers discover sooner or later, that he that sins against God "wrongs his own soul" (Prov. 8 : 36.)

Last spring a highwayman named Parker robbed Paymaster Bash at Antelope Springs, Wyoming Ter., of a large sum of money. The haul was all in new bills, and Parker could not use them without causing suspicion. He made an attempt to pass them in Logan County, Neb., but information was given to the police and a warrant was issued for his arrest. Parker defended himself with a revolver, and after several shots had been fired he was allowed to escape. But the news that he was guilty got abroad, and three robbers, knowing that he must have the money somewhere in his possession, resolved to get it. They went to his house, surprised him, overpowered him, and secured the bulk of his plunder. Parker recognized the men and had them arrested. The case was so clear against them that they knew they would be convicted unless they secured the best lawyers. They did so, and escaped conviction, but the bulk of their plunder was absorbed in fees. Now Parker has been arrested for the original crime, and is likely to have a long term of imprisonment. Meanwhile very little of the stolen money seems to have remained with any of the criminals, but is in the possession of the lawyers.

A SHOEBLACK'S RESCUE.

AMONG the crowd of waifs whom Dr. T. J. Barnardo has picked up from the streets of London, and fitted by a religious education to become valuable emigrants for Canada, one of the most hopeful is "Joe the shoeblack." The philanthropic doctor says: "Joe was a good humored steady, clever lad; the box he slung across his shoulder was of his own manufacture. But he was as poor as could be. He seldom or never wore a coat, or had a coat to wear; his ragged shirt and an old pair of pantaloons were all the raiment he possessed; yet the boy never whined, but always seemed as if he had no fault to find with his condition or surroundings. He was bright, merry and very respectful to those customers who patronized his box. He managed to evade school, not because he had no desire to learn, but because school necessarily took up much time that for him had to be spent in more practical ways; and so it is not to be wondered at, that Joe grew up to his fifteenth year a veritable street heathen. Come down some day to Stepney Causeway, when about twenty lads are called out from the greater body to clean the boots of their companions before they assemble on parade. Among the boot-cleaners are two who are conspicuous by the ability with which they do their work, and one of these is Joe. He has had a new life and a new experience since he has been in the Stepney Home, and if he goes on as he has begun, I trust that next year he will accompany a party of boys to the Canadian shores. There is no work on God's earth to be compared with that of saving of poor boys and girls from the perils of the streets, and the dangers of orphanhood; and if Christian men and women throughout England and the world will continue to hold up my hands, I will press on unfalteringly with the work while God gives me breath."

A PETITION IN A LOCKET.

IN explaining the origin of the Medical Association for Women, inaugurated by Lady Dufferin, the Indian Witness refers to the sickness and recovery of a prominent native lady. It says: "Out of this suffering lady's heart this great Association has burst into life. Doomed to confinement, although in a royal palace, tortured by a painful disease which nothing but skill and tender nursing could alleviate, and that skill not available, on account of the seclusion to which custom has doomed all native ladies, there arose in the heart of this native queen a great desire not only to be helped and relieved of her own suffering, but that all her Indian sisters might also share with her the great boon.

This lady was the Maharani of Punna. During the year 1881, while Miss Beilby was carrying on her medical work in the city of Lucknow, she was summoned by the Maharajah of Punna to the chamber of his suffering wife. Miss Beilby, whose heart had often been touched by the woes and pain of the women who crowded her hospital and dispensary, saw in this invitation a possible opportunity for enlisting the interest of the higher classes of India in medical aid for women, and did not refuse to undertake this new-found duty: she at once started on her journey of near a hundred miles. For weeks she remained in that city, the only European there. She devoted herself to the sick lady with her skill, and was repaid in her complete recovery. About this time Miss Beilby was arranging to return home, to take a degree in a regular medical college. The Rani was aware of this fact, and could no longer refrain from making her great desire known to the physician who had so greatly relieved her."

She begged "Doctor Miss Sahiba" to write a message to the Queen of England, which she dictated, and to "write it small." This was done, and the native princess enclosed it in a costly locket, and sent it to the Queen. It was a description of the suffering of the women of India, and their neglected condition. The Queen sent a message of sympathy; but Lady Dufferin, who is the wife of the Viceroy, has organized an Association which has already five branches, and has done inestimable service.

Price, Five Cents, Post Free—160th Thousand Enlarged Edition—64 Pages—

COMING WARS AND GREAT EVENTS,

and Ten Signs of the Approaching Final Crisis, by Rev. M. Baxter—Dissolution of the Turkish Empire into the Five Ancient Kingdoms of Greece, Egypt, Syria, Thracian Turkey and Bulgaria, which with Britain (separated from Ireland), France, Spain, Italy and Austria, will be formed into an Allied Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms—Subsequent Rise of Napoleon as King of Syria—His Seven Years' Covenant with the Jews—Resurrection and Translation of Saints—3½ Years' Great Tribulation and world-wide Persecution of Christians—Descent of Christ at Armageddon—Ensuing Millennium of 1000 Years after the Year 1900. Address Manage "Christian Herald," 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents; always payable in advance. Single copies for sale by, or can be ordered at, all newsdealers'.

New Subscriptions can commence at any time. When no date is mentioned, we begin them with the issue of the week in which the subscription is received.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheques, or drafts or express money order, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Renewals can be sent any time previous to date of expiry, and the time will be added to that to which the subscriber is already entitled. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed.

Notice of Expiration of subscription is always sent in addition to the date being given on the address label. When not renewed by date of expiration the paper is stopped; no notice from the subscriber being required.

Receipts are not sent, the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that his remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please advise us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Mistakes are sure to arise occasionally, which we will gladly put right on having our attention drawn to them. Please do not allow any error to pass without complaint.

Change of Address. Name of Post Office and State, of both old and new address, should always be given in case of removal.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Suspension of the Fishery Negotiations until after the holidays has caused some disappointment. It was hoped that if an agreement had not been reached by this time, that such progress would have been made as to justify hopes of a speedy settlement. The rumors that have leaked out, however, do not encourage such hopes. It is stated that Sir Charles Tupper, the Canadian representative, has hitherto been the chief spokesman, Mr. Chamberlain and the British Minister acting on the principle that the British Government is not directly concerned in a matter exclusively affecting Canada, and that any settlement satisfactory to the United States and Canada will be acceptable to Great Britain. Sir Charles Tupper appears on his side to be mainly directing his efforts to securing the free admission of Canadian fish at American ports, and if that is granted he is prepared to concede every other point in dispute, even to that of admitting American ships to inshore fishery. The New England fishermen, however, are so firmly opposed to that concession that it is believed Mr. Bayard will not grant it. Possibly at Ottawa, where Mr. Chamberlain has gone on a visit to the Governor-General, he may get light on the question which will enable him to devise some plan mutually acceptable.

The Restriction of Immigration Has Been already brought under consideration in Congress, in response to the general public demand expressed throughout the Union. Senator Morrill, of Vermont, has introduced a bill for the purpose in the Senate, and Senator Reagan, of Texas, proposes to introduce another. The main idea of the Morrill bill is, to establish an inspection by our Consuls at foreign ports and to shut off undesirable emigrants before they cross the ocean. That of the Reagan bill is to establish a more rigid inspection, under Federal authority, at our own ports, and to require the steamship companies to give bonds that they will not bring over certain specified classes of persons, including paupers, lunatics, convicts, and inhabitants of places at which contagious diseases prevail. While the former is probably the one that will be most effective, the latter is also a necessity, and needs to be better organized and systematized than at present. There is also urgent need for a check for which neither bill makes provision—that of naturalization. Some better test of fitness for citizenship than five years' residence is required, and Congress will do well to provide it, either by a clause in one of the bills or by separate legislation.

An Effort to Deal with Anarchists is being made in Congress by Mr. Adams, of Illinois. He has introduced a bill giving the President power to expel anarchists from the country. His motive is entitled to all commendation ; for anarchists are out of place in this free country, where the people make the laws and can amend them when they choose. Nevertheless his bill is a mistake. Congress has no constitutional power to enact any such measure. It can exclude immigrants whom it deeems undesirable, as has been proved in the case of the Chinese, but it cannot send any person living here into exile, in time of peace. Any person, whether citizen or alien, committing crime or inciting to violence, which is the offence of the Anarchists, is entitled to be tried by jury. Mr. Adams would clothe the President with the functions of a despotic monarch, and would thus introduce into our Government the very element which extenuates the plots of Anarchists. Besides which his bill would infringe State rights, which in these times cannot be too jealously guarded. Every State must retain the power to maintain order within its borders, and to punish its own criminals.

The Abolition of Secret Sessions in the Senate, which was hotly debated last year, is proposed again. On December 13 Senator Platt, of Connecticut, offered an amendment to the Senate rules, providing for public consideration of both nominations and treaties. The proposition, so far as it relates to treaties, is of less importance than as to nominations. Every treaty that is of any considerable interest finds its way into the newspapers, which also publish the utterances of Senators in "secret" session. As to nominations, the executive sessions are retained only to protect the Senators from responsibility and from exposure. The President would be glad to have them done away with, as it would then give the public an opportunity of judging between him and the Senate in all disputes. The secrecy is of but little protection to Senators, and it produces the impression in the country that in secret sessions Senators do and say things which they would not like to see in print. It is understood that more Democratic votes will be cast for the bill this year than were cast last year, owing to Mr. Cleveland's attitude.

An Important Convention of Republican clubs was held last week in New York. Over a thousand delegates from all parts of the country assembled in Chickering Hall on December 15. The convention was not called to nominate any candidate for the presidency, nor to endorse the claims of any leader, but there could be no mistake as to its opinion. With the exception of the delegation from Ohio, which cheered lustily when the name of Sherman was mentioned, the whole convention seemed entirely unanimous for Mr. Blaine. Whenever his name was uttered, the greeting it received was wildly enthusiastic, and left no doubt on the mind of any one that the nomination will be his if he cares to have it. The convention adopted plans organizing State leagues of clubs and a National League, which was the purpose for which the convention was called, and erected a tariff platform of a strong protectionist type.

The President of the Fidelity Bank in Cincinnati has received a sharp lesson for his share in the wrecking of the bank. On December 12, Judge Sage sentenced him to ten years in the Penitentiary, and overruled his application for an appeal. He would not even allow him a few days to arrange his business affairs, but ordered him to be taken to Columbus without delay. It is impossible to withhold sympathy from a man of position and education in such a predicament, but there is no doubt that the sentence is a righteous one. The number of persons whose lives were wrecked by his financial operations and who have now no provision left for sickness or old age is enormous. We can but hope that this swift and crushing retribution may have the effect it is intended to have—that of warning persons in similarly responsible positions that negligence or maladministration of their trust will be punished without fail. On December 13, the cashier of the same bank was placed on trial, charged with misapplication of the funds and making false entries in the books.

An Overwhelming Disaster in China was reported only last week, though it occurred at the end of September. The news is contained in Chinese papers, which state that the Yellow River overflowed its banks in the province of Honau, and describe it as one of the most appalling occurrences in loss of life and property recorded in recent times. The river broke its banks on the evening of September 28, southwest of the city of Chingehow, and not only completely inundated that city, but also ten other populous cities. The whole area is now a raging sea ten to thirty feet deep where it was once a densely populated and rich plain. The former bed of the Yellow River is now dry, and the present lake was the bed of the river centuries ago. The loss of life is incalculable, and the statement is made by missionaries that millions of Chinese are homeless and starving. The Governor in Honau in his official reports to the Throne says: "Nearly all the people have been drowned in the district reached by the water, the survivors being those who escaped to the high ground or took refuge in trees, where they remained till they were rescued." The district under water is over seven thousand square miles in extent, and was formerly one of the richest and most populous in China. Money will be sorely needed to save the lives of those who escaped the flood, as they are without food.

A French Cabinet was Formed last week after many efforts. M. Fallieres failed, as M. Goblet had done. And President Carnot then sent for M. Tirard and again urged him to undertake the task. He has succeeded in getting a cabinet together, but not one that commands the confidence of the Chamber of Deputies. It may be driven out of office at any moment by a combination of any two of the many parties in the Legislature. The difficulties of the new President are enormous. He cannot govern without a Cabinet acceptable to the Legislature, yet no party is strong enough alone to support a cabinet of its own representatives. In trying to form a coalition cabinet of members of two or more parties, the President is met by other difficulties. The men will not work together and they lose standing with their party by associating with their opponents. The result is a state of political chaos which demands the genius of a Bismarck for its successful manipulation. The attitude of the parties was further embittered on December 10, by the attempted assassination of M. Ferry by a half-crazy politician, who fired three shots at him, wounding him slightly. It is expected that in the event of his cabinet being defeated, M. Carnot will lay the case before the people and dissolve the chamber, trusting that in electing a new House the people will show more patriotism than the politicians.

The Uneasiness in Europe, Caused by the concentration of troops on the Austro-Russian frontier, increased rather than diminished last week. A prominent Russian journal, in undertaking to explain away the significance of the movement, fomented the apprehensions of Austria and Germany. It made a comparison between the effective strength of Russia and that of her neighbors, and said that Russia had not made relative progress of late years. The alliance of Austria, Germany and Italy was a menace to Russia, which could not be ignored, and while the military chiefs of Russia do not fear the result of a conflict with the three Powers combined, they must make fit preparations for defence. This explanation, while ostensibly pacific, clearly implied an expectation of war, and, as Russian journals are inspired by the Government, it aroused general alarm.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored ministers in the South with this journal, have been received to the amount of $22.50. They are from Parsons, Kan., $2.50; Syracuse, N. Y., $1; Hillsdale, Mich., $1; Omaha, Neb., $3; Burlington Junction, Iowa, $1; Philadelphia, Pa., $1.50; Platteville, Ont., Can., $2.50; Baltimore, Md., $2; Menno, Pa., $1; Newark, N. J., $1; Denbigh, Ont., Can., $4; Marlboro, N. J., $2. There are still a large number of applicants earnestly desiring that the paper may be sent to them next year, some of whom say that during the past year their labors were blessed to a very remarkable extent, and ascribe the result to the blessing of God on the pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which have thrown light on passages of Scripture previously dark to them, and have helped and guided them in other ways.

The Death of Mrs. John Jacob Astor on December 12 removed not only the acknowledged leader of New York society, but the most liberal and philantrhopic lady of the State. She was about sixty years of age, and since her marriage, forty-one years ago, she has devoted nearly the whole of her own personal income to the benefit of the poor and the afflicted. Every hospital and every instiution designed to help the poor was sure of a regular subscription from her, and she had several enterprises of her own which she entirely supported. Especially the children Mrs. Astor delighted to help. Thousands of poor, friendless waifs of the street were clothed, educated and settled on Western farms at her expense. The last party went out last Thanksgiving Day. More than once a single party has involved an expenditure to her of $40,000. Besides the money she gave away personally in her visits among the poor, she spent annually in charity over $100,000. It has been often said by agitators, not prone to speak well of the rich, that, if all millionaires lived like Mrs. Astor, they would quit their enterprise.

The Sight of Coffins and Caskets is Making the life of a citizen of Camden, N. J., a burden to him. Last week the Court of Chancery was called upon to decide a case which he brought. He stated that he is seventy years of age and has had from his youth a strong dislike of the sight of funerals, coffins and the whole paraphernalia of death, and as he grows older his horror increases. Eleven years ago an undertaker opened an establishment next door to his house. He displays an assortment of coffins, ice-boxes, etc., in front of his place, and those articles are being frequently carried across the sidewalk to his wagon in full view of his next door neighbor, much to the latter's annoyance. The power of the Court of Chancery was in consequence invoked to close the undertaker's business. The Vice-Chancellor, however, declined to interfere, unless the establishment could be proved a nuisance—which it is not, except to the old gentleman who brought the suit. One must hope that the objection to the coffins proceeds merely from morbid feeling and is not due to a dread of death. In the latter case the inference would be serious, and the old gentleman should not lose a moment in making preparation for the inevitable. Any Christian can tell him how he may not only overcome his dread, but welcome death as the door to fuller life (1 Cor. 15 : 54).

A Pillar of a Church Fell in New York, on December 11. Extensive alterations and a complete renovation of a church in East Fourteenth Street have recently been effected, and the place was again opened for worship on Sunday a week. A very large congregation attended the opening service. At the close, just as the people were leaving the building, a large hollow iron pillar, which was one of a number placed in the aisle to support the ceiling, was seen to lurch over. Those who saw the danger called to those in front to get out of the way, and there was a general rush. Three persons, however, were hurt; two of them were right under the pillar, and were hurt badly, while the third received a glancing blow on the shoulder, causing an injury which was painful, but not serious. An examination of the building the next day showed that the columns did not rest on brick piers, as had been supposed, but on wooden piles in the cellar, and the one under the column which fell had become rotten, allowing the base of the column to sink, and when the weight of the dispersing congregation passed down the aisle, the vibration brought the pillar down. The fall of that kind of pillar does not do so much harm as does the moral fall of prominent professors who are often called pillars of the Church. When that occurs the explanation is very similar. They have been standing on their experience, or their doctrine, and not on the only sure foundation, Jesus Himself (1 Cor. 3: 11).

A Curious Method, of Controlling Refractory horses has been devised by a professor at Harvard. He has been some weeks in bringing it to perfection, but having at length become convinced of its success, he announced it, and declared himself ready to experiment on bad specimens of the equine species. A horse was sent to him whose record was remarkably bad. It had the trick of getting the bit between its teeth and then bolting. Its jaw was like iron, and when once it had the bit securely in its grip, it would not let go. One of its owners had put a curb on it so powerful that in his effort to stop the runaway beast he had actually fractured its jaw. On December 15 the professor exhibited the animal in the Harvard Veterinary School, in a state of perfect docility. The professor had won the victory by the power of electricity. Two light wires were connected with the bit, and ran along the reins to a small battery in the buggy, and the professor, by a turn of the hand, could administer a shock of light or strong intensity without injuring the horse. Whenever he gave a shock he accompanied it by the word "Whoa," or "Steady." After a few shocks, the driver's voice was sufficient to bring the horse to a standstill, and it was so docile that a child might drive it. In spite of the Psalmist's injunction (Ps. 32: 9), there are many men who resemble such horses. It is well for such men if the discipline of God's providence, though it may be painful at the time, brings them into such sensitive docility that the voice of God, in His Word, is promptly heeded and obeyed (Ps. 119 : 67).

Bridal Robes in a Coffin Adorn the Dead body of a Californian belle. The Oakland Tribune records the death of a young lady, who a year ago was one of the gayest and brightest members of society on the Pacific slope. She was engaged to be married, but before the ceremony took place she wished to pay a series of visits among her friends in the South and East. During her journeys she contracted a severe cold, which culminated in consumption. She returned to San Francisco, and subsequently was sent to the dry, mild climate of southern California, but nothing could stay the progress of the fatal disease. Giving up all hope, she returned home to die. She had one desire that she was anxious to have gratified before death. She wished to be married to her lover. She was dressed in the wedding gown which had been ordered over a year before, and, her lover's hand in hers, was solemnly wedded. Then, with a contented heart, the loving bride sank slowly to her death, which occurred three days afterward. Two days later her body, again attired in her bridal dress, was borne from St. Stephen's Church to the cemetery. A more striking type of her blighted life could not have been found than in that corpse clad in bridal array, but if she had given her heart to the Saviour, it was also typical of the joy awaiting her when, as a member of the bride of Christ, she will sit at the marriage supper of the Lamb (Rev. 19 : 7–9)

Two Fatal Mistakes are Reported from Wyandotte, Kan. On December 9, two parties of hunters camped near each other in the Ozark hunting grounds. The parties were strangers to each other, one of them hailing from Nevada, Mo., and the other being Wyandotte men. All the men were astir early in the morning and went in different directions. One of the Kansas men wore a suit of ducking, which strongly resembles the skin of a deer and while he was passing through some underbrush, one of the Missouri men caught a glimpse of him and in the dim light thought he was a deer. Instantly he fired and the man fell. The hunter ran to secure his prize, and, to his horror, saw that he had shot a man, who lay bleeding on the ground. The wounded man seeing a man running toward him with a smoking gun in his hand, rightly concluded that this was the man who had shot him, but, wrongly supposing that he was an enemy coming to finish him, collected his fast ebbing strength sufficiently to bring his own gun to his shoulder and to fire in self-defence. The ball went through the man's heart, killing him instantly. Soon afterward the other hunters came up just in time to hear the survivor's story before he, too, died. The pitiful aspect of the event, is that each man was mistaken as to the other or neither shot would have been fired. There are many wounded hearts in the church of Christ to-day, through a similar mistake. The arrows of denunciation from their brethren which have pierced them, would never have been sped, had their relationship in Christ been realized. The apostolic warning was forgotten (II Cor. 2 : 7, 8).

BRIEF NOTES.

It has been finally decided that the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church shall be held in New York City, beginning on the 1st of next May.

A gift of real estate, valued at $40,000, has been made by Ex-Mayor Thomas B. Peddie, of Newark, N. J. to the First Baptist Church, for the site of a new church, which Mr. Peddie offers to erect at his own expense, at a cost of $75,000

An Armenian class, with thirty members, for the study of the Bible in English, has been organized at Dr. MacArthur's Church, in New York. At the same Church, fifty Chinamen are instructed in English and Christianity by volunteer lady teachers.

Rev. C. W. Kilbon, of the Zulu Mission, has been in this country some two years, preparing a hymn and tune book in the native language, which is now ready for shipment. It includes about 250 hymns, and, owing to the peculiarity of the language, both hymns and tunes have had to be largely reconstructed.

Mr. E. P. Telford's services at Fall River, Mass., closed on December 15, amid many tokens of blessing. The mission has been one of marvellous results. Last Sunday Mr. Telford opened at Beverley, Mass. Thence he goes to Dr. Knowles' church, at Lynn, Mass, where the services will commence January 1.

Meetings have been held during the past two weeks at Baltimore, Md., by Miss Sisson, of Bethshan, England. Her Bible readings have attracted large numbers. They were given first in the parlors of a Christian lady, but had afterward to be held in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, and are now being held in the Lafayette M. P. Church. Much good is being done.

The Hospital Saturday and Sunday Collections in New York, will be taken up next Saturday and Sunday. Last year they amounted to $32,784.66, and other contributions from professions, trades and other sources, brought the total up to $53,051.98. It is earnestly hoped that as the needs of the hospitals continue to increase with the increasing population, the donations will also increase.

The Children's Aid Society, of New York, has issued an earnest appeal for assistance in feeding, clothing and providing for destitute children. During the past year the Society has given 260,304 meals to hungry children, and has had nearly 36,000 homeless children under its care, and has found homes for 2,974. Donations of money or clothing may be sent to the Secretary, Mr. C. L. Brace, 24 St. Mark's Place, New York.

The good news comes from the Baptist Ministers' Home, at West Farms, N. Y., that Dr. N. W. Miner has succeeded in clearing off the heavy load of indebtedness which weighed on the Institution, and has been enabled to place it on a sound financial basis. During the two years he has had charge of it, he has collected no less than ten thousand dollars. Mrs. and Miss Miner have rendered him valuable assistance in his labors. He deserves the most hearty support and encouragement.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, women or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD 63 Bible House, New York.

THE THREE CONDITIONS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"These things I have spoken unto you, that in Me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." John 16: 33.

Christ's Last Sermon—The Three States Revealed—I. Peace—Christ a Master of the Art of Peace—Undisturbed by Friends or Foes—Wished His People to Have Peace—Shouting a Sign of Weakness in Christians—Christ's Mode of Producing Peace—Foretold Trial—Explained its Purpose—Promised the Comforter—Declared the Power of Prayer—Assurance of the Father s Love—His Own Victory—II. Tribulation—The Cross Growing Sweet—The Devil Fawning—To be Hit on the Head—The Weaning Process—III. Victory—Christ's Brave Words.

THIS most delightful passage occurs at the close of the last of our Saviour's sermons before He went unto the Father. Let us treasure it as we lay up a man's last words. Wonderfully full that sermon is: it is of a piece with His last prayer, and that rises above all other pleadings of men. We shall never see all the richness of the grace of this sermon, till we have risen beyond these mists and clouds into the clearer atmosphere of the unclouded skies. In that happy country, being ourselves raised to a nobler condition, we shall be better able to comprehend the deep things of God, concerning which our Saviour spake in His supreme discourse. Meanwhile, let us apply our heart and mind to the consideration of these last words of the greatest of all preachers, the dearest of all teachers; and may the Spirit of our God open them up to us!

In trying to handle this text, aiming at the same practical end as my divine Lord and Master, I shall notice, first of all, the believer in Christ, and in Christ he is at peace; secondly, the believer in the world, and in the world he has tribulation; and, thirdly, the believer in the world and in Christ, and in that condition he has victory. "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." May the Holy Spirit, the Lord and giver of peace, bless the word which I may now speak unto you!

I. First, you have the believer in Christ spoken of in reference to His Peace.

Jesus saith—"That in Me ye might have peace." It is worthy of careful consideration that in Jesus Himself there was ever present an abiding peace. He had peace. If He had not Himself possessed peace, we could not have had peace in Him. But what a holy calm there was upon the spirit of our divine Master! Read His life through, and dwell upon any one delightful characteristic, and you will find Him perfect; but if you study it carefully, in order to remark upon His manliness, His self-possession, His calm and peaceful bearing in the midst of turmoil and provocation, you will find Him to be a master of the art of peace. Truly in patience He possessed His soul. Never man had more to disturb him, but never man was less disturbed. When His eager and foolish disciples would push Him forward or would hold Him back, He was moved neither in the one direction nor in the other by any of them; but he steadfastly held to the even tenor of his way. O friends, Christ has peace enough and to spare. He is Himself, personally, the deep well-spring of an endless peace, and therefore we can understand why we always find peace in Him. One calm and quiet man has sometimes spread peace through what else would have been terrified company. One Paul standing in the sinking ship saves all from ruin by the majesty of his immovable courage; and one Christ—such a Christ as ours—in the midst of a church, turns a horde of cowards into an army of heroes. His infinite peace breathes peace into our vacillating spirits. We rest because we see how He rests.

Now, as the Master had peace in Himself, He had a strong desire that all His disciples should have peace. Quietly He said, "These things have I spoken unto you, that in Me ye might have peace." Our Lord Jesus Christ delights to see His people firm, calm, happy. I do not think that He is so pleased to see them excited, although we have those around us, who seem to think that great grace can only display itself by raving and raging. The religion of the quiet Jesus was never intended to drive us to the verge of insanity. "He shall not strive, nor cry; neither shall his voice be heard in the streets."

Weakness Hurries, Rages, Shouts, for it has need to do so. Strength moves with its own deliberate serenity, and effects its purpose. To those who think that saints should be maniacs, Jesus says, "Peace! Peace!"

We have a great end to serve; we have a grand life to live: we have a grand Helper ready to help us if we will but believe in Him; therefore, we need not blow a trumpet before we begin, and we need not make a fuss when we are in the midst of our service, nor need we lie down on the ground as if we were the most wretched of men because of our heavenly calling. No, but we may just feel, "The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge," and walk with God through life in that holy quiet which springs of conscious strength. Let us enjoy the calm of heart which comes of knowing that the reserves of God are infinite, and that at any moment they can come and deliver us should an emergency occur. Oh, that we could learn from Christ the art of peace!

But now notice again, that in order to their having peace, He spoke to them certain words—"These things have I spoken to you, that in Me ye might have peace." Now, what did He say to them that they might have peace? One thing was, that He foretold their trials. He said to them, "They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service." Learn then, that one way for you to gain peace is to reflect upon it that trial is promised you, that trial is in the covenant, that persecution and the ill-will of an ungodly world are evils which you are bound to endure. They are guaranteed to you by the very fact of your being of the seed of the woman whose heel must be bruised; and they will come to you in your measure. Do, then, make yourself familiar with trial. Wonder when it does not come; and when it does come, say. "Ah!

You are an Old Acquaintance of mine." There is such a thing as carrying the Cross till you are so accustomed to it that you would be almost uneasy without it. You may bear a burden so long on your back that, if that burden were taken away, you would feel the miss of it. The Lord has made some of His children fond of the Cross. It was so with Rutherford. He said at last that he was half afraid lest the Cross, which had become so sweet to him, might rival Christ Himself. I never feel any fear of that myself, for pain is very much dreaded by my coward flesh; but I suppose that there are saints who have come to feel that the bitter is so beneficial that they would prefer its tonic to the sweetest cup that was ever mingled. It is an acquired taste, no doubt, but he that hath it will be at peace about trouble.

The next thing He did to comfort them was, that He told them why He was going away. It is often a choice blessing, when you have a great trial, to know what it is sent for. If it is expedient that the dear child should be taken from your arms—expedient that the business should not prosper—expedient that you yourself should be struck with a sickness which no faith will remove, then you bow to the divine wisdom. The God who is better to you than all your fears, yea, better than your hopes, perhaps intends the affliction to remain with you until it lifts the latch of heaven for you, and lets you into your eternal rest. Now, when the Saviour told them why He was going, the condescending information was meant to produce peace in their hearts. He has also told you why your trials are sent to you: they work your lasting good: wherefore, rest concerning them.

Further, to give them peace, the Saviour went on to speak to them of the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, and what the Comforter would do. He enlarged upon that theme, since it was so cheering. Beloved, if you want peace, think much of the divine Comforter. Then He told them about the power of prayer. He said, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name. he will give it you;" and again, "If ye abide in me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." What a breath of peace cools the forehead of the man who remembers that he may pray, and that prayer is heard in heaven! There is a noise in the streets, there is a disturbance within doors, even your own heart is perturbed; what then? Let us pray. The known is prayer. Oh, the peace that comes from the mercy-seat! You that are familiar with it will bear me witness that it is wonderful what storms it will quell, what cyclones it will quiet. All this must have greatly tended to produce peace; but as if this might not be enough, our tender Lord let slip a precious word that ought to give peace to all our minds: "The Father Himself loveth you." The love of God the Father is a treasure-house of peace. The Father Himself—not moved by the importunities of His pleading Son, but Himself, of His own accord, loveth you. O Father God, how hast Thou sometimes been slandered, as though Thou wert backward to love us, and Thy Son must needs persuade Thee! Nay, it is not so. God loved His people, and, therefore, He sent His Son to redeem them. "He so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son." Christ is not the cause of divine love, but the sweetest and best fruit of it. "The Father Himself loveth you." Wherefore, be of good cheer, and let your peace be like a river.

Remedy for Unknown Evils

And then, dear friends, He confirmed their faith in Himself. He so spoke to them that at last they said, "Now are we sure. By this we believe," and so on. This is the way to get peace. Peace comes by the way of faith. Those of you who are very fond of doubts, can, perhaps, tell me whether you ever derived any peace from them. Time is but ill used when we pore over books which are calculated to shake our faith: as well eat food which is sure to make us ill. The Lord knows there is sorrow enough in this world without laboring to make more; and I should like to ask all such critics and great discoverers whether they believe that their discoveries tend at all to the creation of peace in their own minds, or in the minds of others? Luther tells us how he found peace when one said to him, "I believe in the forgiveness of sins." Oh, if one did but believe what he professes to believe! I mean, believed it fully! That way lies peace—in Believing up to the Hilt.

The childlike way of sitting at Jesus' feet, and receiving His words—this is the path of peace. Believing, and not questioning, is the King's highway.

I must notice that our Master's wish that we might have peace, was qualified by those two words, "in Me"—"That in Me ye might have peace." Remember, then, you may not expect to derive peace from yourselves. Our Lord did not even intend that we should find peace in outward ordinances, or religious exercises. No doubt it is very quieting to read a chapter, or to attend a service, or to come to communion; but it is not the Lord's intent that these should of themselves yield us peace. These are to be means to peace, but the peace must always be in Himself, in His own Blessed Person. We must get to Him, for this is His wish, "That in Me ye might have peace"—peace only in Him, but peace always in Him. Outside of Him it is all tossing to and fro, and question, and fog, and haze, and fear; but in Him we dwell as in a sheepfold, where the sheep lie down and rest. In Him we are in a home where all is love and comfort. His wish is that His joy may be in us, and, therefore, he says, "These things have I spoken unto you, that in Me ye might have peace."

II. I have been a long while on that head, and I want to be all the shorter on the second—finds himself like wheat under the flail, for so the text puts it, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." That is, first, you are not screened from any kind of trouble. You are in Christ, and the Saviour saves you from your sins, but He has not promised that you shall have no sorrow. He has not promised to screen you from either poverty, or toil, or sickness, or slander, or any of the common ills of mankind. Some of the very best of His beloved have been enriched and indulged by being permitted to undergo much secret discipline of pain, and sorrow, and want. Your Lord, among the treasures that He gives you, grants a cross. You start back, and say, "Not that, Lord;" but He answers, "Yes, this, my child. This and no other." The cross is the best piece of furniture in your house, though you have sometimes wished it was not there. It shall always work your good: it does work it now. Some of the comforts allotted to you in providence will be questionable in their effect upon you, by reason of your sinfulness and weakness; but the cross which the Lord appoints you has no result but your good. We are not guarded from tribulation, but we are promised it, and we are benefited by it.

The Believer in The World

We are not favored by being promised the admiration of the ungodly. "In the world"—not merely in this present state, but in this ungodly world—we shall have tribulation. Worldlings may like a Christian for certain externals; they may admire Him for certain advantages they get from Him; but as a Christian they cannot love Him. That is impossible.

The Serpent Has Not Changed

his nature, but is a vile deceiver and destroyer still. He still exhibits his glittering scales, and speaks as craftily and flatteringly to us as he did to mother Eve; and, perhaps, to you he says that he loves you more than he can tell, only you are so unfriendly and suspicious that he has never been able to show his affection. Yes, he sees in you so much to admire that he wishes you were not quite so strait-laced, and then he could introduce you to his dear friends and children, for you would do them no end of good. Hit him across the head if you get an opportunity, for he means no good to you. Of all the devils in the world I hate a roaring devil least; but a fawning devil is the worst devil that ever a man meets. When the world pretends to love, understand that it now hates you more cordially than ever, and is carefully baiting its trap to catch you and ruin you. In the world and from the world ye shall have tribulation.

The text puts this in such a broad way that it gives a hint that in the world you will have tribulation often. Affliction is not with us always, but it is well to be always prepared for it. There are times in which we enjoy prosperity: some Christians enjoy much of it; and do not let them be much alarmed because they do so, for what the Lord's providence sends us is not harmful in itself, and is to be accepted without suspicion I remember that a person came to me once, and told me that she had prayed for affliction. I replied, "Dear soul, dear soul, do not be so foolish. You will have quite enough trouble without asking for it." If a child were to ask his father to let him be birched, he would be a strange sort of child, and I should think he would not be likely to repeat the experiment if he had a practical man for a father. No, no, no! That is not our path of duty. If God spares us tribulation let us be thankful to Him; but if He does not spare us let us be equally thankful. This last is a hard lesson to learn; but we ought to learn it. He sang a true song who gave us this verse—

> "'Poor and afflicted,' 'tis their lot,
> They know it, and they murmur not;
> 'Twould ill become them to refuse
> The state their Master deign'd to choose."

Brethren, I was thinking, as I turned over this subject, that though there is tribulation in the world, we still get far too fond of the world. We are always trying to pluck handsful of its flowers; and if its roses had no thorns we should bury ourselves in heaps of them! We should want to tarry here for ever, and say, "Lo, this is my home," if it were not that an unkind world gives us aliens' treatment, and forces us to feel that here we are in exile. One said to a great man, as he looked over his gardens, "These are the things that make it hard to die." As we are not to live here, but must soon be up and away to the better land, where our life can far better develop, it is meet that in the world we should have tribulation, that we may turn our thoughts and our desires towards that dear city of our God where alone is our dwelling place. Thanks be unto God for the tribulation which weans our thoughts from earth, and wins them for heaven; and let all the people say, "Amen."

III. But now, lastly, let us view the believer in the world and in Christ; and

This Means Victory.

I will occupy but a moment or two to say, that if we dwell in Christ, though we have also to dwell in the world, yet we shall overcome the world. I call your special attention to the words of our Lord Jesus in the text—"Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Our Lord was as that time still in the world. Do you know where Christ was when He said that? Why, He was on the edge of Gethsemane. He was at the foot, so to speak, of Golgotha, where He was to die. He had not then borne the scourge and the Cross. Oh, but it was bravely spoken! The faith which abode in Him made Him say: "I have overcome." On the verge of the fight He said, "I have overcome." But up to that point it was assuredly true, as it was even to the end, that He had really overcome the world. Its blandishments He had overcome. Its temptations He had overcome. Its terrors He had overcome. Its errors He had overcome. Everything in the world that had assailed Him, He had put to the rout. He was tempted in all points like as we are; but He remained without sin. He had overcome everything that had come to attack His holiness, His patience, His self-sacrifice; He had been victor at every point.

Now, here is a matter of joyful consideration: our Lord says, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." But what cheer is there in that? Well, the cheer lies in the fact, which He does not here state, but which He had stated before, namely, that He is one with us, and we are one with Him. He does as good as say, "I have led the way in this dread fight, and conquered the adversaries which you have now to fight with, and thus I have virtually won the battle before you begin it." "I have Myself," says Jesus, "overcome for you that you may overcome in Me. Now, go you to the fight, to rout the already worsted enemy, and triumph over a serpent whose head I have already broken."

I have this last word to add. There may be some here who will say, "Look, look; these Christian people have plenty of trouble." That is quite true, but they are

Not the Only Ones to be Pitied:

The wicked shall find that there are special sorrows for them—whips of scorpions for them, especially when they get farther on in life, and their youthful fires burn down to a black ash. Woe unto sinners when they have to reap the fruits of their evil deeds! O sirs, I would not have to go through life without a Saviour, as you do, no, not if I might be made an emperor. To have to fight this life-battle without Christ is sure defeat. What a discovery it will be when having struggled through one life of sorrow, you shall find yourself beginning another life of greater sorrow, which will never come to an end.

It is an awful thing for a man to go from hell to hell; to make this world a hell, and then find another hell in the next world! But it were a blessed thing to go through fifty hells to heaven, if such a thing could be. It is glorious to struggle on through poverty and sickness and persecution, and to hear at last the words, "Well done!" That will be glorious. Who aspires to it? God help each one of us to labor after it, and given strength to carry on the holy war, and fight it through even to the end!

But if you are wrapping yourselves up in wretched rags of earth, and are living to make money, or to get drink, or to enjoy yourselves in the hurtful luxuries of lust, God have mercy upon you, and save you! Hear you the Gospel, each one of you! "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." The Lord lead you to do so, for His name's sake! Amen.

A POSTSCRIPT FROM MR. SPURGEON.

AT this time I am compelled by fervent gratitude to acknowledge, in the mass, a vast amount of loving encouragement, for which it is impossible for me to tender individual thanks. The "Down-Grade" controversy has cost me dear in several ways, and the pain of heart I have endured I would not wish any other man to bear. But the floods of enthusiastic sympathy have washed out the footprints of sorrow, and left many precious things upon the shores of my memory. I had cast myself upon the Lord alone, willing to be forsaken of all for the truth's sake; and hence it is an extra joy to find so many unlooked-for friends and helpers in every part of the Christian church. Human sympathy is in this case the basket of silver to bear to me the golden apples of divine consolation. I now know of a surety that there are tens of thousands that have not bowed the knee to "modern thought."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

An Actor's Renunciation.*

THERE was a young man of whom this story is told: he was walking in Central Park, New York, when he was accosted by an elderly gentleman, who, in a very polite way, begged of him to accept a tract. The suddenness of the offer, and the very courteous manner of the gentleman, led him to take the tract. He looked, and it was headed "Where are you going—after death?" An arrow pierced him. He tore the little paper into shreds; he would not leave a piece of it that any other person might read. Still the words were there, rankling in his soul—"Where are you going—after death?" He was a prominent play-actor. He had an engagement for that evening in one of the theatres of New York, but he was sick at heart; he could not play. He was told that he must, but he stoutly refused. Then he was ridiculed, threatened and persecuted. He fled to Chicago, taking with him a letter to Mr. Moody. Here he tarried, trying to acknowledge Christ, having left a lucrative profession, because he deemed it sinful, and beset by enemies who threatened his life. Like Paul, he had experience of what it costs to stand up for Jesus. His talent was acknowledged; he could have earned two hundred dollars a week; he was importuned, urged and threatened; but still he stood firm. The Young Men's Christian Association found him employment, at which he earned but two dollars and a half a day; and yet with the other door open to him, friends entreating, and enemies swearing that they would stab him to the heart, he did not go back. As for the courteous gentleman, who was in some respects like Paul's sister's son (Acts 23: 12–22), It was a little thing he did. He simply handed a tract, and probably did not know what became of it or what it did; but it waked up a slumbering soul, and brought spiritual life to a lost sinner.

A Servant's Reproof.

An anecdote is told of Whitelock, who was sent as Oliver Cromwell's envoy to Sweden in 1653. The night before he embarked he rested

* From "Living for the Master." By Lewis H. Reid. A volume of sermons for private reading; or for lay reading in congregations temporarily without a pastor. It is full of beautiful and original thought, wholly evangelical, yet free from sectarianism, breathing a spirit of gentleness and spirituality, untainted by acrimony or bigotry. 355 pages. Price, $1.25. Published by Anson D. F. Randolph & Company, 38 West Twenty-third Street, New York.

An Inca of Peru. (See page 805.)

Miss Bartlett Consults Her Lawyer.

at Harwich. It was storming without, and he was much disturbed in mind, as he reflected on the distracted state of the nation. It happened that a confidential servant slept in an adjacent bed, who, finding that his master could not sleep, said, "Pray, sir, will you give me leave to ask you a question?" "Certainly." "Pray, sir, don't you think God governed the world very well before you came into it?" "Undoubtedly." "And pray, sir, don't you think He will govern it quite as well when you are gone out of it?" "Certainly." "Then, sir, pray excuse me, but don't you think you may as well trust Him to govern it as long as you live?" To this question Whitelock had nothing to reply; but turning about, soon fell asleep, till he was summoned to embark.

The Poor Student's Motto.

A few years ago, there was a poor boy in the city of New York who supported himself and widowed mother by selling petty wares from door to door. He was thin and pale, and suffered much from a disease affecting one of his limbs, but his heart was strong and his spirit light. In his round of sales he came to the theological seminary. The students became interested in him, gave him instruction, and fired him with the hope of obtaining a classical education. Suffering still from his malady, he submitted to an operation, but died from the effect of it at the age of seventeen, having previously prepared a sketch of his life, which was published. His funeral was largely attended; distinguished men were there; the great and the good wept at his grave. The secret of the impression he made was his high aims and unselfish spirit. In his writing desk, among his papers, were found these lines which he had copied and adopted as the motto of his life:

"To live for those who love me,
Whose hearts are kind and true,
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And the good that I can do."

Dear young man—that is it! To live for others, to live for God, to live to be useful, is the only end worth living for.

A Recipe for Happiness.

Happiness is a fruit; happiness is an effect; happiness comes from doing, it is something you are to invest for. You cannot have it except as the interest on your deeds. The man who invests nothing should expect no dividends. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth." "The liberal soul shall be made fat." "He that watereth shall be watered." How strange it is that we do not better understand this! The more we give and do for Christ, the more shall come back to us. Is it not so? Have you not tried it? I say, to be a happier Christian, you must be a wide-awake Christian, full of alms and good deeds. A gentleman complained to his pastor that he did not feel as much interest in some object of benevolence—it may have been foreign missions—as he wished that he felt. His pastor replied, "Give to it; give more; keep giving till the interest comes." If you ever feel unhappy, go out and seek some one whom you can bless. If you want more joy, make others glad, and happiness shall come to you.

MISS BARTLETT'S BENEFACTION.

(See Illustration.)

"Here is a novel experience for you, Cousin Clara," said Miss Bentley, the cousin, secretary and almoner-in-chief of the wealthy Miss Clara Bartlett, as the latter entered their breakfast room one morning. "You are being dunned for money. Now I suppose there are many persons who would not be able to enjoy their breakfast after receiving such a letter as this. But you have that comfort; you can pay the man and take your custom somewhere else."

"What is it, Janet?"

"Oh! Ballard has sent a polite note, asking you if it would be convenient for you to pay his account. A heavy payment is coming due, etc., etc.; the usual excuse. I considered it very impertinent, and if you will write a cheque for it, I will take it to him and tell him my opinion."

"Let me read what he says, dear?"

Miss Janet passed the letter to her cousin, who read it carefully. She was a prim little body, excessively neat, and a little stiff and formal in manner, but a host of poor people loved her and called down blessings on her head. She was very rich, and she held her wealth as a stewardship to be administered in the sight of God. By far the larger part of her income went in relieving the necessities of the destitute, and this very bill, the payment of which was requested, was for groceries and coals sent by her direction to homes where they were needed. It was a somewhat large amount; but there had been a spell of severe weather and Miss Bartlett had been more active than usual.

"Do you know, this seems to me a genuine case," she said as she laid the letter down. I think the man must have been hard pressed when he wrote it. I do not think it impertinent. I will go myself and pay it this morning. I sometimes fancy that there is more distress, and perhaps more need of help, among business men than among the very poor.

Miss Bartlett looked at the letter again, and was confirmed in her first opinion and in her resolution to investigate. If she could have peeped into the home of the writer of the letter she would have had no doubt. At that very moment the young grocer was on his knees at family prayer. His three little children were trained to join in the Lord's Prayer, with which he always closed his morning worship, and as their infantile voices uttered the petition "Give us this day our daily bread," the thought was very heavy on their father's mind, that the time might be very near when there would not be bread for them, and that prayer would take on a very urgent meaning for the loved children.

The world thought him prosperous, and in a sense he was so. He had worked very hard to build up a large business, and had succeeded only too well. His capital was not large enough to run it, and just now he had a large stock and a large amount of money owing him, but no money to pay his own debts.

He went into his store with a heavy heart, fully expecting that it would be his last day there. To-morrow it would be in the hands of his creditors. It was very hard after all his toil. Miss Bartlett was almost the first person who came in. He fully expected that she would resent the letter he had written, though he had tried to make it as respectful as he could. He was therefore agreeably surprised by her manner.

"Here is a cheque for the account, Mr. Ballard," she said; "I am glad you wrote to remind me. These bills should be paid more quickly, and I will do so in future. I hope this will set your anxiety at rest about your own payment."

The poor fellow devoutly wished it had been enough to do that, but it would go but a very small way toward the sum he needed. It would not do, however, to let it be known to his customers that he was in difficulties, so he merely thanked her and said he hoped to retain her custom.

"Oh, certainly," was the reply. "I hope you are prospering. Business, I know, has many difficulties."

The grocer assented, but he would not respond to the implied invitation for his confidence, and Miss Bartlett went her way. Still, she felt sure there was trouble in that man's breast, and she was strongly impelled to help him. She hesitated at the end of the street, and finally, as if her resolution was taken, she turned in the opposite direction and walked rapidly. She entered a lawyer's office, and asked for Mr. Oldham. He was not in, but the clerks offered to send for him, as he was at his home only two blocks away. But Miss Bartlett preferred to seek him herself, and presently the young lawyer was closeted with her in his snug bachelor room.

"I want you to make a very quiet inquiry about Mr. Ballard's affairs," she said in her usual direct way. "I want to know if he is in trouble."

"There is no need to inquire," Mr. Oldham said. "I happen to know that he is in trouble, and if he does not have about two thousand dollars in the bank to-day, he will be in worse trouble still."

"Is he an honest man?"

"Oh, yes, and a Christian man, too, but that does not count in a case of notes due. Money is the only thing that tells."

"Is he industrious and sensible?"

"Yes, I believe so, in fact he is a model man; but he will have to go just like the others if he does not pay."

"Will you please take my instructions, Mr. Oldham?"

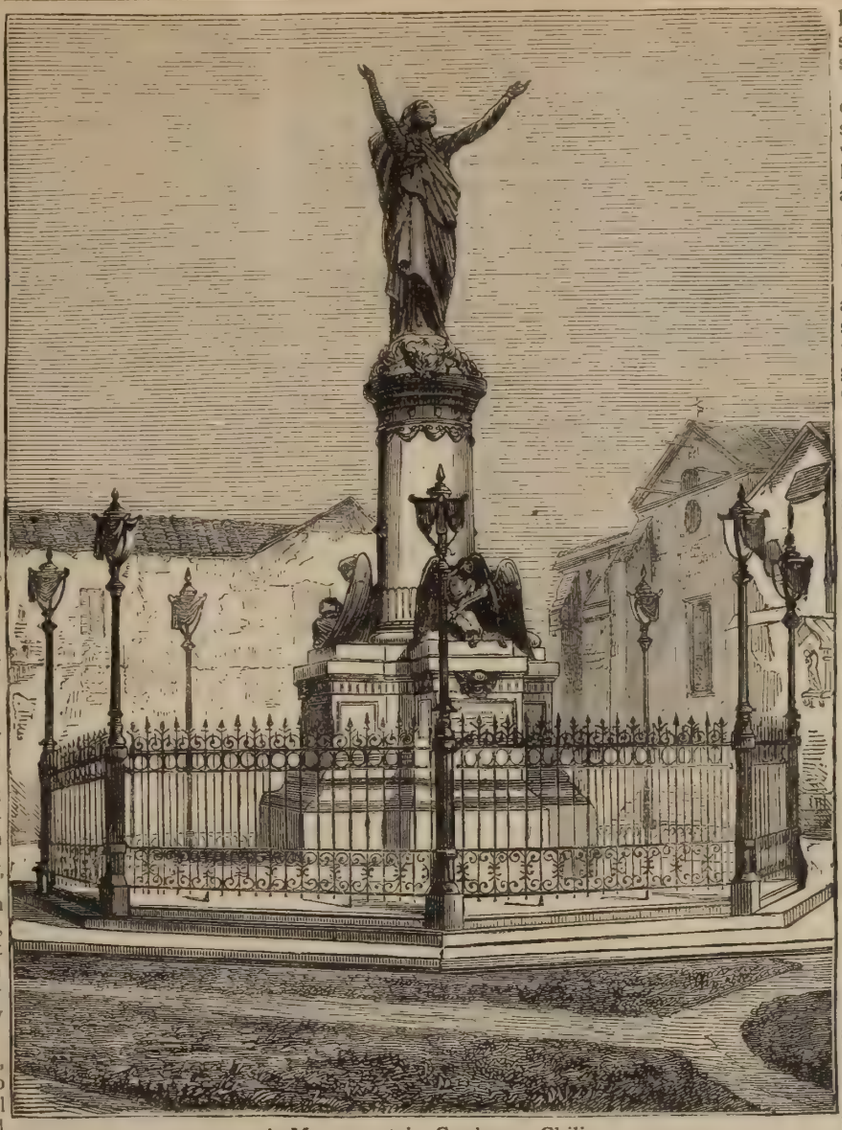
The lawyer produced his pocket-book and intimated his readiness.

"I want you to go to Mr. Ballard and find out how much he needs, not to meet this note only, but to give him permanent relief, and if five thousand dollars will do it, to advance him that sum on my account, not mentioning me in the matter."

The lawyer looked at her with a smile. He said, "As your agent, Miss Bartlett, I will do so; but as your lawyer, I must tell you that you are doing a very risky thing. You may, and probably will, lose your money."

"Thank you for the advice, Mr. Oldham, but I have made up my mind, and I need not tell you that I am obstinate. Good morning."

If any man has known what it is to be honest at heart, and yet to be, through adverse circumstances, so placed as that he may lose his character and see his family come to want, he can understand the ecstatic delight of Ballard when he received the money that delivered him. In a few years it was all paid back with interest, and he is able to help needy men himself now, and he takes delight in doing it. The timely help which saved his name and his home was, he firmly believes, sent from God, and when he knew in after years who his benefactress was, and talked of the matter to her, she agreed with him.



A Monument in Ganhago, Chili.

A REMARKABLE MONUMENT.

(See Illustration.)

THE visitor to Chili cannot fail, in passing through the streets of Santiago, its capital, to be impressed with the beauty and grace of one of its monuments, a picture of which appears on this page. It represents a woman, standing with outstretched arms, on the summit of a pillar, as if pleading to heaven in her desolation. The attitude is as graceful as it is expressive, and the beholder is irresistibly impelled to ask what are its origin and design. The event which it was erected to commemorate, was inexpressably sad. It involved the terrible death of two thousand persons, nearly all of them ladies. On December 8, 1863, the inhabitants of the city went in large numbers to the beautiful church of La Campania. At least three thousand persons were in the building during the hours of worship. Suddenly the cry was raised that the church was on fire. The scene of horror that ensued was appalling; not more than one thousand of the worshippers escaped. The others all lost their lives. Some were burned, others were killed by the falling of burned beams, and others again—and these, it may be hoped, formed the largest proportion—were suffocated by the smoke. All Santiago was in mourning; scarcely a family escaped without the loss of at least one of its members. It was not likely that such a disaster would be forgotten by that generation; but the Chilians desired to make the memory of it perpetual, and this monument was erected.

THE FAMILY OF TRIPE COURT.

By Brenda.

(Continued from page 798.)

TOM'S RETRIBUTION.

By and by one of the mother's hands moved, a slight color came back into her cheeks and lips, and she opened her eyes and looked piteously into those of her friend.

"My leg!" she whispered, with a sharp stab of pain convulsing her features; "the leg of that stool caught against it."

She did not say whose foot had hurled it towards her. But Mrs. Job knew, for little Sue had told her.

"It's broke the skin, from the feel of it. How ever shall I get up?"

She made an attempt to rise to get into the chair Mrs. Job set for her, but the pain and the effort were too much, she would have fainted again if she had persevered.

"Stay where you are, then, till you feel a bit stronger," said her neighbor. "Polly—oh, no, you've got the baby—Sue, I mean, just bring the chair round to mother's back, and she can lean against it—so; and now I'll look at the leg; perhaps a wet bandage may soothe it, my dear, and draw some o' the sting out."

Mrs. Job then proceeded to examine the poor limb, and was shocked to find what a state it was in. The spike of the stool had broken the tight purple skin, and inflicted a terrible wound.

"You must see the doctor for this, that's sure," said Mrs. Job gravely.

"It won't be any good. I was at the Dispensary last week," said poor Bridget faintly. "and they told me then it was no good my coming any more—they couldn't do anything more for me as an out-patient."

"They wanted you to go into the Infirmary?" suggested Mrs. Job very gently. She was almost afraid of mentioning the Infirmary to Bridget, for she knew how, for the past six months or more, friends had been advising her to go in, and how Bridget had seemed to resent the bare notion of leaving home as almost an insult to her, and certainly an impossible thing. Only the very last time when Mrs. Treeby had urged it upon her, saying it would "serve that lout of a husband of hers richly right to be left alone and to have to shift for himself for a little, and she only hoped she'd do it," Poll and Sue heard their mother say, "No, I never shall, Mrs. Treeby. I'd rather die than go." And when kind "Miss Mary," the Vicar's daughter, had begged Bridget to think of it as really the best thing she could do, for all their sakes, she had made the same quiet, determined answer, "I never shall. Miss Mary. I could never leave them all. I'd rather die first." So the answer Bridget gave now to Mrs. Job's half-timid question, "They wanted you to go into the Infirmary?" surprised the children out of their seven senses.

"Yes," she said. "They wanted me, and I shall go now."

Poll and Sue stared at their mother aghast. Had they heard rightly? Was mother dreaming? She had closed her eyes—yes, she must be dreaming. Such a dreadful thing as mother leaving them and going away could not be true. But their poor little hearts misgave them the next moment, for mother opened her eyes and said quite calmly:

"They will let me have baby in with me; she's not weaned yet; and you'll look after the others a bit as far as you can?"

"Oh, yes, my dear," answered Mrs. Job, taken aback too at Bridget's sudden resolution; "I'll have a h'eye to them while you're in You're downright sensible, Bridget, to make up your mind, Let's see, what is baby's age?"

A thought had struck Mrs. Job which made her anxious on the subject. Babies, she knew, were not allowed in the Infirmary with their mothers after a certain age.

"A twelvemonth old; but I haven't weaned her yet," said the mother, knowing what was in her neighbor's mind. "And Mrs. Blea told me they allowed them in if they were not weaned."

She spoke as if she were growing faint again, and Mrs. Job bade her not to talk any more for the present.

"I'll just run back home now, and give my children their dinner," said Mrs. Job to little Poll and Sue, who were still looking most amazed and frightened at what mother had said, "and then I'll come back again with some of our stew for mother and you—it'll do her good. There doesn't seem anything preparing."

No, there was no saucepan on the fire, no signs of dinner coming in the poor room, and when Mrs. Job, after a very short absence, came running back with a bowl full of hot stew, enough for them all, Poll and Sue forgot their trouble a little, in satisfying the sharp cravings of hunger. But their minds were not easier for long. Mother could not be persuaded to eat her share; she seemed to be busy worrying and thinking over something, and suffering acute pain, which made her close her eyes and moan now and then. Presently she said to Mrs. Job:

"Could you go this afternoon, Mary, to the House, and see about the order for getting me in? I'll go as soon as they can take me"—which terrified them afresh.

Mother, then, really did mean to go into the Infirmary.

"Yes, I'll go off now," said Mrs. Job, delighted to see that she was still in the same mind. She had fully expected Bridget to change it. "They'll want to know your age, dear, and where you was born, and how long you've been in the parish, and when you was married, and how many children you've got, and what your husband is, and what his father and mother was, and what their father and mother was before them, and a whole heap o' things one doesn't see the reason for."

Bridget, from her hard couch on the floor, supplied such information as she could to her friend to carry to the poorhouse authorities, and then Mrs. Job left, saying she would be back as soon as she could. After this, Bridget shut her eyes and was very quiet, and with the baby clasped in her arms she seemed to sleep a little. Then the miserable children began to whisper to each other, huddling over the fire.

"Whatever shall us do if mother goes and leaves us?" said Sue.

"Run away," said Poll. "I shall! Fancy being left without mother to be thumped and bumped about by him!" jerking her little black thumb backwards towards the bed where Tom Mite was sleeping his heavy sleep.

"Yes, we'll run away," assented Sue, as if it were quite the best thing to have thought of.

Tom Mite slept on for many hours longer, during which much important business was done, and plans were settled, in the home he had made so miserable. At ten o'clock, when at last he got off the bed and stretched himself, having slept off his drunken fit, he became dimly conscious that there was something unusual going on in the room. Looking about him, it seemed gradually to dawn upon his stupid brain that things were different from what they were generally.

There was Mrs. Job—he gave his eyes a rub—yes, it was Mrs. Job. Oh, dear, he was glad it wasn't Mrs. Treeby! washing away at his wife's wash-tub as hard as she could; there was Poll helping her, and Sue, all shrumped up and miserable-looking on a chair, trying to nurse baby, and to keep her eyes open at the same time. They were so heavy with sleep, Sue was afraid to let them drop for an instant lest she should fall off her seat, baby, and all. And Bridget—Tom gave another rub to his eyes—where on earth was Bridget? Lying on the floor! What funny "start" was this? he wondered, as in silence he sat himself down opposite little Sue and the baby by the fire, and looking again he saw that Bridget was overhauling the family wardrobe—a rough deal box that had once been a seaman's chest, and which the Mites had bought for a few pence from a pawnshop down by the wharves, to do duty for a chest of drawers. Bridget had it open at her side on the floor, and she was taking out from it certain articles of shabby clothing, and placing them in a neat pile in a speckled handkerchief outspread on the boards. She seemed to be preparing a bundle for a journey. "Another funny start!" thought Tom. "What in the world did it all mean?"

Tom began to feel very uncomfortable. Everybody went on with her work, apparently too busy to take any notice of him. There was an awkward silence—nobody was speaking. "Why were they all mum like this? another funny start!" growled Tom inwardly, but he did not speak. He was quite glad when, after a few moments, the baby began squirming its puny arms about, and lifted its voice to cry. It gave him an excuse for speaking himself.

"What makes 'er so fretty this evenin'?" he asked of sleepy little Sue, who roused herself with a start to hush it.

"Everthink's in a h'upset," replied Sue, looking across at him with blinking eyes as she rocked the baby to and fro; "and the pretty dear knows it."

"What do you mean by a upset?" inquired the man, but in so low a tone that his voice was drowned in the noise of the baby's crying.

Sue rocked it quiet again, and was soon nodding over it as before, every minute on the verge of falling off her perch, but just saving herself in time,

"Will you have some supper, Tom?" said, at length, Bridget's voice from the floor. "There's a hunk of bacon in the safe."

Here was another "start!"—his wife offering him supper, and not stirring herself to get it. He turned his stupid, blood-shot eyes toward her, intending to give a sharp answer, but he hesitated: there was Mrs. Job there to hear him, and he was ashamed to do so before Mrs. Job. He always felt, if truth were told, a certain amount of shame after his drunken bouts, and especially so, if this good friend of his wife's was present. And yet another thing caused him to check himself: he thought Bridget's face turned toward him "looked a bit queer," yes, very queer indeed, when he took another glance. So, instead of answering her question about supper, he said:

"Why, you look as if you had seen a ghost, Bridge! Aren't you well, lying there?"

"No; my leg's bad," replied Bridget.

"Humph!" growled Tom, pausing a minute; then, "Is it worse than it was—than it's always been?"

"Yes, a great deal worse," now spoke up little Poll from the tub, where she was helping Mrs. Job. "Mother's so bad she can't stand up."

"You kicked the stool across the room, father, when you was in drink this morning," said little Sue, opening wide her eyes, and rousing herself to speak boldly—Mrs. Job being present, she dared to come out with the plain truth—"and it caught mother on her bad leg, and laid it open, and she fainted, and now she can't stand."

This ugly statement was listened to by Tom Mite with great uneasiness. He would have liked to have knocked little Sue off her chair, for making it in that bold tone before Mrs. Job, but Mrs. Job would only have thought still worse of him if he had, so he didn't. He felt a sort of angry sorrow and alarm creeping over him. Was it true what Sue said? Had he really injured his wife so that she couldn't stand? Why should he blame himself, though? Was a man ever answerable for what he did when he was "in liquor?" He hadn't the slightest recollection of kicking the stool, or of anything else that he had done that morning. Wasn't it hard that he should be blamed for doing things he knew nothing about? All this ran through his mind while he paused to think over the state of things; then he said:

"Aren't you going to try to get up, Bridget? What's the good of your lying there on the floor? It'll do you no good; you can't lie there all day to-morrow, can you?"

"No," said Bridget quietly; "I am going to the Infirmary to-morrow."

Her husband looked as if the skies had fallen upon him.

"What!" he cried. "Going into the Infirmary—you, Bridget?"

"Yes, Tom," said Mrs. Job, speaking for the first time; "there's nothing else for Bridget to do. She's badly hurt, and the doctors can't do nothing for her here. Iv'e got the h'order for admission, and she's made up her mind to go in at ten o'clock to-morrow."

Tom gazed about him, rueful and aghast. He saw it all now: the reason why Mrs. Job was there so late, the reason for the chest being out and the bundle being prepared, the reason for Sue saying "everything was in an upset."

"But, Bridget," stuttered Tom in an angry, upbraiding tone, "you used to say you'd never go into the Infirmary and leave us."

"And I wouln't go now, Tom, if I could do you any good by keeping out," was his wife's touching answer, "but I can't stand, so I can't work. I shouldn't be able to earn anything, or to do anything for you and the children, if I kept at home."

"But what—what—what is to become of—" us he was just going to say, but he changed it for very shame to "the children." "What is to become of the children," he asked, "if you go?"

"Mrs. Job 'll do what she can," said Bridget with a faint sigh.

She knew well enough how miserable it would all be in the home when she was gone. She could not trust herself to dwell upon what it would be like for a moment this evening. If she did dwell, the Infirmary order she knew would go to the winds; only the goading pain under which she was suffering, causing her to change color every moment, first to burning red and then to ashy white, kept Bridget Mite firm to her purpose to enter the parish Infirmary.

Tom was at his wits' ends to know what to say next. Bridget seemed really resolved. An idea suddenly struck him: he would see what pleading the cause of the baby would do. "She has always been weak over that ugly little brat," he said to himself. "If anything under the sun will turn her, it will be that brat."

Yes, true; their youngest born was Bridget's tenderest point. The Mites' baby was a poor little specimen of humanity—angular where it should have been round, very thin and white, and given to wailing, and never placid; "Always on the work," Mrs. Treeby remarked to Bridget, "because, Bridget, you are always on the fret yourself; never sparing yourself time to take even your meals in peace."

And because it was so sickly and so puny, and so unlikely to get any of the world's caresses, Bridget, like a true mother, had pressed it all the closer to her tired and troubled heart, and been from the first what her husband called "weak over it." It was this knowledge that made him resolve to mention "the baby" now as the surest way to shake Bridget in her plan, if indeed she could be shaken.

"What about baby, Bridget," he asked, bending forward, "not weaned? Have you thought what'll become of her if you go?"

"She'll go in along with me," said Bridget, and her answer crushed out Tom's last hope. His countenance fell like his spirits, and he leant his face in his hands, and gazed wofully into the expiring embers in the grate.

"Poll and Sue 'll be here to light the fire and cook the food time I'm away," said Bridget, trying to say something cheering. She felt so sorry for her unworthy husband.

Poll and Sue gave each other a knowing little glance across the room, which meant to say, "No, we sha'n't. We know better than that! We know what we've settled to do, don't we?"

"And there's some money to go on upon, Tom," continued his wife; her poor anxious mind had been busy counting up all she could leave them. "Three shillings in the mug there on the shelf, and Pat Tod, down at the wharf, owes me tenpence for three weeks' wash, and Bill Sling, at Simmons's Dock, sixpence, and several others owes me money. They're behindhand, but they'll pay up all right if you'll call for it and tell 'em I'm gone and the money's wanted! Mrs. Job 'll tell you their names and all about it; she knows."

(To be Continued.)

HEROD AND JOHN THE BAPTIST.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for January 1, 1888. Matt. 14: 1-12 Memory Text Matt. 14: 12.

Ver. 1. Herod Antipas, Son of Herod the Murderer of the Children, Matt. 2: 16—The same Herod to whom Christ was Sent by Pilate, Luke 23: 6-12—A Tetrarch the Governor of a Fourth Section of a Roman Province—Ver. 2, Herod's Conscience at Work—A Suggestion Reluctantly Accepted; See Luke 9: 9—Superstition and Cruelty Combined—Ver. 3-5: Double Adultery, Herod's Wife and Herodias's Husband being Alive—John's Faithfulness and Courage—Ver. 6-7: Salome, the Daughter of Former Husband of Herodias—Those Dances Among Romans were Immodest—An Exhibition Leading to Sin and Folly, as Theatres Do Now—Ver. 8-11: A Horrible Choice—Instigated by her Mother—Ver. 9: The False Pride of an Entrapped Man—Ver. 12: An Example to the Bereaved.

WHEN our blessed Lord had finished His parables of the Kingdom, He came into His own country (Nazareth). There He taught in the synagogue. It was a wondrous teaching, unlike any of the eloquent oratory of our day. He opened the Word, which was then only the Old Testament, and, finding the sixty-first chapter of Isaiah, He simply read the first two verses in the power of the Holy Ghost, "and the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on Him" (Luke 4: 20). There was not an inattentive eye or ear in the whole of that audience. It was neither graphic description, vivid illustration, telling stories, or eloquent declamation which held the people spell-bound; it was the pure, unclothed word of the living God, read by its Author with all the force of One who knew and felt and weighed its every word. A dear man of God, in America, was known as a man of great spiritual power; thousands of souls were blest through him, and yet, perhaps, he never preached a sermon. In his meetings he simply read the word of God, conveying in his reading all the force and meaning which it had brought to his own soul. Oh, that there were more of this among evangelists! How many there are, who preach, not God's words, but their own! Jesus read the word, and then applied it with the utmost directness and the utmost simplicity. "This day is the scripture fulfilled in your ears."

A Short Sermon,

much shorter than the text; but it did its work, it showed the assembled people that they had to do with the words read, and that the words had to do with them. But Satan, whose ingenuity in providing distractions in religious meetings is an experience of to-day, was at the same work then. He led the people from the truth, by the simple expedient of suggesting criticisms about the Preacher. O, how often the cast of features, the tone of voice, the kind of gestures, used by a preacher, have been enough, in the hands of the enemy, to turn aside one of the arrows of God's flying, and a soul, which was really moved, has been led off from listening to God by a trifle like this! The thought aroused, it soon found expression, "Whence hath this man this wisdom and these mighty works?" Is not this the carpenter's son? They could not deny His wisdom; they could not ignore the mighty works which their eyes could see, but, instead of seeking God's solution as to their origin, and reading further in the Scripture, which He had opened to them, they reasoned together, and the result was that, instead of being saved by Him, "they were offended in Him."

A Young Man,

the other day, was talking about why God permitted evil, etc., etc., The Christian to whom he was speaking, said it was not by reasoning about God that one could understand Him, but that He revealed Himself to all who went direct to Him to be instructed. The young man, refused to ask God to teach him, and yet blamed God for not taking him by storm, and making him understand in spite of himself. How foolish, how petulant, how childish, how unreasonable, is man by nature! When a man wants to know a fact of history, he goes to an historian, when he wants to know something about chemistry, he consults the writings of one versed in that science. If he wants to know anything about railway traffic, he will go to the station master; if anything about the postal arrangements, to the postmaster; but if anything about God, he refuses to go to God, who alone can reveal Himself! He goes to his own created reason, to find out the uncreated Creator!! Jesus made one remark, a sad one, but, O how true, "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country, and in his own house. And he did not many mighty works there, Because of Their Unbelief."

Where unbelief reigns, there Christ does not work. He will co-operate with man, but He will not force Himself upon man. There are many congregations which do not believe in God's work of converting souls, and there Christ does not many mighty works of conversion. There is many a church where minister and people alike do not believe it possible that God can keep them from besetting sins, and cleanse them from the very desire to sin; there He does not do any mighty works in sanctifying believers. There are congregations all over the land which sympathize with the Scribes and Pharisees of Jesus' time and the times of the Apostles, in their anger that God heals the bodies of those who trust in Him. They are just the people who also would have said that Jesus cast out devils through Beelzebub; just the people who would have cast out the once blind man from the synagogue, because he had been healed by Jesus. They would have taken counsel to put Lazarus to death; they would have put Peter and John in prison, just because God was doing by His own Son, and in His name, what He had pledged Himself to do, when He said, "I am the Lord that healeth thee!" These people do not believe the words of God, because they know too little of Him to experience it themselves—and truly, amongst such Jesus does not do many mighty works, because of their unbelief!

It was at this time that King Herod heard of the fame of Jesus, and a kind of supernatural horror came upon him, that John the Baptist, whom he had beheaded, was risen from the dead. In imagination, he could see that severed head united by miraculous power to the body again, and perhaps even the very clear, truthful, transparent eyes of the Baptist might seem to be looking into his, and the unforgotten tones of the preacher's voice came back, "It is not lawful for thee to have her."

Herod had been Awakened by John the Baptist from his life of sin. The power of God, which made it the fashion on the banks of the Jordan at Bethabara, for men and women to make a clean breast of it, and confess their sins, had had its power on this hitherto unabashed and royal sinner. His sin was patent, the whole land knew that he was living in sin with his own sister-in-law. Jealousy for God made John the Baptist feel this sin of the king's as though it were his own. In some way, either by John being brought to the court, or by a pilgrimage of Herod to the desert, the king heard this messenger of God. He made a profound impression on the king, "Herod feared John;" he felt the great difference between himself, the sinner, and this holy man of God; he knew that he was a just man, and one holy, and honored him, and when he heard him, he did many things (Rev. Ver, "was much perplexed"), and heard him gladly. Yes, he did many things, but not the right thing.

One Glaring Sin

was separating him from God. John laid the axe to the root of the tree, and said to his royal master concerning Herodias, "It is not lawful for thee to have her." Herod had ceased to be his own master, he had played with sin until he could not get free; he was too deeply involved to sever himself without a sacrifice; either John or Herodias must go. Herodias came to the rescue, she knew that either John the Baptist or she must the win day, and her first step was to silence John the Baptist, and influence Herod to cast him into prison. Then the unholy and murderous woman conceived the idea of bringing the prophet of God to the block. Herod's birthday came, and there was a grand birthday feast. Herodias so arranged that her daughter should come in and amuse the assembly of lords and dignitaries who were gathered to celebrate the occasion. Herod was excited; there was everything to flatter his pride; he was in a mood to be pleased. John the Baptist was not at hand to reprove him, his conscience was distracted for the time being, and the dancing of the girl pleased him. Everyone applauded and appreciated the amusement. It seemed only becoming that the royal spectator should act in a kingly manner, so Herod said to the damsel, "Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee." And in the excitement of the moment he threw aside all caution, and added, with an oath, "Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom." It was and the king fell into the trap. The girl's mother instructed her what to ask. All the aristocracy of Galilee were witnesses to the king's offer, and that she could not be refused. Without hesitation, she said, "Give me here John Baptist's head on a charger." The king was sorry. O, how gladly would he have recalled his words! But for very shame he could not. And yet, would not the shame of breaking his word in the presence of this august assembly have been less than the shame of living in adultery? Would not this shame before men of the world have been less than that which must yet come upon him, when he stands before the great white throne and is judged out of those things which are written in the books, according to his works? No doubt Herod excused himself, and tried to justify himself in his own mind, but the guilty conscience was there, and when Jesus began his ministry the terror-stricken being imagined that the murdered John had arisen from the dead to torment him!

A Deep-Laid Scheme,

And John? He lost his life, it is true; his ministry was shortened, but he had done his work, and would render in his account with joy. Was he to be pitied? A man filled with the Holy Spirit from his very birth? A man whose every day and hour had been spent in preparing the way of the Lord? Surely his entrance into the presence of God was enviable. But Herod went from bad to worse, lost his crown, but not Herodias; lost his liberty, but not Herodias, for she shared his prison with him; lost his soul, but not Herodias, the two lost souls share the same fate! O, how one is reminded of the words of Ezekiel, "Go ye, serve ye every one his idols if ye will not hearken unto Me" (Ezek. 20: 39). John was murdered. The wicked Herodias had her way for a little time; and the disciples of John "came, and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus." This is our one blessed, unfailing resource in every trouble—to go and tell Jesus, to go and trust it to Him.

And Hereafter, Also,

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles among others, are contained in the number for November:

The Seven Seals Fully Explained in Their Double Fulfilment. Year-Day and Literal-Day. By Rev. M. Baxter.

John's Vision of the Translated Saints; By the late Thomas Evill.

The Nations on the Earth after the Advent of Christ; By the Rev. Capel Molyneux, B. A.

Precursors of the Antichrist; By Rev. John Storie.

Pre-Millennialism versus Post-Millennialism.

Second Advent Conference in Adelaide.

At Northfield Conference.

The Lord's Coming; By Rev. H. G. Guinness.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes, containing the monthly numbers for 1884 or 1883 may be had; price $1.]

A CHRISTMAS SONG.

How sweet was the song of the angels of light,
As bending o'er Bethlehem's plain,
They struck their bright harps, and the silence of night
Awoke at the heavenly strain;
While mildly around shone the glory divine,
And bathed in effulgence so bright,
The mountain, the valley, the sea and the plain,
Once robed in the mantle of night.

They sang of the break of redemption's glad morn
The holy had longed to behold;
They sang of a Saviour in Bethlehem born,
So long by the prophets foretold:
They sang of good-will from our God unto men,
Of peace to a valley of tears:
They sang of salvation from death and from sin,
A balm for our sorrows and fears.

Then, "Glory to God in the highest!" I'll sing,
For I am a sinner on earth;
I'll welcome the tidings of mercy that bring
The news of Emmanuel's birth;
I'll go to His Cross, though a sinner defiled,
And wash in the fountain of blood;
I'll pray for the grace that can strengthen a child,
And bring him at last to his God.

—Selected.

FOOD FOR INVALIDS.—Hundreds of invalids fail to regain their health and strength because of inability to digest and assimilate their food. If they would use the Lactated Food, they would find it an article which is most easily digested, and will be assimilated by the stomach when all other foods fail. It is predigested, non-irritating, and has great nutritive properties. It can be prepared in many different ways, and is a palatable and delicate article of diet. It is sold by druggists everywhere. 25c., 50c. & $1. Send for pamphlet, giving important medical opinions on the "Nutrition of Infants and Invalids," to the proprietors, Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

CALENDARS FOR 1888.

☞ As the number of each is necessarily limited, early orders are requested.

THE SCRIPTURE CALENDAR: Block Style, with verse of Scripture in bold type for each day, mounted on a beautiful card board, printed in gold and tints. Single copies 35 cents, by mail; six copies for $1.50.

THE PROVERBIAL CALENDAR: Block Style, with a popular proverb in bold type for each day, mounted on a beautiful card board, printed in gold and colors. Single copies 35 cents, by mail; six copies for $1.50, Postage stamps receivable for sums under $1.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 and 3 BIBLE HOUSE, New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

"THE MANNA"

is a decidedly non-sectarian, religious, monthly paper, for young and old, especially adapted for SUNDAY SCHOOLS. MOTTO: Christ All in All, and All for Christ. Every friend of true religion loves it. Subscription price, 20 cents per annum. Agents are wanted throughout the country. 50 per cent commission is allowed. Any one sending us 10 names and addresses, from different places, that will likely act as agents for the paper, will receive the paper free for one year. Address J. G. STAUFFER, Quakertown, Pa.

AGENTS! Send for E. B. TREAT'S new books, including MOTHER, HOME, and HEAVEN, prose and poetry; by 40 best authors. 150,000 sold. Elegantly illustrated. $2.75. Send for outfit. Also 5000 Curiosities of the Bible, $2.00. Address E. B. TREAT, 757 Broadway, N. Y.

ONE YEAR FOR NOTHING.

THE ILLUSTRATOR. The best undenominational S.S. Monthly. Chas. S. Robinson, D.D., writes: "I regard THE ILLUSTRATOR as one of the best helps in preparation for real work." 60 cents a year 6 cents a copy. It will be mailed FREE to all who subscribe through us for any magazine or periodical at its regular price of $2.50 or over; or at 30cts. (half price) for all others.
T. J. MORROW, Minneapolis, Minn.

DIAMOND DYES

COLOR EVERYTHING.

Unequalled for Silk, Wool, Cotton and all Fabrics and Fancy Goods. Brilliant, Durable and Economical. Any one can use them.

32 COLORS—10 CENTS EACH.

Remember, these are the only Pure, Harmless and Unadulterated Dyes.
Beware of other Dyes, because often Poisonous, Adulterated, Weak and Worthless.

We warrant these Dyes to color more goods, package for package, than any other Dyes ever made, and to give more brilliant and durable colors. Sample cards free.

THE DIAMOND PAINTS,

GOLD, SILVER, BRONZE and COPPER

For gilding Fancy Baskets, Frames, Lamps, Chandeliers, and for all kinds of ornamental work. Equal to any of the high-priced kinds, and only 10 cents a package. Also Artists' Black for Ebonizing.

Sold by Druggists everywhere. Send postal for Sample Card, directions for coloring Photos, doing fancy work, and making ink.
WELLS, RICHARSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

CHRISTMAS TIME.

No time like
The Present.
No time-keeper like
The Waterbury.
No present like the
Waterbury Time-keeper.

A perfect stem-winding watch for $2.50.
Sold only by retail watch dealers.

The Pulpit Treasury. Devoted to Sermons, Lectures, Bible Comments, Questions of the Day, the Prayer Meeting, Sunday School and Mission Work. By the ablest writers on Theology, Christian Ethics, Evangelistic Work Home Culture, etc. A welcome guest to the Pastor, Teacher, and Family, 5th Year, Monthly, Illustrated, $2.50, Pastors, $2. Sample Free. E. B. TREAT, Pub. New York

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons, etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed, Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

GRIND YOUR OWN Bone, Meal, Oyster Shells, Graham Flour & Corn in the $5 HAND MILL (F. Wilson's Patent.) 100 per cent. more made in keeping Poultry. Also POWER MILLS and FARM FEED MILLS. Circulars and testimonials sent on application. WILSON BROS. Easton, Pa

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES—(avoid Agents and Dealers whose profits and expenses double the cost on every Piano they sell) and send this First-Class UPRIGHT Cabinet GEM 7⅓ Octave Rosewood Piano, Warranted 6 years, for $193! We send it—with Beautiful Cover and Stool—for Trial in your own Home before you buy. Send for circulars to Marshal & Smith, 235 East 21st St., N. Y.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE 25c. A NUMBER.

JANUARY NUMBER, NOW READY, CONTAINS:

The first of Mr. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON'S monthly contributions entitled "A Chapter on Dreams."

THE MAN AT ARMS—I. By E. H. and E. W. BLASHFIELD
Sixteen (4 full-page) illustrations by E. H. Blashfield.

THE GREAT PYRAMID By EDWARD L. WILSON
With 21 illustrations, some of which were taken by the magnesium light in the interior of the Pyramid, and now first printed.

WHITE EDITH Poem by THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH

JAPANESE ART, ARTISTS, AND ARTISANS by WILLIAM ELLIOT GRIFFIS
With 14 illustrations by a Japanese artist.

NATURAL SELECTION By H. C. BUNNER
A novelette in 3 parts. Part I. With 9 illustrations.

THE END OF THE BEGINNING Story by GEORGE A. HIBBARD
Illustrated by the author and Francis Day.

AMERICAN ANTIQUITIES Poem by ANDREW LANG
With a full-page illustration by H. Siddons Mowbray.

FIRST HARVESTS By F. J. STIMSON
A new serial. Chapters I-III.

MUNICIPAL FINANCE By CLAYTON C. HALL

A NEW LIGHT ON BALZAC By EDWARD S. HOLDEN

POEMS By CHARLES EDWIN MARKHAM, C. P. CRANCH, RENNELL RODD, GRAHAM R. TOMSON, and E. CAVAZZA.

FRENCH TRAITS—INTELLIGENCE By W. C. BROWNELL

CHRISTMAS (DEC.) NUMBER.

CONTRIBUTIONS BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON,
BRET HARTE,
H. C. BUNNER,
AUSTIN DOBSON,
SARAH ORNE JEWETT,
EDITH M. THOMAS,
T. R. SULLIVAN,
EDWIN PERCY WHIPPLE,
E. H. & E. W. BLASHFIELD,
AND OTHERS.

ILLUSTRATIONS BY WILL H. LOW,
HOWARD PYLE.
J. W. ALEXANDER,
HOPKINSON SMITH,
GEORGE FOSTER BARNES,
C. JAY TAYLOR,
W. L. TAYLOR,
M. J. BURNS,
WILLIAM HOLE,
AND OTHERS.

What is so good for a Christmas present as a subscription to SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE?

"We have seen a good many holiday volumes brought out at prices far beyond the moderately-filled purses, which were by no means its equal either in literary or artistic wealth."—Boston Post.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—To enable new readers to possess the Magazine from the first number (January, 1887), the following inducements are offered:

A year's subscription for 1888 and the 12 numbers for 1887, ... $4
A year's subscription for 1888 and the numbers for 1887, bound in two vols., cloth, gilt top, 6

Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

DRESS PATTERNS FOR Holiday Presents.

James McCreery & Co.

Offer to-day and during the week special inducements in Dress Patterns, suitable for Holiday Gifts: 500 Diagonal Patterns at $2.50. 700 Serge Patterns at $3.50. 650 Satine Tricot Patterns at $5.50. And a great variety of Plaids, Stripes, and Mixtures at correspondingly low prices. The above are of strictly all-wool material, and are remarkable value. Will also place this week, on a separate counter, 400 plain colored Pattern Dresses, with an appropriate velvet novelty for trimming, at $7.50 per pattern, well worth $12.50.

All mail orders receive careful as well as prompt attention.

Mention the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Broadway and 11th St.,
New York.

Another Reduction in India Shawl.

Valley Cashmere.

$200	Shawls	for	$125
$250	"	"	$150
$275	"	"	$175
$300	"	"	$200

All other kinds marked down in proportion.

Lord & Taylor

Broadway and Twentieth Street.

NEW YORK.

500 SAMPLES, BOOKS, CIRCULARS, LETTERS and PAPERS WE GUARANTEE YOU TO RECEIVE FREE! from firms all over the world if you send 20 cents to have your name in American Directory. Copy sent you with name inserted. Always address American Directory Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

VERNON HILL, VA., Dec. 27, 1886.
Gents—I have already received more than 1,000 parcels of mail, many NEWSPAPERS, etc., for which I had often paid 20 cts. each before. I advise every lady to have their name inserted at once. I know from experience your directory far excels all others. R. T. JAMES.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS should send for catalogues and sample packet of Gospel Tracts, Booklets and Books for Sunday School and Evangelistic work. Send a stamp for postage. Gospel Book Depot, Orillia, Canada.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cure. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,

it makes no difference where you see them advertised or by whom or where they are published or sold, send your orders to me and I will attend to the promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamps received for fractional parts of a dollar.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. X., No. 52. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, DEC. 29, 1887. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF EX-PRESIDENT GREVY, JULES FERRY, DE FREYCINET AND FLOQUET, French Statesmen.

THE BARN AND ITS SURROUNDINGS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE LONDON PROPHETIC CONFERENCE.

RETROSPECT OF THE YEAR 1887.

THE MULTITUDE FED. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

PORTRAIT OF M. WILSON, Son-in-Law of Ex-President Grevy.

WISDOM'S REQUEST. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

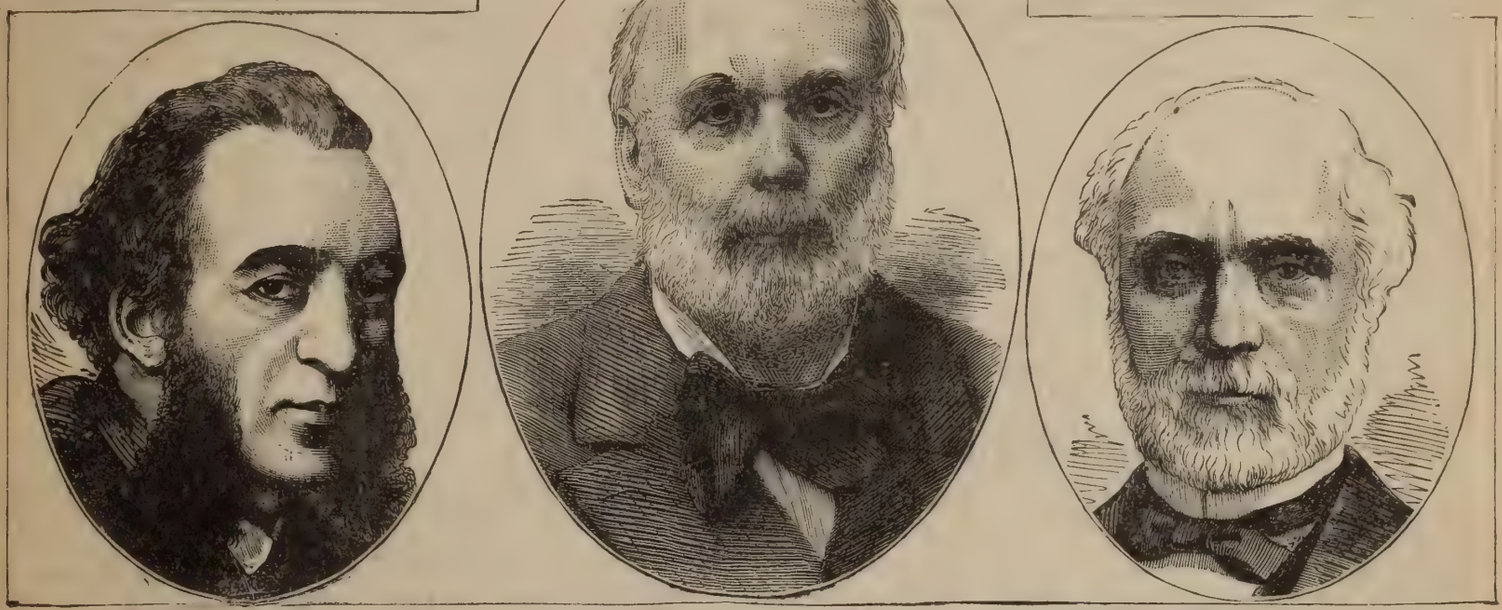
Gems from New Books: The Bow in the Cloud.

PICTURE OF CAPE HORN.

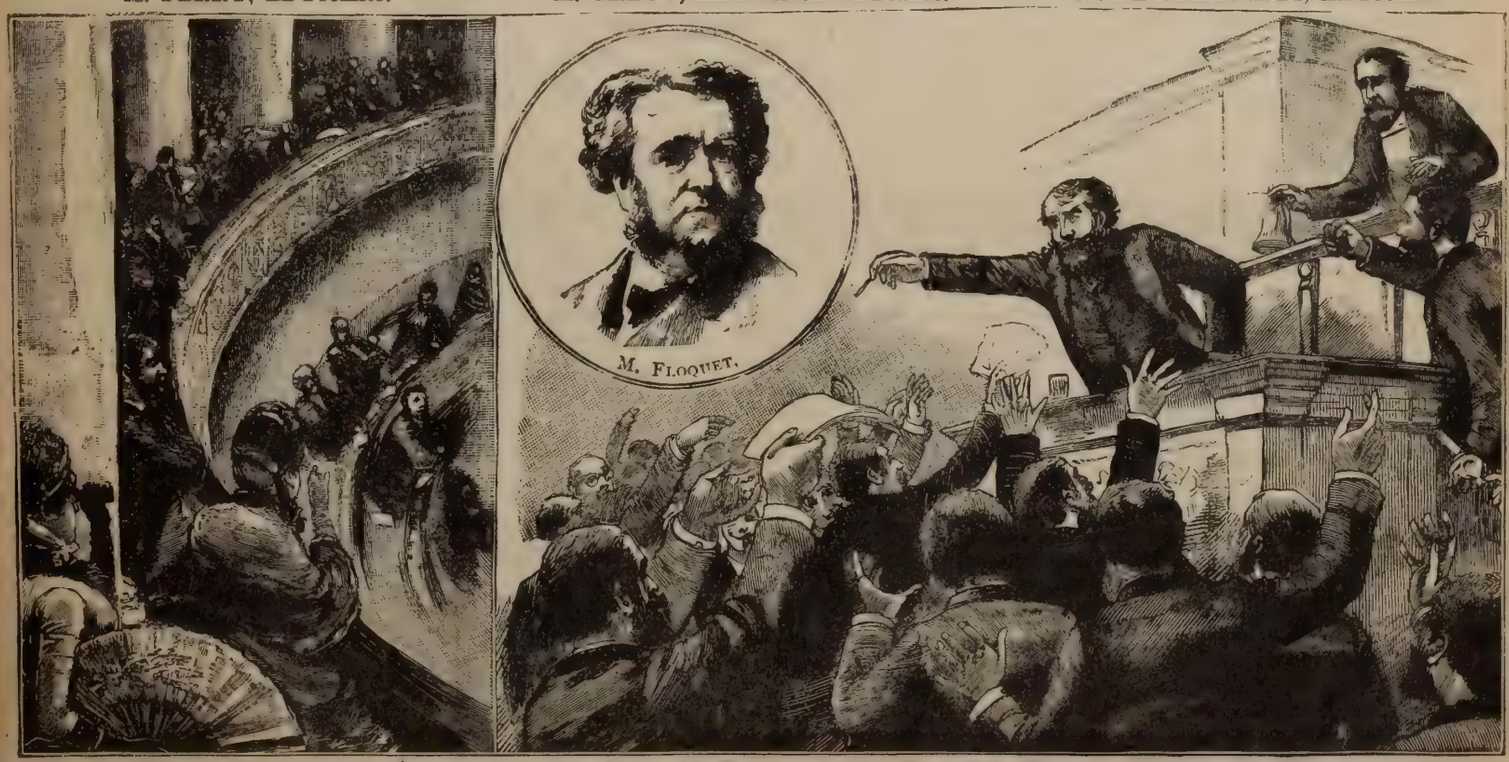
A BURGLAR'S VISIT TO A PHILANTHROPIST. (With Illustration.)

THE FAMILY OF TRIPE COURT. A Serial Story. (Continued.)

INDEX TO THE TENTH VOLUME.



M. FERRY, Ex-Premier. M. GREVY, Ex-President of France. M. DE FREYCINET, Ex-Premier.



The Gallery and Tribune of the French Chamber of Deputies, During a Recent Session.

M. GREVY.

Ex-President of the French Republic.

THE Presidential crisis in France which involved the resignation of M. Grévy and the election of M. Carnot as his successor, has been fully described in these columns, but the subject being of supreme importance in Europe, and being likely to have very important results, it may be of service to our readers to give sketches of some of the most prominent statesmen in France, whose portraits appear on the first page.

François Jules Pole Grévy, whose portrait is from a photograph by Nadar, of Paris, has for the past nine years been the foremost figure in France. He was born at Montsous-Vaudrey, in the Jura, on August 15, 1807, so that he is now in his eighty-first year. He was educated in the College of Poligny, afterwards studied law in Paris and in due course was admitted an advocate, or barrister. He took an active part in the Revolution of July, 1830, and was subsequently much employed at the bar, as a defender of members of the Radical party who were charged with political offences.

In 1848, a year of commotion and apprehension throughout Europe, M. Grévy was appointed Commissary of the Provisional Government in his Department, and was elected to the Constituent Assembly, or Constitutional Convention, as we should call it, heading the list of successful candidates for the Jura. As a member of the Committee of Justice and Vice-President of the Assembly, M. Grévy took a prominent part in the proceedings, and proved himself to be one of the most able speakers

Among the Democratic Party.

Above all, his name is connected with a Radical amendment, which was not carried, on the question of the Presidency, and which was as follows: "The President is elected for an unlimited period. The appointment is always revocable." The motion showed his knowledge of his countrymen for though they would not formally adopt it, they have practically acted upon it throughout the existence of the Republic. At the sitting of October 7, 1848, the Assembly decided that the President of the Republic should be elected by universal suffrage and hold office for four years. Louis Napoleon was elected in this way and when the time came for him to go out of office, he, aided by venal generals and statesmen, overthrew the Republic and proclaimed himself Emperor. After the election of the 10th of December in the same year, M. Grévy opposed the Government of Louis Napoleon, and protested against his threatened expedition to Rome. After the coup d'etat, in December, 1851, by which Louis Napoleon became Emperor of France, M. Grévy retired from politics, and confined himself to the practice of his profession. But, though living a comparatively private life, his ability was not forgotten. Consequently, on February 17, 1871, just after the subjugation of France by Germany and the discarding of the Bonapartists, he was elected President of the National Assembly, then sitting at Bordeaux, and afterwards removed to Versailles, and in discharging the duties of this important office at a most critical time, he displayed remarkable tact, judgment and moderation. He resigned his office in 1873, when he was succeeded by M. Buffet.

At the general election in February, 1876, M. Grévy, on the meeting of the Chamber, was elected its President. He was re-elected by the new Chamber of Deputies, on November 10, 1877, and again in January, 1879. After the resignation of Marshal MacMahon, M. Grévy was elected for seven years, on January 30, 1879. On the expiration of this period, he was elected for a second term, and would probably have held the office until his death, but for the evil deeds of his son-in-law, M. Wilson. This man disgraced him by accepting bribes; and Grévy, who appears to have been unsuspicious of evil, was guided by him in social and political affairs. Wilson had access to important papers, as he lived in the executive mansion with his father-in-law, and this information he sold to stock speculators. He also used the influence he possessed over the President, when paid to do so, in the interest of the payer. When he was exposed, M. Grévy, instead of discarding him, refused to believe in his guilt, and shielded him with all his power. It was clear that Wilson would continue to be "the power behind the throne," and therefore M. Grévy had to resign.

President of the Republic

M. FERRY:

Ex-Premier of the French Ministry.

JULES FRANÇOIS CAMILLE FERRY, whose portrait is given on the left-hand side of the front page, has attained additional notoriety by the attempt made on December 10, to assassinate him. He was born at Saint Dié, in the Vosges, on April 5, 1832, and is now fifty-five years old. He, like M. Grévy, studied law at Paris, where he was admitted to the bar in 1854. He joined the famous group of young lawyers who aided the Deputies in maintaining constant opposition to the Emperor Napoleon III. His chief prominence, however, came to him not as a lawyer or statesman, but as An Editor.

In 1865 he was on the editorial staff of the Temps, and published in his paper a series of articles on current politics, which attracted general attention, especially those which contained a terrible analysis of the financial accounts of Baron Haussmann, prefect of the Seine, who was then occupied in rebuilding Paris, and who consequently handled very large sums of money. Foreseeing that the war with Prussia in 1870 would be disastrous, he, with his colleagues of the Left, voted against that fatal declaration of war. At the Revolution of September 4, 1870, after the defeat of France at Sedan on September 2, 1870, he and the other Paris Deputies were proclaimed members of the Government of the National Defence, located at the Hôtel de Ville. On the 5th he was appointed

Secretary of State, and next day he was entrusted with the administration of the Department of the Seine. When the Communal Insurrection of October 31, 1870, occurred, he fought to suppress it.

At the election of February 8, 1871, he was elected one of the representatives of the Department of the Vosges. He was sent as Ambassador to Athens in May, 1872. After holding that appointment for a year he resigned it, and resumed his place in the ranks of the Radical Left, of which he became the leader. After the resignation of Marshal McMahon of the Presidency on January 30, 1879, M. Ferry was appointed to a seat in M. Grévy's first Cabinet as

Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts. Differences arose when M. Ferry brought forward his Education Bill, one clause (the 7th) of which prohibited members of "unauthorized religious communities" (meaning especially the Jesuits) from teaching or managing schools. In the following year, M. de Freycinet, who had become Prime Minister, authorized the insertion in M. Ferry's Government Education Bill, of the clause levelled at the "unauthorized" religious Orders. The expulsion of the Jesuits was carried out but three Cabinet Ministers resigned through the odium it brought on the Government. On September 19, 1880, M. Ferry became and the decrees against the Order were then carried out with the most stringent impartiality. M. Ferry's ministry resigned on November 10, 1881, on account of the attacks made upon their policy in regard to the expedition to Tunis. In February, 1883, however, after the fall of the Fallières Administration, M. Ferry was sent for by M. Grévy to form a new Ministry. This he did, himself becoming Premier and Minister of Public Instruction. As such, leaving the "religious question" to settle itself, he started upon a policy of "colonial expansion," and undertook the invasion of Tonquin. The vast cost, and the unsatisfactory issue of this invasion, were fatal to him; he was charged with having fallen into the Tonquin project, as a trap laid by Bismarck for weakening France, and with belonging to a syndicate which made money out of his adventures. He was suddenly overthrown by a decisive vote of the Chamber, in 1884, and has not been able to recover his popularity.

Premier

M. DE FREYCINET:

Ex-Premier of France.

CHARLES LOUIS DE SAULCES DE FREYCINET, whose portrait also appears on the first page, was born in 1828, at Foix, and is now nearly sixty years old. He received a thorough education as an engineer at the Polytechnic School, in Paris, and so widely recognized was his professional ability that at a very early age he was entrusted with several important mining enterprises in different parts of France and other countries. From 1855 to 1860 he was engineer-in-chief to the Chemin de Fer du Midi, or Midland Railway of France, during which period he initiated many important reforms in the working of the Company. From 1864 to 1870 he was a member of the Council of Tarn-et-Garonne, and after the fall of the empire at Sedan, he became Prefect of the same Department. In 1870–71 he was the coadjutor of M. Gambetta in the Ministry of War. In 1876 he was appointed Senator for the Department of the Seine, a position which he retained until 1882. He was Minister for Foreign Affairs from 1877 to 1879; President of the Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs from 1879 to 1880, and acted again in the same dual capacity from January to July, 1882, and returned to the same offices in 1885, after the resignation of M. Jules Ferry. On the fall of the Brisson Cabinet, on December 29, 1885, he once more resumed office, but retired a year afterwards. He is the author of several works on Engineering of acknowledged merit, and is a member of the Paris Academy of Sciences. He is a Protestant.

M. FLOQUET:

President of the Chamber.

CHARLES THOMAS FLOQUET, whose vignette portrait appears below the other three, was born at Saint Jean-de-Luz, on October 5, 1828, and is now, therefore, 59 years of age. After a period of successful study at the College St. Louis, he was called to the bar in 1851, and was soon engaged in a great number of political cases, and usually in opposition to the Government of the Emperor. When Prince Pierre Bonaparte was tried at Tours for the murder of Victor Noire, M. Floquet pleaded successfully for damages on behalf of the family of the victim; and he was also successful in obtaining the acquittal of Cournet, who was tried at Blois, in 1870, for plotting against the Government.

In February, 1871, after the overthrow of Napoleon III., M. Floquet was elected Representative of the Seine in the National Assembly, but soon resigned his seat, the reactionary press accusing him of having relations with the Commune, and of being its agent in the provinces during the second siege of Paris by the Prussians, a charge which was formally contradicted by him. The Government, however, arrested him at Biarritz, and he was confined at Pau until the end of June, 1871. In April of the following year he was elected to the Municipal Council, and again in 1874. In the senatorial election of January, 1876, he was an unsuccessful candidate, but obtained a seat in the inferior chamber in February. M. Floquet has the reputation of being a most effective orator, and as a Deputy has taken a prominent part in many important debates. At a public meeting held in Havre in 1880, he made an energetic speech in favor of the separation of the Church and State, as also for the suppression of the Senate. In 1881 he was elected Vice-President of the Chamber, which corresponds with our House of Representatives. He was the principal instigator of the movement, which resulted last year in the expulsion from the country of all the members belonging to the royal families which have reigned in France, and for depriving them of all political rights. In January, 1883, urgency for this proposition was carried in the Chamber by a large majority, but the matter went no further at the time, though it was carried out in 1886 by the expulsion of Prince Jerome Napoleon and the Comte de Paris and others. M. Floquet was chosen as President of the Chamber of Deputies in 1884, a post which he still retains. He was one of the unsuccessful candidates for the Presidency of the Republic.

EXCITEMENT IN THE CHAMBER.

(See Illustration on first page.)

SCENES like that depicted in the illustration are far too common in the Chamber of Deputies. The excitement of the statesmen of our sister Republic is proverbial. They are easily aroused, and then they forget, for the time, their dignity and the decorum which should characterize legislative assemblies. From the gallery (seen on the left of the picture), visitors of both sexes and all ranks survey the scene with the enjoyment they have at the theatre. Many Deputies look positively maniacal, when listening to an unpopular speaker. They begin vociferating, and leaving their seats, rush to the foot of the Tribune, and even into the Tribune, where they threaten the orator. The noise is then so terrible that the President cannot overcome it, though desperately ringing the bell with which he is provided for that purpose. When he cannot overcome the "obstruction," he puts on his hat, which means that the sitting is "suspended'" until the next day.

The mode of voting is usually by ballot. The ballot boxes are very simple, being made of tin, round in shape, and colored green, with yellow margin. But occasionally the vote is taken by simply rising, or by printed slips of "yes" or "no," which are collected by the attendants from the deputies, as they sit in their places.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Prayer in the Hayloft.—Mr. Ralston Related: "There was a little fellow, a farm-servant, but also a Christian, who served both his Heavenly Master and his earthly employer faithfully. He knew that the happiest days he had, and those in which he enjoyed most blessing, were when he got alone with God and spoke out to Him the feelings and longings of his heart. He had much difficulty in finding a place into which he could retire, as he did not himself possess a private room, but having discovered that at a certain hour in the morning the hayloft was always empty, he daily betook himself there to enjoy communion with his Father. One day, while engaged in his devotions, a fellow-servant came up the ladder and disturbed him, so ever afterwards he took the precaution to draw the ladder up after him, so determined was he to be alone with God. If more Christians were like that young farm-servant there would be more spiritual life among them. Christ's advice is, 'When ye pray enter into your closet and shut to the door.'"

Jeannie's Prize of £50.—"About two years ago," said Mr. McLachlan, "I was in Ireland, preaching the Gospel in the town of Coleraine. Near that place there lived two sisters, who supported themselves by needlework, at which they were very clever. It was the custom for one of the sisters to go into town every Saturday with the work they had done, and return with another web. The younger sister, on arriving in town one day with her work, found that there was a prize of $250 offered for the best sewn web, the webs to be given out that day and returned that day two weeks. She procured a web, and came home determined to compete for the prize. But on her arrival home she fell ill, and was obliged to go to bed, where she remained for two weeks. The elder sister, whom she had told about the prize, seeing her sister would not be able to do the work, determined to do it for her. At the end of the fortnight she said to her sister, who was now able to rise, 'Jeannie, don't you think you had better take your web into town?' 'Ah, now, you are making fun of me; it is just the same as when I brought it home,' she replied, rather sadly, for she had set her heart on winning the prize. But she soon found, to her joyful surprise that the work was finished. Next Monday she saw in the papers that she was the winner of the prize. But it was not she who had earned the prize. Her sister did all the work, and she, taking her sister's work, presented it, and received the reward. Similarly, the sinner receives the great gift of salvation which Christ has won for him."

A Tremendous Struggle Ended.—A Working man said: "'I had a mate who was a sincere Christian, and he often used to speak kindly to me about Christ, and ask me to accept Him as my Saviour. One day he said to me, 'He that believeth hath eternal life.' 'Do you believe?' 'Yes,' I said, flippantly, 'I do.' 'Then you have eternal life,' he replied, brightly. 'I am not so sure of that," was my gloomy response, wishing he would drop what to me was a very disagreeable subject; but he persisted: 'Then you cannot believe.' 'But I do,' I retorted, angrily, 'do you take me for a heathen?' That was all that was said at that time, but it roused my slumbering conscience, and I felt that, no matter how I might argue, I was not right with God. I went to that friend's house, and had a long talk with him. I felt Satan was a hard master, and I wanted to be done with him. I professed to give myself to Christ then, and called myself a Christian. For some time I had no doubt about my salvation, but I had a very bad temper, and in giving myself to Christ, I had kept back that temper. One day I so gave way, that when I realized how I had fallen, I resolved never again to enter a church-door. I kept to my resolution for some time, but one night I felt the Holy Spirit striving greatly within me. It seemed as if this were the last opportunity I should ever have of yielding to Christ. Satan tried to discourage me, saying it was no use my trying, as I would never make a Christian, but in the midst of the struggle this word came to me, 'Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man open unto Me, I will come in.' I saw I must open the door of my heart, and joyfully did it, and the wanderer found peace with God."

THE LONDON PROPHETIC CONFERENCE

AN important Conference on Prophecy was held in Exeter Hall, London, December 5-7. We are glad to be able to lay before our readers a brief résumé of the interesting addresses delivered on the first day.

Rev. M. Baxter gave an exhaustive statement of his reasons for believing that Thursday, April 11, 1901, will be the last day of this Age. He pointed out that that day will be the last day of the Passover Week of that year, which is exactly forty-five years distant from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace on the last day of Passover Week in 1856, and also it is 2345 years from Passover Week B. C. 445. His researches and the results of them were fully described by him in an article published in these columns on June 9 (page 364) last. A number of events expected during the next few years were described by him.

The Rev. H. M. Barnett, speaking upon Ezekiel's 38th chapter, remarked that Russia was there as the chief Prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal, predicted to invade Palestine, and five-sixths of his armies to perish. This, he said, will be at the time of the future Infidel Antichrist, who is to become leader of revolutionary democrats, and Emperor of the Ten Kingdoms that are to be formed out of the countries of Cæsar's Roman Empire, during the next few years. Lawlessness is to be the chief feature of the Coming Antichrist, for he is called in II Thessalonians, 2:8 (Revised Version), the Lawless One. We are living on the brink of the most terrible times the world has ever known, when this earth will be steeped in bloodshed. There will be a future literal-day fulfilment of the prophetic dates and profigurations, as well as the past year-day fulfilment.

The Rev. W. Frith gave two able addresses, in the course of which he showed that while all living Christians will be caught up to meet Christ in the air at His Second Advent, according to I Thess. 4:16, 17, yet a Firstfruits company—the 144,000—will be translated before the Antichrist's 3½ years' tyranny, and the Harvest company of all surviving Christians will be translated to Heaven after the 3½ years, as shown in Rev. 14:4-15. The looming of a great European war, the seething of restless nationalities, the spread of Satanic power in Spiritualism, etc., indicate the rise of the Great Antichrist, who will probably be a Napoleon, to be close at hand. The great majority of Christians will be left behind to the 3½ years of Great Tribulation, but only a few—the 144,000—will have a happy exit by the anti-tribulation translation from this doomed earth, and thus evade and avoid Antichrist's persecution. Antichrist's literal Image will be set up generally in all the churches and chapels of England (as also the Rev. Mr. Graham has ably described) as well as in the Catholic churches of Europe, as literally as the Madonna is set up in those Romish churches as an object of worship. How solemn to think that the manifestation of that Dark Personage, Antichrist, is during the next few years. The Nihilists, Socialists, Communists, are all elements that are preparing the way, and will fuse into the great organization of Antichrist.

Rev. J. Wilkinson mentioned that Zechariah's description of a past tribulation is a good picture of Antichrist's future tyranny. "There was no hire for man, nor any hire for beast, neither was there any peace for him that went out, nor for him that came in, because of the affliction, for I set all men, everyone against his neighbor" (Zech. 8:10). Antichrist will, however, never succeed in producing blank atheism on the face of the earth as long as the Jews exist. He will try to "cut them off from being a nation," but just then the clouds part asunder over Mount Olivet, eyes are directed upward, and behold, the same One re-appears who ascended eighteen centuries ago from Mount Olivet. When the Jews have wept it out, and Joseph is reconciled to his brethren, they will tell it out to the nations. God has taken us into His confidence as respects the future. The Jews are the firstborn, the head and not the tail, through whom the younger brothers and sisters are to be blessed. We ought to talk with a strong foreign accent, as foreigners in this world. A beautiful picture of the future Millennium is given in Zech. 8:18-23.

Mr. Bodell said he believed that the Time of unparalleled Trouble foretold in Daniel 12:1 was rapidly coming upon the earth, and that even true Christians, who are Laodicean and lukewarm in reference to the Second Advent, are to be left behind on the earth during its progress, and will not be caught up among the Philadelphian Wise Virgins (Matt. 26:10; Rev. 3:10; Luke 21:36). It will be a trying time for those who are now "living at ease in Zion." He believed that the last 45 years of the 1335 years extend from Passover Week, 1856, to Passover Week, 1901, as the final Time of blessedness at the Personal descent of Christ. Those who go up at Christ's Coming will have to go up clean, wholly sanctified by the blood of Christ. The devil is now putting forth unusual power in Spiritualism, making ready for the Antichrist, who is first to make a seven years' Covenant with the Jews, seven years before the End. "If another shall come in My name, him ye will receive." This man, who will be Arbitrator, a Leader, a Military Dictator, will arise as a king near the Balkan states, and will make the seven years' Covenant; and during its latter half, persecute Christians everywhere, until his destruction at Christ's descent at the battle of Armageddon.

THE BARN AND ITS SURROUNDINGS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning, Dec. 25, 1887.

"The shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem and see this thing which is come to pass." Luke 2: 15.

The World Waiting for Christ—The Madonna in the Barn—A Subject for Painters—The Beasts Looking On—Their Interest in the Saviour—Their Claim on Human Kindness—God Honoring Childhood—Responsibilities of Parents—Masterpieces of Jehovah—Services Children have Rendered—The Destinies of the World in the Hands of Children—God Honoring Science—God Honoring the Fields—The Shepherds Apprised by Angels—God Honoring Motherhood—Good Mothers of Great Men—The Type of Mary.

ONE thousand years of the world's existence rolled painfully and wearily along, and no Christ. Two thousand years, and no Christ. Three thousand years, and no Christ. Four thousand years, and no Christ.

"Give us a Christ," had cried Assyrian and Persian and Chaldean and Egyptian civilizations, but the lips of the earth and the lips of the sky made no answer. The world had already been affluent of genius. Among poets had appeared Homer and Thespis and Aristophanes and Sophocles and Euripides and Alexis Æschylus; yet no Christ to be the most poetic figure of the centuries. Among historians had appeared Herodotus and Xenophon and Thucydides; but no Christ from whom all history was to date backward and forward—B. C. and A. D. Among conquerors Camillus and Manlius and Regulus and Xantippus and Scipio and Pompey and Cæsar; yet no Christ who was to be conqueror of earth and heaven.

But the slow century and the slow year and the slow month and the slow hour at last arrived. The world had had matins or concerts in the morning and vespers or concerts in in the evening, but now it is to have a concert at midnight. The black window shutters of a December night were thrown open, and some of the best singers of a world where they all sing, stood there, and, putting back the drapery of cloud, chanted a peace anthem, until all the echoes of hill and valley applauded and encored the Hallelujah Chorus.

At last the world has a Christ, and just the Christ it needs. Come, let us go into that Christmas scene as though we had never before worshipped at the manger. Here is A Madonna Worth Looking at.

I wonder not that the most frequent name in all lands and in all Christian centuries is Mary. And there are Marys in palaces and Marys in cabins, and though German and French and Italian and Spanish and English pronounce it differently, they are all namesakes of the one whom we find on a bed of straw, with her pale face against the soft cheek of Christ in the night of the Nativity. All the great painters have tried, on canvas, to present Mary and her child and the incidents of that most famous night of the world's history. Raphael, in three different masterpieces, celebrated them. Tintoret and Guirlandjo surpassed themselves in the Adoration of the Magi. Correggio needed to do nothing more than his Madonna to become immortal. The Madonna of the Lily, by Leonardo da Vinci, will kindle the admiration of all ages. But all the galleries of Dresden are forgotten, when I think of the small room of that gallery containing the Sistine Madonna. Yet all of them were copies of St. Matthew's Madonna, and Luke's Madonna, the inspired Madonna of the Old Book, which we had put into our hands when we were infants, and that we hope to have under our heads when we die.

Behold, in the first place, that on the first night of Christ's life God honored the brute creation. You cannot get into that Bethlehem barn without going past the camels, the mules, the dogs, the oxen.

The Brutes of That Stable heard the first cry of the infant Lord. Some of the old painters represent the oxen and camels kneeling that night before the new-born babe. And well might they kneel! Have you ever thought that Christ came, among other things, to alleviate the sufferings of the brute creation? Was it not appropriate that He should, during the first few days and nights of His life on earth, be surrounded by the dumb beasts, whose moan and plaint and bellowing have for ages been a prayer to God for the arresting of their tortures and the righting of their wrongs? It did not merely "happen so" that the unintelligent creatures of God should have been that night in close neighborhood.

Not a kennel in all the centuries, not a bird's nest, not a worn-out horse on tow-path, not a herd freezing in the poorly-built cow-pen, not a freight car in summer time bringing the beeves to market without water through a thousand miles of agony, not a surgeon's room witnessing the struggles of fox, or rabbit, or pigeon, or dog, in the horrors of vivisection, but has an interest in the fact that Christ was born in a stable, surrounded by brutes. He remembers that night, and the prayer He heard in

Their Pitiful Moan

He will answer in the punishment of those who maltreat the dumb brutes. They surely have as much right in this world as we have. In the first chapter of Genesis you may see that they were placed on the earth before man was, the fish and fowl created the fifth day, and the quadrupeds the morning of the sixth day, and man not until the afternoon of that day. The whale, the eagle, the lion, and all the lesser creatures of their kind were predecessors of the human family. They have the world by right of possession. They have also paid rent for the places they occupied. What an army of defense all over the land are the faithful watch dogs. And who can tell what the world owes to the horse, and camel, and ox, for transportation? And robin and lark have, by the cantatas with which they have filled orchard and forest, more than paid for the few grains they have picked up for their sustenance. When you abuse any creature of God you strike its Creator, and you insult the Christ who, though He might have been welcomed into life by princes, and taken His first infantile slumber amid Tyrian plush and canopied couches, and rippling waters from royal aqueducts dripping into basins of ivory and pearl, chose to be born on the level with a cow's horn, or a camel's hoof, or a dog's nostril, that he might be the alleviation of animal suffering as well as the Redeemer of man.

Standing then, as I imagine now I do, in that Bethlehem night with an infant Christ on the one side and the

Speechless Creatures of God

on the other, I cry, Look out, how you strike the rowel into that horse's side. Take off that curbed bit from that bleeding mouth. Remove that saddle from that raw back. Shoot not for fun that bird that is too small for food. Forget not to put water into the cage of that canary. Throw out some crumbs to those birds caught too far north in the winter's inclemency. Arrest that man who is making that one horse draw a load heavy enough for three. Rush in upon that scene where boys are torturing a cat, or transfixing butterfly and grasshopper. Drive not off that old robin, for her nest is a mother's cradle, and under her wing there may be three or four prime donne of the sky in training.

In your families and in your schools, teach the coming generation more mercy than the present generation has ever shown, and in this marvellous Bible picture of the Nativity, while you point out to them the angel, show them also the camel, and while they hear the celestial chant, let them also hear the cow's moan. No more did Christ show interest in the botanical world, when He said, "Consider the lilies," than He showed sympathy for the ornithological when He said, "Behold, the fowls of the air," and the quadrupedal world when He allowed Himself to be called in one place a lion, and in another place a lamb. Meanwhile, may the Christ of the Bethlehem cattle-pen have mercy on the suffering stock yards, that are preparing diseased and fevered meat for our American households.

Behold, also, in this Bible scene, how, on that Christmas night,

God Honored Childhood.

Christ might have made His first visit to our world in a cloud, as He will descend on His next visit in a cloud. In what a chariot of illumined vapor He might have rolled down the sky, escorted by mounted cavalry, with lightning of drawn sword. Elijah had a carriage of fire to take him up; why not Jesus a carriage of fire to fetch Him down? Or, over the arched bridge of a rainbow the Lord might have descended. Or Christ might have had His mortality built up on earth out of the dust of a garden, as was Adam, in full manhood at the start, without the introductory feebleness of infancy. No, no! Childhood was to be honored by that advent. He must have a child's light limbs, and a child's dimpled hand, and a child's beaming eye, and a child's flaxen hair; and babyhood was to be honored for all time to come, and a cradle was to mean more than a grave. Mighty God! May the reflection of that one child's face be seen in all infantile faces.

Enough have all those fathers and mothers on hand if they have a child in the house. A throne, a crown, a sceptre, a kingdom, under charge. Be careful how you strike him across the head, jarring the brain. What you say to him will be centennial and millennial, and a hundred years and a thousand years will not stop the echo and re-echo. Do not say, "It is only a child." Rather say, "It is only an immortal." It is only

A Masterpiece of Jehovah.

It is only a being that shall outlive sun and moon and star, and ages quadrillennial. God has infinite resources, and He can give presents of great value, but when He wants to give the richest possible gift to a household, He looks around all the worlds and all the universe and then gives a child. The greatest present that God ever gave our world, He gave about 1887 years ago, and He gave it on a Christmas night, and it was of such value that heaven adjourned for a recess and came down and broke through the clouds to look at it. Yea, in all ages God has honored childhood. He makes almost every picture a failure unless there be a child either playing on the floor, or looking through the window, or seated on the lap, gazing into the face of the mother.

It was a child in Naaman's kitchen that told the great Syrian warrior where he might go and get cured of the leprosy, which at his seventh plunge in the Jordan, was left at the bottom of the river. It was to the cradle of leaves, in which a child was laid, rocked by the Nile, that God called the attention of history. It was a sick child that evoked Christ's curative sympathies. It was a child that Christ set in the midst of the squabbling disciples, to teach the lesson of humility. We are informed that wolf and leopard and lion shall be yet so domesticated that

A Little Child Shall Lead Them.

A child decided Waterloo, showing the army of Blucher how they could take a short cut through the fields, when, if the old road had been followed, the Prussian general would have come up too late to save the destinies of Europe. It was a child that decided Gettysburg, he having overheard two Confederate generals in a conversation, in which they decided to march for Gettysburg instead of Harrisburg; and this, reported to Governor Curtin, the Federal forces started to meet their opponents at Gettysburg. And to-day

The Child is to Decide

all the great battles, make all the laws, settle all the destinies, and usher in the world's salvation or destruction. Men, women, nations, all earth and all heaven, behold the child! Is there any velvet so soft as a child's cheek? Is there any sky so blue as a child's eye? Is there any music so sweet as the child's voice? Is there any plume so wavy as a child's hair?

Notice also that in this Bible night scene

God Honored Science.

Who are the three wise men kneeling before the Divine Infant? Not boors, not ignoramuses, but Caspar, Belthasar and Melchior, men who knew all that was to be known. They were the Isaac Newtons and Herschels and Faradays of their time. Their alchemy was the forerunner of our sublime chemistry, their astrology the mother of our magnificent astronomy. They had studied stars, studied metals, studied physiology studied everything. And when I see these scientists bowing before the beautiful babe, I see the prophecy of the time when all the telescopes and microscopes, and all the Leyden jars, and all the electric batteries, and all the observatories, and all the Universities Shall Bow to Jesus.

It is much that way already. Where is the college that does not have morning prayers, thus bowing at the manger? Who have been the greatest physicians? Omitting the names of the living, lest we should be invidious, have we not had among them Christian men like our own Joseph C. Huchinson and Rush and Valentine Mott and Abercrombie and Abernethy? Who have been our greatest scientists? Joseph Henry, who lived and died in the faith of the Gospels and Agassiz, who, standing with his students among the hills, took off his hat and said, "Young gentlemen, before we study these rocks, let us pray for wisdom to the God who made the rocks." To-day the greatest doctors and lawyers, of Brooklyn and New York and of all this land and of all lands, revere the Christian religion, and are not ashamed to say so before juries and legislatures and senates.

All geology will yet bow before the Rock of Ages. All botany will yet worship the Rose of Sharon. All astromony will yet recognize the Star of Bethlehem. And physiology and anatomy will join hands and say, "We must, by the help of God, get the human race up to the perfect nerve, and perfect muscle, and perfect brain, and perfect form of that perfect child, before whom, nigh twenty hundred years ago, the wise men bent their tired knees in worship.

Behold also in that first Christmas night that God Honored the Fields.

Come in, shepherd boys, to Bethlehem and see the child. "No," they say; "we are not dressed good enough to come in." "Yes, you are; come in." Sure enough, the storms and the night dew and the brambles have made rough work with their apparel, but none have a better right to come in. They were the first to hear the music of that Christmas night. The first announcement of a Saviour's birth was made to those men in the fields. There were wiseacres that night in Bethlehem and Jerusalem snoring in deep sleep, and there were salaried officers of Government, who, hearing of it afterward, may have thought that they ought to have had the first news of such a great event, some one dismounting from a swift camel at their door and knocking till at some sentinel's question, "Who comes there?" the great ones of the palace might have been told of the celestial arrival. No; the sheperds heard the first two bars of the music, the first in the major key and the last in the subdued minor; "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men." Ah, yes; the fields were honored.

The old shepherds with plaid and crook have for the most part vanished, but we have grazing—our United States pasture fields and prairie about forty-five million sheep—and all their keepers ought to

Follow the Shepherds

of my text and all those who toil in fields, all winedressers, all orchardists, all husbandmen. Not only that Christmas night, but all up and down the world's history God had been honoring the fields. Nearly all the messiahs of reform and literature and eloquence and law and benevolence, have come from the fields. Washington from the fields. Jefferson from the fields. The Presidential martyrs, Garfield and Lincoln from the fields. Henry Clay from the fields. Daniel Webster from the fields. Martin Luther from the fields.

Before this world is right, the overflowing populations of our crowded cities will have to take to the fields. Instead of ten merchants in rivalry as to who shall sell that one apple, we want at least eight of them to go out and raise apples. Instead of ten merchants desiring to sell that one bushel of wheat, we want at least eight of them to go out and raise wheat. The world wants now more hard hands, more bronzed cheeks, more muscular arms. To the fields! God honored them when He woke up the shepherds by the midnight anthem, and he will, while the world lasts, continue to honor the fields. When the shepherd's crook was that famous night stood against the wall of the Bethlehem kahn, it was a prophecy of the time when thresher's flail and farmer's plough and woodman's axe and ox's yoke and sheaf binder's rake shall surrender to the God who made the country, as man made the town.

Behold, also, that on that Christmas night

God Honored Motherhood.

Two angels on their wings might have brought an infant Saviour to Bethlehem without Mary's being there at all. When the villagers, on the morning of December 26, awoke, by divine arrangement, and in some unexplained way, the Child Jesus might have been found in some comfortable cradle of the village. But no, no! Motherhood for all time was to be consecrated, and one of the tenderest relations was to be the maternal relation, and one of the sweetest words, "mother."

In all ages God has honored good motherhood. John Wesley had a good mother; St Bernard had a good mother; Samuel Budgett, a good mother; Doddridge, a good mother; Walter Scott, a good mother; Benjamin West, a good mother. In a great audience, most of whom were Christians, I asked that all those who had been blessed of Christian mothers arise, and almost the entire assembly stood up. Don't you see how important it is that all motherhood be consecrated? Why did Titian, the Italian artist, when he sketched the Madonna, make it an Italian face? Why did Rubens, the German artist, in his Madonna, make it a German face? Why did Joshua Reynolds, the English artist, in his Madonna, make it an English face? Why did Murillo, the Spanish artist, in his Madonna, make it a Spanish face? I never heard, but I think they took their own mothers as the mother of Christ. When you hear some one, in sermon or oration, speak in the abstract of a good, faithful, honest mother, your eyes fill up with tears, while you say to yourself, that was my mother. The first word a child utters is apt to be "Mother," and the old man, in his dying dream, calls, "Mother! mother!" It matters not whether she was brought up in the surroundings of a city, and in affluent home, and was dressed appropriately, with reference to the demands of modern life, or whether she wore the old-time cap, and great round spectacles, and apron of her own make, and knit your socks with her own needles, seated by the broad fireplace, with great back-log ablaze, on a winter night. It matters not how many wrinkles crossed and re-crossed her face, or how much her shoulders stooped with the burdens of a long life, if you painted a Madonna, hers would be the face.

The Type of Mary,

What a gentle hand she had when we were sick, and what a voice to soothe pain, and was there any one who could so fill up a room with peace, and purity, and light? And what a sad day that was when we came home and she could greet us not, for her lips were forever still.

Come Back, Mother,

this Christmas day, and take your old place, and as ten, or twenty, or fifty years ago, come and open the old Bible you used to; read and kneel in the same place where you used to pray, and look upon us as of old when you wished us a Merry Christmas or a Happy New Year. But, no! That would not be fair to call you back. You had troubles enough, and aches enough, and bereavements enough while you were here. Tarry by the throne, mother, till we join you there, your prayers all answered, and in the eternal homestead of our God we shall again keep Christmas jubilee together. But speak from your thrones, all you glorified mothers, and say to all these, your sons and daughters, words of love, words of warning, words of cheer. They need your voice, for they have travelled far and with many a heart-break since you left them, and you do well to call from the heights of heaven to the valleys of earth. Hail, enthroned ancestry! We are coming. Keep a place right beside you at the banquet.

"Slow-footed years! More swiftly run
Into the gold of that unsetting sun.
Homesick we are for thee,
Calm land beyond the sea."

A SOLDIER'S UNAVAILING REGRET.

IN the course of his Friday evening "talk," last week, Dr. Talmage referred to the deputation which has come from England to advocate arbitration as a preventive of war, and expressed the hope that the interview of the deputation with President Cleveland might not be without good results. He went on to speak of the miseries of war and said:

Statistics of the numbers slain in battle do not impress the mind with the horrors of war so much as some plain account like this, which was given by an English soldier in a letter written to his wife during England's war with Russia: "We were ordered to fire. I took steady aim and fired at my man at about sixty yards. He fell like a stone. At the same time under a broadside the opposing regiment disappeared. I felt as if I must go up to him, and see whether he was dead or alive.

"He lay quite still, and I was more afraid of him lying so than when he stood facing me a few minutes before. It is a strange feeling coming over you all at once, that you have killed a man. He had unbuttoned his jacket and was pressing his hand over the front of his chest where the wound was. He breathed hard, and the blood poured from the wound, and also from his mouth, every breath he took. His face was white as death, and his eyes looked so big and bright, as he turned them and stared at me, I shall never forget it. He was a fine young fellow, not more than five and twenty. I went down on my knees beside him, and my breast felt so full, as though my own heart would burst. He had a real English face, and did not look like an enemy. What I felt I can never tell, but if my life would have saved his, I believe I should have given it. I laid his head on my knee, and he tried to speak, but his voice was gone. I could not tell a word he said, and every time he tried to speak the blood poured out so, I knew it would soon be over. I am not ashamed to say I was worse than he, for he never shed a tear, and I could not help it. I was wondering how I could leave him to die, when his face rolled over, and with a sigh he was gone. I trust the Almighty has received his soul. I laid his head tenderly down on the grass and left him. It seemed so strange when I looked at him for the last time—I somehow thought of everything I had heard about the Turks and Russians and the rest, for all that seemed so far off and the dead man so near."

Oh, does not some such little scene as that, more than great statistics, impress us with the ravages of war? And will it not put into our every prayer for the remaining years of our life, an earnest petition that the nations may cease bloody combat; and that peaceful adjustment and international brotherhood may spike all the guns and dismantle all the fortresses, and make useless all the armories?

Volume IX. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1886, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1884, and 1885 are also for sale.

RETROSPECT OF THE YEAR 1887.

THE year 1887 will have its place on the level of ordinary history; it is not one of those crag-like years, which tower up above their fellows, conspicuous and memorable for its strange and startling events. In our own country especially, its course has been a continuation of the even current of our national life, the surface of which has been broken only by mere ripples of disquietude and change, and has not been tossed and agitated by storms of internal or external trouble. To many persons, doubtless, the year will be very memorable, on account of vicissitudes in their individual lives; but in surveying the history of the nation for the year, the patriotic citizen can thank God and take courage. Our country is still pre-eminently the most prosperous, contented and happy nation on earth, and we have abundant reason, as we bow before the God of nations, to thank Him for the blessings He has showered upon us.

As is usually the case, in what are termed "off years," there has been but little change in

The Political World.

The interstate commerce bill, which was under discussion when the year opened, became a law early in January, and was put in operation. Neither the great benefits nor the disastrous losses which were predicted to result from it have as yet made themselves apparent, and the character of the Commissioners, to whom the President intrusted its execution, encourages the hope that the discretion vested in them will be wisely and carefully exercised. One important feature of progress which marks this year is that of apportioning the Indian lands in severalty. This has long been desired by the friends of the Indians, who have been convinced that the only hope of civilizing them and bringing them into our national life was to break up tribal relations as far as possible, and, giving the Indian the best of all reasons to stay quietly and peaceably at home, in securing a home and land to him individually. This has now been done in several tribes, and the system is being extended to others. The problem of the Surplus in the National Treasury, which was left unsolved by the Forty-ninth Congress, is likely to be the chief battle-ground of the Fiftieth, The President's message brought the question to the front, with a prominence unusual in such documents, and, though our legislators are not in the habit of attaching much weight to Presidential utterances, men of both parties recognize the necessity of dealing with the matter, though they differ widely as to the wisdom of dealing with it in the way Mr. Cleveland suggests. That issue, however it may be decided by Congress, has now been made the supreme issue between the parties, and will probably decide the election of next year. The Canadian Fishery dispute, which unhappily disturbed the pleasant relations between our northern neighbors and ourselves, led Congress to invest the President with the power to suspend commercial transactions with Canada almost entirely, but he did not use it. Now, six commissioners, three on each side, are endeavoring to find some more enlightened and dignified solution than retaliation. In the interests of peace and good-will all Christian citizens wish them success.

Personal changes in the political world have been few and unimportant. In the Cabinet the services of Mr. Manning, which were highly valued by the President and the people, were unhappily lost by the failure of his health, but the loss was minimized by the appointment of Mr. Fairchild as his successor; and as that gentleman had served under Mr. Manning, and was familiar with and endorsed his policy, the change in the Treasury caused neither anxiety nor disturbance in business circles. The changes in the other offices have been too recently made to be tested as yet. The removal of Mr. Lamar to the Supreme Court, of Mr. Vilas to the Department of the Interior, and the introduction of Mr. Dickinson to the Post-office, are not changes of a radical character, and there is no reason to apprehend that they will be disadvantageous to the public service.

Social Events,

like those in the political world, have been of an ordinary character. The celebration of the Centennial of the Constitution was the most conspicuous of these. Philadelphia, where the celebration took place, spared neither trouble nor expense in doing honor to the occasion, and the quiet, sober city for a few days took on a gaiety and splendor that transformed it beyond recognition. Two royal visitors have done our Republic the honor to visit us during the year. Queen Kapiolani, of Hawaii, and the Crown Prince of Siam, made a tour of the country. They are not very conspicuous members of royalty, but, as they probably share the prejudices of more exalted regal persons, the spectacle of a great nation living in peace and order without any crowned person to speak of the land as "My realm," and to leave children to succeed by "divine right," must have had its significance to them. That a self-governing nation knows how to protect itself and maintain order, was seen in the execution of the anarchists in November. In spite of protests at home and in Europe, in spite of threats, processions and incendiary harangues, the sentence of the law was duly executed, and the brood of miscreants, whom Europe sends to us in shoals, were taught that while we glory in our liberty, we do not mean to extend it into socialism and anarchy. Labor troubles, as usual, have been developed, notably in the Lehigh coal region, and the problem of the relations of capital and labor is still unsolved. The establishment of boards of arbitration is one step toward its solution, but as yet the disputants have not availed themselves of the services of these boards to any considerable extent.

Temperance

has made great progress during the year. To the superficial observer it might seem that the year has been most disastrous to the cause. The defeat of Prohibition in Michigan, Texas, Tennessee and Oregon causes jubilation among its enemies, but its friends are not cast down. The very fact that a fight should have been made at all in those States is an evidence of strength, and that so sturdy and valiant a fight was made, proves the mighty power of the cause. Besides this, in New York and other States, the official returns showed an extraordinary increase in the Prohibition vote, out of all proportion to that of the old political parties. The really sad characteristic of the year for the temperance man is the loss of his standard-bearer. The death of John B. Finch was an event that gives the only sombre cast to the year's temperance record.

The Religious Life of the country has been vigorous and energetic. The work of gathering out of the world a people for the Master has been conducted with more than ordinary fervor. That the greatly extended study of prophecy, which received an impetus from the lecture tour of the Rev. M. Baxter, and that the conviction thereby produced, that the whole world will not be converted before Christ comes, does not paralyze, but rather stimulates evangelistic effort, has been obvious. Our most prominent evangelists, notably Mr. Moody and Dr. Pentecost, have frequently expressed their belief that optimistic hopes of the evangelization of the world are doomed to disappointment, but no less—rather the more as the day of the Lord's coming approaches, are they laboring with heart and soul for the rescue of souls. Never were there so many evangelists in the field, and never were the results of the divine blessing on their labors more conspicuous.

Foreign missions also are receiving unprecedented support. The million dollars raised by the Methodists, and the large sums raised for the same purpose by other denominations, are remarkable and welcomed evidence of the quickened conscience of the Church of Christ in this matter. It is also very gratifying to the publishers of this journal, that the efforts it has made during the past year to direct the attention of the public to Christian work in Mexico and South America, have been blessed beyond their expectation. Bishop Riley, whose devotion and consecration, personal and financial, to this cause is beyond all praise, has been much encouraged by the gifts of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and still more by their hearty sympathy and their prayers.

In Foreign Lands,

the year is remarkable for the the absence of war. Though rumors and apprehensions and threatenings have been abundant, there has been no outbreak of hostilities in any quarter. England has been devoting itself with effusive loyalty to the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Queen Victoria's accession, and the heartiness of the demonstration must have deeply gratified her Majesty. The troubles in Ireland have not diminished, but have rather taken on an acute form by the experiment which the Government has adopted of tying down the safety-valve of free speech, and imprisoning the recognized leaders of the people. England's labor troubles have reached a stage lower and more desperate than our own; for while our workmen are complaining that their wages are not high enough, those of England complain that they have no wages at all. The unemployed masses are becoming a serious element in the national life, and are causing general apprehension. The riot of November 13, when the assistance of the army was required to restore order, was a sign of the growing desperation of starving men, and, though professional agitators, roughs and thieves doubtless were the moving cause of the disturbance, the fact cannot be ignored that the prevalent distress supplied the material with which they worked. France has happily passed through a presidential crisis during the year. The ease with which the reins of power were transferred, encourages the hope that the stability of republican institutions may be maintained; but the dearth of really able statesmen and the boldness and increasing power of the anarchists are ominous features of the situation. In Germany all other facts sink into insignificance beside the melancholy condition of the heir to the throne. Our own experience, when the whole nation watched General Grant sink to the grave under his dread malady, leads us to sympathize with a nation similarly situated. Hopes and fears have alternated during the past months, and these have been accentuated by the knowledge that the nonagenarian Emperor would, if his son died before him, be succeeded by a man whose ways are not set in the direction of peace. The triple alliance of Germany, Austria and Italy, to which England has given a modified adhesion, is an encouraging development of the year. It offers a barrier to the designs of Russia, which is now the only powerful disturbing element in Europe. On the other hand, it will render a struggle, when it does come, a more gigantic one, and it is clearly an element in the development of that supreme conflict which, as prophecy shows, must occur within a comparatively short period.

The Disasters of the Year on both sides of the Atlantic have been above the common average. The Earthquake in the Riviera, on February 23, was a deplorable calamity, occasioning many fatalities and much distress. Another earthquake occurred in Mexico on May 3, and a third was reported from Turkestan. The inundation in China, only just reported, was a catastrophe the dimensions of which are at present unknown, but cannot fail to have been appalling. Two fires in theatres, one in Paris, France, and one at Exeter, England, contributed to swell the fatalities of the year with horrible accompaniments. Many lives were also lost at sea. In the wreck of the Kapunda, 298 persons perished, and in the wreck of a Chinese vessel, on March 1, over 600 lives were sacrificed. The British gunboat Wasp, carrying about a hundred men, is also believed to have been lost with all on board.

The wreck of the emigrant steamer W. A. Scholten, on November 19, with the loss of 130 lives, was another terrible calamity. On our side, too, twenty lives were lost by the burning of the W. H. Gardiner, on March 1, twenty-two by the burning of the Champlain, on June 17, and twenty-four by the capsizing of the Mystery, on July 10. Fatalities on the railroads have also contributed to the shocking list. At Republic, O., on January 4, at White River, Vt., on February 5, at Dedham, Mass., on March 14, at Chatsworth, Ill., on August 10, catastrophes occurred which were most disastrous to life.

The Obituary Record of the year is a long one, and one fraught with sad reflections. Among the most prominent of those whose loss the church mourns, are: Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Bishop Potter, of New York; Bishop Green, of Mississippi; Rev. Ray Palmer, Bishop Alfred Lee, Prof. R. D. Hitchcock, Dr. Mark Hopkins, Dr. Daniel Curry, Bishop William Harris, and Missionary Bishop R. W. B. Elliott. Other prominent names in the list of the year's dead are, Gen. Hazen, Gen. Stone, James B. Eads, Ben. Perley Poore, Ex-Vice-President Wheeler, Ex-Governor Luke Blackburn, Ex-Governor Wm. B. Washburn, Admiral Nicholson, Elihu B. Washburne and John B. Finch.

THE MULTITUDE FED.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for January 8, 1888. Matt. 14: 13-21. Memory Text, John 6: 35.

Ver. 13. The Saviour Bereaved by John Baptist's Death, Seeking Solitude—Crossed the Lake—The People Seeking Christ—Skirted the Lake and Found Him on the North East Side—Ver. 14. Jesus Not Angry When Deprived of Rest—Compassion His Usual Emotion—Ready to Heal Them—Ver. 15. Natural Solicitude—The Crowd Seemed Oblivious of Their Own Necessities—Ver. 16. Christ's Words Apply Now—No Man's Physical Needs Require Him to Leave Christ—Ver. 17-19. A Fuller Account of the Conversation in John 6: 5-7, and Mark 6: 37—The Means Used in the Miracle, as When Water Was Used for the Wine. John 2: 7—Ver. 20-21. A Fact Well and Personally Attested—Christ Fully Satisfies those Whom He Feeds—The Remains Larger than Original Supply—The Divine Store Inexhaustible—The Five Thousand a Type of Many Thousand Still Being Fed by Christ.

WHEN the disciples of John heard of the murder of their master, they "went and told Jesus." When Jesus heard of it from the lips of man, He went and told His Father. "When Jesus heard of it, He departed thence by ship into a desert place apart." Some Christians are not fond of desert places—places apart from the multitude. A child of God once said to me, "I can always pray better in a prayer-meeting where there is the faith of others around to help me, than when I am alone." This is a bad sign. To one whose whole being is centred in God, nothing is so precious as to get Alone With God.

In a desert place, with nothing to distract the eye or ear, God seems so near, and communion seems so easy to those who are in the habit of living in His presence. But sometimes we plan to have a time apart, and the needy ones find us out. It was so with Jesus. Men and women with great expectations for soul and body, all of them centred in Jesus, "followed Him on foot out of the cities." They must have inquired of one and another, "Did He pass this way? Have you seen anything of Him?" and following up the traces which they found, they tracked Him to His retreat.

How many evangelists have met with this experience! They have determined to give a certain day to prayer. They have fixed the time, and fixed the place, and made all their plans accordingly. Again and again, the Spirit of God has led them to see their need of more prolonged communion with Him, and, at last, the very favorable time seems to have arrived. But a sudden, unexpected interruption occurs; something which is most imperative. Shall they in such a case give up the time for communion, or neglect the work which seems so necessary? It appears as though duties clashed, and as though they were in

An Impossible Position.

It is just in such a case that we cannot decide for ourselves. It may be that the very reason for which God has laid upon us the desire to be alone with Him, was in order that He might bring us to a more complete surrender of our will: and the very call to have our plans overturned, if submitted to, may be worth all the hours of communion with God. On the other hand, the interruption may be of the enemy, who would make us think that anything is of more importance than face to face intercourse with God. How know what is His will? Surely, by asking Him, and not moving until we know His mind. Jesus did always those things which pleased God, and so He must have known what did please God, without any hesitation, quite sure of His Father's will, "Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, and was Moved With Compassion.

toward them, and He healed their sick." When we are not at rest in our own souls, uncertain about the will of God, we are not enough at leisure from ourselves to sympathize with others. The secret of want of love to souls is preoccupation of heart. A man who thinks much of his own comfort only loves God and souls by fits and starts. True, love to God and love to souls is simply Christ in us living out His own life of love to God and man. Self, in any form, fills His place, and hinders love. A compassionate heart is not a heart which can be easily touched by emotion, for a few moments, and can just as easily relapse into indifference. It is a heart which goes down to the poor, the lost and the sick ones, to rescue and help them out of their troubles. Jesus began with the most helpless ones: "He healed their sick." One after another, these afflicted found deliverance: the blind were in ecstasies of joy that they could see, and they drank in the scenes which met their opened eyes; men women, children, especially their own children, the landscape all around, but, above all, Jesus who had healed them. The deaf were rejoicing in the blessed luxury of hearing what was said to them, hearing their own voices, but above all,

The Voice of Jesus.

The lame who had been carried, or had walked on crutches, were like prisoners unchained, and the sense of freedom in the use of their limbs must have been delicious to them; they were free to follow Jesus. The dropsical, the cancerous, the sufferers from nerve pains, were hardly able to believe they were the same who had been, so short a time before, racked with agonies of pain. No wonder the evening drew near before anyone remembered that the time for the evening meal was past, and they had no provision.

There are four accounts in the New Testament of this first feeding of the multitude. In one chapter the disciples came to Jesus saying: "This is a desert place, and the time is now past; send the multitude away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themselves victuals." St. Mark gives the very same account. St. Luke, also (Mark 6: 35, 36; Luke 9: 12). St. John says, "When Jesus then lifted up His eyes and saw a great company come unto Him, He saith unto Philip, 'Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?'" It is probable that the disciples made their suggestion first, and then Jesus asked Philip this question.

O how little did the disciples understand Jesus! How little does the natural heart understand God! He revealed Himself to Abraham as "Jehovah Jireh,"

The Lord will Provide, and yet the best suggestion which the disciples could make was that the multitude, in the very presence of Jehovah Jireh, should provide for themselves! O how little they took in that the very God who had fed His people with manna in the wilderness, was there in human form before them! They saw only a simple, humble-looking man; but, surely His divinity leaked out from behind the tabernacle of flesh! Were there not present dozens of witnesses that He healed "all manner of sickness and all manner of disease; and that without any appliance or remedy? How should He who, by His own unaided power, healed the body, be unable to feed that body?

In all the quiet dignity which characterized Him, Jesus said, "They need not depart; give ye them to eat." And the disciples began doing what, in our conceit we so often do: they reckoned up all their resources but one—they did not reckon Jesus in! "We have here but five loaves and two fishes," and Andrew said, "What are they among so many?" (John 6: 9). By-and-by, when they were filled with the Holy Ghost, the disciples bore another testimony, "Silver and gold have I none," said Peter, "but such as I have give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk." In the desert Jesus was not so much as mentioned among their resources; at the temple gate Jesus of Nazareth was everything, and nothing else was counted. "Whom do you depend on to carry on this work?" was asked one day of an evangelist. The ready answer was, "God."

Jesus was patient with His disciples, who so little understood, so little appreciated Him. He did not reprove them for mentioning their little resources, but showed them on their own ground, meeting them where they were, how, in the hand of God, the little can increase. Strange that they had forgotten the feeding of a hundred men in Elisha's time (II Kings 4: 42-44); strange that in our lives there should be such forgetfulness of God's deliverances! Jesus said;

"Bring Them Hither to Me."

The little loaves were nothing in themselves to feed thousands, but in the hand of Jesus, who created the world, and without whom nothing was made that was made, they were sufficient to do all He willed. Dear child of God, are you sometimes crushed by the consciousness of your inefficiency, weakness and ignorance? Truly, you are nothing in yourself. But in the hand of Jesus, what can you not be? The rod in the hand of Moses was but a wooden stick, but in his hand, and he himself held in the hand of God, that rod meant the destruction of Egypt! The loaves were in the Maker's hands, but before the people could be fed they must be at rest. "He commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass." Hunger once awakened, one might reach before the other, but if they sat down they implied that they believed in Him who had undertaken to provide. We seldom receive anything from God until we sit down. When we are at rest He works. Then He took the loaves and fishes into the hands which made the worlds, and, "looking up to heaven, He blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to His disciples, and the disciples to the multitude." This is God's order. He could bless sinners and sick ones independently of His children, but He honors them in making them channels of blessing to others. Yet no one of the five thousand men, or of the women and children, who were present, was under the delusion that the disciples multiplied the bread. As it left the hand of Jesus, so it came to them; no less and no more. It was in His hand that it was prepared for the multitude. And thus it is in our ministry, if we are workers for the Master. We can only give what we receive. Anything that we may add is not food which will nourish souls.

"They did all eat, and were filled." The Great Provider adapted the supply to the need: but, like Himself, it overflowed; there was enough, and to spare; and of the broken meat, beyond that which the multitude could use, there were twelve baskets of fragments taken up. Lavish as He is, God is no Patron of waste. Often, the fragments of His Word, which are unpopular, are the richest feasts to those who take the trouble to gather them. O that the multitude of the unemployed knew God as their Provider!

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents; always payable in advance. Single copies for sale by, or can be ordered at, all newsdealers.

New Subscriptions can commence at any time. When no date is mentioned, we begin them with the issue of the week in which the subscription is received.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheques, or drafts or express money order, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Renewals can be sent any time previous to date of expiry, and the time will be added to that to which the subscriber is already entitled.

Notice of Expiration of subscription is always sent in addition to the date being given on the address label. When not renewed by date of expiration the paper is stopped; no notice from the subscriber being required.

Receipts are not sent, the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that his remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please advise us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Mistakes are sure to arise occasionally, which we will gladly put right on having our attention drawn to them. Please do not allow any error to pass without complaint.

Change of Address. Name of Post Office and State, of both old and new address, should always be given in case of removal.

Several Friends have Written to this Office requesting that certain renewals be made and new names placed upon the list, but omitting to send the necessary funds. It is in no invidious spirit, and with no indisposition to oblige our kind friends, that we must decline to do as they ask. The hard and fast rule was laid down in the office some years ago, the management being compelled to do so by sad and painful experience, that money in every case must accompany the order for renewal or for putting a new name on the list. That rule has been found advantageous for all parties, and, though cases frequently arise in which it would be pleasant to make an exception, it cannot be done without breaking down the rule.

CURRENT EVENTS.

An Amicable Settlement of the Fishery Dispute with Canada is a result which Mr. Chamberlain confidently expects. In an interview with representatives of the press on December 22, he assured them of his belief in its being achieved. In reply to questions, he said, also, that his recent visit to the United States had convinced him that no feeling existed there in favor of commercial union, unless confined to a limited few. All those with whom he had spoken admitted that commercial union meant nothing less than annexation, and he believed this step was inevitable if the proposed arrangement was carried out. Speaking of the relations between Great Britain and Canada, he said that the union between them was valued as much on the east side of the Atlantic as on the west, although if Canada desired separation, England would offer no remonstrance.

The Control of Telegraph Business by Government is practically proposed in each of the two bills now before the Senate. There is considerable difference in the details of the plans advocated by Senators Edmunds and Cullom, who are respectively the authors of the two measures, the former advocating four trunk lines, to be constructed and kept in repair by the Engineer Corps of the Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War; the management of the lines to be in the hands of a board, consisting of the Secretary of State, Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General. Senator Cullom, on the other hand, proposes to construct ten trunk lines, and makes the telegraph system a part of the Post Office Department, but provides for a Director-General of Telegraphs, to have immediate charge of the service. Neither of the bills contemplates the acquisition of any existing lines, and both declare that they are not intended to prevent the operation of telegraph lines by individuals or corporations. It would, however, be unfair to the existing lines for the Government to compete with them without first giving them an opportunity to sell their lines at a fair price, and Congress is likely to insist upon that before passing either bill. The telegraph companies have not acted in a manner to entitle them to magnanimity, but misconduct on their part does not justify spoliation by Congress.

A Stringent Law Against Fraud in the Custom houses was reported to the Senate last week. It provides that any person who shall give, or offer to give, or promise to give, any money or thing of value, directly or indirectly, to any customs officer in consideration of any act or omission contrary to law in connection with the importation or examination of goods, wares or baggage, shall on conviction be fined not exceeding $2,000 or be imprisoned at hard labor not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the Court; and any official receiving such bribe shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for two years, or both at the discretion of the court. Another provision, equally stringent, applies to merchant importers. It provides that if the value of any import as declared by the merchant is less by one fifth than its actual value as decided by the appraiser, the entry shall be held to be fraudulent, and the Collector of Customs shall seize such merchandise and proceed as in cases of forfeiture, and the fact of such undervaluation shall be presumptive evidence of fraud. The importance of this law, if it should be enacted and enforced, will be readily perceived by every one who has had dealings with the Custom House, and has witnessed the mode in which business there is conducted.

Ex-Secretary Manning, whose Sickness Last year necessitated his retirement from the Treasury Department, suffered a relapse on December 21. A brief telegram from Albany, N. Y., said that he had sunk into unconsciousness, and was believed to be dying. On the next day there was a slight improvement in his condition, and he was conscious at intervals, but his physicians forbade all hope of his recovery. The malady is now stated to be Bright's disease, and is attributed by his physicians to the bad sanitary condition of the Treasury Department building. Mr. Manning won the general respect of the country by his conduct of the Treasury Department, and it therefore adds to the poignancy of regret to learn that his loss came through his assiduity and devotion to the interests of the nation.

Distressing Reports of a Coal Famine in Kansas were published on Thursday last. A telegram from Topeka stated that throughout western Kansas there was an alarming scarcity of fuel. So dire was the famine that reports had been received in that city of persons being frozen to death. Fifteen, it was stated, had died, in the ten counties heard from, since the blizzard set in. The railroad companies are charged with having produced the coal famine by making a corner in fuel; but they contend that they have done their utmost to supply the demand. Col. M. Quigg, General Manager of the Atchison's coal business, when appealed to on the subject, said: "In the last three years there have been constructed about 3,000 miles of railroad track in the State of Kansas. Every mile of this track requires a certain amount of coal for its operation, and I believe scarcely a mile of this new construction passed a coal field, or has in any degree contributed by production or otherwise to the coal supply. On the line of these newly constructed roads hundreds of towns have been built. These towns are occupied by thousands upon thousands of people from abroad, and mills and factories have been established, every one of which requires the consumption of a certain amount of fuel, but not one contributes in any way to its production." The result is that the stations of the lines are besieged by settlers from frontier towns, some of whom have travelled nearly a hundred miles with their teams to get fuel, and have to wait several days before the railroad brings a supply. The coal cars have to be guarded by armed men, or the railroads would not have sufficient coal to keep running.

Anxiety About Mr. Henry M. Stanley, from whom no direct news has been received for many weeks, was partially allayed last week by advices from Zanzibar, which state that a messenger has arrived from Central Africa, who says it is reported in the country, on the eastern side of Lake Nyanza, that Mr. Stanley, after many privations, reached Wadelai in the early part of September. The principal difficulty he encountered was between the Mabodi country and Wadelai. This news is too vague to be accepted without confirmation, but it is quite as well authenticated as the rumors of disaster which produced the disquietude.

Great Britain Sending an Envoy to the Pope is an acknowledgment of his sovereignty, which Protestants regret. The Government selected the Duke of Norfolk, a Roman Catholic nobleman, for the business, and he was charged to present the congratulations of Queen Victoria on the Papal Jubilee, and her thanks for the mission of Mgr. Scilla on the occasion of her own Jubilee. The Pope received the Envoy with delight, and replied, that he was deeply moved by these proofs of friendship on the part of the Queen, and hoped that the exchange of sentiments of affection would not be limited to the present exceptional circumstances, but would also make its influence felt on other occasions. He was animated, he said, by feelings of the greatest affection for the English people. The real motive of the mission was disclosed subsequently, when the Duke expressed the hope that the Pope's influence over the Irish people would be used to stimulate their loyalty to the English crown. In reply, the Pope's secretary informed the Duke that the Pope had already used his influence with the clergy, but could not ask the priests to cease to be patriots without running the risk of causing a rebellion of a section of the clergy and the loss of the hold of the Church on the people.

The Relations of Austria and Russia Continue to excite apprehension. No official explanation of the concentration of Russian troops on the Austrian border has been asked or given, and possibly in the strained relations existing neither Power considers it safe to move in the matter. Austria, however, clearly regards the movement as a menace, and is making preparations for defence. The New York Herald's correspondent, "A Member of Parliament," states that the prevalent impression in England is, that if war should break out, England is pledged to take part on the Austrian side. He says: "What one hears is that the English Government has been induced by Bismarck to give considerable countenance, if not absolute pledges of support, to the triple alliance, and that Austria is confident that she may depend on English interposition in case she is attacked. The Times, which has access to official information, hints that England might possibly extend maritime aid to Italy, or Austria, in certain eventualities. If anything of this sort has been done a tremendous significance is imparted to Salisbury's words at Derby last week, warning the country that if a thunderclap of war should break it would give no warning, and if by untoward chance we should be involved in it, our fate would depend upon the preparations we had made in time of peace." If the Czar is not insane it is inconceivable that, even with the aid of France, which by the way is not assured, he would dare to attack such a mighty combination as Germany, Austria and Italy, with the probability of England also. Nevertheless European opinion appears to be fully settled that a gigantic struggle is in preparation which cannot at the furthest be postponed beyond the spring of next year.

The Topics for the Week of Prayer Suggested by the Evangelical Alliance have been issued. They are: Sunday January 1, Sermons; "Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke, 21:28. "The end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer"—I Peter 4:7; Compare Rom. 1312; 1 Cor. 7:29; Eph. 5:16. Monday, January 2, Thanksgiving Ps. 23, 30. 66, 98. 100, 103, 133, 146. Tuesday, Confession. Of vices prevalent throughout Christendom, such as drunkenness, impurity, profane language, and Sabbath-breaking; of great public wrongs, such as oppressive laws, or demoralizing trades, like the opium and liquor traffics; of luxury and the wasteful use of God's gifts by some classes of society, and, among others, lawless discontent and covetousness; of hindrances to the acceptance of the Gospel, by the inconsistent lives of nominal Christians; of jealousies and rivalries among brethren; of personal unfaithfulness, imperfect consecration to God, faults of pride or temper, and the worldliness and inaction which render so many believers unfruitful. Wednesday, January 3, Prayer for Families and schools. For the hallowing of the home in all its relationships; for Sunday-schools; for Associations of young men and women; for every effort to protect the immature against temptations, and to equalize the standard of morality for both sexes—etc. Thursday, January 4, Prayer for the Church for a testimony against false teaching; and for the speedy coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Friday, January 6. Prayer for missions. For the quickening of a missionary spirit and for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost; for all agents in Gospel work; for native churches and converts, especially such as endure persecution for the Gospel's sake; for Mission Colleges, Bible and Tract Societies, and the spread of vernacular Christian literature. Saturday, January 7. Prayer for Nations. For Kings and for all that are in authority; for Legislatures and Judges; for the abolition of the traffic in opium and intoxicating drinks; for just dealing and a Christian spirit between employers and employed; for the amelioration of the condition of the poor; for the elevation of public morals, in respect of temperance and chastity; for the spread among the people of a pure literature; for all philanthropic work among the suffering or degraded.

An Empty Drug Bottle Labeled "Deadly poison" caused terrible excitement in a Connecticut home on December 19. The favorite daughter of a family at Bridgeport has been for some weeks in a state of severe mental depression, owing to the miscarriage of a love affair. On the morning in question, her mother, going to call her, found her lying apparently unconscious on the bed, with the poison bottle by her side. On her table lay letters of farewell to her recreant lover and her parents, which she had evidently spent the night in writing. The mother alarmed the household and sent for a physician, while the father, seizing the bottle, rushed off to the drug store from which, as the label showed, it was obtained, to learn the nature of the poison his child had taken. His distress was speedily relieved by the information the drug clerk gave him. The clerk said that the previous evening a young lady came in and, in an agitated voice, asked him for a potent poison. He demurred, but finding it was useless to reason with her, and fearing that if he did not satisfy her she might obtain the poison somewhere else, he had mixed a mild opiate, putting in a drug that would give it a bitter taste. It would do her no harm, and when she awoke she would be more composed. The father was overjoyed, and made the discreet young man a handsome present, and, later in the day, the young lady herself called and thanked him heartily for not granting her request. The day will come when a similarly changed mind will be manifested toward God by His children. Many of them will, when their eyes are opened, perceive that His love toward them was never so fully exercised as when He refused to give them what would have been harmful to them (II Cor. 12: 8, 9).

The Search for the Giant Derelict Raft, commenced on December 22, is, at the time of writing, arousing much interest on the Eastern seaboard. The three powerful steam-tugs which have set out are directed to scour the Atlantic in different directions, in search of the monster, and are supplied with the International code signals, by which they can ask incoming steamers if it has been seen on the voyage. The raft is worth $132,000, and is composed of 25,000 logs of spruce and pine timber, some of which are ninety-five feet long. Altogether there are more than four million feet of timber in it, and it weighs nine thousand tons. It was constructed in Nova Scotia, and was the outcome of an effort to solve the problem of sending timber to New York at a lower rate than by rail or ship. The huge logs, some of which are three feet in diameter, were packed together, in the shape of a cigar, by a patent process, and secured with strong chains. On November 30 the steam-tug Miranda took it in tow at Port Joggins, N. S., to bring it to New York, but had to abandon it in a gale, and it floated out to sea. There is a double necessity for finding it: first, on account of its value; and second, because it may wreck vessels coming in contact with it. The search, in some respects, resembles that in which Christian workers are engaged. They are stimulated by the value of the souls they are seeking and trying to bring to the heavenly harbor, and by the knowledge that every impenitent wanderer is a source of danger to others (Luke 14: 2–3).

Some Moments of Helpless Terror were passed by nine men in the shaft of a mine on December 20. They were being lowered in the cage to their work in the mine, and all were in good spirits, laughing and joking merrily. Suddenly the cage stopped in its downward progress. It was caught in the guiders and refused to drop any further. The engineer, not being aware that the carriage had stopped, continued to run the engine, and the long winding rope unwound itself at the feet of the men in the cage. A scene of terror now ensued. The men were two hundred feet from the surface, and three hundred from the bottom of the slope. If the carriage would only remain stationary where it had caught until they could attract the engineer's attention, all would be well, as he could wind the rope back. The men howled with all their might, but nobody heard the cries of distress. The big wire rope continued to unwind itself on the floor of the cage. Suddenly they felt it tremble slightly, and the next moment the cage was loosened, and went down the great shaft like a ball fired from a cannon. Men who were working on the second lift heard the noise as the cage passed down. It was a sharp buzzing, and all was over. Two men were killed instantly, and three others badly injured. Four men, who clung to the sides of the cage with all their might, escaped with a severe shaking. Such terror as those men endured while the cage hung, would be felt by every unconverted man if he realized his danger as they did. Though he stands on the brink of a more awful abyss, into which death may precipitate him in any moment, and rescue is offered him, he neglects it (Luke 17: 26, 27).

A Matrimonial Disappointment has Befallen some Californian ladies. Early in this month, says the San Francisco Chronicle, there was a flutter of excitement in the higher ranks of society, over the expected return to the city of a young man who had been absent for two years on a European tour. He was coming back to settle down on his ancestral estate and live there. Being young, handsome, and the heir of a noble property, the mammas of marriageable daughters looked eagerly forward to his arrival. There was, therefore, considerable disappointment when he came, two weeks ago, bringing a wife with him. The astonishment reached its height at the appearance of the lady in society. She was immediately recognized as the poor despised governess and companion of her husband's deceased sister. It appears that three years ago the young man was overwhelmed with grief by the almost simultaneous death of his father, mother and sister. In his loneliness and sorrow the gentle, delicate sympathy of the governess supported him, and he discovered in her a lady at once refined, intelligent and amiable. He grew to love her dearly, and resolved to make her his wife. Taking her to the East, he placed her for two years in a college where she could acquire the social polish she would need in her exalted position, while he went on his travels. On his return he married her. Though the society ladies are disposed to be critical, they admit that the bride is charming, and that she has excellences which they did not see in her when she was poor and unknown. So it will be in the day Christ appears in glory with His bride, the sanctified church. The poor and despised members of it will be transformed into His likeness (Eph. 5: 26–27).

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. Justin D. Fulton, D. D., has commenced a series of lectures in Portland, Me., and will probably visit other cities of that State during next month.

Mrs. Mark Elkins, a prominent Hebrew lady of Philadelphia, and her niece, Miss Lena Simon, have renounced, Judaism, and joined the Baptist Church.

The Sixth Annual Believers' Meeting for Bible Study and Christian Conference will be held at Boone, Ia., on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 30 to January 1.

A novel difficulty is exercising the Presbytery at Bloomington, Ill. A church has been erected, and is almost free of debt, but all the members are ladies, and the Presbytery does not know what to do about the elders.

A new home for aged and disabled Congregational ministers has been opened in South Framingham, Mass., by Robert L. Day of that place. The occupants are for the present charged $2.50 a week, when able to pay that amount.

The Rev. J. D. Brown, of Illinois, a soldier who lost an arm in the War of the Rebellion, was granted, about a year ago, a pension, and received about $7,000, which he at once devoted to the Lord, and is using it to build and maintain churches in the district where he resides.

The Edinburgh Auxiliary of the M'All Mission in France has raised during the past year over $4,885, being an increase of $640 over the income of the previous year. The total sent to Paris by this auxiliary since its formation in 1877 amounts to $42,750.

A Burial Reform Association was organized in Grace Chapel, New York, last week. Bishop Potter was elected President. Among the reforms advocated are: economy and simplicity, plain hearses, disuse of crape and funeral trappings, and disuse of elaborate floral decorations.

A contemporary states that, on the night of the election in Georgia, a young man named Hightower was met on the streets of Atlanta by a band of men, and required to say whether he had voted "wet" or "dry." He answered "dry," and they killed him there. No arrest was made.

Complaint of a pastor in Indianapolis, as reported in a local journal, was made by an official. The pastor worked during the week among drunkards, gamblers and vicious women, and they came to hear him on Sunday. The official, in response to congratulations, said "But think of the kind of people who come!"

The Brooklyn Lay Preachers' Association was organized to preach the Gospel of Christ (without reference to denomination) in places where a regular preacher cannot be sustained. The members are willing to go outside the city, providing railroad accommodations are such that they may be able to return to their homes early enough for business the next morning. Further information may be had by addressing the president, Rev. J. Sinclair, 83 Fourth Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Bible Work Institute will hold a three months' term for ladies in the Bible Workroom, Y. M. C. A. Building, 150 Madison Street, Chicago, Ill., beginning January 8. It will include Bible exposition, inquiry-room work, Sunday-school work, etc., etc. Among the instructors are Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D. D.; Rev. P. S. Henson, D. D.; and Mr. E. W. Bliss, the evangelist. Applications for admission may be sent to Miss E. Dryer, Bible Work room, 150 Madison Street, Chicago.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, women or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. One man has sold one hundred copies on a Saturday. For terms address Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD 63 Bible House, New York.

WISDOM'S REQUEST.

A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

"My son, give me thine heart." Prov. 23 : 26.

The Highest Wisdom—I. Love Prompts It—A Strange Change of Position—God Asking—Infinite Love Coming a-wooing—Sermons Like an Ice Palace—The Gain of a Son—II. Wisdom Prompts It—The Heart Safe in Christ's Charge—From Vice—From Temptation—When the Devil is too Late—Making a Present to God—What He Values—The Poor Betweenites—III. A Prompt Response Wise—The Fool's Calendar—A Heart in a Safe—In a Wardrobe—Divine Alchemy.

THESE are the words of Solomon speaking in the name of wisdom, which wisdom is but another name for the Lord Jesus Christ, who is made of God unto us wisdom. If you ask, "What is the highest wisdom upon the earth?" it is to believe in Jesus Christ whom God has sent—to become His follower and disciple, to trust Him and imitate Him. It is God, in the person of His dear Son, who says to each one of us, "My son, give me thine heart." Can we answer, "Lord, I have given thee my heart?" Then we are His sons. Let us cry, "Abba, Father," and bless the Lord for the high privilege of being His children. "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God."

I. Let us look at this precept, "My son, give me thine heart;" and notice, first, that Love Prompts It.

Only love seeks after love. If I desire the love of another, it can surely only be because I myself have love toward him. We care not to be loved by those whom we do not love. It were an embarrassment rather than an advantage to receive love from those to whom we would not return it. When God asks human love, it is because God is love. As the sparks mount toward the sun, the central fire, so ought our love to rise toward God, the central source of all pure and holy love. It is an instance of infinite condescension that God should say, "My son, give me thine heart." Notice the strange position in which it puts God and man. The usual position is for the creature to say to God, "Give me;" but here the Creator cries to feeble man, "Give me." The Great Benefactor Himself becomes the Petitioner—stands at the door of His own creatures, and asks, not for offerings, nor for words of praise, but for their hearts. Oh, it must be because of the great love of God that He condescends to put Himself into such a position; and if we were right-minded, our response would be, "Dost thou seek my heart? Here it is, my Lord."

Again, it can only be supreme love which leads wisdom to seek after the heart of such poor things as we are. The best saints are poor things; and as for some of us who are not the best, what poor, poor things we are! How foolish! How slow to learn! Does wisdom seek us for scholars? Then wisdom must be of a most condescending kind. We are so guilty, too. We shall rather disgrace than honor the courts of wisdom if she admits us to her school. Yet she says to each of us, "Give me thy heart. Come and learn of me." Only love can invite such scholars as we are. I am afraid we shall never do much to glorify God; we have but small parts to begin with, and our position is obscure. Yet, commonplace people though we are, God says to each one of us, "My son, give me thine heart." Only to such wretched hearts as ours. For what has God to gain? Brothers and sisters, if we did all give our hearts to Him, in what respect would He be the greater? If we gave Him all we have, would He be the richer? "The silver and the gold are mine," says He, "and the cattle on a thousand hills. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee." He is too great for us to make Him greater, too good for us to make Him better, too glorious for us to make Him more illustrious. When He comes a-wooing, and cries, "Give me thine heart," it must be for our benefit, and not for His own.

Infinite Love Would Come A-Wooing

Yet He does gain a son: that is a sweet thought. Everyone that becomes God's son, and a father esteems his children to be treasures; and I reckon that God sets a higher value upon His children than upon all the works of His hand besides. We see the Great Father's likeness in the story of the returning prodigal. The father thought more of his returning son than of all that he possessed besides. "It was meet," said he, "that we should make merry, and be glad: for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found." Oh, I tell you, you that do not know the Lord, that if you give your hearts to Him you will make Him glad! The Eternal Father will be glad to get back His lost son, to press to His bosom a heart, warm with affection to Him, which heart aforetime had been cold and stony towards Him. "My son, give me thine heart," says He, as if He longed for our love, and could not bear to have children that had forgotten Him. Do you not hear Him speak? "My son, give me thine heart!"

Gives God His Heart

You who are sons of God already may take my text as a call to give God your heart anew, for—I do not know how it is—men are wonderfully scarce now; and Men With Hearts Are Rare.

If preachers had larger hearts, they would move more people to hear them. A sermon preached without love falls flat and dead. We have heard sermons, admirable in composition, and excellent in doctrine, but like that palace which the Empress of Russia built upon the Neva of blocks of ice. Nothing more lustrous, nothing more sharply cut, nothing more charming; but oh, so cold, so very cold! Its very beauty a frost to the soul! "My son," says God to every preacher, "give me thine heart." O minister, if thou canst not speak with eloquent tongue, at least let thy heart run over like burning lava from thy lips! Let thy heart be like a Geyser, scalding all that come near thee, permitting none to remain indifferent. You that teach in the school, you that work for God anyhow, do it thoroughly well. "Give me thine heart, my son," says God. It is one of the first and last qualifications of a good workman for God, that he should put his heart into his work. Hard work will do almost everything; but in God's service it must not only be hard work, but hot work. The heart must be on fire. The heart must be set upon its design. See how a child cries! Though I am not fond of hearing it, yet I note that some children cry all over: when they want a thing, they cry from the tips of their toes to the last hair of their heads. That is the way to preach, and that is the way to pray, and that is the way to live: the whole man must be heartily engaged in holy work.

II. Now, I turn my text another way. Wisdom persuades us to obey this loving request. To take our hearts and give them up to God is the wisest thing that we can do.

Wisdom Prompts It;

for, first, many others crave our hearts, and our hearts will surely go one way or other. Let us see to it that they do not go where they will be ruined. I will not read you the next verse, but many a man has lost his heart and soul eternally, by the lusts of flesh. He has perished through "her that lieth in wait as for a prey, and increaseth the transgressors among men." Happy is that young man whose heart is never defiled with vice! There is no way of being kept from impurity except by giving up the heart to the holy Lord. In a city like this, the most pure-minded are surrounded with innumerable temptations; and many there are that slip with their feet before they are aware of it, being carried away because they have not time to think, before the temptation has cast them to the ground. "Therefore, my son," says Wisdom, "give me thine heart. Everybody will try to steal thy heart, therefore leave it in my charge. Then thou needest not fear the fascinations of the strange woman, for I have thy heart, and I will keep it safe unto the day of my appearing." It is most wise to give Jesus our heart, for seducers will seek it.

There is another destroyer of souls. I will not say much about it, but I will just read you what the context saith of it—"Who hath woe? Who had babbling? Who hath wounds without cause?" Read carefully the rest of the chapter, and then hear the voice of Wisdom say, "My son, if thou wouldst be kept from drunkenness and gluttony, from wantonness and chambering, and everything that the heart inclineth to, give me thy heart." It is well to guard your heart with all the apparatus that wisdom can provide. It is well totally to abstain from that which becomes a snare to you: but, I charge you, do not rely upon abstinence, but give your heart to Jesus; for nothing short of true godliness will preserve you from sin, so that you shall be presented faultless before His presence with exceeding great joy.

Wisdom urges to immediate decision, because it is well to have a heart at once occupied and taken up by Christ. It is an empty heart that the devil enters. You know how the boys always break the windows of empty houses; and wherever the heart is empty. If you can say to the devil when you are tempted, "You are too late; I have given my heart to Christ, I cannot listen to your overtures, I am affianced to the Saviour by bonds of love that never can be broken," what a blessed safeguard you have! I know of nothing that can so protect the young man in these perilous days as to be able to sing "O, God, my heart is fixed; my heart is fixed!"

The Devil Throws Stones

Give Jesus your hearts, beloved friends, for wisdom bids you do it at once, because it will please God. Have you a friend to whom you wish to make a present? I know what you do: you try to find out what that friend would value, for you say, "I should like to give him what would please him." Do you want to give God something that is sure to please Him? You need not build a church of matchless architecture—I do not know that God cares much about stones and wood. You need not wait till you shall have amassed money to endow a row of almshouses. It is well to bless the poor, but Jesus said that one who gave two mites, which made a farthing, gave more than all the rich men who cast in of their wealth into the treasury. What would God my Father like me to give? He answers, "My son, give Me thine heart." He will be pleased with that, for He Himself seeks the gift.

If there are any here to whom this day is an anniversary of birth, or of marriage, or of some other joyful occasion, let them and give Him their hearts. Then shall your hand and purse give what they will, and your tongue and brain shall give what they can; but first your heart — first your heart—your inmost self—your love—your affection. You must give Him your heart, or you give Him nothing.

Make A Present to God

And does He not deserve it? I am not going to use that argument, because, somehow, if you press a man to give a thing, at last it comes not to be a gift, but a tax.

Our Consecration to God must be unquestionable in its freeness. Religion is voluntary or else false. If I shall prove that your heart is God's due, why, then, you will not give, but rather pay as though it were a debt; so I will touch that string very gently, lest, in seeking to bring forth music, I snap the chord. I will put it thus: surely it were well to give a heart for a heart. There was One who came and took human nature on Him, and wore a human heart within His bosom, and that human heart was pressed full sore with sorrow till, it is written, that He wept. It was pressed still more with anguish till, it is written, "He sweat, as it were, great drops of blood falling to the ground." He was still further overwhelmed with grief, till at last He said. "Reproach hath broken My heart, and I am full of heaviness;" and then it is written, "One of the soldiers with a spear pierced His side, and forthwith came there out blood and water." A heart was given for you; will you not give your heart? I say no more.

Believe me, beloved friends, there is no getting wisdom except you give your heart to it. There is no understanding the science of Christ crucified, which is

The Most Excellent of all Sciences, without giving your heart to it. Some of you have been trying to be religious. You have been trying to be saved, but you have done it in an off-handed sort of style. "My son, give Me thine heart." Wisdom suggests to you that you should do it, for unless your whole heart is thrown into it you will never prosper in it. Certain men never get on in business; they do not like their trade, and so they never prosper. And certainly, in the matter of religion, no man can ever prosper if he does not love it, if his whole heart is not in it. Some people have just enough religion to make them miserable. If they had none, they would be able to enjoy the world; but they have too much religion to be able to enjoy the world, and yet not enough to enjoy the world to come. Oh. you you that hang, like Mahomet's coffin, between earth and heaven — you that are like bats, neither birds nor beasts—you that are like a flying-fish, that tries to live in the air and water too, and finds enemies in both elements—you that are neither this nor that nor the other; strangers in God's country, and yet not able to make yourselves at home with the devil—I do pity you! Oh, that I could give you a tug to get you to this side of the border-land! My Master bids me compel you to come in; but what can I do except repeat the message of the text? "My son, give Me thine heart."

Poor Betweenities,

III. And now I close with the third observation. Let us be wise enough at once to attend to this admonition of Wisdom. Let us now give God our heart. "My son, give Me thine heart." When? At once. There is no intimation that God would have us wait a little. I wish that those persons who only mean to wait a little would fix a time when they will leave off waiting. They are always going to be right to-morrow. Which day of the month is that? I have searched the calendar, and cannot find it. I have heard that there is such a thing as and that to-morrow is there; but then you are not fools, and do not keep such a calendar. To-morrow, to-morrow, to-morrow, to-morrow, to-morrow, to-morrow, to-morrow! it is a raven's croak of evil omen. To-day, to-day, to-day, to-day, to-day! that is the silver trumpet of salvation, and he that hears it shall live.

The Fool's Calendar,

How? If we attend to this precept, we shall notice that it calls upon us to act freely. "My son, give Me thine heart." Do not need to have it led in fetters. It might, as I have already said, prevent a thing from being a gift if you too pressingly proved that it was due. It is due, but God puts it, as it were, upon free-will for once, and leaves it to free agency. He says, "My son, give Me thine heart. All that thou hast from Me comes as a gift of free grace; now give Me back thy heart freely." Remember, wherever we speak about the power of grace, we do not mean a physical force, but only such force as may be applied to free agents, and to responsible beings. The Lord begs you not to want to be crushed and pounded into repentance, nor whipped and spurred to holy living. But "My son, give Me thine heart."

It seems a pity that a man should have to live a long life of sin to learn that

Sin Does Not Pay.

It is a sad case when he comes to God with all his bones broken, and enlists in the divine army after he has spent all his youth in the service of the devil, and has worn himself out. Christ will have him whenever he comes; but how much better it is, while yet you are in the days of your youth, to say, "Here, Lord, I give Thee my heart. Constrained by Thy sweet love, I yield to Thee in the dawn of my being!"

Do it thoroughly. "My son, give Me thine heart." You cannot give Christ a piece of a heart, for a heart that is halved is killed. A heart that has even a little bit taken off is a dead heart. The devil does not mind having half your heart. He is quite satisfied with that, because he is like the woman to whom the child did not belong: he does not mind if it be cut in halves. The true mother of the child said, "Oh, spare the child! Do not divide it;" and so Christ, who is the true Lover of hearts, will not have the heart divided. If it must go one way, and the wrong way, let it go that way: but if it will go the right way, he is ready to accept it, cleanse it, and perfect it, only it must go all together, not divided. "Give Me thine heart."

Did I hear somebody say, "I am willing to give God my heart?" Very well, then, let us look at it practically. Where is it now? You cannot give your heart up till you find out where it is. I knew

A Man Who Lost His Heart.

His wife had not got it, and his children had not got it, and he did not seem as if he had got it himself. "That is odd!" say you. Well, he used to starve himself. He scarcely had enough to eat. His clothes were threadbare. He starved all who were round him. He did not seem to have a heart. A poor woman owed him a little rent. Out she went into the street. He had no heart. A person had fallen back a little in the payment of money that he had lent him. The debtor's little children were crying for bread. The man did not care who cried for hunger, or what became of the children. He would have his money. He had lost his heart. I never could make out where it was till I went to his house one day, and I saw an iron safe: it stood behind the door of an inner room; and when he unlocked it with a heavy key, and the bolts were shot, and the inside was opened, there was a musty, fusty thing within it, as dry and dead as the kernel of a walnut seven years old. It was his heart. If you have locked up your heart in an iron safe, get it out. Get it out as quickly as ever you can.

I knew a young lady—I think I know several of that sort now—whose heart I could never see. I could not make out why she was so flighty, giddy, frothy, till I discovered that she had kept her heart in a wardrobe. A poor prison for an immortal soul; is it not? You had better fetch it out, before the moth eats it as wool. When our garments become the idols of our hearts, we are such foolish things that we can hardly be said to have hearts at all. Even such foolish hearts as these, it were well to get out of the wardrobe, and give to Christ.

Where is Your Heart?

I have known some leave it at the public-house, and some in places that I shall not mention, lest the cheek of modesty should crimson. But wherever your heart is, it is in the wrong place if it is not with Christ. Go, fetch it, sir. Bring it here, and give it into the hand of Him that bought it.

But in what state is it? "Ay, there's the rub!" For men's hearts begin to smell of the places wherein they keep them. Some men's hearts are cankered through keeping them among their gold; and some are rotten, through and through, through keeping them steeped in vice. Where is the drunkard's heart? In what state must it be? Foul and filthy. Still God says, "Give Me thine heart." What! such a thing as that? Yes; did I not tell you that when He asked for your heart it was all for love of you, and not for what He should get out of you: for what is such a heart as yours, my friend, that has been in such a place, and fallen into such a state? Yet, still give it to Him, for I will tell you

What He Will Do With It:

He will work wonders for your heart. You have heard of alchemists who took base metal, so they say, and transmuted it into gold: the Lord will do more than this. "Give Me thine heart." Poor, filthy, defiled, polluted, depraved heart!—give it to Him. It is stony now, corrupted now. He will take it, and in those sacred hands of Christ, that heart shall lie, till, in its place you shall see a heart of flesh, pure, clean, heavenly. "Oh," say you, "I never could make out what to do with my hard heart!" Give it now to Christ, and He will change it. Yield it up to the sweet power of His infinite grace, and He will renew a right spirit within you. God help you to give Jesus your heart, and to do it now! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE DIRT ON A FAMOUS PICTURE.*

THE late Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, speaking on one occasion at the funeral of a little child, said: "The background of the Sistine Madonna at Dresden (in some respects the most wonderful picture of maternal love which exists in the world) for a long time was merely dark; and an artist, in making some repairs, discovered a cherub's face in that dark background; and being led to suspect that the picture had been overlaid by time and neglect, commenced cleansing it; and as he went on, cherub after cherub appeared, until it was found that the Madonna was on a background made up wholly of little heavenly cherubs. Now, by nature, motherhood stands against a dark background; but that background being cleansed by the touch of God, and by the cleansing hand of faith, we see that the whole heaven is full of little cherub faces. And to-day it is not this little child alone that we look at, which we see only in the outward guise; we look upon a background of children innumerable, each one as sweet to its mother's heart as this one was sweet to its mother's heart, each one as dear to the clasping arms of its father as this child has been to the clasping arms of its father; and it is in good company, it is in a spring land. It is in a summer world. It is with God. You have given it back to Him who lent it to you.

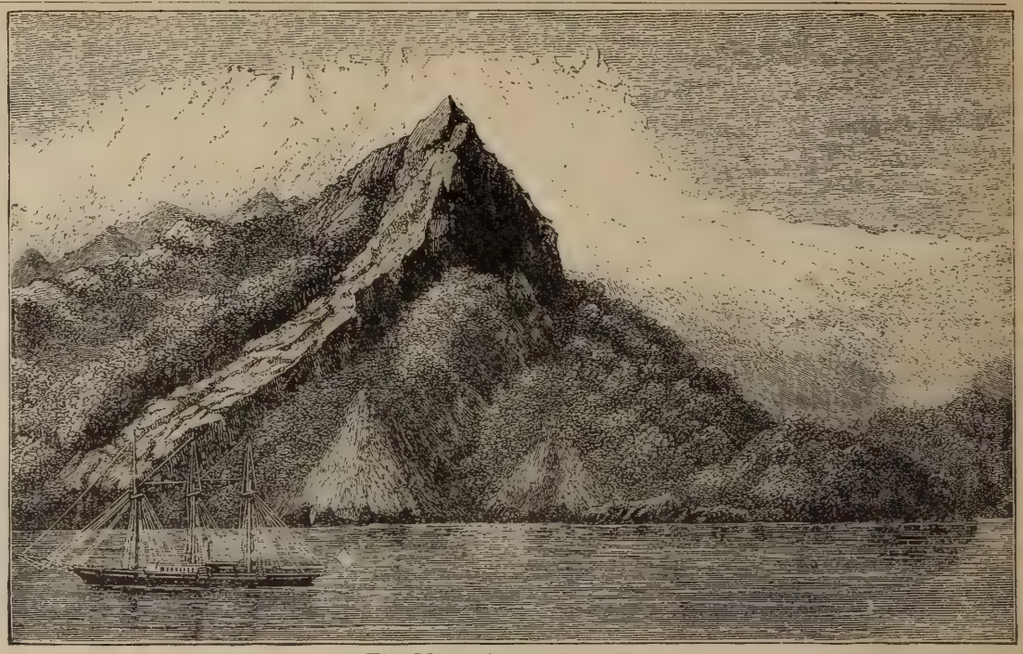
"Now the giving back is very hard, but you cannot give back to God all that you receive with your child. You cannot give back to God those springs of new and deeper affection which were awakened by the coming of the little one. You cannot give back to God the experiences which you have had in dwelling with your darling. You cannot give back to God the hours which when you look back upon them now, seem like one golden chain of linked happiness. You are better, you are riper, you are richer, even in this hour of bereavement than you were. God gave, and He has not taken away except in outward form. He holds, He keeps, He reserves, He watches, He loves. You shall have again that which you have given back to Him only outwardly."

An Unattractive Home.

"I heard the other day," says Mr. D. L. Moody, "of a child whose mother was very sick; and while she lay very low, one of the neighbors took the child away to stay with her, until the mother should be well again. But instead of getting better the mother died; and they thought they would not take the child home till the funeral was all over; and would never tell her about her mother being dead. So a while afterward they brought the little girl home. First she went into the sitting-room to find her mother; then she went into the parlor to find her mother there; and she went from one end of the house to the other, and could not find her. At last she said: 'Where is my mamma?' And when they told her her mamma was gone, the little thing wanted to go back to the neighbor's house again. Home had lost its attraction to her, since her mother was not there any longer. No, it is not the jasper walls and pearly gates that are going to make heaven attractive. It is the being with God. We shall be in the presence of the Redeemer; we shall be forever with the Lord."

*From "The Bow in the Cloud; or, Words of Comfort," a volume of extracts from the Bible and from two hundred famous authors and preachers, in prose and poetry, for the comfort of those in sickness and sorrow. Edited by J. Sanderson, D. D. A perfect treasure to put into the hands of a bereaved parent, or any Christian bowed down by suffering in any form. It cannot fail to impart comfort and encouragement. 452 pages; Price $1.75; Published by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York.

M. Wilson, Son-in-law of Ex-President Grevy.



The Mountains on Cape Horn.

A Gardener's Favorite Flower.

A gentleman's gardener had a darling child, in whom his affections seemed to be centred. The Lord laid His hand upon the babe; it sickened and died. The father was disconsolate, and murmured at the dealings of Providence.

The gardener had in one of his flower-beds a favorite rose. It was the fairest flower he had ever seen on the tree, and he daily marked its growing beauty, intending when it was full blown, to send it to his employer's mansion. One morning it was gone; some one had plucked it. Mortified at what he thought the improper conduct of one of the servants, he endeavored to find the culprit. He was, however, much surprised to find that it was his employer who, in walking through the garden, had been attracted by the beauty of the rose, and, plucking it, had carried it to adorn one of the beautiful rooms in the Hall. The gardener's anger was changed into pleasure. He felt reconciled when he heard that his employer had thought the flower worthy of such notice. "Ah, Richard!" said the gentleman, "you can gladly give up the rose, because I thought it worthy of a place in my house; and will you repine, because your heavenly father has thought wise to remove your child from a world of sin to be with Himself in heaven?"

M. DANIEL WILSON.

Son-in-law of Ex-President Grevy.

As his name implies, M. Wilson, whose portrait appears on this page, is of Scotch descent, but a Frenchman by birth. He is forty-seven years of age, having been born in 1840. He was already a rich man with considerable influence in his neighborhood in 1869, when Napoleon III. seemed to be securely seated on his throne. He was elected to the Chamber of Deputies under the Empire, and was known as a shrewd politician. In the troubles of 1870, M. Wilson entered the regiment of Gardes Mobiles, and was in some of the skirmishes, when he conducted himself with some bravery. His financial skill won for him considerable renown in the French Parliament, to which he was elected under the Republic, and he became assistant secretary of the Treasury in 1879. His marriage to the daughter of M. Grévy also gave him social distinction. When M. Grévy was elected to the Presidency of the Republic, Wilson was made his private secretary, and went to reside with him in the executive mansion.

Like many smart politicians, M. Wilson's fault seems to have been over-smartness. He saw many ways in which his position in the President's family could be turned to the advancement of his own fortunes; and there were ugly rumors about him for some time before the final exposure. It seemed impossible to get any social favor or distinction from the President without conciliating Wilson, who had the old man completely under his influence. The exposure came when General Cafarel was charged with selling decorations of the Legion of Honor. Madame Limousin, who turned state's evidence, handed into court the whole of her correspondence, among which were letters from many prominent men, proving their complicity in the scandal. There were two letters from Wilson, which Madame Limousin said were proof of his guilt. But when these letters were read in court they were quite innocent. Madame Limousin said those were not the letters she had received from Wilson and had handed in. Wilson said they were, but when they were examined by the judge it was found that the paper on which they were written had a water-mark showing the date on which the paper was made, and that date was two years later than the date of the letters. This was clear proof that the letters had been written at a later date than they bore, and had been dated back. When it was disclosed that the whole correspondence had been at the executive mansion, where Wilson had access to it, it was perceived that he had taken the two letters which he had written to Madame Limousin out of the package, and had written two others of an innocent character and put in their place to make the number correct. The discovery, and the effort of M. Grévy to shield the culprit, involved the fall of the President. Solomon said that "a foolish son is the calamity of his father" (Prov. 19 : 13), and it now appears that the remark applies also to a son-in-law.

CAPE HORN.

(See Illustration)

THIS point, the dread of mariners, is the southernmost point of the South American continent. It is one of several islands, bleak and rocky, of which Desolation Island and King Charles Southland are the largest. The bare, black crags which rise from the island of Cape Horn, form the extreme southern end of the Cordilleras, one of the groups of the Andes, which stretch from Cape Horn to the Isthmus of Panama. They are thrown into strong relief by the gigantic mountain, Sarmiento, which rears its head in the back-ground, capped with eternal snow, to a height of 6,910 feet. On its sides are many glaciers, the gorgeous blue tints of which enhance the grandeur of its appearance.

The whole archipelago, including Cape Horn, is desolate, no attempt having been made to cultivate even such soil as is found among the rocks. On the northern faces of the hills brushwood grows, and in some cases there are patches of primeval growths of wild brier, laurel and fuschias. It is remarkable, however, that in the valleys the pasture-land is most luxurious; and travellers in that region assert that in spite of its climate and general barrenness, cattle-breeding might be successfully carried on there. The natives are half-naked savages, who spend much of their time in their canoes, their diet being chiefly fish and the wild geese, which they bring down with their arrows.

A VISIT FROM A BURGLAR.

(See Illustration on page 829.)

THAT the good that men do lives after them, was never more forcibly illustrated than in the life of the philanthropic Earl of Shaftesbury, who died October 1, 1885. During the two years which have elapsed since his death, incidents have been continually coming to light which show how wide was the sphere of his usefulness. His legislative and public work was well known, and furnished the ground on which his fellow-citizens formed their high estimate of his character. But the exalted opinion of his great and good achievements has been enhanced by the knowledge now gained of much which during his lifetime was not known. In the efforts being made by philanthropists and city missionaries to reclaim the outcasts of society, traces of his influence are found in the most unexpected quarters. Among them is that depicted in the illustration.

One day a rough fellow, with all the marks of a degraded criminal upon him, presented himself at the Earl's London residence. The philanthropic nobleman was accessible to any one, but this man was so obviously a miscreant that he was refused admittance by the servant. But the man was persistent, and eventually succeeded in inducing the footman to appeal to Lord Shaftesbury. The Earl was willing to receive him, and accordingly he was ushered into the private room. It appeared that he had only that day been released from prison, where he had been serving a sentence for burglary. During his confinement (and perhaps before) he heard something of what Lord Shaftesbury was trying to do for the poor and degraded classes of his country The burglar sympathized with the effort, as even the most degraded will, when an attempt is being made in the right spirit to benefit their class. But he seems to have had a philosophical turn of mind and to have thoroughly considered the matter. He arrived at the conclusion that some of the philanthropist's labors were useless, and that the end in view would be better attained by concentrating energy on another and more hopeful field. Reflecting that on this day he could walk the street in broad daylight without fear, whereas in a day or two some new exploit in his business might render his appearance in respectable quarters dangerous to him, he determined to lose no time in imparting his special and peculiar knowledge to the kind Earl.

Burglar's Visit to a Philanthropist.

He opened the interview by speaking of the schools the Earl was establishing in various parts of London for ragged children, and comparing the work done there with the work for reclaiming criminals. The latter he deemed useless—time and money thrown away, while the ragged school effort should be pushed for all it was worth. That was his object in seeing the Earl, and he was deeply in earnest about it. Here was a good man and a kind, "one of the nobs," trying to help us and going the wrong way about it. Rising from his chair and leaning over the desk at which the Earl sat, he said in gruff tones, but with all emphasis: "Keep hold of the little uns, sir—my Lord, I mean. You can't help us; we're too far gone, but save the little uns. If I'd had the luck to be took onto one o' them ragged schools when I were a little chap, I'd ha' done right and never ha' seen the inside of a jug [prison]. But it's too late now for me, and lots more like me. You keep hold o' the little uns, and you'll do what you want." And having delivered his soul the burglar took his leave.

The significance of such a visit is of great importance. It was a testimony to the value of the philanthropist's work, and proved that its motive and spirit were understood and appreciated by the people for whose good it was designed. No amount of preaching and teaching could have manifested the spirit of Christ like the work itself. A proof of that assertion was given, also in connection with the same peer, during the recent disturbances in London. One of the socialist demagogues, in the course of an inflammatory speech, in which he denounced the existing condition of society, and especially selfish, hard hearted plutocrats, said: "There's one exception I'd like to make—Shaftesbury, he was good grit, and no mistake. If I don't hold with all he said, I hold with what he did. He did a power of good for workingmen."

The essential truth of Christianity—the one cardinal principle which Christ insisted on throughout His ministry, the essence of the revelation which He came from heaven to make, and which He lived and died to prove—is the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Theologians have overlaid the principle with dogma, have buried it under theories and doctrines and rubbish of all kinds, and the world has misunderstood Christianity in consequence. When Christianity, as Christ taught and lived it, is taught and practiced, when every man who calls himself a Christian looks to God as his father with all that that relationship implies, and looks on every other man as his brother, Christianity will be doing the work God intended it to do, and not until then.

THE FAMILY OF TRIPE COURT.

By Brenda.

(Continued from page 814.)

BRIDGET LEAVES HOME.

THE fire had quite gone out and the candle was flaring low in its socket by the time Mrs. Job—having washed the few things that the mother and child were required to take in with them to the Infirmary, and closed up the bundle and made all ready for the start in the morning—put her shawl over her head to go home; she did so with a heavy heart. She was leaving everything so miserable: Bridget going to pass the night on the floor, with her pain and her sorrowful thoughts; the baby fretting, and the little sisters too sleepy and wearied out to nurse it properly; and the miserable man—the cause of it all—with his teeth chattering with cold, and the drunkard's racking headache. She kissed Bridget the last thing, telling her she and Mrs. Treeby would be in early to-morrow to carry her downstairs and "see her off comfortable;" and then she said, "Good-night, Tom!"

"Good-night, Mrs, Job," said Tom, thankful to her for speaking to him; and then—he felt unworthy that he should be noticed—in a helpless way, with the tears in his eyes as she shook hands with him, "Aren't you sorry for us? I know it was me, but I didn't go for to do it!"

"Yes, Tom, I am—I am sorry for everybody," answered Mrs. Job.

If it had been Mrs. Treeby, she would have said, "Sorry for you? not a bit. You hadn't no business to get drunk, and then it wouldn't have happened; it just serves you right to be miserable!" But Mrs. Job felt, what I think we have to feel so often in this life, looking on at the sins, and wrongs, and hopeless misunderstandings and quarrels of those about us, sorrow for everybody all round; for sinners as well as the sinned against.

Mrs. Job's reply did not make a worse man of Tom this evening. "Kind words," somebody has written, "are the music of the world. . . It seems as if they could almost do what in reality God alone can do, soften the hard and angry hearts of men!" Mrs. Job's duty was to go home, otherwise she would not have left the Mites; she would have stayed by them to help them through the night

"I can go home and pray for 'em," said Mrs. Job to herself, as she wiped her eyes with her shawl.

Bridget's pain was not a whit less the next morning than it had been overnight; on the contrary, her sufferings were greater, for inflammation had set in, and her neighbors found her with her temperature high, and her cheeks hot and flushed, and not having had a wink of sleep the night through. Mrs. Job and Mrs. Treeby, in talking of it afterwards, said perhaps this was a good thing, for it had "kept her up to going."

The women came in, in the grey of the morning, almost before it was light, bringing with them all they could think of and could afford, to start Bridget off, as they termed it, "comfortable and respectable." They provided her with hot cocoa and a piece of fried bacon for breakfast. Mrs. Treeby brought her best shawl for Bridget to wear going, and a bag of peppermints "to keep her inside cheerful and warm on the way." Mrs Job lent her a tidy bonnet, and a woollen wrap for the baby, and many another thing, which kept them running backwards and forwards to their homes so continually that the other people in Tripe Court soon perceived that "there was something up at the Mites'." They were sure it was nothing pleasant, the women looked so hot and flurried each time they appeared, with their shawls up to their mouths to keep the icy air out. It couldn't be a wedding, or a christening, or anything of that sort, or yet a funeral, or they should have heard; "more likely that one of them was bad from something there that Tom did, when he was so drunk yesterday!"—which brought them to the actual truth.

Up to the very moment of Bridget's departure there was nothing but hurry, and bustle, and commotion in the Mites' room—yes, just one other thing, the sound of Mrs. Treeby's tongue.

Mary Job attended principally to Bridget, Mrs. Treeby to the baby; she thought no one understood babies as she did, or could dress and wash them as handily as she could. But in the intervals of "kitsy-kitsying" to the fretful baby, and running to and fro to her home to get things, Mrs. Treeby found opportunity to give Tom Mite a "good talking to." It was not a season to be lost, for she saw that he was thoroughly "down," and would allow her to say what she liked to him, and though she didn't hold with hitting a man that was down generally, she did so in this case.

And she didn't spare him; she gave it him "hot," as she told her husband afterwards, and if, after her "talking to," Tom Mite did not feel morally black and blue all over, it was not, I can tell you, the fault of Mrs. Treeby's tongue. It hit out straight, and most of its blows went home. All the time Tom said nothing; he hung his head and replied never a word; he did not feel even angry with Mrs. Treeby this morning, he felt crushed at the thought of his wife's leaving him, and of the injury he had done her, for though he had never loved her enough to give up the drink, he yet did love his wife, and he felt that every hit Mrs. Treeby gave him he deserved, and more.

The mode of Bridget's departure had been arranged by Mrs. Job and Mrs. Treeby the day before, in this wise—that they should carry her between them downstairs, and to the end of the court, where there was to be a cab waiting, which cab was to convey the party, consisting of Bridget, the baby, and one of the women—it was not quite decided which of them would go—to a certain point where they could pick up the horse car, and ride in that to the end of the route, and there take another car, which they were told would put them down at the corner within a few yards of the Infirmary gates.

It had been a matter of considerable thought arranging this journey, how to ride all the way, and to do it as cheaply as possible. The Infirmary lay a long distance away, and many miles had to be got over. A cab the whole distance would have been the best for Bridget, but who was to pay for it? No, there was no other means—"cab a little way, and then the cars." The changes would be hard for Bridget, very hard in her state—ah, how hard always are the journeys of the very poor!—in winter bearing the brunt of the biting cold and piercing blast, in summer the scorching heat and feverish thirst, and the blinding dust of the road—verily they know what pilgrimage means.

But in arranging for these changes, the women arranged for something else too, on which they knew they could certainly count—the kindness of people on the road. They were sure of the good-natured car conductor to give Bridget a hoist up into "the car," or to hold the bundle and the baby while they helped her; they were sure of the nice old person seated just inside, who would move up to let Bridget drop into the first seat by the door, so that she should be handy to get out again; they were sure of the friendly arm of somebody meeting them at the corner where their last car stopped, to help Bridget over the few yards she would have to walk at the end of this harassing journey.

Yes, they reckoned on these things, as certainly as they did upon the sun to light them. For, thank God, there are rays of man's diviner nature still lingering on this earth of ours, to be met with in its lowly places perhaps more often than in its high ones. These rays are seen in those disinterested little attentions, the kind words, the quick perception for what is weak and suffering, the readiness to help, and the willingness to sacrifice little personal comforts and preferences, for the greater ease and assistance of others, which so often gladden the ride in the dirty old horse-car, which lighten the gloom in the railway, which take away the sense of loneliness in the street amid the hurry and jostle of crowds, and in a hundred other places. Without these rays, these little lamps shining at different stages on the dark highways of life, how much darker would it be for the poor—the pedestrians of the long and difficult journey!

It will be seen that the Job and Treeby programme for Bridget's removal to the Infirmary did not include her husband in any way; the women had to make their plans without him, as if he did not exist. For how could he be counted upon to do anything? Experience had taught them that, just at the critical moment when he would be wanted, his throat would be seized with dryness, and he would give them the slip—get out by the chimney, if other exits were blocked; drunkards get the cunning of mad people—and slink round the corner to the saloon and get "a drop," and not be seen for the rest of the day. Tom could not complain; he knew very well how he had failed his family and acquaintances at times of need, over and over again in the manner I have described. Yet he wished he had been given something to do about Bridget this morning.

As the time drew near for her departure, he heard the women asking each other "however they should get her downstairs to the cab." And certainly it was a matter of anxiety how to carry Bridget. She was a bonny-sized woman, and no light weight at any time, but her helplessness would make her seem ten times heavier than usual; indeed, when the women found her so much worse this morning, they were seized with dismay at the thought of the changes on the journey, they had serious misgivings as to Bridget's ability to make them; yet a cab all that distance, who was to pay for it? The moment arrived at last for the attempt to be made.

Bridget, hot and flushed with pain, and faint with the effort of being moved from the floor, wearing Mrs. Treeby's shawl and Mrs. Job's bonnet, sat on a chair with her bare hands crossed in front of her, all ready for the start. She seemed too full of suffering to be taking much account of anything that was passing around her this morning, or she might have been seriously apprehensive of what was about to happen. She was to sit still on that chair and be carried down the stairs on it, by the two weakly women, her neighbors. With desperate intent in their faces, like people who knew their work was before them, Mrs. Job and Mrs. Treeby, one on each side, stooped and grasped the chair firmly with both hands.

"Now," said Mary Job, holding on to her side of the chair like grim death, "have you got a firm hold, Mrs. Treeby? Are you ready?"

"No, just a moment. I haven't got a good grip of the back," said Mrs. Treeby, tightening her grasp. "That's better."

"Well, are you ready?" again asked Mrs. Job.

"Yes, now," cried the other, as if she were giving the signal for her own execution. "Goodness, gracious—my, what a weight—oh!" and the chair, lifted a few inches from the boards, came down again with a bump. The two women, taking their hands off, straightened themselves and stood up and looked at each other over the top of Bridget's bonnet.

"D'ye think we'll do it?" asked Mrs. Job anxiously.

"No, I don't think we shall," replied the other. "We shall never get her down them stairs. I wonder if Dick Riley would give us a hand if he's not gone?"

The proposition of another man being called in, roused whatever of manly feeling and self-respect there was yet remaining in Tom, and he asked with alacrity, but in a very humble tone, like a person craving a great favor:

"Mayn't I, Mrs. Treeby? I'm sure I could get her down quite easy."

"You!" exclaimed Mrs. Treeby, turning round upon him with scornful astonishment, at his daring to propose such a thing. "You, that was drinking all day yesterday, and what gave 'er the blow? A pretty sort o' carryin' yours would be!"

"It wants a steady hand," put in Mrs. Job.

"I'm quite sober to-day," pleaded Tom, and his contrite voice and air made the women think again. After all, he was a tall man and had a strong arm of his own, and had been a powerful dock-laborer in his time—yes, and might be so again if he left off the drink.

The morning was getting on. Dick Riley might have started to his work at the wharf. What if they tried Tom? They looked at each other and nodded, and Mrs. Treeby said in a pacified tone:

"Well, come along, then, and see what you can make of the job."

Tom set to, and, though weakened by continual drinking and insufficient food, he accomplished the task of carrying his wife down the stairs to the door, followed by the women carrying the bundle and the baby, and the two little miserable girls, Poll and Sue, who were determined to see the last of mother. Arrived at the door safely, Mrs. Treeby told Tom he might as well carry her as far as the hack which a neighbor—there were a good many neighbors looking out at doors and windows—volunteered to run for and have ready at the end of the court. The question next arose, which of them—Mrs. Treeby and Mrs. Job—should go with Bridget. Mrs. Treeby said she couldn't; her youngest child, little Billy, had been taken with croup in the night, and she must run back to him as soon as she could. Mrs. Job replied, "Well, then it must be her;" but it was evident from her tone that she too had calls at home which made it difficult for her to leave.

"Why don't you both stop at home and let me go with her?" suggested Tom in the same imploring sort of way as before.

He was put down immediately by Mrs. Treeby.

"It's not to be thought of," she exclaimed. "You'd never pass the corners, Tom. You know you wouldn't."

"I'd take my oath I would," protested Tom; but, alas! he had often taken his oath to keep steady, and had not kept it.

"Ah, but we know you better," said Mrs. Treeby. "Besides you'd never get the changes of cars into that fuddled head of yours; you'd be a pushin' of 'er into a red car when she ought to be gettin' into a green, or be makin' a step for her of the baby, and at the end of it all mistakin' a swing door for the infirmary. How can a man keep his brain clear and hold a baby, putting all that drink in it you did yesterday?"

"I don't believe myself she'll be able to make the changes, Mrs. Treeby. I don't indeed," said Mrs. Job, looking troubled as she began fanning vigorously with the end of her apron Bridget's suddenly ashened face. "Look, she's just on the faint now."

At this moment the neighbor, who had gone to fetch the hack, ran up with the announcement, "She had got Jemmy Wiggles!" which brightened all their faces except Bridget's.

Now, Jemmy Wiggles, though he had not a pretty name, was a very worthy hack-driver, held in great respect by the inhabitants of Tripe Court, who employed him always when there was a "burying," to carry them out to the distant cemetery. Jemmy Wiggles didn't mind how many grandfathers and grandmothers and aunts and cousins and kinsfolk they crammed inside his vehicle on such gloomy occasions, and was accommodating also about the outside. He would let an uncle or aunt sit there on the top, rather than he or she should not follow, and made nothing of having two or three children beside him on the box as well. Above all this, there was the grand fact that Jemmy Wiggles never overcharged them; he always did it "reasonable," and would wait a little for his money, which was valuable at a time when the crape and the undertaker were ravaging their slender resources. The news that it was this worthy man's cab now stopping the way at the end of Tripe Court, coupled with Bridget's increasing weakness, decided Mrs. Job on changing the plan of Bridget's journey altogether.

"If it's Jemmy Wiggles," she said, "Tom shall go with her. I'll stop at home and do a bit of mangling that shall pay for the extra expense, and Bridget shall ride all the way."

This was approved of by Mrs. Treeby. Jemmy Wiggles was bargained with and paid beforehand, and given express injunctions, with many a wink and nod towards Tom, "not to stop at no corners." Then Bridget was lifted in, quite a crowd of neighbors surrounding the hack to assist and see her off, and Tom followed, carrying the baby and the bundle. A score of rough but kindly hands were thrust in at the window to give her a hand-shaking the last thing, and hearty voices bade her "God-speed."

(To be continued.)

INDEX.—1887.

Portraits and Biographical Sketches.

, Manuel, 209
., Prince, 365
ar, Mr. A. J., 220
mont, The Messrs, 17
er, Rev. and Mrs. Henry Ward, 161
arck, Prince, 81
man, Rev. W. E., 529
t, Mr. Richard T 577
ey, Lord and Lady, 721
s, The Socialist, 748
ra, Bishop Juan B 449
, Dr. William, 257
le. Hon. John G., 1 t, President Sadi, 785
en, Dr., President, 476
ers, Rev. James, 545
, Hon. Jonas G., 108
rd, Rev. Dr., 705
h, Mr. R. Stewart, 417
y, Hon. Thomas M., 300
s, Hernando, 769
, Mrs. Dinah Mulock, 715
as, Rev. Dr. James, 316
, Senator Cushman K., 129
s, Senator Henry L., 129 to, President of Costa Rica, 444
President of Mexico, 689
n, M. P., Mr. J., 69
more, Hon. Hugh A., 124
Capt. J. B., 604
Pasha, 177
ell, Senator Charles B, 129
nand, Prince, 540
, M. Jules, 817
ilstein, Miss Lydia, 753
Mrs., 753
net, M., 817
, Mr. Eric, 220
inet, M. de, 817
on, D.D., Rev. Justin D., 369 et, Premier of France, 60 schmidt, Mme. Jenny L., 764
y, Ex-President, 817
ple, Rev. John B., 353
Mr. Thomas, 737
nan, Dr. Horacio, 561
ington. Bishop, 49
is, M. P., Mr. M., 65
ey, Senator Joseph R., 129
ld, Mr. Charles, 684 ck, Senator Frank, 129
ner, Consul J. R., 284
hton, Rev. J., 49
g, Capt. P. J., 337
, Mrs. Griffith, 33
er, Dr. William, 177
olani of Hawaii, Queen, 460
els, Dr. William, 705
Bishop Alfred, 268
n, Senator John A., 12
, Col. Chaille. 620
Caren, Dr. Alexander, 705
gcal, Senor Ignacio, 609
arthy, M. P. Justin, 108
clynn, D.D., Rev. Edward, 76
nerson, Rev. D. P., 705
ison, Hon. William R., 300 le, Bishop of Mid-China, 225 hall, Dr. L. W., 641 phy, Rev. George M., 513 or, Mr. and Mrs. Henry, 481 son, Rev. Niels, 732
ien, M. P., Mr. William, 65
ck, D. D., Rev. John M., 332 lock, Senator Algernon S., 204
ner, Rev. Ray, 220
er, D.D., Rev. Joseph, 508
y, Capt. H. (Britannic) 337
shon, L. L. D., Rev. W. M., 801. rrier, Mr. R., 273
r, Senator Matthew S., 129
y, Bishop Henry C., 209
ero, Senor Matias. 609
vier, Premier Maurice, 401
uels, Capt. Samuel, 241
naebeles, M., 348
field, Dr. R. Harold, 497
conmaker, Hon. A., 300
hy, M. P.. Mr. D., 65 n, The Prince of, 524
pson, Mr. R., 273
s. Dr., 433
ley, Expedition, The, 321
ley, Mr. Henry M., 113
art, Mrs. A. T., 28
art, Senator W. M., 204
kbridge, Senator Francis, 129 or, Rev. J. Hudson, 225
ord, Mr. E. P., 625
oles, Mr. and Mrs., 657
d, Mr. and Mrs. Courthope, 157
toi, Count Lyof N., 700 trail, Dr. Frederick, 705 pie, Senator David, 204
oria, Queen, 335 and 465
oria, and Descendants, Queen, 397 son, Son-in-law, 828
dthorst, Herr Ludwig, 236
mans, Prof. Edward L., 108
ehr Pasha, 572

Pictures and Descriptive Articles.

ca, Island of Loanda in, 540; Africa, Map of, 189; frica, Natives of Equatorial, 177; Africa, Rubaga n, 285; Bechuanaland, Service in, 476; Berachah ission, The, 481; Bolivia, Scene in, 732; Borneo, iver Scene in, 508; Bulgaria, Ceremony in, 412; entral America, Scene in, 736; Chili, Country cene in, 652; Chili, Monument in, 813; Chinese cenes, 33; Chinese Temple. 237; Chinese Wheel-arrow Travelling, 524; Church n Ohio, A Ruin-l, 317; Collision of Celtic and Britannic, 337; ooper Union, New York, 634; Desert, Slaves rossing the, 92; Docks at Tilbury, The, 12; Earth-nake in the Riviera, 193; Equador, Scene in, 716; iji, Medical Students in, 348; Fire at a Buffalo otel, 205; Forest, A Central American, 561; For-st, A South American, 417; Gettysburg, Cele-ration at, 577; Glasgow, The Trongate in, 273; uy's Hospital, in London, 737; Hawaii, Scenes n, 460; Honduras, Bay Islands of, 604; Honduras, omayagua in, 653; Hop-pickers at Dinner, 621; lorn, Cape, 828; House of Representatives, 1 Inca of Peru, An, 812; India, Jubilee Scenes in, 257; Jubilee Fete, Children's, 465; Jubilee Processions in London, 428; Life boat, Launching A, 44; Magellan, The Straits of, 765; Mason Science College, The, 60; Mentone. 156; Mexican Indian Girl, A 556; Mexican Ladies at Church, 444; Mexico, Campeche in, 636; Mexico, The City of, 269; Mexico, The Cathedral of, 769; Mexico, Chapultepec in, 689; Mexico, City of Vera Cruz, 556; Mexico, Guadalajara in, 769; Mexico, Inquisition in, 609; Mexico, Mountain Road in, 588; Mexico, The Plaza in, 209; Monte Carlo, The Casino at, 173; Morocco, Mission to, 673; New Guinea, Scenes in, 545; Nice, The City of, 140; Opera Comique, Burning of, 401; Paris, Louvre in, 785; Paris, Vendome Column in, 785; Peoples Palace in London, 17; Persia, Farming in, 364; Persia, Students in, 364; Peru, Mountains of, 781; Peru, Palm Trees in, 780; Peruvian Half-breed Girl, A, 636; Ponca Indians, Group of, 657; Prescott, Kan., Cyclone at, 305; Railroad Accident at Bussy Bridge, 188; Railroad Accident, The Elevated, 172; Railroad Accident at White River, 97; Rangoon, Traders at, 492; Riviera, Earthquake in the, 145; Siberia, Exiles on the Way to, 700; Soudan, Slaves in the, 92; Sunbeam, Voyages of the, 721; Toledo, Cathedral and Gateway, 449; Trafalgar Square, Rioting in, 748; Truro Cathedral, Dedication, 796; Victoria, Marriage of Queen, 396; Victoria, Wreck of the, 289; Walk, A Thousand Mile, 28

Stories With Illustrations.

Advice, Lawyer Slocombe's, 236; Atheist on his knees, An, 412; Benefaction, Miss Bartlett's, 812; Blind Charley's Momentous Visit, 636; Clergyman's two Hearers, A, 76; Colors, Tom Colley's New. 460; Communication, A Startling, 700; Confidence in her Father, Marie's, 252; Consecrated Life A, 700; Cradle, An Empty, 60; Dustheaps, Jenny of the, 45; Eleventh Hour, The, 589; Escape from Savages, Davie's, 476; Eve's Story, 316; Foreman's Ordeal, The, 556; Friends, Alice Howard's, 428; Gift, Winnie's, 92; Gipsy Lad, The Heroic, 492; Grandmamma's Verse, 540; Guardian, A Volunteer, 668; Haunted Death-bed, A, 620; Hearers, Three, 764; Home, Hazelton's Return, 572; Hospital Patient, The Suspected, 76. Irish Cottager's Burden, The, 380; Lesson, The Blacksmith's, 365; Lesson, Mrs. Brookes', 333; "Little Un," Enoch Whiteley's, 604; Lost Child, The, 268; Mentor's Remorse, The, 524; Miner' A Heroic Christian, 444; Money Order, The Carter's 12; Nephew, Dr. Phillips's, 748; News, Tom's Good, 733; Old Friend's Explanation, An, 716: Overcome by Prayer, Minnie's Heart, 220; Paid, How Mr. Crawford was, 141; Patient, The Implacable, 28; Principles, Mr. Balfour's, 684; Promise, Larry's, 300; Return, Alfred Armadale's, 652; Sailor's Death, A Depraved, 124; Self-Sacrifice, Edith May's, 108; Summons, A Clergyman's Welcome. 277; Vacation, Irene Morley's, 797; Waif from the Wreck, A Little, 509; Welsh Girl's Bible, 349.

Sermons.

SPURGEON, PASTOR C. H.:—
And we are, 1 John 3 : 1, 10
Blessing of the Lads, The, Gen. 48 : 15, 26,
Blind Beggar and his Cure, John 9 : 5–7, 570
Bread, The Best, John 6 : 48, 74
Breaker and the Flock, The, Micah. 2 : 12–13, 234
Christ of Patmos, The, Rev. 1 : 16, 554
Christ's Work no Failure, Isa. 42 : 4, 122
Conditions, The Three, John 16 : 33–810
Covenanter, The, Psalm 25 : 10, 538
Death of Moses, The, Deut. 34 : 5, 410
Earthquake, not Heartquake, Psalm 46 : 1–3, 186
Eternal Life Within Grasp, 1 Tim. 6: 19, 138
Folly of Unbelief, Luke 24 : 25, 602
Friend of God, The James 2 : 23, 346
Garden, a Sister and a Wife, A, Cant. 4 : 12, 282
God's Nearness, Acts 17 : 27, 506
God the Wonderworker, Psalm 136 : 4, 618
Hedge of Thorns and Plain Way, Prov. 15 : 19, 154
He Cometh With Clouds, Rev. 1 : 7, 778
How Hearts are Softened, Zech. 12 : 10–11, 650
Idolatry, Modern, Isa. 2 : 22, 666
Jesus Declining the Legions, Matt. 26 : 53–54, 250
King's Jubilee The, Psalm 149 : 12, 442
Last Messenger, Pleading of, Mark 12: 6–9, 202
Love at its Utmost, John 15 : 9, 634
Loving Persuasion, Acts 28 : 23, 474
Master-key, The, Gen. 32 : 12, 42
Message to the Worst Man, A, Luke 18 : 13, 170
Might Have Been or May Be, John 11 : 37, 106
Need of the Age, The, Micah. 2 : 7, 218
On the Cross after Death, John 19 : 31–37, 266
Plain Gospel for Plain People, Deut. 30: 11–14, 426
Pleading Prayer, Psalm, 119 : 46, 458
Risen Lord with the Eleven, Luke 24 : 36–44, 298
Sermon for Time Present, Zeph. 3 : 16–18, 746
Search for Faith, The, Luke 18 : 8, 362
Servants and the Pounds, Luke 19 : 12–13, 330
Shorn, but not beyond Hope, Judges 16 : 22, 58
Sitting by, Luke 5 : 17, 762
S. S., or the Sinner Saved, Rom. 9 : 30–35, 586
Suffering, Saviour's Sympathy, Heb. 2 : 18, 522
Vineyard, The Unkept, Cant. 1 : 6, 90
Vultures, Driving Away, Gen. 15 : 11, 794
Walking in Darkness, Isa. 1 : 10, 682
Walking in the Light, 1 John 1 : 6–7, 698
Watchword for To-day, The, Phill. 3 : 20, 314
Way and the Expected End, The, Jer, 29 : 11, 394
Where are the Nine? Luke 17 : 15–19, 26
Why is faith so feeble? Mark 4 : 40, 378
Wisdom's Request, Prov. 23 : 826
Work and the Worker, The, Psalm 37 : 39, 730
Worth Seeing, Sights, 1 Thess 2 : 13–14, 714

TALMAGE, D. D., REV. T. DE WITT :—
Awards, Distribution of, Isa. 53 : 12, 20
Barn and Its Surroundings, The, Luke, 2 : 15, 820
Bigots, Concerning the, Judges 12 : 6 516
Books and Pictures, Acts 19 : 19, 276
Broken Pieces of the Ship, Acts 27 : 44, 36
Cheer for the Disheartened, Psalms, 142 : 4, 180
Cities, The Salvation of, II Kings 2 : 19–22, 388
Company, How to Treat, Rom. 12 : 13, 580
Concord and Discord, Job 38 : 6, 7, 708
Counter. Behind the, Acts 16 : 14, 260
Defences of Young Men, II Kings 6 : 17, 692
Dementia Dramatized, 1 Sam. 21 : 13, 116
Dungeon to Palace from, II Tim. 4 : 6, 436
Employments of Heaven, Ezek. 1 : 1, 484
Forbidden Honey, 1 Sam. 14 : 43, 660
Forgiveness before Sunset, Ephes. 4 : 25, 676
Four Full Regiments, 1 Chron. 23 : 5, 148
Gospel Abroad, Gen. 7 : 1, 196
Gospel of Health, The, Prov. 7 : 23, 740
Heart Disease, II Kings 10 : 15, 788
Heartsease, A Sprig of, Matt. 14 : 12 292
Heavens Opened, The, Acts 7 : 56–60, 372
Humiliated Prince, The, II Cor. 8 : 9, 628
Hunting for Souls, Gen. 10 : 9, 404
Is Christianity a Delusion? Ezek. 21 : 21, 68
Insure, Should Christians? Gen. 41 : 34, 500
Jordan, The Swelling of, Jor. 12 : 5, 132
Jubilee of Souls, Isa. 60 : 8, 52
Live Church, A, Rev. 2 : 8, 9, 212
Naval Heroes, Our, James 3 : 4, 324
Monster, Overthrow of the, Isa. 25 : 8, 228
Much Ado About Little, Matt. 23 : 24, 772
Opportunity, Women's, Gen. 1 : 27, 548
Parental Blunders, 1 Sam. 4 : 18, 724
Pillars of Smoke, Cantic. 3 : 6, 84
Plumb Line Religion, Amos 7 : 8, 612
Prime Ministers, The, Gen. 41 : 41, 596
Queens of Home, The, Cant. 6 : 8, 564
Ransomed, The, 1 Cor. 6 : 20, 100
Recreations, Good and Bad, 1 Cor. 7 : 31, 804
Rope, Holding The, II Cor. 11 : 33, 420
Secret Societies, Prov. 25 : 9, 244
Sermon, The Coming, Rom. 12 : 7, 8, 468
Sheathed Sword, 1 Cor. 12 : 33, 340
Stinging Annoyances, Deut. 7 : 20. 164
Tempest, The, Mark 4 : 36–39, 356
Thirst in a Cavern, II Sam. 23 : 15, 756
Twelve to Three O'clock, From, Isa. 21 : 11, 308
Unoccupied Fields, Rom. 15 : 20, 644
Watering the Sheep, Gen. 29 : 8, 452
Witness Stand, The, Acts 3 : 15, 532
Years, The Flying, Gen. 47 : 8, 4

Anecdotes and Missionary Incidents.

Adders, A Missionary on a Bed of, 181; African Chiefs Reproach, An, 342; After-Tea Episode, An, 229; Alone in a Dark Land, 214; Analogy, Faith by, 38; Armenian Merchant, A Converted, 582; Atheists Gangrened Foot, An. 470; Atmosphere, The Diabolised, 774; Baby, A Crying, 549; Balundu Boys Martyrs Spirit, 646; Bank Note Found in a Wall, A, 389; Baptism, A Long Delayed, 422; Baroness at a Mission, A, 181; Bar-room, Strange Scene in a, 710; Battlefield, A Missionary Near a, 70; Beer Recommended in Africa, 646; Bible in a Milan Window, A, 279; Bible, Years of Work for a, 695; Bird Charmed by a Snake, A, 519; Bishop on a Burning Ship, A, 165; Blasphemer Silenced, A, 215; Blasphemy, A Fine For, 343; Boundary Stones, The Marks of, 487; Bride, A Juvenile, 774; Bride Refused, A, 726; Buddhist Woman's Twelve Scars, A, 247; Bulgarian Lieutenant's Recovery, A, 519; Child Bitten by a Snake, A, 790; Child's Song in a Railroad Carriage, A, 374; China, A Rainy Night in, 583; China, Little Sufferers in, 470; Chinaman's Changed Life, A, 694; Chinese Convert, A Heroic, 535; Chinese Converts, Two, 437; Chinese Demoniac, A, 326; Chinese Governor's Warning, A, 199; Chinese Opium Smokers, Among, 726; Chinese Paralytic Testimony, A, 215; Chinese Town Become Christian, A, 263; Christian's Ordeal in a Demon Grove, A, 246; Christ's Coming, The Sign of, 343; Clergyman's Neuralgia Cured, A, 678; Club, The Closed Doors of, 70; College Student's Treasure, A, 743; Colporteur, An Encouraged, 470; Colporteur Assaulted in Spain, A, 310; Coming Revolution, The, 230; Composition, A Substituted, 758; Congo, The Revival on the, 390; Congressman's Wife Healed, A, 726; Consumption, New Treatment for, 263; Conversions in Mexico, Remarkable, 550; Converts in China, New, 726; Converts Opening a Mission, 422; Corean Bachelor's Story, A, 247; Crutches, Threw Away her, 166; Cullis's Record of Faith, Dr., 406; Daughter's Return, An Erring, 662; Deaf Lady's Reason for Church-going, A, 247; Death in a Trap, A Strange, 710; Deformed Teacher, Agnes the, 86; Demon Exorcised, A, 710; Eagle, A Decorated, 632; Earthquake, A Christian in the, 278; Engineer, An Heroic, 454; Evangelist Healed, A Consumptive, 118; Excommunication Braved, 742; Explosion, A Long Delayed, 342; Eyes, Healing for the, 422; Factory, A Day Without Work in a, 278; Famine in Asia Minor, The, 647; Fasting, Partnership in, 342; Flag Hoisted in a Hut, The, 301; Food for the Dead, 278; Frenchman's Two Saviours, A, 695; Friend at Court, A, 230; Futures, Speculations in, 373 Gardener, A Puzzled, 503; General Gordon Died, How; 86; German Soldiers, Teaching for, 262; Geyser, An Escape from a, 438; Gift, A Significant, 166; Girl's Syllables, A Little, 758; Girl's Testimony, A Fallen, 583; Governor's Fall, A Wicked, 470; Grandfather's Anger Sung Away, A, 199; Haunted Chinaman, A, 325; Healing of a Child, The Remarkable, 326; Heathen Devotees at Midnight, 278; Heathendom, The Cruelties of, 38; Heathen Girl's Death, A, 743; Heathenism, The Last Citadel of, 38; Heroism, Aunt Amanda's, 535; Highwayman's Conversion, A, 390; Hindoo Boatman, A, 503; Hindoo Converted, A High Caste, 343; Hindoo's Experience of Divine, A, 246; Hindoo Village Miller, A, 518; Hole, A Man Left in a, 646; Horologic Prayers, 753; Immigrant's Prayer, A Little, 630; Indian, A Noble, 789; Indian Medicine Man's Pharmacopœia, The, 252; Indian Prince on Missions, An, 790; Indians, Fifty Years Among, 807; Indian's Revenge, An, 311; Inebriate Mother Reformed, An, 406; Infidel Saved from Suicide, An. 695; Insanity, A Lady Saved from, 535; Insanity, Welcome, 631; Insomnia Cured, A Sufferer from, 70; Invitation to Pastors, A Convert's, 347; Japan, Christian Union in, 503; Japanese Demetrius, A, 245; Japanese Lady Converts, 230; Japanese Profligate, A, 535; Japanese Students, Work Among, 774; Japan, Fashion in, 438; Japan, Progress in, 231; Japan, The Open Door in, 406; Jewels, Raw Material For, 774; Jesuits Boomerang, The, 535; Jewish Convert's Testimony, A, 391; Jews Flocking to Palestine, The, 390; Jews in Jerusalem, The. 662; King's Prayer Answered, A, 615; Kiss, A Life-Giving, 231; Koordish Shepherd's Difficulty, A, 695; Kraal. Prayer in a, 391; Lady's Request, A, 758: Lawyer Retained, A, 118; Leaves, Deadly. 406; Letter in a Sock, A, 646; Living Death, Chambers of, 262; Loaf, A Death-blow, From A, 454; Madman in the Marketplace, The, 294; Magdalen's Conversion, A, 227; Mine, A Singular Rescue from a, 790; Miner's Persistance, A, 519; Minister, A Grateful, 70; Minister Saved from Paralysis, A, 502; Mirage, An Effectual, 790; Misery, Thirty-three Years of, 678; Missionary Astronomical Class, A, 438; Missionary Among Wolves, A, 54; Missionary at a Leopard's Den, A, 294; Missionaries in a Flood, 214; Missionary in Uganda, The Solitary, 374; Missionary Invited Back, A, 514; Missionary's First Experience, A, 406; Mohammedan Naaman, A, 519; Mahommedan Pilgrims Discovered, 518; Money is Supplied, How the, 422; Monk's Vision, The, 38; Moorish Assassin, A, 278; Moorish Convert, The First, 199; Neck Healed, An Enlarged, 374; Nervous Man's Request, A, 358; New Converts in Africa, The, 310; Octogenarian Healed, An, 454; Opium Habit Cured, The, 342; Opium Slave's Emancipation, A, 598; Parisian Trophies, Five, 582; Patience Too Quickly Exhausted, 503; Patriotism in a Police Court, 678; Peace Made at the Altar, 118; Persecutors foiled, 326; Persia, How Christians fare in, 695; Persian Girl's Testimony, A, 790; Premonition, A Worker's, 166; Premonition, A Nonagenarian, 262; Priest Melting His Idol, A, 598; Prince in a Kitchen, A, 199; Prisoner's Record, A, 631; Promise, A Costly, 54; Quails, A Windfall of, 294; Question at a Ball, A, 310; Rabbi Proclaiming Christ, A. 422; Railroad Car, Jumping from a, 438; Raiment, Kings in Queer, 614; Reformed Drunkard's Story, A, 246; Reprieve on the Scaffold, A, 358; Reprobate Reclaimed, A Runaway, 710; Re Qua, A Letter from Rev. W. F., 454; Rescue, A, Difficult, 726; Robber Robbed, A, 807; Roof, Contrasts Under One, 503; Royal Page, Conversion of a, 214; Royal Sympathy, 581; Rudder, A Magnetized, 598; Ruinous Prize, A, 166; Ruskin's First Prayer, 22; Russian's Experience, A, 743; Russian Persecutions, 631; Safe, Nearly, 54; Sailor Curing a Savage, A, 519; Sailor's Example, A, 438; Sailor, A Foolhardy, 70; Sailor's Tracts in Mexico, A, 342; Sleepy Driver, A, 118; Smoking in Church, No, 743; Spain, Persecution in, 487; Spider's Following the Light, 470; Stage Driver, A Heroic, 503; Tied Up Hand and Foot, A Man, 230; Title, A Changed, 790; Tortoise, Praying to a, 262; Tourists, Sabbath-Keeping, 758; Trapeze Performer, A Fall of a, 182; Treasure Trove, Priceless, 294; Turkish Drunkard, Reformation of a, 231; Tumor Removed, 487; Uganda, Alone in, 678; Undergraduate Reminded, An, 358; Unpleasant Neighbor, An, 118; Unrecognized Brother, An, 86; Vigil on a Mountain, 583; Vision, Saved Through a, 182; Voice Test, Fruit from a, 22; Volcano, A Visit to an Active, 486; War in a Barrel, A, 487; Wedding a Central African, 710; Wedding Customs in China, 22; Wedding, An Underground, 487; Widow, Baptism of a, Widow, An Inconsolable, 343; Widow's Regret, A, 326; Wife's Petition, A. 262; Wife's Retaliation An Ill Used, 663; Would-be Murderer Converted, A 279; Zenana Lady at a Brahma Service, 86.

Expositions of Prophecy.

Antichrist Foreshadowed by Napoleon I, The Coming, 71; Ascent into the Heavens, Our Coming, 551; Boulanger's Name, Number 666 in, 70; Christendom in the Last Age, 375; Christ's Second Advent, 1896 the Probable Year of, 566; Crimean War Treaty of Peace, The, 364; Daniel's Prophetic Dates (with diagram) 149. 150, 167, 183; End of the Age, Fourteen Years Until, 87; End of This Age about 1900, The, 134; Final, 13 Years of This Age, The Events of the, 198; Fulfilment of Daniel and Revelation in 2595 days, 103; Gentiles, The Times of, 22; Holy Land in 1889, What May Happen to the, 471; London Prophetic Conference, Notes of the, 819; Midnight Cry, The, 814; Millennium, World Exhibition, The, 742; Miracles of the Second Advent, The, 647; Mohammedanism at the End of this Century, The End of, 279; Nations of the Millennium, Three Central, 534; Noah, The Coming of the Days of, 247, 263; Passover Week, 1901 the Last Week of this Age, 832, 348; Pope Not the Antichrist, The, 311; Premillennial Advent, The, 423, 455; Prophecy Our Lord's, 653; Prophesying War, 119; Prophetic Notes, 215, 518, 582; Restored Earth, The, 38; Return of Christ, The, 231; Romanism, Coming Struggle with, 630; Satan's Tactics in the Last Days, 598; Seven Seals: The Vision of the First and Second, 679; the Third, 759; the Fourth, 774; the Fifth, 791; the Sixth, 806; Signs of the Coming End, The, 439; Socialist Spectre in Chicago, The, 54; Spirit in the Last Days, The, 694; Spiritualism a Sign of the Times, 711; Temple in History and Prophecy, 327; Vail, The Removal of the, 391, 407; Watchful Christians May Expect, What, 486; Watchman's Answer, The, 502; Whither are we Drifting? 375; World Growing Better? Is the, 6.

SS. LESSONS BY MRS. BAXTER:
Abraham, Call of, 47; Abraham, God's Covenant with, 79; Abraham Offering up Isaac, 127; Abraham Pleading for Sodom, 95; Beatitudes, The, 495; Cain and Abel, 7; Centurion's Faith, The, 607; Christ's Witness to John, 703; Commandments I, The, 351; Commandments II, The, 367; Confessing Christ, 687; Destruction of Sodom, 111; Feeding the Multitude, 823; Flight into Egypt, The, 415; Golden Precepts, 559; Harvest and the Laborers, The, 671; Herod and John the Baptist, 815; Jacob at Bethel, 143; Jacob's Power with God, 159; Jesus and the Sabbath, 735; Jesus, the Baptism of, 447; Jesus, in Galilee, 479; Jesus and the law, 511; Jesus, the Infant, 399; Jesus, the Temptation of, 463; John the Baptist, 431; Joseph Exalted, 207; Joseph Honoring his Father, 239; Joseph Makes Himself Known, 223; Joseph Sold into Egypt, 191; Joseph, The Death of, 255; Judgment and Mercy, 719; Lot's Choice, 63; Manna, The, 335; Miracles, Three, 655; Moses, the Child, 271; Moses, the Call of, 237; Noah's Faith, 3; Parables of the Kingdom, Five, 783; Parable of the Tares, The, 767; Parable of the Sower, The, 751; Passover, The 303; Piety Without Display, 627; Power to Forgive Sins, 639; Red Sea, The, 319; Rest in the Lord, 591; Servant, The Prayerful, 175; Tempest Stilled, The, 623; Trust in Our Father. 543; Warnings, Solemn, 575; What We Have and What We Hope For 383; Wounded Spirit, A, 799.

Serial Stories.

Family of Tripe Court, The. 797, 803, 829
The Friends of Aspendale, 13, 29. 45, 61, 77, 93, 109, 125, 141, 157, 173, 189, 205. 221, 237, 253, 269, 285, 301, 317, 333, 349, 365, 381, 397, 414, 329, 445
The Story of Ashley Down, 461, 477, 493, 509, 525, 541, 557, 573, 589, 605, 621, 637, 653, 669, 685, 701, 717, 733, 733, 749, 765, 781

Scripture Almanac, 15

THE DYING YEAR.

The Old Year is dying—is dying slow—
And why should we bid him stay?
His mission is ended and let him go,
For the New leadeth on to the May.

The Old Year is dying—is dying slow—
And 't is time for the toll of the bell;
He treated us kindly—but let him go—
For the New Year will bless us as well.

The Old Year is dying—but let us not weep—
He stole some of our joys, 't is true,
But he gave us some gifts of gladness to keep,
And buried our sorrows, too

The Old Year is dying—and let him go—
For we mount one starry step more
In the stairway that leads from the halls below
To the shining vestibule door,

Opening into the mansions so many and fair
In the house of our Father on high;
The New Year will carry us nearer there,
And so let the Old Year die.

—Luella Clark.

FIAT LUX—was the first command ever given and from the creation until now the efforts of man have been constant in perfecting artificial light. It, however, remained for the Bailey Reflector Co., of Pittsburg, Pa., to attain the acme of success, by an original and scientific application of the principles of reflection and refraction of light, they diffuse the rays equally over large and small areas, and unaffected by the height or lowness of the ceiling. This principle can be applied to either Gas or Kerosin lamps. Send for one of their full descriptive circulars.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,

Care of J. P. HEATH,

43 Bible House, New York.

The BOW in the CLOUD
Or WORDS of COMFORT

For those in Sickness, Sorrow and the varied Afflictions of Life. By 200 best Authors, Prose and Poetry, Edited by J. Sanderson, D.D. A Home Treasury and Gift Book of rare excellence. 450 Pages, $1.75.

E. B. TREAT, Pub., N. Y.

NEW MUSIC, 48 PIECES, 10 CENTS. To introduce our New Catalogue of Parlor Organs, Organettes, Violins, Accordeons etc., we will send 48 pieces New Music, full size, finely printed, Gems from the latest operas, Waltzes, Polkas, Marches, Operatic Songs, Ballads, etc., for only 10 Cents. Postage stamps taken. Address World M'f'g Co., 122 Nassau St., New York

GRIND YOUR OWN Bone, Meal, Oyster Shells, Graham Flour & Corn in the $5 HAND MILL (F. Wilson's Patent.) 100 per cent. more made in keeping Poultry. Also POWER MILLS and FARM FEED MILLS. Circulars and testimonials sent on application. WILSON BROS. Easton, Pa.

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World.—$85 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. MARCHAL & SMITH, 255 East 21st Street, New York. $35

MOTHER GOOSE for Temperance Nurseries. By Mrs. J. McNair Wright. 68 pages. Price, 25 cents. It consists of 31 songs or rhymes, with 31 beautiful illustrations and 31 wise sayings, for every day in the month. Address J. N. STEARNS, Ag't, 58 Reade St., New York.

STATE AND COUNTY MANAGERS needed to handle the New Daisy Washer, just out. Send stamp quick for terms. NATIONAL WASHING MACHINE CO., Marietta, Ohio.

WARREN'S FEATHER WHIPS

The best ever made. Ask your Dealer for them.

---

100 PER CENT PROFIT & SAMPLES FREE to men canvassers for Dr. Scott's Genuine Electric Belts, Brushes, &c. Lady agents wanted for Electric Corsets. Quick sales. Write at once for terms. Dr. Scott, 842 B'way, N. Y.

DIAMOND DYES

COLOR EVERYTHING.

Unequalled for Silk, Wool, Cotton and all Fabrics and Fancy Goods. Brilliant, Durable and Economical. Any one can use them.

32 COLORS—10 CENTS EACH.

Remember, these are the only Pure, Harmless and Unadulterated Dyes.

Beware of other Dyes, because often Poisonous, Adulterated, Weak and Worthless.

We warrant these Dyes to color more goods, package for package, than any other Dyes ever made, and to give more brilliant and durable colors. Sample cards free.

THE DIAMOND PAINTS,

GOLD, SILVER, BRONZE and COPPER

For gilding Fancy Baskets, Frames, Lamps, Chandeliers, and for all kinds of ornamental work. Equal to any of the high-priced kinds, and only 10 cents a package. Also Artists' Black for Ebonizing.

Sold by Druggists everywhere. Send postal for Sample Card, directions for coloring Photos, doing fancy work, and making ink.

WELLS, RICHARSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.

Have entered upon the second season for their Toboggan Suits, so well known last Winter on Toboggan Slides in New York City and vicinity. They are made for Ladies, Gentlemen and Children, in beautiful designs, exclusive styles and as low in price as possible.

They will be made to measure at short notice and may be safely ordered by mail.

These suits are quite indispensable for the full enjoyment of this favorite mid-winter sport.

Orders by mail receive careful and prompt attention.

Broadway and 11th Street,

New York.

BOOKS HELPFUL
IN CHRISTIAN WORK.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM, by Lucy J. Rider and Nellie M. Carman, with contributions of plans, methods and outlines of talks to children by nearly forty others, including the best-known and most successful workers among children in this country. 208 pages, fine cloth, $1.00.

THE PRAYER MEETING AND ITS IMPROVEMENT, by Rev. L. O. Thompson. 12mo. 256 pages, cloth, $1.25.

"This is so good a book that we wish we could give a copy to every young minister."—C. H. Spurgeon.

"A very suggestive book."—Sunday-School Times.

THUS SAITH THE LORD, by Major D. W. Whittle. A handbook for Christian workers. 134 pages, flexible cloth, 50 cts.

"A manual of Scripture texts arranged to present the leading subjects met with in dealing with enquirers.

SECRET POWER; or, the Secret of Success in Christian Life and Work, by D. L. Moody. 116 pages, 12mo, cloth, 60 cts.; paper, 30 cts.

"Every page is full of stimulating thought."—Christian Commonwealth.

* Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.*

J. E. JEWETT,
77 Bible House, - - New York.

"THE MANNA"

is a decidedly non-sectarian, religious, monthly paper, for young and old, especially adapted for SUNDAY SCHOOLS. MOTTO: Christ All in All, and All for Christ. Every friend of true religion loves it. Subscription price, 50 cents per annum. Agents are wanted throughout the country. 50 per cent commission is allowed. Any one sending us 10 names and addresses, from different places, that will likely act as agents for the paper, will receive the paper free for one year. Address J. G. STAUFFER, Quakertown, Pa.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

THE Pulpit

Yearly in Advance, $2.50. SINGLE COPY, 25 cents. Clergymen, $2.

By the ablest writers on Theology, Christian Ethics, Evangelistic Work, Home and Heart Culture, etc. A welcome guest to the Pastor, Teacher, and Family. Send for Club Rates and Terms to Agents.

A NEW EVANGELICAL MONTH
CONDUCTED BY A CORPS OF EMINENT CLERGY
Devoted to Sermons, Lectures, Biblical C ments, Questions of the Day, Prayer Mee
Talks, The Sunday School Ca
Mission Work, etc. ILLUSTRA

Treasur

E. B. TREAT, Publisher, NEW YORK. Sample Free.

WORKS OF J. W. KIMBALL.

How to See Jesus with Fulness of Joy and Peac

250 pp. Cloth. Price, 75 cents.

This precious book has been the means of comfort to many a weary soul, and hoping that n more may be led to read its sweet exhortations, we give a few out of the many commendations we received. A new edition has just been printed, and we send it forth earnestly hoping that it ma even more blessed in its ministration than the former ones.

"I have been fifty years a member of the Presbyterian Church. Your 'How to See Jesus' has helped me to a better understanding of some things, and to a deeper interest in the Scriptures. Your words are so plain and simple that they come at once to the heart as food in season."—E. T., Utica, N. Y.

"I have read 'How to See Jesus' with much joy; it brings so much help to me."—Oakland, California.

"I find in 'How to see Jesus' just the reading we invalids need."—M. M., Earlville, N. Y.

"'How to See Jesus' is such a good book I want it to be comforting many who need it."—Holyoke, Mass.

"While in Des Moines, Iowa, I found your book 'How to See Jesus.' I have thought many times since the good Lord must have led me to it, as I found in it just the comfort I needed. It will be a benefit to many of my friends; have decided to make them a present of it; so please send me twelve."

"Thanks for the precious book 'How to See Jesus.' I have never read a book that has done me any more good."—S. A., Colorado.

"Many thanks for calling my attention to 'How to See Jesus.' I find it grandly helpful."—W. J., South Pueblo, Col.

"Next to the Bible, the best book I ever saw."—W. E., Maine.

"I cannot tell you how pleased I am with 'How to See Jesus.' It seems written for me, and I great comfort from it."—Newfoundland.

"I find 'How to See Jesus' very instructive. I read I personate the person spoken to. My trou is not worldliness, but a fearful heart. This suits case exactly."—L. G., N. Salem, N. Y.

"Words seem inadequate to express my deep s of obligation to you for your precious book."—A New York.

"I think I will get more real help, just the kin need, from 'How to See Jesus.'"—Mrs. J. L., Indianapolis, Ind.

"I am much pleased with 'How to See Jesus,' instructed. Your style holds attention with wearinessgood for invalids."—C. W., Mass.

"If you were to get all the words of thanks combine them together, you would not then get the true feelings of my heart for that precious book, 'How to See Jesus.' I feel that you h been to me what Great Heart was to the Pilgri cheering and showing them the way to the Celes City."—E. A., Abbeville, S. C.

Heaven: My Father's House.

250 pp. Cloth. Price, 75 cents.

It is often said we know nothing of heaven, but Jesus says, "All things that the Father hath mine: the Comforter shall take of mine and show it unto you." True to his promise, from the da knew the Lord, the Comforter began to show me heavenly things. What I freely received, He bade freely give. The kind approvals here recorded increased my obligation, and not less my delight share these joy-inspiring things with as many as I may. I pray God that each reader may find th his Lord's own revelations to himself.—Preface.

"I can surely say that, excepting my Bible, no book has ever done me so much good as 'Heaven: My Father's House.' After a day spent in the sick room trying to calm the fevered brain and ease the aching limbs, you cannot imagine with what eagerness I turn to that book for rest, and it never fails to bring it, and with it the prayer, 'Not as I will, O Father.'"—E. E., Iowa.

"Death, as seen from Mr. K's point of view, is a natural event in the order of the Christian's life. Instead of recoiling from the inevitable destiny, we are led by this more familiar view to look upon the change without fear, yea, with cheerfulness."—Rev. Dr. H. B. Hackett, Newton Theological Seminary.

"Full of pointed illustrations, fresh, vigorous writing; nothing dull; short, crisp sentences; the reader is borne on rapidly; the writer speaks as though his thoughts rushed upon him. A fulness of nature, and joy in life runs through it."—S. K. B.

"It is one of the most interesting books I ever perused. I purpose that many of my friends neighbors shall read it. No one can read it, certai no Christian without profit."—Rev. E. Bridgman, Shanghai, China.

"I have read Mr. K.'s book with no small pleasu It is full of thought, and there is much beauty b of sentiment and words; and no one will be wear with its chapters nor think them too many, nor t long."—Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar, Edinburgh, Scotland.

"Pray accept my heartiest thanks for your sou common sense book on 'Heaven.' I seldom read a purely religious book except the Bible, but have re and re-read yours with growing satisfaction. It the only book upon the subject I would recommend a friend to buy, after a good Bible. I wish eve church member would read your 'Heaven,' for would free his brain from so much popular nonsens —Antioch, Syria.

* Either of the above books will be sent, postpaid, to any address on receipt of price*

Address J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York

RECENT BOOKS BY D. L. MOODY.

A New Edition in new binding of the following Popular Works of D. L. MOODY, has just been issued:

JUST ISSUED.

PREVAILING PRAYER; WHAT HINDERS IT?
An earnest, solemn work, full of helpful hints on the aids and hindrances to prevailing prayer.

FIFTEENTH THOUSAND (NEW).

TO THE WORK! TO THE WORK! A Trumpet Call. Exhortations to Christians.
This new work, by Mr. Moody, is in the line of his most successful effort, that of stirring Christians to active, personal, aggressive work.

SIXTIETH THOUSAND.

SECRET POWER; or, the Secret of Success in Christian Life and Work.
"A deeply earnest and helpful book for the use of Christians on the work of the Holy Spirit in the believer, inciting to more diligent effort and to a more perfect use of the privileges of the 'Sons of God.'"

SIXTY-FIFTH THOUSAND.

THE WAY TO GOD, AND HOW TO FIND IT
"It puts the way so plainly that 'he who runs may read.'"—Religious Telescope.
"Full of pathos, point and power. Cannot fail to be the means of quickening and blessing wherever read."—Methodist.

NINETY-SECOND THOUSAND.

HEAVEN; its Hope; its Inhabitants; its Happiness; its Riches; its Reward.
"While adapted to the humblest capacity, it will command the attention of the mature and thoughtful."—National Presbyterian.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTIETH THOUSAND.

TWELVE SELECT SERMONS.
"With the effect of these addresses, when spoken, the whole land is acquainted, and now that they are printed, they will tend to keep in force the impression they have already made."—Methodist.

The above works, the combined sale of which has already reached over Three Hundred and Fifty Thousand are now issued in a new dress, known as the STANDARD EDITION.

Bound in Rich English Cloth, beveled edges, and put up in Neat Box, six vols. Price, per set, $3.60.

The former bindings "The People's Edition" may also be had. Cloth, neat gold and ink dies, 60 cents per vol. Cheap edition in paper cover, 30 cents per volume.

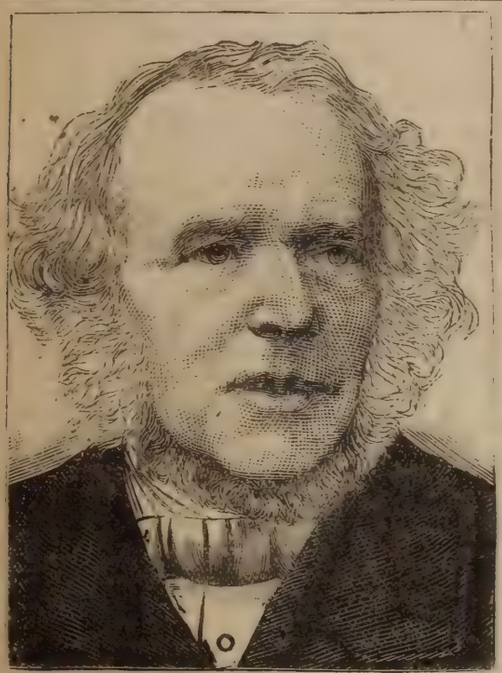
☞ Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XI., No. 17. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.



REV. DR. ANDREW A. BONAR.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF DRS. HORATIUS AND ANDREW BONAR.

BRILLIANT BITTERNESS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE STORM CLOUDS GATHERING. A Prophetic Article.

Perils Among Indians—A Bible in a Blanket—An Execution Prevented—Called by the Great Spirit—High Caste Learners—A Thankful Congregation—Mr. Re Qua's Work in the Indian Territory.

JESUS AFFIRMED TO BE ALIVE. A New Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: A German Captain's Order—A Meal of Carrion.

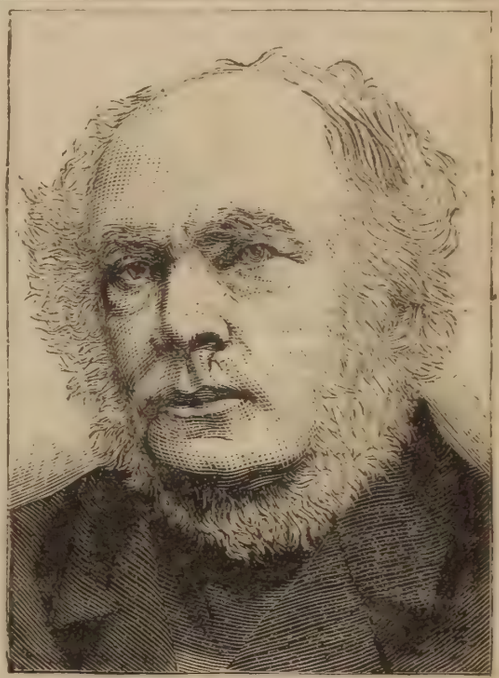
PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE AMOS BRONSON ALCOTT.

MRS. PINFOLD'S ILLUMINATION. (Illustrated.)

PICTURE OF THE VILLA PALMIERI, FLORENCE, Queen Victoria's Italian Retreat.

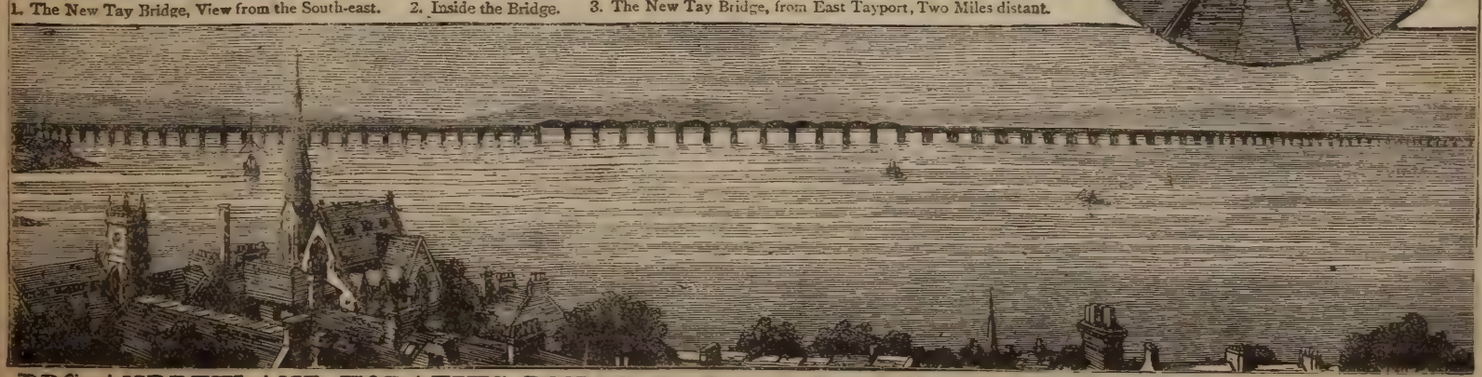
MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL. A Serial Story. (Continued.)

THE JUDGMENT. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



REV. DR. HORATIUS BONAR.

1. The New Tay Bridge, View from the South-east. 2. Inside the Bridge. 3. The New Tay Bridge, from East Tayport, Two Miles distant.



DRS. ANDREW AND HORATIUS BONAR, the famous Scotch Preachers and Authors—New Tay Bridge.

REV. DR. ANDREW A. BONAR.

His Early Years from 1810 to 1839—Journey to Palestine—Revival in Dundee—Secedes with the Free Church—Writes M'Cheyne's Memoirs—Elected Moderator of the Assembly in 1878.

One of the best-known and most highly esteemed pastors in the Free Church of Scotland is the Rev. Andrew Bonar, whose portrait appears on the preceding page in company with his distinguished brother, Dr. Horatius Bonar. He was born in Edinburgh in 1810, so that he is now seventy-eight years of age. His father was a man of high Christian character and extensive knowledge. Andrew was favored in his youth with the best educational advantages, and he availed himself of them to good purpose. The fruit of his application soon became apparent; he won the proud position of Dux of Edinburgh High School. The same success attended his academic career at the University, where he received the approbation of his professors, and the esteem of his class-mates.

He had already, when quite a boy, accepted Christ as his Saviour, and as a consequence he resolved, with his brother, Horatius, to consecrate his life to the ministry of the gospel. This resolution once made, he subordinated all his reading and thinking, and all that he did, to qualifying himself for this work. He was by the Presbytery of Jedburgh, in 1835, when he was twenty-five years old. Dr. Candlish, of Edinburgh, then in the zenith of his fame, having had his attention directed to the promising licentiate, invited him to assist him as parish missionary. Mr. Bonar consented, and consequently was brought under an influence which must have helped to mould his methods of pulpit preparation, as well as to implant in him a lofty conception of the work he had undertaken. In 1838, he was ordained as colleague in the pastoral charge of Collace, in Perthshire.

Licensed to Preach

In 1839 he was one of a Mission of Inquiry to the Jews, chosen partly on account of his familiarity with the Hebrew Scriptures, and partly also on account of his affectionate intimacy with M'Cheyne. On his return home he was joyfully welcomed by his flock, and at once assisted with unreserved enthusiam in which had originated in Dundee, and was spreading like a wave of blessing in all the district round about. The revival was destined to effect great changes in the religious life of Scotland. Ministers were stirred up to a sense of their responsibilities, and the influence they could wield as ambassadors for Christ. The people, feeling the need of gospel preaching, saw that they could not be sure of having it so long as the choice of their ministers was vested in the hands of men often indifferent to the best interests of the congregations. They thought they had the right to choose their own teachers in spiritual things, and demanded it; for they believed that the appointment of pastors by careless patrons was the source of the deadness and blight of the Scottish Church. So the conflict began which ended in of 1843. Mr. Bonar, on the day of final decision, threw in his lot with the Free Church party, and left the church in which he had hitherto ministered. The majority of his parishioners followed him. A new place of worship was erected, and the work of grace went on; sinners were pricked to the heart, and believers were instructed in the things of God.

The Revival

The Disruption

In 1856 Mr. Bonar felt it to be his duty to accept a call to Finnieston, Glasgow. It was simply a mission station. Ten persons constituted his first congregation; but Finnieston Free Church grew under his preaching and influence, until now the members number more than 1,000. In 1874 Edinburgh University conferred upon him the degree of D. D., in recognition of his scholarship and his many valuable contributions to theological literature. In 1878 he was elected Moderator of the General Assembly of the Free Church. When Messrs. Moody and Sankey visited Scotland he gave them his warmest sympathy and co-operation. In 1881 he was a welcome and honored guest and speaker at Mr. Moody's Conference at Northfield, and he returned home with all the glow and fervor of "youth renewed"; and even now, though advancing in life, his activity and enthusiam are unimpaired, and as in the days of his youth, he is able to do the duties of a strong man.

The Memoirs of M'Cheyne is the book by which Dr. A. Bonar will be best remembered. It is a model biography, and has had a circulation of nearly 140,000 in Great Britain, besides being widely read in the United States. His work entitled "Christ and His Church in the Psalms" proves how profound is his Hebrew scholarship, and is marked throughout by rare spiritual insight which no linguistic acquisitions can supply; while his "Commentary on Leviticus," brings to light in a very wonderful manner the New Testament verities which lie enshrined in Old Testament rites. He has also written a large number of tracts and little gospel books, which have done excellent service and been blessed to many in both hemispheres. Like his brother Horatius, he believes in the pre-millennial advent of the Saviour, and looks for it as an event likely soon to occur.

REV. DR. HORATIUS BONAR.

Born in 1808—Becomes Presbyterian Minister at Kelso in 1839—The Dundee Revival—Publishes His Kelso Tracts and Popular Hymns and Other Books—Joins the Free Church—Becomes Minister of the Grange Church, Edinburgh—Moderator in 1882—Pre-millennial Doctrines.

The noble octogenarian preacher, whose portrait appears on the first page, in company with that of his younger brother, has recently received a substantial mark of the esteem of his fellow-countrymen, who have presented him with a purse containing five thousand dollars. At the presentation, attention was called to the fact that the family has long held an honored place among the churches of Scotland. Two centuries ago, one of its representatives was a distinguished minister, preaching the truth at the risk of martyrdom.

Horatius Bonar was born at Edinburgh, in 1808, so that he has attained the ripe age of eighty years. His father was Solicitor to the Government in all business relating to Excise, an office which is now abolished. The lad received his early education at the Edinburgh High School and the Edinburgh University, and while he was pursuing his studies he formed with the saintly Robert Murray M'Cheyne, whose "Life and Remains" have been given to the world by his brother the Rev. A. Bonar. In early life he resolved to enter the Christian ministry. Among his instructors was the famous Dr. Chalmers, whose influence upon him was of the most beneficial and abiding character, and to this day he speaks of him in terms of enthusiastic and grateful admiration. Before he had finished his academical course he had published a little volume entitled "Christian Essays" which obtained a fair measure of publicity, and gave promise of the literary distinction which the author has since attained.

A Memorable Friendship

In 1839, at the age of thirty-one, the student became a minister, and the interesting old town of Kelso was

His First Field of Labor.

It is picturesquely situated on the banks of the silvery Tweed, and surrounded by a country justly famous, both in song and story. Nearly every stone and tree in the locality was associated in the minds of the residents with some memorable personage or deed which still lives in history. Here, in the full vigor of his early manhood, he gave himself to his work of winning souls with prayerful and unflagging assiduity. His sermons were full of fire and unction; and his pastoral visitation, especially in the homes of poverty or the abodes of suffering, was highly prized for his marked tenderness and sagacity in giving comfort or guidance.

Dr. Bonar has from the very outset of his career been an ardent believer in the power of the Press in the world-wide distribution of the truths of salvation. In spite of the many and varied calls upon his time, he managed while he was at Kelso to devote some portion of the week to edit the Presbyterian, a magazine which did magnificent service in contending for "the faith once for all delivered unto the saints." About the year 1839, when the revival occurred in Dundee, under the preaching of his friend M'Cheyne, none rejoiced more intensely or thanked God more than he did. He entered into the movement with heart and soul and did his best to spread it, and wherever he went many conversions were effected. But even then "What more can be done?" was his earnest inquiry by day and night. He thought that his pen might possibly reach those who were beyond his voice, so he wrote

"The Kelso Tracts."

His threefold object was to arouse the careless, to make plain the way of salvation, and to strengthen and instruct and gladden the children of God everywhere. These messengers of life were scattered far and wide, they gained entrance into thousands of Scottish homes, and everywhere they were cordially welcomed and eagerly read. In Scotland and England the number circulated was said to be very large, while in America they became popular and highly appreciated. And their work of mercy is not ended yet, for to this day they continue to receive the blessing of God.

Dr. Bonar had, in the earlier days of his ministry, and still in his eightieth year retains, a most benignant influence over children and young people. His winning manner and gentle tones arrested and enchained their attention, and his weighty words savingly impressed their hearts. His Sabbath-school services in Kelso are still remembered by many of the old scholars with undiminished delight.

His Hymns,

one of which he wrote for each service, were sung by the boys and girls. These hymns are now to be heard in many Sunday-schools with which Christian zeal and consecration have girdled the globe. Among some of the special favorites may be mentioned: "I Lay my Sins on Jesus," "A Few More Years shall Roll," "I was a Wandering Sheep," and "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say." After the singing, the pastor would give an address, in which "the story of Jesus and His love" was told, and which even the youngest child present could understand.

When the "disruption" of 1843 occurred, there were many stirring changes. Many of the families of the Presbyterian Church were sorely perplexed by the difficulties which surrounded them, but the pastor of Kelso was not. For conscience sake, and to show his practical sympathy with his brethren in distress, he at once cast in his lot with the Free Church. He had not, like most of those who left the Established Kirk, to leave his church on leaving the denomination, It was secured to him and his congregation by some special clauses in the title deeds, and so, as the years rolled on, it became increasingly a centre of light and usefulness.

As an Author,

Dr. Bonar has attained world-wide fame. He has written much and well. He had read much, and had a retentive memory; his heart was on fire with love to Christ and souls; and, as a natural consequence, his were winged words, and his books have enjoyed merited popularity. His "Night of Weeping" has been as balm to many bereaved and lonely hearts, comforting them in the presence of the newly opened grave; while his "Morning of Joy" has in many instances lifted the thoughts of the sorrowful to that radiant land where suffering and death are unknown. "God's Way of Peace" has still a friendly hand for those who are seeking increased light. "The Land of Promise," "The Desert of Sinai," "Light of Truth," are among the best known of his other books, which go on teaching lessons in Christian experience, and unfolding the truths of the kingdom of the Redeemer. In all he wrote, as in all he said, Dr. Bonar was swayed by his life purpose—God's glory and the profit of souls. He did not seek earthly honor, but it came to him. His name has become a household word, and his writings have won a high place in the devotional literature of our century.

In 1856, the strain of long labors having so impaired his energy that rest was imperatively needed, he went on a tour through the Desert of Sinai and the Holy Land. He returned with health and energy renewed, and continued his labors of voice and pen. The year 1865 brought a change in his life though not in his work. It was the year of his Removal to Edinburgh.

As the reputation of Dr. Bonar grew, many efforts had been made to induce him to leave his beloved Kelso for a larger sphere of ministry, and at length, after twenty-seven years of earnest and successful labor, he yielded. A new church was built in the suburb of Edinburgh, called The Grange, and he was asked to fill its pulpit. He consented. Like-minded men and women flocked around him, and he became as dear to them as he had been to his church at Kelso; while to many visitors from different parts of the world who wished to see and listen to the sweet singer, a Sabbath spent at The Grange remains a treasured and inspiring memory. In 1882 he was honored in being elected Moderator of the Assembly.

In 1886, through age and feebleness, Dr. Bonar having become unequal to the heavy duties of the pastorate, was furnished with a colleague. He is now quietly awaiting his Master's call to the mansions and rest of which he has so often and so melodiously sung; but while the natural force of the venerable servant of God may be abated, his mental vigor and power to discern the signs of the times are still in fullest exercise. A striking proof of that fact is furnished in a letter which he wrote to Mr. J. E. Mathieson on the occasion of the Mildmay Conference on the Second Advent, in March, 1886. He said:

"The Poison of the Last Days has penetrated everywhere: unbelief, error, strong delusion, self-will, ambition, pride, hatred of God and of His Christ—these are the deadly forces that are operating all over earth and disintegrating society, making all human rule impossible, and demonstrating the necessity for the arrival of Him who is to end all these overturnings, and to introduce the reign of peace, the kingdom of everlasting order.

"Antichrist is rising rapidly and gaining strength. Multitudes are enlisting unconsciously under his banner, and adopting his watchword—Liberality, reckoning it illiberal to believe in judgment to come, or in hell, or in the wrath of God, or in the sinner's eternal doom. To meet all this we look for the arrival of the Christ of God; and as the confusion increases, and the rebellion waxes stronger and stronger, we raise more and more loudly the Church's cry, 'How long, O Lord, how long?'"

Dr. Bonar has been a well-known advocate of pre-millennarian views for many years. He embodied his opinions in "Prophetic Landmarks," a very valuable hand-book for those who are beginning the study of prophecy. He holds that the Personal Advent of Christ is not far distant, and that although Popery and Mohammedanism are Antichrists for 1,260 years, yet the Great Personal Antichrist of the last days will persecute the Christian Church finally for 1,260 days. His advocacy of these beliefs has also been eloquently promoted in the Quarterly Journal of Prophecy, which he conducted with singular skill for some years. His "Hymns of Faith and Hope" are the fruit of thirty years' thought and feeling. Their title is very appropriate, for they sing of faith triumphant in difficulties, and of hope that never grows old. In them will be found a music to silence earth's discords, and a loving trust to throw a rainbow of hope over the sorrows of life.

THE NEW TAY BRIDGE.

THE new bridge, a picture of which appears on the first page, is the structure erected to supply the place of the one which is identified with sorrow and bereavement in many a home. The terrible disaster on the night of Sunday, December 28, 1879, when the iron railway bridge over the Tay estuary, at Dundee, suddenly collapsed while a passenger train was crossing, amidst a violent hurricane of wind, falling into the raging waters below, with its burden of upwards of ninety lives, cannot yet have been forgotten. The old bridge, which had taken six years to construct, cost $1,750,000, and was opened for traffic in May, 1878. The new bridge, which was opened in July, 1887, was constructed by Messrs. W. Arrol & Co., of Glasgow. The length of it is 10,780 feet, or 3,593 yards—rather more than two miles; the width of the river Tay just where it crosses being 9,580 feet. The quantity of wrought iron used is 19,000 tons, of steel 3,500 tons, and of cast-iron 2,500 tons; with 3,000,000 rivets, averaging five inches in length; 10,000,000 bricks, weighing 37,500 tons; and 70,000 tons of concrete, used in the foundations. It has cost somewhat more than five million. The new structure was first used for ordinary passenger traffic on the Queen's Jubilee Day, in 1887. The public advantage gained by the railway for which the bridge is built is that of shortening the journey from Dundee to Edinburgh by one hour, and from Aberdeen to Edinburgh by two hours. Its advantages are well appreciated, for since its opening the traffic between Dundee and the East of Fifeshire is doubled. It is the property of the North British Railway.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

An Ex-Policeman's Trophy for Christ.—Mr. William Clyde, a Scotch evangelist, said: "We had among the members of our Mizpah Band a Highland-man who had formerly been a policeman, and now that he was converted, his heart was warm towards those who used to be his companions, and he took every opportunity to set before them the Gospel of Christ. Coming home from his work, daily, he crossed Glasgow Green, and made it a point to speak to the policeman on duty there. He resolved to win that man for Christ. Repeatedly he invited him to come to the gospel meeting in the evening, when he was off duty, and at last he did come, and was brought to Christ. In testifying afterwards, the new convert said, 'Before I came to this meeting I was half converted by the quiet and gentle, yet zealous bearing, of my friend, who induced me to come here, and I was quite prepared to go the other half.' Personal dealing is much honored by God. It is one of the Christian's highest privileges to lead men and women to the Saviour."

Forty Faithful Soldiers Frozen. — "There was a Roman emperor who had among his soldiers forty Christian men. Being informed of the fact, he flew into a passion, and said, 'I will have no Christians among my men! Go, tell them that if they will not turn from serving their God they will be stripped and sent forth upon a frozen lake to perish there.' But the forty soldiers were faithful to Christ, and nothing would induce them to forsake Him. So they were taken down to the side of a frozen lake and there stripped of their garments. Not far from the lake was a hut, in which was a large blazing fire, robes, large sums of money, and also a sumptuous feast spread, all placed there by order of the emperor to tempt the men to forsake Christ. They were told that even yet if they would but forsake their God they would be taken to this hut, and all that was in it would at once belong to them. All stood firm, and they were sent forth upon the lake. They gathered together, and the whole forty raised their hands to heaven and prayed: Dear Lord, grant that we may be found faithful to Thee.' But one of the number proved unfaithful, he forsook the lake, fled to the hut, where he obtained all that was promised. The centurion of the band was so struck with the noble action of these nine and thirty men that he resolved to join them. He, too, was stripped by his own men, and went forth to join the brave soldiers in the middle of the lake. Again forty hands were raised to heaven, while they prayed, 'Oh, Lord, grant that we may be found faithful to Thee.' Their prayer was answered, for forty frozen bodies were found next morning."

Found Dead in Bed.—Mr. Robert Service observes: "I arrived at a gospel meeting one evening rather late. As I entered, a woman who had been taken slightly ill was coming out. Another lady accompanied her to a side room, and there spoke to her about her soul, urging her to accept Christ at once. She resented being spoken to in so direct and personal a manner. Ill as she was, she scowled angrily upon her kind friend. Presently, however, she listened respectfully, and as well as she was able, to the message of Christ's love to her. I do not know if she did close with the offer of salvation, but I trust she did, for on the second night after her illness she was found dead in bed." A similar sudden end overtook two wealthy gentlemen lately, who were both found dead in their bedrooms, without any previous illness, namely, Mr. Charles Hengler, the owner of some circuses, and Lord Wolverton, who died worth fifteen million dollars, and whose previous day had been spent at races and a theatre."

The Elder and the Blacksmith.—A Scotch evangelist related: "There was in one of our churches an elder who was very anxious about the salvation of a certain blacksmith in the neighborhood. One day, while visiting his minister, he felt that man's salvation laid more heavily on his heart than ever. The minister and he both prayed about the man, and as the good elder left the manse it was snowing heavily, just one of those nights in which everyone who has a home would wish to be there; but disregarding the fury of the elements, he mounted his horse and rode to the blacksmith. As he came up he could hear him working. Tying his horse to a ring at the door, he entered, and walking straight up to the smith, said, as he grasped his horny hand, 'Oh, my friend, I am very anxious about your salvation, about your soul.' That was all he said, and going out he rode home. Half-an-hour later the smith came to him and said, 'Sir, I am very anxious about my own soul.' And soon, by the Holy Spirit, he was led to accept Christ, and found salvation."

A Young Lady Paralyzed after Dancing.—Mr. Thompson said: "I heard of a young lady in London, who was engaged to be married to an officer in the British army. By the grace of God he became converted, and immediately wrote to the young lady telling her of the great change that had taken place, and offering to her the cup of salvation from which he himself had drunk, that they might together travel Zionwards. She wrote back saying, 'The winter season is just beginning, and I have many engagements; besides, we have a dance on Thursday to which I must go, but if you call on Friday, I will tell you.' She had a whole winter's engagements, and she could not make up her mind to give them up even to secure eternal life. She was at the ball on the Thursday, and returning home tired and worn out she seated herself by the open window, for she was very warm. Next morning her maid went to wake her as usual, but as she got no response to her repeated knocks at the door, she entered, and there the young lady lay over the side of her bed, paralyzed. A doctor, who was summoned, pronounced her to be dying, and with only one or two hours to live. Word was at once sent to the officer to whom she was engaged. He hastened to her home, thinking there might still be time for her to be saved through a penitent faith in Christ. There was time, but whether she was able to make her peace with God or not must remain unknown. The tongue that would have spoken, or the hand that might have written the answer, were both stricken with paralysis."

BRILLIANT BITTERNESS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon, Preached last Sunday Morning, April 22, 1888.

"There fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood." Rev. 8: 10, 11.

An Extraordinary King of the Fifth Century—Legend of a Heaven-sent Sword — The Three Divisions of his Captives—His Three Coffins—Embittered Lives—Their Baleful Influence—Morning and Evening Stars in Society—Wormwood in Parental Thrones—Stars of Wit—The Humorist a Public Benefactor—Stars of Worldly Prosperity — Often Overbearing — The Bitter Water Sweetened—The Only Means—Star Nations of the Past—The Star of the Free Nation—Magnificent Possibilities and Awful Perils.

PATRICK and Lowth, Thomas Scott, Matthew Henry, Albert Barnes, and some other commentators say that the star Wormwood of my text was a type of Attila, King of the Huns. He was so called because he was brilliant as a star, and, like wormwood, he embittered everything he touched. We have studied the Star of Bethlehem, and the Morning Star of the Revelation, and the Star of Peace, but my subject this hour calls us to gaze at the star Wormwood.

A more extraordinary character history does not furnish than this man, Attila, the King of the Huns.

One day a wounded heifer came limping along through the fields, and a herdsman followed its bloody track on the grass to see where the heifer was wounded, and went on back, further and further, until he came to a sword fast in the earth, the point downward as though it had dropped from the heavens, and against the edges of this sword the heifer had been cut. The herdsman pulled up that sword and presented it to Attila. Attila said that sword must have dropped from the heavens from the grasp of the god Mars, and its being given to him meant that Attila should conquer and govern the whole earth. Other mighty men have been delighted at being called liberators, or the Merciful, or the Good, but Attila called himself, and demanded that others call him,

The Scourge of God.

At the head of seven hundred thousand troops, mounted on Cappadocian horses, he swept everything, from the Adriatic to the Black Sea. He put his iron heel on Macedonia and Greece and Thrace. He made Milan and Pavia and Padua and Verona beg for mercy, which he bestowed not. The Byzantine castles, to meet his ruinous levy, put up at auction massive silver tables and vases of solid gold. A city captured by him, the inhabitants were brought out and put into three classes: The first class, those who could bear arms, who must immediately enlist under Attila or be butchered; the second class, the beautiful women, who were made captives to the Huns; the third class, the aged men and women, who were robbed of everything and let go back to the city to pay heavy tax.

It was a common saying that the grass never grew where the hoof of Attila's horse had trod.

His Armies

reddened the waters of the Seine and the Moselle and the Rhine with carnage, and fought on the Catalonian plains the fiercest battle since the world stood. On and on until all those who could not oppose him with arms lay prostrate on their faces in prayer, and, a cloud of dust seen in the distance, a bishop cried: "It is the aid of God; and all the people took up the cry: "It is the aid of God;" As the cloud of dust was blown aside, the banners of reinforcing armies marched in to help against Attila, the Scourge of God. The most unimportant occurrences he used as a supernatural resource, and after three months of failure to capture the city of Aquileia, and when his army had given up the siege, the flight of a stork and her young from the tower of the city was taken by him as a sign that he was to capture the city; and his army, inspired with the same occurrence, resumed the siege and took the walls at a point from which the stork had emerged.

Slain on the evening of his marriage by his bride Ildico, who was hired for the assassination, his followers bewailed him, not with tears but with blood, cutting themselves with knives and lances. He was put into three coffins, the first of iron, the second of silver, and the third of gold. He was buried by night, and into were poured the most valuable coin and precious stones, amounting to the wealth of a kingdom. The grave-diggers and all those who assisted at the burial were massacred, so that it would never be known where so much wealth was entombed. The Roman empire conquered the world, but Attila conquered the Roman empire. He was right in calling himself a scourge but instead of being the Scourge of God, he was the scourge of hell. Because of his brilliancy and bitterness, the commentators were right in believing him to be the star Wormwood of the text. As the regions he devastated were parts most opulent with fountains and streams and rivers, you see how graphic my text is: "There fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood."

His Grave

Have you ever thought how many

Embittered Lives

there are all about us, misanthropic, morbid, acrid, saturnine? The European plant from which wormwood is extracted, Artemisia Absinthium, is a perennial plant, and all the year round it is ready to exude its oil. And in many human lives there is a perennial distillation of acrid experiences. Yea, there are some whose whole work is to shed a baleful influence on others. There are Attilas of the home, or Attilas of the social circle, or Attilas of the church, or Attilas of the State, and one-third of the waters of all the world, if not two-thirds the waters, are poisoned by the falling of the star Wormwood. It is not complimentary to human nature that most men, as soon as they get great power, become overbearing. The more power men have the better, if their power be used for good. The less power men have the better, if they use it for evil.

Birds circle round and round and round before they swoop upon that which they are aiming for. And if my discourse so far has been swinging round and round, this moment it drops straight on your heart and asks the question:

Is Your Life a Benediction to others, or an embitterment, a blessing or a curse, a balsam or a wormwood?

Some of you, I know, are morning stars, and you are making the dawning life of your children bright with gracious influences, and you are beaming upon all the opening enterprises of philanthropic and Christian endeavor, and you are heralds of that day of gospelization which will yet flood all the mountains and valleys of our sin-cursed earth. Hail, morning star! Keep on shining with encouragement and Christian hope!

Some of you are evening stars, and you are cheering the last days of old people; and though a cloud sometimes comes over you through the querulousness or unreasonableness of your old father and mother, it is only for a moment, and the star soon comes out clear again and is seen from all the balconies of the neighborhood. The old people will forgive your occasional shortcomings, for they themselves several times lost their patience with you when you were young, and slapped you when you did not deserve it. Hail, evening star! Hang on the darkening sky your diamond coronet.

But are any of you the star Wormwood?

Do You Scold and Growl

from the thrones paternal or maternal? Are your children everlastingly pecked at? Are you always crying "Hush!" to the merry voices and swift feet, and their laughter, which occasionally trickles through at wrong times, and is suppressed by them until they can hold it no longer, and all the barriers burst into unlimited guffaw and cachinnation, as in high weather the water has trickled through a slight opening in the mill-dam, but afterward makes wider and wider breach until it carries all before it with irresistible freshet. Do not be too much offended at the noise your children now make. It will be still enough when one of them is dead. Then you would give your right hand to hear one shout from their silent voices, or one step from the still foot. You will not any of you have to wait very long before your house is stiller than you want it. Alas that there are so many homes not known to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, where children are put on the limits, and whacked and cuffed and ear-pulled, and senselessly called to order, and answered sharp and suppressed, until it is a wonder that under such processes they do not all turn out Modocs and Nana Sahibs!

What is your influence upon the neighborhood, the town, or the city of your residence? I will suppose that you are

A Star of Wit.

What kind of rays do you shoot forth? Do you use that splendid faculty to irradiate the world or to rankle it? I bless all the apostolic college of humorists. The man that makes me laugh is my benefactor. I do not thank anybody to make me cry. I can do that without any assistance. We all cry enough, and have enough to cry about. God bless all skilful punsters, all reparteeists, all propounders of ingenious conundrums, all those who mirthfully surprise us with unusual juxtaposition of words. Thomas Hood and Charles Lamb and Sidney Smith had a divine mission, and so have their successors in these times. They stir into the acid beverage of life the saccharine. They make the cup of earthly existence, which is sometimes stale, effervesce and bubble. They placate animosities. They foster longevity. They slay follies and absurdities which all the sermons of all the pulpits cannot reach.

They have for examples Elijah, who made fun of the Baalites when they called down fire and it did not come, suggesting that their heathen god had gone hunting, or was off on a journey, or was asleep, and nothing but vociferation could wake him, saying: "Cry aloud, for he is a god; either he is talking or pursuing, or peradventure he sleepeth and must be awaked." They have an example in Christ, who with healthful sarcasm showed up the lying, hypocritical Pharisees by suggesting that such perfect people like themselves needed no improvements, saying: "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick."

But what use are you making of your wit? Is it besmirched with profanity and uncleanness? Do you employ it in amusement at physical defects for which the victims are not responsible? Are your powers of mimicry used to put religion in contempt? Is it a bunch of nettlesome invective? Is it a bolt of unjust scorn? Is it fun at others' misfortune? Is it glee at their disappointment and defeat? Is it bitterness put drop by drop into a cup? Is it like the squeezing of Artemisia Absinthium into a draught already distastefully pungent? Then you are the star Wormwood. Yours is the fun of a rattlesnake trying how well it can sting. It is the fun of a hawk trying how quick it can strike out the eye of a dove.

But I will change this, and suppose you are

A Star of Worldly Prosperity.

Then you have large opportunity. You can encourage that artist by buying his picture. You can improve the fields, the stables, the highway, by introducing higher style of fowl and horse and cow and sheep. You can bless the world with pomological achievement in the orchards. You can advance arboriculture and arrest this deathful iconoclasm of the American forests. You can put a piece of sculpture into the niche of that public academy. You can endow a college. You can stocking a thousand bare feet from the winter frost. You can build a church. You can put a missionary of Christ on that foreign shore. You can help ransom a world. A rich man with his heart right—can you tell me how much good a James Lenox or a George Peabody or a Peter Cooper or a William E. Dodge did while living, or is doing now that he is dead? There is not a city, town, or neighborhood that has not glorious specimens of consecrated wealth.

But suppose you grind the face of the poor. Suppose when a man's wages are due you make him wait for them because he cannot help himself. Suppose that, because his family is sick and he has had extra expenses, he should politely ask you to raise his wages for this year, and you roughly tell him if he wants a better place to go and get it. Suppose by your manner you act as though he were nothing and you were everything. Suppose you are selfish and Overbearing and Arrogant.

Your first name ought to be Attila and your last name Attila, because you are the star Wormwood, and you have embittered one-third, if not three-thirds, of the waters that roll past your employees and operatives and dependents and associates; and the long line of carriages which the undertaker orders for your funeral, in order to make the occasion respectable, will be filled with twice as many dry, tearless eyes as there are persons occupying them.

There is an erroneous idea abroad that there are only a few geniuses. There are millions of them; that is, men and women who have especial adaptation and quickness for some one thing. It may be great, it may be small. The circle may be like the circumference of the earth or no larger than a thimble. There are thousands of geniuses here this morning, and in some one thing you are a star.

What Kind of a Star are You?

You will be in this world but a few minutes. As compared with eternity the stay of the longest life on earth is not more than a minute. What are we doing with that minute? Are we embittering the domestic or social or political fountains, or are we like Moses, who, when the Israelites in the Wilderness complained that the waters of Lake Marah were bitter and they could not drink them, their leader cut off the branch of a certain tree and threw that branch into the water, and it became sweet and slaked the thirst of the suffering host? Are we with a branch of the Tree of Life sweetening all the brackish fountains that we can touch?

Dear Lord, send us all out on Thy mission. All around us embittered lives—embittered by persecution, embittered by hypercriticism, embittered by poverty, embittered by pain, embittered by injustice, embittered by sin. Why not go forth and sweeten them by smile, by inspiring words, by benefactions, by hearty counsel, by prayer, by gospelized behavior! Let us remember that if we are wormwood to others we are wormwood to ourselves, and our life will be bitter and our eternity bitterer. The gospel of Jesus Christ is that is sufficient. It sweetens the disposition. It sweetens the manners. It sweetens life. It sweetens mysterious Providences. It sweetens afflictions. It sweetens death. It sweetens everything. I have heard people asked in social company: "If you could have three wishes gratified, what would your three wishes be?" If I could have three wishes met this morning I tell you what they would be. First: More of the grace of God. Second: More of the grace of God. Third: More of the grace of God. In the door-yard of my brother John, missionary in Amoy, China, there is a tree called the two characteristics of which are that it always grows higher than its surroundings, and its leaves take the form of a crown. If this emperor-tree be planted by a rose-bush it grows a little higher than the bush, and spreads out above it a crown. If it be planted by the side of another tree, it grows a little higher than that tree and spreads above it a crown. Would God that this religion of Christ, a more wonderful emperor-tree, might overshadow all your lives! are you lowly in ambition or circumstance, putting over you its crown; are you high in talent and position, putting over you its crown. Oh, for more of the saccharine in our lives and less of the wormwood!

The Only Sweetening Power

The Emperor-Tree,

What is true of individuals is true of nations. God sets them up to revolve as stars, but they may fall wormwood.

Star Nations.

Tyre—the atmosphere of the desert fragrant with spices coming in caravans to her fairs: all seas cleft into foam by the keels of her laden merchantmen: her markets rich with horses and camels from Togarmah, her bazaars filled with upholstery from Dedan, with emeralds and coral and agate from Syria, with wines from Helbon, with embroidered work from Ashur and Chilmad. Where now the gleam of her towers, where the roar of her chariots, where the masts of her ships? Let the fishermen who dry their nets where once she stood, let the sea that rushes upon the barreness where once she challenged the admiration of all nations, let the barbarians who set their rude tents where once her palaces glittered, answer the question. She was a star, but by her own sin turned to wormwood and has fallen.

Hundred-gated Thebes—for all time to be the study of antiquarian and hieroglyphist; her stupendous ruins spread over twenty-seven miles; her sculptures presenting in figures of warrior and chariot the victories with which the now forgotten kings of Egypt shook the nations; her obelisks and columns; Carnac and Luxor, the stupendous temples of her pride. Who can imagine the greatness of Thebes in those days when the hippodrome rang with her sports, and foreign royalty bowed at her shrines, and her avenues roared with the wheels of processions in the wake of returning conquerors? What dashed down the vision of chariots and temples and thrones? What hands pulled upon the columns of her glory? What ruthlessness defaced her sculptured wall and broke obelisks and left her indescribable temples

Great Skeletons of Granite?

What spirit of destruction spread the lair of wild beasts in her royal sepulchres, and taught the miserable cottagers of to-day to build huts in the courts of her temples, and sent desolation and ruin skulking behind the obelisks and dodging among the sarcophagi and leaning against the columns and stooping under the arches and weeping in the waters, which go mournfully by as though they were carrying the tears of all ages? Let the mummies break their long silence and come up to shiver in the desolation, and point to fallen gates and shattered statues and defaced sculpture, responding: "Thebes built not one temple to God. Thebes hated righteousness and loved sin. Thebes was a star, but she turned to wormwood and has fallen."

Babylon—with her two hundred and fifty towers and her brazen gates and her embattled walls, the splendor of the earth gathered within her palaces, her hanging gardens built by Nebuchadnezzar to please his bride Amyittis, who had been brought up in a mountainous country and could not endure the flat country round Babylon—these hanging gardens built, terrace above terrace, till at the height of four hundred feet there were woods waving and fountains playing, the verdure, the foliage, the glory, looking as if a mountain were on the wing. On the tip-top a king walking with his queen, among statues snowy white, looking up at birds brought from distant lands, and drinking out of tankards of solid gold, or looking off over rivers and lakes upon nations subdued and tributary, crying: "Is not this which I have built?" What battering-ram smote the walls? What ploughshare upturned the gardens? What army shattered the brazen gates? What long, fierce blast of storm put out this light which illumined the world? What crash of discord drove down the music that poured from palace window and garden grove, and called the banqueters to their revel and the dancers to their feet? I walk upon the scene of desolation to find an answer, and pick up pieces of bitumen and brick and broken pottery, the remains of Babylon, and as in the silence of the night I hear the surging of that billow of desolation which rolls over the scene, I hear the wild waves saying: "Babylon was proud. Babylon was impure. Babylon was a star, but by sin she turned to wormwood and has fallen."

Great Babylon

The Star of the West.

From the persecutions of the Pilgrim Fathers and the Huguenots in other lands, God set upon these shores a nation. The council-fires of the aborigines went out in the greater light of a free government. The sound of the war-whoop was exchanged for the thousand wheels of enterprise and progress. The mild winters, the fruitful summers, the healthful skies charmed from other lands a race of hardy men, who loved God and wanted to be free. Before the woodman's axe forests fell, and rose again into ships' masts and churches' pillars. Cities on the bank of lakes begin to rival cities by the sea. The land quakes with the rush of the rail-car, and the waters are churned white with the steamer's wheel. Fabulous bushels of Western wheat meet on the way fabulous tons of Eastern coal. Furs from the North pass on the rivers fruits from the South. And trading in the same market is Maine lumberman, and South Carolina rice merchant, and Ohio farmer, and Alaska fur-dealer. And churches and schools and asylums scatter light and love and mercy and salvation upon sixty millions of people.

I pray that our nation may not copy the crimes of the nations that have perished, and our cup of blessing turn to wormwood, and, like them, we go down. I am by nature and by grace an optimist, and I expect that this country will continue to advance until the world shall put on millennial era, and that when Christ comes again He will set His throne somewhere between the Alleghanies and the Sierra Nevadas. But be not deceived!

Our Only Safety

is in righteousness toward God and justice toward man. If we forget the goodness of the Lord to this land, and break His Sabbaths, and improve not by the dire disasters that have again and again come to us as a people, and we learn saving lesson neither from civil war nor raging epidemic, nor drouth, nor mildew, nor scourge of locust and grasshopper; if the political corruption which has poisoned the fountains of public virtue, and beslimed the high places of authority, making free government at times a hissing and a byword in all the earth; if the drunkenness and licentiousness that stagger and blaspheme in the streets of our great cities, as though they were reaching after the fame of a Corinth and a Sodom, are not repented of, we will yet see the smoke of the pillars of our National and State capitols will fall more disastrously than when Samson pulled down Dagon; and future historians will record, upon the page bedewed with generous tears, the story that the free nation of the West arose in splendor which made the world stare. It had magnificent possibilities. It forgot God. It hated justice. It hugged its crime. It halted on its high march. It reeled under the blow of calamity. It fell. And as it was going down, all the despotisms of earth, from the top of bloody thrones, began to shout, "Aha, so would we have it!" while struggling and oppressed peoples looked out from dungeon bars, with tears and groans, and cries of untold agony, the scorn of those and the woe of these uniting in the exclamation, "Look yonder! There fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; and the name of the star is called Wormwood!"

Our Nation's Ruin;

Volume X. of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1887, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes, of 1883, 1884, and 1885 are also for sale. We have none prior to 1883.

THE STORM CLOUDS GATHERING.

Two Momentous Cablegrams—The Struggle Predicted by the Inspired Writers — Its Result Outlined—The Map of Europe Rearranged—The Materials of the Conflagration—The Pacific Situation Suddenly Disturbed—Boulanger Come to the Front—Journalistic Portraits of Him—His Rumored Napoleonic Descent—The Fighting Kaiser—A Woman's Description of Him—The Rising Waiting his Call.

THE cable last week, brought almost simultaneously two startling communications, the significance of which every student of prophecy cannot fail to appreciate. They were (1) the sudden crisis unexpectedly developed in the physical condition of the Emperor of Germany, which was of so serious a nature, that a decree was hastily issued, making the Crown Prince regent or virtually Emperor, and (2) the triumphant election of General Boulanger in France, as a deputy of the Legislature, by the Department of the North. The momentous meaning of these two events, which in one week have come upon Europe like a thunder clap, is realized when we remember the warnings which prophetic expositors have uttered in this and past times, which were based upon the conclusions derived from their study of the prophecies.

The Warnings

were to the effect that a gigantic upheaval of European nationalities was imminent, and that it would probably be opened by a fierce struggle between Germany and France. The Rev. M. Baxter explained fully in these columns last year, and with greater detail in his pamphlets,* the reason which had led him and many eminent expositors, notably "the prince of commentators," Matthew Henry, to believe that this struggle could not be delayed much, if at all, beyond next year. The chief of these reasons was, that the twenty-three kingdoms which now occupy the area of Cæsar's Roman Empire are, by annexation, conquest, or diplomatic re-arrangement, to be transformed into ten kingdoms in fulfilment of the type which Nebuchadnezzar saw in the image with ten toes (Daniel 2: 41, 42) and which Daniel, by Divine illumination, explained as a kingdom divided into ten. In a later vision granted to Daniel himself, the same type was seen (Daniel 7: 23, 24) in the fourth beast with ten horns, which, as the angel informed him, represented a kingdom out of which ten kings should arise. As this fourth kingdom is clearly which in the zenith of its greatness girdled the Mediterranean Sea, and included England, too, it is evident that when the prophecy is fulfilled it will become a decem-regal power, cohering by iron-bound treaties, and eventually controlled and directed by one diabolically possessed monster, the Napoleonic Antichrist, who, either in his own person or dynastically, would present to the world the unique spectacle of a being miraculously raised to life after being slain by the sword. The result of this impending gigantic international struggle is thus revealed, but not the process. It is not, however, difficult for any reader of history to arrive at the conclusion that it will be by war; and the precision with which Daniel fixes the dates as revealed to him, renders it clear that the time for the commencement of those wars is now at hand.

The Roman Empire,

The student of prophecy, therefore, being sure that God saw all things from the beginning, and revealed the future to His servant for the enlightenment and preparation of His people, looks around for signs of its fulfilment. A few weeks ago few of those signs were recognizable. France had just peaceably elected a President of pacific disposition, who took pains to assure the nations in general, and Germany in particular, of his amity and cordiality. His assurances were accepted in good faith, and the statesmen of Germany congratulated themselves on his elevation to the Presidential chair. Boulanger, the firebrand, the one centre about which the warlike elements of France clung, was in disgrace in a remote province, the subject of the gibes and sneers of the party in power.

A similar peaceful aspect was seen in Germany. The warlike Emperor, the man who, guided by Bismarck, had with the sword in hand won glory and increased territory for the Empire, was dead, and in his place stood his son, a man of peace, notoriously disinclined to be guided by Bismarck, and opposed to the policy known as that of blood and iron. To-day both aspects are changed, and the change has come with astounding suddenness. The Emperor is reported to be dying—may even be dead before these lines are read—his son and successor, a young hot-headed aspirant to the fame of his ancestor, Frederick II., who deluged Europe with blood, is appointed regent; and in France the whilom despised Boulanger has returned to Paris with the confidence of an enormous section of the French people, publicly and emphatically declared in him. The gravity of the situation is realized when we examine the respective characters and aims of of the rival nations. Boulanger who was dismissed from his military command by the Government, and was then triumphantly elected to the French Parliament by the Department of the North, in a contest in which he received 172,272 votes, being nearly 100,000 more than those polled for his chief antagonist, is now the most prominent figure in France. Of his elevation a French journal, the Evenement says: "The success of Boulanger is very great. What will the member-elect of the Nord do now? He has declared that he would go on to the end. The end is the dictatorship of a soldier raised up by a coalition of the enemies of the Republic.

The Champions

M. Blowitz, the French correspondent of the London Times, who has achieved a world-wide reputation as a sagacious observer of current events, says, in reference to the address by which General Boulanger endeavored to allay the suspicions prevalent respecting him: "Louis Napoleon talked exactly in this strain from 1848 to 1851. He, too, wished only to be President of the Republic; but when President, he made himself Emperor; and, as President, Boulanger might become Emperor. The causes of this success defy analysis. It cannot be explained nor combated. Universal suffrage has its freaks, and to try to stem it is hopeless. General Boulanger and his satellites have invented nothing—they simply imitate precedents, and universal suffrage asks nothing else. They demand, like Louis Napoleon, revision and dissolution; they are ready, like him and his abettors, to risk everything. There is still an alliance of anarchists and absolutists, and just as Louis Napoleon said that the Empire was peace, so General Boulanger says he desires the peaceful regeneration of the country."

According to M. Joffrin, the socialist municipal Councillor, who went down to oppose General Boulanger, "the peasants are led to believe that he is a natural son of Napoleon, by a Russian princess, Prophetical almanacs are distributed which fix the 7th of May, 1890, for his defeat of the Germans." When we add to all this the rumor that he is a close friend of Prince Jerome Napoleon, though, for prudential reasons, the friendship is a secret one, and that one of Prince Jerome's sons disbursed money and canvassed for him in his election, General Boulanger's popularity and probable return to power become increasingly significant.

The German Champion,

the son of the Emperor, is a young man of twenty-nine, who has openly espoused the cause of Prince Bismarck in antagonism to his father. He has had no training as a statesman, but has become familiar with all military details, and has already displayed a remarkable genius in the manœuvering of large bodies of troops. The Berlin correspondent of the New York Times, in describing him, says: "Prince William is, in truth, as purely North German by heredity, as wholly a product of Wend and Saxon and Goth and Borussian intermixture, as can be found. One may call him, indeed, a culmination of the Hohenzollern type of soldier-statesman, reached, curiously enough, by the same crossing of blood which produced Frederick the Great. The mother of that wonderful warrior was also a Guelph—Sophie Dorothea—the sister of George I. It is passing strange that when, a century and a half later, a Hohenzollern Crown Prince next again takes a wife from the Brunswick House, the eldest son should again be marked by nature for a world fighter. Why this result should follow is not clear. Whatever else the Guelphs may be, they distinctly are not a military family. Yet when a Sophie Dorothea or a Victoria Adelaide is wedded by a Frederick William of Hohenzollern, lo! the issue is

A Born Captain of Men.

I think I have related before in these columns a remark which I heard made here in Berlin two years ago, during the Congo Conference. It was at a state function, and I stood beside an elderly lady who had been in Berlin for many years, and who had been in a position to know the younger members of the imperial family as well and closely as she could have known her own nephews and nieces. In the course of talk I asked her: "What kind of a man is the young Prince William?" "I don't call him a man at all," she replied quickly and with emphasis. "He is a brute." I can fancy an elderly woman of a couple of generations back, who was attached to the suite of the Empress Josephine, speaking in precisely the same words of the first Napoleon.

Apparently all the women who have had to do with the bringing up of Prince William hold him in horror and detestation. I have had numerous proofs of this, although I have never been able to fasten upon any specifice reasons for it. Their dislike for him is based on a general conception of his character. This view is that he is utterly cold, entirely selfish, wantonly cruel, a young man without conscience or compassion, or any softening virtues whatever. That he has great abilities they all admit; but they stop there. Heart he has none, upon their reckoning. And I am bound to say that if you look into his face with this preconceived notion of the young man's character, you can find plenty of signs which seem to substantiate it.

Nobody with eyes in his head could have passed the week just ended in Berlin without recognizing that if a firebrand comes to the throne, the materials are close-crowded for

A Terrible Conflagration.

The army here in Germany will utterly swamp what organized pacific instincts there are in the empire the moment a young fighting Kaiser draws his sword and cries out: "Who will follow me?" The fact of the existence of Bismarck's colossal army will magnify itself in the popular mind; the spirit in which he built it up, the peaceful intent, the patriotic aim—will all vanish like steam on a lamp chimney.

"The military class is all-powerful in the upper, middle, and higher grades of German society. Very little of provocation, or popular appeals to national feeling, would make it master of nine-tenths of the German people. Kaiser William II. in the glamor of his youthful distinction of face and figure, of his deep Teutonic prejudices, of his all-controlling belief in himself and his race and his destiny—could hurl a practically united Germany in warfare east, west, or south a month after he had ascended the Hohenzollern throne. The whole German nation from Basil to Königsberg would rise to his enthusiastic support. This is not a pleasant or humane conclusion, but it is a necessary one."

The materials of confederation are thus vividly portrayed as existing in the rival nations,

* The three pamphlets—1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc. 2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors. 3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444—, as shown by Daniel's Dates; sold altogether, in one colored cover at 20 cents, 144 pages, at Christian Herald Office, 63 Bible House, New York.

and it is not only students of prophecy, but secular journalists, who foresee the impending storm. The New York Herald asks: "Is history to repeat itself with Boulanger as Napoleon the Fourth?

Is France to pass under a new military despotism? As a general proposition, the political adventures of Boulanger, or of any French commander, would concern us little. But the relations of Continental Europe are so unfortunate, that imminent war hangs over the nations like one of those impending avalanches which the cry of a chamois hunter might dislodge and send raging down the mountain. A breath, a murmur, may bring war—and with war misfortune to mankind. Since Sedan, eighteen years ago, public opinion has been dreading lest that word came from France. General Boulanger may say what he will—his election in this Department of the Nord can only mean a moral declaration of war. We may see the Napoleon experiment repeated."

IN PERIL AMONG INDIANS.

Among the thrilling incidents related in the Minnesota Missionary, by that devoted laborer for Christ among the Indians, Bishop Whipple, is the following, which occurred during the awful Sioux outbreak of 1862:"The Sioux attacked the trading-posts and killed the employees. When they came to Major Forbes's place, the clerk in charge, Mr. George Spencer, was wounded and fled up-stairs. The store was filled with goods, so they would not burn it. Wakeautawa, 'His Thunder,' a friend of Spencer's, passed through the Indians, and went up-stairs, and taking Spencer in his arms carried him to his lodge. He then sat by his side with a double-barrelled gun, and as the Indians came to kill him said, 'Kill him, if you dare; two of you shall die for one! He is my codah (friend). I said I would save his life, and I will.' For days and weeks that faithful man guarded his friend until rescued. Wakeautawa was afterward a scout under General Sibley, and was killed; and to the credit of Mr. Spencer, he showed his gratitude by caring for the wife and children of his Indian friend.

A Bible in a Blanket.

"Lorenzo Lawrence rescued Mrs. Sweet and her children. Other Day saved good Dr. Williamson, the missionary families and employees of Yellow Medicine. Wakashaw, Good Thunder, Taopi, and others planned the deliverance of all the captives. Simon Angmani and others performed deeds of heroism in defence of prisoners. Wahchaucamaza, at the risk of life, carried a message through the hostile camp, creeping through the grass until he could deliver it to Robertson, who carried it to Fort Ripley. Good Thunder's present wife, Sarah Farnum, took the Bible from the mission chapel, and wrapped it in a blanket, and when she could, sent me word, 'The words of the Great Spirit are safe. I send you the good news to make your heart glad.'

An Execution Prevented.

"Time would fail me to recall all the incidents which showed the fidelity of our friends. They were surrounded by savage foes, mad with hate, and drunk with blood. In some cases these Christian Indians were threatened with death. It did not move them. 'Kill me, if you wish; but you cannot keep me from doing what is right. I am not afraid to die.' Taopi and about 100 friendly Indians came to Faribault. The people were indignant, and some foolish threats were made to kill Taopi. He came one day to see me with Alexander Faribault. He handed me a paper and said, 'Read this.' It was a certificate of General Sibley's. 'The bearer, Taopi, or "Wounded Man," is a civilized chief of the Sioux, who is entitled to the gratitude of the nation for having, with others, rescued over 200 white women and children during the Sioux war. H. H. Sibley, Colonel commanding.' Said Taopi, 'I saved your people from death. If you Christians have the same law as the Sioux, that when one man dies another shall die in his place, and for this your people would kill me, tell them not to shoot me like a dog, but to send for me to come down into the square, and I will show them how a man can die.' This interview was printed in the village paper, and we heard no more of killing Taopi.

Called by the Great Spirit.

"Brave, noble Taopi; he would have suffered had I not been able, through the kindness of friends, to care for him. One day I received a letter. 'Come quick, I can't see plain; the Great Spirit has called me for the last journey. I am not afraid to go, for His Son, Jesus, is going with me, and I shall not be lonesome on the road. Come, for I want to see you, and hear you once more.' I cannot forget that death-bed, where the very peace of God rested on the dying Christian. He sleeps in Maplelawn Cemetery, with his faithful wife Nancy, and I have placed a white tombstone over the grave of one of the truest men I ever knew.

"A few of these Indians still live at Faribault. Most of these women were removed to the mission a few years later. We bade them good-by at the Lord's Table. After the service these women came one by one and took my wife's hand, and with tears kissed it, and said, 'In Heaven to meet you I hope.' Blessed words for us all, that after a little more work, a little more sickness, a little more sorrow, there will come 'the rest for the weary' in the home where all partings are over."

IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

A merciful preservation, in a time of peril, is reported in a letter received last week from Rev. W. F. Re Qua, who, as our readers are aware, is laboring among the Choctaws, in the Indian Territory, relying solely on God for his support. On Sunday, April 1, he held a meeting at a considerable distance from his home, having travelled thither in a lumber-wagon which the "head-man" kindly drove over to convey Mr. and Mrs. Re Qua, their little daughter and their niece. After the night service they were returning by the same conveyance, when, the night being very dark, the "head-man" mistook the way, drove up on the side of a bad crossing and came in contact with a huge branch, which threw the whole party out of the wagon. The terrified team started off at a mad gallop, but providentially missing the prostrate missionary and his family. They were all severely shaken, though all escaped without serious injury, except Mr. Re Qua, who was badly lamed. This is the second accident of the kind which the missionary has met with in the course of his perilous work, but, as he thankfully acknowledges, he has been wonderfully kept from many other dangers.

Mr. Re Qua desires us to thank the friends who are contributing toward the purchase of the tent and organ for the summer work. Thirty-eight dollars toward the hundred and fifty have already been sent to him, and he is full of faith and confidence that the balance will come in time for the campaign which he has planned. It has been suggested to him that if another edition of Mrs. Re Qua's poems, "Stones for the Temple," were issued and sold at one dollar, and seven cents for postage, the profit on it might help them considerably in their work. The book is heartily commended by Mr. Ira D. Sankey, Miss Frances E. Willard, Mrs. Ella Wilcox, and other well-known authors.

A THANKFUL CONGREGATION.

In a communication to the Spirit of Missions from Bishop Ferguson of Cape Palmas, Africa, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on March 18, 1886, he thus describes his visit to a village of Congoes near the settlement of Gardnerville: "After a rather tedious journey on foot of two and a quarter hours, we reached the village, and proceeded at once to an unfinished thatched building, intended for a place of worship. From that spot not a house was to be seen; but a messenger was despatched to announce our arrival, and very soon several men and women made their appearance from among the bushes in different directions. The assembly was composed of Methodists, Baptists, and members of our Church. [Protestant Episcopal.] On introducing ourselves, stating that we had come to see the religious state of things, three of the men stood up and addressed us by turns; one of whom, a Baptist brother, spoke in a most pathetic strain. He said they were glad that we had come to see their sad condition; they were living like heathen: no church, no school, no training for their children, who were growing up in wild ignorance; that some of them had undertaken to build the house under whose roof we were assembled; that it was not intended for any particular denomination, only that they might have a place to meet in on Sundays.

A Bargain.

"Our hearts were deeply moved by this address. Appeal for help was never more urgent anywhere. It was no fancied picture; for there the facts stood before our eyes in all their startling realities. I could not avoid promising that if they would complete the house and have the land on which it stood deeded to the mission, I would give them a school-teacher and arrange for regular services. Could our Church people in America have witnessed the scene which immediately followed this announcement, the women raising their hands to heaven and exclaiming, 'Thank God, our prayers are heard! Our poor children will go to school now instead of spending all day fishing in the mangrove swamp! Praise the Lord!' I am sure they would make it possible for me to fulfill this promise!"

Contributions to the funds of the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church should be sent to the Mission Rooms, 22 Bible House, New York. Cheques being made payable to R. Fulton Cutting.

HIGH CASTE LEARNERS.

An unprecedented work in India is described in a letter from Miss Lyman, of Bombay, to the Missionary Herald. She says: "Nearly a year ago a high-caste Hindu woman living in Parell, three miles from here, came to request Mrs. Hume to open a Sabbath-school in her house. This Mrs. Hume did, having as many as fifty-four scholars, with an average attendance of thirty women and girls each Sabbath. The boys also were so eager to hear the gospel stories that Mr. Abbott and a native helper opened a class for them on the veranda, where as many as seventy-five men and boys gather to listen to them. After a while this woman came again to beg Mrs. Hume to open a day-school in her house, and the week after our arrival it was started. Yesterday the school was closed for a week's vacation. I wish that some of our friends in America could have been there to hear those girls, after six weeks' instruction, read so well, and repeat Scripture verses and tell Bible stories which Mrs. Hume had taught them in the Sabbath-school. Some of the native Christians were present, and one of them said afterwards that hitherto he had not had sufficient confidence in the work to pray for it; but when he saw it he had to pray to God then and there, for it was so wonderful. Now, the women in Parell beg for a teacher for themselves, and thus two teachers and an assistant are needed for the work there.

"This is a wonderful opening—an unheard-of thing in the past, for a Hindu house of a very high caste to be opened to Christians.

"The work going on here has been a constant source of surprise to me. I came from a Christian church in a Christian country, but I have been forced to own to myself that it is not doing more than half the work for the Master that this little church of one hundred and ten members is doing, and here they are all poor, many of them living in only one room."

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes, by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents. For sale at this office 63 Bible House, New York.

New Edition of Rev. M. Baxter's Pamphlets.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1896, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

An Adverse Report on the Fisheries Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, the features of which were explained in our issues of February 23 and March 1, has been decided on by the Republican majority of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. This action did not cause any great surprise, as it was evident, even before the provisions of the treaty were published, that opposition to its ratification would be organized. Concern for the Irish vote in the Presidential election, party jealousy, and the natural inferences to be drawn from Mr. Chamberlain's silly boasting on his return, all operate against the treaty. The committee's decision was reached on a strict party vote. Messrs. Sherman, Edmunds, Frye, Evarts, and Dolph, Republicans, voting against a favorable report, and Messrs. Morgan, Brown, Saulsbury, and Payne, Democrats, supporting the treaty. The committee has also reported adversely the resolution providing for the discussion of the treaty in open session. This action as to secret sessions was also supported by the Democratic Senators, though only by a small majority. In connection with this matter, Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts, a Republican Senator, introduced a resolution on the 19th inst., providing that one of the official reporters of debates should be present when the treaty was taken up, and make a full report of the proceedings, and that such portions should be made public as a majority of the Senate should order.

The Bond Purchasing Bill which, as stated in these columns on April 12, the Senate returned to the House, with a scheme to substitute silver for surrendered national bank circulation tacked to it, will, in all probability, remain undisturbed in the pigeon-holes of the Ways and Means Committee room. There is no longer any necessity of acting upon it, the House having disposed of the question in another and more simple way last week. It passed a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the House that the Secretary of the Treasury has the authority, under the act of 1881, to purchase bonds with the surplus. Immediately following this Congressional action the Secretary of the Treasury issued a circular inviting proposals for the sale of United States bonds to the Government. Being asked in regard to it, he said he had not made up his mind as to the amount of bonds he would purchase, though the fact that proposals will be received daily, without limit as to time, might imply that he wanted to buy a large amount. The amount to be purchased, however, he said, depended almost entirely upon the amount offered and the prices asked. The surplus, as estimated at the Treasury Department, is now $105,000,000.

The Great Tariff Debate, Which Has Been awaited with so much interest, and which will engage the attention of Congress and of the country for at least several weeks, was begun in the House of Representatives on April 17. The special measure under consideration is the Mills Tariff Reduction Bill, a synopsis of which was given in these columns on March 8. Mr. Mills, of Texas, who, in his capacity as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, led the debate, as he had reported this bill, and also the bill for the reduction of Internal Revenue taxes, consolidated with it. The burden of his speech was the declaration that it was the cheaper cost of raw materials in England that enabled that country to compete with the United States. It was, he contended, the high tariff on the raw materials that made the cost of our manufactures high, and kept us from being the best manufacturing people in the world, as we were the best agricultural people. It was a suicidal policy that closed to us the markets of the world. Venerable Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, the champion of the protectionists, replied to Mr. Mills's argument. He spoke strongly in support of the policy of protection, and asserted that the enactment of the pending bill would paralyze the industry and enterprise of the American people and overthrow their manufacturing supremacy.

The Bill to Divide the Territory of Dakota, and to admit the southern portion as a State, passed the Senate on April 19, by the votes of 26 Republicans, who were opposed by 23 Democrats. The latter were in favor of admitting Dakota as one State, but all were opposed to dividing the Territory. The bill as passed declares the State of South Dakota a State of the United States of America, and ratifies the constitution which the people of South Dakota have formed by themselves. It fixes the boundaries of the State, and give the State concurrent jurisdiction of the Missouri River, and every other river bordering on the State. It provides that until the next census and apportionment South Dakota is to have two representatives in the House of Representatives, and, as a matter of course, like any other full-fledged State, two representatives in the United States Senate. That portion of the former Territory not within the State of South Dakota is to continue as a Territory under the name of North Dakota, with Bismarck as its capital.

The Death of Ex-Senator Roscoe Conkling, which occurred on April 18, has elicited expressions of profound regret—from his adversaries as well as from his friends. Since his resignation of the Senatorship in 1881, he has devoted himself exclusively to his legal practice, and declared himself out of politics, but to the last he exercised a power which was felt in the councils of his party, and at the polls. His masterly abilities, his polished eloquence, and above all, his unimpeachable integrity, won for him the ardent admiration of the masses. Though wielding immense power during the two terms of President Grant, and controlling the patronage of the Empire State until his resignation, he was known to have kept his hands clean; and that fact, standing out in marked contrast to the character of the men who antagonized him, was not overlooked by the people, even when his course did not have their approval. The deceased statesman was under sixty years of age, having been born in Albany, N. Y., October 30, 1828. He was in splendid physical health, and his mental powers were in full vigor, until within a month of his death. The collapse was caused by his being caught in the fatal blizzard of March 12, when he walked from Wall Street to Union Square. He caught a severe cold in the head, which developed an abscess at the base of the brain, causing him acute suffering. After a critical operation, he appeared to rally, but after a brave struggle finally succumbed.

Anarchy in Cuba, with Horrible Atrocities, is reported in despatches, which were preceded by sinister rumors last week. It is stated that the administration of Captain-General Marin is equivalent to a reign of terror; murders, kidnapping, robberies, and plunder by high Government officials, are said to be the fruits of General Marin's despotic reign. A Havana correspondent of the New York Sun indignantly writes: "Death stalks, grim and unopposed, through a once flourishing island, and, handcuffed and outraged by her cruel masters, Cuba is fast sinking into a condition of utter lawlessness, despair, and ruin." The Madrid Government has declared the provinces of Pinar, Del Rio, Villa Clara, and Havana under martial law. It is reported that in consequence of this action an emeute has broken out. Great disturbances are supposed to exist, but as the cable is under the censor's control, no reliable news can be obtained. It is stated that three Havana newspapers have been suppressed, and also that the Madrid Government would remove General Marin at once.

Lord Hartington Was Honored last Week by being presented with the freedom of the city of London. After the presentation a banquet was given at the Mansion House. Lord Hartington, recounting the arguments against the Gladstone policy, said he was unable to predict the result of the Irish struggle, but he was confident that the problem would not be solved by the compromise of 1886. Ireland could not be dealt with as a colony. The decision rested with the democracy. If they were weak and weary of the struggle, Ireland might obtain independence. If they were strong and had the spirit of their kinsmen across the Atlantic, they would not permit Ireland to be separated. In order that the struggle might be carried to a successful issue the Unionists must not flinch, as there was still much work to do. The Government had wisely shown that they did not fear the widest extension of local government.

Emperor Frederick of Germany is Rapidly sinking, and his death may be momentarily expected. A very alarming crisis has set in, and the gravest fears are entertained of a speedy fatal ending of the unhappy monarch's disease. He said to Court Chaplain Koegel: "You pray for my preservation; rather pray for my release." The anxiety and display of personal interest on the part of the population of Berlin, and in fact of the whole of Germany, are much greater than they were in the case of old Emperor William. An eminent Berlin throat physican has expressed the opinion that the Emperor is suffering from soft cancer, and the development has arrived at a point where no operation can avail to postpone death beyond a few days.

A Peasant Revolt has broken out in Roumania. The houses of land-owners and farmers have been sacked and wrecked, granaries pillaged, and the local officials barbarously treated, a number of them having been killed. The territorial troops joined in the pillage and fired upon the troops of the line. Since instructions were sent to the troops to adopt severe measures for the suppresion of the revolt, a host of the insurgents have been killed and wounded or taken prisoners. The prisons are crowded. Fugitives continue to pour into Bucharest. It is believed that stringent measures adopted by the Government will speedily suppress the uprising. One of the Bucharest papers says that if the Government desires to effectually quell the revolt it should demand the immediate recall of M. Hitrovo, the Russian Minister, whom it accuses of originating the rising.

The Sudden Death of Matthew Arnold, the accomplished English critic, poet, and essayist, occurred on Sunday, April 15, in Liverpool. Mr. Arnold was a son of the famous Dr. Arnold of Rugby, and was sixty-six years of age. Probably no Englishman of his day exercised so strong an influence as he on the literary life and work of the country. Scholarly and refined in manner, his society was eagerly sought, and highly appreciated. His works were extensively read, but it was chiefly by the upper classes and university men that their excellences were most valued. His aim was to convince men of position, and especially young men, that gross pleasures and sensual delights were degrading, and that in purity, truth, and benevolence there were greater joy and happiness than the gratification of the senses could ever afford. Such teaching was sorely needed, and was productive of good, though it is greatly to be regretted that it did not reach a still higher plane. Mr. Arnold twice visited America, and on the second occasion came to attend the marriage of his daughter to a citizen of New York.

A Question of Great Interest to the American Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has been satisfactorily settled by Mr. Oscar Straus, the United States Minister at Constantinople. The Board has fifteen schools in Syria, which the Turkish authorities summarily closed in 1886. Of these Mr. Straus secured the reopening of ten during his stay at Beyrout a fortnight ago, and secured a pledge that the remaining five would be opened as soon as the new Governor-General of Syria arrives. Mr. Straus was last week at Jaffa, on his way to Jerusalem. His energy and zeal in the cause of Christian missions are all the more noteworthy from the fact that he is a Jew.

A Prayer-Meeting in a Broadway Hotel was described by Rev. Thomas Harrison at the recent jubilee at the Jane Street Church, New York. He said: "Last night the proprietor of a prominent hotel in Broadway broke an engagement to a card party to come to this meeting. He had been here before. He was converted. His wife had been here before. She was converted. They found God here last night. They went home, and there at midnight they two began a prayer-meeting in one of the rooms of the hotel alone by themselves. Two guests dropped in to see what they were about, and were converted. Then an actress came in to find out what they were shouting for, and she was converted. Here are the cards of all, here in my hand. They sent them round to me to-day. And they—they are probably in this house praising God."

A Fatal Pride has been Displayed by a Family of sisters in New Jersey. For some years past a house at Mount Holy, N. J., has been occupied by three ladies, daughters of a Baptist clergyman, who, at his death, left that and another small property to them. They lived a secluded life, and their neighbors knew nothing of their circumstances or their means of support. It was surmised, however, from the rigid economy they evidently practiced, that they were poor. A discovery made recently proved that their poverty was far more abject than was imagined. It was learned that one of the sisters was dead, and an investigation revealed the fact that she had died of starvation. Kindly neighbors who then went to the house, ascertained that there was neither food nor fuel there, nor had there been any for some time. The ladies had been too proud to make their destitution known, and their reserve had cost one life and placed the other two in peril before it was broken. The case excites much sympathy. It is stated, however, that relief might have been easily obtained had the sisters asked for it; and the survivors are, therefore, blamed for not doing so, and so averting their sister's death, and their own suffering. To many churches and individual Christians in spiritual destitution the same reproach applies. The Giver of all grace is ready to respond to all who ask in faith. (Mal. 3: 10.)

The Lace Cuffs of the Late Attorney-General Brewster were frequently the subject of ridicule, and the favorite jest of his rivals, who tried to represent the great lawyer as effeminate and foppish in his tastes. No explanation was ever publicly vouchsafed by Mr. Brewster, on the matter, but he continued to wear the cuffs in spite of all the raillery which they cost him. Since his death, however, the reason for his indulging in a habit apparently so inconsistent with his vigorous character has been given to the press by a personal friend. It appears that when he first went to the bar, he had to undergo a bitter struggle with poverty. His learning and splendid talents were long in receiving recognition, and the young lawyer was often in sore straits for money to maintain a respectable appearance. His mother, whom he loved with rare devotion, knew of his hardships, and presented him with a set of shirts of her own handiwork. The old lady, intent on her son's having the best she could produce, had made the shirts on the pattern in vogue in her youth, and had ornamented the cuffs with a delicate ruffle, on which she had expended infinite pains. The gift touched the tenderest susceptibilities of Mr. Brewster's nature, and though he must have shrunk from appearing with his wrists so garnished, he would rather have cut his hands off than have refrained from wearing the ruffles, which were a proof of his dear mother's love. Later, when death had robbed him of that venerated parent, he continued to wear the ruffles in touching regard for her memory. It is much to be wished that a similar spirit was more generally to be found among Christians. Too often, the reproach of Christ has been found too heavy a cross, and ridicule has driven them to conceal their love. (Luke 6: 22.)

A Mechanical Device for the Prevention of railroad collisions was exhibited in New York last week. It consists of an arrangement of levers on the locomotive, which, in connection with a rod in the centre of the track, enables the engine-driver to set the signals himself. On approaching a signal-post the engineer by pressing a treadle with his foot lowers the bar under the engine, and this, striking the rod on the track sets in motion a compress apparatus which moves the signal and keeps it in place for a definite time, which may be regulated beforehand. By an extension of the system a starting train gives automatically a signal one mile to the front, and, arriving at that point, gives a similar signal another mile to the front and one mile to the rear, stopping any following train at the first block signal until the first train is clear of the second block signal. The working of the signals being thus confided to the man who, as engineer, occupies the place of greatest danger, it is supposed that the duty would never be neglected. Experience, however, proves that men are sometimes careless, even when they are aware that their carelessness puts their own lives in peril. Multitudes in every Christian land are well acquainted with the means God has provided for their eternal safety, yet neglect to avail themselves of them, though they know the awful consequences of dying in their sins. (Prov. 18: 10.)

A Valuable Series of Photographs is Being prepared by Professor Davidson, of the coast Survey. Some time ago he made a number of pencil drawings, from the deck of a cruiser, of some of the prominent headlands along the Pacific coast. They were necessarily imperfect, as they were taken while the cruiser was in motion, and the outlines were therefore constantly changing. Every sketch had to be taken in five minutes and under unfavorable circumstances, yet they were found to be of more use to navigators than the most elaborate descriptions in the old charts. He has therefore been commissioned, at his own desire, to take a series of photographs of the coast of California, Oregon, and Washington. They are to be taken at two distances, one at twenty miles from the coast and the other at ten miles. In addition to these two series, there would be a set of three views of every headland, as seen when approaching it from the southward, when abreast of it, and when approaching it from the northward. The value of these views can only be understood by persons who have seen the wild and rocky mass of dangers to the navigator which the Pacific coast presents. A captain to whom the coast was unknown, would find these pictures of inestimable service. But if he had them on board and did not study them he would be deemed foolish and reckless. Yet it is precisely this course that men take who sail on into the unknown, future leaving unstudied the revelation God has given in His Word. (Rev. 1: 1-3.)

Twenty-five Criminals Arrested by a Dog is a record on the books of a police precinct of New York. A reporter who saw the record recently, asked who was "Jack," to whom twenty-five arrests were credited. He was informed that Jack was a dog, who had voluntarily attached himself to the station, and had made himself useful. He presented himself there one cold night about five years ago. The dog was hungry, and the policeman on duty fed him. After that night the dog made the police station his home, and he was named "Policeman Jack." Jack is about the station in the day, but at night he patrols the precinct, rain or shine. Many of the patrolmen have found him a ready helper in running down escaping thieves or ruffians, and for such services the dog is credited on the books of the precinct. Not long ago a policeman saw thieves attempting to rob a drunken man, and started to arrest them. They fled, and he pursued. Suddenly Jack rushed past him, sprang upon the back of one of the thieves, and fastening his teeth in the man's collar, forced him to the ground. The other thief surrendered, and both prisoners were marched to the police station. Many other remarkable anecdotes are related of his intelligence and prowess. His example may be commended to many who are lacking in gratitude for benefits received. It is not uncommon to see men profess faith in Christ and receive a welcome into His Church, who never make any effort to serve Him by bringing in sinners from the world. (Matt. 4: 19.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Old Testament in Japanese, recently completed, has had a large sale. One thousand six hundred copies were called for within a month of its publication.

It is proposed to observe the week preceding June 9, as a week of special prayer all over the world for the blessing of God on the World's Missionary Conference which meets in London from June 9 to 19.

The Ohio Senate, on April 13, passed a bill to close saloons on Sunday. The vote stood twenty-five to two, and the spectators cheered loudly as the result was announced.

The annual report of the Young Men's Christian Union of Boston, shows that it counts on its roll a total of 5,148 members. During the past year, among its philanthropic work was the provision of 2,000 "r.des for invalids."

A successor to Dr. Meredith, now of Brooklyn, N. Y., in the pastorate of the Union Congregational Church, Boston, Mass., has been found in Rev. M. R. Boynton, of Haverhill—a young man of remarkable preaching ability. His salary will be $5,000.

An example of practical philanthropy has been set by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, who has established, in London, work-shops equipped with sewing-machines, where poor seamstresses can go and use them at a low charge.

The need of a more stringent extradition treaty with Canada is becoming apparent to all but the men who profit by the present absurd system. Within the last two years Canada has lost $3,000,000 through embezzlers, who have escaped to the United States with the money. During the same time American embezzlers have taken more than $20,000,000 into Canada.

A generous member of Grace Episcopal Church, New York City, has promised to build a beautiful church on Blackwell's Island. It will be located on a commanding site near the almshouse, and will be under the charge of the Rev. William G. French, who has given more than fifteen years of faithful and devoted service to religious work on the island.

The programme for Chautauqua has been issued. The grounds will open for the season on July 3d. The School of the English Bible, the College of Liberal Arts, and the Teachers' Retreat immediately follow. The popular Sunday-school Assembly is to open on the 7th of August, Phillip Brooks, Joseph Cook, Drs. E. E. Hale, L. I. Townsend, W. R. Harper, and other eminent men have promised to take part.

A missionary in South Africa sends a very interesting account of a Society of Christian Endeavor among the Zulus. The organization is modified, necessarily, to meet the needs of the natives, but the main features are the same as in America. The Zulu young people take much delight in their Society, are instructed by the missionaries in Bible truth, and learn to pray and work by actual experience, as do their young brethren on the other side of the globe.

The fifth annual meeting of the International Missionary Union will be held at Bridgeton, New Jersey, July 5–12, 1888, inclusive. Ministers and others interested in foreign missionary work are invited to be present. All foreign missionaries of either sex, temporarily or permanently in this country, are eligible to membership in the Union, and will receive free entertainment during the meeting. For information address the President of the Union, the Rev. J. T. Gracey, D. D., 202 Eagle Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Sunday-school Superintendents and Teachers desirous of distributing copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in their schools and classes, may have assorted parcels of back numbers by applying, stating number required, to the manager, 63 Bible House

JESUS AFFIRMED TO BE ALIVE.

A New Sermon, by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Against whom, when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed: but had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive."—Acts 25: 18, 19.

The Roman Governor Puzzled—The Charge Referring to Questions and Speculations—The Prisoner's Bold Affirmation—I. Real Gospel Preaching Full of Jesus—Unknown to the Multitude—Despised by the Many—His Death Admitted—Unpopularity Assured—The Please-Everybody Gospel—II. Affirms the Resurrection—Infers the General Resurrection—A Doctrine of Sweet Inferences—III. Affirms that Jesus is Still Alive—Paul Had Seen and Spoken to Him—He is Preparing Heaven for the Redeemed.

FESTUS is giving to King Agrippa a brief account of the matter between Paul and the Jews. It may not be a very accurate account; for Festus did not profess to understand the business. He was a Roman governor newly come to Judæa; he had no acquaintance whatever with Jewish Scriptures nor with Jewish laws; he is, therefore, merely giving to King Agrippa a rough outline of the affair as it struck him.

He Was Puzzled

how he should represent the matter to Cæsar, to whom Paul had appealed. Festus is represented by our translators as calling the Jewish religion a "superstition." I hardly think he would have used so harsh a term before Agrippa, who professed to be of the Jewish faith. But yet, as he probably knew that Agrippa's religion did not lie very deep, and was the mere appendage of a man of fashion, Festus was not very particular about the word which he used; and he lighted upon one which may mean "superstition" as the Authorized Version has it, or "religion" as the Revised Version has it. "Well, well," he seems to say to Agrippa, "I do not know much about it. I supposed when the Jews brought this man before me, that he would be charged with a breach of the Roman law, and I was prepared, of course, to deal with the prisoner; but when I listened to their accusation, and found that there was nothing in it but some disputes about their religion, I hardly knew what to say. Their controversy is important to them, I dare say; but it can be of no consequence either to you or to me, for it turned very much upon a person of the name of Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive."

I want you to notice that, rough-and-ready as this description is, and neither full nor deep, yet on the surface we see that in the controversy we have the same condition of things as we usually see in such conflicts. On the one side Paul's opponents fought with the weapons of "certain questions," and on the other hand he defended himself with a bold affirmation. This is the old story of Speculation Against Dogmatism.

It is always the way: the adversaries of the cross of Christ assert nothing, but they question everything. They will not lay down a basis, nor define their opinions. If they would do this, we might soon demolish their fabrics of falsehood; but all that they propound is "certain questions." On the other hand, those who are witnesses for the Lord Jesus have little care about questions, speculations, and the boasted outcome of cultured thought; but they affirm certain definite facts: they affirm these to be a revelation from God, and there they stand.

I. To begin with:

True Gospel Preaching

is full of Jesus. Jesus is the most notable figure in Christian testimony. The apostle Paul, whom we may regard as a model in preaching, exercised a ministry which was always full of our Lord Jesus Christ. Following the historical connection of the verse before us, we note that he preached "Jesus to multitudes unknown." Festus evidently knew not Jesus, for he speaks of Him as "one Jesus." He mentions the name as belonging to some obscure individual of whom he knew nothing, and cared less. The great ones of the earth know nothing of the King of kings. Beloved, to this day this is the wonder of wonders, that the incarnate God is not known. His birth is the starting-point of the age; and yet it was almost unanimously ignored by those who wielded the recording pen of history. His was the most extraordinary life that ever passed before mortal eyes; and yet how little notice was taken of it! Beyond Palestine it seems not even to have awakened curiosity. He died, and then to the people most concerned in Him He became "one Jesus, which was dead." The new Roman procurator, and myriads like him, well informed upon other matters, hardly knew His name, and only mentioned half of it when they spoke of "one Jesus, which was dead."

Jesus Little Known.

Brethren, this is why we must keep on preaching Jesus Christ, because He is still so little known. The masses of this city are as ignorant of Jesus as Festus was. You can never have a congregation in any of our places of worship and feel sure that they all know Jesus. If you gather in the outsiders from the street, you may be sure that the story of Jesus will be news to them. We call this a Christian country; but it would be very difficult to prove that it is so. If we took certain lines of observation as to the moral and religious conduct of our fellow-men, we should logically arrive at the conclusion that we live in a heathen rather than in a Christian city. Still the world knoweth Him not.

Paul preached Jesus, who was despised by many. The language of Festus is not only that of ignorance, but in a measure that of contempt. He speaks of "one Jesus, which was dead." Jesus is evidently nothing to Festus, and Festus does not imagine that Jesus is very much to King Agrippa. Probably he was quite right: Jesus was nobody among the of the period. Behold the unlearned of the day, if you speak to them of the great Sacrifice, and the wondrous atonement made by blood, they scarcely hearken to you, for such high things are not for them: they are so hardly pressed with daily labor and slender pay that they cannot think of sin and sacrifice and salvation; but they ask, "What has the poor workingman to do with religion?" Alas, that this folly should be so prevalent!

Rank and Fashion and Culture

Then you turn to the learned, and hope that here, at any rate, due attention will be given to the great marvel of reconciling love. Alas! it is not so. To these more educated ones the doctrine of the cross is foolishness. They ask for something new; something more philosophical. Substitution and sacrifice—they will have none of them. Ths story of the league of justice with grace, the reconcilement of holiness with mercy, is beneath their notice. They are too cultured to believe the common faith, too wise to accept that which God hath revealed unto babes. Beloved brethren, it should never cause us doubt when we see many despising our Lord, for this is nothing new, and nothing unexpected. Did He tell us that if we preached in His name all men would receive us? Nay, He warned us that the contrary would follow.

Gospel preaching is also full of Jesus Christ in this respect, that we do not conceal His death. Festus notes that the conflict was concerning "one Jesus, which was dead." The Jews said He was dead, and Paul also confessed that He was dead: there was no disagreement between them over that matter. Hear, then,

The Debate.

"What! did your Leader die?" "Yes, He was crucified." "Did you not say He was divine?" "Yes." "Yet is He dead?" "It is even so." "Yet you spoke of His leading you on to victory?" "So we did." "Yet He is dead?" "Yes, He died at Calvary." "How, then, can your boasting stand?" "We believe that by His death He has gained the victory and accomplished His great purpose." "But how did He die?" "He died the death of a felon upon a gibbet. His enemies nailed Him to a cross, and put Him to a death which was reserved for slaves. We confess this; yea, and glory in it!" We glory that our Lord Jesus was put to death as bearing the sin of many. This we hold and teach; not defending it, nor apologizing for it; but affirming it with all boldness, with the desire that we may be understood. If any cavil at this teaching, we do not therefore conceal it; we expected that it would be cavilled at. We desire more and more to obtrude this truth of substitution whenever we preach, and to make it the head and front of our gospel. Even people who are not saved by it should yet be made to know that we preach Christ crucified. In such a case, we have done our work successfully, even if souls are not saved; for we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, as well in them that perish as in them that are saved, if we have exalted the Lord Jesus, and borne witness to His power to save.

Beloved, I would have you further note that true gospel preaching will be full of Jesus as He is revealed in the Old Testament. Our apostle, when he spake before King Agrippa, went on to declare that he had said "none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: that Christ should suffer, and that He should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should shew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles." Paul's teaching paid as much deference to the ancient Scriptures as did that of the Jewish rabbis who were opposed to Him; nay, in very truth He paid a far more real homage to the Bible than they did. As for us, by us as much as the New. We do not preach Jesus as a fresh arrival, the inventor of a new religion, the founder of a novel way of salvation. No; we preach the Messiah of the Old Testament, whose gospel is set forth in the types and in the teachings of Moses and the prophets: "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." Every gospel sermon should set forth Jesus scripturally; for it is not the Christ of fancy, but the Christ of fact that saves the souls of men,

The Old Testament is Prized

Let me add that where the Gospel is faithfully preached the reproach of Christ will not be shunned by the preacher. Read in the fifth verse of the twenty-fourth of Acts how Paul won this reproach. His adversaries said: "We have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes." This was the reputation of Paul. Well did Mr. Whitefield say, "There is no going to heaven as a minister except in a fool's cap and a fool's coat." There is no hope of preaching Christ faithfully without being called by disrespectful titles, regarded as a fool, and reckoned among the vulgar and ignorant. Some kind of ugly name will always be appended to the gospeller. Brethren, expect it, and accept it! Bid farewell to a quiet life, if you resolve to be true to Jesus. I know a minister of whom one said, "He is a truly good man, and nobody ever says a word against him." Upon inquiry, I heard a judicious person say, "He preaches no error, but he avoids the obnoxious side of truth. What he preaches is true enough, no doubt, but it is not easy to say what it is. Nine out of ten of his hearers could not say what his precise opinion may be, but he has a fine flow of words. Those who do know what he is preaching about usually say that, take it for all in all, there is nothing in it." Of course nobody opposes an indistinct, colorless,

Please-Everybody Gospel:

it is not worth while. But speak clearly and distinctly the doctrine of the great Sacrifice, and you will bring upon your head a shower of opposition: you will be "a pestilent fellow" and "a ring-leader of the sect of the Nazarenes." Gospel preaching does not cry, "Peace, peace," where there is no peace; but it is the sword which the Lord Jesus came to send upon the earth. Now, beloved, as I resolve, God helping me, in my preaching to preach to you nothing else save Jesus Christ, so I beseech you, in your schools, in your families, in your public ministries of any and every kind, begin and end with Jesus, who was dead and is alive. Declare His blessed name, and proclaim the glory of His cross! God forbid that you should place anything in front of your testimony save Jesus crucified! Your gospel is a golden frame, let Jesus be the portrait which is hung up in it.

II. Secondly: gospel preaching

Affirms The Resurrection.

Please notice, that Paul did not argue the resurrection, but affirmed it. He did not prove it philosophically, but he affirmed that Jesus rose from the dead, because such and such persons saw him alive after he had risen. He did not merely say that it was probable, that it was possible, that it was reasonable, but that it was so, for witnesses proved it. Two saw him, eleven saw him, four hundred saw him. He dealt with the resurrection as common-sense persons deal with any other fact of history; he quoted his authorities, and affirmed that it was so. His witnesses were honest and true men, who dared to go to prison, and even to die, on account of their statements. They had nothing whatever to gain, and everything to lose by their testimonies. They stated that Jesus, whom they knew to have been dead, had risen again, and had given clear proofs that he was alive. This corner-stone of our faith is sure, and upon the certainty of it we build our faith.

Moreover, Paul—and he, I say, is a model among gospel preachers—teaches us to preach in our gospel all the which flow from the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Here they are. He rose from the dead, and therefore His sacrifice has been accepted. God has brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, by the blood of the everlasting covenant. The work He has done has pleased the Father, and therefore he has brought him back from among the dead. His acceptance is ours: we are "accepted in the Beloved." Now, also, we live unto God. Our Lord Jesus died unto sin once; but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God: so is it with us. This is our joy: His work is accepted, His bearing of our curse is finished, life in us is made manifest.

Sweet Inferences

I must repeat what I have said already, that from the resurrection of our Lord we draw the comfortable inference of the resurrection unto eternal life of all who are in Christ. We said farewell, a little while ago, to him whom we loved so well, but we shall see the honored one again. We laid our sister in the grave with many tears. Oh, how we miss her! But we shall meet her again when the trumpet shall sound. We preserve a long list of departed ones, of which we scarcely dare to think, for tears drown our eyes; yet will we refrain from weeping, for as the dew of herbs causes them to spring up again, so the rising again of our Lord restores to us the beloved ones who have fallen asleep. The broken circle of our fellowship shall be renewed, for Jesus, its centre, has risen again.

III. But now, alas for me! I have scant time for the point which I wanted most fully to discuss—gospel preaching affirms that Jesus is alive. We do not preach to you a dead Christ, but one who is able to save to the uttermost, seeing He ever liveth. Jesus died, Jesus rose again, Jesus is now alive. Paul for He had spoken to him out of Heaven. Paul had both seen and heard the Lord Jesus, and thus he had been turned from a persecutor into an apostle. His entire being was transformed by what he saw and heard; assuredly he was no deceiver, and he was not the sort of person to have been deceived. Jesus Christ is then alive, for Paul saw him. Beloved, receiving the witness of our apostle, and remembering many other infallible proofs which we have not time to mention, we also believe that Jesus, who was dead, is alive. What follows from this? Why, first, He is alive to bestow the Holy Spirit. Many blessings come from our Lord's death, but the Holy Spirit was an early gift of His resurrection life: especially was it the outcome of his ascended life. The gift of the Holy Spirit is the ascension gift of our living Lord. The life and light and liberty of the Spirit are with us, because Jesus lives. Beloved, do you think the times are dark and dreary? Be not afraid: while Jesus lives the Holy Spirit is always obtainable, the Holy Spirit is always ready to work in and with us. What more do we want?

Knew that Jesus Lived,

Jesus is also in heaven making preparation for our coming. What has to be done to make heaven ready I am sure I do not know, though I have often tried to guess; but Jesus says, "I go to prepare a place for you." Heaven, when we get there, will prove to be the exact place for us. Jesus is living—living on purpose to keep heaven for us, and make it in all respects ready for us. Furthermore, lay hold of this thought, that Jesus is for us. I am most rich, beloved, when I have your prayers. If I might have a part in the prayers of all the saints on earth, I would not envy a Kaiser his dominions. Yet what are all the prayers of saints compared to the prayers of the King of saints? We trust not in a dumb, dead Christ, who could not speak for us, but we rest in an advocate whose eloquent pleadings before the throne of God can never be denied.

Alive to Intercede

O child of God, I would have you further remember that Jesus is still alive, to commune with you. You bend not over His corpse, but you sit at His feet. Carnal men would think me dreaming if I were to tell of our spiritual intercourse with our living Lord.

Still Doth He Speak

to our hearts. Pearls may not be cast before swine, nor the love secrets of our souls declared in the streets; but we have been conscious at times of influences other than those which are natural and common. Jesus has made Himself known to us: He has stood behind us, and His shadow has fallen over us. He has manifested Himself to us as He does not to the world. You know what I mean. Jesus does not forget us. He has not allowed a great gulf to open between us and Himself. He is still the loving, living, active Jesus to us and with us.

How I wish that every child of God here who is in trouble would go at once with that trouble to the living Christ! Oh that every sinner who is crushed beneath his load of sin would bow at once before the living Christ, whose voice speaks pardon! You cannot perceive Jesus, but He is present where His gospel is preached. Eye cannot see Him, nor hand touch Him, but He is visible and Tangible to Faith.

Bow before Him! I know you have often thought, "If, instead of seeing Mr. Spurgeon on the platform, I could see Jesus, I would confess my sin to Him, and ask His pardon." I pray you do so, even though you see Him not, for He sees you. Fain would I cease to be seen of you, that your hearts might see my Lord, for He is here. Bow before Him, confess to Him, and trust Him.

"Oh!" cries a loving one, "If Jesus were visibly here, I would take Him home with me and entertain Him." Do so, I pray you, though you do not see Him. Constrain Him to abide with you. Treat the Lord Jesus, not as a phantom, but as a real Christ. Paul affirmed that He was alive; believe Paul's affirmation, and speak to the living Jesus. I will give you a text: "Whom having not seen, ye love." You cannot love a dead person as a dead person. You may love the memory of the dead; but if you love them, you regard them as living. Love is for life; it cannot dwell with death. We have not seen Jesus, but we love Him, and this proves that to our hearts He lives.

Oh that our Lord would now appear! Oh that His silver trumpets would ring out while yet I speak to you! Oh that His feet would once more touch this earth! The second coming of our living Lord is the ultimatum of our faith. He is alive, and as surely as He lives, He will open wide the golden gate, and come again to take His people up to be with Him for ever. Has He not said, "I will come again, and receive you unto Myself"? They that have been faithful to him in this evil generation, through the dark as well as through the light, and have followed at His heel through mire and slough—these shall partake of His glory. "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth." Who is on the side of the living Christ at this hour? Let him come out and boldly say so. Hold not back, lest ye be found traitors. Confess your Lord, take up your cross, and be the living servants of the living Jesus. Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

How Conviction Came.*

Once a mother told her pastor that she was troubled about her daughter, who was going to join the church. "She has not conviction enough," was the complaint; "and yet I have talked to her about her sins over and over again, setting them all in order before her, till we were both of us in tears: Oh, what can I do more?" Then he gave her in her own hands a Bible, and he read aloud to her slowly, Isaiah 6: 1–5. She saw, without any word of his, that the prophet became intelligent as the sight of God flashed upon him, and grew penitent as the moment when the seraphim cried "Holy." Then he turned to Job 42: 5, 6. She saw in silence that the patriarch repented, not when his exasperating friends pelted him with accusations, but when his eyes were opened to see God. She went away quietly to talk, with a wondering and awe-struck heart, about the holiness of Jehovah; thus her child melted into contrition before the vision, and wept.

A German Captain's Order.

I heard some time ago of a German captain, who was drilling a company of volunteers. The parade-ground was a field by the seaside. The men were going through their exercises very nicely, but the captain thought he would give them an exercise in obeying orders. They were marching up and down in the line of the water, at some distance from it. He concluded to give them an order to march directly towards the water, and see how far they would go. The men are marching along. "Halt, company," says the captain. In a moment they halt. "Right face," is the next word, and instantly they wheel round. "Forward march," is then the order. At once they begin to march directly towards the water; on they go, nearer and nearer to it. Soon they reach the edge of the water. Then there is a sudden halt. "Vat for you stop? I no say halt," cried the captain. "Vhy, captain, here is the vater," said one of the men. "Vell, vot of it," cried he, greatly excited; "vater is nothing; fire is nothing; everything is nothing. Ven I say, forwart martch, then you must forwart martch." The captain was right; the first duty of a soldier is to learn to obey.

A Meal of Carrion.

A member of his congregation being in the habit of going to the theatre, Rowland Hill went to him and said, "This will never do—a member of my church in the habit of attending the theatre!" Mr. so-and-so replied that it surely must be a mistake, as he was not in the habit of going there, although it was true that he did go now and then for a treat. "Oh!" said Rowland Hill, "then you are a worse hypocrite than ever, sir. Suppose any one spread the report that I ate carrion, and I answered, 'Well, there is no wrong in that; I don't eat carrion every day in the week, but I have a dish now and then for a treat.' Why, you would say, 'What a nasty, foul, and filthy appetite Rowland Hill has, to have to go to carrion for a treat!' Religion is the Christian's truest treat, and Christ is his enjoyment."

*From Spurgeon's Sermon Notes: Volume IV., Romans to Revelation. Pp. 408: Price $1; Published by Robert Carter & Brothers, 530 Broadway, New York.

The Late Amos B. Alcott.

Mrs. Pinfold's Illumination.

THE LATE A. BRONSON ALCOTT.

(See Portrait.)

The kindly, lovable old man who won the name of the American Socrates had no Plato to make him known to the world, and his own efforts as an author have had but little success in that direction. All who knew him personally, however, recognized in him a bright, ardent spirit, eagerly bent on discovering the great secret of human life in this world, and how it might be made a blessing to its possessor and to the race.

Amos Bronson Alcott was born in Wolcott, Conn., November 29, 1799, and he was therefore in his eighty-ninth year on March 4, last, when he died. Owing to the poverty of his parents, his school education was brief and irregular. School in the winter and farm labor in the summer was the rule in the Alcott as in so many New England homes of those days. He learned to write with a piece of chalk on his mother's kitchen floor, and as soon as he had mastered the art of reading he devoured such books as came in his way. "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress" was his favorite book in his boyhood, and to the last the venerable philosopher continued to love and admire that matchless volume. At the age of thirteen, he finally quitted the school at Spindle Hill, and being equipped with a small stock of wares he set out as a pedler in the South. He tramped through Virginia and North and South Carolina, but succeeded in selling only a few dollars' worth of goods.

Trade was evidently not his vocation, and on his return he entered on the work which occupied the largest portion of his life—that of an educator of the young. He had a profound belief in the purity and spiritual penetration of little children, and delighted to listen to their talk and lead them to think and reason. His method of education was fatherly, and always had the moral training and development as its primary object, as being far more important than intellectual acquirement. The idea of corporal punishment was abhorrent to him, and under his gentle, discriminating system he had no occasion to resort to it.

All his leisure time was devoted to hard study, chiefly of metaphysics, philosophy, and theology. He contributed extensively to the Dial, and became a recognized leader of the Transcendental School, if not its actual founder. In 1842 he was induced to visit England, to consult with the prominent thinkers in the ranks of social and educational reformers. He lectured extensively, and on his return he was accompanied by two English friends, who aided him in establishing his ideal community, at Frudlands, near the town of Harvard. The scheme was not a success, and was soon abandoned.

The famous "Conversations" commenced shortly afterward, and were continued for nearly forty years. By these Mr. Alcott was best known to the American public. Often they were simply lectures on Character, Love, Poetry, Nature, or some kindred subject, but Mr. Alcott was always at his best when his audiences accepted his invitation to take part in the proceedings by asking questions and expressing their opinions. Since 1857 he resided at Concord, Mass., and there a circle of warmly attached friends gathered around him. His days were spent in study and literary work, and his evenings in congenial society. The works by which he is best known are "Conversations with Children on the Gospels," "Table Talk," and "Concord Days."

MRS. PINFOLD'S ILLUMINATION.

(See Illustration.)

Any person passing the cottage in which Mrs. Pinfold lived would have thought it a picture of peace and calm contentment, in complete harmony with the surrounding fields and the summer sunshine which flooded them and the cottage with glorious light. The door was set wide open, and the widow, as she passed it in the course of her household duties, could see the cattle lazily grazing in the fields, and, in the distance, the laborers toiling at their work, and though she could not make them out distinctly, she knew that her two boys were among them. The sweet peace and tranquility without, had not, however, its reflection on Mrs. Pinfold's countenance. She was in deep trouble, and red eyes and furrowed brow showed that tears had not long ceased flowing, and would soon flow again.

"I d' know 't I've any call t' worry," she had said some days before, when an earnest Christian visitor had tried to arouse her to a consciousness of her state before God; "I've done my duty all through. I guess there ain't anybody I've had dealings wi' 'ts ever complained o' me. Father and mother and husband are gone, but they all allowed I'd done what was right, and the boys wouldn't hear anything against their mother, I guess. No; I aint such a sinner as you'd make out. There's many 's be though, if you're looking for work."

Still, the visitor was convinced that the old woman had been moved, and, in spite of her assumption of security, was not so much at ease under his words as she wished him to think. He therefore deemed it wise to leave her to the work of the Spirit, that she might be enlightened as to the state of her own heart by His omnipotent power. He acted wisely. Mrs. Pinfold had plenty of time to think as she worked, and she would not have been herself if her thoughts had not been occupied with an accusation that she had failed in her duty. It was her cherished pride—she had nothing else to be proud of—that she had never failed in that. A good mother, a good wife, a good daughter; yes, so far her conscience, which was a rigid one, acquitted her. But as to her duty to God? The more Mrs. Pinfold thought, the more guilty she grew in her own eyes.

The next Sunday she went to church as usual, but with an object that was not usual with her. Formerly she had gone as a duty; now she went to learn what she could do. It was not punishment she dreaded, but she was oppressed with a terrible sense of guilt, of meanness, of base ingratitude. To her surprise the regular clergyman was absent, and in his place was the very man who had visited her, and disturbed her peace of mind by his talk. That was well; he might tell her what she wanted to know. The text was, "Justified freely by His grace" (Rom. 3: 24), and the preacher showed how the sinner, having broken the law, was without hope of acquittal, except in the righteousness of Christ, which was offered to him. The distressed woman listened, but could not realize it.

The next day her burden grew heavier, and she wept as she worked. She knew, in a general way, that Christ died to save sinners, but there were great sinners—drunkards, thieves, and the like—to whom she had always applied the fact, not to herself. Suddenly, as if by a flash, she saw herself in the same category, and therefore with the same glorious hope. The thought overcame her. She put down her work, and sitting down on the rough bench in the kitchen, clasped her hands, while the joy flowed through her whole being, like a river. It was bewildering, enrapturing joy, such as none know but those who have felt it—a joy the world can never give nor take away.

THE ROYAL RETREAT IN FLORENCE.

(See Illustration on Page 269.)

Several royal personages are just now ruralizing at Florence, recuperating after the arduous labors which are said to be incidental to the vocation of a monarch. The Queen of England was the first to take up her abode there, and she has now been joined by the King and Queen of Sweden and other minor royalties. The illustration here given represents the villa in which Queen Victoria is living. It is the property of the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres, who placed it at her disposal during her stay in the fair Italian city.

Florence, as is well known, is one of the most interesting cities of Italy, and scarcely inferior to Venice in historical renown, in the beauty of its architectural edifices, and of its collections of art, more especially of sculpture, while far superior in its associations with Italian literature. The Villa Palmieri is nearly two miles from the Porta San Gallo to the northeast of the city, on the road to Fiesole. The adjacent valley of the Mugello was always a favorite rural retreat of the rich Florentine citizens; and it was somewhere in this pleasant valley that Boccaccio, the author of the "Decameron; or, Ten Days' Tales" placed the fancied assembly of ladies and gentlemen, whom he supposed to have left their houses in the city on account of the plague, in the summer of 1347, and to have amused each other by telling the series of stories which he relates.

The Villa Palmieri, Florence, Queen Victoria's Present Residence.

Not far up the hill is the Villa Mozzi (now Villa Spence), which was the favorite residence of Lorenzo the Magnificent, and Careggi. The villa built by Cosmo dei Medici—in which Cosmo died, in 1464, and Lorenzo, in 1492, expired after his famous interview with the famous monk and preacher Savonarola—is among the hills on this side of Florence. The ancient Roman town of Fæsulæ, now Fiesole, from which Florence "descended," is a place of much antiquarian interest.

The villa constructed by the Palmieri family, at a spot called the Fonte dei Tre Visi, originally bore the name of Schifanoia, which meant "Avoid Disturbance." The Palmieri owned it for centuries; they built an arch or bridge over the public road, connecting the gardens with a terrace which commands a delightful view. An Italian, who had purchased the villa of the Palmieri, bequeathed it to the ex-grand Duchess of Tuscany, and her trustees sold it, some years ago, to the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres. A new road was then made round the hill, and an expenditure of about $50,000 was incurred in various improvements.

MRS. TRANSOME'S PUPIL.

A SERIAL STORY.

(Continued from page 255.)

A Light in a Dark Home.

In a short time Thomas came to say that my brother wished to see the boy. I waited a minute or two to tell Philip whom he was going to visit; and how many years he had been ill; and how he had been suffering that very day. His bonny face grew grave and serious; and he trod along the carpeted hall with a careful and silent step. I wondered what he would think of George's white, worn face and low voice. He entered the room with me, unconsciously clasping my hand more tightly; but the moment he saw George, he stole forward on tip-toe again, and put his hand down softly on his pillow.

"Are you very ill?" he asked, in a low tone.

"Very," answered George; "and so you are come to be our boy, are you?"

"If you love me, and let me stay," he answered. "Have you never asked God to make you quite well again?"

"Yes, thousands of times," said George, as gravely as the child had spoken.

"Then He knows it's best for you to be ill," said Philip, "but He loves you all the same, you know. Mrs. Transome says He wont give us just what we ask for; and we must learn to be content, because He knows best. I asked Him for a pony ever so long, and He did not give me one: but it isn't because He does not love me. He chooses for old Transome to have bad pains, and old Transome says he'll be faithful to God in spite of them, for God had been faithful to him. When God chooses, it's all for the best, Mrs. Transome says."

"Yes," said George, holding the boy's small brown hand in his thin white fingers, "and I must learn to be content too."

"It's like learning lessons," Philip went on, in his clear young tones. "Mrs. Transome told me so. It's just like learning our A B C. It took me a whole week to learn all the letters; that was a long while."

"Yes, it is a long while," said George; but I knew he was not thinking of the child's lesson in the alphabet. No, it was his own harder task he was looking at. I am afraid we had both forgotten our first faith in God's love: and now we were sent back to it by the simple teaching of Philip, so that we might begin again a childlike life in His kingdom.

"Milly," said George, after the boy had gone away under Martha's care, "God has sent us one of His own little ones."

Yes, of a truth Philip was one of God's own children. Do not misunderstand me. The boy showed at times self-will, and sudden passion, and a spark of vanity now and again. All these were in him, and his simple nature could not hide them; though it could and did conquer them in the long-run. But there was no swerving of his inmost heart from a true and loyal love to Christ, whose life on earth became the pattern for his own. When I studied Philip's character in its transparent simplicity, the words that came most often to my mind were those of our Lord's speaking: "If therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." There seemed to be no darkness, no dissimulation, in Philip at all. He loved the light, and always came to the light, even when he brought to it deeds to be reproved.

How life changed to George and me! The blankness and emptiness were gone. The future lay before us, with the promise of a beautiful life outside our own, that would link us again to the busy world. Year by year our interest in it grew deeper. There were masters to choose for Philip; a day school to find for him, where he could have the wholesome companionship of other boys. We sent him to a large public school, where his brilliant gifts and insatiable thirst for knowledge would find full scope. George was himself a good classical scholar, and his old love for study revived, now there was a young brain, quick and eager, at work beside him. The hours that had been wont to drag so wearily along began to "glide with down upon their feet." Philip's studies, Philip's sports, Philip's friendships, absorbed us both.

Before he had completed his seventeenth year he won a scholarship. The head-master of his school, with whom he was a favorite, strongly urged him to remain another year under his tuition, and then to go to college. But the boy's mind was set upon studying as a medical student in one of the hospitals. The loyal spirit that was within him, longing to serve God diligently, and to tread closely in the footsteps of his Lord, could point out no better way than this.

"I can go among the very worst and poorest then," he said to us, earnestly, when we were trying to dissuade him. "You think I am too good for it? Why, if I were a hundred times better and more clever I should be hardly fit for such work! When I think of them down there, in their misery and ignorance and sin, I feel as if it would be treason for me to forsake them, just to grow rich or famous. I should choose to be a popular doctor at the East End, among the very worst, if I may have my choice."

My heart felt somewhat heavy with disappointment, for I had built many a castle in the air for my boy; and it had never entered my thoughts that he should bury himself and his great gifts among the very low and ignorant. As for George, his face was lit up with a smile that was almost heavenly.

"We shall have very little to leave you, Philip," I said.

"Are you going to die soon, Aunt Milly?" he asked laughing; "when I'm an old man of fifty, you'll not be seventy years of age; think of that! It's scarcely worth while for me to consider what you can leave to me. No, no; I shall be sure of more than Jesus Christ ever had. If I'm only clever enough to make a good doctor, and it comes true of me, 'He went about doing good,' that's enough for me."

His expression softened into a grave tenderness, and his voice grew low as he spoke. He did not often talk in this way to us; and I can see again his boyish, handsome face, half turned away from our eyes. It was a summer's evening, and we had the window open, that the fitful western wind might come in, rustling the papers on my brother's table, and breathing softly across his feverish face. George had taken Philip's hand into his, and was holding it fast as he looked at him with his strange smile. Just then we heard the distant tinkle of the house-door bell, a sound that had become frequent since Philip had gone to school, where he had formed many friendships. We knew our quiet talk was over; and so it proved. In a few minutes Thomas came in with a message.

"There's a shabby sort of a woman," he said, in a disparaging tone, "asking if Master Philip Champion is living here still. She won't tell me her business, but she says it's very particular; for she's come all the way from Liverpool a-purpose to see him."

"What's her name, Thomas?" asked my brother.

"Mrs. Brown, sir," he replied.

"That is the woman your father left you with, Philip," I said, with a quick throb of my heart. I could not hear the name without an undefined dread that it foreboded some change: and any change now would be an evil and a sorrow. The boy's face flushed crimson, and a glow spread over it, full of eager hope and gladness.

"My father's come back!" he cried.

He had not spoken of his father for years, and I had hoped that he had slowly reconciled himself to the idea that he had been lost at sea. But the eager, excited face before me contradicted the hope. The childish faith and expectation had never died; and now they sprang up in full vigor and life at the mere mention of this woman's name. "My father's come home!" he cried again, in a tone that brought tears into my eyes, and my brother's.

"Philip," said George, in his low, patient, measured voice, "remember! it is over twelve years since your father went away."

"I shall look for him to come back," he exclaimed, vehemently, "as long as it is possible for him to be alive, unless I find out for certain that he is dead."

"Twelve years!" repeated George, as though his thoughts were dwelling upon all that Captain John Champion must have suffered, if he were still alive; "twelve years, my dear boy!"

"Sailors have been lost longer than that," said Philip, moving toward the door, where Thomas was still standing. It was not a minute since he had uttered the woman's name; but it seemed to me already as if our hold upon Philip were slackened, and our close relationship with him were lost. He was not our boy after all, but belonged to some other—a stranger. Yes; I own to it; a strong and bitter feeling of jealous disappointment seized upon me.

"Let me come with you, Philip," I cried, as he was passing out of my sight.

Was there any tone in my voice that betrayed me? I cannot tell; only I know that my boy turned back again quickly, and stooped down to kiss me, and George held out his worn, hollow hand, as if to draw me nearer to him. I believe both of them felt a quick, instinctive sympathy for me, as deep as men can ever feel for a woman and whose hand is forced to loose its grasp of her chief treasure. But neither of them knew what that moment was to me.

I had time, while Philip and I went to the dining-room, and Thomas fetched the woman in from the hall, to consider how very improbable it was that she should bring any intelligence about Captain John Champion, after so many years. This somewhat reassured me, though the glimpse I had had into Philip's heart could never be forgotten. Through all these years there had been a deep want, a profound, passionate longing, which no love or care of ours could satisfy. George and I could not be to him what his own father and mother would have been; so different, in the hidden root of things, must adopted relationships be from real ones.

Mrs. Brown came in; and Philip placed a chair for her. He was trembling with agitation, and could not command his voice to speak. She gazed critically at him, as if on her oath as to his identity.

"You're fairly like your father," she said, after this survey, "but you're more like your poor mother. It's a hard world, this is, for poor folks like me, and I've had a heap of trouble, but I've not forgot him or her. You've forgot him, I'll be bound!"

"No, never!" cried Philip. But he could say no more. He leaned his hand on my shoulder, and I felt how his strong young frame trembled, while his color came and went as fitfully as a delicate girl's.

"I've brought some news of Captain John Champion," continued the woman, in cold, hard tones. "May be you'll not think it worth much, but it's the last we've heard.

"It's a long story," she went on, with no change either in voice or face. "I've been knocked about a good deal ever since Master Philip left me, nine years ago now, as you'll recollect, ma'am, and never stayed more than a year, or eighteen months at the longest, in one place; so it were no wonder folks lost sight of me, and couldn't find me out, let them want ever so much. It might have been Captain John Champion hisself seeking after me, he'd have found it just as hard work; for I gave him up entirely after being away more than three years. But it wasn't Captain John Champion hisself, poor fellow! However, it were a seafaring man, as had gone out with him in his ship, and been wrecked with him, and saved with him, and brought home news of him, if he could only have lit upon me."

"How long ago?" cried Philip.

"It's four years pretty nigh since he came back," said Mrs. Brown, "and he did his best to find me out; but he couldn't, and he gave up at last, and went another voyage, and another, and another, searching for me whenever he was ashore, but never hearing a word of me till three months ago, when one of his old mates came lodging at my house in Liverpool, and heard me tell how I'd once had a captain's son to take care of, and how some grand folks in London had taken to him. 'What was the little chap's name?' he said. 'Philip Champion,' I said. 'That's Dan Sterne's old captain,' he said; 'him as was shipwrecked off the Ivory Coast somewhere.' So he went looking for him next day, and found Dan Sterne at death's door in the hospital, for he was quite worn out with following the sea, and was fallen into a waste, with no more than a few days' life in him. He sent for me as soon as ever he'd heard his shipmate's story, and I went there not much too soon to hear what he'd got to say."

Philip had sunk down on his knees at my side, with his eyes fastened upon the woman's face, as if he could look through hers into the brain beyond, and read what was there more quickly than he could learn it from her slow utterance.

"I'm not sure I rightly recollect it all," she said, "but he told me how the ship was broken to pieces on the rocks, and all aboard her were drowned, save him and the captain, and they two got on shore, and lived for a few days watching for a sail on the sea, till some of the savages came down and carried them up the country, and made slaves of them. Ah! he said, they knew what sufferings were, but they bore up under them, and the negroes treated them better when they found how clever the captain was. Only they never let him out of their sight; never, night or day. Dan Sterne wasn't watched so close, and he managed to escape; and he made his way through forests and bogs and jungles, and wild beasts, and wild men, day after day, night after night, till he reached a place where there were civilized folks—Portuguese, he thought; and after he'd been there a few months a ship brought him home to Old England. That's nigh upon four years ago, and he did his utmost to find me out, as he promised the captain he'd be sure to do if he ever saw England again; but he couldn't find me; and I only found him dying in the hospital."

"Is he dead?" asked Philip; "is that all?"

"Ay! he's dead," she answered; "and that's all, save a little bit of a map he gave me, where the place is that they were cast ashore upon. He pricked the place with a pin as near as he could guess, and he said they went east from there. I was to be sure and say they journeyed east from there, neither north nor south, but due east. Captain John Champion, he said, was pretty middling in health, but he was a close prisoner among them, and could not get a chance of escape."

(To be continued.)

THE JUDGMENT.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for May 6. Matt. 25:31-46. Golden Text, ver. 46.

Folly of Ignoring the Subject—A most Momentous Fact—Universal and Individual Application—The Christian in the Day of Judgment—Responsibility Measured by Privilege—Questions Left for Settlement at the Judgment-Seat—When it will Take Place—After the Millennium—The Sentences—Motives Taken into Account—Present Rewards to be Abjured—A Proverb Reversed—Eternal Destiny Self-Controlled—An Awful Temerity.

It has become an unfashionable and unusual thing in many congregations to speak of the Day of Judgment. Yet, surely, if it is true that we are hastening every moment to the "judgment-seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad," it is a most momentous fact, one which we should do well to face, and which it is the utmost folly and wickedness to ignore! "God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." (Ecc. 12:14.) "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." (Matt. 12:36, 37.) If this is so, how utterly mad and rash it is to live without regard to the fact that every word and every deed has a bearing on the endless eternity to which we are all hastening! Oh, how we need to pray in faith, with the Psalmist: "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth: keep the door of my lips." (Ps. 141:3.) "We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ."

No One can Escape.

Many a subterfuge may succeed in escaping an earthly court of law, but who can escape the just judgment of God? Some believe that for the Christian there is no judgment, but Paul says, "We," including himself, "must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ." True, "there is, therefore, no condemnation (i. e., final condemnation to be lost) to them which are in Christ Jesus," but we must all receive according to that we have done; we must all reap that which we have sown. If we, who are God's children, lived more in the light of coming judgment, the poor lost souls around us would more readily credit that there is a judgment for them.

Many of God's children think that because they are saved, and believe in Jesus, they will come off lightly at the time of judgment, while they are quite willing to admit that lost sinners deserve eternal damnation. But it was Moses, the man of all others, who knew God best in his time, who might not enter the promised land; it was not some poor reprobate Israelite who knew not God. "That servant," that one who is in the service of God, "which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to His will, shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required; and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more." (Luke 12:48.)

It is not without purpose that our loving Lord, before speaking of the final judgment, when He shall separate the sheep from the goats, speaks first of the ten virgins, and then of the servants who are entrusted with the talents, Much as God's Word teaches us of faith, it also teaches much of responsibility, and we break the harmony of His Word, and lose its balance, when, in learning to trust God, we ignore our responsibility; or when, under the presence of responsibility, we trust ourselves rather than God. The right thought of coming judgment is that of all others which is calculated to lead us into a life of trust, since we cannot keep ourselves or guide ourselves aright, but He has promised to be our Keeper, and to guide us with His eye. We are responsible to trust Him as Moses did in the desert, and Paul did in his journeys, and are responsible to do whatsoever He tells us. But if we, who are God's children, take upon ourselves to judge and choose what we shall do, how will it appear at the judgment-seat? "Well, I don't see that there is any harm in reading novels," says a luxurious young Christian lady. Well, sister, are you willing to let that question be and then receive of your just Judge what He considers due for such an employment of His time and strength? "Well, I don't see that there is any harm in telling out how so-and-so has treated me," says a deeply injured child of God. "I think I ought to expose him." Well, brother, shall we leave it to the searching light of the judgment-seat, although the Word of God says, "I say unto you, That ye resist not evil." (Matt. 5:39.) "Why do ye not rather take wrong. (1 Cor. 6:7.) "It is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing than for evil doing." (1 Pet. 3:17.) Oh how small, how infinitesimal, will all wrongs received from man appear when we stand before the judgment-seat of Christ! Let us lay up for ouselves treasures in heaven by making all our calculations in view of that great day of account. Some may say, "But if we serve God, and walk so as to please Him now, is not this the best preparation possible for the judgment-seat?" Certainly it is so, but as the consciences of some are very lax about that which does or does not please God, He has also given us the coming judgment as an incentive to live to His glory.

Settled at the Judgment-seat,

After the marriage of the Lamb, after the distribution of rewards to His servants, after the millennium (or thousand years of Christ's reign. Rev. 20:6), comes the final Judgment Day. "When the Son of Man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him, then shall He sit upon the throne of His glory: and before Him shall be gathered all nations; and He shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." No other hand but the hand of Jesus can be trusted to do this work of separation. "I am the good Shepherd, and know My sheep, and am known of Mine, as the Father knoweth Me, and I know the Father." (John 12:15, Gr.) "He shall set the sheep on His right hand, but the goats on the left." While the saved of this dispensation are reigning with Him in glory for a thousand years on earth (Rev. 20:4), the wicked shall still be left awaiting the judgment, and they, and those who have lived during the time of the Millennium, will be judged together. First, He will say to them on His right hand, "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world, for I was an hungered and ye gave Me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave Me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took Me in; naked, and ye clothed Me; sick and in prison, and ye visited Me." This announcement will come with a burst of surprise upon the righteous. The virgins expected to enter into the marriage feast, the servants expected a reward for their service, but the sheep

Expected Nothing.

"Lord, when saw we Thee an hungered, and fed Thee? or thirsty, and gave Thee drink? When saw we Thee a stranger, and took Thee in? or naked, and clothed Thee? Or when saw we Thee sick or in prison, and came unto Thee?" And the King shall answer and say unto them, "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily, I say unto you, he shall in nowise lose his reward." (Matt. 10:42.) It is not so much the things we do, in themselves, which shall tell in the great account, but the motive from which we do them; whether in our own name, for the sake of our own reputation, or in the name of Jesus, to increase His glory. "Whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus," i. e., in the character of the Lord Jesus, acting for Him, by His authority, as His representatives. Now, if we seek credit from man for any kindness which we may have the privilege of doing, and desire to be considered benevolent, we are doing it in our own name, and not in Christ's; we have our reward on earth, and we miss it at the great day of account. It is a law of the kingdom of heaven that we are not to seek our recompense in this world. "Take heed, that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven. Therefore, when thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily, I say unto you, they have their reward." (Matt. 6:1, 2.) They have it now. Poor, miserable reward is glory of men! Again, Christ warns us not to seek for glory among men when we pray and when we fast, lest in reaping the miserable reward of glory among men, we should miss the reward of our Father which is in heaven, who "shall reward thee openly." (Matt. 6:6.) Again, "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends nor thy brethren; neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors, lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee."

Flee Present Rewards,

"be afraid of quick returns," in the work of God. "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." (Luke 14:12–14.) There is a well-known proverb, "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," and for men of the world who count God out in their lives, and in all their prospects, there is wisdom in it. But with the child of God it is the exact reverse. A recompense in hand is the worst investment possible. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth" (Matt. 6:19)—gold, position, reputation, honor—where all things change, "where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal." "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth." (Col. 3:3.) God is our portion on earth—heirship of God and joint heirship with Christ, our treasure in heaven. Just as we have to avoid a bargaining spirit, so, also, a greedy, grasping spirit. And then in the great time of account we may be surprised that God accounts some little thing done for one of His children, something long forgotten—something which we never counted, as having been done unto Him.

Rewards or punishment are according to the value which Jesus, the King of Glory, has had in our eyes. Oh, now we see, that having been saved by Jesus and redeemed by His precious blood, all that we do and say must be more or less connected with Him. "To me to live is Christ," said Paul. (Phil. 1:21.) "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." (Rom. 14:7.) Men may not like to retain God in their knowledge (Rom. 1:28), and may seek to ignore the Lord that died for them, but, by doing so, they do not shut out Jesus from their lives—there he figures as a Saviour rejected and despised: ignoring Christ does not make Him cease to be; ignoring the judgment will not prevent it! Oh, how demented are men who, in their childish and wicked folly, say with the fool, "No God," while the very unrest of soul which comes out in such a declaration fulfils the very words of the God whom they reject, "The wicked are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." (Isa. 57:20.) Oh, how precious is it for the child of God to know that the kingdom to which he is welcomed has been prepared for him from the foundation of the world. It was destined for man before Adam fell; man was created for it, and adapted for it! God never created men for hell; never adapted them for companionship with demons. No; hell was prepared for the devil and his angels, and all men who, through rejecting Jesus, force themselves thither, must not wonder if they find themselves out of joint with their surroundings, for an endless eternity. Oh, it is an awful fact that every living man holds his eternal destiny in his own hands!

"Thus shall He say, also, unto them on His left hand, Depart from Me, ye accursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels; for I was an hungered, and ye gave Me no meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave Me no drink; I was a stranger, and ye took Me not in; naked, and ye clothed Me not; sick and in prison, and ye visited Me not." Many of those who shall be lost eternally will have done many benevolent actions, but there was no Christ in them: they did them in their own name, and for their own sake, and they were not done unto Him. Their life has told against Jesus instead of for Him. A life without Christ is a lost life; philanthrophy without Christ is but among the works of the law by which no flesh shall be justified before God—righteousness which is but filthy rags after all. The wicked will be taken by surprise. It is astonishing how little men believe that the wrath of God abideth on them, if they do not believe. (John 3:36.) God tells them that he that believeth not shall be damned, and they coolly set down God's declaration as though it were a mere matter of human opinion! Daringly they go on in their

Unsaved and Unsafe Condition,

and take the fearful risk of leading their lives according to their own perverted judgment, ignoring the just claims of God! They fail to submit themselves unto His righteousness, and at the last, when the Judge of all the earth shall judge them according to the Word which He has spoken, they will be taken aback, and say, "Lord, when saw we Thee an hungred, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto Thee?" They did not see Him where He was to be seen, in the least of His earthly brethren. They had despised the people of God, failed to honor, failed to help, failed to recognize the people of God, and the Master makes the cause of His people to be His own. "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me." God expects His people to be such as can be recognized: "A peculiar people, zealous of good works." (Tit. 2:14); He looks that men shall take knowledge of them that they have been with Jesus. And then He expects that the unsaved shall see Him in them, and treat them as the brethren and kinsmen of the Son of God. There is no appeal from the sentence of the King. It is final. Everlasting fire, "prepared for the devil and his angels." God never exaggerates. Fire means fire, and everlasting means everlasting. Men try to explain away the Word of God, and make it mean more or less than God intended. If this word "everlasting" does mean "age upon age," it does not fix any limit to that punishment; that everlasting punishment which awaits the lost. "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for April:

Scenes at Christ's Second Advent. By Rev. Nathaniel Starkey.

The Prophets and the Apocalyse. By Rev. N. West, D. D.

The Imminent Advent of Christ. By Earl Cavan.

The Doctrine of the 1,000 Years Millennium. By Rev. S. R. Maitland, D. D

Summary of Events of the Final Dozen Years—1889 to 1901. By Rev. M. Baxter.

Views of Antichrist in the Twelfth Century. By Roger de Hoveden.

Death of the Emperor William of Germany.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes, containing the monthly numbers for 1884, and 1883 may be had; price $1.]

NO ROOM FOR JESUS.

O pleading life, crowded so full
Of earthly toil and care!
The body's daily need receives
The first and last concern, and leaves
No room for Jesus there.

O busy brain! by night and day
Working with patience rare,
Problems of worldly loss or gain,
Thinking, till thought becomes a pain;
No room for Jesus there.

O throbbing heart! so quick to feel
In others' woes a share,
Yet human loves each power inthrall,
And sordid treasures fill it all;
No room for Jesus there.

O sinful soul! thus to debase
The being God doth spare!
Blood-bought, thou art no more thine own,
Heart, brain, life, all are His alone;
Make room for Jesus there—

Lest soon the bitter day shall come
When vain shall be thy prayer,
To find in Jesus' heart a place;
Forever closed the door of grace.
Thou'lt gain no entrance there.

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

"CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE;" Test questions and answers pertaining to Persons, Places and Things, including Bible Readings and Studies, Prayer Meeting Outlines, Concert Exercises, Chalk Talks and Seed Thoughts illustrated. The Detroit Christian Advocate says:—"This unique publication is already in the hands of many pastor's, students and Sunday-school teachers It is a veritable cyclopædia—full to the very brim of good things. The volume will prove a real treasure in any Christian home." 606 pages. Illustrated. Price $2. Teachers and Agents wanted to introduce it. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, 771 Broadway, New York.

"I want to thank you," writes a young man to B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., "for placing me in a position by which I am enabled to make money faster than I ever did before." This is but a sample extract of the many hundred of similar letters received by the above firm. See their advertisement in another column.

AUTHENTIC AND AUTHORIZED BIOGRAPHY OF

Henry Ward Beecher

Largely an Autobiography.

THE FULL ACCOUNT OF THE GREAT TRIAL and the greater part of the work from 1860 up to date is Written by Mr. Beecher Himself.

And it is completed by his son, Wm. C. Beecher, his son-in-law, Rev. Saml. Scoville, assisted by Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher.

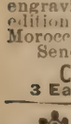
SOLD BY SUBSCRIPTION. AGENTS WANTED.

Over 700 pages. An elegant steel of Mr. Beecher and many fine wood cuts and photo-engravings. Fine Cloth, $3.00. Sheep, library edition, $3.75. Half Seal Russia, $4.00. Half Morocco, $5.00. Full Morocco, $7.00.

Send for Specimen Pages and Catalogue.

CHAS. L. WEBSTER & CO.,
3 East 14th Street, New York City.



UNIVERSITY ORGANS,— They Lead the World.—$35 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves-Double Couplers, Guaranteed for Six Years and sent, with Stool and Book, FOR TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35

MARCHAL & SMITH,
255 East 21st Street, New York.

LACTATED FOOD

For Young Infants a perfect substitute for mother's milk, often saving life; for the Invalid, or Dyspeptic, it is of great value. Thousands who have used it say it is the

FINEST BABY FOOD,
BEST INVALID FOOD,
MOST PALATABLE FOOD,
MOST NUTRITIOUS FOOD,
MOST ECONOMICAL FOOD.

A valuable pamphlet on the Care of Infants and Invalids sent on application.

Sold by Druggists. 25c., 50c., $1.00.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. BURLINGTON, VT.

(33 Colors.) DIAMOND DYES are the Purest, Cheapest, Strongest, and most Durable Dyes ever made. One 10c. package will color 1 to 4 pounds of Dress Goods, Garments, Yarns, Rags etc. Unequalled for Feathers, Ribbons, and all Fancy Dyeing. Also Diamond Paints, for Gilding, Bronzing, etc. Any color Dye or Paint, with full instruction and sample card mailed for 10 cents. At all Druggists

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., BURLINGTON, VT

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

A SPECIAL OFFER

To the Readers of the Christian Herald.

I have made a special arrangement with one of the best Life Insurance Societies of New York City by which I am enabled to offer to all the male readers of this paper, between the ages of 8 and 60 (in good health) and whose occupation is not hazardous

A Life Insurance Policy

Free of Charge,

provided that application is made to me within thirty days from this date. Circulars giving full particulars will be sent on application.

J. E. JEWETT,

APRIL 19, 1888. 77 Bible House, New York.

CALIFORNIA LANDS!

Fruit & Diversified Farming!

For gratuitous information send full P.O. address to LANSING THURBER, P. O. Box 1581, Los Angeles, California.

QUEENS NURSERY, ESTABLISHED 1870.

Special Offers.

FLOWERS BY MAIL. OFFER 4. | One Fuchia, Storm King, one New Fringed double Petunia, one Lychnis Viscaria Hardy and 5 packets choice flower seeds 50 cents.

OFFER 5. | Named varieties of our imported double Fringed French Petunias, the most satisfactory new plants sent out this year; 1 Storm King Fuchia, and 5 packets choice flower seeds for $1.

OFFER 6. | 8 of the finest new Chrysanthemums crown, including Mrs. Cleveland, J. Thorp Jr. and Calhingfordi, and 5 packets of choice flower seeds for $1.00.

By Express

Extras will be added on these express offers as will assure further dealings.

SEEDS.

WAYTE & CO., Queens, L. I., N.Y.

GALVANIZED WIRE NETTING.

BEST AND CHEAPEST FENCE IN THE MARKET FOR POULTRY, GARDEN OR LAWN.

IN BALES, 150 FEET LONG.

4 FEET HIGH, ONLY..... $4 50 PER BALE
5 FEET HIGH, ONLY..... 5 63 PER BALE
6 FEET HIGH, ONLY..... 6 75 PER BALE

Address orders and correspondence to U. S. WIRE NETTING CO., 62 Reade St., New York

---

A GRAND SUCCESS,

And as deserved as it is successful. A Remarkable Collection.

THE NEW BOOK OF GOSPEL HYMNS.

HYMNS NEW AND OLD,

Compiled by D. B. TOWNER,

With Contributions from all the Best Known Writers of the Country.

Used by leading Evangelists and in numerous Churches, Sabbath-Schools and Young Men's Christian Associations.

Commended in Highest Terms Everywhere.

Rev. B. Fay Mills has just ordered 2,000 copies for his meetings in Indianapolis. During his very successful work in Providence, R. I., over 3,000 copies were needed to supply the demand.

From "Cooper Union," Mr. Chas. Herald, who so successfully conducts these popular evangelistic services, writes:

"I have used it now for several months in my work at the Cooper Union New York City, where an audience of 1,500 come together every Sunday evening, and I must say I have never used any book which prompted such hearty and enthusiastic congregational singing as HYMNS NEW AND OLD."

Mr. S. E. Wishard, International Y.M.C.A. College Sec'y, says:

"The book is simply immense. The enthusiasm among our delegates at the conventions proved their appreciation. They could not get enough books.

Have You examined HYMNS NEW AND OLD? If not, don't fail to send for sample.

Prices: Music Edition, boards, $30 per 100; 35c. each by mail. Word edition, paper, $5 per 100; boards, $10 per 100; by mail 1c. per copy extra.

Fleming H. Revell, Publisher,

CHICAGO: 148-150 Madison St. | NEW YORK: 12 Bible House.

Yankee Girls in Zululand.

BY

LOUISE VESCELIUS-SHELDON.

WITH

100 Photogravure Illustrations by G. E. GRAVES, From Original Sketches by J. AUSTEN.

1 vol., 12mo, extra cloth, gilt top, $2.25.

Worthington Co., 747 B'way, N.Y.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.

FOR GAS. FOR OIL.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa

BOOKS HELPFUL

IN CHRISTIAN WORK.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM, by Lucy J. Rider and Nellie M. Carman, with contributions of plans, methods and outline talks to children by nearly forty others, including the best-known and most successful workers among children in this country. 208 pages, fine cloth, $1.00.

THE PRAYER MEETING AND ITS IMPROVEMENT, by Rev. L. O. Thompson. 12mo 256 pages, cloth, $1.25

"This is so good a book that we wish we could give a copy to every young minister."—C. H. Spurgeon.

"A very suggestive book."—Sunday-School Times.

THUS SAITH THE LORD, by Major D. W. Whittle. A handbook for Christian workers. 134 pages, flexible cloth, 50 cts.

"A manual of Scripture texts arranged to present the leading subjects met with in dealing with enquirers.

SECRET POWER; or, the Secret of Success in Christian Life and Work, by D. L. Moody. 116 pages, 12mo, cloth, 60 cts.; paper, 30 cts

"Every page is full of stimulating thought."—Christian Commonwealth.

* Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.*

J. E. JEWETT,
77 Bible House, - - New York.

WOMAN:

HER POWER AND PRIVILEGES.

A series of Sermons by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage. Just published. 12mo, 200 pages, paper cover. Sold by all dealers for 25 cents; or sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address

J. S. OGILVIE & CO., Publishers,
P.O. Box 2767. 57 Rose Street, New York

$100 to $300 A MONTH can be made working for us. Agents preferred who can furnish their own horses and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & Co., Publishers, 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York, N

ORDERS BY MAIL.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.

Invite correspondence in regard to Samples and prices of their varied lines of Silk, Woolen, and Cotton Dress Materials Black Silks, Colored Satins Printed Pongees, Mixed and Check Cheviots for Summer Wear, Sateens, Ginghams, and all Wash Fabrics are kept in select variety. Orders by letter are filled by our most experienced salesmen, and with assured satisfaction to the customers.

JAMES McCREERY & CO.,

Broadway and 11th St.,

NEW YORK.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO'S LEADING SPECIALTIES.

ROSES

ALL VARIETIES, SIZES AND PRICES

FINE EVER-BLOOMING PERPETUAL, CLIMBING AND MOSS ROSES.

NEW AND RARE FLOWER SEEDS.

HARDY PLANTS, New Moon Flower, Clematis, Spring Bulbs, JAPAN LILIES, New Chrysanthemums, and a Wonderful ORNAMENTAL VEGETABLE. Everything sent safely by mail or express to all points. We offer Choice NEW THINGS and STERLING NOVELTIES in all departments. Our NEW GUIDE, 100 pp., elegantly illustrated, describes over 1500 NEWES and CHOICEST Varieties of ROSES, SEED PLANTS and BULBS, and tells how to grow them Free. If you wish to plant anything, send for it. 20 Years Established. Over 60 Large Greenhouses.

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO.
ROSE GROWERS. WEST GROVE. Chester Co., Pa.

Now Is The Time to Paint.

EVERYBODY'S PAINT BOOK

A new work on INDOOR and OUTDOOR painting which is designed to teach people how to DO THEIR OWN PAINTING and save the expense of a professional painter. The most practical and valuable work of the kind ever issued. Full and plain directions are given for mixing paints for ALL PURPOSES. Tells all about PAPER HANGING, KALSOMINING, STAINING, VARNISHING, POLISHING, as well as how to RENOVATE FURNITURE, so that it will look as good as new. Tells all about HOUSE-CLEANING.

Full directions are given for mixing and applying Kalsomine to ceilings and walls. It tells how to make and use stencils for ornamenting ceilings. Gives detailed directions for PAPER HANGING so that every one can paper a room successfully. Tells how to make DAMASK WALLS, etc. Tells how to paint a kitchen or chamber FLOOR, varnish OIL-CLOTHS, varnish RUSTIC WORK, restore CHROMOS and oil paintings, PICTURE FRAMES, CLEAN MARBLE, etc. Many useful hints on ARTISTIC WORK for HOME DECORATION are given. Full directions are given for making the beautiful SPATTER-WORK pictures in which the ladies are so much interested. Tells how to paint OUTBUILDINGS, ROOFS, FARM WAGONS FARM IMPLEMENTS, and CARRIAGES as well as how to polish a PIANO or ORGAN how to fruit to GROUND GLASS or make paint for BLACKBOARDS—GRAINING in oak and black walnut, painting in imitation of EBONY, MAHOGANY and ROSEWOOD, staining, GILDING, BRONZING and SILVERING. Elegantly printed, handsomely bound in extra cloth, with ink and gold, contains a large number of illustrations; will save its cost in a short time. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, $1.00. Five books for $4.00. Get four friends to send with you and thus get your book free. Address,

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address

G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, O.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Vol. XI., No. 24. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF THE SIX NEW BISHOPS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

LONGEVITY. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE CONVERSION OF THE WORLD. By Dr. L. W. Munhall.

The Chief Priesthood Renounced—A Physician's Explanation of Divine Healing—An African's Abstinence—A Service in Madagascar—Unappreciated Rewards—A Lawyer's Conversion in a Church Vestibule—A Scoffer's Confession.

MARY MORGAN'S DARLING. (With Illustration.

THE WEDDING GARMENT. A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

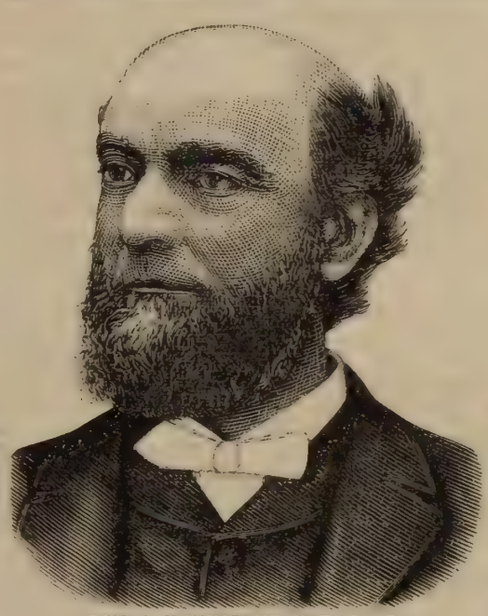
Gems from New Books: Buddha's Early Life, etc.

PICTURE OF THE EMPEROR OF GERMANY IN HIS STUDY.

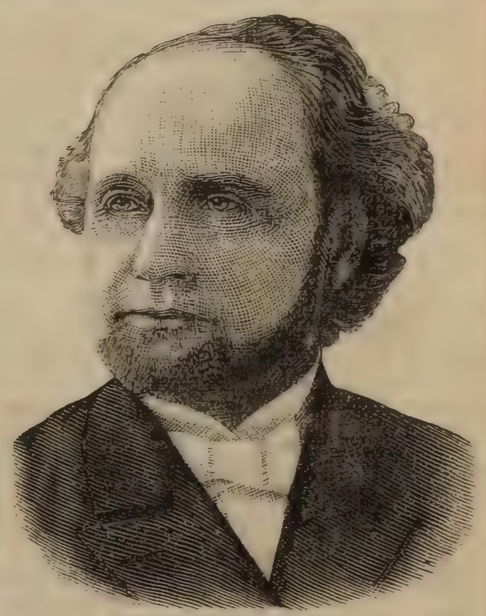
THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE. A New Serial Story by Rev. L. S. Keyser. (Continued.)

NEWNESS OF LIFE. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

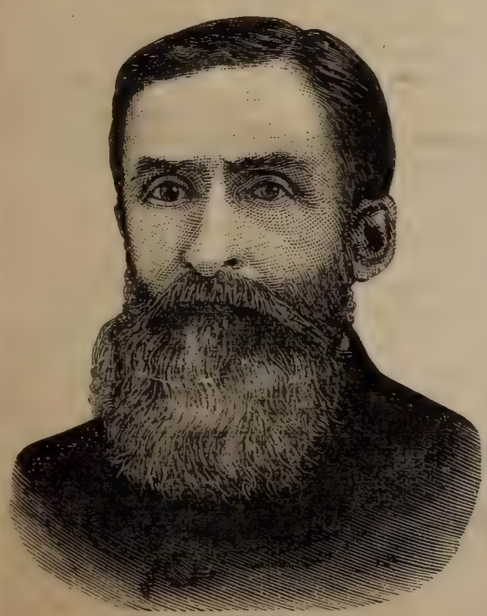
REV. J. N. FITZGERALD, D. D.



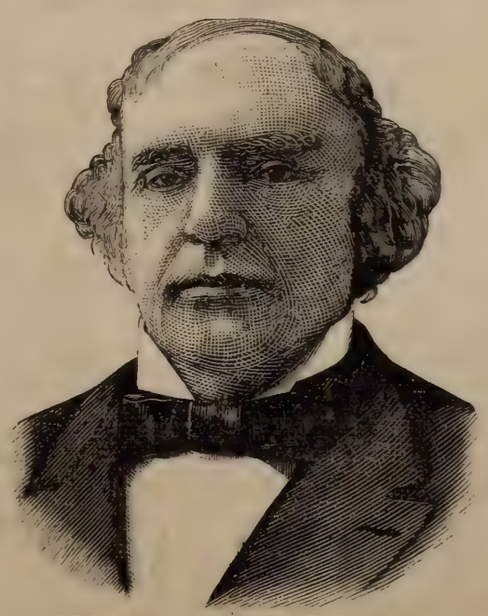
REV J. H. VINCENT, D. D., LL. D.



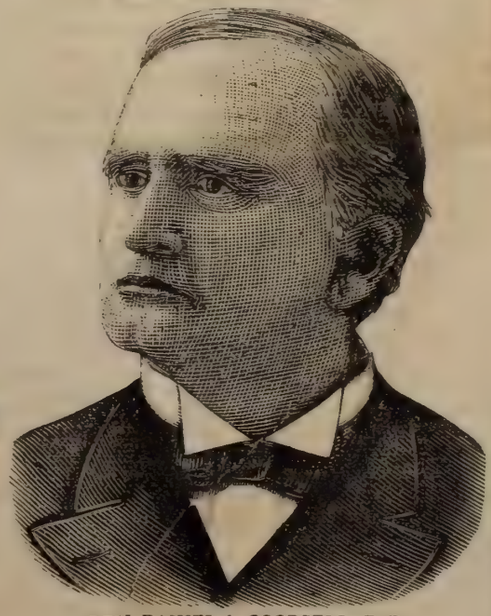
REV. ISAAC W. JOYCE, D. D.



REV. J. M. THOBURN, D. D.



REV. JOHN P. NEWMAN, D. D., LL. D.



REV. DANIEL A. GOODSELL, D. D.

The SIX BISHOPS ELECTED at the RECENT METHODIST EPISCOPAL GENERAL CONFERENCE.

THE SIX NEW M. E. BISHOPS.

THE Metropolitan Opera House, New York, was the scene of an impressive ceremony on May 29. The five Bishops, and the Missionary Bishop for India and Malaysia, were there and then consecrated for their work. The stage was set for the interior of a cathedral, and six small tables were placed there, one for each Bishop. After the hymn, "The Morning Light is Breaking," had been sung, Bishop Bowman passed from one candidate to another, a friend of each saying, as the senior Bishop approached, "We present unto you this holy man to be consecrated a bishop." After the usual questions had been answered by each candidate, a Bible was given to each, with the injunction to give heed to its teachings, and the ceremony of laying on hands was performed. The singing of a hymn, and the benediction, pronounced by Senior Bishop Bowman, concluded the simple but impressive ceremony. As the election of these ministers to episcopal functions will have an important influence on a numerous and respected section of the Christian Church, their portraits, which appear on the first page, and a brief sketch of their lives, cannot fail to interest our readers.

THE REV. J. H. VINCENT, D. D., LL.D.

HOWEVER it may be with the present generation, there is no question as to the first place among the new men in the estimation of the rising generation in the Methodist Church. The interest of the young people has been the chief thought of Dr. Vincent's life, and to promote that, he has given the best of his years and the most of his labor. To thoroughly organize the Sunday school system, and to render it efficient in all its details, has been his predominant desire, and he has devoted himself to that task with unflagging zeal.

John Hoyt Vincent is a native of Tuscaloosa, Ala., where he was born February 23, 1832. He is, therefore, now fifty-six years of age. When he was six years old his parents removed to Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, and sent him for his education to Milton and Lewisburg academies, and subsequently to the Wesleyan Institute, Newark, N. J. At the early age of seventeen, he received the "exhorter's" license, and the following year he was made a local preacher. His sphere of labor was the Luzerne Circuit in the Baltimore Conference, but in 1853 he entered the New Jersey Conference, where he remained until 1857. In that year he was transferred to the Rock River Conference, and was stationed successively at Joliet, Mount Morris, Galena, Rockford, and Chicago. While at Galena, and before the importance of the fact had dawned upon him or any one else, he was the pastor of U. S. Grant, then in business in that town as a tanner. With the future General, he formed a pleasant friendship, and has among his most treasured possession several friendly letters from General Grant, written in the days of his early struggles.

Dr. Vincent's remarkable adaptation to Sunday-school work was first publicly recognized during his labors in Chicago. He succeeded after much exertion in getting a uniform system of lessons adopted for the Chicago schools, thus recognizing the advantages of the system now in use under the title of the International Lessons. He also commenced the publication of two journals for Sunday-school teachers and scholars, which had a wide circulation. With that promptitude for recognizing special adaptation and merit for which the Methodist Church is noted, the value of Dr. Vincent's labors was perceived by the General Conference, and in 1868 he was elected editor of Sunday School Literature, and corresponding Secretary of the Sunday-school Union. So energetically and efficiently did he discharge the duties of those offices that he was four times re-elected by General Conferences, and has only now laid them aside at the call to "Come up higher." One enterprise alone established Dr. Vincent's fame in America. In the line of his special work he, in conjunction with Lewis Miller, inaugurated the Chautauqua assembly, which has done so much for the promotion of religious education, and which owes its existence and growth largely to his genius and fostering care.

REV. J. N. FITZGERALD, D. D.

THE second bishop elected by the Conference, and on the same ballot with Dr. Vincent, was Dr. Fitzgerald, who, though not so widely known outside his Conference as the famous Sunday-school worker, is a man of mark in his denomination. Tall and commanding in frame, and with a mind of masculine vigor, Dr. Fitzgerald is a man fitted by nature for a leader of men—a force to be counted upon as of no slight importance either by friend or foe.

James N. Fitzgerald was born at Newark, N. J., in 1838, and is now in his fiftieth year. In his early years it might have been predicted of him that he would become a famous general, or a Senator, or even President of the Republic, but a prophecy that he would become a bishop would have struck all who knew him as extremely unlikely to be fulfilled. He chose the profession of the law, and studied in the office of Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, who was Secretary of State in President Arthur's Cabinet. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, and at once entered upon a prosperous career. His association with Chancellor Runyon of New Jersey was a guarantee of his ability and learning, which marked him out for early and high advancement. To the young lawyer, deeply read, fluent of speech, and with great oratorical gifts, life opened very brightly, and he might naturally have looked forward to the acquisition of a large fortune, and the attainment of exalted official position. Three years, however, after his entrance on professional life, an event occurred which completely changed his future.

In 1861 a powerful religious awakening took place in the Central Methodist Episcopal Church of Newark, and, among the converts, was Mr. Fitzgerald. As was to be expected in a temperamen so positive and decisive as his, conversion was the turning-point in his temporal aswell as his spiritual life. He promptly relinquished his professional practice and entered at once on study for the ministry. He was admitted to the Newark conference in April, 1862, and was appointed to the East Newark Station. There his powerful, cogent sermons, delivered in a melodious baritone voice, and with marked oratorical power, drew large numbers to hear him, and much good was done. He was clearly a man to fill a larger sphere, and, after a year, he was removed to Elizabeth. Subsequently he was appointed to Hudson city, and then successively to Newton, Paterson, and Jersey City, and for two years he was presiding elder in the Newark district. He also held the office of secretary to the Newark Conference for eleven years. In the General Conferences of 1876, 1880, and 1884, he was an assistant secretary, and all who came in contact with him at those great assemblies, were impressed by the singular lucidity of his mind, his aptitude for organization, and his clear and convincing arguments. In 1881, when a successor was needed to the late David Terry, as Recording Secretary of the Missionary Board, these qualities marked him out as the man for the responsible post, and he was appointed. He is now called to the highest position in the gift of his brethren, and enters upon its duties with the good-will and confidence of all.

REV. ISAAC W. JOYCE, D. D.

THOUGH Dr. Joyce was not among the men whose names were popularly discussed for the Episcopate, he was the third to be elected at the General Conference, and he received a larger number of votes than were cast for any of the succesful candidates. He brings to his new duties a wide experience of an analagous character as presiding elder in an exceptionally difficult district, and a reputation for judicial acumen, which has secured him a place on the judiciary committee of more than one General Conference.

Isaac Wilson Joyce is a native of Ohio. He was born on October 11, 1836, and is therefore now in his fifty-second year. He comes of Irish parentage, and has inherited a hearty, genial, disposition, no little wit and humor, and the faculty of making warm friends wherever he goes. He was converted when he was only sixteen years of age, while he was residing with his parents in Tippecanoe County, Indiana, and united with the church near Lafayette. His earliest ministerial work was done in that city. He spent a term there in each of the two churches, and subsequently four years as presiding elder. His next appointment was at Greencastle, where he succeeded in raising funds for the erection of a beautiful church. In 1880 he was a delegate to the General Conference at Cincinnati, and his stay there led to his being transferred to the Cincinnati Annual Conference with St. Paul's Church in that city, as his first appointment. At the conclusion of his term he was appointed to Trinity Church, in the same city, and then, his influence being so strong, and his work so extensively blessed, he was granted a second term at St. Paul's. He is pre-eminently a pastor in the strict sense of the term, looking vigilantly after the spiritual interests of the people committed to his care, while not neglecting the duties of the pulpit. Dr. Joyce enjoys the cordial respect of his brethren in the ministry, and the only persons who will regret his elevation to the Episcopate are those who have sat under his ministry, but must now part with their beloved pastor for the general good of the church.

REV. JOHN P. NEWMAN, D. D., LL. D.

IT is difficult even now to realize that this noted man has been made a bishop. It was only on the fourteenth ballot, and after the most strenuous efforts of his friends, that the result was achieved. The leading journal of the Methodist Church says of the election: "More than two-thirds of the General Conference have elected him bishop. This makes him not the bishop of those only who voted for him, but of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and all will wish for him a career which will crown the closing chapter of his life with lasting honors, and demonstrate by its usefulness to the Church the wisdom of the choice." This skilfully worded paragraph will also, it may be hoped, form a basis for amicable adjustment of all that is past of an unpleasant nature.

Dr. Newman, by his political relations, has occupied so prominent a position in the public view, that only a brief summary of the leading events in his career is necessary in this place. He was born in New York, September 1, 1826, and is therefore now in his sixty-second year. He was received in the Oneida Conference in 1848, and in 1855 was transferred to the Troy Conference. Three years later he became a member of the New York Conference, and was appointed to the Bedford Street Church. At the expiration of his term there, he went on a tour in Europe and the East, writing descriptive letters to the press, and, on his return, publishing a book entitled, "From Dan to Beersheba," which commanded a large sale. In 1862 and 1863 he was pastor of the Washington Square Church, in New York.

Dr. Newman spent the following five years in the South, having accepted a commission from Bishop Ames to reorganize the Church on the ground newly occupied by the Union armies. Of his work there much has been said and written on both sides of the question, which it is unnecessary now to recall. A more congenial field was occupied by Dr. Newman when, Gen. Grant having become President, he obtained the appointment to establish the Metropolitan Church in Washington, D. C. Dr. Newman was also made Chaplain of the Senate, and his three years in the Federal Capital were profitably spent. In 1873 General Grant appointed him Inspector of Consulates. This post enabled him to visit, under the most agreeable auspices, the chief points of the world where the United States is officially represented. On his return he published another book entitled "Thrones and Palaces of Babylon and Nineveh." He was again appointed to the Metropolitan Church, where he continued to labor until 1878, when he returned to New York as pastor of the Central Church. At the end of his term he accepted the pastorate of a Congregational Church, but succeeded in maintaining his personal connection with the Methodist Conference. In 1886, after a variety of disagreeable experiences with the leading members of the Congregational Church, he was again pastor of the Metropolitan Church in Washington, which he now leaves for the Episcopate.

REV. DANIEL A. GOODSELL, D. D.

THE last of the bishops elected for the American field was Dr. Goodsell, who, though not elected until the sixteenth ballot, received a larger number of votes than the two first elected. He thus has the gratification of knowing how large a number of his brethren reposed confidence in his qualifications for the office.

Daniel Ayers Goodsell was born in Newburg, N. Y., on November 5, 1840. He is consequently the youngest of the Bishops elected at the recent Conference. His father, the Rev. Buell Goodsell, was one of the best known and most respected among the early laborers in the Methodist Episcopal Church. His term as presiding Elder in the New York East Conference was one of remarkable success. The future Bishop was educated at the New York University, and in 1859, joined the Conference of which his father was an honored member. Though at that time only nineteen years of age, he was nearly six feet high and of good proportions. At his first two charges, according to established rule he remained only one year, but once that time he has been induced at the request of the official board to continue the full term. He has been stationed at Riverhead, Glen Cove, Greenpoint Tabernacle, Brooklyn, South Norwalk, Conn., Meriden, Conn., and since 1878 successively at Washington Street and New York Avenue, Brooklyn. He has served his Conference as secretary for sixteen years with great efficiency, and has won the general esteem of its members.

Dr. Goodsell is one of the most unassuming of men, yet he is a man of profound learning and of considerable literary ability. He is chiefly remarkable, however, for his energy and industry and the unselfish spirit in which he gives time and labor to tasks which can bring him neither gain nor renown. His one desire seems to have been to be useful, and few know how thoroughly he has succeeded. Men who have worked with him, or who have had the advantage of sitting under his ministry, alone know his inestimable worth. It is certain that while his life is prolonged the Methodist Church will have no more solid and conscientious work from any of its Bishops than from Dr. Goodsell.

REV. J. M. THOBURN, D.D.

THE decision of the Conference to elect a missionary Bishop for India could have but one result in the circumstances. Dr. Thoburn has long been identified with the Indian work by no other name than his was in the minds of the majority of the delegates. As pastor, presiding elder, and editor he has labored successfully in that distant land, and it is fitting that he should become its first Methodist bishop.

James M. Thoburn is fifty-two years of age, having been born at St Clairsville, Ohio, March 1836. His early years were years of hard work. He lost his father by death when he was thirteen years of age, and it was only by his own exertions and frugal life as a school teacher that he was enabled to secure a college education. He entered Allegheny College, from which he graduated in 1857, and after one year's service in the Pittsburg Conference he offered himself as a missionary to India. He sailed for that country on April 11, 1859, in company with Messrs. Judd, Waugh, Parker, and Downey, and their wives. Landing in Calcutta, he was appointed to Nynee Tab, a well-known station in the Himalayas; then at Garhwal, where he preached in Hindi; next to Moradabad, where he preached in Hindustani; afterward at Lucknow, where both English and Hindustani were used; and lastly in Calcutta. There, not only among the white residents, but with the natives and the sailors in the port, Dr. Thoburn labored successfully, and has had the gratification of seeing the church grow and increase to a marvellous degree since his first connection with it. He is best known in this country and in Europe by his editorial work on the Indian Witness, a journal from which extracts have often been published in these columns, and which is recognized as the reliable organ of the Methodist Church in India.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

"Run Over on the Railway.—Two Young women had gone on the railway lines for the purpose of gathering coals, and were warned by a man of their danger; but, it is said, they only laughed at and scoffed him. The engine came along at its appointed time, and before they could get off the line they were dashed down upon the ground, run over, and ushered into eternity. They, doubtless, at the last moment, realized their danger, but it was then too late. You, too, dear friends, are on the railway of life; the appointed time of the engine of death approaches, and, perhaps, like the two young women, you have often laughed and scoffed when you heard the warning voice of coming danger. Oh, flee to the refuge which God has provided for you in Jesus. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life (John 3: 36).

Afraid of Being "Given Up" by a Lover.— Mr. Thompson said: "A little while ago a young woman came to me and said she wished to be saved. Some time before she had professed conversion, but it had only been profession, and now she wished to become possessed of the reality. What hindered her from coming forward and making a bold stand for Christ was a young man to whom she was attached, and whom she feared she would have to give up if she made an avowal of Christ. I told her that the loss of any earthly friend, however dear, would be as nothing in comparison with what she would find in Christ. This young woman by some would be termed a backslider, but in reality she was not; she had never been truly converted, and knew it herself. I besought her to prove her preference for Christ by accepting Him without any further delay. The struggle was long and severe, but at last, through the power of the Holy Spirit, she triumphed, and received the Saviour. It was not long before the young man himself, instead of 'giving her up,' as she had feared, expressed sympathy with her in the step she had taken, and took his place in the ranks of those who follow Jesus."

Overtaken by the Tide.—A Christian Work- er relates: "There were two boys, the sons of a naturalist, and themselves, though still young, very enthusiastic in that interesting department of science. They were at the sea-shore gathering specimens of sea-weed. Being in a part where the rocks jutted out on either side, the tide came in very swiftly, and they were so intent on their occupation, that they did not notice it until it was too late to get away. 'Never mind,' said the older to his smaller brother, 'if you get upon my back I'll save you, and we will be safe round the corner in no time.' The younger obeyed, and they started through the water, but they had not gone far, when relaxing his hold he fell from his brother's back. The other dived after him, and placing him as before, re-commenced his struggle. 'If you try to save me,' said the little fellow, 'you will be lost yourself; let me go,' 'No,' was the firm reply, 'I can and will save you.' But the younger felt that that was impossible, so throwing up his arms he slid off his brother's back and sank. His brother tried to recover him, but ineffectually. At last, scarcely caring whether he himself was saved [illegible] out for the shore alone, bearing the sorrowful [illegible] of his brother's death to [illegible] had did his best to save his parents. That [illegible] But, thank God, his brother, but was [illegible] not only our Elder Brother, Jesus Christ, [illegible] none willing but can save to the uttermost, and [illegible] are lost who trust in Him."

Ropes Round Twelve Necks.—"A Certain English king laid siege to the French town of Calais. The garrison made a most stubborn defence, and so enraged the king that on the capitulation of the city he determined to sack the place; but his Queen, whom he dearly loved, pleaded for the people, and he consented to spare their lives if the chief men came to him very penitently, and besought mercy. Twelve men, with ropes round their necks and heads bent low, came from the town, and, approaching the king, cried for clemency. So too the sinner must cast off his own righteousness and, clothed in the sack-cloth of repentance, approach the Most High, pleading for mercy. These twelve men had only their lives spared, but we, in the greatness, of His love, are taken into the family of the King, and clothed in royal robes, and invited to partake of the marriage supper of the Lamb."

A Young Hindoo Scapegrace, of Some Edu- cation, fell into very bad habits, and finding himself one day in financial extremity, he stole some money, about three dollars, from his aunt, with whom he lived. "Passing along the road one evening," says the missionary, who relates the incident, "he found lying in his path a small Christian book, entitled, 'The Heart Book,' translated and printed in his own language. On reading it his attention was arrested, and his conscience aroused. He went home, humbly confessed his theft, and restored the money. For six months he read and re-read the graphic description of his own heart-workings in the little book. His conscience, so seared and dead before, now gave him no rest. His aunt advised him to go to a friend in a near village, who had a larger book, which they called 'God's Word.' He went, borrowed the friend's Bible, and read it as he had read the Heart Book. The Holy Spirit wrought upon him as he read. He was converted, accepted Christ, ceased all idolatrous worship and rites, and was baptised. His family persecuted him, as a matter of course, and cast him out, and even performed his funeral rites, but he lives, an earnest, happy Christian, rejoicing in the salvation he has found."

The Unexpected Beauty of the Scene.— "There was a poor blind boy—not poor in circumstances, but poor because of his affliction—whose mother took him to all the most eminent doctors, and oculists, to see if anything could possibly be done for him. Only one practitioner gave him any hope. He said if the lady left the boy under his charge for so long, he thought he could enable her son to see. The mother gladly agreed. The boy was left, and at the end of the time was taken home by his mother. On a certain day the bandages were to be taken from his eyes. The day came, a glorious day of sunshine, and there were many friends gathered at the house. The bandage was at length taken from the lad's eyes. He gave one look around him, then running to the couch he hid his face and wept. His mother asked him why he wept. 'Oh mother,' he said, 'why did you not tell me it was all so beautiful?' 'But I tried to tell you, my boy,' she replied. 'Not that it was so beautiful,' persisted the boy.' No matter how faithfully he was told, for want of vision he could not apprehend it; he must see for himself. Similarly, when we tell the sinner of the beauty of Christ, His love and mercy and grace, in a manner they seem to understand, but they cannot realise it in anything of its fulness, until they have seen Him for themselves."

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.00.

LONGEVITY.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, June 10, 1888.

"With long life will I satisfy him." Ps. 91 : 16.

Religion a Chariot, not a Hearse—Conducive to Long Life—I. By making Care of Health a Duty—The Caligraphy of God—The Whispering-Gallery of the Soul—An Ill-used Watch—II. By Protesting Against Dissipation—Lives of Genius Curtailed by Sin—Illustrious Examples—III. By Relieving Worry—A Twenty-Millionaire Friend—The Wheels of a Carpet Factory—An Almighty Sedative—IV. By Assuring Post-Mortem Happiness—Four Experiments—The Voice of the Rainbow.

THROUGH the mistake of its friends, religion has been chiefly associated with sick-beds and graveyards. The whole subject, to many people, is odorous with chlorine and carbolic acid. There are people who cannot pronounce the word religion without hearing in it the clipping chisel of the tombstone cutter. It is high time that this thing were changed, and that religion, instead of being represented as a hearse to carry out the dead, should be represented as a chariot in which the living are to triumph.

Religion, so far from subtracting from one's vitality, is a glorious addition. It is sanative, curative, hygienic. It is good for the eyes, good for the ears, good for the spleen, good for the digestion, good for the nerves, good for the muscles. When David, in another part of the Psalms, prays that religion may be dominant, he does not speak of it as a mild sickness, or an emaciation, or an attack of moral and spiritual cramp ; he speaks of it as "the

Saving Health

of all nations"; while God, in the text, promises longevity to the pious, saying: "With long life will I satisfy him." The fact is that men and women die too soon. It is high time that religion joined the hand of medical science in attempting to improve human longevity. Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years. Methuselah lived nine hundred and sixty-nine years. As late in the history of the world as Vespasian, there were, at one time, in his empire forty-five people one hundred and thirty-five years old. So far down as the sixteenth century, Peter Zartan died at one hundred and eighty-five years of age. I do not say that religion will ever take the race back to antediluvian longevity, but I do say the length of life will be increased.

It is said in Isaiah : "The child shall die a hundred years old." Now, if according to Scripture, the child is to be a hundred years old, may not the men and women reach to three hundred and four hundred and five hundred? The fact is that we are mere dwarfs and skeletons compared with some of the generations that are to come. Take the African race. They have been under bondage for centuries. Give them a chance, and they develop a Frederick Douglass or a Toussaint L'Ouverture. And if the white race shall be brought from under the serfdom of sin, what shall be the body? what shall be the soul? Religion has only just touched our world. Give it full power for a few centuries, and who can tell what will be the strength of man, and the beauty of woman, and the longevity of all?

My design is to show that practical religion is the friend of long life. I prove it, first, from the fact that it makes the care of our health

A Positive Christian Duty.

Whether we shall keep early or late hours, whether we shall take food digestible or indigestible, whether there shall be thorough or incomplete mastication, are questions very often deferred to the realm of whimsicality; but the Christian man lifts this whole problem of health into the accountable and the divine. He says: "God has given me this body, and He has called it the temple of the Holy Ghost, and to deface its altars, or mar its walls, or crumble its pillars, is a God-defying sacrilege." He sees God's caligraphy in every page—anatomical and physiological. He says: "God has given me a wonderful body for noble purposes."

That arm with thirty-two curious bones wielded by forty-six curious muscles, and all under the brain's telegraphy ; three hundred and fifty pounds of blood rushing through the heart every hour, the heart in twenty-four hours beating 100,000 times, during the twenty-four hours overcoming resistances amounting to 224,000,000 pounds of weight, during the same time the lungs taking in fifty-seven hogsheads of air, and all this mechanism not more mighty than delicate and easily disturbed and demolished.

The Christian man says to himself: "If I hurt my nerves, if I hurt my brain, if I hurt any of my faculties, I insult God and call for Dire Retribution."

Why did God tell the Levites not to offer to Him in sacrifice animals imperfect and diseased? He meant to tell us in all the ages that we are to offer to God our very best physicial condition, and a man who through irregular or gluttonous eating ruins his health, is not offering to God such a sacrifice. Why did Paul write for his cloak at Troas? Why should such a great man as Paul be anxious about a thing so insignificant as an overcoat? It was because he knew that with pneumonia and rheumatism he would not be worth half as much to God and the Church as with respiration easy and foot free.

An intelligent Christian man would consider it an absurdity to kneel down at night and pray and ask God's protection, while at the same time he kept the windows of his bedroom tight shut against fresh air. He would just as soon think of going out on the bridge between New York and Brooklyn, leaping off and then praying to God to keep him from getting hurt. Just as long as you defer this whole subject of physical health to the realm of whimsicality or to the pastry-cook, or to the butcher, or to the baker, or to the apothecary, or to the clothier, you are not acting like a Christian. Take care of all your physical forces—nervous, muscular, bone, brain, cellular tissue—for all you must be brought to judgment.

Smoking your nervous system into fidgets, burning out the coating of your stomach with wine logwooded and strychnined, walking with thin shoes to make your feet look delicate, pinched at the waist until you are nigh cut in two, and neither part worth anything, groaning about sick headache and palpitation of the heart, which you think came from God, when they came from

Your own Folly.

What right has any man or woman to deface the temple of the Holy Ghost? What is the ear? Why, it is the whispering-gallery of the human soul. What is the eye? It is the observatory God constructed, its telescope sweeping the heavens. What is the hand? An instrument so wonderful that when the Earl of Bridgewater bequeathed in his will $40,000 for treatises to be written on the wisdom, power, and goodness of God, Sir Charles Bell, the great English anatomist and surgeon, found his greatest illustration in the construction of the human hand, devoting his whole book to that subject.

So wonderful are these bodies that God names His own attributes after different parts of them. His omniscience—it is God's eye. His omnipresence—it is God's ear. His omnipotence—it is God's arm. The upholstery of the midnight heavens—it is the work of God's fingers. His life-giving power—it is the breath of the Almighty. His dominion—"the government shall be upon His shoulder." A body so divinely honored and so divinely constructed, let us be careful not to abuse it.

When it becomes a Christian duty to take care of our health, is not the whole tendency toward longevity? If I toss my watch about recklessly, and drop it on the pavement, and wind it up any time of day or night I happen to think of it, and often let it run down, while you are careful with your watch, and never abuse it, and wind it up just at the same hour every night, and put it in a place where it will not suffer from the violent changes of atmosphere, which watch will last the longer? Commo sense answers. Now, the human body is God watch. You see the hands of the watch, yo see the face of the watch ; but the beating the heart is the ticking of the watch. Oh, careful and do not let it run down!

Again : I remark that practical religion is friend of longevity in the fact that it is a pr test against dissipations, which injure and destr the health. Bad men and women live a ve short life. Their them. I know hundreds of good old men, b I do not know half a dozen bad old men. Wh They do not get old. Lord Byron died at Mi solonghi at thirty-six years of age, himself h own Mazeppa, his unbridled passions the hor that dashed with him into the desert. Edg A. Poe died at Baltimore at thirty-eight yea of age. The black raven that alighted on th bust above his door was delirium tremens-

Sins Kill

"Only this and nothing more."

Napoleon Bonaparte lived only just beyon mid-life, then died at St. Helena, and one of h doctors said that his disease was induced t excessive snuffing. The hero of Austerlitz, th man who by one step of his foot in the cent of Europe shook the earth, killed by a snuf box! Oh, how many people we have know who have not lived out half their days becau of their dissipations and indulgences! Nov practical religion is a protest against all diss pations of any kind.

"But," you say, "professors of religion ha fallen, professors of religion have got drun professors of religion have misappropriate trust funds, professors of religion have absco ed." Yes ; but they

Threw Away Their Religion

before they did their morality. If a man on White Star line steamer bound for Liverpool, i mid-Atlantic jumps overboard and is drowne is that anything against the White Star line capacity to take the man across the ocean And if a man jumps over the gunwale of h religion and goes down never to rise, is th any reason for your believing that religion h no capacity to take the man clear through? I the one case, if he had kept to the steamer h body would have been saved ; in the other ca if he had kept to his religion, his morals wou have been saved.

There are aged people who would have be dead twenty-five years ago but for the defenc and the equipoise of religion. You have more natural resistance than hundreds of peop who lie in the cemeteries to-day, slain by the own vices. The doctors made their case kind and pleasant as they could, and it was ca ed congestion of the brain, or something el but the snakes and the blue flies that seeme to crawl over the pillow in the sight of the d lirious patient showed what was the matt with him. You, the aged Christian man, wal ed along by that unhappy one until you cam to the golden pillar of a Christian life. Yo went to the right ; he went to the left. That all the difference between you. Oh, if this r ligion is a protest against all forms of dissip tion, then it is an illustrious friend of lo gevity. "With long life will I satisfy him."

Again : religion is a friend of longevity i the fact that of our temporalities. It is not work that ki men, it is worry. When a man becom genuine Christian he makes over to God only his affections, but his family, his busine his reputation, his body, his mind, his soul everything. Industrious he will be, but ne worrying, because God is managing his affair How can he worry about business when i answer to his prayers God tells him when t buy and when to sell; and if he gain, that best, and if he lose, that is best?"

It Takes the Worry Out

Suppose you had a supernatural neighb who came in and said : "Sir, I want you to ca on me in every exigency ; I am your fast frien uld fall back on $20,000,000; I can foresee a ic ten years; I hold the controlling stock in ty of the best monetary institutions of New k; whenever you are in trouble, call on me

I will help you; you can have my money you can have my influence; here is my d in pledge for it." How much would you y about business? Why, you would say:
I do the best I can, and then I'll depend on friend's generosity for the rest."
ow more than that is promised to every istian business man. God says to him: "I
New York and London and St. Petersburg Pekin; and Australia and California are e; I can foresee a panic a million years; I all the resources of the universe, and I am fast friend; when you get in business ble or any other trouble, call on me and I help; here is my hand in pledge of omni-nt deliverance." How much should that worry? Not much. What lion will dare it his paw on that Daniel? Is there not in this? Is there not

An Eternal Vacation

is? "Oh," you say, "here is a man who askod for a blessing in a certain enterprise, and st five thousand dollars in it. Explain that."
. Yonder is a factory, and one wheel is go-orth, and the other wheel is going south, one wheel plays laterally and the other vertically. I go to the manufacturer and
: "O manufacturer, your machinery is a adiction. Why do you not make all the ls go one way?" "Well," he says, "I them to go in opposite directions on pur-and they produce the right result. You wn-stairs and examine the carpets we are g out in this establishment and you will I go down on the other floor and I see rpets, and I am obliged to confess that h the wheels in that factory go in opposite ions, they turn out a beautiful result; and I am standing there looking at the exe fabric an old Scripture passage comes inmind: "All things work together for to them who love God." Is there not rest t? Is there not longevity in that?
pose a man is all the time worried about utation? One man says he lies, another e is stupid, another says he is dishonest, lf a dozen printing establishments attack nd he is in a great state of Excitement and Worry me, and cannot sleep; but religion comes and says: "Man, God is on your side; ll take care of your reputation; if God be , who can be against you?" How much that man worry about his reputation?

uch. If that broker who some years ago ll Street, after he had lost money, sat and wrote a farewell letter to his wife bee blew his brains out—if instead of taking his pocket a pistol he had taken out a ad New Testament, there would have been s suicide. O nervous and feverish people world, try this almighty sedative. You e twenty-five years longer under its soothwer. It is not chloral that you want, or ine that you want; it is the gospel of
"With long life will I satisfy him."
n: practical religion is a friend of lon-in the fact that it removes all corroding out a future existence. Every man wants w what is to become of him. If you get rd a rail train, you want to know at what is going to stop; if you get on board a ou want to know into what harbor it is o run, and if you should tell me you have rest in what is to be

Your Future Destiny,

d, in as polite a way as I know how, tell lid not believe you. Before I had this settled with reference to my future exist-ne question almost worried me into ruin-th. The anxieties men have upon this put together would make a martyrdom.
a state of awful unhealthiness. There ple who fret themselves to death for fear g.

I want to take the strain off your nerves and the depression off your soul, and I make two or three experiments. Experiment first: When you go out of this world it does not make any difference whether you have been good or bad, or whether you believed truth or error, you will go straight to glory. "Impossible," you say "my common sense as well as my religion teaches that the bad and the good cannot live together forever. You give me no comfort in that experiment." Experiment the second: When you leave this world you will go into an intermediate state where you can get converted and prepared for heaven. "Impossible," you say; "as the tree falleth, so it must lie, and I cannot postpone to an intermediate state reformation which ought to have been effected in this state." Experiment the third: There is no future world; when a man dies, that is the last of him. Do not worry about what you are to do in another state of being; you will not do anything. "Impossible," you say; "there is something that tells me that

Death is Not the Appendix

but the preface to life; there is something that tells me that on this side of the grave I only get started, and that I shall go on forever; my power to think says 'forever,' my affections say 'forever,' my capacity to enjoy or suffer, 'forever.'"

Well, you defeat me in my three experiments. I have only one more to make, and if you defeat me in that I am exhausted: A mighty One on a knoll back of Jerusalem one day, the skies filled with forked lightnings and the earth filled with volcanic disturbances, turned his pale and agonized face toward the heavens and said: "I take the sins and sorrows of the ages into my own heart. I am the expiation. Witness earth and heaven and hell, I am the expiation." And the hammer struck him, and the spears punctured him, and heaven thundered: "The wages of sin is death!" "The soul that sinneth, it shall die!" "I will by no means clear the guilty!" Then there was silence for half an hour, and the lightnings were drawn back into the scabbard of the sky, and the earth ceased to quiver, and all the colors of the sky began to shift into woven out of the falling tears of Jesus, and there was red as of the bloodshedding, and there was blue as of the bruising, and there was green as of the heavenly foliage, and there was orange as of the day-dawn. And along the line of the blue I saw the words: "I was bruised for their iniquities." And along the line of the red I saw the words: "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." And along the line of the green I saw the words: "The leaves of the Tree of Life for the healing of the nations." And along the line of the orange I saw the words: "The day-spring from on high hath visited us."

A Rainbow

And then I saw the storm was over and the rainbow rose higher and higher until it seemed retreating to another heaven, and planting one column of its colors on one side the eternal hill, and planting the other column of its colors on the other side the eternal hill, it rose upward and upward "and behold there was a rainbow about the throne." Accept that sacrifice and Quit Worrying.

Take the tonic, the inspiration, the longevity of this truth. Religion is sunshine; that is health. Religion is fresh air and pure water; they are healthy. Religion is warmth; that is healthy. Ask all the doctors and they will tell you that a quiet conscience and pleasant anticipations are hygienic. I offer you perfect peace now and hereafter.

What do you want in the future world? Tell me and you shall have it. Orchards? There are the trees with twelve manner of fruits, yielding fruit every month. Water scenery? There is the River of Life, from under the throne of God, clear as crystal, and the sea of glass mingled with fire. Do you want music? There is the oratorio of the Creation led on by Adam, and the oratorio of the Red Sea led on by Moses, and the oratorio of the Messiah led on by St. Paul, while the archangel with swinging baton controls the one hundred and forty-four thousand who make up the orchestra.

The Other Side of the Grave.

Do you want reunion? There are your dead children waiting to kiss you, waiting to embrace you, waiting to twist garlands in your hair. You have been accustomed to open the door on this side the sepulchre. I open the door on the other side the sepulchre. You have been accustomed to walk in the wet grass on the top of the grave. I show you the under side of the grave; the bottom has fallen out and the long ropes with which the pall-bearers let down your dead, let them clear through into heaven.

Glory be to God for this robust, healthy religion. It will have a tendency to make you live long in this world, and in the world to come you will have eternal life. "With long life will I satisfy Him."

A SCOFFER'S AVOWAL.

A LADY who is doing Christian work among the garrison at Gibraltar, relates a remarkable incident which occurred a few weeks ago. She says: "One evening a Rifleman, well known in the regiment as an atheist, came in to do Satan a service. He meant to snatch away the seed sown, to refute the speaker's arguments in the barrack-room, and throw ridicule upon the whole mission. My subject was, 'What think ye of Christ?' The unbeliever remained to the after-meeting, for the purpose of obtaining a knowledge of our proceedings, and that he might deter some anxious inquirer or 'chaff' a comrade. I asked him, 'What think you of Christ?' 'Thank you, I don't believe, and I don't want to,' he replied. 'Whether you believe or not, here is a fact, that you will have to meet God and render to Him an account. Now, what answer will you give Him to the truth you have heard to-night?' 'If there be a God, I'll take my chance," he answered flippantly, and then added, 'As for hell, I don't believe in it.' After a few more solemn words I left him. He attended regularly, and his presence was by no means cheering to us, as we feared he was undoing the good work among his comrades. God had purposes of grace towards him, and, while we refrained from speaking to him again, His Spirit was dealing with his soul. One evening, on inviting anxious seekers to stand up, our unbelieving friend rose, evidently in much emotion. Prayer was made for him; he was then personally dealt with. 'I confess that I came the first night to mock; but the words haunted me. All next day I was unhappy. I came again and again. I have felt miserable; but to-night I seem to feel there is hope for me.'

"As one who had publicly denied his Creator, and through whose influence a Bible-reader had apostatized, it was thought fitting that he should make a public confession of Christ. Accordingly, one Sunday evening at the large meeting, in the presence of many unconverted who knew him as an atheist and blasphemer, he told the story of his change in a few simple words: "I denied there was a God, I ridiculed the Bible, I gloried in infidelity, but now I do love Jesus. He has saved me, and I wish all my comrades would come to Him and be saved too. I only wish I could undo the harm I have done.' It was a scene calculated to draw tears of thanksgiving and sympathy."

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

THE CONVERSION OF THE WORLD.

By Rev. L. W. Munhall, M. D.*

The Scripture Millennium — Events Antedating the Predicted 1,000 Years' Reign of Christ — State of the World When Christ Comes to it — The Days of Noah and of Lot — The Parable of the Wheat and the Tares — The Virgins and the Leaven — The Progress of Christianity.

SOME inquire, "Do not the Scriptures teach that the world is to be converted?" I answer, Not by a single word! But how about these prophecies?

"Ask of Me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." (Psalm 2 : 8). "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. (Isaiah 11 : 6-9).

"But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put My law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be My people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord, for they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sins no more." (Jeremiah 31 : 33-34.)

I answer that pre-millennialists believe in the Literal Fulfilment

of them. They believe in a Millennium during which the devil is really bound, with nothing to "hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain," when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." Not the sort of Millennium some think we are having now. Not even a Millennium where Christian principles will dominate the civil governments of earth, as some post-millennialists claim; but a Millennium where all bow to the mild sway of the sceptre of the King of Heaven. The post-millennialists hold that the Church is to march forward in its conquests until the world is converted, or, at least dominated by the principles of the doctrines of Christ, and thus shall these prophecies be fulfilled. The pre-millennialists believe that through the Church, by the preaching of the gospel, all who are to be saved during this dispensation, will be by accepting Christ as Saviour; and then, when God's purposes in grace for this dispensation are accomplished,

Christ Comes to Take His Bride Away to save her from the fires of the great tribulation, at the end of which time He returns with His bride to judge the world in righteousness and destroy the antichrist and his armies, the man of sin "with the brightness of His coming. (II Thess. 2 : 8.)

A careful contextual examination of the above mentioned and similar prophecies, will reveal the fact that their fulfilment will be accomplished by terrible judgments. For instance: the things prophesied of in Ps. 2 : 8, are thus introduced in the following verse: "Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them to pieces like a potter's vessel." (Ps. 2 : 9.) The context to Isa. 2 : 6–9 indicates the same thing: "But with righteousness shall He judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and He shall smite the earth with the rod of His mouth, and with the breath of His lips shall He slay the wicked" (Isa. 11 : 4; Jer. 31 : 33, 34) has reference to Israel and Judah only, as the context clearly shows: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was a husband unto them, saith the Lord" (Jer. 31 : 31, 32). The stone cut out of the mountain in Dan. 2 : 35, that shall ultimately fill the whole earth, smites the feet of the image (the image represents the world powers) and dashes it to pieces, and it becomes "like the chaff of the summer threshing floors," and so on of the rest of these prophecies to the last.

The renowned Dr. Chalmers was once lecturing to some students on the closing scenes of this dispensation. As he was nearing the conclusion of the lecture, he was interrupted and compelled to leave the class hastily in answer to an imperative summons. As he gathered his hat and coat hurriedly in leaving, he said, "Young gentlemen, think as you will about these matters, one thing is absolutely certain, the dispensation of the Spirit will close with a smash."

But how about Phil. 2 : 10, 11 : "That at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Is the bowing of the knee and confessing that Jesus is Lord equivalent to salvation? If so, then the "final restorationists" are right when, chiefly upon the testimony of these verses, they claim that not only all the inhabitants of earth shall at last be found among the "blood-washed throng" in heaven, but of hell also, together with the devil and all demons. But they are not right, for this Scripture teaches no such thing. The time is coming when the devil and all atheists, infidels, and blasphemers will be obliged to kneel and confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father;

When "He Cometh With Clouds, and every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him" (Rev. 1 : 7), but it will avail them nought.

The Word of God does not teach that the world is to be converted. It teaches most explicitly that it will not be. Let it speak for itself as to what will be the condition of affairs when He shall return:

"But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." (Matt. 24 : 37-39.) Surely, no one will claim that the world was converted in the days of Noah. Yet as it was then, so shall it be when Christ returns.

"Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded. But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed." (Luke 17 : 28-30.) Sodom didn't look much like it was converted in Lot's time. No more will the world be when Christ is revealed. See Jude, verse seventh.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away." (II Tim 3 : 1-5.) Here is of the condition of affairs immediately preceding the advent of the Lord; but we find nothing at all resembling a converted world in the narrative.

An Explicit Description

"Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and went into the house; and His disciples came unto Him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field. He answered and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man; the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world" (age). Matt. 13 : 36–40.

This parable, and the Lord's own interpretation of it, leaves no doubt whatever but that when He returns there will be multitudes of unsaved people on the earth:

Tares Growing with the Wheat.

If the parable of the ten virgins represents the professing church, half of it will be found unregenerated when the Lord returns, and the other half asleep. The exegetes are pretty well agreed that "leaven," in the Scriptures, signifies corruption, and the kingdom of heaven the professing church, in part. If these conclusions be true in every other case, why not Matt. 13 : 33? "Another parable spake He unto them: The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." In this case this passage would signify that corrupting influences will work in the visible church until the whole is corrupted. Is not such interpretation justified by the question of the unjust judge, "Howbeit when the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith (the faith) on the earth?" (Luke 18 : 8, R, V.) Do not the sixth and nineteenth chapters of Revelation, inclusively, justify such interpretation? Has not this view of the case already come to pass once? Was not the professing church as corrupt as Satan could ever wish it to be for nearly a thousand years? Is man, naturally, any better that this condition of affairs should not occur again?

Let it be said there is nothing, save the word of inspiration, so convincing, that the church is a divine Institution, and, "that the gates of hell shall not prevail against her," as that she has lived and accomplished so much, to the glory of God, despite the formality, worldliness, ignorance, and schisms that have marred her beauty and hindered her progress. She shall yet look "forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," (Song of Solomon 6 : 10.)

But, while this is so, it should not be forgotten that the Word of God, nowhere, by a single sentence, intimates that the world is to be converted before Christ comes. It does, however, teach that, "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world (Greek, inhabited earth), for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." (Matt. 24 : 14).

* From his work entitled "The Lord's Return, and Kindred Truth," 192 pages. The Willard Tract Depository, Toronto, Canada.

UNAPPRECIATED REWARDS.

No clearer evidence of the degradation of the Central African races and the difficulties of missionary work among them has been given than that contained in a report from Mr. Ousley, a missionary of the American Board at Kambi, who has been trying to stimulate the children in the schools by rewards, and describes the disappointing results in a letter to the Missionary Herald: He says: "We have noticed a desire, on the part of a number of the pupils, to absent themselves from the religious part of the schoolwork. One would not suspect small children of such a spirit, but we have noticed it quite prominently of late to continue to offer a little work to those who come regularly to school whereby they may earn a wrap or garment, at the close of school.

"As yet very few appreciate the value of clothes, even after they have secured them. We naturally thought that the parents of the chil dren would be glad to have us furnish 'their children with work sufficient to earn something to wear. But it is the reverse. They prefer, seemingly, to have their children about them in an almost nude condition, rather than that they secure garments or wraps by working for them. In view of our desire to help them get something to cover their bodies, we have required of our scholars only three full hours' work per day for five days, which is the equivalent to about one fourth or one fifth of the market value of such articles in this part of the world. To our surprise and disappointment the parents of some of the children ceased to come to our services, as also to the school exercises, and their excuse is that we have not given them any clothes or anything to eat for coming. Not one in a hundred of the girls and the women would wear clothes even if they could get them as a free gift, and the men who really desire clothes generally contrive to buy them from the traders."

THE CHIEF PRIESTHOOD RENOUNCED.

A YOUNG man in Persia has voluntarily chosen to be a teacher, when, by abjuring the Christian faith, he might have been made chief priest of his sect. The Rev. S. G. Wilson, in the course of a letter to the Church, thus describes the case: During a recent tour in the southern portion of our field, I was impressed with the manifestations of the power the gospel is exerting upon Mussulmans. Our first stage brought us to a village of Ali-Alahis, a sect so heterodox as to be almost outside the pale of Islam. They always give a ready ear to Christian teaching. We have a convert here who belongs to the priestly family. His father was chief priest of the sect, but consented to put his son in our Tabriz school, where he received the truth. The son might have inherited the office if he had not rather chosen to suffer affliction with the people of God. He was known to all as a Christian. Last spring the school was reopened under his charge. He had offers of employment as teacher in their mosque, with a good family, if he would teach from their books, but he was desirous of doing the Lord's service. His instruction is largely from distinctly Christian books. After awhile the mujteheed (chief mollah) of Tabriz, who has the village tax for his perquisite, sent a demand that he give an account of himself for teaching from "American books," and the mollah, who was instrumental in closing the Mussulman department of our school at Tabriz, came to vex him; so that he has scarcely been able to keep his school together, and many of the people have broken off intercourse with him.

A PHYSICIAN'S EXPLANATION OF DIVINE HEALING.

PHYSICIANS as a rule are more sceptical about Divine Healing than other persons, as their training leads them to believe that only by medical treatment can disease be overcome. One case, however, of a physician frankly ascribing a cure to the intervention of Divine power is related in *Thy Healer this month. Mrs. Hudson, speaking at Bethshan said:

"A young girl named Mary Parker, living in Birmingham, suffered from spinal complaint, and was quite unable to sit up in bed. She had heard of the Lord's healing, and thought He might do for her as He had done for others. She saw the promise and believed it, and then she had a desire to be anointed. A clergyman was willing to anoint her, and she was anointed nine months before the healing came; but during that time she trusted perfectly in the Lord. The friends said it was fanaticism, and the doctors said she was incurable, but she kept on trusting. Yet, after the anointing she became worse. She had an attack of paralysis, and was cramped up in bed with her ancles one across the other. Her speech was also affected, her vocal organs seemed paralysed, but she went on trusting the Lord all the time. There was no anxiety whatever, but she was just resting in His promise, and knowing that when the time came she would be healed. One lady said to me: 'If Mary Parker is healed I shall believe in Divine Healing.' She came to me afterwards and said, rejoicing: 'O! Mary Parker is healed.' Well, this young girl went on in this state. First, her speech came back in four or five months, and she knew the Lord was working; and, at the end of nine months, after a day of great suffering, it seemed as if every joint in her body had become loosed, and she was suddenly made to sit up in bed. She told me this herself. She called to her mother and said: 'Mother, don't be frightened, the Lord's time is come,' and to her mother's glad surprise she rose from her bed and walked. 'When I turned the sheet down,' she said, 'I was surprised to find my legs perfectly straight, and then I walked.' Then the father and other members of the family were called up to rejoice with her. Mrs. Hudson described the visit of the doctor two days afterwards, and how he made her walk up and down the room and saw it was a perfect cure. He said: 'I have had nothing to do with this, it is a miracle of the olden times.'"

Thy Healer and Faith Witness*, a monthly Magazine, edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where Missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual Subscription, 75 cents, may be sent to the Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York.

AN AFRICAN'S ABSTINENCE.

IN an encouraging report from the West Central African Mission of the American Board, published in the Missionary Herald, Mr. Currie mentions an incident which gave the missionaries much comfort. He says: An effort has been made in almost every place visited to sow some seeds of gospel truth. Many people have thus heard for the first time about Jesus and His love. Many have learned that there are white men in the country who seek to do them good and not evil. One of my boys, while on a journey for the first time, took his stand for Christ; and he has since shown that he was in earnest about what he then did. One of the men, on my last trip, refused to drink beer when it was presented to the carriers, and attended worship every night. Two others attended worship regularly, and frequently lingered, after the exercises were over, to ask questions about what they had heard. Often, while on the march, I could hear some of the men trying to sing the hymns they had heard us sing at worship. In one place, almost seven days' journey from here, I found that some of the people, while on their way to the ombala, had stopped at our schoolhouse, and learned a few truths from the preaching of one of the brethren, which they carried back to their own village and made known to others. These are small items, but they all have a bearing on the future of our work; and while we look for a large crop from bountiful sowing, it is not impossible to get a good plant from a single mustard seed.

A SERVICE IN MADAGASCAR.

THE character of the work done by missionaries in heathen lands, as well as an evidence of the power of the truth, may be seen in the following extracts from a report of the effort Mr. Shaw is making to reach the dark places of the island of Madagascar:

It was not without difficulty that he reached the benighted region of his labors; shipwreck was escaped as by a miracle, and many perils by sea and land were braved, both by the missionary and his devoted wife. The people of one dark village were "the whole of them more or less drunk." During Mr. Shaw's temporary absence from the village in which he settled, war broke out, and on his return home he found his medical and surgical skill in great demand, and soon became known far and near as a true friend of the people.

In an account of his work in a third village, he tells of the very tardy assemblage of men and women to listen to the gospel, as he preached under the shadow of some fine spreading trees. "I begin," he says, "in a chatty way, to tell them of the character of the God whose name they know, but only to fear, as the Creator and punisher. It is a grand new view to them that He is a God of love, and that He has sent His Son that those who believe on Him should have eternal life. We finish our impromptu service by my telling them I am going to speak to this great God but loving Father, and ask them to follow me in their thoughts with bowed head. In a few words, asking for light for them and blessing, we joined in the first prayer ever offered in that village. Before leaving them, they had promised to put up a building in which I could more conveniently talk to them than in the open air; and so we may hope that before very long a rough but commodious chapel will be erected there.

A LAWYER'S CONVERSION IN A CHURCH VESTIBULE.

AN incident which should encourage preachers who are apt to think that their sermons are wasted, is related by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, in his Watchword. He states that a clergyman had devoted great pains to the preparation of a sermon, which he hoped would be blessed to some members of his congregation who had hitherto been deaf to his appeals. He prayed earnestly over that sermon, and went to his church in a very intense frame of mind. But the night was stormy, and of those whom he was longing to reach, only three were present, and one of them slept through the sermon. He returned home in a dispirited mood. "That sermon was utterly wasted," he said to his wife, as they sat down after the service.

He was mistaken. The next morning a well-known lawyer came to see him, and told him his experience. He had started out that evening without an umbrella, and when the storm came on, he turned into the church vestibule to shelter. The door leading from the vestibule into the church was ajar, so he heard every word of the sermon. He listened with an interest that he was surprised at. It was his boast that he could live, and had always lived and prospered, without religion. He was a successful lawyer, with genial manners, which made him universally popular. He was charitable and generous, not from any sense of duty but from a kindness of heart that made him willing to do anything to alleviate suffering or distress in others.

He believed himself to be thoroughly sincere, and he was merciless in discovering inconsistencies in the lives of those who professed to be Christians. He was the leader of a large circle of young men, who, admiring his character and talents, followed his example implicity in regard to religious matters. He had not entered the doors of a church for years, and it was only the fury of the elements that had driven him to seek a temporary shelter there this evening. Had the sermon been argumentative he would have sought arguments to refute it. But it was nothing of the kind; it was an earnest appeal to all to come to the Saviour, and he could not doubt that the speaker spoke from his heart.

A strange longing to know somewhat of this joy and peace in believing came over him, as he stood there alone in the darkness. He began to pray, and after he went home he was unable to rest until he had given himself to God, and the next morning he went to the preacher to tell him the joyful news.

The Antichrist, Babylon, and the Coming of the Kingdom, by G. H. Pember, M. A. A new work of remarkable originality and power, written in a popular and simple style, yet showing much scholarly research, 171 pages; Price in cloth covers, 75 cents (postage included). For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

The Seeking Saviour and Other Themes, by the late Dr. Mackay, of Hull. This work has been published since Dr. Mackay's death, but the greater part was ready for publication when he died, and to that has been added the striking discourse which he delivered the last time he entered the pulpit, and a few manuscripts found among his papers. 247 pages, cloth cover; Price 75 cents, including postage. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1895, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages, postage included,

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

The whole edition of The Christian Herald was mailed last week to subscribers during Tuesday, June 5. The last delivery at the New York Post Office was made at 10.50 P. M.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Renomination of President Cleveland for the Presidency, and the nomination of Mr. Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, for the Vice-Presidency, by the Democratic National Convention, at St Louis, last week, were both more unanimous than the political prophets had led the country to expect. In spite of the dissatisfaction of a section of the party with the attempt Mr. Cleveland made in the early part of his term to fulfil his pledges to the civil service reformers who supported him, and in spite of the disapproval of another section with his message on the tariff, he was nominated with an enthusiasm truly remarkable. There was no balloting, no show of opposition; the wave of enthusiasm carried the Convention away, and the nomination was made by acclamation. When the time came for filling the second place on the ticket, there was but little less unanimity. Gen. Black formally withdrew his name by telegraph, in the interest of harmony, as the Convention was evidently overwhelmingly in favor of Mr. Thurman. The name of Gov. Isaac P. Gray, of Indiana, was duly presented, and his nomination urged, on the ground that Mr. Thurman being already seventy-six years of age, there was a possibility of his dying before the completion of his term, when "the Senate might be cursed by another Ingalls." But even that possibility did not weigh with the Convention, and Thurman was nominated at the first call of States.

The Platform Adopted by the Convention was not constructed without a protracted struggle in the Committee on Resolutions. It would, however, have been a stultification if the Convention, after re-nominating Mr. Cleveland, had failed to give a clear expression of its adherence to the principles of his tariff message. Mr. Edward Cooper, of New York, did his utmost, it would appear, to prevent this, doubtless realizing how difficult it will be to carry New York and other doubtful States on any platform tending even slightly in the direction of free trade. But he was outvoted, though not convinced, and he took the precaution of having his dissent from the action of his fellow-members of the Committee publicly announced by the Chairman of the Convention. As finally agreed upon, the tariff plank of the platform not only endorses the President's message, but accepts the Mills' Bill as its practical outcome. It declares that "The Democratic Party in the United States in National Convention assembled, renews the pledge of its fidelity to Democratic faith, and reaffirms the platform adopted by its representatives in the convention of 1884, and indorses the views expressed by President Cleveland in his last earnest message to Congress as the correct interpretation of that platform upon the question of tariff reduction, and also indorses the efforts of our Democratic representatives in Congress to secure a reduction of excessive taxation." The Committee appear to have had a prevision of the application which will be made of the plank in the campaign, and endeavoured to disarm it in advance, by contending that "a fair and careful revision of our tax laws, with due allowance for the difference between the wages of American and foreign labor, must promote and encourage every branch of such industries and enterprises by giving them assurance of an extended market and steady and continuous operations." That the Republican party will join issue on this question, there can be no doubt, and the campaign promises therefore to be fought this time on principles rather than on the personal records of the candidates.

The Decisive Republican Victory in Oregon last week is hailed by the party as an augury of success in the Presidential campaign. An election took place on June 4, of a member of Congress, and members of the State Legislature, who will choose a United States Senator. The election turned entirely on the Tariff question, and the result is unequivocal. The normal Republican majority is 1200, but this year the recent heavy increase of the immigration ran up the figures considerably on both sides. Though the official returns were not published last week, the Democrats concede a Republican majority of at least seven thousand. This year only one county has returned a Democratic plurality, and that was under 50. The change in eastern Oregon was greater than was generally expected. Of the 75 new members of her Legislature, the Republicans elected 63, the Democrats 10, and 2 are in doubt. So the next Legislature in joint ballot will stand at least 71 Republicans to 19 Democrats. Senator Dolph will therefore be his own successor. There is not one county in the State where the Democrats have elected their county ticket. The increase in the Republican vote is more marked in manufacturing and wool-growing districts than in purely agricultural counties. There was a large increase in the Prohibition vote.

The Abolition of Executions by Hanging in New York State was effected on June 4, when Governor Hill signed the bill passed by the Legislature, substituting the electric spark for the rope as the instrument of death. The bill also contains a number of provisions intended to reform the abuses connected with the death penalty which have become a scandal. The condemned criminal now holds a daily levee, and reporters publish the most minute details as to his demeanor, conversation, and habits, which give him a notoriety highly esteemed by the criminal classes. The new bill which now becomes law and applies to crimes committed after January 1, 1889, provides that the prisoner sentenced to death shall be immediately conveyed by the Sheriff to one of the State prisons and there kept in solitary confinement until the day of execution, to be visited only by officers or by his relatives, physician, clergyman, or counsel. The court imposing sentence shall name merely the week within which the execution is to take place, the particular day within such week being left to the discretion of the principal officer of the prison. The execution is required to be practically private, only officials, clergymen, physicians, and a limited number of citizens being allowed to be present.

A Severe but Just Arraignment of the liquor trade of New York, and of the Police and prosecuting officials who neglect their duty, was made on June 4, by Judge Barrett in his charge to the Grand Jury. He said: "It seems to be a very disgraceful state of things that there should be 5,000 presentations of violations of a particular law not attended to. It warrants the conclusion that there is either deliberate and open defiance of the law by those engaged in the liquor business, or that there is a most decided and inexcusable inefficiency on the part of the officers of the law. It does not seem within the bounds of possibility that the law should be so flagrantly and openly defied as that there should be 5,000 excise cases to be presented to you. Why it should be so, I cannot say. Why persons engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors cannot do their business in strict obedience to the laws as other citizens do, is something that I cannot understand." He then proceeded to express his contempt for the system of spasmodic raids and the conduct of the police at the trials, which prevented convictions. What was needed, he said, was to have a few of the proprietors of the large saloons in the Penitentiary, which would do more good than the arrest of small barkeepers and the other petty acts of the police.

The New Governor-General of Canada, Lord Stanley, of Preston, arrived by the steamer Sarmatian on June 2. In an interview with a reporter he said that he had acquired while in the Colonial Office considerable knowledge of Canada's vast resources, and had been greatly impressed with the future in store for the country. He would not go to his new post, with preconceived ideas, and did not wish to force any policy upon a country possessing a responsible government. The Marquis of Lansdowne, the late Governor-General of Canada, on leaving the Dominion said he had been deeply moved by the warmth of the farewell given him at Ottawa and Toronto. He had great hopes for the future of the Dominion, owing to the good harvests in the Northwest and the large number of people immigrating into the country.

Another Ministerial Crisis in Germany developed last week, and was only averted by the concession of the Emperor. The interference exercised by Prince Bismarck with the freedom of election during the reign of the late Emperor, was always deplored by the present Emperor when he was Crown Prince. To him and to his English wife it appeared scandalous that the votes of the people should be controlled and manipulated by the Government. In giving his assent to the Quinquennial Landtag Bill which extends the existence of the Legislature from three to five years, the Emperor, therefore, took occasion to write to Herr Von Puttkamer, directing him to refrain from using Government influence in the elections. The Emperor also resolved to publish this letter in the official journal an appendix to the bill. Bismarck was so deeply mortified by the project that he threatened to resign if the letter were published. So acute became the crisis that the Emperor's disease was aggravated, and finally he consented to withold the letter from publication. It is stated, however, that an Imperial rescript will be issued warning the local authorities against interfering in the elections. Herr Von Puttkamer has in consequence resigned his office as Minister of the Interior.

A New Irish Programme of a More Hopeful character is said to have been arranged by Mr. Balfour, the Secretary for Ireland. The New York Sun publishes a despatch from its London correspondent, describing an interview which he has had with Mr. Balfour. The correspondent reports the Secretary as saying: "that the Government is now maturing a great policy of public works in Ireland. It is a scheme of much importance. I purpose to introduce three bills, involving a very large outlay of public money, for the purpose of a scheme of arterial drainage. I hope to follow this up next year by schemes of a similar character. I do not believe that these plans will involve the building of piers and so on, for I am not sure that this sort of work would be advisable. But a very great sum of money will be spent, and this will tend to relieve Ireland. Concerning the prevalent distress, we have found it worst in the Arran Islands. The Government has distributed a large amount of seed potatoes there, sufficient for the whole need of the population. No relief works have been begun on the islands, as they are not considered necessary." The Government will doubtless find schemes of this character, if wisely executed, more effective in pacifying Ireland than coercion.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. For terms address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

A Judge Exchanging the Bench for the Pulpit, has surprised a Western city. The Portland Oregonian announces that "Ex-Chief-Justice Roger S. Greene, late of the Washington Territorial Supreme Court, is now closing up his legal business, preparatory to devoting his entire time to the ministry. He is one of the leading members of the Baptist Church, and has always been prominently identified with religious movements connected with it. Judge Greene is senior member of the law firm of Greene, McNaught, Hanford & McGraw, and is ranked as one of the leading attorneys in the Territory. He was Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court for sixteen years, having been succeeded by Chief-Justice Jones. Judge Greene says he finds himself unable to give the amount of time he desires to religious work, and at the same time practice law, and his explanation suggests that in his opinion the two callings are not sympathetic."

Deeply Interesting Services were held Last week at St. George's Church, New York, of which Rev. W. S. Rainsford is rector. On Sunday, June 3, thirteen young men, who have been energetic and devoted workers in the missions of the church during the past four years, were ordained "lay helpers" by Bishop H. C. Potter. These young men, who appeared very intelligent and refined, are empowered to deliver sermons in any Protestant Episcopal church in the diocese, and to read the services. Mr. Rainsford spoke highly of the value of their past services, and was full of hope for the future. On Thursday, June 7, another gratifying service, in connection with the same church, was held. This was the presentation to the church of the beautiful memorial building erected at the expense of Mr. and Mrs. John Pierpont Morgan in memory of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles Tracy. The building will be used as a clergy house and as the centre of evangelistic and mission work in the parish.

An Unconscious Heir is Wandering About the country, while the executors of his grandfather's estate are looking for him. About fifteen years ago an old farmer died, leaving, among other possessions, a farm on the outskirts of Brooklyn, N. Y. All the property went to the widow for her life, and at her death, to her six children. It was not a large estate when the farmer died, but the land on the outskirts of Brooklyn has now become very valuable, owing to the rapid growth of the city. There is, therefore, a large sum to be divided among the children—the widow being now dead. One of the daughters is also dead, and her share goes to her son, a young man of restless, shiftless disposition, who, five years ago, wandered away from home, pedling coal in scattered villages, and has not been heard of since. If the family had expected much benefit from the farmer's estate, the young man would probably have taken care to keep his relatives informed of his whereabouts; but, as he has not done so, he can have no idea how large a sum is awaiting his return to claim it. It is stated that he was always in a needy, impoverished condition, and exactly the kind of man to appreciate such a sum of money as he is now heir to. In his poverty and vagrancy he resembles the Christian, who, though an heir of God, fails to apply for the riches of grace promised to all who ask. (Mal. 3: 10.)

Three Bears were Killed by a Boy only Fourteen years old, in Monroe County, Pennsylvania, a few days ago. The boy was sent by his father to a clearing in the woods near his house to chop up some trees that had been felled. In about an hour he returned with his axe and his clothing covered with blood, and stated that he had killed three bears. His father was sceptical, but on going to the clearing he found that the boy had told the truth. The lad said that he had commenced chopping on the fallen tree, when a big bear jumped out from beneath it and made a rush for him. He buried the axe in the animal's skull, and another blow killed the bear. The boy then looked in under the tree and discovered the two smaller bears. He routed them out and attacked them. One of the bears showed fight, but the other one slouched away. He killed the young one as quickly as he had the old one, and then gave chase to the other and dispatched it in the same way. After the bodies of the dead bears had been taken home the boy returned to his work as if nothing had happened. The old bear weighed over three hundred pounds. The father is very proud of his young son's prowess. It may be hoped that he will teach him to be equally valiant in the battle he will have to fight with that "roaring lion," the great enemy of souls, and also to tell him that in that battle those are most likely to fail who rely on their own strength, and those sure to succeed who trust wholly in Christ. (Rom. 12: 11.)

A Disastrous Visit to a Lunatic Asylum has been made by a reporter at Milwaukee, Wis. A daily journal of that city states that a brilliant young man engaged in newspaper work was detailed to write an article on the asylums of the State. In order to prepare himself for the work he secured permission to examine the county asylum, and while being shown through the building manifested unmistakable signs of insanity. He became very angry when taken away by the Superintendent, who thought the sights were affecting his brain. The reporter was very indignant and threatened to make a public denunciation of the Superintendent. He was so persistent in his demands to the Governor for an investigation of what he called abuses that one was finally ordered, which resulted in the proof that he is himself insane, and he has now been committed to the asylum. This young man is entitled to sympathy because the investigation which brought the calamity upon him was undertaken not out of curiosity, but in the line of his duty. There are many cases, however, of a still more deplorable disaster coming upon investigators when sympathy must be mingled with blame. The young men who go into the haunts of dissipation "to see life" too often themselves fall into a snare and become as vicious as those whom they go to see. (Prov. 4: 14,15.)

A Silent Marriage took Place in the Office of a Justice of the Peace in Jersey City on Saturday, June 2. A young man entered the office, and held out to the Justice a pad on which was written, "Can you give me a marriage license?" "Cannot you speak?" wrote the Justice. The visitor shook his head. The Justice then wrote "No license is required; I can marry you now." The young man seemed pleased, and going away, soon returned with a young lady, quietly but tastefully dressed. The Justice greeted her cordially, but she stopped his talk by producing a pad on which she wrote that she too was a deaf mute. The usual questions and answers were then given in writing, and finally the Justice wrote, "I pronounce you man and wife." The couple were immediately clasped in each other's arms. The young husband informed the justice that he had a sufficient income to support his wife, and that they had lived in the same town, and had loved each other from childhood. As they went away the Justice said he had never married a more happy looking couple. They were probably attracted to each other by their common affliction. The revelations of the divorce courts prove that many marriages are made in which the parties have nothing in common but an unregenerate spirit. Such marriages are not likely to be happy, and still less promising are those marriages in which one of the parties is a Christian and the other is not. In that case the command of God is violated. (II Cor. 6: 14-15).

Hanged with a Woman's Hair is the fate which befell a sparrow whose body has been sent to the Natural History Society at Worcester, Mass. The Spy of that city states that a gentleman whose house is surrounded with pine trees, recently noticed a sparrow suspended from the end of a limb of one of these trees. He could see nothing by which the bird was hung, and it was a very curious sight. His son, who was called, went up into the tree and carefully sawed off a small portion of the limb. The whole secret was then revealed. On the twig was a neatly built nest, in which were three speckled eggs. When examined they were found to be cold, which showed the home had been broken up for some time. The male sparrow was hung by a woman's hair, which was knotted around his neck just as neatly as though it had been done by human hands. The other end was fastened to the nest, being a part of it. The eggs were on one side of the nest, while on the other side was a hole just large enough for the bird to go through. It is supposed that the bird, in leaving its nest by the hole, became entangled in the hair, which, becoming a noose around its neck, proved strong enough to hold the bird until it died. It is marvellous that so slight a thing as a hair from a woman's head should cause the death even of a bird, but then, the bird was so entangled that it could not use its strength. It is so with many of the habits and temptations that hold men in their sins. They appear slight and trival, but they prove fatal to spiritual life unless the victim is delivered by Christ's Almighty power. (Isa. 61: 1.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. Sam Jones has been holding successful meetings at Fulton, Mo. He is now preaching at Rome, Ga., after which he goes to Chillicothe, Mo.

An extensive revival in St. Thomas is reported as the result of the Divine blessing on the labors of Messrs. Crossley and Hunter, the Evangelists.

Fully fifty centenarians are said to be living in New England, Maine leading the list with sixteen, and Connecticut coming next, with eleven.

A recent report states that there are 130,000 Mormons in Utah, of whom 80,000 are under eighteen years of age; one-third of them are living in polygamy.

Rev. Reuben Saillens, associate manager of the McAll Mission in France, is also pastor of the Baptist Church in Paris, which has one hundred and sixty members.

A playhouse is to be erected in Newark, N. J., for the use of children who have no place but the streets to play in. Mrs. Dr. Smith has given $12,000 for the purpose.

Major Geo. A. Hilton lately closed a series of meetings at Piqua, O., where one hundred and twenty-nine new members were added to the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

Between five and six hundred representatives were present at the women's meeting of the Society of Friends, and about three hundred representatives at the men's meeting, both of which were held in New York recently.

A summer Union Service for persons whose churches will be closed has been commenced in the large open Pavilion, 90th St. and 9th Ave., New York. Rev. C. C. Goss and other ministers will assist in conducting the services during the summer.

At the General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, recently held at Indianapolis, Ind., the sessions were opened with prayer by the Rev. David Smith, who is 104 years old, and has been a professing Christian ninety years.

The faculty of Cornell College have added an amendment to the rules of that institution, to the effect that students found guilty of intoxication, gambling, or other gross immorality, or of interference with the personal rights of any student, shall be expelled.

Rev. Dr. Somerville, of Glasgow, has returned to Scotland, having conducted gospel services in Buda Pest for both Jews and Gentiles, at Debreczin, Szolnok, Szegedin, Bekes, Gyoma, Gro-swardein, and other places in Hungary. On Jan. 30 he entered his seventy-sixth year.

A reputable citizen of New York, returning home late at night on Wednesday of last week, carrying a parcel under his arm, was ordered to stop by a policeman, but as the officer was not in uniform, and did not show his shield, the citizen mistook him for a thief, and ran. Thereupon the policeman fired, wounding him seriously.

At the annual meeting of the Young Woman's Christian Association, of the City of New York, the report showed a valuable year's work, which is summarized as follows: 13,000 women in the classes. 11,000 volumes in the library, 1,600 positions secured for young women, out of 2,000 applications. The total expense of the work has been a little less than $24,000.

The Christian Home for Intemperate Men, at 1175 Madison Avenue, New York, has received, since its opening in 1877, more than 2,440 men, and the results have been most encouraging. Within a year three hundred and forty-six persons have been admitted, of whom three-fourths have reformed and are in situations secured by the Home.

THE WEDDING GARMENT.

A New Sermon By Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment: and he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless. Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."—Matt. 22: 11-13.

The Loyal and the Rebellious Separated by Preaching—A Further Discrimination—I. What is Meant by the King's Coming In—The Crown of the Feast—A Season of Gracious Visitation—Augustine's Prayer—A Time of Discovery—II. The Meaning of the Wedding Garment—A Distinguishing Mark of Grace—The Gift of the King—Mourning Garb, an Insult at a Wedding—The Robe of Righteousness—III. The Guest Without the Garment—Preferring his Own Dress—IV. Why He was Speechless.

Two Sabbath mornings ago I preached from this parable, and I trust many were encouraged by it; but I noticed among inquirers who came to see me afterwards, a desire to know about the wedding garment; for they feared lest, in coming to join the church, they should come like the man of whom I shall now speak. Many true hearts are extremely sensitive to the impression of fear, and they seem to be on the watch for reasons for anxiety. I do not condemn them; on the contrary, I wish there were more of such holy tremblers. It is much better to be afraid of being wrong than to be indifferent as to what you are.

My chief object this morning will be to allay the fears of gracious ones, If they understand what the wedding garment really is, they will probably discover that they are wearing it; and, if not, they will know in whose wardrobe that garment of joy is to be found, and they will gladly ask to be arrayed therein. Immediately after our text, we find these solemn words: "Many are called, but few are chosen." This is a conclusion drawn from the whole parable, in which we see processes at work, which separate the chosen few from the many who are called.

A Distinction Was Made by the summoning of the invited guests. The simple delivery of the invitation set a difference between the loyal and the rebellious—a distinction most marked and decisive. So it is in the preaching of the gospel: we preach it to every creature within our reach. Lovingly, tenderly, earnestly; not so well as we would, but still with all our heart we call men to the royal feast of grace; and straightway the very invitation begins to gather out the precious from the vile. When men will not have Christ and His grace, the Word preached by His humble servant drives them away, and they go with the chaff.

But the work of discrimination is not finished after the gospel has been heard and men have been brought into the church. Alas! even in the church division has to be made; indeed, it is there that this is most fully carried out. "His fan is in His hand, and He will throughly purge His floor." If He uses a scourge nowhere else, He will be sure to use it in His own temple. In our text we see a man who has hearkened to the invitation and has come into the feast, and thus has passed the first test; and yet he is unable to abide the second; he has been received by the servants, but he cannot deceive their Master. The King detects him as a spot in the feast, and he is cast out from the palace of mercy into the outer darkness, where there is weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. May none of us be of this sort!

I. May the Holy Spirit help us while we consider, first, what is meant by

The King's Coming In.

"The king came in to see the guests." They were all reclining at the tables, for "the wedding was furnished with guests." They gathered while the sun was up, but darkness covered the world outside when "the king came in to see the guests." They had feasted, and now the king came to honor the assembly. It was the crown and the culmination of the feast. No matter how dainty the viands, nor how bright the hall, the feast has not reached its height till his majesty appears in gracious condescension. It is so with us, beloved, in reference to our greater King.

These are seasons of gracious visitation: times of refreshing from

The Presence of the Lord.

When the King comes into the assembly, the preaching of the word is in demonstration of the Spirit, and in power. Then the day of Pentecost has fully come; the Spirit is abundantly outpoured, souls are saved, saints are edified, and Christ is glorified. The wedding would have been a failure without guests; but what would the feast have been if the host had refused to come in and see the guests? But the King came in in due time. Ay, came in among that crowd of wayfarers gathered from the highways at a moment's notice, and His presence crowned the festival with honor and rapture.

This coming in to see the guests indicates a glorious revelation of Himself. When the King saw the guests, the guests saw Him; but, inasmuch as His sight of them was the more important sight of the two, the chief thing is mentioned while the minor matter is implied. Do we know what it is to see God? This is the special privilege of the pure in heart. When the Lord's way is in the sanctuary, then His sanctified ones behold Him. Spiritual eyes have looked to Jesus by faith, and He saith, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." When Augustine read those words, "Thou canst not see My face and live," he was bold enough to answer, "Let me die to see Thy face."

But here is the solemn point to which I call your attention: this visitation brings with it a time of discovery and searching of heart. When the King comes in to see the guests, the light grows stronger, and all things are revealed; for all things are naked and open to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do. If the Lord our God were to come into His church to-day there would be an awful shrinkage among the number of His guests; a panic would seize the assembly, and the door would be blocked with men hastening to escape His eye.

Look how the King's discernment is recorded in the text. One man only had refused to put on a wedding garment, but the king at once fixed his eye upon him. The Saviour, by a kind of heavenly charity, mentions only but I fear we must regard the one as the type of many. If the King should come in at the time of our communion, I am afraid He would detect more than one. This is a solemn matter. It will not make the true-hearted wish the King to stay away, but those who are wilful deceivers may well tremble. The King does come to this church. He is specially present in the midst of this people, and the consequence is that His judgment is strict with us. I have seen the rod of his discipline here in a very striking manner. I have seen the fair professor wither in the heat of love, and the rootless Christian dried up in the noontide of grace. He might have gone on very well in any other church, but he has not been able to abide the brandished sword of the Spirit, and its dividing asunder soul and spirit, joints and marrow. He has not been able to sit it out, but has been obliged to go away and find an easier rest.

One Intruder,

II. Now I would answer the second question:

What is the Wedding Garment?

You are probably aware that this has been a point greatly disputed among theologians. Is the wedding garment justification, or sanctification, or what? I am not going to be theological and bring doctrinal matters to the text; but I shall read the parable as it stands, and interpret its details by its general run. It is called a "wedding garment"—a garment suitable for a marriage feast. Let us translate the figure, rather than attempt to rivet a doctrine to it. What does a wedding garment mean? What is that which we must have in connection with our Lord's marriage, or be cast out forever?

I think I may say plainly that it must signify a distinguishing mark of grace. Everybody does not wear a wedding garment: he who wears it has put it on because he is a wedding guest. You know the wedding guest at once by his attire. True members of the church of God wear a distinguishing mark. If you are not different from other people, you have no right in the church of God. If a servant can live with you for years and never discover your love to God, I should think there is none to discover. There ought to be a something about us which sets us apart—a something which can be seen and understood by common people, even as a wedding garment could be seen, and at once perceived. Your religion must not require a microscope to perceive it, nor should it be so indistinct that few can discover any meaning in it. It should be as visible as the white garment worn by Easterns at a marriage.

Its Meaning

I may boldly add here that the wedding garment was a distinguishing mark of grace; for as these people were fetched in from the highways they could not have provided themselves with wedding garments. It is the custom in the East for a king to provide robes for his guests; therefore this wedding garment was a mark of grace, freely given and received. Is there, then, a something about you which the Lord in love has given you? Do you differ from others, not in natural attainments, but in spiritual grace? Does the difference mainly lie in what God Himself has done for you? That is the question involved in the symbol of the wedding garment.

In the next place, it was

A Symbol of Respect for the king. To be fit for his company, the dress must be special. The absence of such a dress was, in the case before us, the badge of irreverence and disloyalty. This man said to himself: "I will feed at the feast without acknowledging its intent. Whoever stops me, I will push my way in, and I shall sit there in my every-day garments, to let the king know that I do not respect him in the least, and will not wear the robes he provides." It is as if you had lost a son, and some wretched man should say, "I will attend the funeral in a wedding suit. I shall thus wound the feelings of the mourners, and show my contempt for the whole affair." What an insult it would be! To turn the picture. Suppose you were being married, and somebody forced his way into the wedding dressed in mourning, with crape upon his hat, and black kid gloves upon his hands. What a wanton insult! If such impudence were met with a horse-whip, who would be surprised? Now, this man acted in that fashion: he had no respect for the king: he showed his traitorous nature in the worst possible manner, spiting the king in his own halls upon a tender occasion. Dear friends, I trust that you can truly say, "I have on the wedding garment of reverence."

A Token of Honor.

The wedding garment was, moreover, a token of honor for the Prince. My hearers, do you feel a love to the Lord Jesus Christ? Many do not. I grieve to say we have a race of men sprung up nowadays who call themselves Christians, who pour contempt upon His precious blood, and ridicule the substitutionary sacrifice. Dreadful assertion! but it is a matter of fact. The name of Jesus, why, it is to our lives what the sun is to the skies, what the rivers are to the plains. Nothing makes us so glad as thoughts of Jesus. I am sure when I hear a sermon about Christ, my Master, my very heart grows warm within me. Is it so with you? Well, then, you have on the wedding garment: that is to say, you do truly, though it be but in a simple way, pay homage to the Prince of Peace: you love the name and person of Jesus, and you come into His church because you do so.

The wedding garment means, in a word, conformity to the requirments of the occasion. It was a wedding, and the guests must put on a suitable dress. This man refused to put it on. He was proud, and would not wear the gift of grace; he was self-willed, and must needs be singular, and show his independence of mind. The regulation was by no means irksome, and to the rest of the guests the commandment was not grievous; but this man would have his own way in defiance of the Lord of the feast. What could come of such folly? Now, one of

The Requirements of the Feast is, that you with your heart believe on the Lord Jesus, and that you take His righteousness to be your righteousness. Do you refuse this? If you will not accept the Lord Jesus as your substitute, bearing your sins in His own body on the tree, you have not the wedding garment. Another requirement is that you should repent of sin and forsake it; and that you should follow after holiness, and endeavor to copy the example of the Lord Jesus. You are to possess, as the work of divine grace, a godly and upright character. Have you such a character? Even though you are not perfect, yet, inasmuch as you follow after righteousness, you have the wedding garment. You say that you are a Christian; do you live like a Christian? Are you in a position and condition which agree with the gospel feast? If so, you have on the wedding garment.

Those who came unto the feast were, when they came, both bad and good; so that the wedding garment does not relate to their past character, but relates to something with which they were invested when they came to the banquet. The putting on of a wedding robe cannot refer to an elaborate ceremony, or a feat of the intellect, or to a deep experience of the heart; and yet it involved joining in the wedding, or not joining in it. It involved reverence for the King, and homage to the Prince, and sympathy with the whole matter. Look well to yourselves, and see whether you truly yield yourselves to the Lord, and agree with Him in the whole matter.

The Man Without the Garment.

III. Thirdly, who is the man that has not on the wedding garment? I should say, first, he is the man who rejects God's revealed gospel that he may follow his own thought and his own wisdom. He says that he is loyal to Christ, and he expects all his fellow guests to be firm friends with him, for is he not in the banquet as much as they are? But he does not mean by loyalty what they mean by it. He is among believers, but he is not truly of them. He talks about atonement; he does not mean substitution. He talks about the divinity of Christ; he does not mean the Godhead of Christ. He talks about justification by faith; but he does not mean the old-fashioned doctrine. He speaks of regeneration, but means evolution. He girds himself with the garment of philosophy, but he refuses the robe of revelation, for the cut of it is too old-fashioned for him. His robe is not of God's provision; it is from his own wardrobe. He glories in his own culture, and not in the revelation of God, nor yet in the work of divine grace upon the heart. He is in the church, but he is not in Christ. He has a name to live, but he is dead.

The next person who has not on the wedding garment is the man who refuses the righteousness of God because he has a righteousness of his own. He thinks for Christ's own wedding. What does he want with imputed righteousness? He scouts it as immoral. He who is himself immoral! What does he want with the precious blood of Jesus? He does not need to be washed from crimson stains. His own righteousness, though it be of the law, and such as Paul rejected, he esteems so highly that he counts the blood of the covenant an unholy thing! Ah me, the insolence of self-righteousness! Its pride is the very chief of sins, for it slights the righteousness of God.

His Dress Good Enough

Why, some dare to come into the church who have not even common morality. It is shocking we should have to say it, but nowadays, we meet with those who call themselves Christians who can drink upon the sly, who can commit uncleanness with their bodies, who can be dishonest in their trading, who can be liars, who can hate their own flesh and blood and be at enmity with their brethren, and yet dare to come to the communion table. In the highlands of Scotland it was at one time difficult to get Christian people to come to the Lord's Table, for they so trembled under a sense of their unworthiness. We do not want to push this too far, but that is a great deal better than that unholy daring, which is to be found in the minds of so many who serve Christ and Belial. God save His church from degradation!

I do not see how that man can be said to have on a wedding garment who takes no interest in the work of the church. You see, when a man puts on the wedding garment, he did as good as say, "I am interested in the wedding. I wish God's blessing to the bride and bridegroom." But many come in now to the King's feast who do not care a snap of the finger for the church of God, nor for Christ either. They come in because a sort of selfishness makes them anxious to be saved; but as to the bride, the Lamb's wife, they do not care whether she starves or flourishes. Sad and wretched business this!

IV. To close, why was this man speechless? We do not often meet with people who have no excuse. Excuse-making is the easiest trade out. A man can make an excuse out of nothing at all, or out of what is less than nothing —out of a direct lie. But here was

A Man Who Could Not Speak.

Why was that? Well, I think, first, the affront was too bare-faced. "How camest thou in hither?" If he did not like the king he could have kept outside. There was no need why he should come in at all, and there display his malice. If any of you are resolved to be lost, you need not add to your eternal ruin by making a profession of religion, for hypocrisy is a superfluity of naughtiness. Next, the affront was so audacious. "How camest thou in hither?" said the king. He must have pushed by the deacons at the door. The fellow would come in. When the king said, "Bind him hand and foot," I think it was because he had used hand and foot to get in. He would get in; he said, "I will get in. I will defy the king to his face, and sit in among his guests without a wedding garment." You, dear friend, do not wish to do that: I am sure it is the last thing you would do. Why, we have to persuade you to come in at all; for you are so tenderly jealous lest you should be mistaken. Do not let this parable condemn you.

Lastly, the reason why he was speechless was because, even if he could have spoken and been free from terror, there was Nothing to be Said.

He could not cry, "Lord, I did not know it." He saw all the rest with wedding garments on. He could not say, "Lord, I could not get a wedding garment": each one had received a garment gratis, and he might have received the same. He could not say, "Lord, I was pushed in here by somebody else." No, he had willingly chosen to come, and to defy the rule. I do not wonder that the King said, "Bind him hand and foot, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

I have been accused of representing the state of the lost in too horrible a manner. I have never gone beyond the dreadful descriptions given by our Lord Himself. Do not risk your eternal future. Come to the Church of God and join it, but do not join it unless you love the Lord. Do not come to the gospel feast unless you reverence the King; unless you love the Prince; unless you are in sympathy with the great work of grace which is pictured as a wedding feast. If you have sympathy with the wedding, love to the Bridegroom, and delight in the bride, then come and welcome; for you have the wedding garment. I am thinking just now of all those other hundreds of people at the wedding, all of them clothed with the wedding garment. What joy they felt! Many had been bad, and all had been poor: but they all had the wedding garment, and not one of them was cast out. If you will but put your trust in Jesus, and so honor the Son; and rest in the love of the Father, and so honor the King, it is written, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." God bless you for Jesus' sake!

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

BUDDHA'S EARLY LIFE.*

BUDDHA was born at Kapelavastu, the capital of the kingdom of that name, at the foot of the mountains of Nepaul. His father, the King of Kapelavastu, was one of the family of the Sakyas, and belonged to the clan of the Gautamas. His mother was Mayadevi, the daughter of King Suprabuddha. Buddha was therefore by birth of the Kshatriya, or warrior caste, and he took the name of Sakya from his family and that of Gautama from his clan. Endowed with all the gifts of genius and physical beauty, he easily outstripped all his comrades and even his masters, in feats of bodily and intellectual strength. But from childhood he was possessed by a deep melancholy, from which nothing could divert him. Those around could see no cause for it, but it was in truth the sorrow of the world, the insoluble problem of life, which was weighing on his soul. In the hope of turning the current of his thoughts he was married to the beautiful Gopa, the daughter of Danapam. The marriage proved one of the happiest, but Buddha remained as he had been before, absorbed in meditation on the problems of life and death. "Nothing is stable on earth," he used to say, "nothing is real. Life is like the spark produced by the friction of wood. It is lighted and it is extinguished; we know not whence it came nor whither it goes. It is like the sound of a lyre, and the wise man asks in vain from whence it came and whither it goes. There must be some supreme intelligence where we could find rest. If I attained it I could bring light to man; if I were free myself I could deliver the world." The king, who perceived the melancholy mood of the young prince, tried everything to divert him, but all was in vain.

The Renunciation.

At length the decisive day came. One morning when the young prince with a large retinue was driving through the eastern gate of the city, he met on the road an old man, broken and decrepit. One could see the veins and muscles over the whole of his body; his teeth chattered, he was covered with wrinkles, bald, and hardly able to utter hollow and unmelodious sounds. He was bent on his stick, and all his limbs and joints trembled. "Who is that man?" said the prince to his coachman, "he is small and weak, his flesh and his blood are dried up, his muscles stick to his skin, his head is white, his teeth chatter, his body is wasted away; leaning on his stick he is barely able to walk, stumbling at every step. Is there something peculiar in his family, or is this the common lot of all created beings?" "Sir," replied the coachman, "that man is sinking under old age. His senses have become obtuse, suffering has destroyed his strength, and he is despised by his relations. He is without support, and useless, and people have abandoned him, like a dead tree in the forest. But this is not peculiar to his family. In every creature youth is defeated by old age. Your father, your mother, all your relations, all your friends will come to the same state. This is the appointed end of all creatures."

* From "The Ancient World and Christianity," By E. De Pressensé, D. D. Translated by Annie Harwood Holmden. This work is an attempt to show how in the ancient world everywhere, the greatest men were found seeking a God greater than local and national divinities, and uttering bitter lamentations over their failure. Also to show what must be the gloomy future of a democracy without God, and that the only hope of society is in the Light which broke on the world eighteen centuries ago 479 Pages. Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, 714 Broadway, New York.

The Emperor Frederick III. of Germany in his Study at Potsdam.

"Alas," replied the Prince, "are creatures so ignorant, so weak and foolish, as to be proud of the youth by which they are intoxicated, not seeing the old age which awaits them. As for me, I go away. Coachman, turn my chariot quickly. What have I, the future prey of old age, to do with pleasure?" And the young prince returned to the city without going to his park.

His resolution was taken: kingdom, power, glory, wife, all must be abandoned, while he shut himself up to lead in solitude the life of an ascetic. So far he had not gone in practice beyond the ideal of the Brahmans, who looked upon the life of the Anchorite as the final goal to be reached. But he had already risen to a much fuller and higher conception of the religious life than theirs. He saw more clearly than any before him the intensely sorrowful side of life. To him it appeared, indeed only as a transparent veil cast over the death to which it leads, and which is therefore the only abiding reality. Hence he was not long satisfied with the teaching the Brahmans had to give him. Having learned all that the most illustrious of them could impart, he went away disappointed.

THE SUFFERING EMPEROR.

(See Illustration.)

The whole civilized world watches with sympathy and admiration the brave struggle for life now being waged by Frederick III., Emperor of Germany. The reports of the physicians and nurses describing his patience and fortitude under suffering, prove him to be a man of true nobleness of character, worthy of the exalted position which he occupies. He has now been removed from Charlottenburg to Potsdam, some twenty miles off, where he occupies the palace built by his illustrious predecessor, Frederick the Great, which was formerly known as "the New Palace," but which the Emperor has named "Friedrichskron," in memory of its builder. There he continues to utilize every interval of relief from pain in attention to public business, as he did at Berlin, and appears conscientiously desirous of leaving no duty unperformed. On the days when he is too weak to sit up he occupies the invalid's lounge provided for him, the head of which can be so adjusted as to allow him to read or write in a reclining posture.

Another contribution to his comfort is the reading-stand shown in the illustration. This was a gift from his mother-in-law, Queen Victoria, and is of much service to him. Standing by his couch, the Emperor can, by stretching out his hand, swing the arm of the stand so as to bring the book it holds to the proper focus, and so enjoy reading without the fatigue of holding the book. As the Emperor is something of a student, this gift is appreciated by him.

It is gratifying to learn that the German doctors now agree with Dr. Mackenzie that his disease is not cancer, though they admit that it is of so serious a nature as to render the prospect of complete recovery very doubtful.

MARY MORGAN'S DARLING.

(See Illustration on page 381.)

Never was there a more welcome arrival in a home than that of little Eddy in the home of Edward and Mary Morgan. Mary's home before her marriage was full of brothers and sisters, and merry voices were heard in it from morning to night. The little cottage in the country to which Edward took her after their wedding was as pretty as hands could make it, and for the first month or two Mary's time was fully occupied in adorning it and making it home-like. After that, however, the hours hung heavily Edward had to leave early to be at his office in the city in time for business, and it was not until seven o'clock in the evening, and sometimes later, that he returned. Mary shortened the evening by going to meet his train, thus discounting his coming by the half hour it took her to walk to the station. But the days were very long and very lonely to her.

The baby's birth changed all that. Mary had plenty to do then. Besides, it was such a pleasure to sit and look at him while he was asleep, watching the strange little smiles that flitted across the tiny face, telling of dreams which it was impossible for her to conceive of, so little experience could there be in that short life to make the basis of a dream. Her work even drifted into arrear, baby being so inexhaustible a subject of interest. He was the most wonderful baby, too, so bright and intelligent, and actually seemed, as Mary believed, to understand her talk before he was a month old. Edward had to listen when he came home at night to the account of some extraordinary evidence baby had given during the day of his surprising qualities. The young mother brightened under the new circumstances of her life, and the little cottage was no longer dull.

Eddy's coming, too, had another good result; it led Mary to pray. As a girl she attended church, but she had never given her heart to God. Her mother and father were Godly people, but Mary had always been indifferent in religious matters, and when she and Edward were married and lived in the country there was no church near, so they had spent their Sundays at home or in little excursions. Even the form of religion was abandoned. Now, however, a sense of responsibility was upon her. She began to pray, first for her child and then for herself. She said nothing of it to her husband for, in his case, indifference to religion had developed into opposition to it. She wanted her boy to grow into a good man, and she instinctively recognized that there was no preservative that could keep him from the world's evil as religion could. Therefore she began to pray, and most earnestly, that she might be enabled to train him aright. Poor mother! had she but realized that the first step was to give herself unreservedly to God, her heart might have been saved its worst pang.

As little Eddy grew, his mother's love became more intense. A singularly bright, lovable child, gentle and affectionate, he was loved by all who knew him; but he was his mother's idol. When he was three years old she taught him the Lord's Prayer, a simple prayer for his mother and father, and a verse of hymn, and as he knelt at her knee every night, and went through the little ritual, Mary thought his face looked so like the face of an angel, that she would clutch him to her breast and clasp her arms around him with a passionate fervor that told of a love which overmastered her.

What was her terror, then, when little Eddy fell sick! The doctor was summoned, and his diagnosis awaited with agonizing suspense. It was a relief when she found that he did not apprehend danger; but she could know neither peace nor rest till her little darling was running around as usual. Her husband made light of her fears, but even he grew anxious when little Eddy continued to grow worse. The little fellow would recover, he felt sure, but it seemed a long while about. At length even the doctor began to look grave, and was more careful in his examination of the child's condition. There was no disease in the child's perfect organism, but there was a lack of vitality that puzzled him. Gentle as he was before, Eddy seemed now to be almost angelic in disposition, and his patience touched the mother's heart more than anything had done.

Mary Morgan's Anxious Caress.

One beautiful bright morning Mary set the window of his little bedroom open that he might enjoy the sunlight and the songs of the birds. The child lay looking at the bright prospect for a short time, but at last announced that "Eddy is tired; Eddy wants to go to sleep." He turned over and settled himself comfortably, but presently said that before he went to sleep he must say his prayers. His mother, fearing his weakness, persuaded him to say them in bed, telling him that God could hear them there just as well as kneeling at her knees. The little fellow said the simple words correctly as usual, and then satisfied, dropped into a gentle slumber with his cheek resting on his clasped hands. Mary took her work and sat at the open window to be near him if he waked, but the calm, and summer heat overcame her, and she too dozed. She could not have slept more than half an hour, when she woke up suddenly, with the sensation of something cold passing over her. Her eyes turned to the bed, but there was no change. Eddy had not moved. Still she felt uneasy, and going to the bedside, bent over, and kissed him. There was no response; the child was dead. He must have died in his sleep without a pain or a struggle. The little head lay upon the pillow with the hands clasped just as Mary had seen them before she fell asleep. But the soul was gone.

A neighbor coming in a short time afterward to inquire after the child, found the bereaved young mother in a swoon beside the body, and for a long time it was feared that she too would die. But God mercifully preserved her. Very slowly, through many weeks, she struggled back into life, but her heart seemed crushed within her. As she reclined in her invalid's chair in the room where her darling died, her thoughts full of her loss, she began to ask herself why this trouble had fallen upon her. She asked the question fiercely at first, as if reproaching God, but self-examination followed and reproaches died away out of her mind. Then, she thought of her little child as he must be in the presence of God, and the longing to go to him, and the thought that in her present state there would be eternal separation, overcame her, and for the first time she wept penitent tears. They were the beginning of a new life for her. At first the desire to be re-united with her darling was the supreme motive, but as she realized the cause of her dreaded exclusion better, love to the Saviour, whose death and atonement had made reconciliation with God possible, eclipsed every other feeling, and so Mary entered into peace.

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE.

A NEW STORY OF AMERICAN COLLEGE LIFE.

By Rev. L. S. Keyser.

Author of "The Way Out," etc.

(Continued from page 367.)

The First Term in College.

"How is it," asked Hadley one day of his friend George Dane, "that our parents and teachers never told us of these objections to the Bible? Of course they must have known that there were many men who rejected the book, and a still larger number who doubted its inspiration. It seems to me that a wiser course, if they wished us to become believers like themselves, would have been for them to have said to us, 'Such and such arguments are brought against the Bible, but they are unsound,' and then have given us the refutation, if refutation is possible."

"Ah!" said Dane, "I have thought of that. It was the novelty of these arguments that first attracted me. If I had gone over the ground before, under the guidance of some Christian believer, I suppose the lecturer who opened my eyes would have found a less willing disciple. The Christian Church, however, seems to prefer a policy of silence. So much the worse for it, I should say."

And how many young men have had cause to make the same remark! Yet it is still the policy pursued in families and churches. The fatal difficulty with this policy of silence and repression is, that when the young inquirer by some means is brought face to face with the objections of sceptics, as he surely will be, he is unprepared for them; he knows not how to meet them; he has not even been apprised of their existence, and consequently he regards himself as the dupe of his teachers, who have kept the facts hidden from him. In such a case to be forewarned might have been to be forearmed.

The anti-Christian campaign is carried on with more vigor than many persons suppose. Publishing firms in New York and Boston send out their tracts and books in vast quantities to the young men and women of the land, who often read them and brood over them until they are led astray by their specious arguments. The fact must be faced, and as far as possible the influence of this literature must be countervailed. How can this be done if we refuse to investigate the facts, and even close our eyes to their existence?

Early in June, extensive preparations were made for the commencement exercises of the academy. As the young men and women about to graduate were allowed the privilege of choosing their own themes for their addresses, subject, of course, to the approval of the Principal, our two half-fledged sceptics had the presumption to select topics of a decidedly anti-Biblical character. The Principal, however, objected, saying that such a course would damage their prospects in that vicinity for life. They replied, with their usual bravado, that they were not governed by motives of sordid policy and self-interest, but that they were willing to immolate themselves, if necessary, upon the altar of truth. But Professor Borst contended that it would be hurtful to the academy, if they were allowed to utter infidel sentiments under its auspices. Many Christian parents, he said, were sending their sons and daughters to him to be prepared for college, and he could not afford to lose their patronage. When the young men were about to protest, he told them curtly that if they would not accede to his wishes, he would refuse them certificates of graduation, and would not allow any of them to speak at all. So these knights of free-thought concluded to let "the interests of truth" take care of themselves, and finally chose themes for their orations that were tame and harmless enough for the most orthodox taste. They yielded, however, with ill grace, and sneered contemptuously at Professor Borst's "time serving spirit."

During the week of commencement another epoch-making event in their history occurred. The Principal had engaged the Rev. Dr. J. H. Hartridge, President of Grand Central College, of a neighboring State, to deliver an address before the students of the academy, and the people of the village.

On the evening of the lecture the two young men went to the church in which the address was to be delivered. The audience-room was filled to its utmost capacity, there being scarcely standing room in the aisles. A reserved seat had been provided for the graduating class, and to this seat they were conducted.

The Rev. Dr. Hartridge was a man of strong "bodily presence," largely built, and muscular. His face, which was closely shaven, and especially his large jaws, indicated firmness, if not obstinacy, of purpose; his lips were large, almost sensuous, his eyes flashing, his forehead high and receding, and his voice strong and sonorous. Our young students were favorably impressed with him before he arose to speak.

From the beginning of the lecture to its close the audience was held spell-bound. The Doctor was the master of a strong, perspicacious style, with a happy faculty for concise, epigrammatic statement, and a peculiar genius for building up thought, stratum upon stratum, until a mountain of truth seemed to rise, Alp-like, before his auditors. That evening he had a great deal to say about moral character.

"All things must be made to contribute to the formation of moral character," he maintained. "Whatever does not add something to the ethical development of man's being is sin. The earth has been filled with beauty and glory, Alp on Alp, wide valleys, deep cañons, majestic rivers, stretching plains; and wherefore was all this magnificence wrought out by the divine Sculptor? To aid in building us up in moral grandeur of soul. We are to develop and expand into the moral largeness of which these majestic scenes and operations in nature are the prototype. Last evening I climbed one of the hills that sentinel your beautiful village, and looking toward the sky, I beheld Venus, star of the twilight, glowing upon me like the eye of God. I was held enchanted by the scene of earth and sky. 'Why all this sweet and tranquil beauty?' I asked myself. To suggest cheer and help and incentive to man in his struggle for the attainment of moral perfection. As that star glows yonder in heaven's vault, so must I strive to make my character glow and sparkle and gleam in moral effulgence. As that star shines serenely yonder, so must I possess my soul unmoved above the toil and moil and upheaval of earthly passion and carking care. Mr. Ruskin has told us of 'The Ethics of the Dust;' he might also write about the ethics of the mountains and the valleys, of the sea and the sky; for all nature is full of ethical suggestions. Thus, my young friends, I would have you listen to all the voices around you and within you, to all the suggestions of beauty and goodness in the worlds of nature, of thought, of religion, and I beseech you to let every fact that touches your lives become an incentive to nobler deeds and higher aspirations."

The above excerpt, which is rather a paraphrase than a quotation, is sufficient to indicate the general character of the address. The young men were captivated by the speaker's thought and earnest manner. When the address was concluded, and they had taken the Doctor's hand in a warm, grateful pressure, they started arm in arm toward Hadley's home. Their course took them by a well-worn path across the fields and through the woods, and as they walked along they whiled the time in conversation.

"He is the grandest man I ever saw," said Hadley, enthusiastically, for he had arrived at that age when one is inclined, if ever, to be a hero-worshipper.

"I acquiesce in your verdict," responded George. "It is true, he seems to believe in religion, but I'll wager that he does not accept it in the credulous style of the ignorant people with whom we are acquainted."

"Of course not; a man of his calibre cannot be the slave of superstition. He is too broad-minded for that. I was fascinated by what he said of the formation of moral character. Of course, we believe in morality as much as the votaries of religion do. It is only their absurd tenets that we object to; they are not essential to morality, but are rather inimical to it."

"Ah, but you forget," laughed Hadley, "that Christians think that an infidel is almost as bad as a cutthroat, and is fit only to be tortured over a slow fire in a world of a very tropical climate."

"Pooh! that is because they are so dense and do not understand us. They think that a religionless morality is insufficient for the needs of fallen human nature."

The young men walked on awhile in silence

"Tell you what," said Hadley, presently, "I've made up my mind to become a student of the Grand Central College, if you will go along with me next fall. It will be invigorating, intellectually and morally, to live in the atmosphere of such a man as Dr. Hartridge. What do you think about it?"

"It is a happy thought—an inspiration, in fact," replied George. "Yes, yes, I shall go with you, and shall follow you like your shadow. You know that I am your vade mecum every time. Give me your hand on our compact."

The resolution formed so suddenly by the young men was found not to be ill-advised, and it was carried out in the following September. The opening day of the fall session found them pleasantly domiciled in their new college home, ready for the active duties of under-graduate life. The desire to acquit themselves well and achieve academical honors was the all-absorbing ambition with them, as they entered upon their college work, and they, therefore, applied themselves sedulously to their studies. They had not come to college to fritter away their time, or to spend their hard earnings foolishly. Like many other young men from country districts, they brought with them robust bodies and vigorous minds to their college work, and it was not long before they were regarded as students of the brightest promise, on account of which they were shown marked favors by their preceptors.

Their spiritual experiences were exceedingly checkered during the next three years. Even at the threshold of their college career they found themselves sadly disappointed in their instructors, at least in one respect.

"It is inexplicable," remarked George, one day, half to himself.

"What are you dreaming about now?" asked Hadley, looking up from his books.

"Well, you know that we supposed that these intellectual Samsons at the head of an institution like the G. C. C. would accept the Scriptures, if they accepted them at all, in a modified form; in a sort of allegorical sense, rather than as historically and literally true; but most of them actually pride themselves on being what is called 'evangelical,' which means, I suppose, that they gulp down the Bible entire, in regular orthodox fashion. Did you not hear what Dr. Hartridge said the other morning at chapel in regard to 'hacking the Bible to pieces with a rationalistic penknife'? I confess that I am mystified and disappointed."

"I have been puzzling my brain over the same conundrum," replied Hadley. "Is it pusillanimity or lack of information that makes them so credulous? It certainly cannot be the result of honest conviction."

"Tell you what I think," put in George, after a moment's reflection; "I believe that cowardice is at the bottom of it. These men dare not antagonize public sentiment, for fear of losing patronage, or being ousted from their positions. Don't you remember what Professor Borst told us when we wanted to give our opinions an airing at our commencement exercises?"

"But, George," said Hadley, "I think that you are a little ungenerous, and I believe that I have a more probable explanation of the phenomenon. Perhaps these men have been so exclusively devoted to the pursuit of technical studies, burrowing after Greek roots and solving mathematical problems, that the new light which has burst upon others, has not yet dawned upon their mental firmament."

"Well that is an ingenious and charitable theory, and I half believe that you are right."

"There is one fact that confirms my hypothesis," Hadley went on. "Our Professor of natural science, Dr. Busentide, is of course conversant with the advanced thought of the times, and must be acquainted with the disagreements of science and the Bible; and have you not noticed that he is about the only member of the faculty who does not make a profession of religion? He never leads in the devotions at chapel exercises. I'll wager that he has gotten into the current of advanced thinking, while the other professors are still floundering in the stagnant pools and bogs of superstition."

"Yes, that is a more generous view than the other," acquiesced George; "I cannot believe myself that our teachers are a pack of hypocrites and cowards; their investigations have been confined to a narrow field, that is all. Well, that makes our duty clear," said George, in a superior way; "we must make up for their deficiencies by disseminating the new light, and giving the college a propulsion in the direction of advanced thought."

"And we shall not be afraid of the frothy rage of the bigots, either," declared Hadley. "I despise toadyism above all things."

And so our two college sciolists imposed upon themselves the easy and delightful task of enlightening the Grand Central College on the great problems of Christian theology, and in their conceit and enthusiasm they did not for a time doubt their ability to do so. But soon their enthusiasm received a check, for only a few weeks' stay at the College sufficed to convince them that their instructors were very superior men, and were not the dry pedants that they had thought them.

On several occasions these rash young unfetterers of thought ventured to express their opinions relative to religion in the class-rooms, but they were rather curtly dismissed, or their remarks were entirely ignored by their professors, and in the literary societies, when they undertook to ventilate their views, they soon found that the opinions of college novitiates were regarded by the more advanced students as exceedingly crude, and their splenetic thrusts at religion were greeted with contemptuous outbursts of laughter. It was not so easy, after all, to put a quietus on the religious sentiment of the college. The young men were cowed, but as they were compelled by the force of circumstances to repress the expression of their unbelief, its fire only smouldered within them, and continued to gather force for a violent ebullition by and by. It is needless to say that the treatment they received made them all the more acrimonious against religion.

Finally they made a compact to maintain silence on the subject, both in the recitation rooms and in the literary halls, until they had reached a higher academical standing, and in the meantime they would investigate every department of anti-religious literature, and so strengthen and fortify their positions that they could not be overthrown by a few jeers. They believed that the time would come when their contemporaries would listen to them with respect.

During the first three years of their college life they searched the Scriptures with some degree of assiduity for the purpose of unearthing the "discrepancies." They also poured over the agnostic and anti-Christian scientific literature of the day, passing to the study of a higher class of sceptical writings than those which they had read before their entrance into college. It is true, their libraries received occasionally an accession from those New York and Boston publishing houses that print and circulate the literature of a rampant and vituperative character; but in the main the young investigators had lost their relish for such writings by becoming acquainted with works of higher scientific value. For a time they basked in the light of Spencer and Huxley, until they were filled with agnostic dogmatism. Then they devoured the late Professor Clifford's "Scientific Basis of Morals," with its sly insinuative thrusts at faith and its indefinite and fanciful "Religion of Humanity." Having heard a great deal of that brilliant Frenchman, Renan, they purchased his "Vie de Jésus," and became more strongly intrenched in unbelief by its romantic fancies. Thus while their unbelief was passing to a higher, at least a more respectable stage, it was none the less bitter and uncompromising, but was daily gaining in strength.

Meanwhile they were advancing in mental power and becoming more matured in character. They mastered their technical studies with an ease that astonished their fellow-students, and at the end of the third year it was found that Hadley Madelling stood at the head of his class, and his talented friend, George Dane, was next to him on the roll of honor.

(To be Continued.)

NEWNESS OF LIFE.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for June 24. Eph. 4:20-24. Golden Text, Rom. 6:4.

What Newness of Life is—The Sublime Altruism—How Jesus Lived—Not Sensitive to Unkindness or Insult—Self a Great Bargainer—The Crucified Self—How it is to be Attained—In One Definite Act—The Property Transferred—The Mental Spirit Renewed—Newness of Life as a Testimony—Christ's Life a Model.

"ARE ye ignorant that all who were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death? We were buried, therefore, with Him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of His Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." (Rom. 6:3, 4, R. V.) What, then, is this newness of life? Is it forgiveness of sins? But forgiveness of sins is not new, it is as old as David, for he says, "Blessed is the man whose iniquity is forgiven, and whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity." (Ps. 32:1, 2.) It is not cleansing, for that, too, is as old as David, for he says, "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow. . . Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." (Ps. 51:7, 10.) It is not the work of winning souls, for David says, "Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation; and uphold me with Thy free Spirit, then will I teach transgressors Thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto Thee." (Ps. 51:12, 13.) All these things are new to unconverted sinners. But Paul is writing of something which is new to God's children, when he speaks of "newness of life." A new thing is a thing which has not been before; and, praise God, Jesus brought into our nature in His own person, a life such as had never been lived on earth before. "Behold, I make all things new." (Rev. 21:5.)

A new life is not a life only free from sin, but

A Life Set Free from Self.

When Jesus came into the world, He would not have sinned had He been born as a prince, with all the attendants of royalty; but He would have done as human nature generally does. He would in this way have sought His own interests; it would not have been "newness of life." When, at the age of twelve years, He sat among the doctors in the temple, He, who knew all things, would not have sinned if He had taken the position of Teacher among them; but this would have been self-assertion, and self-assertion is not newness of life: Jesus never forced Himself upon the notice of any. When His enemies said of Him, "He casteth out devils through Beelzebub, the prince of the devils," Jesus might have resented such an insult in the spirit of the law, which says, "An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." But resentment is not newness of life, it is self defending itself. Jesus, "when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not, but committed Himself unto Him that judgeth righteously." (1 Pet. 2:23.) This is newness of life. When one of the chief Pharisees invited Him to his house, on purpose to watch Him with critical eyes, Jesus did not expose him, but made use of the opportunity to speak words of life to the guests and to His host, and taught that parable of the gospel feast which has been blessed to thousands of souls. (Luke 14:1-24.) Jesus was not proud, therefore He was to that which touched only Him. Sensitive people are always self-filled people; they do not know newness of life. When the Samaritan woman, who, with all her impurity of life, yet had a kind of zeal for her sect, refused a drink of water to Jesus, instead of His turning from her with the thought that she deserved nothing at His hands, He patiently opened to her the glorious truth about the living water; this was newness of life.

Not Sensitive

Jesus always acted quite irrespective of the way in which He was treated. The majority of men, even of professing Christians, make their conduct to others to depend upon the conduct of others towards them. But this is not newness of life; the very heathen can do as much. "If ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? (Matt. 5:46.) Self is

A Great Bargainer.

"We have left all and followed Thee; what shall we have therefore?" is the language of self towards God. "You have never done anything to benefit me; why should I help you?" is the language of self toward man. All this belongs to the old man; it is not newness of life. Jesus taught that we are not to do anything with a view to recompense from man. (Luke 14:13, 14.) "Love ye your enemies, and do good and lend, hoping for nothing again, and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest; for He is kind to the unthankful, and to the evil." (Luke 6:35.) This is newness of life; a kind of life never lived before Jesus came on earth; a life in which self has no place. Most people who know something of the gospel, live as though they did right to trust Jesus for the salvation of their souls; but they care for themselves, defend themselves, are anxious about themselves, assert themselves, as though no "newness of life" had ever been made possible to them.

Paul teaches the Ephesians that newness of life is learning Christ. "Ye did not so learn Christ; if so be that ye heard Him, and were taught in Him as the truth is in Jesus: that ye put away, as concerning your former manner of life, the old man, which waxeth corrupt after the lusts of deceit." Surely, the "old man" is our self-life, that of which Paul said, "I am crucified with Christ." (Gal. 2:20.) Paul had not died so that his body was laid in the grave, but he had yielded up his self-life, to be nailed to the cross of Christ, so that its claims and hopes and fears and wills were to be no more regarded; but the

Wills, Purposes, Desires

and thoughts of Jesus, were to take its place. "Nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me." This was newness of life—Christ taking the place of self all along. Paul's life was no patchwork, no mended-up affair; he could say boldly, and none could deny it, "Christ liveth in me." "To me to live is Christ." (Phil. 1:27.)

But how are we to "put off the old man" and to "put on the new?" There is but one way: "Yield yourselves unto God as those that are alive from the dead. (Rom. 6:13). Let God have His way with you, own Him in everything, and never resist Him. It may be done, and ought to be done in

One Definite Act

of making ourselves over to God, just as definite as the transfer of property by the signing of the title deeds. But then there comes the perpetual claim of self, "the old man," upon the renounced property; and here self has to be denied, "put off" as it is called, or "counted out" continually. For instance, we may be workers much owned of God; we attend a meeting, people know we are there, but take no notice of us. Self says, "That is an intentional affront! Why should I be treated thus?" Christ in the heart says, "Thank God that I am left in quiet and not noticed; for I have such a blessed opportunity to pray for all these people." Christ in us does not mark the affront, or, if it is perceived, puts it off, denies it, will not notice or remember it. This is newness of life.

"And be renewed in the spirit of your mind." We cannot renew ourselves, any more than we can create ourselves. It is the prerogative of Him without whom "was not anything made that was made" (John 1:3) to renew us. "Behold I make all things new." The renewing is the renewing of the Holy Ghost." (Tit. 3:5). We read of this renewing that it is daily; "the inward man is renewed day by day" (II Cor. 4:16), and that the "new man" is "renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him." (Job 3:10). The renewing is never in our own power—it is ever, "Be renewed," submit yourselves to the renewing; "Be renewed in the spirit of your mind, and put on the new man, which after God hath been created in righteousness and true holiness." (R. V.). How are we to "put on the new man"? Just as we deny self we are to acknowledge Christ. Just as we count out the old man we are to count in or reckon in, the new man. Christ dwells in our hearts by faith (Eph. 3:17), and we take and maintain our position of being crucified with Christ by faith, we reckon on God's renewing to work out in our lives that newness of life which God wants to be

A Testimony to a Lost World.

The world is full of self. God wants self to have no voice in His little flock. And yet religious selfishness is the most common, the most degrading, selfishness which there is. It seems as though Satan, when he finds a soul escaping from his bondage of sin, would move heaven and earth to keep that soul under the bondage of self, that so God should be frustrated, and that the very principle of self which governs in the world, and which is a theatre for sin to act upon, should be united to a certain amount of spiritual life, as though God should be made to contradict Himself in the people who believe in Him!

Few believers seem to take in that we are called to walk as Christ walked, and that the divine precepts of the Sermon on the Mount are as binding upon us as the Old Law was upon the Jews. Retaliation and resentment reign in rival factions of the church just as in the spirit of Zechariah, whose dying word was, "The Lord look upon it, and require it" (II Chron. 24:22), and few there are who possess the spirit of Stephen, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge" (Acts 7:60). Yet surely only such as serve "in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter" (Rom. 7:6) can rightly claim the name of "Christian" or "Christ-man!" It is our privilege to live the life and bear the character of another, and that other the Son of God. Otherwise though we may be converted and cleansed from sin; though we may be wise to win souls and possessed of great zeal, we are not fulfilling the purpose for which God created, redeemed, and sanctified us. "Neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation." (Gal. 6:15). The world has had enough of self—whether heathen self or Jewish self, whether Romish self or Protestant self, whether natural self or spiritual self, is alike hateful. What the world wants is Christ, the new creation. A charitable spirit, Christ-like words, Christ-like deeds; a spirit that will ask nothing and give all; which, like the sun, will shine down upon the evil and the good, and give blessing of some kind to the just and to the unjust. A spirit which will rebuff none but hypocrites from its fountain of love in God, can afford to breathe out love upon all. Newness of life is the clothing of the bride when she makes herself ready. (Rom. 19:1). The Holy Spirit produce in us this newness of life!

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for June:

Events preceding the King of Kings' Accession to His Throne on Earth. By R. Nelson.

Disintegrating Forces in the Church and in the Family. By Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kansas.

The Seven Prophetic Parables and Seven Churches. By G. H. Pember, Esq., M. A.

The Conversion of the World. By Rev. Dr. Munhall.

"The Queen in Gold of Ophir." By Rev. W. Frith

Predictions concerning Gog or Russia. By Walter Scott.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes containing the monthly numbers for 1884 and 1883 may be had; price $1.]

Volume X, of the Christian Herald, Containing the numbers for 1887, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. Also a few volumes of 1883, 1884, and 1885.

"THE SECRET OF HIS PRESENCE."

BY ELLEN LAKSHMI GORE.
—A Native of India.—

In the secret of His presence
How my soul delights to hide!
O how precious are the lessons
Which I learn at Jesus' side!
Earthly cares can never vex me,
Neither trials lay me low;
For when Satan comes to tempt me
To the secret place I go.

When my soul is faint and thirsty,
'Neath the shadow of His wing
There is cool and pleasant shelter,
And a fresh and crystal spring;
And my Saviour rests beside me,
As we hold communion sweet;
If I tried I could not utter
What He says when thus we meet.

Only this I know: I tell him
All my doubts, and griefs, and fears;
O how patiently He listens!
And my drooping soul He cheers.
Do you think He ne'er reproves me?
What a false friend He would be,
If He never, never told me
Of the sins which He must see.

Would you like to know the sweetness
Of the secret of the Lord?
Go and hide beneath His shadow:
This shall then be your reward.
And whene'er you leave the silence
Of that happy meeting-place,
You must mind and bear the image
Of the Master in your face.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted no two alike, will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Ill Effects of Tobacco relieved by its use.

The readers of the CHRISTIAN HERALD are often requested to cut out the advertisements or order blanks when writing to advertisers when notices appear in this paper. Many of our readers do not wish to do this as they wish to preserve the paper entire. The World Manufacturing Co., whose notice and order blank appear in another column, inform us, that if you will mention that you saw the notice in the CHRISTIAN HERALD, and copy the order blank, it will answer the purpose as well.

A Wife's Opportunity.

Write your name and address plainly on a postal card (mentioning this paper), sending same to J. D. Larkin & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and they will send you, on 30 days trial, one of their Great Boxes (advertised in a recent issue of this paper), of "Sweet Home" Soap and presents. Better accept the offer at once, as you run no risk.

Teachers during vacation, farmers' sons when work is slack on the farm, and any others not fully and profitably employed, can learn something to their advantage by applying to B. F. Johnson & Co., Publishers, 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

MISS JONES' QUILTING.

Written by

JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE.

This is one of the best stories ever written by this popular author, full of fun and good humor. 12mo., 256 pages; paper cover, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents. Sold by all newsdealers or mailed to any address, post-paid, on receipt of price by

J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher,
57 Rose Street, New York.

Send for E. B. TREAT'S New Books. The National Hand book of American Progress. 1492 to 1885. The Boss Campaign Book, $2; also, The Bow in the Cloud, or Words of Comfort, by 200 Authors. $1.75. E. B. TREAT, 771 Broadway, New York.

THE MARVEL OF THE AGE.

50,000 Words 1,000 Illustrations
Over 700 Pages.

THE REVISED NEW AMERICAN DICTIONARY

—IS THE—

CHEAPEST DICTIONARY IN THE WORLD.

Because it is revised and corrected to the present year, and contains all needed words in the English Language, with the true phonetic spelling of every word, based upon the World's lexicographer Webster, and other standard authorities, besides which it gives

A COMPLETE LIBRARY OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE,

Useful alike to old and young, rich and poor, Farmers, Merchants, Bankers Doctors, Storekeepers, Railroad and Telegraph Operatives and all who can read

OVER 100 VOLUMES are epitomized in this work. It contains in addition to the ordinary Dictionary an APPENDIX to the Dictionary which gives hundreds of words not found in any other Work, and is corrected down to 1884. Specimens of the English Language from the year 650 to the present time. Foreign words and phrases, Popular Names of American cities and states, Scripture, Proper Names, Slang and Vulgar Phrases. How to speak and write correctly, Rule for Pronunciation; words mispronounced &c. Seperate Nautical, Musical, Geographical, Geometrical, and Mythological Dictionaries.

GUIDE TO BUSINESS, giving everything necessary to be known relating to the management of business, book-keeping, weights, measures, values of coins, banking laws, how to tell counterfeits, tests for gold and silver, Laws relating to Landlord and Tenant, Interest, Usury, Homestead, Insolvent and Contract Laws, How to make Wills, etc.

THE POLITICAL AND HISTORICAL SYNOPSIS is the result of the labors of over one hundred experts, and contains more information and Statistical History of our Country than any other volume of the kind. Census Returns, Population of leading Cities, Number of Indians, their tribes and location; Principal officers of the Government with their salaries.

Declaration of Independence with autographs of the signers of that basis of our liberties; Constitution of United States and a thousand other useful items of information, carefully selected and reliable. The Armies and Navies of the world; the Troops of the Revolution, &c., &c. Epitomized Statistics of the Churches and Religious Denominations; Councils of the Christian World: Newspapers and Periodicals; Railroads of the World, their Length and Cost; Rulers of every Country; Revenues of every Nation; Shipping of the World; the Public Debt of the United States, and five thousand other interesting statistics.

A BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY containing interesting information concerning nearly three thousand Men and Women who have distinguished themselves in Art, Science, Literature, Statesmanship, the Pulpit, Platform Judicial Courts, or War. Rules for the Organization of Public Meetings, Farmers Clubs &c. are given full and explicitly.

Over 1000 Illustrations several of them colored in the high- est style of art including the Flags of all Nations printed in all the colors which distinguish the emblems of the Countries. Pilot Signals of all the principal nations; the various Flags of the United States; Autographs of all the Presidents from Washington to President Arthur;

ANCIENT ALPHABETS OF THE WORLD, in large plates on plate paper; Single and Double Alphabets; Manual Alphabets for the Deaf and Dumb; Maps showing the meaning of geographical terms, and one showing the Center of Population at the close of each decade from 1790 to 1880. Diagrams, Sectional Sketches, &c., of THE BROOKLYN BRIDGE with full particulars of the greatest Engineering work of the Century, relating thereto.

HOW TO MAKE KNOTS, with 48 illustrations. Mechanical Movements, illustrated by 140 wood engravings, and over 800 other illustrations of Natural History, Botany, Geology, Mechanics, Architecture, Astronomy, &c.

This book is everybody's VADE MECUM and is indispensable in every home. For the purpose of examination we will send this wonderful work, containing 50000 WORDS, and Over 1000 ILLUSTRATIONS, handsomely bound in cloth, gilt lettered, on receipt of ONE DOLLAR. TWO COPIES ONE DOLLAR AND SEVENTY FIVE CENTS. Send One Dollar for a sample copy and see what you can do. We desire agents in every town to whom they can make money quick as a wink. Over 200,000 of the New American Dictionaries have been sold in 2 years. The Revised New American Dictionary has 100 pages more of valuable matter over 700 pages total EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

If any person will get up a club of Seven at One Dollar each we will send FREE a premium the American Waterbury Stem Winding Watch; for a CLUB of 15 we will send free a Solid Silver Hunting Case Watch; for a CLUB of 25 we will send free a Ladies' Solid Gold Hunting Case Watch; for a CLUB of 40 we will send free a Gent's Solid Gold Hunting Case Watch. You can easily secure one of these watches in a day or two or during your leisure time evenings.

Send Money by Post Office Money Order or Registered Letter. Mention this Paper

World M'f'g Co, 122 Nassau Street, New York.

The New American ROLLER ORGAN

is constructed similar to the finest French Music boxes and PLAYS 260 TUNES, from a waltz to a hymn, with perfect tune and time. Gives better satisfaction than A HUNDRED DOLLAR PARLOR ORGAN and ten times more pleasure This Organ is the perfection of musical instruments and the grandest and most marvelous instrument ever presented to the public. It plays SACRED MUSIC, MARCHES WALTZES, POLKAS, JIGS Reels, Opera Selections, Popular Songs, Church music, as well as any organ. Nothing grander, or combining so many features can be found in French or Swiss Music Boxes, cost ing WE WANT A SPECIAL AGENT, EITHER SEX, IN EVERY LOCALITY, AND OFFER SUCH INDUCEMENTS THAT EARNEST WORKERS CANNOT FAIL TO MAKE $100 TO $300 PER MONTH. When you order a sample instrument Price Only Six Dollars get Special Terms. in BEAUTIFULLY CARVED CASES with music.

Send for one. It will fill you with astonishment and delight. If you want it set C.O.D. send $2.50 when you order and pay balance $3.50 when you get organ. Send P.O. Order Registered Letter or by Express, Address

WORLD M'F'G CO. 122 Nassau Street, New York

Notice

THE NEW AMERICAN ROLLER ORGAN should be had by every familly for it is a source of endless pleasure and is appreciated by every one. If you do not feel like paying the cash for it you can easily get it free if you will devote a few hours time to getting up a club of nine at One Dollar each, for the New American Dictionary, the best book of the kind ever published, and sold at One Dollar.

If you will try to get up a Club we will send you a sample copy by mail, post-paid, for only Forty Cents if you will fill the blank below, or copy it and mention the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

ORDER BLANK.

WORLD MANUFACTURING CO.,
122 Nassau Street, New York.

Please send me at once, by mail post-paid, the NEW AMERICAN DICTIONARY, for which I enclose FORTY CENTS.

I hereby agree to do my best to get NINE subscribers for the NEW AMERICAN DICTIONARY at One Dollar Each, with the understanding that when I send you NINE DOLLARS I am to receive Nine Dictionaries and the New American Roller Organ free for my trouble.

NAME.....

TOWN.....

COUNTY.....

STATE.....

DATE.....

Missionary Libra

For Sabbath-Schools, Mission Bands, and t Circle.

Kosa and Saijiro, or Life in Japan. Carruthers.....44
Glimpses of Maori-Land. Butler.....31
Life and Adventure in Japan. Clark..24
From Hong Kong to the Himalayas. Clark.....36
Jottings from the Pacific. Gill.....30
Along the River and Road in Fuhklen Dukes.....35
Home Life in China. Bryson.....31
Among the Mongols. Gilmour.....38
Madagascar and France. Shaw.....43
Every-Day Life in India. Rowe.....40
Scenes in Southern India. Mitchell...37
Old Highways in China. Williamson..2

This set of 12 vols., 12mo, all of recen containing 4,230 pages and 278 cuts, and somely bound in cloth, all in a polished nut case, at

ONLY TEN DOLLARS NET.

Single copies at list prices, postage pre

AMERICAN TRACT SOCI

150 Nassau Street, New York

BOSTON, 54 Bromfield Street; ROCHI N. Y., 93 State St.; CHICAGO, 122 Wabash PHILADELPHIA, 1512 Chestnut St.; C NATI, 176 Elm St.; SAN FRANCISCO, 735 St.

An Illustrated Hand book on Afr

GIVING AN ACCOUNT OF ITS PE ITS CLIMATE, ITS RESOURCES, ITS DI COVERIES, RIVERS, LAKES, AND SOME OF ITS MISSIONS.

CLOTH, 50 cts. PAPER, 25 cts

Testimonials.

Rev. Daniel Steele, D.D., writes: "I have rea ILLUSTRATED HAND BOOK ON AFRICA with gre terest. Not many people have time to read St large volumes, and a still smaller number can af own them. Your Hand Book, scattered widely Christian people, will awaken our interest in the enterprise of the evangelization of the dark con I hope you will be called upon for a hundred the copies."

We have read this book several times, studi newly made map, looked at the striking picture it is surprising to see the amount of valuable in tion he has gathered so rapidly together." And "Not one person interested in Bishop Taylor' ought to be without this Hand Book. It contai large pages of excellent reading, ten illustration a map of the New Congo State." Rev. E. I. D per, in Christian Standard.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New Y

BOOK AGENTS WANTED

MY STORY OF THE W.

By Mary A. Liverm

Her own narrative of "Four Years' Personal E ence as Field and Hospital Nurse." It portra Womanly or "Heavenly" side of the War, its Ligh Shadows "as a woman saw them." Bright, Pure, and full of "laughter and tears," of thrilling interest and to pathos, it sells at sight to all. Splendid Steel-Plate famous old Battle-Flags richly colored in exact fac The "booming" book for Men and Women Agents. $1 $200 a month made. ☞ Distance no hindranc we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circu

A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Co

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD federate POSTAGE STAMPS and used to 1865 The stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT U THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in G condition. Some stamps bring as much as $2 each. Send stamp for circulars describing wanted. Best references furnished if desired. A

G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett,

"Demonology or Spiritualis

Ancient and Modern."—"An effective weapon, sword of fire."—"Only unanswerable work subject."—startling disclosures.—History fac data.—Scores saved already. Whole commu rescued. Every family, preacher and christian w needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduce Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New

UNIVERSITY PIAN FROM $180 TO $15 FINEST PIANOS IN THE SOLD DIRECT TO FAMILIES, the enormous expenses of ag Sent with beautiful cover, and book, for trial in your home before you buy. Guara six years. Send for catalog

Marchal & Smith Piano Co., 255 E. 21st St., N

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be working for us. Agents ferred who can furnish a horse and give their time to the business. Spare moments may be profit employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities F. Johnson & Co., Pub's, 1009 Main St., Richmond

---

TEAS LADIES Send at once our new term THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York,

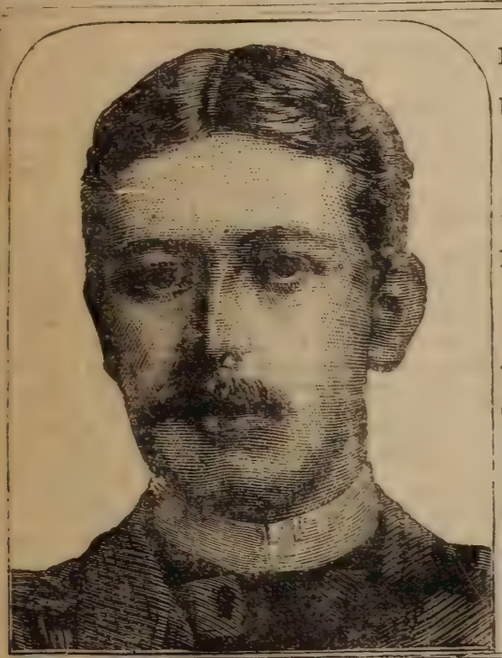
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XI., No. 25. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.



CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF PRINCE HENRY, OF PRUSSIA, AND HIS BRIDE.

PULPIT AND PRESS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE GLORIOUS APPEARING. By Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, M. A.

Rev. W. F. Re Qua Among the Indians—A Dying Girl's Message—The Reformation of a Colored Convict—The Growing Work in China—A Singular Indian Rite—A Dishonest Chinawoman's Confession.

A MESSAGE TO SLAVES. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: The Administration of the Bastinado—Escape from Savage Darfurians, etc.

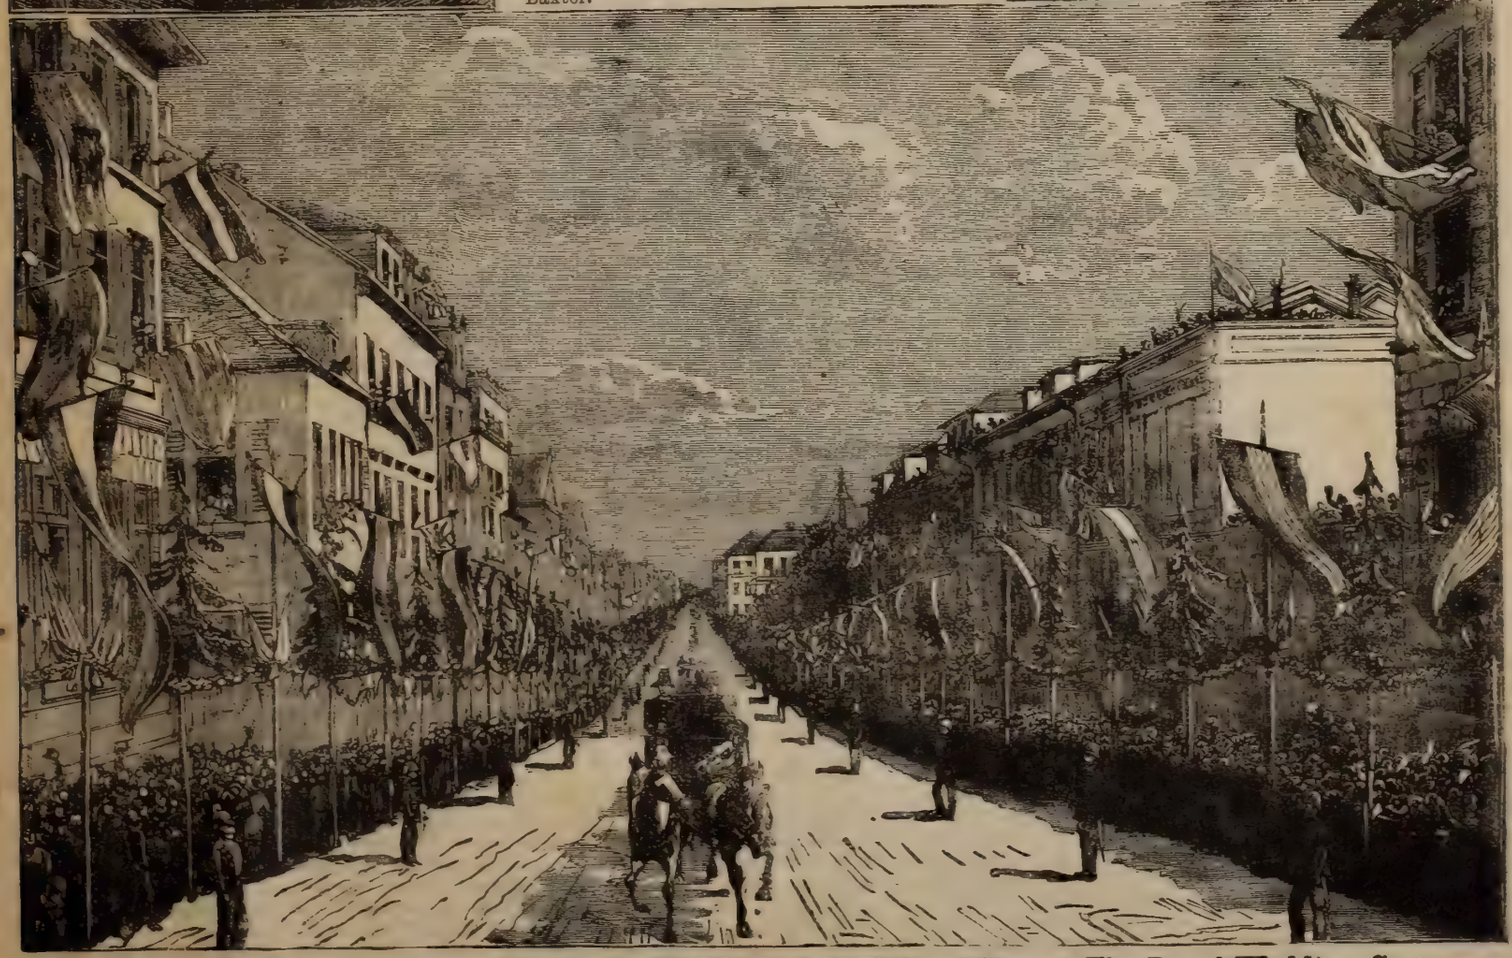
PORTRAIT OF MGR. LEON BOULAND, the Converted Roman Catholic Bishop.

PICTURE OF THE PROMENADE IN HAVANA.

FRED HOLDEN'S DEFALCATION. (Illustrated.)

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE. A New Serial Story by Rev. L. S. Keyser. Continued.)

GOD'S COVENANT WITH ISRAEL. By Mrs. M. Baxter.



PRINCE HENRY, of Prussia, and his Bride PRINCESS IRENE, of Hesse—The Royal Wedding Cortege.

THE ROYAL WEDDING IN BERLIN.

The Houses United—The Bridegroom—Born in 1862—An Expert Wood-Carver—Arrested by a Park-Keeper—A Connoisseur of Queens—Enlisted in the Navy—The Unpleasantness of Discipline—Voyage Around the World—The Bride—Her Illustrious Mother—A Wonderful Sick-Nurse—Her Service in the Military Hospitals—Her Conversion—The Wedding Ceremony—The Welcome to the Bride—A Courtier Chaplain—An Affectionate Family.

THE interesting royal marriage briefly chronicled in these columns two weeks ago, uniting as it does in another bond of union the heads of the two European nations with which our own people are most closely allied by descent and sympathy, deserves a more extended notice, and we therefore give this week portraits of the bride and bridegroom, and a picture of the wedding cortège.

The Bridegroom

is Prince Henry, second son of Frederick III., Emperor of Germany, and the bride is the third daughter of Louis, Grand Duke of Hesse. They are cousins on the mother's side—the bridegroom's mother, the Empress of Germany, being sister to the bride's mother, Princess Alice, respectively the eldest and second daughters of Queen Victoria. They are also related, on the paternal side; King Frederick William I. of Prussia being their common great, great-grandfather. Prince Henry is in his twenty-sixth year, having been born August 14, 1862. As a boy, he was somewhat careless, and not particularly devoted to study; but he was so amiable and persuasive in manner that he generally turned aside the intended scolding. Like all German princes, he learned a trade, and thus became a finished amateur carpenter, delighting in wood-carving, and turning out charming little presents for his family and friends. His restless disposition often brought him into trouble. Among the incidents of now recalled, is a story of his delight at the consternation with which he filled a park-keeper who did not know him. It seems that one day the lad slipped out with his elder sister, Princess Charlotte, into the gardens at Potsdam, and began picking the flowers. A park-keeper promptly pounced on the delinquent, scolded him furiously, and when the boy replied that he had a right to take the flowers, the irate keeper bade him come to the police station. "All right," said Prince Henry, "but I must tell papa first." "And where does this papa live?" growled the keeper. "Papa is the Crown Prince, and he lives in that palace," was the answer.

His Boyhood

He had, too, a boy's lack of reverence for dignities. In the course of his studies he was engaged on one of those histories written by fulsome panegyrists of royalty, who represented all queens as beautiful, graceful, and witty. The lad had seen but two queens—his grandmothers, the queens of Prussia and England—neither of whom could be honestly so described. His quiet comment was: "I think this man never saw a queen."

It is stated that his mother's ardent desire that one of her sons should be a sailor was so frequently expressed that her husband determined to gratify it in Prince Henry's case. Having obtained the consent of the old Emperor William, the boy was received into the navy, and with the true Prussian spirit of discipline, was to be treated as an ordinary cadet. When his turn came for an extended voyage, the mother had a natural feeling of concern for the safety of her boy. But she overcame her maternal reluctance and agreed to his going. During his absence, the royal family had two bereavements. He was at Singapore when the Grand Duchess Alecia died, and off Japan when he heard the news of the death of his younger brother, Prince Waldemar. His mother entreated that he be recalled home to console her, but the old Emperor William was inflexible. "You consented to part with him for two years," he said, "and now he must do his duty, too." He is the first of his line who has ever sailed round the world as representative of the new German name and guardian of the new German rights. It was on board the Prince Adalbert under Captain MacLean, a man of Scottish descent, that Prince Henry familiarized himself with the rules of naval discipline and the risks of the sea by circumnavigating the globe; and a subsequent voyage to the West Coast of Africa on board the ironclad Olga added to his experience as a seaman.

The Bride,

Princess Irene, had the inestimable advantage of a good mother. Every one who knew the late Princess Alice, loved her. She was gentle, affectionate, and unwearying in devotion to her loved ones. During the illness of her father, Prince Albert, she was his constant nurse, and her self-possession and thoughtfulness were as astonishing as her affection. In 1871, after her marriage, when her brother the Prince of Wales was stricken down with the disease which had proved fatal to his father, Princess Alice left her German home, and during his long fight for life devoted herself with the same unselfishness to the task of nursing him. Again, in the Franco-German War, the Princess showed herself an angel of mercy in sickness. The crowded hospitals at Darmstadt were under her superintendence, and the post in her hands was no sinecure. Nearly all her time she was in the wards, personally looking to the welfare of the wounded soldiers, and speaking to them gentle words of sympathy and encouragement.

Her conversion came through the blessing of God on a season of sorrow and bereavement. On June 29, 1873, her little son, Prince Frederick William, then a little more than two and a-half years old, fell from an open window in the palace of Darmstadt, and received such injuries that he died almost immediately afterwards. At first this heavy calamity seemed to have produced only "the sorrow of the world that worketh death"; but gradually it became, by God's inscrutable mercy, the means of leading her to think, so that she finally came to seek and find peace in a firm faith in Jesus Christ revealed in the Scriptures of truth, as the only Saviour of sinners. Herr Bergsträsser, in his "Memoirs," says: "The lamented Princess was for several years a disciple of German Rationalism. She seems, in fact, to have come very near to openly denying the Divine existence. All the while, however, she was a devoted wife and mother, and a pattern of every moral virtue. The loss of a child under circumstances which are still well remembered in England, proved the turning-point in the Princess's life. She said to a friend: 'The whole construction of philosophical conclusions which I had formerly built up I now find to be based on nothing; nothing has remained; and what should we be in life if we had no faith and no conviction that there is a God who governs the world and each single one of us? I feel the necessity of prayer; I like to sing hymns with my children, and each has its favorite hymn.'"

From such a mother, so wise, amiable, and tender, the Princess Irene must have had the best of training, and must have learned, from her example, what a good wife and princess should be. She is in her twenty-second year, having been born July 11, 1866. That was the year of the war between Prussia and Austria; and the ceremony of "christening" the baby Princess was performed on the very day when the treaty of peace was signed. She was appropriately named Irene, the Greek word signifying Peace.

The Marriage

was celebrated on May 24 last. On the previous day the bride was brought to Berlin by her father, and the bridal party was met and conducted to Berlin by the Crown Prince of Germany and a brilliant staff. After the usual greetings had taken place, the Crown Prince introduced the distinguished men by whom he was accompanied, to Princess Irene, and then conducted his future sister-in-law to a carriage. Mourning dresses for the late Emperor were discarded for the occasion, and all the younger princesses appeared in white. Princess Irene, in an open victoria drawn by four black horses, with outriding postilions, looked beautiful in her ivory white silk dress. She was completely overcome by the hearty enthusiasm of the reception. Twenty thousand people lined the route, shouting, "Hoch!" "Wilkommen!" &c. She was pale, though she smiled occasionally. A thousand torches of electric light reflecting on the cuirassiers' helmets and on the Gardes du Corps were all toned down to a full-moon ideal. The bridal reception was in the Blue Salon of the palace. The Prince of Wales, who is uncle of both bride and bridegroom, and distinguished guests awaited the arrival of the royal party, who were driven into the courtyard between lines of the Foot Guards. Afterward the bride and bridegroom held a reception in the palace. The park in front was like fairy-land, illuminated by electric lights.

From an early hour on the wedding-day the beautiful Unter den Linden and were lined with people eager to catch a glimpse of the wedding guests as they drove from the capital to the royal palace in the suburb. The Russian Grand Duke Sergius, who represented the Czar on the occasion, appeared in an open carriage, who was closely followed by the Russian Ambassador, and the Russian Military Plenipotentiary, Count Kutusoff. The German Crown Princess, who was accompanied by the Princess Albert, Consort of the Prince Regent of Brunswick, came next, and behind her Royal Highness's coach followed a closed carriage with her little sons, all dressed in white. The eldest, Prince William, stood up and acknowledged the cheers of the people by raising his right hand to his hat, as if giving a military salute. The Prince of Wales, wearing the scarlet uniform of his Blücher Hussars, also drove out to Charlottenburg in an open carriage. The German Crown Prince, in honor of his brother, the bridegroom, appeared in the uniform of the Naval Battalion. Both he and Prince Henry were greatly cheered by the crowd, as was also Count Moltke, who drove out alone in an open carriage.

The Road to Charlottenburg

Meanwhile the royal family and the most distinguished of the guests had assembled in once the bedroom of Frederick the Great. In this apartment the Empress performed the first act in the proceedings by fastening on the head of Princess Irene, the bride, the Wedding Crown of the Prussian Princesses, consisting of circlets of brilliants resting on a cap of purple velvet. The bride wore a magnificent moiré antique wedding dress, which was adorned at the neck with several diamonds as large as nuts. Like the splendid diamond necklace, the bridal fan of gold work adorned with diamonds, and the diamond bracelets, these precious gems belong to the treasure of the Prussian Crown. Round her neck Princess Irene wore a fourfold chain of magnificent pearls, the wedding gift of the Emperor and Empress. The Indian shawl, which was the gift of the Queen of England, being unsuitable for a bride's attire, was not worn at the ceremony.

The Spacious Blue Hall,

After the fastening on of the Crown the civil ceremony of the marriage was performed, and upon its conclusion the Royal persons Proceeded to the Palace Chapel.

The bridegroom conducted the bride on his right arm, and they entered the chapel punctually at noon. Behind the bridal pair came the Grand Duke of Hesse, walking with the Empress, the Prince of Wales with the German Crown Princess, and the Crown Prince with the Grand Duchess Sergius. Meanwhile the other guests had assembled in the chapel, a pleasing little structure, adorned with a fine painting of Faith, Love, and Hope, and numerous medallions and reliefs, representing Biblical scenes, the colors, among which blue and gold predominate, blending in admirable harmony. All chairs had been removed in preparation for the present ceremony, with the exception of six large armchairs, placed before the altar, and intended for the highest personages present. Upon the altar, a carved and gilded table, with a cover of red velvet, stood two burning candles and a Bible, The whole space behind and beside the altar, was covered with roses of all colors, the exquisite perfume of which filled the chapel. Just as the bride and bridegroom were stepping up to the altar the Empress Augusta, in deep black with white trimming, entered the chapel in a bath chair. The Empress Victoria stepped up to her mother-in-law and kissed her hand, the other members of the Royal Family following her example.

The service was opened by the choir singing a hymn, "Praise the Lord, the mighty King of Honors," in which the assembly joined. At this point, through a doorway near the Empress Victoria's chair,

The Emperor Entered, in Grand General's Uniform, with the ribbon of the Hessian Order, walking erect and with elastic step, attended by General Winterfeld. He bowed urbanely in all directions, and, after kissing his mother's hand, sat down beside the Empress Victoria. The service was conducted by Dr. Kögel, first Court Chaplain, who was assisted by the Rev. Herr Persius, of Potsdam, the bridegroom's religious instructor, Superintend-Müller, of Charlottenbnrg, and Dr. Sell, of Darmstadt. Dr. Kögel took as his text John 14: 27, "Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you."

In the course of his address, he said: "After days of deep mourning and anxious care a May day of happiness and splendor greets our Royal house. Your hearts, devoted in deepest affection to one another, will seal the covenant with a marriage-ring and the oath of fidelity before God's altar. The two illustrious fathers lay on your heads the blessing by which the houses of children are built up; a deeply moved mother draws the child of an early sainted sister to her heart; our Empress Mother, amid the sorrow of isolation, is full of tenderest sympathy for your young happiness, for which the late Emperor folded his hands in blessing; and England's good Queen, who was present lately in this house of God, remembers the wedding-day of her grandchildren in her prayers. Supported by so much love and fidelity, surrounded by the blessings and good wishes of brothers and sisters, relations and friends, yourselves full of ardent gratitude, you enter this memorable sanctuary, and receive the gracious promise of the eternal Prince of peace, 'Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you.'"

At the conclusion of the chaplain's address a chorale was sung, whereupon the Emperor, who had apparently resolved to forget his illness for that day at least, made a sign to Prince Henry to kneel down for which was announced to the outer world by thundering salvos of artillery, and for the prayer and blessing. Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" concluded the ceremony. The aged Empress Augusta, grandmother of the Bridegroom, embraced and kissed the Prince and Princess. The Empress Victoria then kissed the Bride, while the Emperor embraced his son with much affection. At the déjeuner which followed in the Schloss the Crown Prince proposed the only toast—the health of the Bride and Bridegroom. Prince and Princess Henry drove at three P.M., in a carriage drawn by four horses to the railway station through an outburst of parting cheers from the tens of thousands of spectators lining the streets. They travelled by railway to Ermansdorf, in Silesia, where they are spending the honeymoon.

The Exchange of the Rings,

The Antichrist Babylon and the Coming of the Kingdom, by G. H. Pember, M. A. A new work of remarkable originality and power, written in a popular and simple style, yet showing much scholarly research, 171 pages; Price in cloth covers, 50 cents. For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Young Woman's Notion of Prayer.—"'I should not know what to say,' observed a poor young woman in the East of London, when I asked her to pray to God. 'I might make a mistake, and, oh, how dreadful that would be!' To which I replied, 'God knows your heart, and well He knows what you mean, though you cannot express yourself as you would like.' 'Oh, I am so glad to know that!' she answered; 'but I thought I must pray to God like the clergyman, who uses a book, and says things in such a nice and beautiful way. I know I could never pray like that, sir.' It was not long ere with streaming eyes and a plaintive voice this poor penitent exclaimed, 'Oh, have mercy on me, hear me, and save me, for Jesus Christ's sake,' and God answered her prayer, and filled her with the joy of His salvation."

Twenty-five Christians in a Cave.—Mr. McDonald, a Scotch missionary of South Africa, says: "I first went to South Africa immediately after the close of one of our little wars, and great was the desolation it had occasioned. Mission stations demolished, the people scattered, and years of good undone in as many weeks. When I got to what had once been a flourishing mission station, I found only twenty-five Christians left, and they were meeting in a cave to worship God away from the notice of the other natives. But in the course of a few years God has wrought wonders, and the twenty-five Christians have increased to six hundred and twenty-four, no longer meeting in a cave, but with two mission centres having twenty-six preaching stations each. There is room for a great work in Africa, but the difficulty is the scarcity of missionaries. Why are there so many preachers in Great Britain and so few in Africa? God did not mean the Bread of Life to be kept in one corner of the earth while men and women were starving."

An Instance of Divine Retribution.—"Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." So reads the well-known passage of Scripture, and the Christians in Kanye, Bechuanaland, South Africa, are learning that the words are true. Six months ago they were cruelly attacked by their heathen neighbors; their houses were burnt down, and their property stolen or destroyed. But they did not retaliate, preferring patiently to suffer wrong-doing. The hand of God, however, has overtaken the wrong-doers, and one after another of the ringleaders has died from drink and other evil practices. In relating these facts the Rev. James Good says that both the heathen people and the Christians are alike deeply impressed. Not only so, but more than forty new members have been received into the native church, and they have a larger number of inquirers than in any past year. At their New Year's gathering nearly fifty wagons came in from the out-stations. The church was full, and they had a large gathering on the mountain on the site of their burnt-down church. In the evening 250 rejoicing Christians sat together at the Lord's Table.

Dead on the Doorstep.—"There was a Poor old Scotch woman, who lived in a village in the far North. She had a daughter who resided in a valley at some distance off. One day in winter she went on a visit to her daughter, and as she was taking some refreshment preparatory to returning home, a blinding snow-storm came on, and her daughter advised her to stay where she was for the night; but the old woman insisted on going home at once, so she put on her plaid and set out. Her daughter was very anxious about her all that night, and getting up early in the morning went to her mother's house; but she did not find her there. In great alarm she ran to the nearest neighbor, and procuring help, they searched the hills, but in vain; nowhere could the aged woman be found. They went to her home again, this time by the front door, for they had gone to the back before, and there they found her dead, frozen on the doorstep. She had struggled bravely through the snow, on, on, on; nearer and nearer, until victory seemed within her grasp and safety at hand. Then, just at the doorstep she sank exhausted, and there she died. And are there not many persons who are almost saved, who almost trust in Christ, who will almost get to heaven? But almost is of no use. The individual who is almost a Christian will be lost as irretrievably as the blackest sinner."

A Native Pastor on His Son's Death.—The Rev. Ruttonji Nowroji, native pastor at Aurangabad, Western India, thus writes to the Rev. W. S. Price, in reply to a letter of sympathy on the death of his son from cholera: "I must thank your for your kind expressions of sympathy in my recent loss. It was my second son, a lad about sixteen years of age. The attack was very strong and severe. He struggled for nearly five days, and suffered much in body; but oh! I cannot tell you how completely happy he was in mind. There was no fear—no doubt; all was light and peace. His mind would wander upon all earthly things; but Christ—His atoning sacrifice, His love, His glory—heaven, and heavenly fecility, were deep realities to him. He would quote passage after passage from the Bible without a mistake. He prayed much. He offered a beautiful prayer in which was much praise, commending us all to our Father in heaven. Never before have I ever witnessed so happy and so peaceful a death. It was a sweet sleep. I praise the Lord for this great comfort and consolation. Our hearts have sorely bled, but we have been greatly comforted."

A Climb in the Rocky Mountains.—Mr. McCaul, a Christian worker, of Canada, relates: "I remember spending two weeks in the Rocky Mountains. There were many fine views to be had, but one especially from a certain point which stood high above the surrounding peaks, but the roads to it were so precipitous and dangerous that few cared to risk the dangers. A party of us, however, determined to attempt the ascent, that we might obtain this gorgeous view. Our guide directed us to follow him closely, to put our feet in the marks he left by his feet, to stop where he stopped, and when he, caught hold of a tree and swung himself forward, to wait till it swung back, and then one by one follow his example. I happened to be immediately behind him, and with what earnestness did I watch his every movement, that I might follow it! When we reached the top we were amply rewarded for all we had had to endure. Similarly, dear friends, the only way to reach the heights and view the glory-land which we shall soon enter, is by steadily, earnestly, and watchfully following Jesus, our Divine Guide, and if we endure to the end, what a glorious reward! a crown of life that fadeth not away, and to dwell with Christ forever."

The Young Man With the Blue Ribbon.—Mr. Thomson said: "I once met a young man in his own home who wore the blue ribbon of abstinence. In the course of conversation I inquired of him, 'Are you a Christian, my dear friend?' Replying in the negative, as I had feared, I then said, 'You know, my dear fellow, your blue ribbon will never take you to heaven, glad as I am to see you with it; you must turn your back upon all your sins and seek mercy through Jesus Christ. Are you willing here and now to kneel and confess your sins and find pardon?' He immediately gave his assent, and we both knelt. After I had prayed for him and he himself had asked for forgiveness, we rose from our knees. I then asked, 'Has He forgiven you?' 'I do not know,' was the doubtful reply, to which I responded, 'If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins. His business is forgiveness, and your business is confession. So He has not proved faithful to you, has He?' Holding out his hand to me, he exclaimed, 'Oh, yes; the Lord has forgiven me for Christ's sake, but it really seems too good to be true.' I have watched that young man during the years that have since passed, and he is still walking in the light and love of God."

PULPIT AND PRESS

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, June 17, 1888.

"The children of this world are, in their generation, wiser than the children of light." Luke 16 : 8.

A Golden Opportunity—The Aid the Press Might Render to the Pulpit—Estranged by Indiscriminate Hostility—Justice Sure in the End—Painful Personal Experiences — The Reaction — Christian Courtesy to be Extended to Reporters —A New View of Armageddon—The Evil of Sunday Newspapers—A Bible the First Book Printed—Pointed Sermons Wanted—A Treaty Proposed—Benjamin Franklin's Epitaph—Luke a Reporter—Conversion of a Reporter—Unappreciated Work—A Proposed Marriage.

SACRED stupidity, and solemn incompetency, and sanctified laziness are here rebuked by Christ. He says worldlings are wider awake for opportunities than are Christians. Men of the world grab occasions, while Christian people let the most valuable occasions drift by unimproved. That is the meaning of our Lord when He says : "The children of this world are, in their generation, wiser than the children of light."

A marked illustration of the truth of that maxim is in the slowness of the Christian religion to take possession of the secular printing press. The opportunity is open, and has been for some time open, but the ecclesiastical courts, and the churches, and the ministers of religion are, for the most part, allowing to pass unimproved. That the opportunity is open, I declare, from the fact that all the secular newspapers are glad of any religious facts or statistics that you present them. Any animated and stirring article relating to religious themes they would gladly print. They thank you for any information in regard to churches. If a wrong has been done to any Christian church, or Christian institution, you could go into any newspaper of the land and have the real truth stated. Dedication services, ministerial ordinations and pastoral installations, corner-stone laying of a church, anniversary of a charitable society, will have reasonable space in any secular journal, if it have previous notice given. If I had some great injustice done me, there is not an editorial or a reportorial room in the United States into which I could not go and get myself set right! and that is true of any well-known Christian man. Why, then, does not our glorious Christianity embrace these magnificent opportunities? I have before me a subject of first and last importance: How shall we secure the secular press as a mightier reinforcement to religion and the pulpit?

The Golden Opportunity

The first thing toward this result is cessation of against newspaperdom. You might as well denounce the legal profession because of the shysters, or the medical profession because of the quacks, or merchandise because of the swindling bargain-makers, as to slam-bang newspapers because there are recreant editors, and unfair reporters, and unclean columns. Guttenberg, the inventor of the art of printing, was about to destroy his types and extinguish the art, because it was suggested to him that printing might be suborned into the service of the devil; but afterward he bethought himself that the right use of the art might more than overcome the evil use of it; and so he spared the type, and the intelligence of all following ages. But there are many to-day in the depressed mood of Guttenberg, with uplifted hammer, wanting to pound to pieces the type, who have not reached his better mood, in which he saw the art of printing to be the rising sun of the world's illumination.

Indiscriminate Hostility

If, instead of fighting newspapers, we spend the same length of time, and the same vehemence, in marshalling their help in religious directions, we would be as much wiser as the man who gets consent of the railroad superintendent to fasten a car to the end of a rail-train, shows better sense than he who runs his wheelbarrow up the track to meet and drive back the Chicago limited express. The silliest thing that a man ever does is to fight a newspaper, for you may have the floor for utterance perhaps for one day in the week, while the newspaper has the floor every day of the week. Napoleon, though a mighty man, had many weaknesses, and one of the weakest things he ever did was to threaten that if the English newspapers did not stop their adverse criticism of himself, he would, with four hundred thousand bayonets, cross the Channel for their chastisement.

Don't Fight Newspapers.

Attack provokes attack. Better wait till the excitement blows over and then go in and get justice, for get it you will if you have patience, and common sense, and equipoise of disposition. It ought to be a mighty sedative that there is an enormous amount of common sense in the world, and you will eventually be taken for what you are really worth, and you cannot be puffed up, and you cannot be written down, and if you are the enemy of good society, that fact will come out, and if you are the friend of good society, that fact will be established.

I know what I am talking about, for I can draw on my own experience. All the respectable newspapers, as far as I know, are my friends now. But many of you remember the time when I was the most continuously and meanly attacked man in this country. God gave me grace not to answer back, and for ten years, and much grace was required. What I said was perverted and twisted into just the opposite of what I did say. My person was maligned, and I was presented as a gorgon, and I was maliciously described by persons who had never seen me as a monstrosity in body, mind, and soul. There were millions of people who believed that there was a large sofa in this pulpit, although we never had anything but a chair, and that during the singing by the congregation I was accustomed to lie down on that sofa and dangle my feet over the end. Lying New York correspondents for ten years misrepresented our church services, but we waited, and people from every neighborhood of Christendom came here to find the magnitude of the falsehoods concerning the church and concerning myself. A reaction set in, and now we have justice, full justice, more than justice, and as

I Kept Silence

Much Over-praise

as once we had under-appreciation; and no man that ever lived was so much indebted to the newspaper press for opportunity to preach the gospel as I am. Young men in the ministry, young men in all professions and occupations, wait. You can afford to wait. Take rough misrepresentation as a Turkish towel to start up your languid circulation, or a system of massage or Swedish movement, whose pokes and pulls and twists and thrusts are salutary treatment. There is only one person you need to manage, and that is yourself. Keep your disposition sweet by communion with the Christ, who answered not again, the society of genial people, and walk out in the sunshine with your hat off, and you will come out all right. And don't join the crowd of people in our day who spend much of their time damning newspapers.

Again: in this effort to secure the secular press as a mightier reinforcement of religion, let us make it the avenue of religious information. My advice, often given to friends who propose to start a new paper, is: "Don't! Don't! Employ the papers already started." The biggest financial hole ever dug in this American continent is the hole in which good people throw their money when they start a newspaper. It is almost as good and as quick a way of getting rid of money as buying stock in a gold-mine in Colorado. Not more printing-presses, but the right use of those already established. All their cylinders, all their steam power, all their pens, all their types, all their editorial chairs and reportorial rooms, are available if you would engage them in behalf of civilization and Christianity.

Again, if you would secure the secular press as a mightier reinforcement of religion and the pulpit, extend widest and highest to the representatives of journalism. Give them easy-chairs and plenty of room when they come to report occasions. For the most part they are gentlemen of education and refinement, graduates of colleges, with families to support by their literary craft, many of them weary with the push of a business that is precarious and fluctuating, each one of them the avenue of information to thousands of readers, their impression of the services to be the impression adopted by multitudes. They are connecting links between a sermon, or a song, or a prayer, and this great population that tramp up and down the streets day by day and year by year with their sorrows uncomforted and their sins unpardoned. More than eight hundred thousand people in Brooklyn, and less than seventy-five thousand in churches, so that our cities are not so much preached to by ministers of religion as by reporters. Put all journalists into our prayers and sermons. Of all the hundred thousand sermons preached to-day, there will not be three preached to journalists, and probably not one. Of all the prayers offered for classes of men innumerable, the prayers offered for the most potential class will be so few and rare that they will be thought

Christian Courtesies

A Preacher's Idiosyncrasy.

This world will never be brought to God until some revival of religion sweeps over the land, and takes into the kingdom of God editors and reporters, compositors, pressmen, and newsboys. And if you have not faith enough to pray for that and toil for that, you had better get out of our ranks and join the other side, for you are the unbelievers who make the wheels of the Lord's chariot drag heavily. The great final battle between truth and error, the Armageddon, I think, will not be fought with swords and shells and guns,* but with pens—quill pens, steel pens, gold pens, fountain pens, and, before that, the pens must be converted. The most divinely honored weapon of the past has been the pen, and the most divinely honored weapon of the future will be the pen; prophet's pen and evangelist's pen and apostle's pen, followed by editor's pen and reporter's pen and author's pen. God save the pen! The wing of the Apocalyptic angel will be the printed page. The printing-press will roll ahead of Christ's chariot to clear the way.

"But," some one might ask, "would you make

Sunday Newspapers

also a reinforcement?" I have learned to take things as they are. I would like to see the much-scoffed-at old Puritan Sabbaths come back again. I do not think the modern Sunday will turn out any better men and women than were your grandfathers and grandmothers under the old-fashioned Sunday. To say nothing of other results, Sunday newspapers are killing editors, reporters, compositors, and pressmen. Every man, woman, and child is entitled to twenty-four hours of nothing to do. If the newspapers put on another set of hands, that does not relieve the editorial and reportorial room of its cares and responsibilities. Our literary men die fast enough without killing them with Sunday work.

All things are possible with God, and my faith is up until nothing in the way of religious victory would surprise me. All the newspaper printing-presses of the earth are going to be the Lord's, and telegraph and telephone and type will yet announce nations born in a day.

The First Book Ever Printed was the Bible by Faust and his son-in-law Schoeffer in 1460, and that consecration of type to the Holy Scriptures was a prophecy of the great mission of printing for the evangelization of all the nations. The father of the American printing-press was a clergyman, Rev. Jesse Glover, and that was a prophecy of the religious use that the gospel ministry in this country were to make of the types.

*Rev. 16 : 16–21.

Again: we shall secure the secular press as a mightier re-inforcement of religion and the pulpit, by making our religious utterances more interesting and spirited, and then the press will reproduce them. On the way to church some fifteen years ago, a journalist said a thing that has kept me ever since thinking: "Are you going to give us any to-day?" "What do you mean?" I asked. He said: "I mean by that anything that will be striking enough to be remembered." Then I said to myself: What right have we in our pulpits and Sunday-schools to take the time of people if we have nothing to say that is memorable! David did not have any difficulty in remembering Nathan's thrust: "Thou art the man;" nor Felix in remembering Paul's point-blank utterance on righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come; nor the English king any difficulty in remembering what the court preacher said, when, during the sermon against sin the preacher threw his handkerchief into the king's pew to indicate whom he meant.

Points

The tendency of criticism in the theological seminaries is to file off from our young men all the sharp points and make them too smooth for any kind of execution. What we want, all of us, is more point, less humdrum. If we say the right thing in the right way, the press will be glad to echo and re-echo it. Sabbath-school teachers, reformers, young men and old men in the ministry, what we all want if we are to make the printing-press an ally in Christian work is that which the reporter spoken of suggested—points, sharp points, memorable points. But if the thing be dead when uttered by living voice, it will be a hundred-fold more dead when it is laid out in cold type.

Now, as you all have something to do with the newspaper press, either in issuing a paper or in reading it, either as producers or patrons, either as sellers or purchasers of the printed sheet, I propose on this Sabbath morning, June 17, 1888,

A Treaty to be Signed between the church and the printing-press, a treaty to be ratified by millions of good people if we rightly fashion it, a treaty promising that we will help each other in our work of trying to illumine and felicitate the world, we by voice, you by pen, we by speaking only that which is worth printing, you by printing only that which is fit to speak. You help us, and we will help you. Side by side be these two potent agencies until the Judgment Day, when we must both be scrutinized for our work, healthful or blasting. The two worst off men in that day will be the minister of religion and the editor if they wasted their opportunity. Both of us are the engineer of long express trains of influence, and we will run them into a depot of light or tumble them off the embankments.

What a useful life and what a glorious departure was that of the most famous of all American printers,

Benjamin Franklin, whom infidels in the penury of their resources have often fraudulently claimed for their own, but the printer who moved that the Philadelphia convention be opened with prayer, the resolution lost because a majority thought prayer unnecessary, and who wrote at the time he was viciously attacked: "My rule is to go straight forward in doing what appears to me to be right, leaving the consequences to Providence," and who wrote this quaint epitaph showing his hope of resurrection, an epitaph that I hundreds of times read while living in Philadelphia:

"The Body of Benjamin Franklin, Printer, (like the cover of an old book, its contents torn out, and stript of its lettering and gilding) lies here food for worms. Yet the work itself shall not be lost, for it will (as he believed) appear once more in a new and more beautiful edition, corrected and amended by the Author."

That Providence intends the profession of reporters to have a mighty share in the world's redemption is suggested by the fact that Paul and Christ took a reporter along with them, and he reported their addresses and their acts.

Luke was a Reporter, and he wrote not only the book of Luke, but the Acts of the Apostles, and without that reporter's work we would have known nothing of the Pentecost, and nothing of Stephen's martydom, and nothing of Tabitha's resurrection, and nothing of the jailing and unjailing of Paul and Silas, and nothing of the shipwreck at Melita. Strike out the reporter's work from the Bible and you kill a large part of the New Testament. It makes me think that in the future of the Kingdom of God, the reporters are to bear a mighty part.

A Reporter at The Tabernacle.

About thirteen years ago a representative of an important newspaper took his seat in this church, one Sabbath night, about five pews from the front of this pulpit. He took out pencil and reporter's pad, resolved to caricature the whole scene. When the music began, he began; and with his pencil he derided that, and then derided the prayer, and then derided the reading of the Scriptures, and then began to deride the sermon. But, he says, for some reason, his hand began to tremble, and he, rallying himself, sharpened his pencil and started again, but broke down again, and then put pencil and paper in his pocket, and, his head down on the front of the pew, and began to pray. At the close of the service he came up and asked for the prayers of others, and gave his heart to God; and, though still engaged in newspaper work, he is an evangelist, and hires a hall at his own expense, and every Sabbath afternoon preaches Jesus Christ to the people.

And the men of that profession are going to come in a body throughout the country. I know hundreds of them, and a more genial or highly educated class of men it would be hard to find, and, though the tendency of their profession may be towards scepticism, an organized, common-sense, gospel invitation would fetch them to the front of all Christian endeavor. Men of the pencil and pen, in all departments, you need the help of the Christian religion. In the day when people want to get their newspapers at three cents, and are hoping for the time when they can get any of them at one cent, and, as a consequence,

The Attaches of the Printing Press are, by the thousand, ground under the cylinders, you want God to take care of you and your families. Some of your best work is as much unappreciated as was Milton's Paradise Lost, for which the author received twenty-five dollars; and the immortal poem "Hohenlinden" of Thomas Campbell, when he first offered it for publication, and in the column called "Notices to Correspondents," appeared, the words: "To T. C.—The lines commencing 'On Linden when the sun was low,' are not up to our standard. Poetry is not T. C.'s forte."

O men of the pencil and pen, amid your unappreciated work you need encouragement, and you can have it. Printers of all Christendom, editors, reporters, compositors, pressmen, publishers, and readers of that which is printed, resolve that you will not write, set up, edit, issue, or read anything that debases body, mind, or soul. In the name of God, by the laying on of the hands of faith and prayer, ordain the printing-press for righteousness and liberty and salvation. All of us with some influence that will help in the right direction, let us put our hands to the work, imploring God to hasten the consummation. A ship with hundreds of passengers approaching the South American coast, the man on the lookout neglected his work, and in a few minutes the ship would have been dashed to ruin on the rocks. But a cricket on board the vessel, that had made no sound all the voyage, set up a shrill call at the smell of land, and the captain, knowing that habit of the insect, the vessel was stopped in time to avoid an awful wreck. And so, insignificant means now may do wonders, and the scratch of a pen may save the shipwreck of a soul.

Are you all ready for the signing of the contract, the league, the solemn treaty proposed between Journalism and Evangelism? Let it be of the pulpit and the printing-press. The ordination of the former on my head, the pen of the latter in my hand, it is appropriate that I publish the banns of such a marriage. Let them from this day be one in the magnificent work of the world's redemption.

A Christian Marriage

"Let thrones and powers and kingdoms be Obedient, mighty God, to Thee;
And over land and stream and main,
Now wave the sceptre of Thy reign.

"O, let that glorious anthem swell,
Let host to host the triumph tell,
Till not one rebel heart remains,
But over all the Saviour reigns."

THE TEXT AMONG THE FLOWERS.

IN Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's magazine for this month, Captain Meldrum relates the following: "A young man, named Robert Reyner, belonging to Hartlepool, whom I know personally, told me the following story a short time ago, and I am sure I can rely upon its truth, he being a thoroughly sincere Christian, as well as a good worker for God's cause. He was by trade a driller in the iron shipbuilding, which is very hard, laborious work. Having to be in all positions at work, he found his labor to be very trying to his constitution; and it ultimately brought on a dreadful malady in the form of a double rupture. The poor fellow toiled on as long as he could, but at last he had to cease his work. He became worse and worse, and was advised to go to London, to see what could be done for him there. After much prayer, he consented to go to the great city, and went to Guy's Hospital. After having been examined by the principal doctors, he was told that there was nothing for him but to undergo a very dangerous operation.

"The surgeons intimated at the same time that they required his own consent, for the operation would be peculiarly full of risk. They gave him a week's consideration, and at the end of the week he gave his consent that in three days the operation should be performed. With much prayer he committed his case in a child-like manner to his heavenly father, in whom he had strong faith. Then he thought of his dear young wife being left in this hard, unfeeling world, without any earthly friend, and this was a sharp trial to his loving heart. This gave him great trouble for the first two out of the three days of waiting. Sometimes, also, his faith wavered at the prospect of premature death. No wonder, for life had its holy pleasures for him.

"He said to himself that he would never again have the privilege of standing up to preach the glorious gospel of the blessed God. This sudden end of his happy service gave him some trouble of mind. However, the day before the operation, lying on his bed meditating, the Lord sent a message from the throne. A delicate-looking lady came to his bedside with a basket of flowers. She talked with him some little time; and, upon leaving, she presented him with a little bunch of flowers, and in the midst of them he found a tiny card, bearing the somewhat singular text of Scripture—we mean singular to be put to such a use: 'He trusted in God: let Him deliver Him now.' (Matt. 27:43.)

"When he read these words they filled him with holy joy, and he cast himself deliberately upon his God, and cried, 'Come on, you doctors!' The following morning the principal doctor was much surprised to see him so full of joy; and was still more taken aback when he told them that he would not be chloroformed, as he intended going to heaven in his sober senses. In the presence of the four doctors he exclaimed, 'Lord, deliver me now! Nevertheless, Thy will be done.' He bore up under the terrible pain like a true hero, for the Lord sustained him. The operation was skilfully performed, and he recovered, and is still preaching the glorious gospel of the ever-blessed God."

REV. W. F. REQUA AMONG THE INDIANS.

A VERY hopeful letter from Mr. ReQua has come to hand. He has been on an evangelistic journey into the Cherokee nation, and has been much encouraged by the result. There is reason to believe that many souls were converted at the meetings held. A local journal published at Muscogee, Ind. Ter., says: "The meetings at Tahlequah were well attended—sometimes the house was crowded—on one or two occasions some could not find seats. These meetings were among the most spiritual ever held at Tahlequah. Christians were greatly benefited, and some led, as it seemed, to trust the Saviour. Brother ReQua's visit will long be remembered by those who attended the meetings, and listened to his earnest words and inspiring gospel songs. He is expecting to procure a tent and conduct gospel meetings at different places in the Territory during the coming summer. If he succeeds in carrying out his plan, we feel sure that wherever he goes the people will be not only interested, but greatly benefited by the services of this earnest faithful servant of God."

On reaching Fort Gibson he found the inter-tribal convention assembled, and he was enabled to speak to representatives of five tribes: the Choctaws, Cherokees, Creeks, Chickasaws, and Seminoles. Ex-chief Bushey-head, attended the meetings held by Mr. ReQua, and manifested a deep and serious interest in the gospel message. He came to the preacher for personal conversation, and assured him that if he is enabled to carry out his project of tent-work for the summer he will be warmly welcomed, and hundreds of Indians who have never heard of Christ, will flock to his meetings. Bushey-head was also enthusiastic about the idea of an orphanage for the Indian children, those who have lost their parents being in a deplorable condition. He promised to give it his hearty support and to do anything in his power to promote it.

Mr. ReQua has now received sixty-eight dollars toward the tent, and a brother at Eau Claire has promised him a set of harness when he is ready for it. He is confident that God will answer his prayers in this matter. The urgent need of the work among these heathen tribes being so clear, and the blessing that has attended his labors being so manifest, he is assured that in some way God will incline His people to give him the funds still needed. Every dollar brings him nearer to the object of his hope. His address is Rev. W. F. ReQua, Box 14 McAlister, Indian Territory.

A DYING GIRL'S MESSAGE.

AN incident connected with one of Rev. E. P. Hammond's meetings has recently come to light. A Christian gentleman, who attended the meeting to speak to the inquirers, devoted all his attention to one girl, who after a long conversation at last perceived the truth, and joyfully made a profession of her faith. The worker, anxious that she should, as it were, nail her colors to the mast, gained her promise to go right home, and tell her parents, who were godless persons, that she had become a Christian, and was resolved with God's help to lead a Christian life. Whether the girl did so, or what was the result, the Christian worker did not hear for many years, as he left the town, and did not return to it until business took him there. It so happened that at the same time evangelistic meetings were again being held there, and it was stated on the bills that he would speak. After the meeting he was asked to speak to a man who had just made a profession of faith. On going to him the man asked if he was really the person whose name was on the bills, and on being answered in the affirmative, asked if he remembered speaking to a girl named Jeanie many years ago at one of Mr. Hammond's meetings. The Christian worker remembered the incident and said so.

"I am Jeanie's father," said the big man with tears in his eyes. "My wife and I were very angry with poor Jeanie when she told us about joining the church, and it was a sore subject for a long while. Jeanie was true and faithful though, and she was a good girl. Not long ago she fell ill, and when she was dying she made me promise to find you, and tell you that she died quite happy, trusting in Jesus. I never heard of you till I saw the bills of these meetings. I hated to come to the meeting, and my wife would not come, but I would not break my promise to poor Jeanie. I came just to give you her message, and while I sat and listened, waiting to speak to you, the Lord laid hold of me, and I have given myself to Him. I'm so happy, and I want you to pray for my wife. Poor Jeanie! I wish she knew."

THE REFORMATION OF A CONVICT.

A REMARKABLE instance of the power of kindness to overcome desperate natures is related in the Youth's Companion. It says: One of the most hopeless cases ever brought into the great Moyamensing Prison in Philadelphia was a negress, who was convicted of a crime of violence. She was a huge, fierce animal, who had been born and had lived in the slums of Alaska Street. She was a drunkard and dissolute from childhood.

The chaplain, after she had been under his charge for six months, shook his head hopelessly and passed by her cell without a word.

One day the matron, taking a bunch of soiled scarlet flowers from her hat, threw them to "Deb" carelessly, with a pleasant word or two. The woman started in astonishment, and then thanked her earnestly. The next day the matron saw the flowers, each leaf straightened and smoothed, pinned up on the wall of the cell. Deb, in a gentle voice, called attention to them, praised their beauty, and tried, in her clumsy way, to show the pleasure they had given her.

"That woman," said the matron to the chaplain, "has the rarest of all good qualities. She is grateful. There is one square inch of good ground in which to plant your seed."

The matron herself planted the seed. Every day she showed some little kindness to the poor, untamed creature, who was gradually softened and subdued simply by affection for this, her first friend, whom she followed like a faithful dog.

By and by the matron took her as a helper in the ward, a favor given only to the convicts whose conduct deserved reward. Deb was orderly, quiet, and neat from her sheer gratitude only. The matron's hold upon the woman grew stronger each day. At last she told her the story of the Saviour's sacrifice. Deb listened with wide, eager eyes.

"He died for me—me!" she said.

The matron gave up her position, but when Deb was discharged she took her into her house as a servant, trained, taught her, cared for her body and soul, always planting her seeds in that "one square inch of good ground."

Deb became a humble, faithful Christian. "He died for me," was the thought which lightened her darkened soul.

THE GROWING WORK IN CHINA.

SOME idea of the work accomplished by the China Inland Mission through faith and prayer, may be gained from a recent statement made by its founder, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor. He said that twenty-two years ago, on May 26, 1866, there were only three Protestant Mission stations, and these were in two provinces. But now stations had been opened in ten provinces. There were now in connection with all Protestant societies 500 more missionaries, not counting their wives, in the country than there were twenty-two years ago. Four thousand souls at least have been gathered into the fold by the agency of the China Inland Mission. The present staff of the China Inland Mission numbered 294, viz., missionaries and their wives, 112; unmarried missionaries, 169; associates, 13. The native helpers—pastors, evangelists, colporteurs, Bible-women, etc.—number 132. Some of the missionaries have gone out at their own expense. The others have all gone out in dependence upon God for temporal supplies, and with the clear understanding that the Mission does not guarantee any income whatever, and knowing that, as the Mission does not go into debt, it can only minister to those connected with it as the funds sent in from time to time may allow. There are now sixty-six organized churches, eighteen schools, three hospitals, five dispensaries, and sixteen opium refuges. The Rev. E. O. Williams, who is about to give himself up to the missionary work in China, and who was lately vicar of a large parish in Leeds, England, said the question was not, Why should I go? but, Why should I not go? not, Have I a call to the heathen? but, Have I a call to stay at home? Last year Mr. Taylor prayed that he might be enabled to place one hundred more missionaries in the field, and that he might have $50,000 more money for the work. He now announces that 103 missionaries have been sent out, and the income for the year was $168,588, being $55,000 more than the income of the previous year. Mr. C. T. Studd the famous English cricketer, who through Mr. Moody's instrumentality was led to give up all the advantages resulting from a university career and devote himself to missionary work in China, was married on April 7. His wife was Miss Priscilla Stewart, who is also a missionary in China.

A SINGULAR INDIAN RITE.

THE consciousness of inward sin, yet the deplorable ignorance of the only effectual means of cleansing it by the blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin, were betrayed in a strange rite recently witnessed by a missionary in India. He saw a young man attempting to cleanse his stomach and intestines by swallowing a piece of cloth about two inches broad and eight yards in length. It is one of their purificatory rites, and great religious merit is attached to it. The Hindus seem to have gone a step further than the Pharisees in this respect. The cloth was, at first, soaked in water, and then, little by little, it was swallowed in a few minutes, and by several spasmodic movements of the stomach and intestines, the washing was effected, and after washing, the cloth was drawn out. The young man who performed this feat has taken to it since the last four months. This rite shows to what extent the Hindoo mind has exerted itself to cleanse itself from the impurities of sin. "I have spoken to him," says the missionary, "and left some Christian books with him to show him the true way of life, and how he may really attain, through Christ, the purity which He requireth who, as the man evidently perceives, 'desires truth in the inward parts.'" (Ps. 51 : 6.)

A DISHONEST CHINAWOMAN'S CONFESSION

A LADY missionary in China—Mrs. Broumton—relates a striking answer to prayer which recently occurred in the mission work. She says: "Mr. Ts'en, the school-teacher and evangelist at Kwei-yang, who is the first-fruits of the work there, has suffered much persecution from his friends and relatives for being a Christian; his wife also has been a great trial to him, through her deceitful and indolent habits, and many prayers have gone up on her behalf, that she might be led to repentance and salvation. Some time ago Mrs. Andrew wrote telling us Mrs. Ts'en was ill; and lately she has written again, and tells us that the disease (dropsy) seems to be on the increase, and has affected Mrs. Ts'en's mind considerably. She behaved very strangely and talked incoherently, saying she had been charged with theft, etc. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew and others often prayed in her room, that the Lord would have mercy on her, and lead her to repentance. The following morning, when her husband and Mrs. Andrew were with her, she spoke of having committed thefts at different times. The recital of her misdeeds appeared to relieve her mind somewhat. She confessed to having stolen food, clothing, and money from different persons, and at different times, extending over a period of several years. After several hours Mrs. Andrew called again, and Mrs. Ts'en a second time enumerated the thefts she had committed. She wished the people whom she had wronged to come, that she might ask their forgiveness. Her husband went to the people and told them what his wife had done, and promised to repay them. His relatives wished him to hush up the matter, but God gave him the grace to do what was right. Mrs. Andrew writes, 'She has been weeping, and praying, and confessing her sin, and in those matters her mind has been quite clear.' At other times she would say, 'Ah, to think of the love of God in giving His Son Jesus to die for me!' She had been exhorting those about her to believe in Jesus; she seems penitent and humble, and Mr. Andrew says: 'She appears to realize to some extent the enormity of her sins against God and man.' She says she could not help but confess. We believe not a few, both at home and in China, who take a prayerful interest in Mr. Ts'en, have been praying also for his wife, and we trust this is but the beginning of the answer."

THE GLORIOUS APPEARING.

By Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, M. A.

Three Distinct Appearings Spoken of—The Third Near at Hand—The Pole Star of Hope—A Personal Appearing—His Glory not yet Revealed—The Veil Lifted on the Mount—The Glorious Kingdom—A Confusion of Terms—A Greater Kingdom than Solomon's—Designed to Comfort—And to Quicken Effort.

AMONG the blessed teachings of grace in reference to the salvation wrought out for us by our Lord, the Apostle Paul, in writing to Titus, places this: "Looking for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ." (Tit. 2:13.) A consideration of this joyous prospect may serve to quicken our faith and animate our joy.

There are three definite and distinct appearings of our Lord spoken of in Scripture. They are all referred to in the ninth chapter of Hebrews; the first is past, and is set forth in verse 26; then in verse 24 we read, "Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." This refers to the present, and points to the position He occupies while absent from earth, hidden from mortal sight within the veil; but in verse 28 we read, "Unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto salvation." It is to this latter, future, and our subject, as set forth by Titus, alludes. Christ is gone into heaven only for a time; so soon as this present dispensation of faith has passed away He will again be revealed to sight, in order that the earth, which as yet has only been the scene of His humiliation and suffering, may be the sphere of His glory and complete triumph over all the works of the devil. Hence we read in Acts 3:20, "He shall send Jesus Christ, who before was preached unto you, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began." There is nothing more sure and certain than the fact that Christ shall come again, and be made manifest as the King of kings and Lord of lords. As surely, and as personally, as He came the first time to suffer and to die shall He come the second time "to reign, and to prosper on the earth."

Nearing Manifestation

The second advent is as much a part of God's purpose as the first, and is essential to the completeness of that redemption which He came to obtain. No spiritual influence connected with the gospel dispensation, however widespread or blessed it may be, can answer the great ends of His promised appearing in the glory of His kingly power, nor can anything He does in heaven as the Aaronic Priest within the veil, or as seated on His Father's throne on high, answer to, take the place of, or render needless, His Melchisedek priesthood, as the One who is to be "a Priest upon His throne," in the day when "He shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously."

This glorious appearing of Christ is the great object of Christian hope, which cheers and guides the earnest watchers whose place it is during the night of time to watch for the dawn of the coming day. Grace teaches us that here we are only strangers and sojourners, called to be followers of our Lord in His rejection by the world, and to suffer with Him, treading the same path of self-sacrifice and consecration to the Father's will He so constantly and perfectly pursued. He assures all who faithfully do so that, if they suffer with Him, they shall also reign with Him; sharing His cross, they shall share His crown; thus animating their hearts with hope and inspiring them with courage to do battle with every foe, and to resist steadfastly all that impedes their course. It is well for us, therefore, to have a clear knowledge of the hope set before us in the gospel, and to acquaint our minds with Scripture teaching on a subject so closely allied with our present experience and future prospects as "heirs of God, joint-heirs with Christ."

The Pole-Star

Let us consider this appearing in reference to the glory of Christ, which shall then be revealed. The Revised Version, instead of "the glorious appearing," reads, "the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ." Hitherto the world has only beheld His humiliation, "He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not." Once, for a brief space,

The Veil was Withdrawn, and to the favored three, Peter, James, and John, a glimpse was given of His glory; they were allowed to be "eyewitnesses of His majesty, when they were with Him in the holy mount," so that they were enabled to make known with certainty "the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." But full soon the splendid vision passed away, and gave place to revelations of the sufferings and death their Lord was to undergo at Jerusalem. After His resurrection no eyes saw Him but those of disciples and chosen witnesses. He appeared at intervals to those who knew and loved Him, by many infallible proofs assuring them that He had risen, and then ascended to heaven without making any sign or manifestation of His kingly glory or power. The men of Galilee who watched His ascension were comforted as He vanished from their sight by the promise that, "This same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven," and went their way to learn that the glory which He was to have in accordance with the predictions of the Old Testament was to follow (not precede) this present dispensation of faith during which their Lord would be hidden from view, remaining absent from the earth until the time should come for His glory to be revealed.

Then too shall the glory of His kingdom be revealed.

The Kingdom and the Church have often been confounded, one with the other, as though they were one and the same, but Scripture does not so speak of them. The prophets of the Old Testament continually set before us a far different state of things, under the reign of Christ, to that which obtains in connection with the Church. The era of Solomon is typical of a time far brighter than any that has been known upon earth, or than can be known while "the King of Glory" is absent. Psalm 72, brings before us a King and a kingdom of which Solomon's palmiest days were but a shadow and figure. Israel shall under His sway be no longer scattered and peeled, but regathered, restored to Divine favor, and made a blessing and a praise in all the earth.

In that day He who is now rejected and disowned by the vast majority in every land shall be universally adored, and His "name be set up for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek, and His rest shall be glorious." It is for this we are taught to pray, saying, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." Glory beyond compare shall then be seen upon the Son of Man, the ruler whose coming shall be bright "as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, a morning without clouds, as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain." Then shall all that God has decreed for men in connection with the work of Christ be accomplished, and His solemn oath be performed, "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord."

But we must turn from this part of our subject to consider what is the attitude grace teaches us to maintain in reference to this bright appearing of our Lord. It is to be cherished by us as a blessed hope. Hope is one of the three chiefest of the Christian graces, and is as important to the completeness of the Christian character as faith or love. It is and soothe in the midst of sorrow and trial ever incident to mortal life. Its province is to soar beyond things seen and temporal, and to rejoice in the things not seen and eternal. It animates the heart and nerves the soul for conflict and endurance, and by its ever-increasing confidence and assurance, begotten of experience, it enables the believer to sing and triumph even though the clouds be dark and all surroundings adverse. The object of our hope is clearly defined to be one and distinct in its nature, "We are called in one hope of our calling," so that there need be no mistake as to what it is we are to be yearning after and aspiring to. The teaching of our text is uniform with that of the New Testament throughout. The appearing of the Lord, His return in glory and in power to reign as King of kings, and Lord of lords, is the one sure and blessed end and consummation to which we are to look forward. Not death, or its results to the unclothed spirit, not heaven in the technical sense of the word, but Christ Himself; perfect salvation is only attained when He appears.

Designed to Comfort

We are to be looking for this blessed hope. The words are significent and suggestive. They denote eager desire. We do not look for that for which we have but little concern, or on which we set little value. Well may we long for the appearing of our Lord; all that is brightest and best in our calling and destiny as believers depends upon it, is attained when it takes place.

One of the Truest Tests of our regard for the Saviour is found in this, if our hearts are full of faith in Him, and of joy in His service, we shall "love His appearing," the period of His absence will be to us a season of earnest longing for His return; while if we are, on the other hand, taken up with the world, and living to ourselves, we shall have little desire for His coming, being consciously unready to meet Him. Diligent preparation is also involved in looking for His return. What manner of persons ought those to be who expect His speedy approach? The only fitting reply is found in the words of II. Peter, 3:14, "Wherefore, beloved, seeing ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of Him in peace, without spot and blameless." This "blessed hope" is intended to exert a holy influence upon our hearts and lives, kindling a flame of sacred devotion, and arousing to zeal and fidelity in every sphere of life. It is impossible to cherish it and be careless, worldly, and half-hearted, for "every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure." May the Holy Spirit so reveal Christ in us, "the hope of glory," that under its blissful inspiration we may indeed "live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world."

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.00.

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1895, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages, postage included,

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

The whole edition of The Christian Herald was mailed last week to subscribers during Tuesday, June 5. The last delivery at the New York Post Office was made at 11.45 P. M.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Four Large Ships are to be Added to the Navy if the Naval Appropriation Bill prepared by the House Committee is adopted by Congress. The bill makes an appropriation of $6,000,000, of which $4,000,000 are for construction and $2,000,000 for armament. Strong efforts have been made to induce the committee to provide for a lot of small vessels, which could be quickly built and would afford more places for commanding officers, but these efforts have not been successful. The bill authorizes the construction of four ships: two unarmored cruisers, each to have a guaranteed speed of nineteen knots, one unarmored cruiser with a guaranteed speed of twenty knots, and one armored ship of about 7,500 tons, with no guarantee of speed, but planned to make not less than seventeen knots. One of the four must be built in a navy-yard, and all may be built in such yards if the President is satisfied that none of the bids made by contractors is reasonable, The six ships in process of construction are expected to be ready for service before the end of this year. Four of these are double turreted monitors.

International Arbitration was Indorsed by the Senate on Thursday last, by the adoption of a concurrent resolution reported by Mr. Sherman, requesting the President, from time to time, as fit occasions may arise, to invite negotiations with foreign Governments, "to the end" that any disputes that cannot be adjusted by diplomatic agency, may be referred to arbitration, and be peaceably adjusted by such means. Ths resolution, however, was taken up for reconsideration, when Mr. Riddleberger pointed out that probably the first use to which it would be put by the Government would be the settlement of the Fisheries dispute.

The Fisheries Treaty Occupied the Attention of the Senate on two days last week. On Monday, Senator Gray, of Delaware, made an eloquent speech in its defence. He contended that the only ground there could be for objecting to the treaty was based on the theory that the bays of Canada, Nova Scotia, and Newfoundland, which were more than six miles wide, were not territorial waters. That theory the United States could not afford to lay down on account of the valuable fisheries of Behring Sea. Discussing each clause of the treaty, he argued that it gave to American fishermen the right to enter Canadian ports on all occasions to purchase all the supplies ordinarily asked for trading vessels, the only exception being supplies distinctively peculiar to fishing vessels, and asked whether it was not the part of statesmanship to secure impartial privileges by the ratification of the treaty. The treaty secured every right of American fishermen and left the tariff on fish where it ought to be left—as a subject to be dealt with by the legislative branch of the Government. On Wednesday, Senator Hale, of Maine, made a strong speech against ratification. He said that the American fishermen were opposed to the treaty to a man. He also insisted that it was a device on the part of Great Britain to get Canadian fish admitted free. Further consideration was postponed until June 25. As matters now stand, the probabilities are that the treaty will not be ratified.

The Progress Made in the Preparations for cutting the Nicaragua Canal, encourages the hope that this gigantic enterprise will be completed at no distant day. Four of the surveyors who have been at work on the route, returned to New York on June 14. They were last on the western division of the canal, to which they were transferred a few weeks ago, after completing their work on the San Juan River. The entire expedition enjoyed excellent health, and all were happy over the successful results of their work. The hydrographic party completed the off-shore soundings at Brito, and the work in the lake, at the mouth of the Rio Lajos, and went to the San Juan about the middle of May. After a few days' work at Don Carlos, the party were to proceed to Greytown, to finish the survey of the harbor. Of the two large parties to which the four surveyors belonged, there was not one man sick during the three months they were on the ground. This is a remarkable fact, proving conclusively the superiority of the Nicaragua over the Panama route.

The New Governor-General of Canada, Lord Stanley of Preston, took the oath of office at Ottawa, on June 11. The ceremony took place in the Senate chamber, in the presence of a brilliant and distinguished assemblage. In reply to the civic address of welcome, Lord Stanley returned hearty thanks for the kindly welcome that had been accorded him on his first coming to reside among them as Her Majesty's representative. Although only in Canada a few hours, he thought he could already say that he experienced, even before his arrival, that hospitality, kindness, and cordiality which made the name of the Dominion proverbial. In regard to the question of federal union in Australia, no one who had ever been connected with important interests of great colonies could fail to perceive the advantage of that movement when it proceeds spontaneously and when the feeling that dictated it was genuine.

A New Expedition for the Exploration of the Ruins of Babylon and other Old Testament cities is to sail on June 23, from New York. It is under the auspices of the University of Pennsylvania. The expenses of the expedition will be defrayed by Mr. George W. Childs, Messrs. Clark, the bankers, and other prominent citizens of Philadelphia. Professor Peters, Ph. D., Dr. R. F. Harper, of Yale, and Mr. J. D. Prince, of Columbia College, are to be among the explorers. In an interview with a reporter, Dr. Peters said: "The field is full of ruins of the most ancient cities of the world, only one or two of which have ever been explored, and those only in the very least degree. We know the names of fifty or sixty cities which existed there—cities of importance—and the sites of not one dozen of these have been determined. It will give some idea of how little work has been done when the sites of these cities have been left undetermined. The actual site of digging cannot be definitely stated before departure. It depends primarily upon the permission granted by the Turkish authorities, and, secondarily, upon information to be obtained on the spot. The region in which these ancient cities lie is comprised between the rivers Tigris and Euphrates." The expedition is to follow the preliminary work performed by the Wolfe expedition of 1885, the cost of which was defrayed by the late Miss Catherine Wolfe, of New York.

The Melancholy Intelligence of the Death of the Emperor of Germany on Friday last has caused world-wide regret. The cheering reports of his condition, recently published, encouraged the hope that his valuable and useful life would be prolonged, even if his complete recovery was impossible. The wise and liberal principles which have marked his brief reign, and his evident desire to enlarge the constitutional liberties of the people, were so acceptable to the masses in Germany that, apart from the personal love and sympathy with which he inspired them, they ardently hoped that he might be spared for a few years. Other European nations, too, recognizing the immense interests that hung upon his life, and how enormously the danger of war would be increased by his giving place to the fiery young man who is his son and successor, were no less anxious than the German people for him to live. God in His wisdom, however, decided otherwise, and the Emperor bowed in resignation to His will. On Thursday, when he was no longer able to speak he wrote upon a pad: "I have tried my best to do my duty to my God and to my country. I feel that the end is now near. God's will be done." It would appear that the fear expressed by Dr. Mackenzie a month ago, and published in these columns on May 31, that the corrosive sore in the Emperor's throat might eat inward and produce fatal results, was realized. The wall and cartilages between the gullet and the windpipe were on June 12, found to be impaired, and particles of food consequently passed into the air passages. The physicians then abandoned hope, and informed the family that death was near at hand. The patient was kept alive by food artificially administered until Friday, when he succumbed to the dreadful disease, and about 11 A. M. he peacefully passed away He was in his fifty-seventh year.

The Austrian Government Proposes to Raise the sum of eight millions dollars for extraordinary military and naval expenditure for the current year, in addition to the ordinary outlay There is a curious preamble to the appropriation bill, in which these expenses are proposed. It states that, though all the European cabinets are united in desiring peace, circumstances, nevertheless, indicate that an increase in Austria-Hungary's defences is the surest safeguard of peace. Remarks of the same tenor were made by the Emperor Francis Joseph, in receiving the Delegations. He said he was satisfied with the amicable relations existing between Austria and the powers. The great military credits demanded did not mean that trouble was impending. They were asked because other States had augmented their forces. He declared that he earnestly desired peace. Genial and pacificatory as these statements were, they did not impress Russia to any great extent, though they were probably uttered mainly for the benefit of that country. A prominent Russian journal somewhat cynically observes, in commenting upon them, that if Austria's intentions were thoroughly pacific, it would rest with her to initiate a settlement of the Bulgarian question.

The Panic in England Produced by the Assertion of eminent military authorities that it would be quite practicable for an enemy to invade the country, gains increased force from disclosures now being made of official corruption. The London correspondent of the New York Herald, who is a Member of Parliament, states that the public as yet do not know one half of the disgraceful details. The Duke of Cambridge complains that the army is not strong enough, and Lord Charles Beresford who is in the navy, declares that the navy is inefficient, but independent Members of Parliament contend that the hundred and fifty million dollars a year now spent on those two departments is ample to make them all that they should be if the money were economically spent. The charge is made that the Queen's relatives holding offices in the army and navy absorb large sums annually without adding to the efficiency of the service, that contracts are not honestly awarded, and that wholesale corruption exists. Bayonets of tin, ships imperfectly armored, guns that burst, and shells that will not burst are supplied by contractors who, having to pay bribes, try to come out with a profit by furnishing material of the cheapest and poorest kind. Meanwhile Lord Salisbury's government ridicules the agitation, and insists that the panic has been excited for political purposes.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgement to the amount of $36. They are from: Montreal, Can., $5; Orange, Mass., $1: Bethel, Me., $5; "Adventist," Cambridgeport, Mass., $25. Our friends will be glad to learn that letters are being sent from some of the ministers who have received the paper through their kindness, speaking in terms of warm gratitude of the help they derive from its pages, and saying that God is blessing their labors now more abundantly than even before.

The Mother of the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon Died at Croydon, on May, 23, at the age of seventy-three. An English journal says: "It is impossible to tell how much of the blessing that has rested upon the ministry of her sons is to be attributed to the training they received at their mother's knee. We have heard that, on one occasion, as her husband, the Rev. John Spurgeon, was on his way to fulfil a preaching engagement, it suddenly occurred to him that possibly he was neglecting his own family while going away from home to do the Lord's work. Returning to the house, and seeing no one about, he went up-stairs, and, listening outside the bedroom door, he heard his wife pleading with and for their children. He came down without disturbing her, feeling that he could safely leave his family with such a mother." She was a Congregationalist.

The Great International Missionary Conference in London opened on June 9 and was in session throughout last week. Each day has been devoted to a separate field of foreign missions. When the work in Africa was under consideration, Gen. Fisk, who presided, urged the necessity of opposing the liquor traffic in that country, and of inculcating higher standards of morality in commercial dealings. He said that nothing was so calculated to prejudice the natives and retard the work of the missions as fraudulent commercial transactions. The recent remarkable revival of Islamism was anxiously considered by the Conference on June 11. Mr. Schrieber, of Berlin, said that throughout the Dutch possessions in the East, Moslem schools had been established to oppose Christian missions. Dr. Post, who is one of the American delegates, spoke of the destructive social and political influence of Islamism in perverting individual morality and crushing the life out of the people. He also referred in strong terms to the success of medical mission work in Syria. He said the benefits derived by the people from the medical treatment by the missionaries greatly helped in gaining their attention to the gospel. The Lord Mayor of London has shown civic hospitality to the delegates by entertaining them at a sumptuous luncheon at his official residence.

Six Weeks on a Coral Reef were Spent by a shipwrecked crew and passengers recently. The oceanic steamer Mariposa, which arrived at San Francisco on June 9, rescued a number of shipwrecked people whom she picked up from Palmyria Island, a coral reef, north of Samoa. They belonged to the British bark Henry James, which had been wrecked on April 16, while on a voyage from New South Wales to San Francisco. The Henry James struck on a reef, and the captain, finding the vessel sinking, got his people into the boats. After a perilous voyage of twelve hours they reached Palmyria, where they found some abandoned huts, but no inhabitants. They had but little provision with them, and it was, at first, feared they would starve to death. Among the passengers were several women and children, who were likely to suffer severely from hardship and exposure. Happily, however, an exploration of the island led to the discovery of good water. Cocoanuts, also, were found in abundance, and these, with birds, land crabs, and peppergrass, formed their diet. Six long weeks of weary waiting were passed, and they had begun to despair, when, on May 29, to their great delight, the Mariposa came in sight, took them all on board and carried them safely to Honolulu. Had any of those castaways neglected to go on board the Maraposa, when it came to their rescue, they would have been thought crazy; yet when men, shipwrecked of sin—moral castaways, in imminent danger of perishing, are invited on board the gospel ship and offered eternal salvation, comparatively few accept it. (Heb. 2: 3.)

An Aristocratic Young Shoeblack is Pursuing his occupation in Newark, N. J. A reporter in that town noticed recently a lad of sixteen, who, with two colored boys under his leadership, has set up a shoeblacking establishment in a shanty on one of the Newark streets. The boy's manner and educated talk led the reporter to believe that there was some mystery about him, and, on questioning the boy, he heard a strange story. The lad asserted that he was the son of a well-known political leader, who is at present Lieutenant-Governor of a Western State. The father wanted to send him to college, but the boy, who hated books, and was of a restless, roving disposition, shrank from that arrangement. Finally, being unable to change his father's mind, he ran away from home. He beat his way to Portland, Ore., and from there went to Omaha, where he got a blacking outfit. Since then, he says, he has made a living by blacking boots, and has been in Memphis, New Orleans, Atlanta, and all the larger Southern and Western cities, and in New York, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and Newark. Several times, he says, some of his father's friends have recognized him, and urged him to go home, but he is not ready to do so yet, because he thinks he has not yet seen enough of the world. The undutiful youngster has had many hardships, but they have not subdued his rebellious spirit. He is like those older wanderers with whom the voice of mercy pleads to return and be reconciled to their Heavenly Father, but who prefer the ways of the world, with its sins and miseries, to the delights of their Father's house. (Jer. 18: 11, 12.)

A Neglected Corpse Lay in the Grand Central depot, New York, nearly the whole of last week. It came from Pittsfield, Mass., in a common stained coffin on Monday night and was placed in the baggage room. No one came to claim it until Thursday, when a man called and said it was the body of his wife, and he was going to send it on to Philadelphia when he had obtained the necessary permit. He removed the address label from the box in which the coffin came, and also took away the trunk that accompanied the corpse. He did not return, however, and at length the Board of Health was notified and the corpse was sent to the Morgue. A clue to its identity was discovered there, and word was sent to Pittsfield. This brought some relatives of the deceased woman to New York, who took charge of the body and sent it on to Philadelphia to be interred in the family lot in the cemetery there. They said that they had furnished the money for embalming and burying the body, and had placed it in charge of the husband, whose neglect was probably due to his dissipated habits. His apparent indifference and negligence must have been painful to the friends, but, happily, his wife, who could she have known of it must have been sorely pained, was beyond reach of that affliction. It may be hoped that she had given her soul into Christ's keeping and if so, that being safe, the disrespect shown to her body would be a matter of no concern to her. (II Tim. 1: 12).

Two Lovers Were Unexpectedly Reunited in a hospital in Quebec recently. A despatch from Chicago to the New York Tribune states that in a suburb of that city a newly married couple have come to live whose history is a romance. The husband is the son of an Episcopal rector in Yorkshire, England, and he for a time was curate of the parish. Adjoining his home a landed proprietor, one Molineux, of French descent, lived. He was a Catholic. The young clergyman fell in love with Mr. Molineux's daughter and proposed for her hand, but the father drove him from the premises. The daughter was sent away where he could not find her. The young curate, heart-broken, gave up his work and came to America, obtaining a situation as book-keeper in a New York wholesale house. He was made travelling salesman. One day, while in Quebec, he was run down by a heavy omnibus, picked up and conveyed to a hospital. During his sickness, as much to his surprise as to his delight, he discovered that one of the Sisters of Charity in the hospital was none other than the girl he had loved in Yorkshire. Miss Molineux's parents had sent her to a convent in France, and from there she was transferred with other French nuns to Quebec. He renewed his suit, and she joyfully consented to marry him. As soon as he recovered, the marriage took place, and they have settled near Chicago. Thus the prize for which the young man longed came to him through misfortune. Had he not been run over by the omnibus he might never have found his bride. The man who has faith in God's providence ought never to count anything that happens to him an evil. God designs every event to be the means of good to His children. (Rom. 8: 28.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. C. H. Yatman, who has recovered from his long sickness, expects to commence daily meetings for young people at Ocean Grove, on July 1.

At the anniversary of the Upper Canada Bible Society the Rev. John Hall, D. D., was the chief attraction. The services were held in the Metropolitan Church, Toronto.

The Rev. Jackson Wray, London, England, has sent a cablegram to the congregation of Zion Church, Toronto, declining the call which was so cordially presented to him to become their pastor.

Rev. James Freeman Clarke, died on June 8, at his residence in Jamaica Plain, Boston. Dr. Clarke was critically ill about a year ago, but he partially recovered his health and resumed a part of his work.

Letters of inquiry in reference to Mr. Moody's Bible School for Y. M. C. A. members and associates, to be held at Northfield, June 30–July 15, should be addressed to C. K. Ober, 52 East Twenty-third Street, New York.

The centennial of colored Baptists of Georgia began in Savannah on June 6, and continued two weeks. Five thousand negro Baptists were present. At the opening of the celebration over 300 preachers were in attendanee.

A Prohibition meeting to ratify the nomination of General Clinton B. Fisk and Rev. John A. Brooks for President and Vice-President, will be held in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on June 22, at 8 P. M.

Mr. R. T. Booth has arrived at Sydney in excellent health, having completed his tour round the world. Speaking of his visit to England, he said he was surprised at the stability of his former work, especially at Sheffield and Newcastle.

Mr. Charles Cook reports that the past month's services in Hyde Park, London, have been crowned with much blessing, scores of persons having professed to have received Christ. His work at Dorking and in Ireland has also been very cheering.

A double wedding in the Garfield family took place at Mentor, June 14. Miss Mollie Garfield, only daughter of the late President, was married to her father's Secretary J. Stanley Brown. Harry Garfield, the eldest son, was married to Miss Belle Mason, of Cleveland, O.

An American lady in Russia writes regarding the persecution of Lutherans in the Baltic provinces, as follows: "Between sixty and seventy Lutheran clergymen have been arrested, and a part of this number have already received sentence of banishment to Siberia, while others are held to bail awaiting trial."

The Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Delaware has chosen for its bishop in succession to the late Rev. Alfred Lee, the Rev. Leighton Coleman, S. T. D., Rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Sayre, Penn. The Diocese of Fond Du Lac has elected the Rev. George McClellan Fiske, of Providence, R. I., its bishop, to succeed the late Bishop Brown.

The arrangements for the National Convention of Christian Endeavor Societies, to be held in Chicago, July 5–8, are now completed. Among the speakers announced are Rev. James H. Brookes, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., Professor, W. R. Harper, Mrs. G. R. Alden ("Pansy") and Miss Frances E. Willard. For further particulars, address U. S. C. E. 50 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. For terms address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

A MESSAGE TO SLAVES.

A New Sermon By Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And Moses spake so unto the children of Israel: but they hearkened not unto Moses for anguish of spirit, and for cruel bondage." Ex. 6:9.

The Importance of a Monosyllable—The Responsibility of a Messenger—The Message Moses Delivered—I. Salvation from Bondage—Spoke of God—Of the Covenant—Of God's Pity—Of His Coming Deliverance—II. The Message Rejected—Disappointment at First—Discomfort of Rebuilding a House—Poverty and Misery Producing Spiritual Indifference—John Newton's Wonderful Transformation—III. The Rejected Message True—A Notice in a Shop Window.

LITTLE words often contain great meanings. It is often the case with that monosyllable "so." In the present instance we must lay stress upon it and read the text thus, "Moses spake so unto the children of Israel." That is, he said what God told him to say. He did not invent his message. He did not think out the gospel that he had to carry to the people. He was simply a repeater of the divine message. As he received it, so he spake it. "Moses spake so unto the children of Israel." If he had not done so, the responsibility must have rested upon himself, whether the nation was moved by his words or not; but when he was saying only what God would have him say, his responsibility was limited. If he delivered the Lord's own word and it failed to win the heart of Israel, he could not be blamed. Although it was a great sadness of heart to him that the people did not, and even could not, receive the divine message, yet as far as he was concerned, his conscience was clear. It is ever so with the preacher of the gospel: if he declares the word of the Lord as he has received it, whether men will hear or whether they will forbear, he is clear before God, whatever his hearers may do or may not do.

Simply God's Ambassador,

When a man-servant goes to the door with a message from his master, if you do not like what he tells you, do not be angry with him. What has he to do with it? Has he said what his master told him to say? If he has, then be angry with his master if you must be, or accept what his master says if you think fit; but let the poor man that brought the message be held clear if he has faithfully reported his master's words. I claim that, if I have preached my Master's gospel, whether men are saved or lost, whether they accept it or reject it, I must leave that with themselves, and not have their sin laid at my door. How heartily do I cry to God that the Word may not be a savour of death unto death, but a savour of life unto life; but oh, my hearers, if you perish after hearing the gospel of God, do not think that you can cast the blame on me.

Now, the message Moses brought was rejected, and he knew

Why it Was Rejected.

He could see the reason. The people were in such bondage, they were so miserably ground down, they were so unhappy and hopeless, that what he spake seemed to them to be as idle words. There are hundreds of reasons why men reject the gospel. We will not go into them now. Oh that men were less cunning in making apologies for refusing the Lord Jesus!

Amongst all the reasons, however, that I ever heard, that with which I have the most sympathy, is this one—that some cannot receive Christ because they are so full of anguish, and are so crushed in spirit, that they cannot find strength enough of mind to entertain a hope that by any possibility salvation can come to them. It is to their sad case that I desire to speak. I think that I can speak to the case, if God help me, for I have felt the same. I do remember when I could not believe even Jesus Himself by reason of sore anguish and straitness of spirit; and, therefore, as one who has worn the chains, I speak to those who are still in chains. I know the clanking of those fetters, and what it is to feel the damp of the stone walls, and to fear that there is no coming out of prison, and to be so despairing that even when the emancipator turned the great key in the lock, and set the door wide open, yet still my heart had made for itself a direr cage, and I could not believe in the possibility of liberty, and therefore I sat bound in a dungeon of my own creation. Ah! there is no Bastille so awful as that which is built by despair, and kept under the custody of a crushed spirit. Many are the desponding ones whose eyes fail so that they cannot look up, or look out. To such I speak.

I. And first, will you notice that what Moses brought to these people was glad tidings. It was a free and full gospel message. To them it was the gospel of the gospel of hope, the gospel of glorious promise. It is a very admirable type and metaphorical description of what the gospel is to us. Moses' word to them was singularly clear, cheering, and comforting; but they could not receive it. "They hearkened not unto Moses for anguish of spirit and cruel bondage."

Salvation from a Cruel Bondage,

First, Moses spoke to them about their God. He said, "You have a God, and His name is Jehovah, the God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob." They looked up from their bricks, and they seemed to say, "God? What have we to do with Him? Oh, that the straw were given us to make our bricks! we are up to our necks in this filthy Nile mud making the bricks, and you come and talk to us about God. Go, and preach to Pharaoh and the taskmasters that rule us; but as for us poor creatures slaves that we are, we do not understand you. What do you mean by JAH, Jehovah, our God? Bring us more garlic and onions, or lessen our daily tasks, or take away the sticks from our drivers, and then we will listen to you." And so they shook their heads, and said that such mysteries and theologies were not for them.

What a poor reason for refusing light because the night is so dark! Man's best hope lies in His God. O you whose lives are bitter with toil and want, there is something for you after all, much better than the hard saying, "What shall we eat, and what shall we drink?" There is an inheritance above of every-day life. There is a portion much better than this killing care, which frets so many of you, and makes life a calamity to you. Do not, therefore, because of the heaviness of your lot, refuse to hear about God, your Maker, your Benefactor. In that direction lies your only real hope. Have this God for a father and a friend, and life will wear another aspect, and you will be another man.

The Grinding Toil

So Moses went on to speak yet more about God's pity to them. He reported that Jehovah had said, "I have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel whom the Egyptians keep in bondage, and I have remembered My covenant." I fancy that those words opened their eyes a little. They looked up and said to one another, "Is there, indeed a God who has heard our groanings? Oh, but," they muttered, "look at the many years we have been groaning. Why, it is forty years since this man Moses first came out and saw our burdens! What is the use of pity that is so Tardy in its Movements?"

And yet, dear sirs, if you are inclined to talk so, it may be that if God be slow He is sure; and if He be slow to you, it is out of patience and long-suffering to others. He knows best when and how to save His people. Remember that when the tale of bricks was doubled then Moses came; and when you are getting to your very worst, and your night is darkening into a sort of hellish midnight, it may be that your darkness is coming to an end.

And then Moses went on further with his blessed gospel message to tell them about the Lord's resolve to rescue them by a great redemption. The Lord had said, "I am Jehovah, and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage." Do you notice that all along the Lord uses strong words, and speaks like a great king? "I am Jehovah. I will. I will. I will." When you go home, just notice what a number of "I wills" there are in this declaration of the great God. When God says, "I will," he means it; depend upon it. God means to save you. Poor, troubled, confessedly guilty sinner, believe in Jesus Christ the Son of God, and trust yourself with Him, and the Lord will save you.

He Will Deliver You

from all the guilt of your past life, the evil habits of your present life, and from the temptations of your future life.

Moses told them about the Lord's ways of grace and the inheritance which He had prepared for them. My message is after the same sort. God will take you, poor guilty ones, to be His children. He will promote you to be His willing servants. He will use you for His glory though now you dishonor His name. He will sanctify you and cleanse you, and He will bring you to heaven, even you who have lien among the pots and have been defiled in the brick-kilns of sin. He will never rest till He makes you sit upon his throne with Him, where He is glorified, world without end. This I speak to you who are in bondage. Believe you in Christ Jesus, and He who has come to save the lost will give you as clear and clean a deliverance from the power of sin as Jehovah gave Israel deliverance from the power of the Egyptian tyrant. He will bring you out of bondage and guide you through the wilderness till you come into the rest, even to a goodlier land than Canaan, though it flowed with milk and honey.

II. We come now to note, that it was caused by anguish of heart. The message was from the Lord, and it was full of hope for them, but they were too much broken down to receive it. We can quite understand what that meant. Let us look into the case. They could not now receive this gospel because they had at first caught at it, and had been disappointed. They were under a misapprehension, for they expected to be free at once, as soon as Moses went to Pharaoh; and as they did not get immediate relief, they fell back into sullen despair. When Moses came to them and said that God had appeared to him at the bush, and had sent him to deliver them, they bowed their heads, and worshipped. Great things they looked for on the morrow, for they were at the end of their patience; but after that when Moses went in unto Pharaoh, and the tyrant doubled their labor by denying them straw, then they could not believe in God or in his messenger. The man who judges with shortness and straitness of judgment, demands a remedy that will cure his soul of all evils on the spot, and if it does not evidently and immediately do this, he cries, "Away with it!"

Received With Unbelief

Grace may truly and effectually come to a heart, and for a while cause no joy, no peace; but the reverse. I have known many a man coming to this Tabernacle, who has been prospering in business, and so on, and yet he has been going down to hell as fast as ever he could travel. Well, he has come and heard the gospel, and he has made a great many improvements in his conduct, and has become a regular and attentive hearer; and at that very time he has fallen into an affliction the like of which he had never experienced before; and he has consequently complained, "Why, I am Worse Instead of Better.

I find my heart grows more rebellious against God than ever it was before." I do not wonder that it should be so, for I have seen so many examples of it. The discipline of the household of God begins very early. But a present increase of sorrow has nothing to do with what the main result will be, except that it works towards it in a mysterious manner. Perhaps what you at first thought was genuine faith, was not faith; and God is going to knock down the false before He builds up the true.

If you had an old house, and any friend of yours were to say, "John, I will build you a new house. When shall I begin?" "Oh!" you might say, "begin next week to build the new house." At the end of the week he has pulled half your old house down. "Oh," say you, "this is what you call building me a new house, is it? You are causing me great loss; I wish I had never consented to your proposal." He replies, "You are most unreasonable: how am I to build you a new house on this spot without taking the old one down?" And so it often happens that the grace of God does seem in its first work to make a man even worse than he was before, because it discovers to him sins which he did not know to be there, evils which had been concealed, dangers never dreamed of. Thus the work of grace even makes his bondage seem to be heavier than ever it was; and yet this is all done in wisdom, in love, and in fulfillment of the promise which God has given. The work of deliverance began very grimly, but it ended very gloriously.

The inability of Israel to believe the message of Moses arose also from the fact that by heavy oppression: the mere struggle to exist exhausted all their energy, and destroyed all their hope. The extreme hardness of their lot made them despondent and sullen. I do not wonder that a great many are unable to receive the gospel in this city of ours, because their struggle for existence is awful. I am afraid that it gets more and more intense, though even now it passes all bounds. If any of you can do anything to help the toil-worn workers, I pray you do it. The poor workwoman, who sits so many hours with the candle and needle, and does not earn enough, when she has worked all those hours, to more than just pay the rent and keep body and soul together, do you wonder that she thinks that this gospel of ours cannot be for her, and does not care to listen to it? I know that it would be her comfort, but her soul refuseth to be comforted, she is so crushed. The dock laborer, who comes home five days out of the six having earned nothing, and hears his little children crying for bread—is it any wonder that he cannot hear about heavenly things?

They were Earthbound

It is all very easy to say that it ought not to be so; but it is so; and it is so with multitudes in London. And yet, dear friend—if such a one has come in here to-night—I pray you do not throw away the next world because you have so little of this. This is sheer folly. If I have little here, I would make sure of the more hereafter. If you have such a struggle for existence here, you should seek that higher, nobler, better life, which would give you, even in penury and want, a joy and a comfort to which you are a stranger now. May the Holy Ghost come upon you, and raise you out of this present evil world into newness of life in Christ Jesus!

But worst of all, there are some who seem as if they could not lay hold on Christ because their sense of sin has become so intolerable, and the wretchedness which follows upon conviction has become so fearful, that they have grown almost to be contentedly despairing. I hardly know any condition of mind that is worse than when, at last, that which seemed alarming enough to drive to madness settles down into a lifeless, sullen moroseness. These Israelites had at last sunk so low that they said, "Let us alone, that we may serve the Egyptians." Oh, it is a dreadful thing when a heart gets to that—when a man desires that Christ would depart from him, and let him alone to perish. Do not some men virtually say, "I know I am lost. Let me enjoy myself as well as I can; I cannot—I cannot enjoy sin; but don't vex my conscience. Do not worry me with your talk here, for I shall suffer enough hereafter. Do not tantalize me about saving faith, for I shall never believe. Do not begin talking to me about repentance. I shall never have a soft and tender heart; I know I never shall." A man who has begun to be numbed with cold, cries to his comrades, "Leave me to sleep myself to death"; and thus do despairing ones ask to be left in their misery. Dear soul, we cannot, we dare not, desert you.

Chronic Despair,

I will tell you what you shall do; do give me a hearing. In the name of God, believe that there is hope yet—that even now Christ Jesus invites men, and especially such as you, to put their trust in Him. O, you who are burdened with sin, He calls you to let Him be your Saviour. If there is a man in the world He died for, you are the man. If there is one man here that is worse than any other, more sad, more sick, more sorry, more despairing, than another, my Lord Jesus Christ, who is here, has come to meet with such a one. Oh troubled heart, Jesus has come to seek and to save you! Did you never hear on the coast of Africa? He had got himself into such a state by his sins, his drunkenness, his vice, that at last he was left on the coast of Africa, and virtually became a slave. Did John Newton dream, when he wandered up and down with a hungry belly, full of fever, and at death's door, that the day would come when he would be the companion and dear friend of Cowper, and when the church of St. Mary Woolnoth, over there in the city, would be crowded every time he stood up to preach of free grace and dying love? He did not think it, but it was so predestined. Something equally gracious may be ordained for you.

The Story of John Newton,

III. I have many more things to say, but I might weary you with them rather than bless you. The message was at first not received by Israel by reason of their anguish, but it was

True for all That,

and the Lord made it so. What did the Lord do when He found that these people did not hearken to Moses for anguish of spirit, and for cruel bondage? What did the Lord do? He was not going to give them up because of their wretched condition. He had said, "I will bring them out," and he meant to do it. The first thing the Lord did to prove His persevering grace was to commission Moses again. (Ex. 6: 1; 7: 2.) So the Lord God, in everlasting mercy, says to His minister, "Again proclaim My grace." It seems a terrible thing to have to pour our souls into deaf ears. Yet I shall not give it up, for I have done it with some here for nearly thirty-three years, and I may as well go on. Why should I lose so much labor? I will try again, like Peter, who, after toiling all night and taking nothing, yet let down the net at the Lord's bidding. One of these days those dead ears will be made to live.

It is a grand point when the Lord lays the conversion of men on the hearts of His ministers, and makes them feel that They Must Win Souls.

Moses was bound to bring out Israel. God has issued His royal decree, and be you sure it will stand. I believe that God is saying to His church, "You have to do it. You have to gather out mine elect out of every nation under heaven." To the church in London He says, "Bring this people out of the bondage of sin." "Oh," says one man, who lives down some street near this place, "Sir, I can hardly live in this street. It teems with ill-living women." You have to save them. Passing a little shop as I did the other day, I saw written up in the window, "If any poor girl that wishes to lead a better life will only step inside she will find a friend. That is one of our dear members. I felt so pleased as I saw it. I should like to see such a notice in a great many windows. I would like to see you live among the wicked, and put up in your windows, "If anybody wants a friend, there is one inside. Come in." You are called to save them! They must not be lost.

Somebody says, "What are you talking about, Mr. Spurgeon? We cannot save them." I am talking as God said, when He told Moses and Aaron that He gave them a charge to bring His people out of Egypt. They could not do it, but yet they did it. Anyone can do what He can do, but it is only God's servant that can do what he cannot do. We, my brethren, are called to perform the impossible; we are to be familiar with miracles. To the eye of reason there is no use in preaching to men dead in sin. I freely admit that; but if it is a commission from God, then it is not ours to raise questions, but to do as we are bidden. Oh that He may give us grace to tell out the gospel, and to keep on doing it till He has brought His own elect out of the bondage of sin and Satan, and saved them with an everlasting salvation! The Lord bless you for His name's sake, Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

THE BASTINADO.*

WHILE in Egypt, Dr. Lansing visited the sugar plantations of Mustapha Pasha. While talking to Markus a Copt, who had bought a number of books, and to whom Dr. Lansing was anxious to sell a Bible, the missionary's attention was attracted by a cry of distress, and on looking out of the window to learn the cause, he beheld for the first time, the judicial administration of the bastinado. A number of the night watch on one of the cane plantations had gone to sleep at their posts, and were being punished therefor. The sentence was carried out in the presence of the judge, in front of the village café. Each man stepped forward in turn, and apparently without reluctance, and, lying down on his face, raised the soles of his feet. Two men sitting on the ground, one on each side of the culprit, firmly grasped his extended hands, and then placed their feet against his sides. Two others, likewise sitting on opposite sides of his knees, held his feet in place by means of a stick about four feet long, with a noose in the middle, which was wound around the ancles, they also steadying themselves by placing their feet against his sides, so that he was held as if in a vice. The torturers were two strong men, who had their flowing sleeves tied up so as to give their arms free play, and the instrument of torture was a koorbash, which is a heavy whip, much like our cowhide, about five feet long and made of hippopotamus skin. Each man struck the foot of the culprit. The whip was raised high in air, and came heavily down with a crash that reminded the missionary of our old-fashioned threshing with flails. The number of strokes was twenty-five. Some, whose hardened feet did not seem to suffer so much, received a few more; others, who squirmed very much and besought the Effendi very piteously for mercy, were let off with less. Most of them did not move, and when they rose, after limping a few steps, put on their shoes, and walked off as if nothing had happened.

An Escape from Darfurians.

During the afternoon, Dr. Lansing, while taking a stroll through the town, met with an adventure which came very near terminating his missionary career. Passing near a large factory, he observed in the yard some strange-looking black fellows, quite different from the tawny or dusty brown Copts and Arabians. On stepping in to look about, he found himself surrounded by twenty or thirty of them, violently gesticulating and vociferating, and evidently bent on mischief. One huge, ferocious fellow was on the point of striking, when the missionary sternly demanded to be let alone. Another then asked him what he wanted, and Dr. Lansing replied, "Nothing; I only walked in to look about me." The fellow at once, with no gentle

* From "Light in Darkness," or Missions and Missionary Heroes, by Rev. J. E. Godbey, D. D., and A. H. Godbey, A. M. An illustrated work on foreign missions in all quarters of the globe. 764 Pages. Sold by Subscription only. Published by Holloway & Company, St. Louis, and San Francisco.

Mgr. Bouland, the Converted R. C. Bishop.

The Promenade in Havana, Cuba.

grasp, laid hold of him, offering to show him about; but the doctor did not relish such friendliness; and on observing some others closing the huge gate, he wrested himself free, and walked out as fast as dignity would permit. On inquiring of a man whom he met, who the black fellows were, he was told that they were savage Darfurians, who had been brought from their native land to be trained as soldiers, and were detained at Esneh to be partially acclimatized. The man added, without knowing anything of Dr. Lansing's adventure, "They kill people when they can get them inside."

A Maronite Martyr.

Asaad El Shidiak, a talented Maronite priest, was employed to reply to the teachings of the missionaries in Syria, and began his preparations for the work by a course of research. While so engaged, the truth dawned upon him, and he became an advocate of the religion he had attacked. This drew upon him persecution, threats of excommunication, and twenty members of his family assembled to carry him by force to the Patriarch, his second elder brother being the leader. Asaad's expostulations and his mother's tears were alike in vain. He was taken to the convent of Alma and afterward to Canobeen. The place where he was destined to wear out the remainder of his days was one of the wildest and least accessible recesses of Lebanon. On his arrival there he was subjected by the order of the Patriarch to the most cruel treatment. With a heavy chain around his neck, the other end of which was attached to the wall, he had to lie on the bare floor. When he died, or how, is not definitely known. When Ibrahim Pasha captured Acre, Mr. Tod, an English merchant, procured from him ten soldiers, and searched the convent, but Asaad could not be found. The Patriarch asserted that he had been dead two years, but though this was doubted, nothing reliable could be learned.

MGR. LEON BOULAND.

(See Portrait.)

THE remarkable letter sent to the Pope by the distinguished ecclesiastic, whose portrait appears on this page, will win for him the respect of all Protestants. Though so highly placed in the Romish Church he has voluntarily severed himself from her communion on conscientious grounds. He wrote: "My decision to withdraw from the Roman Church is not a thought of recent origin. It is the mature result of convictions forced upon me during my travels in both hemispheres, and of my study for ten years of the chief religious and social questions which agitate our time—questions to which the Christian fathers furnish solutions wholly at variance with the Syllabus, and the policy of the Ultramontane Court."

Leon Bouland is about forty years of age. He is a Frenchman, and a graduate, with the highest honors, of the University of Paris. His studies for the priesthood were carried on under the personal direction of Cardinal Lavigerie, Archbishop of Algiers and Primate of Africa. In 1881 Monsignor Bouland received the honorary appointment of Canon of St. Michael the Archangel, Rome; and in 1882, that of President-General of the Society of the "Avocats de St. Pierre" in North America. The same year he was made a member of the "Academie des Arcades" in Rome; Canon of the Metropolitan Church of Rheims; Commander of the Order of the Holy Sepulchre; and Private Chamberlain to Pope Leo XIII. In June, 1886, Monsignor Bouland was also appointed by the Pope General Director of the organization in North America of the Society of St. Peter's Pence. He first visited this country in 1875 for the purpose of writing a history of the French in North America, a work now nearly completed.

While preparing his book for the press Monsignor Bouland has occupied himself with the charge of a French Roman Catholic church at Central Falls, R. I., and with the founding of another French church in Boston.

THE PROMENADE IN CUBA.

(See Illustration.)

THE Queen of the Antilles, as the island of Cuba is called, has an estimated population of about a million and a half, of whom the whites, including the coolies, number about 800,000. It has an area of 43,000 square miles, which is about the size of the State of Virginia. Its climate is one perpetual summer, of which August and September are the hottest months. In the lovely uplands of the south alone are those two months tolerable. In the low-lying districts the yellow fever scourge is then fearfully active, and annually carrries off its large percentage of victims. The iliustration on this page represents the promenade in Havana, the capital, which is almost the only amusement at the command of the Cuban ladies. The strange, awkward-looking vehicles appear early in the day, and, as the sun grows hot, they disappear, and the ladies resume their monotonous life within doors. The men do not often join in these promenades. Their time is divided between their offices and the numerous cafés and restaurants, which are declared to be the most sumptuous in the world. Religious life in Cuba is at the lowest ebb. Nominally, it is Roman Catholic, but, especially among the males, practical Atheism is the rule.

FRED HOLDEN'S DEFALCATION.

(See Illustration on page 397.)

Two men were seated in the smoking-room of a hotel, in a large city, one dull, drizzly January afternoon. The one whose name was Frederick Holden was a middle-aged man, dressed somewhat expensively, but in excellent taste. His companion, Alfred Willett, was much more homely in appearance; evidently not a city man, judging by the provincial cut of his clothes and his quieter, more sluggish manner. They smoked for some time in silence, or talking on impersonal matters; but as the last of the other occupants of the room rose and went out, they drew their chairs near together.

"Now, then, Fred," said Willett, "what did you mean in your telegram? What is the urgent matter that you wanted me to decide for you?"

"Well, Alf," said Holden, "I have no real friend besides you, and I want you to advise me in the worst strait a man can be in. I am in a desperate fix, and I do not know which way out of it involves the least risk."

"I am sorry to hear that," said Willett; "as a general principle, however, I do not think it is best to look at a difficulty from that standpoint. When a man is cornered, I believe he ought to ask what is the right course, and not trouble himself about the risk. However, let me hear what the trouble is."

"Well it is money trouble of the worst kind. You remember that five years ago, when I was married, marriage seemed to be the most desirable thing on all hands. Daisy's father was dead, and she had decided to seek a situation as governess. I was earning enough as confidential clerk to support us comfortably, though living alone I was spending the greater part of my salary. If I had possessed about five or six hundred dollars to furnish a home, we might be married immediately. Daisy would be spared the humiliation of earning a livelihood, and I should be better and happier in married life. The advantages were undeniable, but then I did not possess the requisite five hundred dollars, and I fretted considerably over that miserable deficiency. Finally I could bear it no longer, and as I had a large sum belonging to the company always passing through my hands, I concluded to borrow what I needed, and repay it gradually out of my salary. It was easily done, but to repay it was difficult. We had many expenses at first, Daisy's sickness and my own, and then the children came. The first three years the salary did not cover expenses, and the ice being broken, I borrowed more money to make up the deficiency. So it has gone on, until now my shortage is fully two thousand dollars."

Willett raised his hands in horror. "I hoped you were going to say it still stood at five hundred. I would have made an effort to let you have that, but two thousand is hopeless."

"Thank you, old man," said Holden, "I knew I could count on your good will, but I did not expect you could lift me out of this. The worst feature of the affair is that discovery is inevitable. There is a new element in the Board of Directors. Two or three of them are troubled with conscientious scruples about their duty, and there is to be a thorough audit next week; I shall have to show that my balance is correct to a cent. Now what am I to do?"

"Oh, you can have no doubt of that. You should confess the whole case; tell the Directors the circumstances, and offer, if they will forgive you and retain you in office, to work on half pay till the shortage is repaid."

"Ah! there your country training leads you astray. No director would do that. He dare not, in view of what would be said if the thing leaked out. No, I should be dismissed without a character; Daisy would break her heart, and we should all starve. No that would not do. What is generally done, is for the clerk to seize all he can lay his hands upon, and make tracks for Canada, sending for his family afterward."

Holden's Last Letter.

"I would rather die than do that, Fred," said Willett; "you would never be happy again. Your conscience would torment you continually. No; be persuaded; do the right thing, whatever the consequence may be. Make your peace with God by repentance and entreat His forgiveness through Christ, and He will see you through, somehow. You may have to suffer; sin involves that, but you will be supported."

"Frankly," said Holden, "I have not the courage to confess. I know what the result would be. Is there nothing else you can think of? Do you know any one who would advance the two thousand dollars?"

Willett shook his head. "No, my dear boy," he said, "there is only the one course open to you. Depend upon it, any other will involve you in deeper sin and misery."

Holden was not convinced. The other way was so much smarter and had so often succeeded. He sighed heavily, and the two friend separated never to meet again on earth. Many years afterward Willett heard the end of his friend's tragic story. An unfinished letter in Holden's hand came to him enclosed in one from Mrs. Holden. In his own letter Holden said that the money he took with him to Canada, as he decided, had been lost within a year. That despairing of earning a living there, he had gone to England, only to meet with new disappointment. He was then in utter destitution, living in a wretched garret, earning a scanty subsistence by copying law documents. "I wish," he wrote, "I had taken your advice. I have found it true that the way of transgressors is hard." The letter ended there, and Mrs. Holden wrote that she found him dead in his chair, his head resting on his arm, the pen still in his hand, and the unfinished letter before him on his desk. His last words were those written to his friend.

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE.

A NEW SERIAL STORY.

By Rev. L. S. Keyser.

(Continued from page 382.)

WHEN the third summer vacation was over the two students were back again in their old college haunts shaking hands with the friends who had returned, like themselves, to their academical duties At the close of the first day of the session, George and Hadley sat in their old study, talking in a desultory fashion.

"By the by, George," said Hadley at length, "did you notice that we have a new accession to our class this term?"

Dane gave vent to a sarcastic snort, as he replied, "Oh, yes, I saw him, and I amused myself by fixing the category he belongs to."

"Well, in what sort of a gauge did you succeed in putting him?"

"He is rather a priggish, starchy character, and his mental diamond is not of the first water. Forehead too smooth and narrow. No danger that he will snatch the honors from us. Rather handsome, though, and may be a ladies' man."

"You are quite an analyst. But did you learn anything about him?"

"I played the part of Paul Pry, I acknowledge, and learned that he studied under a private tutor before he came here, and has passed a creditable examination for admission to the Senior Class. And more than that, thanks to my inquisitive proclivites, I have found out that he is designed for the ministry."

"Wh-e-e-w!" whistled Hadley, intensely interested in these facts. "There is some fun in store for us at last. This embyro parson will make a splendid target for our wads of humor. We shall see how much of an expert he is at intellectual fencing. If you have gauged him correctly, we need not be afraid of discomfiture. Of course, we might know that he is not a man of much calibre, or he never would have chosen the ministry as his profession. No one with a sound, healthy brain would throw away his manhood and his prospects in life for a useless and puerile vocation like that."

"Hold, there!" interfered Dane, "let us be fair. Dr. Hartridge, President of the College, is a preacher—a D. D., you know—and I understand that he served a number of congregations very acceptably before he was hoisted to his present position. So is Dr. Battinger, our Professor of Latin, a clergyman, and yet you think him the most brainy man of the Faculty."

"Yes that is so," Hadley admitted. "They are shining examples of able men in the pulpit; but you must remember that they have abandoned the profession now, and you may depend that their present occupation is much more congenial. It is not unlikely that they were glad to find a way of escape from regular preaching that did not necessitate a confession of change of view."

"Still, they were able men, and I should think as young men as they were, to use your reprehensible slang, brainy men and they chose the profession of the ministry, so we must not be too hasty in concluding that the same choice in another young man is a clear proof of semi-imbecility. I base my opinion of the new student on more philosophical grounds."

"Well we shall see how he acts: I think we shall have some fun with him."

The fun commenced not many days afterward. In some colleges it might have begun earlier; but in the Grand Central hazing was not permitted. There are methods, however, of trying a man's power of self-control quite as severe as the rough horse-play of hazing. An insult, a withering sarcasm, a brutal taunt, may goad into fury a man who could bear physical pain with the endurance and unruffled composure of an Indian. Harrison Duneman, the new student, was a man peculiarly susceptible to such treatment. He was a dull man, whose strong animal nature was proof against pain, but whose mental nature was weak and undisciplined. He was morbidly sensitive to slights, as most dull men are, and had none of the nobleness of spirit which can bear to see another's superiority recognized by society. Conscious of mental power, and proud too of acquirements which his sluggish nature had gained only by severe labor, it mortified him when a company which had been bored by his serious remarks was charmed by the light jests of some witty humorist. He could not forgive a man who so eclipsed him, and he hated with vindictive hatred a man who made him the butt of his raillery. Duneman took life seriously, and a good-humored joke to which he could find no repartee stung him like a blow. It was a cruel fate that threw him into rivalry with Madelling and Dane, who, having none of the instincts of good breeding, which keep a true gentleman from wantonly hurting the feelings of another, had no compunction about wounding him wherever he might be vulnerable.

It was in the class-room of the Professor of mathematics that the campaign opened. A difficult problem was submitted, and Duneman, with some show of confidence, undertook its solution on the black-board. He worked rapidly and without hesitation for some minutes, to the surprise of some members of the class who had confessed their inability to solve it. But then his hand wavered; he had lost the thread of calculation, and stood before the board in evident embarrassment. An audible titter went through the class, in which Duneman would have joined if he had been less conceited or more self-possessed.

Madelling was then called upon to essay the solution of the problem. Mathematics had long been his favorite study, and he was perfectly familiar with the problem in hand. He saw where Duneman had gone astray, and with easy celerity the figures were displayed on the board and the correct result underscored with a flourish. Hearty applause broke out on all hands except from Duneman, who stood glaring at the board, the prey of chagrin and mortification. Hadley glanced at him, saw his suffering, and with a spirit of wicked mischief took up the crayon again and wrote at the foot of the black-board: "For the benefit of the unevolved Parson." It was a cruel blow, applied with the dexterity of the Dublin hackney coachman who prided himself on his ability to rouse his beast to a gallop by applying his whip to "a raw." The class, however, thought it witty and burst into loud laughter. Duneman winced, his face flushed, and he turned angrily on his tormentor. But the words would not come, and he gnashed his teeth in impotent rage. Finally he turned to the Professor and said: "Am I to be insulted by a country bumpkin? The sacred calling I have chosen has nothing to do with this matter, and it ought to be protected from coarse, boorish, and sacrilegious indignities."

It was Hadley's turn now to lose temper. The reference to his rusticity brought the blood to his face and showed that he too had "a raw." It was a gratuitous insult, like his own, and the tormentor who had felt no compunction at giving pain, quivered from head to foot when he received punishment in kind. He advanced with clenched hand as if to strike. By a violent effort, he controlled himself sufficiently to allow his partly lifted hand to fall by his side, and then the two angry students stood glaring at each other. At length Hadley hurled out from between his teeth a speech of vulgar abuse, which he afterward thought of with shame. He said: "You show more of the spirit of a wild-cat than of a man! I suppose that you are cultivating yourself for the pursuit of your 'sacred calling,' as you term it. Like most of your set, you have the spirit that built the inquisitorial fires in the Dark Ages. It is a pity that you can't take a joke, but must bristle up like a hyena! A pretty specimen of a pulpit exhorter, you are!"

"Gentlemen, gentlemen," interposed the Professor, with as much seriousness as he could command under the circumstances, "be seated, and do not quarrel over a harmless joke."

The class tittered.

"I do not think it a joke," said Duneman. "The fellow meant to insult me"; but he obeyed the Professor by taking his seat.

The class tittered louder.

"And I am persuaded that he is too much of a torpedo to make a good parson," put in Hadley, sarcastically.

The class broke into a loud guffaw.

"I insist that this interchange of words be stopped at once," broke in the Professor, sternly, and all knew that he meant what he said. "Gentlemen, I regret that this undignified passage has taken place in my recitation-room, and hope that such an offence against decorum will not be repeated. Since it is your first offence, I will not report you to the President, but a repetition of the scene shall be summarily dealt with. The class is excused."

Hadley walked sullenly to his room in company with his friend Dane, who was still laughing over the encounter and was amused as much by his friend's tragic mood.

"What is it that is so ludicrous?" Hadley asked, "I see nothing to laugh at. The fellow is a regular porcupine. Don't you think he disgraced himself?"

"Oh! there was not much difference between you, I think," said Dane; "you called each other names, that was all. You began it, you know, and I thought you were going to hit him. I am glad you stopped in time. It was grand, though, to see you both there on exhibition like a couple of wild beasts. Oh, Oh!" and Dane went off into another explosion of laughter.

"Well you are not very sympathetic," said Hadley. "I should have thought my friend would have resented such an insult to me. A country bumpkin indeed!"

"Oh! there is no need for me to take up the cudgels; you showed yourself fully a match for our clerical friend. You forgot, I suppose, when you began throwing stones that you live in a glass-house. Well, well get the panes replaced and think no more about it."

Repairs, however, were not easily made on either side. The dislike engendered between the two students increased rather than diminished. Duneman, too, having discovered that Madelling held sceptical opinions, came to regard the quarrel as in a sense a religious dispute and to regard himself as a martyr suffering for conscience sake. He spoke of Madelling as "the infidel student," and it was not difficult in a community of the kind in which they lived to arouse a prejudice against him on that ground. He began to meditate on plans for humiliating him, and with Jesuitical spirit to think that it did not much matter whether the means employed were quite honorable, so desirable did it seem that the enemy of religion should be put to shame. So on each side the enmity between them grew and intensified.

In the mean time other events of importance were occurring. It was thought advisable by the college authorities to give the undergraduates an opportunity for frequent practice in public speaking. Besides many special days and anniversaries, when speaking was in order, every third Saturaday forenoon was devoted to the reading of essays and the delivery of orations by the young men and women of the college. The exercises were held in what was called "Chapel Hall," which, although a large, commodious room, was almost invariably filled to overflowing by an interested audience. In this way the young aspirants for literary or oratorical distinction had excellent opportunities for the exercise and display of their budding talents, and it must be confessed that many of the productions delivered there were above a mediocre quality. There was the embryonic promise of the future essayist, poet, lawyer, or legislator.

On the first Saturday morning devoted to these exercises after the beginning of the new session, there was a general rush for Chapel Hall. Our two friends, Hadley and George, sat together as usual, on one of the seats occupied by the Senior class. The hum of conversation was heard through the hall before the exercises began. Suddenly Hadley's attention was arrested by the entrance of a young lady, through the doorway at the side of the room, whose appearance impressed him.

"Do you see that young lady?" he whispered to Dane. "The one just entering the door."

The young men watched her, as she stepped up the aisle along the wall, and then turning, found a seat near them, a little in front and to their right. Courtesy would not allow them more than a brief occasional glance at her, but those furtive glances were sufficient to convince them that she was a fascinating girl, with dark-blue eyes, and pearly, slightly pale cheeks. Yet there was an element of hauteur and imperiousness in her bearing, and a kind of reckless abandon characterized the toss of her head, as if she cared very little for the good or bad opinion of others, and as if her thinking was carried on with entire independence.

"Mr. Analyst," said Hadley, touching his friend's arm, "there is another specimen upon whom to exercise your critical faculty. What is your opinion of that young lady, eh?"

Dane scrutinized her closely for a few minutes before he answered.

"She is certainly very beautiful," he said, "and appears to be intellectual. No doubt she is a cultivated girl, and there is something charming about her apparently easy and careless carriage. She is a girl, too, who will not swallow every kind of teaching she hears. You can read her independence in her physiognomy, and in every movement of her graceful head. Yet I cannot say that my admiration of her is unqualified. I am afraid that she is too haughty and too indifferent to public opinion, and probably a little 'strong-minded' for a woman. She reminds me of a certain forward female I once met, who was an arrant scoffer at religion, and I could not help but feel that such raillery came with an ill grace from her lips. It seemed so out of harmony with that modest femininity which is the peculiar heritage of woman. I wouldn't be surprised to learn that this girl entertains some opinions not in accord with reigning ideas, and that she has the courage to assert them. Nevertheless, I confess that I admire her blonde beauty."

"Well, you have characterized her very happily," returned Hadley. "You have put in apt phrases what I had indefinitely in my mind It remains to be seen whether your analysis is correct."

During the progress of the exercises, Hadley divided his attention about equally between them and the young lady who had arrested his attention. While some well-digested and thoughtful production was being delivered, he noticed that she was an attentive and appreciative listener; but when the performance was crude and puerile, she could not conceal her impatience. A frown of displeasure would contract her brow and her eyes would wander restlessly over the audience.

"She has no patience with immature thought," reflected Hadley. "Evidently she is a thinker herself. At any rate, she has gotten beyond the crude state. The question is, where does she belong? I shall start out on a voyage of discovery as soon as the exercises are over."

No sooner was the last speech delivered and the audience dismissed, than Hadley proceeded to put his resolve into execution; but his inquiries only proved that his fellow-students were as ignorant of the girl's name and whereabouts as he was himself. It appeared that she was a stranger. Not many of the young men of the class had observed her in the crowd, and none of them could give him a clue. But Hadley was a resolute young man, and he was not to be thwarted easily.

"Tell you what, Dane," he said, taking his friend's arm, "I have a plan by which we may ferret out her hiding-place. Come along, let us follow her—accidentally, of course—until we find out where she lives."

In the crowd passing down the stairs to the ground floor they had some difficulty in keeping the girl in the range of their vision, but by dint of considerable effort they got closer to her, and then, assuming a careless manner, which one of them at least did not feel, they sauntered along in the crowd a few paces in her rear. As the people dispersed to the right and left, the young men had to be more careful lest their surreptitious pursuit should be discovered. The young lady, accompanied by a friend, continued her walk along Main Street through the heart of the town, and by the time she had reached the suburbs beyond, there were very few persons besides herself upon the sidewalk. Presently she turned aside, opened the gate in front of an elegant residence, surrounded by tall poplars and maples, and waving her friend adieu, she stepped lightly up the stone walk and entered the house with that familiar freedom which says, "This is my home."

(To be Continued.)

GOD'S COVENANT WITH ISRAEL.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for July 1, Exodus 24 : 1-12. Golden Text, Heb 8 : 10

Moses Called Up to the Mount—The Old and the New Dispensations—The Vow of the People—The Signification of the Offering—Something Lacking—Power Given Through Christ—Moses Supernaturally Sustained—The Indispensable Element of Worship—The Plan of the Tabernacle Imparted—Its Types—The Emblematic Stones—The Anointing of the Priests.

THE children of Israel were still in the Wilderness of Sinai. The law had been spoken to them from the mountain by the voice of God, with attendant circumstances which were calculated to inspire awe and terror, so that they had said to Moses. "Speak thou with us, and we will hear; but let not God speak with us lest we die." (Ex. 20: 19.) "And Moses drew near unto the thick darkness where God was." It was darkness to the people, but it was light to Moses. It was there that the directions and promises of the next three chapters were given. And then God said to Moses: "Come up unto the Lord, thou, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel; and worship ye and Moses alone shall come near the Lord; but they shall not come nigh; neither shall the people go up with him." Oh, how different from the invitations of the New Testament! "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." (Matt. 11: 28). Having therefore boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus . . . let us draw near." (Heb. 10: 19–22.) The law says, "Stand off;" the Gospel, "Draw nigh."

Afar Off,

Moses came and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments: and all the people answered with one voice and said, "All the words which the Lord hath said, will we do." It was the second time they had made this declaration (see Ex. 19: 8), but how little did they realize that they had not in themselves power to do all that they now engaged to do! "And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord." Whether he wrote upon a rock, as was often the case at that period, or whether, as in Deuteronomy 27: 23, upon stones, plastered with plaster, which would harden when the writing was finished, we know not. As the writing seems to have formed a portable book, perhaps it was on a wax tablet, or on the papyrus leaf, which was much used in Egypt later. After writing God's messages, Moses built an altar, with twelve pillars, that all the tribes of Israel might be represented there. And then he sent young men, which offered burnt offerings, and peace offerings, as a seal of the people's pledge of obedience. The burnt offering signified the offering of themselves to God, and the peace offering, their vows and thanksgiving to God." (Lev. 7: 12–17.) And Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basins; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar. And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said (for the third time), "All that the Lord hath said, will we do, and be obedient." But there was man may have the best intentions, but without the precious blood of Christ he cannot carry them out. "The blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin"; the unclean might not enter into the tabernacle. We "were not redeemed by corruptible things, such as silver and gold . . . but with the precious blood of Christ." (1 Pet. 1: 18.) Moses took the blood and sprinkled it on the people, and said, "Behold the blood of the covenant which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words." It was but a type—man's imperfect offering to God. But He saw through it His beloved Son, "an high priest of good things to come," who "neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood . . . entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." (Heb. 9: 12.) Jesus pleads for us that He has been slain as the one great Offering, and on this ground He makes it possible for man to enter into covenant with God. How many have said, not three times, but fifty times, a hundred times, "All that the Lord saith unto me, I will do, I will walk so as to please God, I will not turn aside," and yet, again and again, there have been failures. "But what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh," God did. How? He sent "His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin." He sent Him to shed His blood, and so "condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." (Rom. 8: 3, 4.) The law says, "You ought to walk so as to please God." The precious blood says, "You can walk so as to please God; your sins are atoned for, they condemn you no more. The life is in the blood, life for you to enable you to do the will of God." "I will put My laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts." (Heb. 8: 10.) Praise God, it is not only our duty, but a blessed possibility, to do the will of God. "Almost all things are by the law purged with blood, and without shedding of blood is no remission." (Heb. 9: 22.) Life purges death. The law is the "ministration of death, written and engraven in stones (II Cor. 3: 7); the precious blood is the very life of Christ, not only poured out, but imparted to us as our life.

Something Still Lacking:

Having thus mediated God's covenant with the people, Moses went up into the mountain with Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, Joshua, and seventy elders of Israel, "and they saw the God of Israel." It was "devouring fire" to all who were below, but on the mountain all was glory and the effulgence of light. After eating and drinking together in the mountain, Moses and Joshua arose, and "Moses went up into the mount" that he might be permitted to enter into the thoughts of God, and into His plans and purposes as never before. Moses was content, at the call of God, to leave the people, much as his presence seemed necessary; God was responsible. Forty days and forty nights, without eating, drinking, and probably without sleeping, too, Moses was in the mount with God; but he was breathing in an atmosphere of life itself from his close contact with God; and no doubt He who breathed into Adam's nostrils the breath of life, had some means of sustaining Moses supernaturally.

God was about to teach Moses His will about worship. The first element of worship (now that the people had been sprinkled with the blood) was the spirit of sacrifice. "Speak unto the children of Israel that they bring Me an offering; of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart shall ye take my offering." There is no real worship without Giving to the Lord.

The right order is, They "first gave their own selves to the Lord," (II Cor. 8: 5), and then, according to our value for Jesus, will be our further giving to Him. Some count themselves worthy of a richly furnished house, horses, carriages, and servants, and Christ worth about as much as the wages of their kitchen maid. The first disciples were in a hurry to get rid of all that belonged to them, "Neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own, but they had all things common." (Acts 4: 32.) They counted Jesus worthy of their all. Then God gave Moses the pattern of an ark of testimony which was to contain the law within, and the manifest presence of God without. "And then I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy seat, from between the two cherubims which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel." Then God commanded Moses to make a table on which the shew-bread should be placed before Him always; and a candlestick of pure gold with seven branches. All this was to speak of Christ. He is the ark, God's meeting-place with man; He is "the Bread of Life" typified by the shew-bread; He is "the Light of the world," God's golden candlestick. Then the tabernacle was to be made of many parts, pillars, boards, curtains, tables, loops and sockets to make "one tabernacle" (Ex. 26: 6.) It was to be thus a beautiful picture of the Church of Christ, "For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, so also is Christ." "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body. . . For the body is not one member, but many." (1 Cor. 12: 13-14.)

He next commanded him to make holy garments for Aaron, "for glory and for beauty" (Ex. 28: 2), and above the holy garments Aaron was to wear two onyx stones upon his shoulders with the names of the children of Israel graven upon them, "And Aaron shall bear their names before the Lord upon his two shoulders for a memorial" (Ex. 28: 12). His strength was to bear their weakness! Oh! What a type of our beloved Lord who bears our unworthy names upon His Almighty shoulder. "The government shall be upon His shoulder (Isa. 9: 6.) And then Moses was to make a breast-plate with the names of the children of Israel also engraven upon it. "And Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel when he goeth in unto the holy place, for a memorial before the Lord continually." (Ver. 29.) But he was not only to bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart, but also Aaron must have a plate of pure gold upon his forehead with the inscription "Holiness unto the Lord," "that Aaron may bear the iniquity of the holy things . . . that they may be accepted before the Lord." (Ver. 38.) Oh how wondrous! The sin which we have committed so lightly, lies heavy on the heart of our great High Priest. Then God commanded Moses to clothe Aaron and his sons with the holy garments and consecrate them. But before they could be anointed, their right ear, right hand, and right foot must be marked with blood, in token that they were a blood-bought and ransomed priesthood. (Ex. 29: 20.) Are not we too priests unto God? Then they might be anointed with the holy oil made for no other purpose, and none like it must be made, on pain of death. "Upon man's flesh shall it not be poured," but only on the holy garments. (Ex. 30: 30-33.) There must be no imitation of the Holy Ghost, God's true anointing; and the Spirit cannot rest upon the flesh; God's Spirit comes on Christ in us, and not upon our self-life. And God commanded also that when a census of the children of Israel was taken, every man should give "a ransom for his soul unto the Lord," an acknowledgement that his life was forfeited, yet redeemed. And He also ordained that a continual burnt offering should be offered, a morning and an evening sacrifice, "at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord; when I will meet you, to speak there unto thee. And then I will meet with the children of Israel, and the tabernacle shall be sanctified by My glory . . . And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God. And they shall know that I am the Lord their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them: I am the Lord their God." This was the purpose of all—that God might dwell among them. The purpose of His dealings with us is that He may dwell in us.

Upon His Heart

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 63 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

"NEVER MIND."

What's the use of always fretting,
At the trials we shall find
Ever strewn along our pathway?
Travel on, and "Never Mind."

Travel onward; working, hoping;
Cast no lingering glance behind,
At the trials once encountered.
Look ahead and "Never Mind."

What is past, is past forever.
Let all fretting be resigned.
It will never help the matter,
Do your best and "Never Mind."

And if those who might befriend you,
Whom the ties of nature bind,
Should refuse to do their duty,
Look to heaven, and "Never Mind."

Friendly words are often spoken,
When the feelings are unkind,
Take them for their real value,
Pass them by, and "Never Mind."

Fate may threaten, clouds may lower,
Enemies may be combined,
If your trust in God is steadfast,
He will help you, "Never Mind."

—Mary E. McCleary.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted, no two alike, will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

For Nervous Exhaustion
Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. H. C. McCOY, Algona, Ia., says: "I have used it in cases of dyspepsia, nervous exhaustion and wakefulness, with pleasant results. Also think it of great service in depressed condition of the system resulting from biliary derangement."

In every community there are a number of men whose time is not occupied, such as teachers, ministers, farmers' sons and others. To these classes especially we would say, if you wish to make several hundred dollars during the next few months, write at once to B. F. Johnson & Co., Publishers, of Richmond, Va., and they will show you how to do it.

WANTED:—MEN AND WOMEN to sell our "Child's Bible," the best book without question in the hands of agents to-day. Introduction by Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D. Nearly 200,000 already sold and the demand still increasing. One woman without experience paid us $1792 last year. We have sold in many places to three-fourths of the Protestant families.

How can any household where there are children afford to be without it? Rev. J. H. VINCENT, Supt. Instruction, C. L. S. C. Editor S. S. Journal.

It cannot but be a great blessing to every family in which it may find a place. Rt. Rev. FRANCIS M. WHITTLE, D.D. L.L.D., Bishop of Virginia.

I shall be glad to know that all the families of the church in the diocese of Nebraska, in which there are young children, possess a copy of this interesting and well-arranged book. Rt. Rev. GEORGE WORTHINGTON, D.D., L.L.D., Bishop of Nebraska.

The idea is most happy and the execution admirable. It is more interesting to the little ones than any story book I know of. Prof. GEO. L. WINSTON, University of North Carolina.

All have not time nor talent to simplify and winnow the Scriptures, and find the child's portion of the gospel feast. It will gladden every mother to have this done in such winsome and attractive form. Rev. ROBT. McINTYRE, Pastor M. E. Church, Charlestown, Ill.

By the hour have my children read and looked at the illustrations, then come and ask their little questions, till their hearts have seemed to be filled with the true conception of the Word. Rev. M. S. WELLS, Weedsport, N. Y.

I wish that all dear children to whom I have had the pleasure of preaching the gospel, might have the privilege of reading it daily. Rev. E. P. HAMMOND, Evangelist.

For terms and particulars, address
CASSELL & CO., B. B. S. D.
42 Dearborn St., Chicago. 104 & 106 Fourth Ave., N.Y.

MISS JONES' QUILTING.
Written by
JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE.
This is one of the best stories ever written by this popular author, full of fun and good humor. 12mo., 200 pages; paper cover, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents. Sold by all newsdealers or mailed to any address, post-paid, on receipt of price, by
J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher,
57 Rose Street, New York.

AGENTS Send for E. B. TREAT'S New Books. The National Hand book of American Progress. 1492 to 1888. The Boss Campaign Book, $2; also, The Bow in the Cloud, or Words of Comfort, by 200 Authors. $1.75. E. B. TREAT, 771 Broadway. New York.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Agents preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. Johnson & Co., Pub's, 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

Christian Work in Mexico.

Through the reading of the Holy Scriptures translated into Spanish some earnest souls in Mexico have, by God's blessing, been led to a clear knowledge of the Gospel. From their numbers able preachers of the Christian faith in its primitive purity have been raised up, around whom congregations have been gathered from among the humble poor, who have been the first to publicly welcome and defend the pure Gospel in Mexico. The members of these congregations, rich in faith, have worked earnestly and bravely for Christ and his truth among their fellow countrymen in that beautiful Southern portion of North America called Mexico. Schools have been established by them, in which large numbers of bright boys and girls have received a good secular education and been carefully taught the Christian faith. From the children thus educated faithful Christian workers have been raised up. A Mexican Church of Christ, that maintains the faith in its purity and integrity, has been organized among these native Christians in the Republic of Mexico. The members of this Mexican Church of Christ, though gathered mostly from among the poor, are yet doing a most important Christian work in Mexico. To continue that work, we need to pay a few leading workers small monthly salaries, and also to defray some current expenses. To raise the needed funds we have formed a society with an office at 43 Bible House, New York, U. S., and should be pleased to have many of our fellow Christians join this society by becoming regular contributors to its treasury. We are trying to secure monthly or quarterly contributions to meet the regular monthly expenses of the work. In order to continue and extend the work, we wish to raise four hundred dollars a month, by endeavoring to have four hundred persons each give on the average one dollar every month to this object, leaving the donors to give less or more as they may be able and willing.

We earnestly invite all who will, to join us in this systematic effort in behalf of the cause of Christ in Mexico, by becoming monthly subscribers to this fund. We have already regular subscribers whose gifts amount monthly to over eighty dollars, and a growing circle of friends who are forwarding us occasional donations.

This Mexican Church of Christ is a very effective instrumentality through which to do Christian work among the 50,000,000 who speak the Spanish language, few of whom have ever had a Bible in their hands. A beautiful church building has been secured in the City of Mexico as the centre of the activities of this Mexican Church of Christ. Through the workers connected with that centre more than forty congregations have been gathered from among the poor. We have some faithful and able preachers now in the field, but more young men need to be trained for the ministry. Multitudes of Protestant children in Mexico, some of them orphans, need to be educated. We make three requests of you, Christian reader: first, that you will become a monthly or quarterly subscriber in behalf of this Christian work; second, that you will try and induce your friends to do the same; third, that you will remember this precious work in Mexico in your prayers.

I most sincerely thank all who are already generously contributing to this Christian work for their timely and generous gifts, and I earnestly invite many others, to unite with us in aiding this important Christian work by also becoming monthly subscribers in its behalf. Those who may not feel that they can give as much as a dollar a month are earnestly asked to give what they can, whenever they are able—EVERY LITTLE HELPS. If you will generously consent to contribute a dollar a month or more or less to the work, will you kindly inform me of the fact? Contributions either large or small can be mailed directly to my address as follows:

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of J. P. HEATH,
No. 43 Bible House, New York, U. S.

BAILEY'S COMPOUND Light-Spreading Silver-Plated CORRUGATED GLASS REFLECTORS! A wonderful invention for LIGHTING Churches, Halls, &c. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue & price list free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring fine prices IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

IF YOU WANT AN
"OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE OR BAGSTER BIBLE,
send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and price, to
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller.
77 Bible House, New York.

New Catalogue. Now Ready.
BEFORE YOU BUY ANY BOOKS FOR YOUR SUNDAY-SCHOOL LIBRARY
Send to me for a full Catalogue of the cheapest and best Sunday-School Books ever offered, and our Special Offer to Sunday-Schools.
Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

"Demonology or Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern." —"An effective weapon."—"A sword of fire."—"Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Startling disclosures.—History facts and data.—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 300 pp. 12mo. cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT. 77 Bible House, New York

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y.

WORKS OF
REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D D.

The following are among the best Sermons preached in the Tabernacle, Brooklyn, by Dr. Talmage.

Vol. I. Sundown. 33 Sermons. 12mo. Cloth. $2. Price reduced to.....$1.50

Vol. II. Fishing too Near Shore. 36 Sermons. 12mo. Cloth. $2.00. Price reduced to.....$1.50

Vol. III. Old Wells Dug Out. 24 Sermons. 12mo. Cloth. $2.00. Price reduced to.....$1.50

Vol. IV. Every-day Religion. 33 Sermons. 12mo. Cloth. $2.00. Price reduced to.....$1.50

The Marriage Ring. A volume of 15 Sermons on Marriage, Family Ties and Duties. 12mo. Cloth. Beautifully bound.....$1.00

Around the Tea Table. A series of Table Talks about Home and Every-Day Matters. 12mo. 504 pp. Cloth.....$1.50

The Brooklyn Tabernacle. By T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D. Containing 104 Sermons. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth.....$1.50

Live Coals. A volume of 678 Large Octavo Pages, cloth, 16 full-page illustrations and a life-like frontispiece of the author, with 40 pages devoted to his life and work brought down to date. Price.....$2.00

The Masque Torn Off. Contains the discourses delivered in Brooklyn Tabernacle, giving Dr. Talmage's experience and observations as seen by him in company with two elders of his church and three high police officials, during their midnight explorations in the haunts of vice in New York City. One large octavo volume of 526 pages, elegantly illustrated with 14 full-page engravings. Price.....$2.00

New Tabernacle Sermons. 30 Sermons. 12mo, cloth. 400 pages. Price.....$1.00

Traps for Men. Large 12mo, cloth, 180 pages. 50c.

Foes of Society. Large 12mo. Illustrated. Cloth, 170 pages.....60c.

Night Sides of City Life. Large 12mo. Cloth. 160 pages.....60c.

These three volumes are contained in "The Masque Torn Off."

Woman: Her Power and Privileges. A series of Sermons by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage. Just published. 12mo. 200 pages. Paper covers.....25c.

Labor Sermons. A series of sermons on THE LABOR QUESTION. Authorized and revised by Dr. Talmage. Paper cover.....25c.

WORKS OF
REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

The Treasury of David. His great life work. 7 vols. Published price, $2 each, $14 the set. Our price $1.75 each, $11 the set. In sheep binding, black, published price $2.75 per vol.; our price $2.25 per vol., or $15 for the set. Volumes sold seperately, if desired.

My Sermon Notes. A selection from outlines of discourses delivered at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London. With anecdotes and illustrations complete in four uniform volumes. Vol. I. Genesis to Proverbs. Vol. II. Ecclesiastes to Malachi. Vol. III. Matthew to Acts. Vol. IV. Romans to Revelation. 12mo. handsome cloth binding, price, $1.00 per vol.

Celebrated Sermons. 10 vols. Published price, $1.50 each, $10 the set. Reduced to $1 each, $8.50 the set. Volumes sold separately, if desired.

Hands Full of Honey, and other Sermons preached in 1883.....$1.00

Return, O Shulamite, and other Sermons preached in 1884.....$1.00

Healing and Service, and other Sermons preached in 1885.....$1.00

Storm Signals, and other Sermons preached in 1886.....$1.00

Pleading for Prayer, and other Sermons preached in 1887.....$1.00

Talks to Farmers. Containing 19 Sermons to Farmers. A useful work for every clergyman who has farmers in his congregation. Price, cloth.....$1.00

The Present Truth. A new volume of Sermons.....$1.00

Types and Emblems, (Sermons).....$1.00

Feathers for Arrows. A compilation of illustrations for teachers and preachers.....$1.00

Morning by Morning.....$1.00
Evening by Evening.....1.00
Lectures to Students.....1.00
The Saint and the Saviour.....1.00
Spurgeon's Gems.....1.00
Gleanings among the Sheaves.....60
The Clew of the Maze.....75
John Ploughman's Talk.....75
" " Pictures.....75
Talks and Pictures, In one volume.....1.00

All of Grace; An earnest word with those who are seeking salvation by the Lord Jesus Christ. 12mo. cloth.....50c.

According to Promise; or, the Lord's Method of Dealing with His Chosen People. A companion to "All of Grace." 12mo, cloth.....75c.

The above books are handsomely bound in extra cloth, and will be sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by addressing

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR MY STORY OF THE WAR
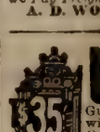
By Mary A. Livermore.
Her own narrative of "Four Years' Personal Experience as Field and Hospital Nurse." It portrays a Woman's or "Heavenly" side of the War its Light and Shadows "as a woman saw them." Bright, Pure, and Good, full of "laughter and tears" of thrilling interest and touching pathos. It sells at sight to all. Splendid Steel-Plates, and famous old Battle-Flags richly colored in over one hundred. The "booming" book for Men and Women Agents. $40 to $200 a month made. No Distance no hindrance, if we Pay Freights and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

UNIVERSITY ORGANS.—They Lead the World.—$55 to $500. Sold Direct to Families. No Middlemen. Solid Walnut 5 Octaves Double Couplers. Guaranteed for Six Years and sent with Stool and Book, for TRIAL IN YOUR OWN HOME BEFORE YOU BUY. ESTABLISHED 1859. $35 MARCHAL & SMITH, 235 East 21st Street, New York.



THE CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1887 in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Vol. XI., No. 26. Office, 63 Bible House. N. Y. THURSDAY, JUNE 28, 1888. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE FREDERICK III., EMPEROR OF GERMANY.

HUMAN CONSTELLATIONS. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning at Winfield, Kans.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE SPIRIT IN THE COMING AGE.

PICTURE OF A MEETING OF WALDENSES.

How Bishop Parker Died—A Night on a Mountain—A Fact for Statesmen—One Bible in a Chilian Home—A Vicious Religious Festival—A Singular Testimony in India—Political Progress in Japan.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Republican National Convention—Congressional Notes—The New Emperor's Proceedings, Etc.

THE SLUGGARD'S FARM. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: A Needlewoman's Gift—A Tatterdemalion's Self-Denial, Etc.

ROSA'S CROSS (With Illustration).

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE. A New Serial Story by Rev. L. S. Keyser. (Continued).

THE GOLDEN CALF. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE LATE FREDERICK III., EMPEROR OF GERMANY—Born Oct. 18, 1831—Died June 15, 1888.

THE LATE EMPEROR FREDERICK III.

A Mysterious Providence—The Lamented Emperor—His Childhood—Education—First Meeting with the Princess Victoria—How He Proposed to Her—Marriage in 1858—Protest Against Despotic Government—The Schleswig-Holstein War—Good Generalship at Sadowa—His Triumph at Sedan—A Characteristic Incident—Illness—The Death Scene.

THE death of the Emperor of Germany on Friday, June 15, should remind us that we walk by faith, not by sight. Were it not so, such an event would be altogether grievous and lamentable. Happily the Christian is assured that in public affairs, as in the events of his own life, God is ordering everything according to His own wise purposes. The world is not controlled by chance, nor by the caprices of a malevolent fate. At times we are confronted by events which we cannot understand; success and failure are not distributed according to our ideas of merit, and the ills that flesh is heir to fall more heavily upon one whose life appears to us the most blameless, while the evil-doer escapes them. So is it with the end of life. A man whose career promises to be a blessing to the world is cut off before his beneficent projects are realized, while others live on, working mischief and causing misery, into old age. We feel as the disciples did on the road to Emmaus, as they talked together, and were sad, and are inclined to say with them, "We trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel." At such times even prayer seems to be of no avail, and our spirits are depressed by the taunts of the enemy, who uses their apparent failure as a reproach. As a nation we have had to bear those taunts,

As When Lincoln Died,

and again when Garfield was taken away. It is so now in Germany when the enlightened Prince, from whose wisdom and justice so much of good was expected, is removed at the commencement of his reign, and his place occupied by one whose character and principles are antagonistic to national liberty and progress. Disappointment is natural, but its voice is hushed by the thought that some wise purpose surely underlies the mysterious event and will become manifest when all mysteries are explained. In this special case it may be that the sagacious, peace-loving ruler has been called to give place to the headstrong, ambitious youth who succeeds him, in order that in

The Events Which are Coming upon the world Germany may play the part marked out for her by divine wisdom, and the impending calamities may be brought down by an appropriate instrument. "Thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace," said the Lord to the good King Josiah, "because thine heart was tender, and thou didst humble thyself before God, and thine eyes shall not see all the evil that I will bring upon this place." (II Chron. 24: 27, 28.) God in His providence works by natural means: the curse causeless does not come; it may therefore be that in the final crisis is this world's history on which we are about to enter—a period of wars and tumults—there is work appointed for Emperor William II. to do, which he will do from the promptings of his own ambition, unconscious that he is fulfilling the purposes of the King of kings. Thus it will be seen that it was in mercy that Emperor Frederick was gathered to his fathers and Emperor William reigns in his stead.

Frederick's Childhood was passed in a time of general European unrest. He was born at Potsdam on October 18, 1831. His grandfather, Frederick William III., the grand-nephew of Frederick the Great, was then King of Prussia. The country was menaced by Austria from without, and by the discontented people within. England was passing through the throes of a great political convulsion. France had just driven out her weak king, and filled his place by one still weaker. Russia was crushing out, with cruel, ruthless hand, the last embers of the Polish revolt. Spain and Portugal were in anarchy, and Turkey was sullenly bowing before the inexorable logic of the events of 1827–29. Two lives—those of his uncle and father, lay between the child and the throne, and those two lives covered a momentous but glorious period of national history. Of the Prince's boyhood not much is related. His mother, who was a pupil of Goethe, devoted herself, unremittingly, to his training, and she was aided by Ernst Curtius, the historian of Greece.

In 1840 Frederick William III. died, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Frederick William IV., the uncle of the late Emperor. His reign was chiefly remarkable for the civil commotions which, in common with all Europe, agitated Prussia. The part which Prince William, the father of the late Emperor, took in suppressing the rising in Berlin rendered him obnoxious to the people, and it was deemed advisable that he and his family should leave Prussia for a time. They went to England, and then it was that the young prince Frederick, then a youth of seventeen, who quitted the university to accompany his father, first saw the little girl who afterwards became his wife. It was the hope of both families that these two might be united, and ten years later that hope was realized. The story of opens in so simple and natural a manner that, though it has often been told, it deserves reproduction here. In September, 1855, when all England was rejoicing over the capture of Sebastopol, Frederick paid a visit to the Queen at Balmoral. He went thither with the consent of his parents and of his uncle, the King, Frederick William IV., to ask for the hand of Princess Victoria, a young maiden of fifteen years.

His Marriage

Writing in her journal, on Sentember 29th, the Queen says: "Our dear Victoria was this day engaged to Prince Frederick William of Prussia. . . . He had already spoken to us, on the 20th; but we were uncertain, on account of her extreme youth, whether he should speak to her himself, or wait till he came back again. However, we felt it was better that he should do so, and during our ride up Craig-na-Ban, this afternoon, he picked a piece of white heather (the emblem of good luck), which he gave to her, and this enabled him to make an allusion to his hopes and wishes as they rode down Glen Girnock, which led to this happy conclusion." A pretty story, simply told. Writing on Oct. 2, the Prince Consort says that Prince Fritz left Balmoral on the previous day, and speaks in ardent praise of the childlike simplicity and candor of his daughter. "The young people are ardently in love with one another," he adds, "and the purity, innocence, and unselfishness of the young man have been, on his part, equally touching." It was this engagement in 1855 which was fulfilled on January 25, 1858, when the gallant soldier-prince was married to the Princess on whom his heart was set.

The bride and bridegroom were heartily welcomed in Berlin, and in August of the same year Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort visited them in their new home. A great change was impending over Prussia. The then King was stricken with a painful malady, and after the royal travellers from England had returned to her shores, Prince William was formally declared Prince Regent. He had acted in that capacity since the autumn of 1857; but in October, 1858, he was appointed Regent with full powers, his brother's dementia being declared incurable. Three years later, January 2, 1861, the afflicted monarch died, the Prince Regent became King, and our hero

Crown Prince.

The King, under the guidance of Bismarck, at once set himself to the thorough reorganization of the army, which in spite of the resistance of his people he enormously increased. He insisted on the old feudal prerogatives of royalty and though he was faithful to the letter of the Constitution, he took advantage of all his resources to render it powerless and to defeat the checks it imposed upon him. That slowly but surely brought on a constitutional crisis During the long persistent struggle with the majority in the Lower House, which had taken England for a model, Herr Von Bismarck fought the King's battle with a force and dexterity totally unexpected, and the temper of the combatants rose to such a pitch that quarrels and duels were frequent. Prince Frederick William was imbued with English opinions; his wife's influence, which was paramount with him to the end of his life, having already operated upon him. In 1863 the strife had reached a critical stage, the policy of the Government became harsh, and the Crown Prince was so moved that he addressed words of strong remonstrance to his father. He did so in a memorable letter, in which he respectfully but earnestly besought the King to yield to the wishes of his people and warned him that the fate of the dynasty would be imperilled by his despotic policy. He even offered to resign his command in the army and the offices he held about the court, if his father desired.

The Outbreak of War,

however, put an end to this controversy, and also showed that the King's persistence in strengthening the army was justified by resuks. The Crown Prince was disgusted with the unequal struggle between Prussia and Austria combined, and the little Kingdom of Denmark, but his duty as the first subject of the realm was clear, and he went through the one short campaign, which sufficed to end the struggle, on the staff of Marshal Wrangel. The conflict with Austria, in which this Danish war culminated in 1866, appealed much more forcibly to the Crown Prince's patriotism, and it also established his reputatiou as an able general. Scarcely had the declaration of war been heard when he was marching through the mountains of the Silesia frontier with 125,000 men at his back. Once over the mountains into Bohemia the Crown Prince's successive blows—Trautenau, Nachod, Skalitz—fell upon the bewildered Austrians like thunder from a clear sky, while Prince Frederick Charles fought his way toward the same point from the other side, sweeping away all obstacles with a rapidity which gave to this strange campaign its now historical name of the Seven Days' War. But before the two invading hosts could unite, the Austrian commander-in-chief fell upon Frederick Charles with a superior force, hoping to overwhelm him before the Crown Prince could come up. The scene was the field of Sadowa, and at first it seemed lost to the Prussians, for the pressure of the Austrian masses was tremendous, and all the valor of the Northern army could barely hold its own against such odds. Suddenly the smoke rolled aside for a moment from the hard-fought field, and the Crown Prince, who had made a circuit to take the Austrians in the rear, was seen approaching. His arrival decided the day and won him the applause of all Europe. At the close of the day the Crown Prince joined his father on the meadows of Problus, where the delighted veteran took off his breast the Order of Merit and gave it to his son. The King has recorded the affecting incident: "At last I came upon Fritz, with his staff. What a moment, after all we had gone through, and upon the evening of such a day! I gave him the Ordre pour le Merite with my own hands, so that the tears ran down his cheeks."

The Franco-Prussian War,

four years later, rendered the Crown Prince still more illustrious. The victories of Weissenburg and Wörth, the investment of Strasburg, the passage of the Vosges, followed each other like claps of thunder, and he was pursuing his victorious advance when he learned that his late opponent, McMahon, was marching towards Metz to join Bazaine against Prince Frederick Charles. It was the situation of Sadowa over again, and once more the Crown Prince turned the scale. Although McMahon had nearly four days' start, the indefatigable German leader overtook him at Sedan, where a second Waterloo placed at the mercy of the conquerors 80,- 000 French soldiers, 4,000 officers, 400 guns, and the Emperor himself. After this he took part in the investment of Paris, and held his position until the capitulation was signed. During both these wars the Prince was the idol of his troops. It was not only his skill and valor that won their love, but his own regard for their comfort.

A Characteristic Incident

related by a press correspondent illustrates this interest. He wrote: "I have been the accidental and unseen witness of a little scene just now which is worth recording. A country cart was rumbling down the street with two wounded officers—young men—on their way to the station. An officer on foot beckoned to the driver to stop, and went up to the cart, the occupants of which tried to salute him, but he made a gesture, and leaning over, entered into conversation with them for ten minutes, evidently asking after their wounds. On parting, he shook each by the hand and continued his way up the street, accompanied by two other officers. He halted at my quarters and inquired if there were any wounded inside—they had been removed, some to their last resting-place—then went on, and, meeting a cart full of wounded soldiers, talked to them each in turn, and so went on, visiting the hospitals and the wounded in the most unostentatious manner. It was the Crown Prince. No wonder his men are fond of him."

The Years of Peace

which succeeded the war of 1870 were occupied by Frederick in the work allotted to capable men in his station; and he frequently represented the King in visits and ceremonials. Before that period, he was at the opening of the Suez Canal, and visited Palestine. After it, he went to Vienna, in 1873, to be present at the opening of the Exhibition; and subsequently travelled in Sweden, Norway, and Denmark. He paid a visit to Victor Emmanuel at Naples in 1875, and attended the funeral of that King in Rome in 1878. He presided over the Commission organized when the assassins Nobiling and Hödel endeavored to slay the Emperor William; and in 1881 it was his sad duty to witness the funeral of Alexander II., at St. Petersburg. On many other occasions he took part in public business, and was always ready to foster education, literature, and art. The excavations at Olympia, which yielded such fruit, owed much to him; and he did not forget his student days at Bonn. He was Rector of that University, and he presided over one of its great student celebrations. In addition to his scholastic rank at Bonn, the degree of Doctor was conferred on him by the Universities of Königsberg and Oxford. Moreover, he wrote one or two books; one on his Eastern tour, and another on the war of 1866.

His Fatal Malady

first appeared in January of last year. It was then thought to be only an inflammatory affection of the throat, with a cough and hoarseness. The affection, however, not yielding to treatment, Dr. Mackenzie, the famous specialist in throat diseases, was consulted, and in May he removed a foreign growth from the Prince's throat. The operation caused general uneasiness in Europe, which was not allayed by the report of Professor Virchow that cancer cells were not found in the part removed. Subsequent operations were performed, until at length the disease appeared so low down in the throat that it was no longer possible to operate from the mouth. By Dr. Mackenzie's advice the illustrious patient went to Italy to spend the winter. Varying reports of his condition appeared, but when, in February of this year, tracheotomy was finally resorted to, to save him from suffocation, the prospect of his recovery faded in gloom. On March 9, while he was still in Italy, his aged father died, and the Prince became Emperor.

His address to his people, and the dignities he conferred on eminent men, confirmed the good opinion previously entertained of his character. His last official act was a still more decisive evidence of the enlightened policy he would have pursued had he lived. It was an indignant reproof to Government agents who interfered in the elections in the interest of the Government, and of Herr Puttkamer, the Secretary of the Interior, who directed them.

Meanwhile, however, his disease was making rapid progress. He became unable to take solid food, and his strength speedily declined. On June 14 it became evident that was close at hand. The disease had affected the lungs, and the inflammation there could not be otherwise than fatal. Still, the Emperor maintained the tranquillity of mind which had characterized him throughout his affliction, and which did not desert him at the trying moment when he first learned the nature of his disease. He continued to write loving messages for his friends long after the power of speech had left him. Ever mindful of others, and knowing the jealousy with which the German physicians regarded Dr. Mackenzie, he wrote on one of his slips: "I feel that Dr. Mackenzie has done all that human science, watchfulness and skill, could do to prolong my life. I thank him." The Empress was promptly at his bedside when the dangerous symptoms appeared, and during the remaining hours of his life would not quit her post. The Emperor lay with her hand clasped in his, and once, when Bismarck appeared at his bedside, he placed it in that of the grim old chancellor, as if commending her who was soon to be a widow to his powerful protection. He remained perfectly conscious during the day and night, though the fatal symptom of coma occasionally asserted its sway. On the morning of Friday, June 15, the intervals of unconsciousness grew longer, and the members of the family grouped around the bed perceived that he was rapidly sinking. At eleven o'clock Dr. Mackenzie signed to the Empress, who fervently kissed the hand of the dying Emperor, and it was observed he drew it to him and kissed it—his last act. At twelve minutes past eleven o'clock Sir Morell took out his watch, and declared that life had passed away. So ended a life singularly noble and useful, and Germany now mourns in her dead Emperor, the soldier, the scholar, and the statesman, whose love for her, and concern for her welfare, ended only with his life.

His Death

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Condemned Murderer's Despair.—An Evangelist remarks: "Not long ago there was a man who for murder was condemned to die, and was in one of the prisons awaiting the day of his execution. An old friend happening to visit the governor of the State, was being shown around the city, and among other places was taken through the prison and shown the condemned cell. After they were gone a warder attending the felon, said to him, 'Do you know who that was that was visiting you?' 'No, he gloomily replied. 'That was the governor of the State,' replied the warder. Then the condemned man stamped his foot in a paroxysm of despair, and exclaimed, 'Why did you not tell me before? If I had but known I would have knelt before him and prayed him to save me; but now it is too late.' Why does not every sinner kneel and ask pardon of the Saviour and Governor of the Universe, now, while He is passing by."

A Farmer's Death Foreshadowed.—"A farmer went almost daily into a market town to buy and sell. He regularly dined in a certain hotel in that town. One night he dreamt that he had entered the hotel, and when he was passing through the hall, he saw a door that he had never noticed there before. He turned the handle and walked in. The door immediately closed behind him, and to his horror he found himself in a room with a great number of his friends who had died. He tried to get out, but his efforts were in vain. 'You cannot get out,' said one of his skeleton friends; 'you, also, shall be dead in eight days.' In the morning the farmer awoke, much disturbed about his dream, and went at once to his minister and related it to him. 'You are an unsaved man,' said the minister, solemnly. 'You ought to come to Christ at once; a distinct call may have come to you through this dream.' 'No,' replied the farmer, 'I will not be whipped into the kingdom, but have no objection to be wooed and won by Christ.' 'Friend, don't let your proud folly ruin you for ever,' the minister exclaimed; 'God has been trying to win you for years.' 'And do you mean to tell me that I shall be a dead man in a week? It is all fancy; I will take my chance.' Next day, when the farmer was in the hotel, he looked for the door of which he dreamed, but he did not see it, and he went on living as before, until the eighth day arrived, when he entered the hotel to partake of his dinner, at which he drank a bottle of wine—perhaps more. Presently he mounted his horse, to go home; but on the road he fell from it, and was killed. How shocking is the end of all who obey not the gospel of Christ!"

The Smuggler's Cargo.—The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse told, in a recent sermon, of a boatman with whom he went fishing, and who joined him in greeting the daylight with the morning hymn. "Ah," said the man, "I could not have done that in the past; I did not feel like singing hymns when the day was breaking." And he told how in the past he had belonged to a smuggling crew, and how one day they saw the Government boat giving chase, and their one hope was in throwing the cargo overboard, lest that which would convict them should be discovered; they preferred to surrender the cargo rather than run the risk of imprisonment. At last, just as they were thinking that nothing that could lead to trouble would now be found on board, the hopeless cry was raised, "It's floating—it won't sink!" And there, in the wake of their vessel, and in sight of the Government officials, floated the incriminating cargo that the waves would not engulf! But it is not so with the evil that the heart abandons as it looks up to Christ. The tempter sometimes whispers to us that our sins are unpardonable, and such as must drive us to despair. But, whatever the tempter or our own depressed natures may suggest, there is nothing between the seeking soul and the Redeemer. "Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." "He will subdue our iniquities; and Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea."

The Bank Manager's Investment.—Mr. Hamilton remarked: "A late very popular manager of a bank was visited by a friend, who said to him, 'Oh, Mr. B., I know of a first-class chance for making a fortune, if I had but a few hundred pounds to invest.' 'May I ask what it is?' replied the manager. His visitor then went into the details of the contemplated transaction, and Mr. B. said, 'I think it will be very profitable. Do you not mean to touch it?' 'I cannot,' said the other, despondingly, 'I have not sufficient capital just now.' That was all that was said, and the bank manager's friend took his departure. Some time afterwards, as he had drawn several rather heavy checques, this gentlemen sent his bankbook to be made up, and when it was returned to him he was surprised to find that there was an entry of £500 in his favor, which he did not remember having paid into the bank. He immediately went to the bank and inquired concerning it. The clerk could give him no information other than that the entry had been made at the instance of the manager. He went to his friend, the manager, about the mistake. 'It is not a mistake,' replied Mr. B., 'I directed it to be put there. When you were here last you gave me some information on a certain subject. I thought your views were right, and acted upon your advice, with the result that I have cleared a considerable profit, and the £500 paid in to your account is your share of it.' That man took his religion into practical business, and rendered to every man his due. Nothing would have been easier than for him to keep the whole profits, and few, knowing the circumstances, would have dared to find fault; but he loved his neighbor as himself."

HUMAN CONSTELLATIONS.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached at Winfield, Kansas., last Sunday Morning, June 24, 1888.

"They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever." Dan. 12 : 3.

Every Man has Influence—Is Peopling Heaven or Hell—How to Turn Many to Righteousness—I. By a Right Example—Result of a Little Child's Ablutions—The Best Kind of Binding for a Bible An Intrepid General in the Mexican War—II. By Prayer—A Mother's Prayer for a Wayward Boy—III. By Christian Admonition—IV. The Reward.—To be as Stars—Shining with Borrowed Light—A Light Independent—Unknown Graves at Richmond—Like Stars in Clusters—In Swift Motion—In Magnitude—In Duration.

EVERY man has a thousand roots and a thousand branches. His roots reach down through all the earth; his branches spread through all the heavens. He speaks with voice, with eye, with hand, with foot. His silence often is thunder, and his life is an anthem or a doxology. There is no such thing as negative influence. We are all positive in the place we occupy, making the world better or making it worse, on the Lord's side or on the devil's, making up reasons for our blessedness or banishment; and we have already done work in Peopling Heaven or Hell.

I hear people tell of what they are going to do. A man who has burned down a city might as well talk of some evil that he expects to do, or a man who has saved an empire might as well talk of some good that he expects to do. By the force of your evil influence you have already consumed infinite values; or you have, by the power of a right influence, won whole kingdoms for God.

It would be absurd for me to stand here, and, by elaborate argument, prove that the world is off the track. You might as well stand at the foot of an embankment, amid the wreck of a capsized rail-train, proving by elaborate argument that something is out of order. Adam tumbled over the embankment sixty centuries ago, and the whole race, in one long train, has gone on tumbling in the same direction. Crash! crash! The only question now is, by what leverage can the crushed thing be lifted? By what hammer may the fragments be reconstructed? I want to show you to righteousness, and what will be our future pay for so doing.

How we may Turn Many

First. We may turn them by the charm of a right example. A child coming from a filthy home, was taught at school to wash its face. It went home so much improved in appearance that its mother washed her face. And when the father of the household came home, and saw the improvement in domestic appearance, he washed his face. The neighbors happening in, saw the change, and tried the same experiment, until all that street was purified, and the next street copied its example, and the whole city felt the result of one school-boy washing his face. That is a fable, by which we set forth that the best way to get the world washed of its sins and pollution, is to have our own heart and life cleansed and purified. A man with grace in his heart, and Christian cheerfulness in his face, and holy consistency in his behavior, is a perpetual sermon; and the sermon differs from others in that it has but one head, and the longer it runs, the better.

There are honest men who walk down Wall Street, making the teeth of iniquity chatter. There are happy men who go into a sick-room, and, by a look, help the broken bone to knit, and the excited nerves drop to a calm beating. There are pure men whose presence silences the tongue of uncleanness, of good on earth is a consistent Christian. I like the Bible folded between lids of cloth, of calfskin, or morocco, but I like it better when, in the shape of a man, it goes out into the world—a Bible illustrated. Courage is beautiful to read about; but rather would I see a man with all the world against him, confident as though all the world were for him. Patience is beautiful to read about; but rather would I see a buffeted soul calmly waiting for the time of deliverance. Faith is beautiful to read about; but rather would I find a man in the midnight walking straight on as though he saw everything. Oh, how many souls have been turned to God by the charm of a bright example!

The Mightiest Agent

When, in the Mexican War, the troops were wavering, a general rose in his stirrups and dashed into the enemy's lines, shouting, "Men, follow me!" They, seeing his courage and disposition, dashed on after him and gained the victory. What men want to rally them for God is an example to lead them. All your commands to others to advance amount to nothing so long as you stay behind. To affect them aright, you need to start for heaven yourself, looking back only to give the stirring cry of, "Men, follow!"

Again: We may turn many to righteousness

By Prayer.

There is no such detective as prayer, for no one can hide away from it. It puts its hand on the shoulder of a man ten thousand miles off. It alights on a ship mid-Atlantic. The little child cannot understand the law of electricity, or how the telegraphic operator, by touching the instrument here, may dart a message under the sea to another continent; nor can we, with our small intellect, understand how the touch of a Christian's prayer shall instantly strike a soul on the other side of the earth. You take ship and go to some other country, and get there at eleven o'clock in the morning. You telegraph to New York, and the message gets here at six o'clock in the same morning. In other words, it seems to arrive here five hours before it started. Like that is prayer. God says: "Before they call, I will hear." To overtake a loved one on the road, you may spur up a lathered steed until he shall outrace the one that brought the news to Ghent; but a prayer shall catch it at one gallop. A boy running away from home may take the midnight train from the country village, and reach the seaport in time to gain the ship that sails on the morrow; but will be on the deck to meet him, and in the hammock before he swings into it, and at the capstan before he winds the rope around and on the sea, against the sky, as the vessel ploughs on toward it. There is a mightiness in prayer. George Muller prayed a company of poor boys together, and then he prayed up an asylum in which they might be sheltered. He turned his face toward Edinburgh and prayed, and there came a thousand pounds. He turned his face toward London and prayed, and there came a thousand pounds. He turned his face toward Dublin and prayed, and there came a thousand pounds. The breath of Elijah's prayer blew all the clouds off the sky, and it was dry weather. The breath of Elijah's prayer blew all the clouds together, and it was wet weather. Prayer, in Daniel's time, walked the cave as a lion-tamer. It reached up, and took the sun by its golden bit, and stopped it.

A Mother's Prayer

What Prayer can Do.

We have all yet to try the full power of prayer. The time will come when the American Church will pray with its face toward the West, and all the prairies and inland cities will surrender to God; and will pray with face toward the sea, and all the islands and ships will become Christian. Parents who have wayward sons will get down on their knees and say: "Lord, send my boy home," and the boy in Canton shall get right up from the gaming-table, and go down to find out which ship starts first for America.

Not one of us yet knows how to pray. All we have done as yet has only been pottering. A boy gets hold of his father's saw and hammer, and tries to make something, but it is a poor affair that he makes. The father comes and takes the same saw and hammer, and builds the house or the ship. In the childhood of our Christian faith, we make but poor work with these weapons of prayer, but when we come to the stature of men in Christ Jesus, then, under these implements, the temple of God will rise, and the world's redemption will be launched. God cares not for the length of our prayers, or the number of our prayers, or the beauty of our prayers, or the place of our prayers; but it is the faith in them that tells. Believing prayer soars higher than the lark ever sang; plunges deeper than diving-bell ever sank; darts quicker than lightning ever flashed. Though we have used only the back of this weapon instead of the edge, what marvels have been wrought! If saved, we are all the captives of some earnest prayer. Would God that, in desire for the rescue of souls, we might in prayer lay hold of the resources of the Lord Omnipotent!

We may turn many to righteousness

By Christian Admonition

Do not wait until you can make a formal speech. Address the one next to you. You will not go home alone to-day. Between this and your place of stopping you may decide the eternal destiny of an immortal spirit. Just one sentence may do the work. Just one question. Just one look. The formal talk that begins with a sigh, and ends with a canting snuffle, is not what is wanted, but the heart-throb of a man in dead earnest. There is not a soul on earth that you may not bring to God if you rightly go at it. They said Gibraltar could not be taken. It is a rock, sixteen hundred feet high and three miles long. But the English and Dutch did take it. Artillery, and sappers and miners, and fleets pouring out volleys of death, and thousands of men reckless of danger, can do anything. The stoutest heart of sin, though it be rock, and surrounded by an ocean of transgression, under Christian bombardment may hoist the flag of redemption.

The Reward.

But is all this admonition and prayer and Christian work for nothing? My text promises to all the faithful eternal lustre. "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever." As stars, the redeemed have a borrowed light. What makes Mars and Venus and Jupiter so luminous? When the sun throws down his torch in the heavens, the stars pick up the scattered brands, and hold them in procession as the queen of the night advances; so all Christian workers, standing around the throne, will shine in the light borrowed from the Sun of Righteousness—Jesus in their faces, Jesus in their songs, Jesus in their triumph.

Christ left heaven once for a tour of redemption on earth, yet the glorified ones knew He would come back again. But let Him abdicate His throne, and go away to stay for ever, the music would stop; the congregation disperse; the temples of God be darkened; the rivers of light stagnate; and every chariot would become a hearse, and every bell would toll, and there would not be room on the hillsides to bury the dead of the great metropolis, for there would be pestilence in heaven. But Jesus lives, and so all the redeemed live with Him. He shall recognize them as His comrades in earthly toil, and remember what they did for the honor of His name, and for the spread of His kingdom. All their prayers and tears and work will rise before Him as He looks into their faces, and He will divide His kingdom with them; His peace—their peace; His holiness—their holiness; His joy—their joy. The glory of the central throne reflected from the surrounding thrones, the last spot of sin struck from the Christian orb, and the entire nature a-tremble and a-flash with light, they shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.

Again: Christian workers shall be like the stars in the fact that they have

A Light Independent

of each other. Look up at the night, and see each world show its distinct glory. It is not like the conflagration, in which you cannot tell where one flame stops and another begins. Neptune, Herschel, and Mercury are as distinct as if each one of them were the only star; so our individualism will not be lost in heaven. A great multitude—yet each one as observable, as distinctly recognized, as greatly celebrated, as if in all the space, from gate to gate, and from hill to hill, he were the only inhabitant; no mixing up—no mob—no indiscriminate rush; each Christian worker

Standing Out Illustrious—

all the story of earthly achievement adhering to each one; his self-denials and pains and services and victories published. Before men went out to the last war, the orators told them that they would all be remembered by their country, and their names be commemorated in poetry and in song; but go to the graveyard in Richmond, and you will find there six thousand graves, over each one of which is the inscription, "Unknown." The world does not remember its heroes; but there will be no unrecognized Christian worker in heaven. Each one known by all; grandly known; known by acclamation: all the past story of work for God gleaming in cheek and brow and foot and palm. They shall shine with distinct light as the stars, for ever and ever.

Again: Christian workers shall shine like the Stars in Clusters.

In looking up, you find the worlds in family circles. Brothers and sisters—they take hold of each other's hands and dance in groups. Orion in a group. The Pleiades in a group. The solar system is only a company of children, with bright faces, gathered around one great fireplace. The worlds do not straggle off. They go in squadrons and fleets, sailing through immensity. So Christian workers in heaven will dwell in neighborhoods and clusters.

I am sure that some people I will like in heaven a great deal better than others. Yonder is a constellation of stately Christians. They lived on earth by rigid rule. They never laughed. They walked every hour anxious lest they should lose their dignity. But they loved God; and yonder they shine in brilliant constellation. Yet I shall not long to get into that particular group. Yonder is a constellation of small-hearted Christians—asteroids in the eternal astronomy. While some souls go up from Christian battle, and blaze like Mars, these asteroids dart a feeble ray like Vesta. Yonder is a constellation of martyrs, of apostles, of patriarchs. Our souls, as they go up to heaven, will seek out the most congenial society.

Yonder is a constellation almost merry with the play of light. On earth they were full of sympathies and songs and tears and raptures and congratulations. When they prayed, their words took fire; when they sang, the tune could not hold them; when they wept over a world's woes, they sobbed as if heart-broken; when they worked for Christ they flamed with enthusiasm. Yonder they are—circle of light! constellation of joy! galaxy of fire! Oh, that you and I, by that grace which can transform the worst into the best, might at last sail in the wake of that fleet, and wheel in that glorious group, as the stars for ever and ever!

Again: Christian workers will shine like the stars in swiftness of motion. The worlds

Do not Stop to Shine.

There are no fixed stars save as to relative position. The star most thoroughly fixed flies thousands of miles a minute. The astronomer, using his telescope for an alpenstock, leaps from world-crag to world-crag, and finds no star standing still. The chamois hunter has to fly to catch his prey, but not so swift is his game as that which the scientist tries to shoot through the tower of observatory. Like petrels mid-Atlantic, that seem to come from no shore, and be bound to no landing-place—flying, flying—so these great flocks of worlds rest not as they go—wing and wing—age after age—for ever and ever. The eagle hastes to its prey, but we shall in speed beat the eagles.

You have noticed the velocity of the swift horse under whose feet the miles slip like a smooth ribbon, and as he passes, the four hoofs strike the earth in such quick beat your pulses take the same vibration. But all these things are not swift in comparison with the motion of which I speak. The moon moves fifty-four thousand miles in a day. Yonder, Neptune flashes on eleven thousand miles in an hour. Yonder Mercury goes one hundred and nine thousand miles in an hour. So like the stars the Christian shall shine in swiftness of motion.

You hear now of father or mother or child sick one thousand miles away, and it takes you two days to get to them. You hear of some case of suffering that demands your immediate attention, but it takes you an hour to get there. Oh, the joy when you shall, in fulfilment of the text, take starry speed, and be equal to one hundred thousand miles an hour! Having on earth got used to Christian work, you will not quit when death strikes you. You will only take on more velocity. There is a dying child in London, and its spirit must be taken up to God: you are there in an instant to do it. There is a young man in New York to be arrested from going into that gate of sin: you are there in an instant to arrest him. Whether with spring of foot, or stroke of wing, or by the force of some new law that shall hurl you to the spot where you would go, I know not; but my text suggests velocity. All space open before you, with nothing to hinder you in mission of light and love and joy, you shall shine in swiftness of motion as the stars for ever and ever.

Again: Christian workers, like the stars,

Shine in Magnitude.

The most illiterate man knows that these things in the sky, looking like gilt buttons, are great masses of matter. To weigh them, one would think that it would require scales with a pillar hundreds of thousands of miles high, and chains hundreds of thousands of miles long, and at the bottom of the chains basins on either side hundreds of thousands of miles wide, and that then Omnipotence alone could put the mountains into the scales and the hills into the balance. But puny man has been equal to the undertaking, and has set a little balance on his geometry, and weighed world against world. Yea, he has pulled out his measuring line, and announced that Herschel is thirty-six thousand miles in diameter, Saturn seventy-nine thousand miles in diameter, and Jupiter eighty-nine thousand miles in diameter, and that the smallest pearl on the beach of heaven is immense beyond all imagination. So all they who have toiled for Christ on earth shall rise up to a magnitude of privilege, and a magnitude of strength, and a magnitude of holiness, and a magnitude of joy; and the weakest saint in glory become greater than all that we can imagine of an arch-angel.

Brethren, it doth not yet appear what we shall be. Wisdom that shall know everything; wealth that shall possess everything; strength that shall do everything; glory that shall circumscribe everything! We shall not be like a taper set in a sick man's window, or a bundle of stick kindled on the beach to warm a shivering crew; but you must take the diameter and the circumference of the world, if you would get any idea of the greatness of our estate when we shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.

Lastly—and coming to this point my mind almost breaks down under the contemplation—like the stars, all Christian workers shall

Shine in Duration,

The same stars that look down upon us looked down upon the Chaldean shepherds. The meteor that I saw flashing across the sky the other night, I wonder if it was not the same one that pointed down to where Jesus lay in the manger, and if, having pointed out His birthplace, it has ever since been wandering through the heavens, watching to see how the world would treat Him! When Adam awoke in the garden in the cool of the day, he saw coming out through the dusk of the evening the same worlds that greeted us last night.

In Independence Hall is an old cracked bell that sounded the signature of the Declaration of Independence. You cannot ring it now; but this great chime of silver bells that strike in the dome of night, ring out with as sweet a tone as when God swung them at the creation. Look up at night, and know that the white lilies that bloom in all the hanging gardens of our King are century plants—not blooming once in a hundred years, but through all the centuries.

The star at which the mariner looks to-night was the light by which the ships of Tarshish were guided across the Mediterranean, and the Venetian flotilla found its way into Lepanto. Their armor is as bright to-night as when, in ancient battle, the stars in their courses fought against Sisera. To the ancients the stars were Symbols of Eternity.

But here the figure of my text breaks down—not in defeat, but in the majesties of the judgment. The stars shall not shine forever. The Bible says they shall fall like autumnal leaves. As, when the connecting factory-band slips at nightfall from the main-wheel, all the smaller wheels slacken their speed, and with slower and slower motion they turn until they come to a full stop; so this great machinery of the universe, wheel within wheel, making revolution of appalling speed, shall, by the touch of God's hand, slip the band of present law, and slacken and stop. That is what will be the matter with the mountains. The chariots in which they ride shall halt so suddenly that the kings shall be thrown out. Star after star shall be carried out to burial amid funeral torches and burning worlds. Constellations shall throw ashes on their heads, and all up and down the highways of space there shall be mourning, mourning, mourning, because the worlds are dead. But the Christian workers shall never quit their thrones—they shall reign for ever and ever.

CONVERTED IN THE CATACOMBS.

IN an introduction to a lecture by Prof. de Launay, formerly Professor of ancient and modern languages in the State College of Louisiana, Canon Christopher recently gave an interesting account of the Professor's conversion from Roman Catholicism. It appears that M. de Launay, who is a native of Paris, after graduating at the University of Angers, was placed by his relatives under the care of the Vicar-General of the Jesuits, at Rome, as his spiritual adviser. He studied under Cardinal Mezzofanti, the most reputed linguist of his day. He was joined to the company of Jesus, and was sent to Fribourg. There, while preparing to enter as a novice, an attack of typhoid fever brought him to the verge of death. In his anguish of soul he sent for a priest to bring him the Viaticum, or last Communion. The priest, whilst lifting up the host, exclaimed in Latin, "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled"; "Come unto Me all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." These words were a light in the darkness to his agonized soul, but the clear, bright sun of simple trust in Christ was not yet apparent.

After recovering he returned to Rome, and he frequently visited the catacombs. Among these tombs of the martyrs his troubled spirit found peace, joy, light, and repose, in beholding, reading, and sketching the pictorial records and inscriptions on these tombs. Here he learned how far Popery had wandered away from the truth and teachings of Christ. In the first three centuries of bloody persecution he found nowhere a prayer for the dead, nor to the dead; nowhere a crucifix, but the signs and symbols of the Resurrection; nowhere among the miles and miles of graves a prayer to the blessed mother of our Lord; she is not even named. Here there was no grovelling devotion to sculptured images of wood and stone. M. de Launay perceived that the religion of the early Christians and martyrs buried in the catacombs was what the New Testament taught, but not what the Church of Rome taught. He felt that he could not conscientiously remain a Roman Catholic. He came to America, and after laboring for some time in the College of Louisiana, went to Paris, where he is now laboring with much success as a Protestant missionary.

THE SPIRIT IN THE COMING AGE.

By Pastor E. P. Marvin.*

His Progressive Work—Pentecost to be Eclipsed in the Coming Outporing—At the Bringing in of the Fullness of the Gentiles—Bodies of the Saints Redeemed—The Brute Creation to Share—The Timely Watch-Cry—The Duty of Watchfulness.

THE Holy Spirit has been constantly at work in the world from the creation. He brooded over chaotic creation, Gen. 1 : 2, inspired prophets, II Pet. 1 : 21, filled them with power, Micah 3 : 8, and wrought wonders through Moses. Joshua, Samson, and Elijah. He co-operated continually with Christ on earth in all His wondrous works, Matt. 12 : 28. Christ was filled with the Holy Spirit, Luke 4 : 1. He was conceived, Matt. 1 : 20, anointed, Acts 10 : 28. and raised from the dead by the Holy Spirit, I Pet. 3 : 18. He breathed the Spirit on His disciples, John 20 : 22. The present is "the special dispensation of the Holy Spirit" only in its Progressive and Varied Work.

It is really a dispensation of the Trinity. All three persons were represented at the Baptism of Christ. The Holy Spirit, as the Executive of Divinity, applies the purchased Redemption, and calls out the Bride elect. Christ, the Prince of Life, imparts life through the Holy Spirit. The promise and potency of all regeneration and restitution resides in the Spirit of God—"As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end, Amen." As the work of the Spirit has been progressive in power and permanence in ages past, we may expect the same divine progress in ages to come.

Many prophecies of the Spirit's power and work await a more complete fulfilment at and after the Coming of the Lord. The blessing at Pentecost and afterward, is repeatedly called an "earnest," that is a sample and pledge of more to follow, II Cor. 1 : 22, and 5 : 5; Eph. 1 : 14. The earnest is but a small portion of the promised abundance. A careful study of Joel 2 : 28-32 reveals that this prophecy does not find its complete and final fulfilment in Acts 2 : 15-20. Verses 12, 17, 18, 27, in Joel, interpret "afterward" in v. 28. After the repentance and restoration of God's ancient people, will come the Great Outpouring. Besides, the Spirit was not poured out on "all flesh" at Pentecost, but only on Jews in Jerusalem, and there were no celestial "signs." Every prophecy must find its mate, and Pentecost does not fully meet and complete this. Again, in Acts 3 : 19, 21, it is declared that when God's ancient people repent, refreshing shall come, Christ shall return, and be ushered in. We cannot separate these events widely, and they are all in the future. They are called times or seasons of refreshing, and they are directly related to the Coming of the Lord. We also read of these in James 5 : 7 as "the early and latter rain." Pentecost then was but an increase of blessing over the past, and an earnest of the future.

Prophetic Restitution

A more powerful, conspicuous, and wonderful outpouring of the Holy Spirit will come when the Fullness of the Gentiles is brought in, Christ returns, and the Jews are restored. The first work is to evangelize the world and gather in the "election of grace," the fullness of the Gentiles, the Bride of Christ. Then the Spirit will work with seven-fold power. There shall be showers and floods of blessing. Ps. 72 : 67; Isa. 44 : 3; Ezek. 34 : 46. A new heart will be given, and Israel shall come forth from the charnel house. Ezek. 36 : 4-28, and 37 : 1-13. Israel shall be honored among the nations, and wonders shall be wrought. Zech. 8 : 21-23; Acts 15 : 14-17; Rom. 11 : 15, 26. We have in the order of redemption : 1. An election of Jews. 2. An election of Gentiles. 3. The nation of Jews. 4. The nation of Gentiles.

God chose the Jew first to preserve and transmit His truth and grace. Upon his failure, is called. After this election of grace is complete, the Jew must come again upon the scene to be blest, and to bless the world. Gen. 12 : 3. The Jews were the first missionaries, and they will be the last, up to the "Coming Day." They are God's Mediatorial People, destined to fill the world with the knowledge of God. Pentecost must be repeated with seven-fold power before the millennium, acting upon the long-rejected people, and through them upon the nations.

A Gentile Remnant

Prophecy forecasts blended scenes of judgment and mercy, love and wrath, rewards and punishments. Ps. 2 : 8, 9; II Thess. 1 : 8; Jude 14. See the Book of Revelation. Until then we shall win no general and decisive victory. This is true divine evolution from age to age. The "good time is coming," not by human wisdom and worldly progress. Professor Guizot used often to speak in foreign tongue of "devil-upment," and this foreign-coined word fitly characterizes the general progress of the race for the whole 6,000 years.

Then will the Holy Spirit redeem the bodies of the saints from the grave, and transfigure those of the living saints. No one ever died in the presence of Christ on earth, and some were raised to life as an earnest of the future. Our bodies, fashioned like unto the glorious body of the Son of God, will be the everlasting temple of the life-giving Spirit. John 6 : 63; Rom. 8 : 11; I Cor. 15 : 42-53; I Thess. 4 : 16-18.

The Inferior Creation, cursed by sin and made subject to vanity, shall be regenerated and restored by the Holy Spirit. The Spirit will flood the earth, operating again on matter, eradicating the curse, renewing the face of the earth, and causing the desert to rejoice and blosson like the rose. Job 26 : 13; Ps. 104 : 30; Isa. 35 : 1; Rom. 8 : 10, 11.

This is the "regeneration," the bloom-time, when new life shall spring and beauty smile on every side. The earth is linked with man in both humiliation and glory. Soul, body, and earth are all redeemed. Man's original inheritance, usurped and damaged by the usurper. Satan, is then to be renovated and restored. Even the brute creation share in the restitution, Their savage nature is eradicated, and they dwell in peace with man and each other. Isa. 11 : 6-9. The Spirit can tame savage beasts as easily as savage men. Thus Satan's world becomes the Lord's again, and this is a prelude to the eternal state. Ps. 24. The Spirit, in co-operation with our Messianic King, erects and manifests the promised Kingdom, and becomes the centre of the world's peace. Isa. 32 : 1; Hag. 2 : 9. And we, as fellow-heirs, shall share in the glory and authority of the heavenly department of this kingdom. II Tim. 4 : 18. Israel on earth, as the head of nations and the source of blessing, shares the glory of the terrestrial. At the close of this millennial stage, we have the last judgment, and the complete renewal of the earth as the eternal home of the saints, underneath the new heavens, all plainly revealed. We may see, then, that Christ and the Holy Spirit do not make a failure, because the world is not all converted in this dispensation. Indeed, if the conquest of the world had been the dispensational promise and purpose, we might well call the last 1800 years a failure. But the true purpose (Acts 15 : 14) has been, and is being clearly fulfilled, and it is no failure that the spirit does not finish up all His work in our time. A glorious and final triumph is sure in ages to come.

Jerusalem, the Metropolis,

Ministers of the Word who neglect the careful and prayerful study of Dispensational Truth, may well fear that a blight will come upon their spiritual life, and failure on their ministry. And especially must those who wilfully shut their eyes to the flood of light now poured upon their pathway concerning the present truth and blessed hope of the Lord's Coming, totally misunderstand "the signs of the times," blunder much in fruitless services, lack the supreme inspiration of revelation, and "be ashamed before Him at His Coming.' "Maranatha" is and this is more and more testing and assorting the hearts, lives, and labors of the professing Church. We are not following a forlorn hope because we do not now "take the world for Christ," but allow Him the glory of taking it for Himself, in co-operation with the blessed Holy Spirit. Constantine first conceived the unscriptural scheme of erecting the Church into a kingdom, taking the world, and reigning in the absence of its rejected sovereign, and he thus inaugurated the greatest apostacy the Church ever saw. The Post-millennial error, "My Lord delayeth His coming," causes no small part of the worldliness and apostacy of the Church to-day. We are cheered by a bright hope, stimulated by an ever-imminent triumph, and encouraged by a reward insured by fidelity. II Tim. 4 : 7, 8.

The Timely Watch-cry.

Corporate testimony in holy living, apart from the world, seems almost gone. The spiritual grace of wisdom and corporate soul-winning by the stated means of grace, has fearfully declined. As a pastor, I am compelled to confess that the Spirit seems to use the professing Church less and less, as if corporate fellowship service were ending. As pastors we seem to be gathering the few grape gleanings after the vintage is done! We are resolved into individual testimony and service. Rev. 3 : 20. Evangelists, who look for that Blessed Hope, seem to be doing most of the soul-winning. It is suppertime. We must go to the streets and lanes, the highways and hedges.

Finally, how frequently we should pray, and how eagerly we should watch for the speedy Coming of the Lord! Christ prayed for the Spirit to come, John 14 : 16, 17; and the Spirit prays for Christ to return, Rev. 22 : 17. Revelation closes with a promise from heaven, which is wafted back in a prayer. Rev. 22 : 20.

* From his recent lecture at Niagara, contained in full, revised by himself, in The Word, a pamphlet of 192 pages, comprising also prophetic lectures by Rev. H. M. Parsons, Rev. James H. Brooks, D. D., of St. Louis; Rev. Albert Erdman, D. D.,; Rev. S. H. Kellogg, D. D.; and other able expositors of prophecy. Owing to the large demand for this work, a supply of copies has been procured by Mr. J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York, who will mail a copy to any address for fifty cents.

A NIGHT ON A MOUNTAIN.

A FAMILY on the brink of a precipice in the dark had a hairbreadth escape from death on June 9. That afternoon, a farmer living in Sullivan County, Penn., set out in a light spring wagon with two horses from Williamsport to go to Eagle's Mere. He was accompanied by his wife and his two small children. Just as it was growing dusk, and when within a few miles of their destination, the farmer in crossing the rough mountain path took a wrong turn. They travelled on without discovering the mistake for two hours. It grew very dark, and the overhanging branches of trees shut out even starlight. Yet they went on until suddenly the woman broke silence with, "I hear a noise like rushing waters." The farmer was loth to believe it, but lest there might be danger he stopped the horses. He then heard the ominous roar of a waterfall. The man was unnerved for a minute, when he lighted a piece of paper and to his horror discovered that they were on the brink of a precipice. Two more steps and the entire party would have been hurled down into a stream of water threading a sharp and rugged bed of rock two hundred feet below. Towering above them on the other side of the pathway was a straight wall of rock as high above them as the roaring falls beneath. It was a moment of awful suspense. As quickly as he could, the farmer had his wife and children out of the vehicle, and then, finding there was not room enough to turn, he unharnessed the horses and took out the pole. He reversed the wagon inch by inch, fearful every moment of its turning over the precipice; the horses were again hitched to, and they began to retrace their steps, the farmer walking at their heads. In this way they travelled over rough and dangerous roads, infested with bears and panthers, until the welcome dawn greeted their eyes. Not far off they heard the tinkle of cow bells and the barking of a dog. A loud shout brought a man to them who put them in the right road for Eagle's Mere. When they arrived the lady was so prostrated by the fearful experience of the night that for five hours she was unable to speak. Their peril was a fit type of the lives of thousands. Lost on the mountains of unbelief, in spiritual darkness, they are tending toward the precipice of death. But for all such God's Spirit waits to guide them to the path of peace and safety. (Ezek. 33: 11.)

HOW BISHOP PARKER DIED.

THE brief cablegram announcing the death of Bishop Parker, the successor of the martyred Bishop Hannington, which was all the intelligence we had of the sad event, when his portrait was published in this journal on June 7, has now been supplemented by a letter from Dr. Mackay. Writing from Usambiro, Eastern Equatorial Africa, Dr. Mackay says: "At our evening meal on March 26, the Bishop seemed fairly well, and was quite cheerful. His room was next to mine, and between two and three o'clock in the morning I heard him call his servant, Robert. I got up, thinking there was something wrong, and found him in bed shaking with a sharp attack of ague. He said that he had just taken a glass of quinine, but feared he had done so too late to ward off the attack. Ashe and I got him a hot bottle for his feet, and stayed with him a short time until the second or hot stage had begun to yield to slight perspiration. He begged us to retire, but bade his boy to sleep in the room by him, so as to be ready to call any of us should he feel worse. Soon after six o'clock on Monday morning, I went in to see him. He seemed to be in a very high fever, and completely jaundiced in appearance. Towards evening the fever passed off and coma set in. We arranged to divide the night in watching him, the hours till midnight falling to me. He seemed to sleep fairly quietly till about half-past nine, when breathing became irregular, and he began to groan. I sent for Ashe quickly, and just as he arrived breathing stopped, and our dear Bishop ceased to be with us. He died at 9: 45, just an hour of a fortnight since Blackburn expired. The loss to us is, indeed, great, but Africa has lost a true friend.

A FACT FOR STATESMEN.

THE uneasiness produced in all countries now by the anarchic tendencies of workingmen is on both sides of the Atlantic calling for the attention of statesmen. Not only in our own country, but in Germany, France, England, Belgium, and other lands, the governments are aware that the most difficult problem, but the most urgent is the Labor Question. As a rule, however, they overlook the fact that the most successful preventive of anarchy and social disorder is the gospel. Nowhere is the revolutionary spirit so active as among the artisans of France, among whom the Rev. R. W. McAll's mission is successfully laboring, and this is the testimony of one of its most prominent workers: "The result of the services of the mission hall is most hopeful. Restless, discouraged, desperate hearts are the very ones for whom it has a message, and, go where it will in France, it finds such hearts to-day. So much the greater, then, is the need of carrying the work forward into places where it has not yet penetrated. For while the Spirit of God is moving in the hearts of this people, discontented with their present lot, though not yet realizing their need of the gospel, the time is most propitious to present to them that which is their best and sufficient help. If any proof were needed that the gospel is a true panacea, even for the social woes under which the common people of France, as of all Europe, are suffering, it comes to us from the report of the Protestant pastors of Belgium, who have publicly stated that not one of the members of their churches (principally laboring men, whose poverty is deep, and whose outlook is dark and discouraging) took any part in the violent labor disturbances which a year or more ago agitated all Liege and the district of Charleroi; but conducted themselves throughout as Christians."

ONE BIBLE IN A CHILIAN HOME.

A DEEPLY encouraging incident is reported in a Bible Society's report. It states that a Bible in Spanish was given, some time ago, to a Chilian sailor serving on board a steamer. The donor was a passenger, who said it was of no use to him, and the sailor was welcome to it. The young Chilian was deeply interested in it, and without any human agency whatever he became a true Christian. On his return trip he brought the Bible home with him to Talcahuano, where his parents and brothers and sisters resided. His eldest sister commenced a study of the book, and in a short time she gave up the confessional and the mass, and became a true Christian. In the course of two years the whole family, including her parents, three sisters, two brothers, and a brother-in-law, all embraced the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and gave up all connection with Rome. This great work of God was performed without any instrumentality except His own Word and Spirit. The Rev. Dr. Swaney, a missionary in Chili, on his arrival there, met this Christian family.

A VICIOUS RELIGIOUS FESTIVAL.

A NATIVE Christian missionary in India, sends to the Indian Witness a sickening account of the scenes at a mela as he witnessed them, and in the midst of which he preached the gospel. He says: "Last week, hoping to reach the masses of our benighted countrymen, I started in company with my two assistants to the Dhulian Mela (fair), held in honor of Krishna, eleven miles from our station. I think it will not be uninteresting to state why these melas are held. To avert calamity and to bring down blessings, an image of Krishna, who is called by the people a living Sham Chand (supposing him always ready to grant their wishes) is brought by the wealthy classes from its shrine on the payment of a large sum of money. The image comes, attended by a Mohanto, who is respected and dreaded more than the god himself. The people flock to all parts to beg his blessings. It is a painful sight to see the Mohanto surrounded on all sides by the superstitious devotees, who remain on their knees until the food which was given to the god is distributed to them. To meet the wants of the immense concourse of people, the shop-keepers come; to gratify the lusts of the dissolute, prostitutes flock; to please the senses of hearing and seeing, of the poor as well as the rich, the dancing men and women resort; to amuse the children, players get together; and to cheat the innocent, gamblers assemble. These are the constituent parts which compose a mela. Thus is the most sacred shrine of the Hindus turned into a den of wickedness.

A SINGULAR TESTIMONY IN INDIA.

A STRIKING testimony to the effect of gospel preaching is mentioned in a letter from the Rev. W. A. Moore, a missionary in India to Dr. Cullis, who publishes it in his Times of Refreshing. He says: "Yesterday Goolab Sing went to the small-cause court to preach to the persons who gather there. He met an old friend, who said, 'Wherever I go, I hear you Christians preach, and no matter what we may say against your doctrines, yet the truth sticks. Until recently I did not think anything about doing wrong, but lately, when I lie, the thought, "What will I do should death overtake me?" makes me tremble and makes me afraid to do wrong."' Mr. Moore goes on to say: "A few days ago I sent out Bhkum Sing with some vernacular books for sale. He went to the house of our old Marathi teacher and found him reading the Bible. This teacher takes three Christian papers, and seeing the Bible advertised in one of them, sent for one and is studying. The Christian papers taken by him are eagerly read by several educated Hindus. Last Sunday, while preaching in the bazaar, a brazier listened very attentively. After we finished preaching, I gave away a few Gospels. This brazier was very anxious to get one, but as a man from a distant village wanted one we gave it to him, and told the brazier he would get one if he went to Goolab Sing's next day. Next day he went to G. S's place, and brother Namajee had a long talk with him. The man is convinced of the truth, but does not know how to earn his livelihood if he became a Christian."

POLITICAL PROGRESS IN JAPAN.

THE interest excited throughout the civilized world in the condition of Japan, especially among Christians, who hear with gladness of the opportunities afforded in that country for the preaching of the gospel, is gratified by the publication in the New York Evening Post of a lengthy letter from Rev. T. S. Tyng, the Protestant Episcopal missionary at Osaka. The facts which he there gives show a remarkable advance in civil liberty, and indicate that in the matter of elections the Japanese are at least as far advanced as ourselves. He says: "Another straw, showing the movement of the current, is shown in a case now pending in the superior court of this city. An election to fill a vacancy in the assembly of a recent prefecture, was recently held. Party spirit ran high. The sub-prefect, who had the counting of the votes, was of the minority party, and, if report is true, threw out, on the ground of mistake in the writing of a name, votes enough to elect his candidate, and reported to the prefect accordingly. The prefect accepted his report, and declared his candidate elected. For this he has been indicted, at the instance of the opposite party, and, appointee of the central government though he is, must now stand his trial in the ordinary courts of law, for accepting and giving effect to the report of his subordinate. This is but one of many indications that the power of popular government as already established in Japan, is growing stronger day by day."

The impression of Japan, recently produced by the popular representation of the humorists, is also declared by Mr. Tyng to be erroneous. He says: "Assassination or beheading may be the Asiatic method of asking for the resignation of obnoxious cabinet officers, but it is certainly not the method now or lately in vogue in Japan. Of recent ministers of state, Kurofla, in 1882, or thereabouts, and Inouye, in 1887, were driven from office by popular opinion—the former for alleged corruption, the latter for too great concession to foreign powers in the negotiations for treaty revision; but neither has met with any tragical fate. Okuma, Itagaki, Tani, and Soyeshima are names of some who have quietly withdrawn because of disagreement with the party in power; Okuma and Itagaki becoming leaders respectively of the moderate and advanced liberals. There has been no instance of a cabinet minister beheaded since the revolution which established the Mikado's government in 1868, and no beheading of anybody since that form of punishment was abolished in 1873. Capital punishment in any form is now reserved for cases of high treason, murder, and sometimes arson, and can be inflicted in no case whatever, except by due process of law, through the agency of the courts, as in the case, also, with all punishment for felony. A good instance (one out of many) of the absence of bloodthirstiness in the treatment of political offenders, is Mr. Mutsu. He was convicted of complicity in Saigo's rebellion, condemned to five years' imprisonment, released at the end of two years and a half; in eighteen months more put into office, and now goes to represent his country as Minister at Washington."

The Antichrist, Babylon, and the Coming of the Kingdom, by G. H. Pember, M. A. A new work of remarkable originality and power, written in a popular and simple style, yet showing much scholarly research, 171 pages; Price in cloth covers, 75 cents (postage included). For sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICE, 63 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

EVERY NUMBER CONTAINS:

The Portrait and Biography of some eminent person.
The Sermon Dr. Talmage preached the last Sunday morning.
An Exposition of Unfulfilled Prophecy.
A Summary of the Events of the Week, Notes of Religious and Temperance Movements. etc.
A Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, from advance sheets sent by special arrangement.
Pictures of Missionary Life, etc., and Descriptive Articles.
An instalment of a Serial Story.
An Exposition of the International Sunday-School Lesson, by Mrs. M. Baxter.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50.

Remittances by mail should be by bank cheques, Post-office orders, or Express money-orders whenever possible. If currency is sent it should be in a registered letter. Cheques and money-orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Making them payable to individuals often causes delay.

New subscriptions may commence at any time. When subscribers do not indicate their wish, they commence with the first number of the month in which the subscription is received.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

The whole edition of The Christian Herald was mailed last week to subscribers during Tuesday, June 19. The last delivery at the New York Post Office was made at 11.56 P. M.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Republican National Convention which assembled at Chicago on June 19, joined issue with the Democratic party, as was expected, on the Tariff question. It stands squarely, explicitly, and emphatically for Protection, with a tariff not for revenue, but for the nurture of American industries. If a large surplus continues to accumulate therefrom, the Convention was in favor of the abolition of the Internal Revenue, or large expenditures for the national welfare, in preference to any reduction of the tariff. As the plank of the platform adopted by the Convention on Thursday last is likely to become the subject of discussion in every city in the country, and as it is an unequivocal declaration of the political faith of the Republican party, it may be well to quote it in full. The Convention declared: "We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection. We protest against its destruction as proposed by the President and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue, and confidently appeal to the people for their judgment. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff. We denounce the Mills Bill as destructive to the general business, the labor and the farming interests of the country, and we heartily indorse the consistent and patriotic action of the Republican Representatives in Congress in opposing its passage. We condemn the proposition of the Democratic party to place wool on the free list, and we insist that the duties thereon shall be adjusted and maintained so as to furnish full and adequate protection to that industry. The Republican party would effect all needed reduction of the national revenue by repealing the tax upon tobacco, which are an annoyance and burden to agriculture, and the tax upon spirits used in the arts and for mechanical purposes; and by such revision of the tariff laws as will tend to check imports of such articles as are produced by our people, the production of which gives employment to our labor, and releases from import duties those articles of foreign production (except luxuries) the like of which cannot be produced at home. If there shall still remain a larger revenue than is requisite for the wants of the Government, we favor the entire repeal of internal taxes rather than the surrender of any part of our protective system, at the joint behest of the Whisky Trusts and the agents of foreign manufacturers." The platform also advocates the bi-metallic standard of money, the reduction of letter postage to one cent an ounce, and condemns the Fishery treaty.

The Balloting for Candidates for the Presidency was commenced by the Convention on Friday last. The number necessary to a choice was 417. In the first ballot the candidates and numbers stood as follows: Sherman 229; Gresham, 114; Depew, 99; Alger, 84; Harrison, 79; Allison, 72; Blaine, 31; Ingalls, 28—(These were 17 from Kansas, 10 from Arkansas, and 1 from South Carolina. The names of the men who thought Ingalls fit for the Presidency have not been published.)—Phelps, 25; Rusk, 25; Fitler, 24; Hawley, 13; Lincoln, 3; McKinley, 2. On the second ballot Sherman made a gain of twenty; Alger, of thirty-two; and Harrison, of sixteen. The third ballot, which was the last taken on Friday showed no material changes.

The Modification of the Order of the Indian Bureau, in regard to the use of native languages in the Indian schools has been so made as to be entirely satisfactory to the religious societies interested in the improvement of the Indians. The purpose of the Government in insisting upon the use of the English language in the Indian schools, was that young Indians might be brought up to the familiar use of the language which is necessary to them in adopting the arts and ways of civilization, and to their self-dependence and protection in their contact with white men. The President, however, perceives that the missionaries and religious teachers, who render great assistance to the Government in the work of making the Indians tractable and self-reliant, and preparing them for a better social and industrial condition, find it difficult to reach their understanding and feelings effectually by the use of any dialect except their own in their religious instruction. The order, therefore, remains in force, but exceptions are made in favor of religious teachers.

The General Conference on Foreign Missions in Exeter Hall, London, ended June 20. Among the speakers were Rev. Dr. Ellenwood and Rev. Dr. John Hall, both of New York. The following American ministers, among others, were seen in the audience: Dr. Pierson, Dr. Murdock, and Dr. Gordon, Boston; Dr. Dowkontt, F. Emerson, G. Post, D. Langford, Dr. Boardman, and Dr. Chambers. The speakers contended that mission work was one of the duties of a nation, and that the country that refused to obey the Lord's command to preach the gospel to all people would certainly have to look to the morals of its own inhabitants. A high tribute was paid by Dr. Murdoch, of Boston, to the King of the Belgians for his efforts to suppress the sale of liquor in the Congo State. A committee, including Mr. Murdoch, was appointed to present an appropriate address to King Leopold. Mr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, made the concluding address. He testified to the deep impression that the Conference had made on the delegates.

The New Kaiser has Issued his Proclamation to the German people. It lacks the ring of spontaneity which characterized his addresses to the army and navy. It probably indicates the effect recent public criticisms have had upon the young monarch. He cannot fail to have noticed that while his father was admired and beloved, he himself is regarded with distrust, and his accession to the throne as a ground for apprehension. He evidently makes an effort to disarm those feelings by his proclamation. After a glowing tribute to his father's memory, he says: "Called to the throne of my fathers, I have assumed the government, looking up to the King of kings, and have vowed to God that, after the example of my fathers, I will be a just and clement prince to my people; that I will foster piety and fear of God; that I will protect peace and promote the welfare of the country, and that I will be a helper of the poor and distressed and a true guardian of the right." The Emperor appears to have mistaken his century. Feudalism is dead. Such utterances on the part of his grandfather were pardonable in an aged king who had won distinction on the battle-field; but in a youth, they indicate notions which this century has outgrown.

The Burial of Emperor Frederick III. of Germany took place June 19, with impressive ceremonies and amid signs of sincere national grief. A spectator says: "Everyone seemed as if going to the funeral of one's own father or brother. The music was exquisite, and all the arrangements were in perfect taste and simplicity. The religious services were brief and went straight to the heart." Even Von Moltke, the venerable soldier, shed tears as he looked on the coffin of his soverign. A first semi-private service was held in Friedrickskron Castle, where the Emperor died, and a more public service in Friedenskirche. The new Emperor followed with the Prince of Wales and the King of Saxony. Prince Henri, the late Emperor's second son, the Prince of Saxe Meiningen, Prince Bismarck, Von Moltke, and many other distinguished personages were in the procession. Dr. Mackenzie had, at the new Emperor's request, made a formal report of the case, and the autopsy which the Emperor ordered to be made in defiance of the wishes of his widowed mother, fully confirmed the surgeon's statement.

The Pope's Rescript on Irish Affairs has produced so strong an antipathy to him among the Roman Catholic Nationalists in Ireland, that Archbishop Walsh has made an attempt to allay it by an interview published in the Freeman's Journal last week. The archbishop said that nothing was further from the Pope's thoughts than to put any obstacle in the way of the success of the Nationalist Cause. On the contrary, it was the Pope's firm conviction that the rescript, by condemning those points of practical working which evoked hostile criticism, would be of most decided assistance in the advancement of the programme. It may be so, but at present the Nationalists appear to think that a little more of such assistance would be fatal to their cause, and they are by no means grateful for the old gentleman's attempt to help them.

An Attempt to Reform the British House of Lords is being made by Lord Salisbury. He has prepared a bill for the purpose, which on June 19 he introduced in Parliament. The measure proposes that not more than three life peers shall be appointed yearly, these to be drawn from the judges of the superior courts, rear-admirals, major-generals, ambassadors, and privy councillors, the Queen also having the power to appoint two others yearly not so qualified. The changes are of a very feeble and ineffective character, but that any measure of the kind should be endorsed by a Conservative Government, is matter for astonishment.

Disquieting News of Mr. H. M. Stanley reached this country on Friday last. The cable brought a despatch from St. Paul de Loando, which reported that several deserters from Stanley's expedition have reached Camp Yambunga. They state that after traversing the Upper Aruwhimi, Stanley struck into a rough, mountainous country, covered with dense forests. The natives, who were excited by reports spread by the Arabs, disputed the passage of the expedition, and there was continuous fighting. Stanley was severely wounded by an arrow. He was compelled several times to construct camps in order to repel attacks, and was obliged to use the reserve provisions that were intended for Emin Pacha. The Soudanese attached to the force had all died or disappeared. The deserters estimate that the caravan had lost one-third of its men, and they say that many of those remaining were ill, including the Europeans. Stanley was encamped when the deserters left. He was surrounded by hostiles, and was unable to send news to Emin or directly to Yambunga. Letters were received from Emin Pacha, dated November 2, 1887, but no later date he had received no news of Stanley. An armed expedition, under Major Barttelot, has been sent to the relief of the explorer early in May.

The Reception into the Protestant Episcopal Church of Mgr. Bouland, the converted Roman Catholic Bishop, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal last week, took place on June 17, at Grace Church, New York. Various slanderous reports affecting his moral character were put in circulation when his conversion was announced, but Mgr. Bouland invited the most thorough investigation. Two committees were therefore appointed to sift the charges to the bottom, and both, after searching inquiries, pronounced the charges false. The convert was formally welcomed by Bishop Potter. He and the Bishop sat in the chancel during the prayers, and at their conclusion Mgr. Bouland, in the presence of two presbyters, the Rev. Dr. Miel, of Philadelphia, and the Rev. J. McD. Bottome, of Grace parish, stood before the Bishop, who delivered an allocution declaring the reception and charging him to observe the duties of his new allegiance. Mgr. Bouland declared his faith and his reasons for leaving the Catholic Church. It is expected that he will labor in Paris, France, after a brief period of rest.

A Jewish Rabbi's Blessing on a Christian church is published in a St. Louis journal. The Jewish congregation of Temple Israel, in that city, has been rebuilt recently, and, during the time that the congregation was excluded from its home, it was hospitably received in the building of the First Christian Church, where it held its services every Saturday. Its Synagogue being now completed, the Rabbi, Dr. S. H. Sonneschein, has written a letter of thanks to the Christian pastor, expressing the gratitude of the congregation for Christian hospitality. It concludes with the following patriarchal benediction: "This, your kindness, was one more of those precious links in the golden chain of mutual recognition which, under the fostering arms of true American civilization, reconciles the disciples of Moses to the disciples of Jesus. May this Godly spirit of a free fraternization abide and increase as the years roll on! May the Eternal Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, bless your church and all your hopes and plans! 'For my brethren's sake and friends' sake, I speak peace for thee. For the sake of our God's house I solicit thy weal.' (Psalm 122: 8-9.)" Surely, among the Church's hopes which the Rabbi prays God to bless, is one that every disciple of Moses may be led to see in his writings the Messiaship of Jesus of Nazareth.

A Disappointed Wife Who Carried her wrongs to the United States Supreme Court for redress, had her case decided on the last day of the recent term. She stated that while on a visit to Portland, Oregon, ten years ago, she met a man in society, who eventually asked her to marry him. He promised to convey to her, after marriage, two blocks of property in Portland. She consented to marry him, and her mother, who at first objected to the match, also agreed to it when she heard of the promised property. They were married, but the husband postponed, on one plea and another, making the formal conveyance. Finally, after some years of married life, he persuaded his wife to make a visit to Europe, taking their daughter with her to be educated. During her absence he had dealt with the property as his own, and had in fact settled it on another woman. The wife, thereupon, filed a bill of complaint, and carried her case to the Supreme Court. She was defeated, however, the Court holding that as she had never received a written agreement, nor received the rents of the property, nor exercised any of the rights and privileges of ownership, there was no evidence of transfer. Women who are about to marry for money will doubtless take warning from this case, and see to it that the property promised to them is legally conveyed, from some way their ownership is acknowledg-

Belg The Christian, as part of the Bride of of the has exceeding great and precious promlaborid he can have no fear that faith will not with him; but his life would be happier and more useful if he availed himself of his privileges and took up the earnest of his possession. (Eph. 1: 14.)

A Narrow Escape from Death by Suffocation occurred at Saccarappa, Me., recently. The Lewiston Journal says that a lady from Boston who was visiting that town, after spending a pleasant evening with her friends retired for the night. In her home in Boston the electric light was used, and in a fit of absent-mindedness she went to the gas burner and turned the tap, as she did that of the electric light in her own chamber at home. Of course there was in this case no brilliant arc of light, and in her abstraction she concluded that there was something wrong for the moment with the dynamo, and it would be all right presently. She therefore left the tap turned and retired to rest. Happily for her the smell of the escaping gas aroused some of the other inmates of the house and her life was saved, but it was with difficulty that she was aroused from unconsciousness. It used to be supposed that the blunder of turning on the gas without lighting was limited to persons who had not kept up with the times. It appears, however, that familiarity with the very latest triumphs of civilization is just as effectual in leading to the same blunder. It is so in religion. Among those who will be lost, the learned sceptics will stand side by side with the ignorant and vicious. (1 Cor. 3: 18-20.)

The Suicide of an Eleven-Year Old Boy has overwhelmed a family in New York with grief. The boy was exceedingly bright and intelligent. His teacher in the public school states that he made more progress than any boy in her class. He had, however, an unconquerable dislike to the study of the German language, which his father, who is a native of Germany, insisted on his learning. The boy was sent in the evenings to a German institution in the city for special instruction in the language, but early this year he absented himself and spent the evenings in play. The father supposed that he was attending regularly, and was not notified of his absense, because the teachers supposed the family had moved away. But last week a teacher met him in the street, and at once wrote to the father about his truancy. The boy felt sure he would receive a severe whipping, and one of his companions says he was in terrible distress about it. He procured some rat-poison on June 21, took it, and died the same night. If the boy could only have believed it possible that his father would forgive him, his wicked act might not have been committed. That is the awakened sinner's case, and when once he sees that through the atonement of Christ pardon is secured, despair gives place to joy. (Rom. 5: 11.)

A Verdict for a Wedding Present has Made a young couple in South Carolina happy. Some time ago, a family comprising a mother, her son and two daughters fell into extreme poverty through the death of the husband and father. Eventually, driven to their last resources, they contracted to work for a citizen of Abbeville. The laws of South Carolina are strict about the fulfilment of these contracts, and laborers under contract are held to implicit observance of them. One of the girls, however, who was very beautiful, won the affections of a prosperous young farmer of the neighborhood, and at his earnest solicitation consented to marry him. The ceremony was performed, but as the bride was still under contract, the young farmer was prosecuted for enticing her off the place. A despatch from Columbia, S. C., says, "The case was fought hotly on both sides, but the jury could not be induced to decide against the young couple, and has given them a verdict of not guilty as a wedding present." The verdict, if the despatch correctly states the case, appears to have been prompted by mercy rather than justice, as in law the bride's services were due under her contract. This is not the only case of an engagement being broken by marriage. A more serious one, which too often occurs, is that of persons who have given themselves to Christ, but when they are married becoming so absorbed in their new relation as to do nothing more in His service. This is the more inexcusable, because work in the Saviour's cause exalts and sanctifies married life. (1 Peter 3: 1 and 7).

A Living Necklace Around the Throat of a lady nearly caused her death last week. A telegram from Seymour, Ind., to the New York Herald states that the principal of the public school in that town heard screams from the children in the playground during recess. She ran out to learn what the trouble was, and was horrified to see a black racer snake, four feet in length, in possession of the yard. Quick as thought the snake turned upon her, ran up her back, and twisted itself around her neck so tightly that she was almost strangled. She was unable to cry out, but the children screamed lustily and their cries were heard by a man who was passing. He responded promptly, and succeeded in killing the snake before it seriously injured the lady. The nervous shock, however, has prostrated her, and she has been unable to attend to her duties since. Though the bite of this variety of snake is said to be harmless, its attacks are so treacherously made, and the strength of its coil is so great, that the victims cannot liberate themselves. It is so with the treacherous attacks of man's great enemy, that old serpent, the devil. The only sure way of escape is in the help of Christ, who has overcome him by Almighty power. (Heb. 2: 14, 15.)

BRIEF NOTES.

A contemporary states that Mrs. Hastings, a missionary in Ceylon, is a sister of President Cleveland.

Thirty thousand rupees (about $15,000) have been promised by American Young Men's Christian Associations toward establishing a Young Men's Christian Association in each university town in India.

The Rev. A. B. Simpson, of the Gospel Tabernacle Church, New York, announces that the annual summer convention and school will be held at Old Orchard Beach, Me., from August 10 to 20, 1888.

Inquiries as to the formation of clubs of King's Daughters, which are doing so much good in connnection with the Evangelical churches, should be sent to Mrs. B. Whitman, Lawrence Avenue, Dorchester, Mass.

Pundita Ramabai joined the King's Daughters during her stay in this country. Ramabai goes to her Indian home ready to extend the welcome to her sisters there. She takes with her the silver cross for her daughter, and hopes to form a "ten" immediately on her return.

Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost's series of meetings in Atlanta, Ga., were chiefly directed to revival work in the strict acceptation of the term, namely, to members of churches; the meetings were large, and many of all denominations attended, though the union meetings were not held.

A series of evangelistic meetings for young men has been commenced in Association Hall, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, New York, and will continue for one month. They are under the leadership of J. W. Dean, the former Secretary of the Association of Iowa.

Rev. Jacob Freshman recently visited Toronto, and was warmly welcomed by his large circle of friends. He preached in the morning (June 3) in St. James Square Church (of which Dr. Kellogg is pastor), and in the evening in Elm Street Methodist Church. The encouragement he received, both there and in Montreal, leads him to believe that he will be able to locate a missionary to the Jews in each city.

The services conducted by Messrs. Crossley and Hunter, St. Thomas, Ontario, have been the means of a wonderful revival, extending for many miles around. Men and women came from long distances to attend the meetings, and going home with a blessing, told their neighbors, who came too. The evangelists took the names of more than nine hundred persons during the month who were anxiously seeking salvation.

Mr. "Ben" Hogan, well known throughout the United States as a converted prize-fighter, is now holding services in Mr. and Mrs. Naylor's Berachah Mission, in West Thirty-second Street, New York. He has recently made a successful evangelistic tour on the Pacific Coast. In Oregon, Washington Territory, California, Montana, Utah, New Mexico, and in fact nearly every State and Territory in the Far West, he has held meetings which God has blessed to the conversion of some notoriously immoral characters.

Canvassers Wanted to Sell, from House to House, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Any man, woman or youth may easily add to their income every week by selling the paper in their spare hours in their own neighborhood. For terms address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

THE SLUGGARD'S FARM.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding; and, lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone wall thereof was broken down. Then I saw, and considered it well: I looked upon it, and received instruction."—Proverbs 24: 30-32.

A Wise Man Learning—Weeds as Teachers—I. A Definition of a Lazy Man—Not His Own Opinion—Antinomian Sluggards—Cultured Uselessness—The Sluggard's Neglected Opportunities—His Interests Trifled With—His Loss Incalculable—Reflections Upon Christ—II. His Land—Producing Weeds—Sure to Produce Something—The Soul's Natural Produce—The Thorns in the Sluggish Christian's Heart—In his Home—In the World—III. The Lesson of the Land.

No doubt Solomon was sometimes glad to lay aside the robes of state, escape from the forms of court, and go through the country unknown. On one occasion, when he was doing so, he looked over the broken wall of a little estate which belonged to a farmer of his country. This estate consisted of a piece of ploughed land and a vineyard. One glance showed him that it was owned by a sluggard, who neglected it; for the weeds had grown right plentifully, and covered all the face of the ground. From this, Solomon gathered instruction. Men generally learn wisdom if they have wisdom. The artist's eye sees the beauty of the landscape because he has beauty in his mind. "To him that hath shall be given," and he shall have abundance; for he shall reap a harvest even from a field that is covered with thorns and nettles.

We may find instruction everywhere. To a spiritual mind nettles have their use, and Weeds have Their Doctrine.

Are not all thorns and thistles meant to be teachers to sinful men? Are they not brought forth of the earth on purpose that they may show us what sin has done, and the kind of produce that will come when we sow the seed of rebellion against God? "I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding," says Solomon; "I saw, and considered it well: I looked upon it, and received instruction."

I. First, think of Solomon's description of a slothful man. Solomon was a man whom none of us would contradict, for he knew as much as all of us put together; and besides that, he was under divine inspiration when he wrote this Book of Proverbs. Solomon says a sluggard is

"A Man Void of Understanding."

The slothful man does not think so; he puts his hands in his pockets, and you would think from his important air that he had all the Bank of England at his disposal. You can see that he is a very wise man in his own esteem, for he gives himself airs which are meant to impress you with a sense of his superior abilities. The proverb is not complimentary to him, but I am certain that Solomon was right when he called him "a man void of understanding." Solomon was rather rude, according to the dainty manners of the present times, because this gentleman had a field and a vineyard, and as Poor Richard saith, "When I have a horse and a cow every man biddeth me good morrow." How can a man be void of understanding who has a field and a vineyard? Is it not generally understood that you must measure a man's understanding by the amount of

His Ready Cash?

At all events, you shall soon be flattered for your attainments if you have attained unto wealth. Such is the way of the world, but such is not the way of Scripture. Whether he has a field and a vineyard or not, says Solomon, if he is a sluggard he is a fool, or if you would like to see his name written out a little larger, he is a man empty of understanding. Not only does he not understand anything, but he has no understanding to understand with.

I am glad to be told by Solomon so plainly that a slothful man is void of understanding, for it is useful information. I have met with persons who thought they perfectly understood the doctrines of grace, who could accurately set forth the election of the saints, the predestination of God, the firmness of the divine decree, the necessity of the Spirit's work, and all the glorious doctrines of grace which build up the fabric of our faith; but these gentlemen have inferred from these doctrines that they have to do nothing, and thus they have become sluggards. Do-nothingism is

Their Creed.

They will not urge other people to labor for the Lord, because, say they, "God will do His own work. Salvation is all of grace!" The notion of these sluggards is that a man is to wait, and do nothing; he is to sit still, and let the grass grow up to his ancles in the hope of heavenly help. How shall we survive the censures of this dogmatic person? How shall we escape from this very knowing and very captious sluggard? Solomon hastens to the rescue and extinguishes this gentleman by informing us that he is void of understanding. The sluggard, whether he is sluggish about his business or about his soul, is "a man void of understanding."

As a rule, we may measure a man's understanding by his useful activities; that is what the wise man very plainly tells us. Certain persons call themselves "cultured," and yet they cultivate nothing. True wisdom is practical: boastful culture vapors and theorizes. Wisdom ploughs its field, wisdom hoes its vineyard, wisdom tries to make the best of everything; and he who does not do so, whatever may be his knowledge of this, of that, or of the other, is "a man void of understanding." Why is he void of understanding? Is it not because he has opportunities which he does not use? His day has come, his day is going, and he lets the hours glide by to no purpose. Let me not press too hardly upon anyone, but let me ask you all to press as hardly as you can upon yourselves while you inquire each one of himself—Am I employing the minutes as they fly? This man had a vineyard, but he did not cultivate it; he had a field, but he did not till it. Do you, brethren, use all your opportunities? I know we each one have some power to serve God; do we use it? If we are His children He has not put one of us where we are of necessity useless.

Wisdom Looks to its Crops,

You are not asked to do in the service of God that which is utterly beyond you, for it is expected of us according to what we have, and not according to what we have not, The man of two talents is not required to bring in the interest of five, but he is expected to bring in the interest of two. Solomon's slothful man was too idle to attempt tasks which were quite within his power. Many have a number of dormant faculties of which they are scarcely aware, and many more have abilities which they are using for themselves, and not for Him who created them, Dear friends, if God has given us power to do good, pray let us do it, for this is

A Wicked, Weary World.

As for a sluggard in soul matters, he is indeed void of understanding, for he trifles with matters which demand his most earnest heed. Man, hast thou never cultivated thy heart? Has the ploughshare never broken up the clods of thy soul? Has the seed of the Word never been sown in thee? or has it, taken no root? Hast thou never watered the young plants of desire? Hast thou never sought to pull up the weeds of sin that grow in thy heart? Art thou still a piece of the bare common or wild heath? Poor soul! Thou canst trim thy body, and spend many a minute at the glass; dost thou not care for thy soul? You take care of the worse part, and leave the better to perish through neglect. This is the height of folly! He that is a sluggard as to the vineyard of his heart, is "a man void of understanding." If I must be idle, let it be seen in my garden, but not in my soul.

Or are you a Christian? Are you really saved, and are you negligent in the Lord's work? Then, indeed, whatever you may be, I cannot help saying you have too little understanding; for surely, when a man is saved himself, and understands the danger of other men's souls, he must be in earnest in trying to pluck the firebrands from the flame.

A Christian Sluggard!

Is there such a being? A Christian man on half time? A Christian man working not at all for his Lord; how shall I speak of him? Surely we must be void of understanding if, after being saved by the infinite love of God, we do not spend and be spent in His service. The eternal fitness of things demands that a saved man should be an earnest man.

The Christian who is slothful in his Master's service has no idea what he is losing; for the very cream of religion lies in holy consecration to God. Some people have just enough religion to make it questionable whether they have any or not. They have enough godliness to make them uneasy in their ungodliness. They have washed enough of their face to show the dirt upon the rest of it. "I am glad," said a servant, "that my mistress takes the sacrament, for otherwise I should not know she had any religion at all." You smile, and well you may. I wish some professors would do Christ the justice to say, "No, I am not one of His disciples; do not think so badly of Him as to imagine that I can be one of them." We ought to be reflections of Christ; but I fear many are reflections upon Christ. When we see a lot of lazy servants, we are apt to think that their master must be a very idle person himself, or he would never put up with them. Oh, let not the world think that Christ is indifferent to human woe, that Christ has lost His zeal, that Christ has lost His energy! yet I fear they will say it, or think it, if they see those who profess to be laborers in the vineyard of Christ, nothing better that mere sluggards.

II. Now, secondly, let us look at the sluggard's land: "I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding; and, lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof." Note, first, that land will produce something. Soil which is good enough to be made into a field and a vineyard must and will yield some fruit or other; and so you and I, in our hearts, and in the sphere God gives us to occupy, will be Sure to Produce Something.

We cannot live in this world as entire blanks; we shall either do good or do evil, as sure as we are alive. If you are idle in Christ's work, you are active in the devil's work. The sluggard by sleeping was doing more for the cultivation of thorns and nettles than he could have done by any other means. If it be not farmed for God, the soul will yield its natural produce; and what is the natural produce of land if left to itself? What but thorns and nettles, or some other useless weeds? What is the natural produce of your heart and mine? What but sin and misery? What is the natural produce of your children if you leave them untrained for God? What but unholiness and vice? What is the natural produce of this great city if we leave its streets and lanes and alleys without the gospel? What but crime and infamy? Some harvest there will be, and the sheaves will be the natural produce of the soil, which is sin, death, and corruption.

In many instances there will be a great deal of this evil produce; for a field and a vineyard will yield more thistles and nettles than a piece of ground that has not been reclaimed. Neglect is all that is needed to produce evil. If you desire to bring forth a harvest unto God, I may need long to instruct you in ploughing, sowing, and watering; but if you wish your mind to be covered with Satan's hemlock, you have only to leave the furrows of nature to themselves.

While we look upon the lazy man's vineyard, let us also peep into the ungodly sluggard's heart. He does not care about repentance and faith. To think about his soul, to be in earnest about eternity, is too much for him. He wants to take things easy, and have a little more folding of the arms to sleep. What is growing in his mind and character? In some of the spiritual sluggards you can see drunkenness, uncleanness, covetousness, anger, and pride, and all sorts of thistles and nettles; or where these ranker weeds do not appear, by reason of the restraint of pious connections, you find other sorts of sin. The heart cannot be altogether empty; either Christ or the devil will possess it.

Friend, if you believe in Christ, I want to peep over the hedge into your heart also, if you are a sluggish Christian; for I fear that nettles and thistles are threatening you also. Some have sadly morbid forebodings; they are discontented, fretful, selfish, murmuring, and all because they are idle. There are in sluggards' gardens. I have known the slothful become so peevish that nothing could please them; the most earnest Christian could not do right for them; the most loving Christian could not be affectionate enough; the most active church could not be energetic enough; they detected all sorts of wrong where God Himself saw much of the fruit of His Spirit. This censoriousness is one of the nettles that are quite sure to grow in men's gardens when they fold their arms in sinful ease. If your heart does not yield fruit to God it will certainly bring forth that which is mischievous in itself, painful to you, and injurious to your fellow-men.

The Weeds that Grow

May I next ask you to look into your own house and home? It is a dreadful thing when a man does not cultivate the field of his own family. What is the use of zeal abroad if there is neglect at home? How sad to say, "My own vineyard have I not kept!" Have you never heard of one who said he did not teach his children the ways of God, because he thought they were so young that it was very wrong to prejudice them, and he had rather leave them to choose their own religion

When They Grow Older?

One of his boys broke his arm, and while the surgeon was setting it the boy was swearing all the time. "Ah!" said the good doctor, "I told you what would happen. You were afraid to prejudice your boy in the right way, but the devil had no such qualms; he has prejudiced him the other way, and pretty strongly too." It is our duty to prejudice our field in favor of corn, or it will soon be covered with thistles. Cultivate a child's heart for good, or it will go wrong of itself, for it is already depraved by nature.

As it is with homes, so it is with schools. You Sunday-school teachers can make your classes so tiresome to the children that they will hate Sunday. You can fritter away time in school without bringing the lads and lasses to Christ, and so you may do more hurt than good. I have known Christian fathers who by their severity and want of tenderness have sown their family field with the thorns and thistles of hatred to religion, instead of scattering the good seed of love in it. Oh, that we may so live among our children that they may not only love us, but love our Father who is in heaven! May fathers and mothers set such an example of cheerful piety that sons and daughters shall say, "Let us tread in our father's footsteps, for he was a happy and a holy man. Let us follow our mother's ways, for she was sweetness itself."

I beg you once more to look at

The Great Field of the World.

Do you see how it is overgrown with thorns and nettles? If an angel could take a survey of the whole race, what tears he would shed, if angels could weep! What a tangled mass of weeds the whole earth is! Yonder the field is scarlet with the poppy of popery, and over the hedge it is yellow with the wild mustard of Mahometanism. Vast regions are smothered with the thistles of infidelity and idolatry. The world is full of cruelty, oppression, drunkenness, rebellion, uncleanness, misery. What the moon sees! What God's sun sees! What scenes of horror! How far is all this to be attributed to a neglectful church? Nearly nineteen hundred years are gone, and the sluggard's vineyard is but little improved! What has the church been doing all these years? She ceased after a few centuries to be a missionary church, and from that hour she almost ceased to be a living church.

However, instead of asking what the church has been doing for these nineteen hundred years, let us ask ourselves what are we going to do now? Are the missions of the churches always to be such poor, feeble things as they are? Are the best of our Christian young men always going to stay at home? We go on ploughing the home field a hundred times over, while millions of acres abroad are left to the thorn and the nettle. Shall it always be so? God send us more spiritual life, and wake us up from our sluggishness, or else when the holy watcher gives in his report he will say, "I went by the field of the sluggish church, and it was all grown over with thorns and nettles, and the stone wall was broken down, so that one could scarcely tell which was the church and which was the world; yet still she slept, and slept, and slept, and nothing could waken her."

III. I conclude by remarking that there must be some lesson in all this. I cannot teach it as I would, but I want to learn it myself. I will speak it as though I were talking to myself. The first lesson is, that always will produce thorns and nettles, and nothing else. My soul, if it were not for grace, this is all thou wouldst have produced. Beloved, are you producing anything else? Then it is not nature, but the grace of God that makes you produce it. Those lips that now most charmingly sing the praises of God would have been delighted with an idle ballad if the grace of God had not sanctified them. Your heart, that now cleaves to Christ, would have continued to cling to your idols—you know what they were—if it had not been for grace divine. And why should grace have visited you or me—why? Echo answers, why? What answer can we give? "'Tis even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight." Let the recollection of what grace has done move us to manifest the result of that grace in our lives.

Unaided Nature

We see here, next, the little value of natural good intentions; for this man, who left his field and vineyard to be overgrown, always meant to work hard one of these fine days. To do him justice, we must admit that he did not mean to sleep much longer, for he said—"Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep."

Only a Little Doze,

and then tuck up his sleeves and show his muscle. Probably the worst people in the world are those who have the best intentions, but never carry them out. In that way Satan lulls many to sleep. They hear an earnest sermon; but they do not arise and go to their Father; they only get as far as saying: "Yes, yes, the far country is not a fit place for me; I will not stay here long. I mean to go home by-and-by." They said that forty years ago, but nothing came of it. When they were quite youths they had serious impressions, they were almost persuaded to be Christians, and yet they are not Christians even now. They have been slumbering forty years! Surely that is a liberal share of sleep! They never intended to dream so long, and now they do not mean to lie in bed much longer. They will not turn to Christ at once, but they are resolved to do so one day. When are you going to do it, friend? "Before I die." Going to put it off to the last hour or two, are you? And so, when unconscious, and drugged to relieve your pain, you will begin to think of your soul? Is this wise? Surely you are "void of understanding."

"Surely you do not object to my having a little more sleep?" says the sluggard. "You have waked me to soon. I only ask another little nap." "My dear man, it is far into the morning." He answers, "It is rather late, I know; but it will not be much later if I take just another doze." You wake him again, and tell him it is noon. He says, "It is the hottest part of the day: I dare say if I had been up I should have gone to the sofa and taken a little rest from the hot sun." You knock at his door when it is almost evening, and then he cries, "It is of no use to get up now, for the day is almost over." To-morrow is only to be found in the calendar of fools; to-day is the time of the wise man, the chosen season of our gracious God. Oh that the Holy Spirit may lead you to seize the present hour, that you may at once give yourselves to the Lord by faith in Christ Jesus, and then from His vineyard—

"Quick uproot
The noisome weeds that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome plants"!

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A NEEDLEWOMAN'S GIFT.*

ORGANIZATIONS of women for the relief of sick and wounded soldiers, and for the care of soldiers' families, were formed with great spontaneity at the very beginning of the war. There were a dozen or more of them in Chicago in less than a month after Cairo was occupied by Northern troops. They raised money, prepared and forwarded supplies of whatever was demanded, every shipment being accompanied by some one who was held responsible for the proper disbursement of the stores. Sometimes these local societies affiliated with, or became parts of, more comprehensive organizations.

A poor girl, who called herself a "tailoress," came one day to the rooms of the Commission.

"I do not feel right," she said, "that I am doing nothing for our soldiers in the hospitals. I must do something immediately. Which do you prefer—that I should give money, or buy material and manufacture it into hospital clothing?"

"You must be governed by your circumstances," was the answer made her. "We need both money and supplies, and you must do that which is most convenient for you."

"I prefer to give money, if it will do as much good."

"Very well, then give money. We need it badly, and without it cannot do what is most necessary for our brave men."

"I will give the Commission my net earnings for the next two weeks. I would give more, but my mother is an invalid, and I help support her. Usually I make but one vest a day, as I do 'custom work,' and am well paid for it. But these next two weeks, which belong to the soldiers, I shall work earlier and later."

In two weeks she came again, the poor sewing-girl, with a radiant face. Opening her portemonnaie, she counted out nineteen dollars and seven cents. She had stitched into the hours of midnight on every one of the working days of those two weeks.

A Five-Dollar Gold Piece.

A little girl, not nine years old, with sweet and timid grace, entered one afternoon, and laid a five-dollar gold piece on my desk. Half frightened, she told its story. "My uncle gave me that before the war, and I was going to keep it always; but he's got killed in the army, and now mother says I may give it to the soldiers, if I want to—and I'd like to. Will it buy much for them?"

I led the child into the storeroom, and pointed out to her how much it would buy—so many cans of condensed milk, or so many bottles of ale, or so many pounds of tea or codfish, etc. Her face brightened with pleasure; but when I explained that her five-dollar gold piece was equal then to seven and a half dollars in greenbacks, and told her how much comfort could be carried into a hospital with the amount of stores it would purchase, she fairly danced for joy. "Why, my five dollars will do lots of good, won't it?"

A Tatterdemalion.

A little urchin, who often thrust his unkempt pate into the room, with the shrill cry of

* From "My Story of the War: A Woman's Narrative of Four Years' Personal Experience as Nurse in the Union Army," by Mrs. Mary A. Livermore. Illustrated with numerous portraits and scenes; 700 pages. Published by A. D. Worthington & Company, Hartford, Conn.

A Prohibited Meeting of the Early Waldensian Church.

"Matches! matches!" had stood a little apart, watching the girl, and listening to the conversation. As she disappeared, he fumbled in his pockets and drew out a small handful of crumpled fractional currency, such as was then in use. "Here," said he, "I'll give yer suthin' for them sick fellers!" and he put fifty-five cents in my hand, all in five-cent currency. I was surprised, and hesitated.

"No, my boy, don't give it; I'm afraid you cannot afford it. You're a noble little fellow; but that is more than you ought to give; you keep it, and I'll give fifty-five cents for you—or somebody else will." "Git eaut," was his disgusted commentary on my proposal; "yer take it, now; p'haps I ain't so poor as yer think, My father, he saws wood, an' my mother, she takes in washin', an' I sells matches, an' Tom, he sells paper, an' p'haps we've got more money than yer think. Our Bob, he'd gone to the war hisself, but he got his leg cut off on the railroad, in a smash-up. He was a brakeman, yer see. Yer take this, now."

I took the crumpled currency. I forgot the boy's dirty face and tattered cap; I forgot that I had called the little tatterdemalion a "nuisance" every day, for months, when he had caused me to jump from my seat with his shrill, unexpected cry of "Matches!" and I actually stooped down to kiss him.

He divined my intention, and darted out on the sidewalk, as if he had been shot.

"No yer don't!" he said, shaking his tangled head at me, and looking as if he had escaped a great danger. "I ain't one o' the kissin' sort!"

Ever after, when he met me, he gave me a wide berth, and walked off the sidewalk into the gutter, eyeing me with a suspicious, sidelong glance, as though he suspected I still thought of kissing him. If I spoke to him he made no reply; but if I passed him without speaking, he challenged me with a hearty "Hullo, yer!" That brought me to an instant halt.

THE HEROIC WALDENSES.

(See Illustration.)

THE European religious press is chronicling the earnest, consecrated effort now being made by the Waldenses to evangelize the city of Rome. There is a deep significance in this movement, to every student of history, for it is a striking evidence of the extent to which the teaching of the Saviour has permeated the hearts of this wonderful people. They are now rendering to Rome the highest service in returning the grandest good for the bitterest evil.

The Waldenses were among the earliest sufferers for the gospel in Europe when the fierce rage of papal persecution burst upon those who would not acknowledge the supremacy of the Pope, and chief among the foremost of the earnest propagandists of the pure religion of Christ. The illustration on this page represents a preaching service among their native rocks and valleys when they were denied the privilege of meeting in a sanctury, under threat of imprisonment and death.

The country of Waldensia, which thus became a cradle for the truth, is but twenty miles in length, and some eighteen broad. It is situated among the mountains between France and Italy, in the valleys called Lucerna, San Martino, and Perosa, the streams of which ultimately gather themselves into the river Po. The sufferings of this venerable Church are written in blood. On the way to La Tour, the little capital of the Waldensian valleys, as their wooded mountains rise to view, the traveller approaches "consecrated ground." "Almost every rock is a monument, and every meadow witnessed executions, and every village had its roll of martyrs." They recount thirty-six distinct persecutions, some designed actually to exterminate them from the face of the earth.

Every visitor to La Tour must be struck by the picturesque rock that rises behind the little town. This is the Monte Castelluzzo, with the Waldensian temple in the foreground. We look on it as on the old tower in Paris, where the bell hung that signalled the massacre of St. Bartholomew. Their valleys have had many "St. Bartholomews," and it was from Castelluzzo that, on April 27, 1655, the signal was given to execute the orders of Christina, regent of Savoy, who, acting for her son Charles Emanual II., and under her holy father the Pope, sent 15,000 soldiers to massacre every Protestant the valleys contained. "Children," says Leger, an eye-witness, "torn from their mothers' breasts, were seized by the feet and dashed in pieces against the rocks or walls, while their tender bodies were cast on the common heaps. The sick, the aged, both men and women, were either burnt in their houses or literally cut in pieces, or were rolled over the rocks."

It is the descendants of those martyrs who are now carrying to Rome the precious news of salvation through Christ alone.

ROSA'S CROSS.

(See Illustration on page 413.)

"ROSA, Rosa, here is a letter from papa," cried two childish voices at the foot of the parsonage stairs. A tall, slender girl came quickly from her room, and hurried down to join her brother and sister in the breakfast-room.

Rosa Erndale was mother and sister, both, to the two children, who were respectively seven and nine years her junior. The natural mother of the family had been dead now five years, and Rosa had done her utmost to fill her place to her father and little Effie and Herbert, in fulfilment of the promise she gave to her mother when she was dying. It had been a severe trial to the girl, for Mr. Erndale was overwhelmed with grief at his wife's death, and he did not conceal from Rosa how far she was from performing her mother's duties with her mother's skill. Yet she had not been unsuccessful. Kind friends in her father's church gave her advice and help; she was diligent and thoughtful; and after the first year of bereavement, the parsonage was as well managed as under the reign of its dead mistress. She won the affection of the two children, who obeyed her cheerfully, and she had the satisfaction of seeing that her father less and less frequently compared her management to her disadvantage with that of his dead wife.

Mr. Erndale was absent now on his annual vacation, an opportunity that Rosa had seized for a thorough house-cleaning and general renovation. The last touches were put to it now, and if, as was probable, the letter in the hands of the children announced her father's almost immediate return, Rosa would be ready for him; every carpet down, the furniture again in its place, and the new paint all dry and odorless.

The letter was a long one, which was contrary to Mr. Erndale's habit. Rosa sat down to read it while breakfast waited, and the two children climbed on the back of her chair to read it over her shoulder. But suddenly she crushed the paper between her hands and rose to her feet. The weight of the two children was too much for the chair after Rosa's weight was off it, and they went backward with it with a crash. They had to be comforted, their bruised heads rubbed, and the tears dried first of all, and then Rosa insisted on breakfast before any further attention was given to the letter.

"What for you crying, Rosa?" asked little Herbert, presently. "You didn't hurt your head."

"And you have not eaten a morsel, Rosa," put in Effie. "What's in papa's letter; is not he well?"

"Oh, yes, papa is well, and he is coming home soon. I will tell you all about it by and bye."

"Tell us what makes you cry, Rosa?" persisted the boy.

"Yes, yes, I will tell you all about it presently. I have not read all papa's letter yet."

As soon as the meal was finished Rosa sought her own room and there, in quiet and with many tears, she read the paternal epistle through. Mr. Erndale, with some circumlocution, informed his daughter that he contemplated marrying again. In fact, he had already proposed and been accepted by a lady of stable age. Finally he told his daughter the name of the lady, a member of his own church, and one to whom as he was aware, Rosa did not entertain the kindliest feelings. In fact Rosa had been subjected to her criticism, and she had at last been goaded into intimating to her, politely and delicately, but explicitly, that she proposed managing the domestic affairs of the parsonage without outside interference. This rebuff did not been pleasant for either party; and Rosa's aversion had been increased by the suspicion that the lady aspired to succeed her dear mother. Mr. Erndale probably understood something of the trouble for he took pains, in many ways, to inculcate on his daughter her duty in the new circumstances.

Rosa Learns How to Bear Her Cross.

"If she would only make him happy," moaned poor Rosa, as she read the letter, "I should not mind. But I am sure he will be miserable. Why, she will want to write his sermons, I believe; she will want to manage everything. And the children! Oh, my poor children! If it were not for them I could go away; but I cannot desert them."

She sat and wept for some time, but at length she rose and wandered disconsolately through the house. She went in her father's study, and there a fresh burst of weeping overcame her, for standing by the minister's desk in the place it had occupied ever since the bereavement was her mother's portrait. The gentle, loving face in the picture seemed now to have taken on an expression reproachful or of mute protest against what seed to Rosa a profanation; but it also reminded her of her mother's advice, which in this bitter sorrow she had forgotten, to go to God for help in trouble. She rose and opened the minister's Bible, which was lying on his desk. The first words that met her eye were, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow Me." (Matt. 16:24.) Rosa did not need any one to make the application for her. She saw her duty, and she knelt down and asked God to give her strength to do it.

When she rose from her knees her heart was lightened of its heavy load. The children were astonished, when she told them the unwelcome news, that Rosa was not angry about it, so cheerfully did she speak and so calmly did she go about her ordinary duties. But the sweetest joy she had came from a friendly visitor who said, "Why, child, I like your mother you are growing! You have just her sweet spiritual expression. I never noticed it before to-day."

Rosa's cross proved a heavy one; but so continually did she go to God for strength, and so constantly was it given to her, as it is to all who ask in faith, that she was enabled to bear it with joy until it was graciously removed.

THE EPOCHS OF A LIFE.

A NEW SERIAL STORY.

By Rev. L. S. Keyser.

(Continued from page 398.)

A Meeting in the Woods.

THE lady in whose house the young men had taken lodgings was an old resident of the town, and as it was evident that the strange girl in question was also a resident of the place, they concluded that their hostess might be able to give them information concerning her. Before the day was passed, the woman was adroitly catechised and some interesting information was elicited. The young lady's name was Belle Havelock. She was the daughter of one of the prominent bankers of the town, a man who had accumulated considerable wealth, and who, as they knew, took a great interest in the college. They were already aware of the last fact, but had never taken the trouble to ascertain where Mr. Havelock lived.

Belle, his only daughter, was a young lady of versatile talents, and the reason the young men had never met her was because she had been attending a young ladies' seminary in the State of New York, for a number of years, and, of course, while she was at home during the summer vacations, they were absent from town enjoying their rest from college work. However, she had graduated from the seminary in the previous June, and had now come home to stay. All who knew her admitted that she was a bright, clever girl, although her naturally haughty mien had made her slightly unpopular among the young women of the town.

"I took her to be a rather unique girl," remarked Hadley, when they had gained this cue to her character. "I am determined to secure an introduction to her and cultivate her acquaintance."

"You can do as you like," replied George, "but as for me, I believe that I shall steer my frail bark clear of this remarkable female. I am a little afraid of her."

"Pooh! you are a timid youth, destined to die an old bachelor. Be careful that you don't turn into a paleozoic fossil. We have been living like a couple of anchorites since we have been in college, and have neglected the amenities of social life. Yes, I am persuaded that we have, and so I propose to allow myself some of the pleasures of society, even if you do carry off the honors of the class. A little brightening up in our manners wouldn't come amiss if we intend to become public reformers, and would free us from the charge of boorishness."

"And get us into a labyrinth of trouble, without an Ariadne's thread to help us out," said George. "However, if you have a mind to start out on a 'flirting' expedition, I shall not object; only don't hold me responsible for the consequences."

"Ah, you are too cowardly for your own good," declared Hadley, with an impatient gesticulation. "No good of that kind is ever gained except at some risk. Every young fellow must have his love-troubles sooner or later. I believe that I shall choose to have mine sooner."

Hadley was bent on obtaining an introduction to Miss Havelock as soon as possible. But he did not find it so easy to compass his wish as he supposed it would be; for she had been away from town so many years that she was a stranger to nearly all the students of the college, and Hadley was unable to make her acquaintance for several weeks. In the meantime he had seen her several times at one of the churches of the town, and observed that she listened to the sermons with ill-concealed impatience, a shadow of disgust passing over her features when the divine claims of Christianity were presented. She was obviously not a Christian. Perhaps she was an unbeliever. Somehow, bitter as he was against religion himself, the thought that this girl might be animated by like sentiments did not please Hadley. He would have thought better of her if she had been more devout, and less hostile.

"It is impossible for me to stay indoors on a day like this," said Hadley, early one Saturday morning. "I am going out on an ornithological jaunt. Your company will be acceptable, Dane, if you have a mind to go with me."

"I cannot go to-day," George answered. "I have promised to speak next Saturday morning, and this will be my only opportunity to prepare. I know I cannot do any great things, but I must do the best I can. I am going to get a few facts together and arrange them in order. If it were not for that I should enjoy an excursion immensely."

"Then I must go alone, for I feel the outdoor mood coming on. Hark! I can hear the birds trilling in the groves yonder, 'calling me away, calling me away,'" said Hadley, humming the last words of a familiar chorus.

And seizing his hat, and putting a small blank-book with a pencil-case into his pocket, he was off to the woods. He wandered east the town for several miles, exploring the hedges, forests, meadows, and deep rocky valleys with their rippling streams, in search of feathered songsters. True, there was not the abundance of woodland music that characterizes the season of spring, but on the whole, he was amply repaid for his efforts.

In the afternoon he took a circuitous course homeward, continuing his observations. By the time he reached the woods into which he had first entered, half a mile from town, he had taken a large number of notes on "bird-ways," and had almost decided to go to his study without delay. At that moment his mind was suddenly changed by the whistle of a cardinal-grossbeak in a dense thicket near the edge of the woods, on a rocky slope. His faculties were instantly on the alert, as is always the case with a bird-lover when his ears are greeted by a song from the throat of a feathered favorite.

He stole slyly to the edge of the copse, so as not to disturb the cardinal-plumed piper, and then, quietly pushing aside the bushes, he peered into the thicket, determined to gain a sight of the bird and watch him in his singing attitudes. After considerable effort, and at the cost of a few scratches from the sharp briers, he pressed his way into the midst of the underbrush, and at last descried the cardinal bird-form perched on a twig, and at intervals piping his lively tune. It was a beautiful specimen.

Presently the crested vocalist shifted his position, and Hadley in pursuit pushed his way through the thicket almost to the other side. While he was peering sharply in every direction to catch another view of the bird, he stopped suddenly in embarrassed surprise; for as he glanced toward a small opening among the bushes, his sharp sight detected a pair of blue eyes peering at him with curious interest, while a laughing face was photographed in the aperture. He started up in astonishment, and as he did so his hat was caught by some "pesky" briers and lifted from his head, while a thorny branch came into uncomfortable proximity with his scalp. It was an embarrassing situation, making him conscious of a flow of blood along the arteries of his face, giving it the hue of the cardinal-bird which he had just been watching.

Who was the owner of that pair of blue eyes? Were they the property of a male or female spy? He would investigate. Obeying the first impulse that seized him, he scrambled through the tangled mass of bushes and briers, to the edge of the thicket, determined to solve the mystery of the blue orbs that had been watching him.

What was his consternation when he came out into the clear space to find himself face to face with a young lady, and to make the situation more perplexing, his first glance at her face told him that she was the girl in whom he was interested and whose name he had learned was Belle Havelock!

The young man was disconcerted. He had made his exit from the underbrush in an impetuous style and rather the worse for contact with the briers, only a few paces from the spot where the girl was standing; and he stood looking at her in a dazed and helpless way. He was ashamed to beat an unceremonious retreat. It would have been the quintessence of ludicrousness to turn his back on the young lady and walk away without a word. Evidently she was sharing his embarrassment to some extent, as was indicated by the rosy color that mounted to her cheeks. To Hadley's unspeakable relief, her lips parted and she burst into a ringing, merry laugh. The droll nature of the situation and the girl's ebullition touched Hadley's sense of the ridiculous, and he joined spontaneously in the merriment. There was no other alternative but to speak. The girl obviously felt that an apolgy was due the young man for watching him.

"Mr. Madelling," she said, with a slight courtesy.

Hadley lifted his hat and bowed to her, as he said: "I believe I have the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Miss Havelock."

"Ah! you know me, I suppose, as I know you," she said, with a smile. "You will wonder how I learned your name. Well, 'an honest confession is good'—you know the rest. I saw you on your way to college several times and noticed you in church, and I had the curiosity to inquire what your name was. You perhaps ascertained mine in the same way."

"I plead guilty," he answered, "though I hope neither of us is so finical as to think it a very grave offence."

"Oh, no, there is no need of being so conventional," laughed Miss Havelock. "But I do owe you an apology for watching you just now. You will think me a veritable Paul Pry. But it came about in this wise. You see, I am troubled, like yourself, with an occasional outdoor furor, and that is what brought me out here to-day. While I was sitting under the trees reading, I heard the whistle of the cardinal-bird in the thicket, and I was seized with a desire to reconnoitre. As I was peering about, for the bird, I heard a crackling in the bushes, and begun to wonder if I had been tracked by a bear. I waited, however, and saw you."

"Ah! well I was a less alarming sight, I trust. At all events you will not be afraid of my making a meal of you."

"No, not exactly that, though from something I heard of you the other day, I should fancy you must have some of the bear element in your nature."

"I suppose all men have a little of it; I think I know what you refer to, and if you have heard the whole story you must be aware that I had severe provocation."

"Oh! do not apologize to me, Mr. Madelling; I assure you I was not hurt. Your antagonist is able to take care of himself, I have no doubt. Believers are generally ready for fight against unbelievers, though they do not always win. I have just been watching an encounter with a good deal of interest" and she held up a volume of Huxley's Essays which she had been reading.

They were standing by a shady bank, and at Hadley's suggestion they seated themselves and he took the book from her hand.

"Rather an abstruse companion for a summer day in the woods, is it not, Miss Havelock? he said. "I should have expected if I met a young lady out here, to find a novel in her hands, if she had a book at all."

"I do not read much fiction," she replied. "Once in a while I read a novel when I hear it strongly recommended, and when I am in a special mood for it."

"Conscientious scruples?" asked the young man.

"Oh no, not at all. I do not care for novels. They weary me. The characters are so seldom natural. They are either utterly bad or so saintly that we doubt if they can be human. The men and women we know have all natures in which good and evil is mixed, but the majority of novelists are so clumsy that they cannot paint them so. They must make them either angels or fiends."

"And so you give such works a wide range and turn to the scientists and philosophers for recreation," said Hadley. "There is Huxley, for instance," pointing to the volume in her hand. "Do you find him interesting?"

"Intensely."

"Is that so? Well, at one place he speaks of the immortality of the soul. Is it in that collection of his Essays?"

She turned the leaves of the book rapidly. "Yes, here it is," she said presently. "I have marked it as one of his most striking paragraphs."

"Would you read it? My memory is not retentive enough to enable me to quote it verbatim."

For answer she read as follows: "If a man tells me that the soul is immortal, I would say to him, How do you know it? And if he were to say to me, The soul is not immortal, I should be still obliged to repeat the question: How do you know that?"

"Yes, that is the paragraph I referred to," said Hadley. "That is agnosticism pure and simple."

"But it is entirely honest," returned the girl, with a gleam in her eye.

"Ah! but does he not leave you in the same mist-land in which certain writers of fiction leave you?" questioned Hadley, looking at her smilingly, but intently.

Her eye dropped, and a flutter of embarrassment was perceptible in her manner for a moment, but her discomposure did not last long. "Let us have definiteness where definiteness is possible; but where the truth is not yet discovered, it is better to acknowledge our ignorance than to assert error or blindly accept a figment of the brain as truth. But, Mr. Madelling," she added, smiling, "these are rather abstruse questions for a hungry man to discuss. Perhaps you had better try to secure something a little more substantial."

The young man could not find it in his heart to leave her yet so congenial did he find her society.

"In my debilitated state perhaps it would not be wise for me to venture to town alone," he had the temerity to say, with a peculiar circumflex upon the last word.

"That is a hint, is it?" laughed the girl. "Well—I might return with you, if you think that you are in a serious state of weakness," she said, a little hesitantly, but there was a pleased smile on her lips. "The sun will soon be down, any way. Yes, it is my duty to go with you to—to—take care of you. Perhaps you remember what Wordsworth says in his 'Ode to Duty,' apostrophizing that virtue, which he calls 'stern daughter of the voice of God.'

"'I myself commend
Unto thy guidance from this hour;
O, let my weakness have an end!
Give unto me, made lowly wise,
The spirit of self-sacrifice;
The confidence of reason give;
And in the light of truth thy bondman let me live.'"

As she concluded she rose.

"It would be so much pleasanter if you went with me because you—you like to, than because you feel it your duty," he ventured to say audaciously.

A bright vermillion went to her cheeks and clung there as she replied: "We ought always to like to do our duty."

On their way to town Hadley encouraged Miss Havelock to talk of herself. He found that the report of her having been educated in an eastern seminary was correct. He could not help but admire her easy self-possession and light and gay manner. And yet on her forehead were a few lines that indicated an active and serious mind, and her dark blue eyes at times seemed very deep and thoughtful. No doubt she was a girl of moods, gay and serious by turns. At any rate, notwithstanding her light badinage, Hadley was convinced that she was not a lay figure, but a girl of real color and force of character.

As they walked up the street toward her home, she looked up at him with a naïve smile and said: "It was rather queer—I mean the way in which we became acquainted."

"Do you think that we are now on speaking terms?" he asked, with some show of anxiety.

"Oh, yes; I do not see any use in being conventional."

"No use at all."

"Then you will call and see—us, will you?" she said, as she put her hand into his at the gate, adding: "My parents will be glad to make your acquaintance. They are warm friends of the students, and always welcome them into our home. Toward the college boys," with a roguish emphasis on "boys," "they throw off all prudish formality."

"I shall call with pleasure," was Hadley's ready rejoinder, as he lifted his hat, and bade her good evening.

(To be Continued.)

An Invaluable Work on Prophecy by G. H. Pember, M. A., entitled "The Great Prophecies concerning the Jews the Gentiles, and the Church of God," is for sale at this office, 63 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.

THE GOLDEN CALF.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for July 8, Exodus 32: 15-26. Golden Text 1 John 5: 21.

A Lengthened Absence Provided for—Moses Thought to be Dead—The Sin of Impatience—Aaron's Weak Submission to Popular Clamor—The Sin Repeated in These Days—God's Offer to Moses—A Man Regardless of Self-Interest—His Success—His Indignation at Sight of the Calf—Aaron's Unmanliness—The Massacre—Moses Returns to the Lord—A Self-Immolatory Prayer.

WHEN Moses had gone up into the mountain at God's command, he had made provision for his absence: "He said unto the elders, 'Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you; and, behold, Aaron and Hur are with you; if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them.'" (Ex. 24: 14.) Forty days and forty nights was a long time to wait, and human reasoning would, no doubt, suggest that Moses must long ago have died in the mountain; he must have fallen over some precipice, or have succumbed to the pangs of hunger. But such surmises were nothing short of sin in the people whom God had taken under His immediate care and protection. God had sent Moses to be their leader, He had manifested His power through Moses as He never had done before through any mortal man, and He was responsible alike for Moses and for them. Oh, how much we lose through The Sin of Impatience.

"Blessed are all they that wait for Him." (Isa. 30: 13.) There is perhaps no one with whom we are so impatient as God. How often we hear it said, "I have asked God to direct me, and have no answer, and I am obliged to decide." Who obliges you? Is not God your Master? Surely He will not make you wait, and then blame you for waiting. The children of Israel had received the command, "Tarry ye here for us until we come again unto you;" but they took upon themselves the responsibility of disobeying. "When they saw that Moses delayed to come down out of the mount, the people gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him, Up, make us gods which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him." No doubt they had imagined that his intercourse with God would consume only a few hours, and when day after day passed and they were disappointed, it seemed never to occur to them to inquire of the Lord, or to ask Aaron to inquire of Him—they acted on human reasoning, and turned their backs on God. Oh, how few understand that are of more moment, and are worth more time, than any amount of preaching and outward activity for God! But Aaron! Surely he who was called to be the High Priest, the type of Jesus, the man nearest to God in the worship which God was teaching Moses—surely he would not take part with the people against God? Yes, the very Aaron who when under Moses' influence was so true to God, now fell under the influence of popular feeling, and was led away so far as to make a graven image for the people to worship! The material of the golden calf was the golden earrings which God was willing to accept as offerings for the tabernacle. Whatever we keep for ourselves becomes a snare to us; as long as we hold ourselves, and all we are and have as the Lord's, and unquestionably submit to His disposal of it, it is no snare to us. If those useless earrings had been given to the Lord, the golden calf could not have been made. Imagine Aaron presiding at the dedication of the image, and saying, "These be thy gods, O, Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt!" And then Aaron proclaimed a feast to the Lord (so mixing up his service with idolatry), in which every offering except the sin and trespass offerings were offered. When men sin most they are the farthest off from any confession of sin, the conscience loses its sensitiveness. We wonder at the idolatry of the children of Israel, and that they should have desired any graven image of a God who had made His power so manifest among them, but is not England sinning the same sin, in those idols which are being placed in St. Paul's Cathedral? What have we Protestants to do with crucifixes and images of the Virgin Mary? Is it not our glory that God Himself is with us, and that He dwells and walks in us? What have we to do with idols?

Transactions with God

While the scene of revelry was transpiring below, God was acquainting Moses with the matter up in the Mount Sinai. "Go get thee down, for thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves." "Thy people?" Were they not the Lord's? They were not acting as such just now, and God puts Moses to a severe test, He says, "I have seen this people, and behold, it is a stiff-necked people. Now, therefore, let Me alone, that My wrath may wax hot against them; and I will make of thee a great nation." The choice was given him by God Himself, whether he would be a great man in himself, or a living sacrifice! Thank God, the Spirit of Christ was beforehand in some of these saints of old (1 Pet. 1: 11, 12), and signally so in Moses. Utterly he argued the matter with God, "Why doth Thy wrath wax hot against Thy people whom Thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt? .... Wherefore should the Egyptian speak and say, For mischief did He bring them out?" Oh, this self-ignoring spirit, how rare it is! "Turn from Thy fierce wrath," he says, "and repent of this evil against Thy people." God had prayed Moses, "Let Me alone." But Moses refused, and prevailed with God! What a lesson of intercessory prayer! Was not he doing in the mountain with the Lord more than he could do in the plain? Moses reminded the Lord of His promises, and "the Lord repented of the evil which He had thought to do unto His people."

Regardless of His Own Interest,

Until Moses had settled the matter with God, he was not prepared to meet the people. And when he went down from the mount he held in his hand the two tables of the testimony, "written on both sides, on the one side and on the other were they written. And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables." Joshua accompanied Moses. Where he had been during the time of Moses' communing with God in the mount we know not, or what had become of the seventy elders; but, in any case, Moses found Joshua waiting for him. What we see makes more impression on us than what we hear. Moses saw the calf and the dancing (probably resembling the licentious orgies observed in heathen festivals to this day), and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount. He had been occupied forty days and forty nights, without eating or drinking, and perhaps without sleeping, in ascertaining the mind of God, that he might teach the people the will of the God whom they had three times promised to obey. And now that he had brought them the very writing of God Himself, he finds them, with Aaron at their head, worshipping an idol! He had obtained God's mercy for them, but his own indignation was stirred up. He gave their sin no quarter, but "took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink." Then he called Aaron to account: "What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought so great a sin upon them?" Priest, and brother to Moses, just as Adam was when he cast the blame of his sin upon Eve. Instead of making a clean breast of it, Aaron excused himself by casting all the blame upon the people. It is very probable that Aaron may have acceded to their request from the best of motives, thinking to retain his influence over them until Moses should return, and so mixing up the worship of God with idolatrous rites. But why did he not inquire of the Lord?

Aaron was Unmanly,

Moses did not argue the matter; he saved all his reasonings for God; and, when dealing with man, his actions went further than his words. He "stood in the gate of the camp, and said, who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me." The whole tribe of Levi, with, no doubt, Aaron at their head, ranged themselves on Moses' side, and then the command to slay went forth, and three thousand perished. The law has no mercy. "the soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18: 4). Now that sin was recognized as sin, and punished with death, Moses called on the people for a general consecration of themselves to the Lord, "that He may bestow upon you a blessing this day." Probably there was little sleep in the camp of Israel that night, and on the morrow Moses said to the people: "Ye have sinned a great sin; and now I will go up unto the Lord; peradventure, I shall make an atonement for your sin." What, must Moses leave them again? Yes; their very sin necessitated it. How unwise, how mad it is to lose patience with God! He is a better economist of time than we are. "And Moses returned unto the Lord,"

A Wonderful Type of Jesus, entering within the veil. He pleaded, "Oh, these people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold. Yet now, if Thou wilt, forgive their sin; and if not, blot me, I pray Thee, out of Thy book which Thou hast written." Another such prayer is hardly anywhere on record, except it be that of Paul, "I say the truth in Christ. I lie not; my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost, that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh." (Rom. 9: 1-3.) Moses and Paul did not live for themselves in any sense; soul and body, will and desire, reputation, and all else, was sacrificed for others. God gives every Christian the privilege of so following Him. "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." (Rom, 14: 7.) "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself." (Matt. 16: 24.) "And the Lord said unto Moses, whosoever hath sinned against Me, him will I blot out of My book." God will not do unrighteously. There is a very general making light of the heinousness of sin in our day. The gospel has been very fully preached, and the way of salvation made very easy. But many who profess to find peace, have never seen their sinfulness in the light of God, and groaned under the consciousness that they deserved nothing but God's wrath. Sure, He can convert a soul as rapidly as the jailer at Philippi, but it is the real sinner whom God saves from real sin and real condemnation. It is no simple thing of the feelings or imagination. A soul which has been consciously a lost soul, undone, and justly condemned by a righteous God, can never forget the first smile of God, or the horror of the horrible pit, and the miry clay from which he has been rescued. God is a Holy God; no man can break His law with impunity. He hates sin, He is of purer eyes than to behold evil, and yet He forgives, and blots out our sins by the blood of Jesus Christ, His beloved Son.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 63 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for June:

Events preceding the King of Kings' Accession to His Throne on Earth. By R. Nelson.

Disintegrating Forces in the Church and in the Family. By Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kansas.

The Seven Prophetic Parables and Seven Churches. By G. H. Pember. Esq., M. A.

The Conversion of the World. By Rev. Dr. Munhall.

"The Queen in Gold of Ophir." By Rev. W. Frith.

Predictions concerning Gog or Russia. By Walter Scott.

Passing Events Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

[Bound volumes containing the monthly numbers for 1884 and 1883 may be had; price $1.]

MY THREEFOLD REST.

I.

"Come unto Me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. xi., 28.

From sin and sins, dear Lord I rest—
Altar and Priest and Sacrifice Thou art;
By law and sin no more opprest,
I share in Thy beatitude a part.
My yesterdays are covered by Thy blood;
To-day my only shelter is Thy power;
To-morrow Thou will be as strong and good
As in the past most gracious hour.

II.

"Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls."—Matt. xi. 29.

I rest in serving at Thy will—
Thy yoke is easy and Thy burden light;
And peace grows deep and deeper still,
As my obedience proves Thy might.
I hold my powers alone for Thee—
Use them in loving errands of Thy grace;
And calm me, though I may not see Thy methods, as before Thy face.

III.

"There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God."—Heb. iv., 9.

And yet the noblest rest remains
In sweet reserve for hope and love;
It hath no place for sighs or pains,
'Tis kept a glad surprise above.
Oh, rest untroubled and serene,
In Thy bright presence, spotless Lamb!
Fit me each day, by every scene,
For robe and harp, for crown and palm.

—Stone.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents. Postage stamps taken.

Horsford's Acid Phosphate

For Sunstroke.

It relieves the prostration and nervous derangement.

All desiring employment should write to B. F. Johnson & Co., Publishers, 1009 Main St. Richmond, Va. See their advertisement.

WORKS OF REV. E. DAVIES

Life of Wm. Taylor, BISHOP OF AFRICA, with fine steel portrait and other illustrations. Price 75c. "Many will be glad to know that the life of BISHOP TAYLOR can be obtained in so compendious a form as it is here presented."—S. S. Times.

"It is an interesting and soul-inspiring volume."—Times of Refreshing.

Life of Frances Ridley Havergal, with Choice Selections from her Prose and Poetical Writings. Price 50 cts.; gilt 75 cts

"It will prove an evangelist of peace and faith wherever it goes."—Zion's Herald.

The Believer's Handbook, on HOLINESS. Containing eight Lectures. 12mo. Price, enamel paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 40 cts.

"This is truly an excellent work. Most heartily do we commend it to all."—Mrs. Phebe Palmer.

The Boy Preacher, or THE LIFE AND LABORS OF REV. THOMAS HARRISON. Fine steel portrait. Price, $1.00. Enlarged edition, gilt top, $1.25.

Mr. Harrison is one of the most successful evangelists of the present day

Daily Food for Christian Workers. Price 15 cents; gilt edges, 20 cents.

It is adapted to the highest experiences of Christian life.

Contrast Between Christianity and Infidelity. A Book of Reference for Ministers and Christian Workers. Price, paper, 20 cents; cloth, 40 cents.

"This book is worthy of a place in any library."—Lutheran Observer.

Memoirs and Journal of Mrs. Hester Ann Rogers. Condensed and combined. Price, cloth, 35 cents.

Either of the above books will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller.
77 Bible House, New York.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

MY STORY OF THE WAR

By Mary A. Livermore

Her own narrative of "Four Years' Personal Experience as Field and Hospital Nurse." It portrays the Woman's or "Heavenly" side of the War, its Lights and Shadows "as a woman saw them." Bright, Pure, and Good, full of laughter and tears, of thrilling interest and touching pathos, tells at sight to all. Splendid Steel-Plates, and famous old Battle-Flags richly colored in exact fac-simile. The "Booming" book for Men and Women Agents. $190 to $200 a month made. Distance no hindrance, for we Pay Freight and give Extra Terms. Write for circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

AGENTS Send for E. B. TREAT'S New Books. The National Hand book of American Progress. 1492 to 1888. The Boss Campaign Book, $2; also, The Row in the Cloud, or Words of Comfort, by 200 Authors. 744 E. TREAT, 771 Broadway, New York.

Christian Work in Mexico.

Through the reading of the Holy Scriptures translated into Spanish some earnest souls in Mexico have, by God's blessing, been led to a clear knowledge of the Gospel. From their numbers able preachers of the Christian faith in its primitive purity have been raised up, around whom congregations have been gathered from among the humble poor, who have been the first to publicly welcome and defend the pure Gospel in Mexico. The members of these congregations, rich in faith, have worked earnestly and bravely for Christ and His truth among their fellow countrymen in that beautiful Southern portion of North America called Mexico. Schools have been established by them, in which large numbers of bright boys and girls have received a good secular education and have been carefully taught the Christian faith. From the children thus educated faithful Christian workers have been raised up. A Mexican Branch of the Church of Christ, that maintains the faith in its purity and integrity, has been organized among these native Christians in the Republic of Mexico. The members of this Mexican Church of Christ, though gathered mostly from among the poor, are yet doing a most important Christian work. To continue that work, we need to pay a few leading workers small monthly salaries, and also to defray some current expenses. To raise the needed funds we have formed a society with an office at 43 Bible House, New York, U. S., and should be pleased to have many of our fellow Christians join this society by becoming regular contributors to its treasury. We are trying to secure monthly or quarterly contributions to meet the regular monthly expenses of the work. In order to continue and extend the work, we wish to raise four hundred dollars a month, by endeavoring to have four hundred persons each give on an average one dollar every month to this object, leaving the donors to give less or more as they may be able and willing.

We earnestly invite all who will, to join us in this systematic effort in behalf of the cause of Christ in Mexico, by becoming monthly subscribers to this fund. We have already regular subscribers whose gifts amount monthly to over eighty dollars, and a growing circle of friends who are forwarding us occasional donations.

This Mexican Church of Christ is a very effective instrumentality through which to do Christian work among the many millions on this Western Hemisphere who speak the Spanish language, comparatively few of whom have ever had a Bible in their hands. A beautiful church building has been secured in the City of Mexico as the centre of the activities of this Mexican Church of Christ. Through the workers connected with that centre more than forty congregations have been gathered from among the poor in different parts of the Republic of Mexico. We have some faithful and able preachers now in the field, but more young men need to be trained for the ministry. Multitudes of Protestant children in Mexico, some of them orphans, need to be educated. We make three requests of you, Christian reader: first, that you will, if possible, become a monthly or quarterly subscriber in behalf of this Christian work; second, that you will try and induce your friends also to contribute to it; third, that you will remember this precious work in Mexico in your prayers.

We most sincerely thank all who are already generously contributing to this Christian work for their timely and generous gifts, and we earnestly invite many others, to unite with us in aiding it by also becoming monthly subscribers in its behalf. Those who may not feel that they can give as much as a dollar a month are earnestly asked to give what they can, whenever they are able—EVERY LITTLE HELPS. Fellow Christian, if you will generously consent to contribute a dollar a month or more or less to the work, will you kindly inform me of the fact? Contributions either large or small can be mailed directly to my address as follows:

BISHOP H. C. RILEY, care of J. P. HEATH,
No. 43 Bible House, New York, U. S.

Natural Law in the Spiritual World.

By Prof. HENRY DRUMMOND of Glasgow University, Scotland. Ideal Edition, Long Primer type, fine cloth. 240 pages. Price Reduced from $1.00 to 60 cents.

Handsome Paper Covers only 25 cents.

"This is one of the most impressive and suggestive books on religion that we have read for a long time."—London Spectator.

"Too much cannot be said in praise of it, and the one who fail to read it will suffer a serious loss."—The Churchman.

"Grand reading for the clergy."—BISHOP CONE.

"Its originality will make it almost a revelation."—Christian Union.

Everyone who is interested in religious questions should read and study it."—London Church Quarterly Review.

"Fresh, clear, and suggestive. Just the book for every minister and intelligent Christian."—DR. HAIGH

"This is a remarkable and important book. It is difficult to say whether the scientific or the religious reader will be the most surprised and delighted as he reads."—Aberdeen Free Press.

Sent by mail post-paid on receipt of price. Address,

P. O. Box 2767. J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose Street, New York.

WORKS OF J. W. KIMBALL.

How to See Jesus with Fulness of Joy and Peace.

256 Pages. Cloth. 75 Cents.

Those who are familiar with the previous writings of this deeply devotional author, will gladly welcome this beautiful book. It is not an impetuous torrent of love, like "Augustine's Confessions." It is rather the calm and quiet flow of the "Imitation of Christ." He who reads it can scarcely fail to be spiritually enriched, and in very truth to "see Jesus with fulness of joy and peace."—Interior, Chicago.

Every page is fragrant with the love of Jesus. It is the best book of the kind we have read. Its sole purpose is to guide the believer into that closer communion for which he yearns, and to furnish wise counsel for a life of holiness.—Lutheran Observer.

It is full of the marrow of the gospel, presented in so simple, well illustrated, and experimental a form that even the youngest disciple can apprehend its spiritual lessons and be led by it into the richest enjoyment of the fulfillment of the promises.—Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.

This is a plain, simple work, admirably fitted to help all who seek to obtain a living and joyous piety from its one true source, personal communion with Christ.—Canadian Presbyterian.

Heaven: My Father's House.

252 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

"Heaven—I have seen nothing on the subject which pleased me so much. The views are original, and I think just. Some of them I do not remember to have seen presented at all; and others not so well."—Rev. Dr. Mark Hopkins, Williams College, Mass.

"I like his way of approaching the subject. The book develops in a very pleasing manner a line of thought peculiar and untouched by any of the many who have written on it."—Rev. Prof. Samuel Harris, Yale College, Conn.

"Death, as seen from Mr. K.'s point of view, is a natural event in the order of the Christian's life. Instead of receding from inevitable destiny, we are led by this more familiar view to look upon the change without fear, yea, with cheerfulness."—Rev. Dr. H. B. Hackett, Newton Theological Seminary.

NEW ENLARGED EDITION.

Encouragements to Faith.

By JAS. W. KIMBALL,
Author of "How to see Jesus," "Heaven: My Father's House, etc."

207 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

The Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, in his popular work "Abide in Christ," has mentioned this book as one specially to be recommended for young, weak, or doubting Christians.

Here is a warm hand and a loving heart tendered you, in the name of the Lord, from one who harbors no doubts, and would gladly help you to break away from them. This book has greatly helped many Christians to a stronger faith in the blessed Lord Jesus; we earnestly hope that many more may be benefitted by it."—Preface

"This volume by J. W. Kimball, seems to be precisely such a one as a Christian would desire to put into the hands of any young man or woman troubled with doubts concerning the religious life. It has reference to the experience of the soul rather than the mind, and is in fact, a tender, confidential exhortation having its motive in love to cultivate faith in God."—Boston Advertiser.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price by

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

UNIVERSITY PIANOS
FROM $180 TO $1500.
FINEST PIANOS IN THE WORLD.
SOLD DIRECT TO FAMILIES, saving the enormous expenses of agents. Sent with beautiful cover, stool and book, for trial in your own home before you buy. Guaranteed six years. Send for catalogue to Marchal & Smith Piano Co., 235 E. 21st St., N. Y.

WANTED FOR CASH! OLD U. S. and Confederate POSTAGE STAMPS used prior to 1865. These old stamps will bring fine prices. IF LEFT UPON THE ORIGINAL ENVELOPE and in GOOD condition. Some stamps bring as much as $25.00 each. Send stamp for circulars describing kinds wanted. Best references furnished if desired. Address
G. M. BASTABLE, Catlett, Va.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST AT HAND.—We live in those days wherein the Lord will gather His Israel out of both Jew and Christian Churches, that their spirit, soul and body may be preserved blameless to receive the Lord at His coming. Read in 4 Esdras ii. 42; Rev. vii. 4; Rom. viii. 23; Rev. xv. 1; 1 Thess. v. 20, 21, 23; 1 Cor. xv. 52, 53; Phi. iii. 21; Mark xiii. 20; Matt. xxiv. 22; Rom. viii. 11, 22, 23; Rev. xxi. 1, 4, 5; John xiv. 16, 17, 26. Further information can be obtained in two different books, both in German and English, at 12c. each.
J. WIELE, 143 N. Sixth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

3,000 ROLLS CHINA MATTINGS.—Whole from $3.75; fancy, $4; special invoice fancy seamless Mattings, slightly imperfect, $6 roll. Carpetings—Tapestries from 43c.; Brussels, 85c.; Velvets, 85c., 90c., 95c. Continuous sale China goat Rugs, $1.85. Furniture—Summer Chairs, 50c.; Ladies' Rockers, 75c. Office Rockers. Correspondence invited. Mail orders promptly filled.
ANDREW LESTER'S SONS,
739, 741 Broadway, New York.

TEAS LADIES Send at once for our new terms. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York, N. Y.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Agents preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. Johnson & Co., Pub's, 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.